> "Unless such specifications are justified by the subject of the contract, Member States shall prohibit the introduction into the contractual clauses relating to a given contract of technical specifications which mention goods of a specific make or source or of a particular process and which have the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or products. In particular, the indication of trade marks, patents, types or specific origin or production shall be prohibited;

however, such an indication accompanied by the words 'or equivalent' shall be authorized where the subject of the contract cannot otherwise be described by specifications which are sufficiently precise and fully intelligible to all concerned."

Finally, Article 3 of Directive 89/665/EEC introduces a "swift" procedure for taking action against the competent authorities of the Member States and the contracting authorities, which may be invoked by the Commission when, prior to a contract being concluded, it considers that "a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement has been committed during a contract award procedure". In such cases, therefore, the Commission is to notify the abovementioned authorities of the infringements found and request their correction; from that moment, the Member State has 21 days in which to communicate to the Commission confirmation that the infringement has been corrected or the reasons why no correction has been made or else notice that the contract award procedure has been suspended.

3. Before turning to the substance of the case, I must consider the objection put forward by the Netherlands Government that the action is inadmissible in two respects.

The Netherlands maintains that the Commission' s conduct did not comply with the requirements of Article 3(1) and (2) of Directive 89/665/EEC. As mentioned above, the purpose of the procedure provided for therein is to inform the Member State and the contracting authority concerned in good time, and in any event before a contract is awarded, of the fact that a clear and manifest infringement of Community law has been committed. The Commission' s complaints were communicated to the Netherlands six months after the notice in question was published, on the day before the contract was entered into. The contracting authority, for its part, did not receive notification until some days later, which the Commission acknowledges, (6) when the contract had already been awarded. As a result, in the defendant' s view, there was a breach of the duty of cooperation between Member States and Community institutions under Article 5 of the Treaty, in that it is unreasonable to expect an award procedure begun some months previously to be suspended within the space of one working day, taking into account above all the delay in transmitting the request concerned to the contracting authority.

The basis of the second plea of inadmissibility put forward by the Netherlands Government is that even the Commission had used the same technical specification, namely the UNIX system, in a contract notice published after the one at issue in these proceedings. (7) This shows that NIC was quite justified in believing that the use of that specification would not give rise to objections from the point of view of Community law, since the Commission itself regarded the UNIX system as a generally accepted technical specification in current use.

4. The Netherlands Government' s criticisms of the Commission' s conduct are understandable. However, since it seems to me that it is from the legal point of view alone that it is necessary to ascertain whether they have any substance, there is no doubt that they are incapable of justifying a ruling of inadmissibility. At least, I am unable to propose to the Court that it should make such a ruling.

To start with, the fact that it was late in initiating the special procedure provided for by Article 3 of Directive 89/665 for the correction of infringements of Community provisions in the field of public procurement can certainly not preclude the Commission from bringing an action against the State concerned under Article 169 of the Treaty for a declaration that such infringement has been committed. As we know, that right of action is not subject to any time-limit, because it represents a means of exercising the permanent duty entrusted to the Commission by Article 155 of the Treaty to ensure compliance with Community law; (8) accordingly, any doubt on that head is removed by plain considerations of priority between rules.

Moreover, while the declared aim of the Article 3 procedure is, as is clear from a reading of the preamble to the directive, (9) to establish a mechanism by means of which the Commission may swiftly take action vis-à-vis the competent authorities of the Member States before a procurement contract is concluded, in order to prevent the irreparable damage that can occur as a result of the unlawful award of such a contract, in actual fact the means provided neither enhances nor detracts from the powers available to the Commission under Article 169. It is the procedure under Article 169 to which the Commission must in any event have recourse where there is no reply, or an inadequate reply, to the notification given under Article 3, if it intends to seek a declaration that the State concerned has failed to fulfil its obligations under Community rules on procurement contracts.

5. In the light of those considerations, the fact that proceedings were initiated simultaneously under Article 3 of Directive 89/665 and under Article 169 of the Treaty is in keeping with requirements of procedural economy which I have no difficulty in endorsing. The sole consequence of the Commission' s delay in taking action, and from this point of view I cannot but support the complaints against it, is the risk that its action may not be as effective as the special procedure in question was intended to ensure.

Moreover, once the vigorous powers initially conferred on the Commission to take action (10) had been removed from the final version of the directive adopted by the Council, the speeding-up of procedural time-limits under Article 169 by setting a maximum period of 21 days for replying to the Commission' s letter of notification is, in essence, the only factor which fulfils one of the aims of the directive, namely to strengthen at Community level as well the effectiveness of the means of monitoring the application of legislation concerning public procurement contracts.

The article in question merely specifies the period to be considered "reasonable" in this area, under the Article 169 procedure, to enable the Member State concerned to reply to the letter of notification and, if appropriate, prepare a defence to the charges levelled against it. (11) But it was certainly not intended to set a time-limit for the lapse of the Commission' s right of action.

6. The basis of the second plea of inadmissibility put forward by the defendant is the need to safeguard the legitimate expectations as to the compatibility with Community law of the technical specification at issue, aroused in the Netherlands authorities as a result of the use of that specification by the Commission itself in a public contract notice.

On this point, I shall confine myself to observing that there are two possibilities. The first is that the use of the specification at issue is not incompatible with the rules on tenders and, therefore, both the Community institutions and the national authorities were and are entitled to make use of it in describing the subject-matter of a contract. If this is the case, the action brought by the Commission must be dismissed on its merits, at least with regard to this point.

If, instead, there is a conflict, I fail to see how the fact that the Commission too has infringed the rules of the directive can remedy any infringement by the Netherlands authorities. Community institutions are also bound to observe the rules on procurement contracts; if they do not, there is no principle of law authorizing Member States not to do so. Nor is an institution prevented from bringing an action for a declaration that a Member State has committed an infringement merely because it has committed a breach of the same kind.

This objection of inadmissibility must consequently be rejected as well.

7. Since it is not disputed that the directive is applicable in this case, (12) I shall go on to examine the substance of the allegations against the defendant.

First of all, the Commission claims that the contracting authority, as already stated, infringed Article 9(5) of the directive in that when it drew up the tender notice it failed to comply with the conditions contained in Annex III to the directive, referred to in Article 9(5), which at point 7 requires the notice to indicate the persons authorized to be present at the opening of tenders and also the date, time and place of opening. The Netherlands Government shares the Commission' s view as to the existence of a duty on the part of the contracting authorities to draw up notices in accordance with the model set out in Annex III and as to the unconditional nature of the requirement referred to in point 7 of the Annex. It contends, however, that the information in question is necessary only where the contracting authority intends to restrict the opportunity to be present at the opening of tenders by, for example, allowing only the suppliers who have submitted them to attend. If, as in this case, they are opened in public and anyone interested may attend, such information is unnecessary.

Furthermore, because the tenders are usually complex and bulky, which precludes their being read out in full when they are opened, the opportunity for suppliers at this stage of the procedure to check the conduct of the contracting authority and, if appropriate, to take action in time to protect their rights, is wholly unrealistic.

8. I cannot support the Netherlands Government' s arguments on that point either. In the first place they have no basis in the wording of the directive. In specifying what information must appear in contract notices where the open procedure is used, Annex III to the directive draws a clear distinction between mandatory and optional information. The second category includes information concerning any time-limit for delivery of the goods to be supplied (point 4), the amount and terms of payment of any sum payable in order to obtain documents relevant to the contract from the administrative service concerned (point 5(c)) or the legal form to be taken by the grouping of suppliers to whom the contract is awarded (point 10).

There is, on the other hand, no possibility of derogating from the requirements contained in point 7, especially with regard to the procedure followed when the tenders are opened. That is perfectly in keeping with the spirit of the rules in question, which treat transparency in all the operations and procedures for supplying the contracting authorities as one of the most effective means of opening up the market in public supply contracts. It should also be borne in mind that in many cases proper application of Community legislation can be ensured only if infringements of the latter are met with a timely response. It is therefore understandable that it may be important for suppliers participating in an award procedure to be present when the tenders are opened, if only, as the Commission observes, to discover the identity of their competitors and to be able to check, even at that stage, whether they meet the criteria for qualitative selection contained in Article 20 et seq. of the directive. It is clear, therefore, that their opportunity to do so would be completely thwarted if the practical conditions attached to opening (in public as well) were not disclosed.

9. As to the alleged infringement of Article 7(6) of the directive and Article 30 of the Treaty, as a result of introducing into the general terms and conditions of the disputed contract a technical specification mentioning a particular product, the Netherlands Government contends that those terms and conditions actually refer to a class of products, in so far as the UNIX system is to be regarded, in the field of information technology, as a technical specification generally recognized by traders in that sector. Accordingly, the fact that it deliberately failed to include the words "or equivalent" alongside UNIX was intended to convey to the suppliers concerned that NIC meant to refer not to a particular product but to a product with well-defined characteristics. In support of its argument, the Netherlands Government refers to the fact that in the end the contract was awarded to a supplier who does not use the UNIX system but a similar one.

I would point out, in this connection, that the defendant acknowledges that the UNIX system is not a standardized system, that is to say a technical specification approved by an international standards institution recognized in the field of information technology. The system was produced within one of the unofficial bodies set up by producers and consumers for the purpose of speeding up the standardization process, to be precise, X/OPEN, which undertakes the standardization of operational systems based on AT&T' s UNIX. (13) It is only when the results of the work carried out by those bodies have been adopted by the administrative authorities that the technical specifications thus drawn up become standards. Consequently, it seems to me to be difficult to claim, as the Netherlands Government does, that the conduct of the contracting authority is in accordance with Council Decision 87/95/EEC of 22 December 1986 on standardization in the field of information technology and telecommunications, (14) which requires the Member States to make reference to European and international standards in public procurement orders relating to such technology, in that, as the defendant itself acknowledges, the UNIX system does not fall within that category.

Since, therefore, UNIX is the trade mark of a particular product, the insertion into the contract notice of a clause referring to it, without adding the words "or equivalent", constitutes an infringement of Article 7(6) of the directive. Furthermore, since such a clause reserves the contract, at least at first, solely to those suppliers who propose to use the system specifically indicated, its effect is to impede the flow of imports in intra-Community trade and it is therefore also in breach of Article 30 of the Treaty. (15)

10. Nor does it seem to me that that conclusion can be altered by the fact that the contract in question was subsequently awarded to a supplier using a system equivalent to the one specifically mentioned in the notice, since to include such a clause in the general terms and conditions may in any case cause traders who use systems similar to the one requested to refrain from tendering, precisely on account of that clause.

11. In the light of the foregoing considerations, therefore, I propose that the Court:

Declare that, by failing to indicate in the tender notice at issue the persons authorized to be present at the opening of tenders as well as the date, time and place of opening, and by including in the general terms and conditions a technical specification defined by reference to a product of a specific make, the Kingdom of the Netherlands has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 77/62/EEC, as amended by Directives 80/767/EEC and 88/295/EEC, and also under Article 30 of the Treaty;

Order the Kingdom of the Netherlands to pay the costs.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Lenz delivered on 4 October 1994.
The Queen v Secretary of State for Home Department, ex parte Evans Medical Ltd and Macfarlan Smith Ltd.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: High Court of Justice, Queen's Bench Division - United Kingdom.
Free movement of goods - Importation of a narcotic drug (diamorphine).
Case C-324/93.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

A ° Introduction

1. The present case raises the question whether the Treaty provisions on the free movement of goods (Article 30 et seq. of the EC Treaty) apply to trade in heroin (and other narcotic drugs).

2. Diamorphine (heroin) is an opium derivative obtained from the processing of morphine. Its use is prohibited in most countries because of the danger of abuse. In the United Kingdom, however, it is the preferred treatment for the relief of pain in the terminally or seriously ill. According to the information supplied by the national court making the reference, 238 kg of the 241 kg of heroin used for medical purposes world-wide in 1990 were employed in the United Kingdom.

3. Diamorphine is a narcotic drug within the meaning of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs concluded in New York on 30 March 1961 ("the Convention"). (1) The Convention terminates and replaces a number of hitherto existing agreements in this area (beginning with the International Opium Convention of 1912).

4. The preamble to the Convention recognizes "that the medical use of narcotic drugs continues to be indispensable for the relief of pain and suffering and that adequate provision must be made to ensure the availability of narcotic drugs for such purposes". (2) At the same time, it states that addiction to narcotic drugs constitutes an evil which the Contracting Parties are under a duty to combat. (3) In the view of the Contracting Parties, measures against abuse of narcotic drugs can be effective only if they are coordinated and universal. Such universal measures, in their opinion, require international cooperation "guided by the same principles and aimed at common objectives". (4)

5. Article 2(1) provides that all the measures of control provided for under the Convention apply to the narcotic drugs listed in Schedule I. Under Article 19 of the Convention these measures of control include, in the first instance, the duty of the Contracting Parties to furnish to the International Narcotics Control Board in Vienna annual estimates "for each of their territories". Those estimates must include the quantities of drugs to be consumed the following year for medical or scientific purposes or utilized for the manufacture of other drugs or preparations. Stocks of drugs to be held as at 31 December of the year to which the estimates relate must also be indicated.

Diamorphine is listed in both Schedule I and Schedule IV to the Convention.

6. Article 21(1) of the Convention provides as follows:

> "The total of the quantities of each drug manufactured and imported by any country or territory in any one year shall not exceed the sum of the following:

(a) The quantity consumed, within the limit of the relevant estimate, for medical and scientific purposes;

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(b) The quantity used, within the limit of the relevant estimate, for the manufacture of other drugs, of preparations in Schedule III, and of substances not covered by this Convention;

(c) The quantity exported;

(d) The quantity added to the stock for the purpose of bringing that stock up to the level specified in the relevant estimate; and

(e) The quantity acquired within the limit of the relevant estimate for special purposes."

7. Articles 29 to 31 of the Convention require the Contracting Parties to make the manufacture, trade, distribution, import and export of drugs "to any country or territory" subject to a licence.

8. Article 43(2) should be mentioned in this connection. Under that provision, two or more Contracting Parties may notify the Secretary-General of the United Nations that "as the result of the establishment of a customs union between them, those Parties constitute a single territory for the purposes of Articles 19, 20, 21 and 31."

9. Article 2(5) of the Convention provides the following additional measures of control for the particularly dangerous drugs listed in Schedule IV:

"(a) A Party shall adopt any special measures of control which in its opinion are necessary having regard to the particularly dangerous properties of a drug so included; and

(b) A Party shall, if in its opinion the prevailing conditions in its country render it the most appropriate means of protecting the public health and welfare, prohibit the production, manufacture, export and import of, trade in, possession or use of any such drug except for amounts which may be necessary for medical and scientific research only, including clinical trials therewith to be conducted under or subject to the direct supervision and control of the Party."

10. The Contracting Parties, which number more than 130, include all the Member States of the Communities. The United Kingdom ratified the Convention on 2 September 1964 (thus prior to its accession to the European Communities).

11. In the United Kingdom the Secretary of State for the Home Department ("the Secretary of State") has primary responsibility for complying with the duties arising under the Convention. The Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 prohibits the importation of diamorphine unless permitted by the Secretary of State.

12. Until August 1992 the United Kingdom did not permit any imports of narcotic drugs that were manufactured in that country and readily available there. This policy, which had been followed for a long time, was justified by reference to the requirements arising under the Convention and ° particularly in the case of diamorphine ° to the need to counter the danger of the substance being diverted into unlawful trade and to guarantee reliability of supplies. A similar policy has been and continues to be followed in a number of other Member States.

13. Until 1992 requirements for diamorphine in the United Kingdom were met exclusively by Evans Medical Limited ("Evans"). Evans continues to be the principal manufacturer of the finished product for the United Kingdom and world markets.

Macfarlan Smith Limited ("MSL") is at present the only licensed manufacturer in the United Kingdom of raw diamorphine in powder form, which forms the basis for the manufacture of the finished product. As the product is used in only a limited number of other countries, MSL is also the principal manufacturer world-wide. Evans is MSL' s most important customer for this product.

14. In two letters of 17 August 1992 the Secretary of State informed the solicitors of MSL and Evans that after thorough consideration he had concluded that there were no proper grounds on which he could refuse an application by Generics (UK) Limited ("Generics") to import a consignment of diamorphine from the Netherlands. Generics specializes in the manufacture and marketing of generic pharmaceutical preparations and has subsidiaries in a number of European countries, including the Netherlands.

The Secretary of State explained in those letters that he had taken account both of the need to guarantee continuity of supplies and the need to prevent the products being diverted to unlawful trade. The application by Generics had, he stated, been examined in the light of national law, Community law and international law. In that connection, the Secretary of State wrote inter alia that:

> "It is considered that there is no incompatibility between the... Convention ... and Articles 30 and 36 of the Treaty of Rome. Article 2(5) of the 1961 Convention permits, but does not require, Parties to restrict imports. Parties are given powers under Article 2(5) to prohibit importation where in their opinion the prevailing conditions in their countries render it the most appropriate means of protecting the public health and welfare. Article 36 [of the EC Treaty] provides that prohibition or restrictions on imports may be justified on grounds of the protection of health and life of humans....
> The issue of security in transit has accordingly been carefully considered ...
> On the question of reliability of supply, Ministers are, of course, very concerned to ensure that diamorphine remains readily available for medical use in the future. However, they are satisfied that the proper means of ensuring supply is through a tendering scheme... Our Department of Health colleagues have informed us that the [National Health Service Supplies Authority] are looking into the feasibility of a new tendering scheme for diamorphine to operate from early 1993." (5)

15. Evans and MSL thereupon brought an action before the Queen' s Bench Division of the High Court in which they contested both the import licence granted to Generics and the general decision expressed by that licence to reverse the policy previously followed with regard to imports of narcotic drugs. The applicants argued that the Secretary of State had, in his decision, incorrectly proceeded on the assumption that the previous policy had been in breach of Community law and in particular that the import ban had been unlawful under Article 30 of the EC Treaty and could not be justified under Article 36. They take the view that, pursuant to Article 234 of the EC Treaty, Article 30 does not apply to trade in narcotic drugs within the meaning of the Convention. Even if the Secretary of State had none the less been correct to base his decision on the view that Articles 30 and 36 of the EC Treaty were applicable, they argue, he should not have taken that decision without first determining whether the proposed tendering scheme was feasible and compatible with the Convention, as well as whether and, if so, how that scheme could ensure that the health authorities would have regular supplies of diamorphine.

16. The High Court has stayed the proceedings before it and referred the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

> "1. Upon the true construction of Articles 30, 36 and 234 of the EEC Treaty, is a Member State entitled to refuse to issue a licence, required by the law of that Member State, to import from another Member State narcotic drugs either originating in or in free circulation in the second Member State on the ground that

(a) the provisions of Articles 30 to 36 are inapplicable to trade in narcotic drugs within the meaning or ambit of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs concluded at New York on 30 March 1961; and/or

(b) compliance with the Convention would in practice require the arbitrary allocation of quotas

between imports and local manufacturers; and/or that the system of controls laid down by the Convention would otherwise be less effective; and/or

(c) (in the circumstances that the Community has failed to adopt any directive or other regime on trade in narcotic drugs such as would enable it to declare itself a 'single territory' under Article 43 of the Single Convention and several Member States that manufacture narcotic drugs prohibit their importation) the importation of narcotic drugs from another Member State would threaten the viability of a sole licensed manufacturer of those drugs in the Member State, and that the reliability of supply of those drugs for essential medical purposes in that Member State would be jeopardized?

2. On the proper interpretation of Council Directive 77/62 of 21 December 1976, OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1, as amended, is a public authority, when charged with the task of purchasing essential pain-relieving drugs for medical use, entitled to take into account the need for reliability and continuity of supply when awarding contracts for the supply of such drugs?"

B ° Opinion

Admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling

17. The Commission takes the view that the Court of Justice ought not to reply to the questions referred by the High Court on the ground that those questions are "hypothetical". It points out that, in its Questions 1(a) to 1(c), the national court seeks to ascertain whether a Member State is entitled generally or in specific circumstances to refuse a licence to import narcotic drugs from other Member States. However, as the Commission points out, the issue in the proceedings before the High Court relates to the grant of a licence, not to its refusal. So far as the Commission is concerned, it is established that under Article 36 restrictions are permissible in intra-Community trade in narcotic drugs and that there may in certain circumstances even be justification for refusing import or export licences. However, in view of the variety of the circumstances in question and the importance of the interests involved, the Commission argues that it is undesirable that the Court should express a view on the problem in the present case. Question 2 in the reference, it goes on to submit, is even more hypothetical since it concerns the purchase of diamorphine by the competent health authorities, whereas the actual case relates to a decision by the Secretary of State to allow the importation of that narcotic substance. For that reason, the Commission argues, the Court should also not reply to that question.

Generics also takes the view that Questions 1(b), 1(c) and 2 ° but not Question 1(a) ° are hypothetical since they relate to assumptions which have not yet been proved. Counsel for Generics, however, submitted at the hearing that the Court ought none the less to reply to those questions.

18. The Court of Justice has consistently held that the procedure for preliminary rulings under Article 177 of the EC Treaty is an instrument for cooperation between the Court of Justice and national courts. In the context of this cooperation, it is for the national court to decide whether it requires a preliminary ruling by the Court of Justice in order to reach its own decision. If the national court decides to make a reference and the questions submitted concern the interpretation of Community law, the Court is, in principle, bound to give a ruling. However, the task assigned to the Court in the context of this procedure ° as the Commission has also pointed out in its observations ° is not that of "delivering opinions on general or hypothetical questions". (6)

19. In Question 1(a) of its reference the national court wishes to determine whether Articles 30 to 36 of the EC Treaty are applicable to trade in narcotic drugs. As has been pointed out by MSL in its observations and as is also apparent from the order for reference of the High Court, MSL and Evans are relying in the main proceedings on the argument that they are entitled under national law to ensure that the Secretary of State should take his decision regarding the application by Generics on a proper legal and factual basis. In taking his decision, the Secretary of State proceeded on the basis that Articles 30 to 36 of the EC Treaty are applicable in the present case. If this assumption is incorrect, his decision will have been taken on an incorrect legal basis and may, if necessary, be set aside by the national court. For the purposes of the decision to be taken by the High Court, therefore, direct significance attaches to the answer to the first question in the reference. In my opinion, there are for that reason no grounds on which to argue that this question is hypothetical in nature.

20. It is, moreover, worth noting that the Commission also proposes to the Court replies to the High Court' s questions even though it takes the view that those questions are hypothetical and for that reason need not be answered. The Commission proposes that the Court' s reply to the questions should be that neither Articles 30 to 36 of the EC Treaty nor Article 234 prevent a national authority from authorizing imports of narcotic drugs from another Member State. Counsel for MSL correctly pointed out at the hearing that this neither answers the question submitted nor enables the national court to answer it. Counsel for the United Kingdom expressed the same view very succinctly when he stated that the Commission was proposing that the Court be of assistance to the national court by replying to a question which no-one had asked with an answer to which no-one could take exception.

21. The Commission is, admittedly, correct to point out that the legal assessment of intra-Community trade in narcotic drugs raises very difficult problems. The Community legislature has clearly not yet found any satisfactory solution for these problems. Such difficulties, however, should not prevent the Court from performing the duty imposed on it by Article 177 of the EC Treaty to support national courts in the resolution of legal proceedings pending before them by interpreting provisions of Community law. These difficulties consequently do not affect the duty of the Court to reply to the questions submitted to the extent to which it is possible for it to do so and cannot also affect the admissibility of the particular question submitted.

22. As the High Court explains in its order for reference, Questions 1(b) and 1(c) contain assumptions of fact by MSL and Evans that are as yet unsubstantiated. Those questions do not, however, request the Court to rule on the existence of the facts assumed. As counsel for MSL has pointed out, the High Court is, on the contrary, seeking in this regard an answer to the question whether the legal aspects contained in those questions are at all relevant from the perspective of Community law. Counsel for the United Kingdom expressed a similar view. If the two questions were to be answered in the negative, it would not be necessary for the High Court to examine in any further detail the assumptions of fact set out in them. If, on the other hand, the Court were to decide that a Member State is in certain cases entitled to prohibit imports of narcotic drugs from other Member States, the High Court would have to examine whether that was the position in the proceedings before it.

23. There is, in my view, little in principle to object to in the course adopted by the High Court. It serves the interests of procedural economy to postpone the taking of evidence so long as it is not clear whether the subject-matter of that evidence is material to the proceedings. Given the significance of the fundamental question raised in Question 1(a) regarding the applicability of Articles 30 to 36 to the lawful trade in narcotic drugs, an issue on which the Court of Justice has not hitherto had occasion to rule, the decision of the High Court to seek a preliminary ruling from the Court of Justice at what is still an early stage in the proceedings is also perfectly understandable. As the Court has recognized, it is for the national court to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of each case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. (7) On those grounds I take the view that Question 1(c) is admissible even if the assumptions of fact on which it is based (that the granting of an import licence would threaten the viability of the domestic manufacturer and thereby jeopardize security of supplies) are not yet substantiated.

The same, however, does not in my view apply to Question 1(b), which consists of two parts. In the first place it asks whether a Member State can prohibit the importation of narcotic drugs from another Member State if compliance with the Convention would result in the arbitrary allocation of quotas between importers and domestic manufacturers. Secondly, the question asks whether the prohibition of imports is permissible if the system of controls laid down by the Convention would otherwise be less effective. Question 1(b) thus raises the issue of the (practical) compatibility of the application of Articles 30 to 36 of the EC Treaty with the provisions of the Convention. In my opinion this question should be considered together with Question 1(a) given their close connection. In view of the solution which I propose for the reply to this question it does not appear to me necessary that the Court should give a separate answer to Question 1(b).

24. Question 2 in the reference concerns the interpretation of Community-law provisions on the award of public-supply contracts. It is evident that this has its basis in the view expressed by the Secretary of State in his letters of 17 August 1992, to the effect that the importance of ensuring that the United Kingdom would have secure supplies of diamorphine could be taken into account in the context of an invitation to tender. However, it is common ground that this invitation to tender ultimately proved not to be feasible. It may for that reason be quite properly asked what purpose Question 2 serves. The High Court has provided no clarification on this point in its order for reference. Moreover, no further information is to be gleaned from the statements of the parties involved in the procedure before the Court. In those circumstances I share the Commission' s view that the Court should not examine this question. In case the Court might decide otherwise, however, I shall of course also examine the problem raised by this question.

25. Suffice it to mention that the questions submitted refer in general to "narcotic drugs" (within the meaning of the Convention), whereas the present case concerns only one single narcotic drug, namely diamorphine. The Court' s answers to the questions submitted by the High Court will, however, naturally be of significance not only for that product but also generally for the drugs covered by the Convention. For that reason I too shall speak in what follows of narcotic drugs in general, in so far as the discussion does not centre on the special Convention provisions applicable to diamorphine (and other particularly dangerous drugs).

Applicability of Articles 30 to 36

General

26. It is appropriate at the outset of this examination to bear in mind that the question of the applicability of Articles 30 to 36 of the EC Treaty concerns only the lawful trade in narcotic drugs, that is to say trade in products derived from those substances which are intended for medical and scientific use. There can be no doubt as to the need to combat unlawful trade in narcotic drugs and the associated dangers. This applies both to the Member States and to the Community. (8)

27. The Court has not hitherto been called on to decide whether Articles 30 to 36 are applicable to the lawful trade in narcotic drugs within the meaning of the Convention. However, it has already on several occasions been faced with the question whether customs duties (9) or import turnover tax (10) may be levied in respect of the illegal importation of such substances and whether illegal trade in those substances is subject to value added tax. (11) In each case the Court replied to those questions in the negative.

28. Of particular interest to the present case are those decisions involving the question whether duty could be levied on illegal imports of narcotic drugs. In its 1982 judgments in Wolf and Einberger, the Court pointed out that the import and sale of the drugs in question (heroin and cocaine in the first case, morphine in the second) are prohibited in all the Member States, "except in trade which is strictly controlled and limited to authorized use for pharmaceutical and medical purposes." (12) The Court stated that this legal position is in conformity with the provisions of the Convention. (13) The Court accordingly reached the conclusion that no customs debt could arise upon the importation of drugs "otherwise than through economic channels strictly controlled by the competent authorities for use for medical and scientific purposes." (14)

It follows from these decisions that duty is payable on lawful imports of narcotic drugs. As the Court was called on in those cases to interpret Articles 9 and 12 to 29 of the EC Treaty, that is to say, provisions of Title I on the free movement of goods, there can scarcely be any doubt in my opinion (contrary to the view expressed by MSL) that the same also applies with regard to the interpretation of Articles 30 to 36, which also belong to Title I. Lawful trade in narcotic drugs, within the meaning of the Convention, therefore comes within the scope of those provisions.

Article 234 and the Convention

29. However, it is still necessary to consider what consequences for the application of Articles 30 to 36 follow from the first paragraph of Article 234 of the EC Treaty. That paragraph provides that the "rights and obligations arising from agreements concluded before the entry into force of this Treaty between one or more Member States on the one hand, and one or more third countries on the other" are not to be affected by the provisions of the Treaty. Article 5 of the Act concerning the Accession of Denmark, Ireland and the United Kingdom provides that Article 234 of the EC Treaty applies for those Member States to agreements or conventions concluded before accession. (15) So far as the United Kingdom is concerned, therefore, the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, which it ratified in 1964, is an agreement within the meaning of Article 234. (16)

30. As the Court has already held on several occasions, the purpose of the first paragraph of Article 234 is to lay down, in accordance with the principles of international law, (17) that the application of the Treaty does not affect the duty of the Member State concerned to respect the rights of non-member countries under a prior agreement and to perform its obligations thereunder. (18) Applied to the present case, this means that the United Kingdom is entitled to meet its obligations towards non-member countries arising under the Convention and to respect the rights which the Convention confers on non-member countries. In so far as the application of Articles 30 to 36 would make it impossible for the United Kingdom to do so, those provisions would have to give way.

However, it must be borne in mind that under the second paragraph of Article 234 the United Kingdom would in that case have to take "all appropriate steps" to eliminate the incompatibility between the Convention and the EC Treaty. The United Kingdom might even be under an obligation to denounce the Convention. Of course, this question has no bearing on the outcome of the present case and for that reason I need not examine it any further.

31. Generics, however, argues that Article 234 is immaterial to this case since only trade between two Member States is affected. The case concerns importation of diamorphine from the Netherlands into the United Kingdom; non-member countries are not affected by this transaction. Ireland has expressed similar views. The French Government, too, argues in its observations that the first paragraph of Article 234 does not allow a Member State to depart from the provisions of the EC Treaty in intra-Community trade. The existence of the Convention, so the argument runs, thus does not stand in the way of the application of Articles 30 to 36.

32. In this regard, both Generics and the French Government rely on the judgment of the Court of Justice in the Conegate case. (19) Indeed, the Court there held that "agreements concluded prior to the entry into force of the Treaty may not... be relied upon in relations between Member States in order to justify restrictions on trade within the Community." (20)

However, MSL correctly points out that this applies only if the rights of non-member countries

are not affected. That point is confirmed by the case-law of the Court. Thus, in a decision delivered in 1988, the precedence of the EC Treaty over an agreement concluded prior to its entry into force was made subject to the proviso that, "as in the present case, the rights of non-member countries are not involved". (21) As early as its first decision on Article 234 the Court stated that the manner in which customs duties were regulated between the Member States could not be criticized by third countries if this "does not interfere with the rights held by third countries under agreements still in force." (22) No particular significance should therefore be attached to the absence of a corresponding proviso in the Conegate judgment; this may well be explicable on the ground that the Court was satisfied in that case that the relevant conventions did not confer on non-member countries any rights which could have been infringed through the application of Community law in relations between the Member States. (23)

The United Kingdom has also correctly pointed out that the view expressed by Generics runs contrary to the principle laid down in Article 41 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. (24)

33. It is thus first necessary to consider whether the Convention forms the basis of obligations imposed on the Member States vis-à-vis non-member countries or creates rights which non-member countries may enforce against Member States. To put it another way, the question is whether the Convention merely creates bilateral obligations as between the particular Contracting Parties or multilateral obligations between all Parties which are signatories to it. (25) This, of course, requires an interpretation of the Convention, which ° as I shall explain in greater detail ° is a matter for the national court making the reference. However, I believe that the Court of Justice can itself decide this question without further ado. In the first place, it has already carried out such an examination in previous cases. (26) Secondly, there can be no reasonable doubt that the fulfilment of the obligations which the Convention imposes on the Contracting Parties is a duty resting on all Contracting Parties, as the Portuguese Government and MSL have correctly pointed out.

The preamble itself, which speaks of the need for coordinated and universal measures against the abuse of narcotic drugs, indicates that this interpretation alone has regard to the objectives of the Convention. The view that the duties to monitor the trade in narcotic drugs laid down by the Convention are intended not only to protect the Contracting Parties directly concerned is confirmed also by the simple consideration that the dangers resulting from breach of the Convention may affect all Contracting Parties: for instance, if a consignment of narcotics from the territory of one Contracting State intended for a recipient in another Contracting State ends up in illegal trade because both Contracting Parties have omitted to apply the control measures imposed by the Convention on trade with each other, this will jeopardize not only people living in each of those States but also the other Contracting Parties. Finally, it should be pointed out that Article 43(2) of the Convention makes it possible for members of a customs union to reduce the inconveniences and obstacles to international trade associated with the application of the Convention' s control system by submitting the notification provided for in that provision. (27) This provision would make no sense if the question of compliance with the provisions of the Convention in the mutual relations between two Contracting Parties did not affect the interests of the other Contracting Parties.

34. The first paragraph of Article 234, however, will be relevant only if there is an inconsistency between such an agreement with non-member countries and Community law. The agreement in question must therefore require a particular course of action which Community law prohibits or prohibit a course of action which Community law requires to be taken. If one wishes to ascertain whether there is such a conflict, it will first be necessary to determine the content of the particular convention, on the one hand, and that of Community law, on the other.

35. The Court is of course in a position to interpret the relevant provisions of Community law and determine their content. On the other hand, however, it is unclear whether the Court is empowered, in the context of a reference for a preliminary ruling, to interpret an international convention such as that in the present case.

36. In its judgment in Henn and Darby, (28) the Court appears by implication to have answered that question in the affirmative. That case, which was also a request for a preliminary ruling under Article 177, involved the question whether a Member State can prohibit the importation of goods (in that case, pornographic films and magazines) from another Member State in order to comply with its obligations under an international convention. The Court ruled:

> "It appears from a comparison of the foregoing considerations with the provisions of the Conventions to which the House of Lords refers that the observance by the United Kingdom of those international Conventions is not likely to result in a conflict with the provisions relating to the free movement of goods if account is taken of the exception made by Article 36 in regard to any prohibitions on imports based on grounds of public morality." (29)

37. The German version of this passage ("dass... keine Widersprueche... entstehen koennen") would suggest that the Court had conclusively decided that the obligations arising under the conventions in question were compatible with Community law. However, if one considers the version of the passage in English, which was the language of the case, (30) this is shown to be far from certain. Rather, the impression is that the Court subjected the conventions in question to a merely cursory examination and concluded that this brief examination indicated nothing to suggest a potential conflict between those conventions and Articles 30 to 36 of the Treaty. However, the possibility thereby remained that the national court, on closer examination of the conventions, might reach the conclusion that compliance with the obligations arising under those conventions was in one or more respects incompatible with the application of Article 30 et seq.

This interpretation strikes me as the most appropriate to fit the conclusion drawn by the Court from the above paragraph of this judgment. The Court held that "in so far as a Member State avails itself of the reservation relating to the protection of public morality provided for in Article 36 of the Treaty", (31) the provisions of Article 234 did not preclude a Member State from fulfilling the obligations arising from the relevant international agreements. During the oral procedure before the Court, counsel for MSL not inappropriately compared this passage to an oracular utterance ("a thoroughly Delphic ruling"). Since the first paragraph of Article 234 itself allows a Member State to fulfil its obligations under an earlier convention, this statement by the Court would seem to make no proper sense. The apparent contradiction disappears if one applies the interpretation which I have developed: according to that interpretation, the passage states merely that there will be no contradiction between international agreements and Community law if the obligations under those agreements can be reconciled with the Treaty by means of the derogation provided for under Article 36. Where this is not possible, one might add, the first paragraph of Article 234 will apply if appropriate.

38. The Court has expressed itself with considerably more clarity in a number of recent decisions on the question of competence regarding the interpretation of such agreements. The Levy (32) and Minne (33) cases both involved the question whether specific national provisions governing night-work for women were contrary to the principle of equal treatment of men and women laid down in Article 5 of Directive 76/207/EEC. The question arose in both cases as to whether the national provisions could be justified on the ground that they had been adopted in order to comply with obligations imposed on the Member States under an agreement within the meaning of the first paragraph of Article 234 (a convention of the International Labour Organization). The Court first held that courts of the Member States were not entitled to apply national law at variance with Community law in so far as the application of that law was not necessary under the first paragraph of Article 234

in order to ensure compliance with obligations arising under a convention concluded with non-member countries prior to the entry into force of the EC Treaty. In its judgment in the Minne case, the Court continued as follows:

> "However, it falls to the national court, and not to the Court of Justice in the context of a preliminary ruling, to ascertain, with a view to determining the extent to which those obligations constitute an obstacle to the application of Article 5 of the directive, what are the obligations thus imposed on the Member States concerned by an earlier international agreement and whether the national provisions in question are designed to implement those obligations." (34)

The Court expressed itself in similar terms in its judgment in the Levy case. (35)

39. It follows clearly from these decisions that in the view of the Court of Justice the interpretation of international agreements at issue in preliminary ruling proceedings under Article 177 is a matter for national courts. This is also in accordance with the Treaty, since Article 177 empowers the Court to interpret only Community law. Article 177 does not confer any power to interpret international-law agreements which Member States concluded with non-member countries before the entry into force of the Treaty or prior to their own accession.

40. In its written observations, MSL argues that the need to ensure the uniform application of Community law makes it necessary that the Court should interpret the Convention. That argument should not be accepted. Admittedly, the Court has already decided on the basis of a similar argument that it is empowered, in the context of Article 177 proceedings, to interpret the GATT ° an agreement concluded by the Member States with non-member countries prior to the entry into force of the EC Treaty. (36) Apart from the fact that this judgment has been the subject of criticism (37) ° in my opinion, justifiably so ° it should be pointed out that the legal principles of that case are not applicable by analogy to the present case. It is common knowledge that the Community has taken the place of the Member States for the purpose of fulfilling obligations under the GATT. That assertion cannot be made with regard to the convention under consideration in the present case. True, MSL correctly points out that the Community and all the Member States have signed the United Nations Convention against Illicit Trade in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances which was concluded on 19 December 1988. (38) In the thirteenth recital in the preamble to this Convention the Contracting Parties recognize the need to reinforce and supplement the measures provided in the 1961 Convention. MSL and Ireland are therefore certainly correct in arguing that, by acceding to the 1988 Convention, the Community has recognized the objectives and system of control of the 1961 Convention. The duty to comply with the obligations under that Convention, however, continues, as before, to rest with the Member States.

41. MSL also suggests in its written observations that it may now be possible to treat the Convention as part of Community law and thus capable of interpretation by the Court. During the oral procedure before the Court, however, counsel for MSL modified this suggestion. In my opinion, this argument need not be considered any further. While it has acceded to the 1988 Convention, the Community has not done so with regard to the 1961 Convention, which is the one under consideration here. The fact that the Community accepts and supports the objectives of that Convention does not in itself make that Convention part of Community law and therefore does not empower the Court to interpret it in the context of Article 177 proceedings.

42. It probably goes without saying that jurisdiction for the Court to interpret the Convention in the context of Article 177 proceedings also cannot be established by taking the view that the Court is here required to interpret Article 234, which is a provision of Community law; since the Court is undoubtedly entitled to carry out that interpretation, so the argument goes, the interpretation of the Convention is no more than a preliminary issue which the Court is entitled to discuss. Advocate General Capotorti, it is true, once expressed a similar line of reasoning. (39) In that case,

however, he was considering whether a Community-law regulation might possibly have infringed Article 234. The Court would in such a case indeed have to interpret the international-law agreement itself since it alone can determine the invalidity of the rule of Community law at issue. The present case, however, is not of such a kind. (40)

The reference by counsel for the United Kingdom to the Court' s judgment in Hurd v Jones (41) does not affect this. That case involved the interpretation of a rule of Community law which referred to specific international agreements.

43. In my opinion, however, there might possibly be a case for the Court to assess such an agreement if its contents were beyond dispute. If all the parties and the national court making the reference are in accord as to the substantive obligations arising under the particular agreement, the Court will of course be able to examine whether the application of Community law constitutes an obstacle to compliance with those obligations. It may be that the explanation for the fact that the Court, in the Henn and Darby case, itself undertook an examination of the relevant international conventions is to be sought in this consideration.

In the present case, in my opinion, there can scarcely be any doubt that compliance with the obligations imposed on Member States under the Convention cannot result in a conflict with Community law. I shall set this out in detail below in an alternative submission. However, it should be pointed out that there is no full agreement between the parties involved in this case as to the interpretation of the Convention. MSL contends that it follows from Article 21(1) of the Convention that a Member State may not allow imports if requirements can be met by domestic manufacturers. The Portuguese Government takes a similar view. Generics, along with Ireland and the United Kingdom, does not accept that argument. In its order for reference the High Court has not set out clearly its own interpretation of the Convention, with the result that it cannot be ruled out that it may go along with the stance taken by Portugal and MSL. In the light of this the view should stand that, in the context of Article 177 proceedings, the interpretation of the Convention is a matter for the national court.

44. It should be stressed that this is not likely to give rise to any serious dangers for the preservation of the uniform interpretation of Community law. The fear expressed by MSL that the granting of an import licence by the United Kingdom could have serious consequences for the company if other Member States continue to insist on restricting or prohibiting imports from other Member States is perfectly understandable. It ought none the less to be pointed out that although the Court cannot, in the context of Article 177 proceedings, give a ruling on the interpretation of agreements entered into by the Member States with non-member countries, it does, of course, have the task of interpreting Community law. National courts may for that reason request the Court of Justice, under Article 177, to give a ruling on whether compliance by a Member State with obligations which those national courts have found to exist under a particular agreement constitutes an obstacle to the application of Community law.

Moreover, Treaty-infringement proceedings can be brought under Article 169 or Article 170 in cases where a Member State fails to comply with Community law without being entitled to do so by the first paragraph of Article 234. In proceedings of this kind, the Court would have to consider whether the conduct of the Member State is justified under Article 234 and, if necessary, to determine whether the Member State' s interpretation of the particular agreement in question is correct. It was thus scarcely coincidental that the Court of Justice, in its judgments in the Levy and Minne cases, discussed above, stated that it is not its function to interpret international agreements "in the context of a preliminary ruling".

45. I therefore propose that the Court reply as follows to Question 1(a) of the High Court: Articles 30 to 36 of the EC Treaty apply to lawful trade in narcotic drugs within the meaning of the 1961

Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs. However, in so far as this would make it impossible for the Member State concerned, even in the light of the possibilities opened up under Article 36 of the EC Treaty, to comply with the obligations imposed on it by the Single Convention, the first paragraph of Article 234 allows that Member State to comply with its obligations under that Convention if it acceded to the Convention before the entry into force of the EC Treaty or prior to its own accession to the Community.

46. This also represents an appropriate answer to Question 1(b) in the reference. So far as the question of the effectiveness of the system of control established by the Convention is concerned, it should be pointed out that, in my view, this cannot be a case in which a State has any great leeway: the Member State in question is obliged to implement the measures of control prescribed by the Convention. If that is made impossible by the application of Articles 30 to 36 of the EC Treaty, those articles would have to give way to that extent. If this is not the case, the Community provisions will be applicable.

I take the view that the same must apply with regard to the other assumption set out in this question, according to which compliance with the Convention would in practice require the arbitrary allocation of quotas between importers and domestic manufacturers. The High Court will be required to examine whether such an obligation follows from the Convention and whether compliance with that obligation would be rendered impossible through the application of Articles 30 to 36. The Community provisions will be required to give way only if this proves to be the case.

47. If the Court should, however, conclude that it can itself address the question in the present case as to whether compliance with obligations under the Convention is compatible with the application of Articles 30 to 36 of the EC Treaty, the following considerations, which I add here in the form of an alternative submission, ought in my view to be taken into account.

48. The Convention makes lawful trade in narcotic drugs subject to strict controls. Contracting Parties are required to submit annual estimates of their consumption of narcotic drugs (Article 19 of the Convention). In simple terms, quantities manufactured and imported may not exceed the amount consumed in the particular State or territory or exported therefrom (Article 21). The manufacture, export and import of narcotic drugs require official licences (Articles 29 to 31). Article 2(5) provides that additional measures, including a general ban, may be adopted with regard to particularly dangerous drugs. MSL is not entirely wrong when it speaks of "a planned economy on a world scale" having been created by the Convention. It will be immediately evident that this system is at variance with Article 30 of the EC Treaty, which seeks to remove all quantitative restrictions on imports and barriers having equivalent effect in trade between Member States.

49. It would, however, be a mistake to focus exclusively on Article 30 in the examination to be carried out here. That provision is inseparably linked to Article 36, which permits certain derogations from the prohibition under Article 30. In its judgment in Henn and Darby, (42) the Court made it clear that an overall view is here required: as mentioned above, the Court held in that judgment that there was not likely to be any conflict between the relevant international conventions and the provisions relating to the free movement of goods "if account is taken of the exception made by Article 36 in regard to any prohibitions on imports based on grounds of public morality." (43) Thus, if the restrictions or prohibitions of imports resulting from the Convention in the present case could also be justified on the basis of Article 36, there would be no inconsistency between the Convention and Articles 30 to 36.

50. The systematic or, rather, dogmatic objections of MSL to this approach are unconvincing. Admittedly, derogations under Article 36 must indeed be justified. This means that measures to secure the objectives there set out must be appropriate and proportionate in order to be covered by Article 36. (44) It is also true that Article 36, as a derogating provision, must be interpreted strictly. (45) However, the argument of MSL, to the effect that the rights of non-member countries cannot be made subject to justification under Article 36, misses the point of the problem. The decisive factor is that the Member State is in a position to comply with the obligations imposed on it by the Convention. From the point of view of the non-member countries affected, it is immaterial whether this is possible by virtue of that State' s own sovereignty or is permitted by Article 36.

51. Under Article 36 of the EC Treaty restrictions and bans on imports can be justified on grounds of, inter alia, the protection of health. With the exception of MSL, all the parties involved in the proceedings before the Court take the view that the measures required under the Convention can also be based on Article 36 of the EC Treaty. That is a view which I share. The measures for control of the lawful trade in narcotic drugs provided for in Articles 19, 21 and 29 to 31 of the Convention appear appropriate to prevent (or to minimize) the dangers to health which abuse of these substances may occasion. In view of the danger posed by these products, there is no obvious alternative method for attaining this object which is less restrictive of the free movement of goods.

52. It should be borne in mind in this connection that the Community adopted the objectives of the Convention here under examination at the latest when it acceded to the 1988 Convention. (46) Both the EC Treaty and the Convention attach particular importance to the protection of health. It would for that reason be remarkable if measures dictated by the Convention for the purpose of attaining that objective were to encounter the disapproval of the EC Treaty.

53. In any event, a contradiction could arise only where the limits set in Article 36 are exceeded. It is common knowledge that under the second sentence of Article 36 prohibitions of trade are not permitted if they constitute a "means of arbitrary discrimination" or a "disguised restriction" on trade between Member States. In my opinion, however, such a situation cannot arise in the present case.

54. As the United Kingdom, for instance, has correctly pointed out, the Convention in no way compels the Contracting Parties to ban imports of narcotic drugs. The Commentary on the Convention published by the United Nations ("the Commentary") (47) does admittedly state that imports of narcotic drugs (and the international trade as such) have to be considered to constitute particularly dangerous situations in which drugs can be diverted into illicit channels. (48) However, the Convention contains numerous references to international trade which make clear that it is none the less based on the fundamental premiss that imports are permissible. Suffice it at this point to bear in mind the wording of Article 21(1), which provides that the total quantity of each drug "manufactured and imported" in any one year may not exceed specified amounts.

55. MSL and the Portuguese Government argue that it follows from Article 21(1) of the Convention that a State is obliged to prohibit imports if the output of domestic manufacturers is sufficient to meet requirements. To my way of thinking, such an obligation can no longer be based on Article 36 of the EC Treaty, with the result that a conflict would arise in that regard between the Convention and the provisions of Community law. The question, however, is academic, since in my opinion the Convention does not impose any such duty. Article 21(1) refers to both domestic production and imports, without requiring any preference to be shown for the former. An obligation to ban imports also does not arise from any actual necessity, (49) since domestic production and imports must both be authorized by licence. So far as I can ascertain, the only clue in this direction is to be found in a decision adopted by the Consultative Committee of the League of Nations in 1934 (50) which recommended to producer countries that they should not grant any further licences for manufacture if existing production capacity in the countries in question was sufficient to meet requirements. The Convention here under examination, however, does not contain any provision to that effect or any provision which in such a case would require a ban on imports.

56. MSL takes the view that the grant of a licence for imports would have the result that specific quotas would have to be allocated to domestic manufacturers and importers. Such a quota system, it argues, would, however, be incompatible with Articles 30 to 36, particularly since it would lead to an arbitrary allocation of the quantities in question.

It would indeed be very difficult, if not completely impossible, for a State to keep within the maxima laid down in Article 21 and not to exceed the estimates requiring to be made under Article 19 unless it were to allocate specific quotas of required total needs to the commercial operators concerned. For that reason the Contracting Parties are recommended in the Commentary to grant quotas to "manufacturers or importers, or both". (51) However, in my view such a procedure may also be justified under Article 36 of the EC Treaty. Ireland has very properly pointed out that a ban on imports in the present case would have the result of consolidating one company' s monopoly on the United Kingdom market. Such a position would be much less compatible with the free movement of goods than would the allocation of quotas to domestic manufacturers and importers.

Furthermore, such allocation of quotas need not ° contrary to MSL' s contention ° take place in a manner which is arbitrary and for that reason contrary to Article 36. There is nothing to argue against the application, when these quotas are being allocated, of objective criteria relating to factors such as price or guarantee of regular supplies by the company in question.

57. Nor will the effectiveness of the Convention' s system of control be jeopardized through the granting of a licence for imports. Admittedly, the Commentary does mention that it may be advisable or even essential for the purposes of effective control to keep to a minimum the number of licences issued to manufacturers and international traders (importers as well as exporters). (52) It should nevertheless be noted in this regard that the Commentary is a means for interpreting the Convention but cannot form the basis for any obligation not already set out in the Convention itself. The Convention, however, does not prescribe that Contracting Parties must ban imports. This is implicitly confirmed by the passage in the Commentary just referred to. If the granting of an import licence in an individual case thus does not breach the Convention, the argument (discussed in connection with Question 1(b)) that conferring on one single domestic producer the right to supply is particularly conducive to safety will be unable to stand in the way of the application of Articles 30 to 36 of the EC Treaty.

In my view it is not necessary to examine in any greater detail the question whether the granting of an import licence makes it difficult for a Contracting Party to furnish accurate estimates under Article 19. Suffice it to note that the Convention does not prohibit imports. If such imports did in fact make the submission of estimates more difficult, those difficulties would result from the Convention itself.

58. Compliance with the obligations arising under Article 2(5) of the Convention can also be reconciled with the application of the rules on the free movement of goods. Under Article 2(5) each Contracting Party must adopt any special measures of control for drugs listed in Schedule IV to the Convention which in its opinion are "necessary" (Article 2(5)(a)) and may ban a drug outright if it considers this to be the "most appropriate means" of protecting the public health and welfare (Article 2(5)(b)). This presents Contracting Parties with a possible course of action. A duty to act arises only where a Contracting Party considers special measures to be appropriate. In this connection, however, it must be borne in mind that the Contracting Parties are required to act "in good faith" when interpreting these provisions. (53) Thus, although the Convention does not require Contracting Parties to adopt special measures if they do not consider such measures to be necessary, if a Contracting Party forms the opinion that special measures of control are "necessary" or that prohibition of the drug in question represents "the most appropriate means" of countering the dangers to which that drug gives rise, it must also act. This interpretation is consonant with the wording of the provision as well as with the meaning and purpose of the Convention.

59. As the matter is thus one for the assessment of individual Contracting Parties, differences may naturally arise as between individual Member States with regard to the application of this provision. The present case is a clear example of this, since according to the available information the use of diamorphine is permitted only in the United Kingdom and is banned in all the other Member States.

In any event, it is scarcely surprising that there should be such differences in an area as sensitive as that of lawful trade in narcotic drugs. As several of the parties involved in these proceedings have correctly pointed out, trade in narcotic drugs not only creates dangers for health but can also adversely affect other legal rights. Restrictions on intra-Community trade in these goods may thus also be justified on grounds of public policy or public security, which are also mentioned in Article 36.

60. As the French Government has correctly argued, such differences are also compatible with Community law so long as there has not been any harmonization at Community level of protective provisions in this area. It should, however, be pointed out that Community law imposes limits on such national measures. Those limits are set out in the second sentence of Article 36. The views expressed by the Portuguese and French Governments fail, in my view, to take sufficient account of that fact.

A case of disguised discrimination (and thus no longer covered by Article 36) would, for instance, exist where a Member State allowed domestic operators to manufacture or trade in a drug listed in Schedule IV to the Convention but imposed a general ban on imports from other Member States. Such a course of action is also not prescribed under Article 2(5) of the Convention. That provision does not require Contracting Parties to treat domestic producers more favourably than importers. A fortiori, it does not force Contracting Parties to maintain in place national monopolies. Ireland makes the point succinctly: Article 2(5) permits a total ban on the production, manufacture, export, import, possession and use of such a drug. This can be reconciled with Article 36 of the EC Treaty. However, if a Contracting Party does not impose a general ban but introduces only specific restrictions, the Convention does not oblige it to treat importers less favourably than domestic producers.

To that extent also there is no contradiction between the provisions of the Convention and the rules on the free movement of goods.

61. MSL has argued that the granting of an import licence infringes the general obligations of the Contracting Parties, set out in Article 4 of the Convention, to give effect to the Convention and, in accordance with its terms, to limit exclusively to medical and scientific purposes the production, manufacture, export, import, distribution of, trade in, use and possession of drugs. MSL has, however, failed to demonstrate what actually constitutes this infringement.

62. It seems to me that considerably more weight attaches to the argument that the Treaty rules on the free movement of goods will not be able to apply ° at least with regard to the United Kingdom ° so long as the Member States have not made the notification provided for under Article 43(2) of the Convention.

It is clearly the object of Article 43(2) to provide members of a customs union (as represented by the Community) with the means to reduce the inconveniences and obstacles to international trade occasioned by the application of the system of controls. (54) Since no such notification for the Member States of the Community has as yet been made, they cannot be treated as a single "territory" within the meaning of Articles 19, 20, 21 and 31 and therefore cannot benefit from the resulting facilities. (55) This means, for instance, that the importation into one Member State of narcotic drugs from another Member State continues to require a licence under Article 31.

63. The present case, however, concerns a separate question, namely whether the provisions of the Convention are compatible with the application of the Treaty rules on the free movement of goods. In the light of the above examination, this question ought to be answered in the affirmative. It is for that reason immaterial that submission of the notification provided for under Article 43(2) would provide additional facilities. If the Convention and the Treaty are mutually compatible without its being necessary to submit that notification, absence of such notification cannot release the Member States from their obligations under Articles 30 to 36 of the EC Treaty.

64. If the Court should go along with the views outlined in this alternative submission, Questions 1(a) and 1(b) should in my opinion be answered as follows: Articles 30 to 36 of the EC Treaty apply to lawful trade in narcotic drugs within the meaning of the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs.

Question 1(c)

65. In Question 1(c) of its reference the High Court seeks to ascertain whether a Member State can refuse to issue a licence for the importation of narcotic drugs from another Member State if such importation would threaten the viability of the sole licensed manufacturer in the Member State concerned and jeopardize the reliability of supplies of those drugs for essential medical purposes in that Member State. By that question the High Court appears to be seeking an interpretation of Article 36 and thus proceeding on the assumption that Articles 30 to 36 are applicable. It is on this basis that the question should also be answered.

66. The question is founded on the claim by the applicants in the main proceedings that the grant of an import licence would threaten the viability of the British manufacturer and consequently security of supplies in the United Kingdom. Although this claim has not yet been proved, it may be assumed to be correct for the purpose of answering the question submitted.

67. The other circumstances mentioned in the question are irrelevant. The fact that other Member States which manufacture narcotic drugs prohibit their importation has no bearing on the interpretation of Community law. Likewise, the fact that the Member States have not as yet submitted the notification provided for under Article 43(2) of the Convention is immaterial for the purposes of interpreting Article 36 of the EC Treaty. (56)

68. There can in my view be no question but that the continuity of supplies of drugs essential for medical purposes is a matter of great importance. A Member State is for that reason entitled to take account of that point when deciding whether to grant a licence for the importation of narcotic drugs. It cannot be ruled out that this consideration may exceptionally allow a Member State, within the context of Article 36, to accord domestic production a certain degree of preference over imports from other Member States. This, in my view, follows from the judgment of the Court in the Campus Oil case. (57) The Court there held that a Member State which is dependent on imports of petroleum products can require importers to cover a certain proportion of their needs by purchases from a domestic refinery, if the production of that refinery cannot otherwise be disposed of competitively on the market. (58) Article 36 will also not be rendered inapplicable in such cases on the ground that the measure in question also serves purely economic ends. (59) Generic' s objection in that regard cannot therefore be accepted.

69. It cannot be ruled out that a Member State may even be entitled on the basis of the above consideration to prohibit the importation of a narcotic drug in individual cases. However, the United Kingdom correctly points out that such cases will be very much the exception. Article 36 allows restrictions on trade only if there are no other less restrictive ways in which to secure the desired objective. For that reason it is necessary to point to these limits when answering the questions submitted in the reference. In this regard, it goes without saying that Article 36 merely allows a Member State to impose restrictions on the free movement of goods but does not oblige it to do so.

70. I therefore propose the following answer to Question 1(c): Article 36 of the EC Treaty allows a Member State exceptionally to give preference to domestic production over imports from other Member States if that is the only way in which reliable supplies of narcotic drugs for essential medical purposes can be guaranteed in that Member State.

71. By its final question the High Court seeks to ascertain whether the public authority responsible for purchasing essential pain-relieving drugs for medical use is entitled to take into account the need for reliability and continuity of supply when awarding the corresponding contracts within the framework of a tendering procedure for public-supply contracts. The order for reference mentions in this connection Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, (60) "as amended". This directive (which was amended on several occasions) was repealed by Article 33 of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (61) and was replaced by Directive 93/36. This directive was adopted after the issue by the High Court of its order for reference. If it were necessary to reply to the question of the High Court, that answer would therefore have to take account of the present legal position. However, as I have already pointed out, it is not necessary for the Court to consider this question. (62) In what follows I shall discuss it only in case the Court should form a different opinion.

72. With the exception of MSL and the French Government, all the parties involved in the present proceedings take the view that the criterion of reliability and continuity of supply may be considered within the context of Directive 77/62. According to MSL, this is not one of the criteria for the award of contracts within the meaning of Article 25 of the directive. That provision applies to all "open" and "restricted" procedures within the meaning of Article 4(1) and (2) of the directive. It is for that reason first necessary to consider whether those procedures may be applicable in the present case.

73. The Portuguese Government has its doubts on this point and refers to Article 6(1)(b) of Directive 77/62. (63) This provision states that the procedures referred to in Article 4(1) and (2) need not be applied "when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with protection of exclusive rights, the goods supplied may be manufactured or delivered only by a particular supplier".

In contrast to the view taken by the Portuguese Government, however, it seems to me beyond doubt that the supply of narcotic drugs is not covered by that provision. The facts of this case demonstrate that the manufacture of diamorphine is not the subject of exclusive rights.

74. The French Government argues that the supply of narcotic drugs need not be made the subject of a tendering procedure by reason of Article 6(1)(g) of Directive 77/62. Article 6(1)(g) provides that the procedures referred to in Article 4(1) and (2) need not be applied if the supplies in question "are declared secret or when their delivery must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the provisions laid down by law, regulation or administrative action in force in the Member State concerned, or when the protection of the basic interests of that State' s security so requires". As the result of a subsequent amendment (64) to Directive 77/62, this passage became Article 2(2)(c), which provides that the directive does not apply to such cases. (65)

The possibility cannot be ruled out that the supply of narcotic drugs is covered by this provision. Although the exceptional cases, in which the tendering procedures set out in Directives 77/62 or 93/36 are not applicable, must in those directives be "expressly limited", (66) (67) the fact that the supply of narcotic drugs must be accompanied by special security measures suggests that such supply might come within the scope of this derogating provision. If this were so, the problem addressed by Question 2 would, of course, not arise.

75. If, on the other hand, it is assumed that the directive is applicable, the question will arise as to whether the criterion of reliability and continuity of supplies can be taken into consideration under Article 25 of Directive 77/62. As MSL correctly points out, the directive draws a distinction between the requirements as to technical suitability of relevant operators (Articles 21 to 24) and the criteria for the award of contracts (Article 25). This is already clear from Article 17(1) of Directive 77/62.

76. According to Article 25(1) of Directive 77/62 (68) the contracting authority, when awarding contracts, must apply either the criterion of the lowest price only (Article 25(1)(a)) "or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract in question: e.g. price, delivery date, running costs, cost-effectiveness, quality, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical merit, after-sales service and technical assistance" (Article 25(1)(b)).

As the Court has already held with regard to a similar provision in Directive 71/305/EEC, this means that the permissible criteria must be confined to identifying "the offer which is economically the most advantageous". (69) From this MSL infers that the criterion of reliability and continuity of supplies cannot be applied under Article 25(1)(b) of Directive 77/62 on the ground that it is a consideration which is general in nature.

77. That argument cannot be accepted. Admittedly, it seems to me doubtful whether one can claim that this criterion is actually contained within one of the criteria expressly mentioned in Article 25, as has been argued by the United Kingdom (which takes the view that this criterion is contained in "technical merit") and by Ireland (which considers that the criterion in question may be included under the notions of "delivery date" or "quality"). In any event, this criterion also determines the "most economically advantageous tender", since even an apparently attractive offer will ultimately not be advantageous if future supplies cannot be guaranteed. Even though this is an approach which also takes into account the future consequences of the award of a contract for a specific offer, the fact that such an approach is not alien to the directive is demonstrated, in my opinion, by the inclusion of the criteria "running costs" and "after-sales service". The Commission has also expressed a similar view.

Generics, Ireland and the United Kingdom have also correctly pointed out that the enumeration given in Article 25(1)(b) is not exhaustive, as the wording itself indicates. It is, of course, necessary that the criterion be specified in the invitation to tender.

78. Finally, it should be pointed out that the criterion of security of supply is a legitimate consideration which may be taken into account within the context of Article 36. The United Kingdom is right to point out that a directive must not be interpreted in such a way that it prohibits something which Article 36 allows. The French Government also refers in this connection to the fifth recital in the preamble to Directive 77/62, which states that the directive does not prevent the application of Article 36.

C ° Conclusion

79. I accordingly propose that the questions submitted by the High Court should be answered as follows:

1. Articles 30 to 36 of the EC Treaty apply to lawful trade in narcotic drugs within the meaning of the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs. However, in so far as this would make it impossible for the Member State concerned, even in the light of the possibilities opened up by Article 36 of the EC Treaty, to comply with the obligations imposed on it by the Single Convention, the first paragraph of Article 234 of the EC Treaty allows that Member State to comply with its obligations under that Convention if it acceded to the Convention before the entry into force of the EC Treaty or prior to its own accession to the Community.

2. Article 36 of the EC Treaty allows a Member State exceptionally to give preference to domestic production over imports from other Member States if that is the only way in which reliable supplies of narcotic drugs for essential medical purposes can be guaranteed in that Member State.

Principle of Member State liability for damage caused to individuals by breaches of Community law attributable to the State - Breaches attributable to the national legislature - Conditions for State liability - Extent of reparation.
Joined cases C-46/93 and C-48/93.

1 State liability for infringements of Community law and the resultant obligation to make reparation to individuals, which is the subject of inter alia the well-known judgment in Francovich, (1) continues to arouse great interest. That judgment, however, has not cleared up every aspect; many question marks remain, some relating to important issues.

The questions from the Bundesgerichtshof (Federal Court of Justice, Case C-46/93) and the High Court of Justice (Case C-48/93), which raise the issue once again of infringements of the Treaty already found in preceding judgments of this Court, consequently afford an opportunity, if not of resolving all the remaining difficulties associated with this complex subject, at least of providing further clarification, in particular about the existence of State liability in cases other than failure to implement a directive and about the Community preconditions for an individual's right to reparation.

As a result, the Court will have to consider a number of important institutional aspects, in particular the relationship between Community law and the national legal systems. Consequently, this is an area in which the correct operation of the Community legal system as a whole has to be assessed.

I Facts, national legislation, questions referred for a preliminary ruling

2 Whilst referring to the Report for the Hearing for a detailed account of the relevant legislation and the facts which have given rise to these proceedings, I shall confine myself to those aspects which are most relevant for present purposes.

(a) Case C-46/93 (Brasserie du Pêcheur)

3 Brasserie du Pêcheur SA, a French brewery the seat of which is at Schiltigheim (Alsace), claims that it was forced to discontinue exports of beer to Germany in late 1981 because the beer produced by it did not comply with the `purity' requirements laid down in Paragraphs 9 and 10 of the Biersteuergesetz (2) (Law on Beer Duty, hereinafter `the BiStG'). More specifically, as emerged at the hearing, the persistent checks carried out by the German authorities at retailers' premises and the resultant claims that the beer in question did not satisfy the requirements laid down caused the brewery's German sole importer to refuse to renew the distribution contract.

Following the judgment of 12 March 1987 (3) in which the Court held that the prohibition against the marketing of beers imported from other Member States which did not comply with the BiStG was incompatible with Article 30 of the Treaty, Brasserie du Pêcheur brought an action against the Federal Republic of Germany for compensation for the loss suffered by it as a result of that import restriction between 1981 and 1987, in the sum of DM 1 800 000, which is presumably a fraction of the loss actually incurred. That action was dismissed by the lower courts. Brasserie du Pêcheur is pursuing the same claim in its appeal on a point of law before the Bundesgerichtshof.

4 Given that the infringement in question must be regarded as an omission on the part of the legislature, since it had not amended the BiStG to accord with Community law, the Bundesgerichtshof points out that compensation for damage is governed in Germany by Paragraph 839 of the Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch

(German Civil Code) in conjunction with Article 34 of the Grundgesetz (Basic Law). According to the first paragraph of the latter provision, `If a person infringes, in the exercise of a public office entrusted to him, the obligations incumbent upon him as against a third party, liability therefor shall attach in principle to the State or to the body in whose service he is engaged'. The first subparagraph of Paragraph 839 of the Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch provides, in contrast, that if an official wilfully or negligently commits a breach of official duty incumbent upon him as against a third party, he shall compensate the third party for any damage arising therefrom. In the event that he acted negligently, he will be answerable for the damage only if the injured party has no other possibility of obtaining compensation.

Apart from the exercise of a public office and a breach of official duty, therefore, the applicability of the rules in question depends on the further requirement that the official duty breached should be `referrable to the third party' (Drittbezogenheit), which means that the State is responsible only for breaches of official duties the exercise of which is expressly directed at a third party and therefore has the aim of protecting a right of the third party. However, it is precisely that requirement which is normally absent in the case of a legislative wrong, including the illegality in point in this case. (4) As the national court has pointed out, in fact, in the BiStG the legislature imposed burdens concerning the community which do not relate in particular to any individual or class of individual capable of being regarded as third parties for the purposes of the provisions adverted to. (5)

Secondly, the national court observes that neither in this case can there be State liability on account of an unlawful act of the public authority which is capable of being equated with expropriation, a principle developed by the case-law of the Bundesgerichtshof (Federal Court of Justice). (6) The national court considers this to be inevitable in that the principle in question, according to that case-law, does not permit compensation to be granted for loss or damage arising out of laws infringing the Grundgesetz, which is equatable to compensation for loss or damage resulting from infringement of a Community obligation. Moreover and in any event, in this case there was no interference with the appellant's legal interest which may be protected under the law of property.

5 The Bundesgerichtshof, taking the view that German law affords no basis for upholding the appellant's damages claim, has therefore made a reference for a preliminary ruling to the Court in order to establish whether the principle of State liability for loss or damage caused to individuals by infringements of Community law attributable to it, as may be inferred from the judgment in Francovich, is applicable to the case pending before it. More specifically, it has asked the Court:

`1. Does the principle of Community law according to which Member States are obliged to pay compensation for damage suffered by an individual as a result of breaches of Community law attributable to those States also apply where such a breach consists of a failure to adapt a national parliamentary statute to the higher-ranking rules of Community law (this case concerning a failure to adapt Paragraphs 9 and 10 of the German Biersteuergesetz to Article 30 of the EEC Treaty)?

2. May the national legal system provide that any entitlement to compensation is to be subject to the same limitations as those applying where a national statute breaches higher-ranking national law, for example where an ordinary Federal law breaches the Grundgesetz of the Federal Republic of Germany?

3. May the national legal system provide that entitlement to compensation is to be conditional on fault (intent or negligence) on the part of the organs of the State responsible for the failure to adapt the legislation?

4. If Question 1 is to be answered in the affirmative and Question 2 in the negative:

(a) May liability to pay compensation under the national legal system be limited to the reparation of damage done to specific individual legal interests, for example property, or does it require full compensation for all financial losses, including lost profits?

(b) Does the obligation to pay compensation also require reparation of the damage already incurred before it was held in the judgment of the European Court of Justice of 12 March 1987 in Case 178/84 Commission v Germany [1987] ECR 1227 that Paragraph 10 of the German Biersteuergesetz infringed higher-ranking Community law?'

(b) Case C-48/93 (Factortame III)

6 The action for damages arising out of the application of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 brought by the 97 applicants in the main proceedings is the sequel to the well-known Factortame affair, of which I shall merely set out the gist.

The law in question provided for a new register for all British fishing vessels and hence also for vessels already registered on the former register. In particular, the new registration system, which became compulsory on 1 April 1989, imposed stricter conditions relating to the nationality, residence and domicile of the natural and legal persons who were the true owners of the vessels. If those requirements were not met, fishing vessels were ineligible to be entered on the new register and consequently were not allowed to fish under the British flag.

The new registration system was challenged in the Divisional Court, which by order of 10 March 1989 suspended the application of the new registration system by interim injunction, which was subsequently overturned by the Court of Appeal. (7) Concurrently, the Divisional Court requested the Court of Justice to give a preliminary ruling on the questions of Community law raised by the applicants, which it did by judgment of 25 July 1991. (8) In that judgment, the Court held that it was contrary to Community law and, in particular, to Article 52 of the EEC Treaty, for a Member State to impose conditions as to the nationality, residence and domicile of owners of fishing vessels such as those laid down by the new registration system in the United Kingdom.

In the meantime, the Commission brought an action against the United Kingdom under Article 169 on the ground of the alleged incompatibility with Community law of the British statute, but only as regards the nationality aspect. The Commission also applied for interim measures requiring the United Kingdom to suspend the application of the statute, which the Court granted by order of 10 October 1989. (9) Following that order, the United Kingdom partially amended the Merchant Shipping Act with effect from 2 November 1989. Subsequently, by judgment of 4 October 1991, (10) the Court of Justice held that, by imposing the conditions as to the nationality of the vessel owners, the United Kingdom had failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 7, 52 and 221 of the EEC Treaty.

As long ago as 2 October 1991, the Divisional Court made an order giving effect to the judgment of the Court of Justice in Case C-221/89 Factortame II in respect of the registration of the fishing vessels of 79 of the applicants, in which it directed that the applicants should give detailed particulars of their claims for damages against the Secretary of State for Transport. Then, by order of 18 November 1992, it gave leave to a number of companies and various other persons to be joined as parties to the proceedings and/or to claim damages and further gave Rawlings (Trawling) Limited, the 37th claimant, leave to amend its statement of claim to include a claim for exemplary damages for unconstitutional behaviour.

The applicants seek damages under various heads, including, in particular, expenses and losses of profits and income incurred from the entry into force of the new legislation (1 April 1989) until the time at which they were able to resume fishing. (11) wrongs (individual torts) leading to civil liability have been used in so far as they lend themselves to cover conduct of the public authorities.

7 In English law, State liability in damages is a creature of case-law. In particular, the same

First, damages may be awarded where loss or damage is due to a negligent breach committed in the exercise of administrative or legislative activity (tort of negligence). (12) Since, however, there must be a `duty of care' on the part of the public authority and the relevant case-law holds that there can be no such duty in the case of pure economic loss, (13) which makes it impossible for damages to be awarded for that type of harm, it would be hard for an infringement of Community law to give rise to liability. The concept and scope of the duty of care are presently being developed in the case-law of the courts of the United Kingdom. (14)

Secondly, liability on the part of the public authorities may be claimed in the event of a breach of statutory duty. In such case, however, the actual chances of obtaining damages are considerably reduced in so far as the prevalent view is that the possibility of obtaining administrative remedies designed to ensure that the law is complied with precludes bringing an action for damages. (15) Admittedly, the existence of liability in damages for infringements of Community law was affirmed in that very context, but only in the case of `ordinary civil actions'. (16)

In contrast, where the breach falls solely within the ambit of public law, liability may be claimed only for misfeasance in public office. This is the only tort which does not cover relations between private persons but specifically the public authorities. However, the requirement for intentional unlawful conduct makes the possibility of obtaining damages a remote one, even where the loss or damage arises out of infringements of Community law. Thus, as the Divisional Court points out in the order for reference, in Bourgoin (17) the Court of Appeal held that the State was not required as a matter of English or Community law to compensate the victims of acts which had been found to be contrary to Community law, unless the Minister acted in the knowledge that the act in question was unlawful and with the intention of injuring the claimants. Following the judgment in Francovich, however, the House of Lords itself has questioned whether Bourgoin was correctly decided. (18)

8 The Divisional Court considers that if English case-law were to be applied, the claimants would have no remedy in damages. Since, in addition, it is uncertain whether the principle of State liability for loss or damage caused to individuals by infringements of Community law attributable to the State, as may be inferred from Francovich, applies also to the facts of the case pending before it, it has requested the Court to give a preliminary ruling. Its questions are as follows:

`1. In all the circumstances of this case, where:

(a) a Member State's legislation laid down conditions relating to the nationality, domicile and residence of the owners and managers of fishing vessels, and of the shareholders and directors in vessel-owning and managing companies, and

(b) such conditions were held by the Court of Justice in Cases C-221/89 and C-246/89 to infringe Articles 5, 7, 52 and 221 of the EEC Treaty, are those persons who were owners or managers of such vessels, or directors and/or shareholders in vessel-owning and managing companies, entitled as a matter of Community law to compensation by that Member State for losses which they have suffered as a result of all or any of the above infringements of the EEC Treaty?

2. If Question 1 is answered in the affirmative, what considerations, if any, does Community law require the national court to apply in determining claims for damages and interest relating to:

(a) expenses and/or loss of profit and/or loss of income during the period subsequent to the entry into force of the said conditions, during which the vessels were forced to lay up, to make alternative arrangements for fishing and/or to seek registration elsewhere;

(b) losses consequent on sales at an undervalue of the vessels, or of shares therein, or of shares in vessel-owning companies;

(c) losses consequent on the need to provide bonds, fines and legal expenses for alleged offences connected with the exclusion of vessels from the national register;

(d) losses consequent on the inability of such persons to own and operate further vessels;

(e) loss of management fees;

(f) expenses incurred in an attempt to mitigate the above losses;

(g) exemplary damages as claimed?'

Terms of the problem and structure of the Opinion

9 The question of State liability for infringements of Community law, which is of considerable importance in terms of both the principles involved and the potential consequences for the Member States were such liability to be affirmed broadly and generally, is complex and by no means free of snares, as witness moreover the substantial debate which has taken place in recent years in academic writings.

In these proceedings, the Court has to establish whether, on what terms and with regard to which classes of injury, there exists an obligation for the State to compensate individuals who have suffered loss or damage as a result of the application of national laws conflicting with Community law. (19)

10 In the first place, it will accordingly be necessary to establish whether liability in damages should be confined to the case, which has already been assessed in Francovich, of failure to implement a directive whose provisions, albeit satisfying a number of conditions relating to their special nature, may not be relied on directly by individuals in order to obtain the benefit provided for them by the directive, or whether it should be extended to circumstances, such as those of the cases now before the Court, in which the loss or damage suffered by the individuals arises out of the application of a national law conflicting with Community provisions which may be relied on by individuals directly in the national courts. In order to do so, I consider it useful to set out the terms in which the obligation for Member States to make reparation for infringements of Community law has been affirmed to date, in order, partly by this means, to trace the basis of liability in Community law. In addition, I consider it worthwhile dwelling on the alleged non-liability of the State for acts or omissions of the legislature, which has also been raised (albeit somewhat cautiously) in these proceedings in order to deny, on an abstract level and in principle, the existence of State liability in the circumstances at issue.

Secondly, it will have to be established whether the conditions of liability are those specific to each national legal system - albeit subject to the well-known limits identified in several of the Court's decided cases - or whether, by contrast, it is Community law itself which determines at least the substantive conditions which are sufficient in order for the State in breach of its obligations to be required to make reparation for the resulting loss or damage. If the second branch of this alternative prevails, it should obviously be clarified whether any infringement whatsoever which injures an individual is enough or whether something more is needed, as most of the Member States have argued in these proceedings. Then again, can that something more be taken to be the need for fault or are other conditions necessary, for example the very ones which the Court has identified in regard to non-contractual liability on the part of the Community institutions (case-law on Article 215)? In addition, from the point of view of the causal link, it will have to be assessed, for example, whether it is important that the nature of the Community provision infringed was such as to enable the individual to protect his own rights directly so as to eliminate the substantive illegality; furthermore, the time at which the obligation to make reparation arises will have to be assessed in any event. Lastly, there will be a need to dwell on the procedural requirements governing the right to reparation and on the criteria for quantifying the damage.

11 These, therefore, are the aspects which I shall be considering and the questions which I shall be seeking to answer. Accordingly, the analysis set out below will be subdivided into three parts. The first part will deal with the principle of State liability under Community law with a view to identifying its basis and scope, inter alia with respect to unlawful acts or omissions on the part of the legislature, and to assessing in particular whether an action for damages is a residual remedy only, in the sense that such an action may be brought only where the individual has no other means of asserting the rights conferred on him by Community law, or whether its ambit is wider.

As for the conditions of liability, I shall say forthwith that the minimum substantive - unlike the procedural - conditions must be common and hence Community conditions. To my mind, this is the only way of avoiding a situation in which the actual possibility of obtaining reparation for a given infringement is not secured equally in the several Member States and in which discrimination consequently arises as between individuals, which a Community based on the rule of law should not tolerate. Accordingly, the second part of my Opinion will deal with the conditions enabling individuals to obtain reparation, that is to say, the Community preconditions for liability, and the limits imposed by Community law on the procedural conditions. In my view, the latter conditions continue - in common with the criteria for determining the quantum of the damages - to be governed by national law.

Lastly, I shall consider the two cases before the Court and reply to the questions which gave rise to these proceedings.

I - The principle of State liability in Community law: basis and scope 12 The idea of State liability for loss or damage caused by legislative activity does not seem at all surprising. The basic principle of most of the civil rules on non-contractual liability is neminem laedere, as variously interpreted and limited, under which everyone is bound to make good loss or damage arising as a result of his conduct in breach of a legal duty. (20) It is undeniable that reference is made to that principle by the various rules, mostly created by the courts, governing liability on the part of the public authorities, even though that liability has special features peculiar to itself in view of the activities carried out by those authorities, in particular in the case of legislative activity. Liability of the public authorities is also closely, if not indeed necessarily, connected to wrongful damage by the fact of its having to have been caused by the unlawful conduct; in a manner of speaking, this is the other side of the coin.

Admittedly, in the case of the public authorities, precisely because of the nature of the activity which they perform and of the consequences which would ensue were there held to be liability and an obligation to compensate generally, the tendency has invariably been to limit the scope of liability in various ways. The extent of that limitation, which may be encapsulated, by way of initial approximation, in the well-known formula according to which the liability in question is `neither general, nor absolute', (21) is consequently related to the need to balance the opposing, competing interests at stake: on the one hand, the injured party's interest in obtaining at least financial restitution for the loss or damage he sustained as the result of an activity - in particular legislative activity - of the State; on the other, the State's interest in not having to answer invariably and in any event for loss or damage caused by the activities of its organs in performing the institutional tasks entrusted to them.

Manifestly, over time significant changes have taken place with regard to the limitation of the scope of responsibility, varying according to the legal system considered. In particular, the emergence of the State governed by the rule of law has resulted in an increasing shift of emphasis, at least in the more advanced legal systems, from the conduct of the perpetrator of the damage to the rights of the injured party, as in the case of liability generally. From this point of view, State liability and the resulting obligation to make reparation have ended up by becoming a means of penalizing unlawful and/or, in any event, harmful conduct and thereby of achieving effective protection for individuals' rights.

13 This reasoning prompts an initial, straightforward observation with regard to the principle of State liability for infringements of Community law. The fact that the Member States, even though subject to conditions limiting the scope of liability in different ways, may be called upon to answer for loss or damage caused by legislative activity of the public authorities suggests in itself that it is unreasonable that they should invariably and in any event not be liable for infringements of Community law which have an effect on the financial situation of individuals affected by those infringements.

Consequently, in so far as at least the principle of State liability is part of the tradition of all the legal systems, (22) it must be able to be applied also where the unlawful conduct consists of an infringement of a Community provision.

14 Furthermore, it should be observed straight away that, whilst it is essentially for the State, and hence its institutions, to ensure that Community law is duly implemented and, in particular, to guarantee individuals that the rights conferred on them are effective, it is also unquestionable that, where rights claimed by individuals pursuant to Community provisions are concerned, it falls to the Court to review the degree of adequacy of the protection afforded by the national legal systems. That review has on several occasions extended even so far as to require the Member State concerned to adopt a judicial remedy not available under its legal system. (23)

It would therefore be at odds with the relevant case-law and with the characteristics of the legal system as a whole, in particular the division of tasks between the Community and the Member States, for Community law to disinterest itself completely of compensation for loss or damage, by leaving it, without any review, to each national system.

(a) The obligation on Member States to make reparation for failures to fulfil obligations as affirmed in the Court's case-law: the Francovich judgment and its precursors

15 The judgment in Francovich, which is bound to be the starting point for any discussion of State liability in damages for infringements of Community law, still constitutes the Court's most precise response in this area. The case turned on the non-implementation of the directive on the protection of employees in the event of the insolvency of the employer, which required Member States to set up machinery affording a minimum guarantee in respect of unpaid wage claims. Italian magistrates asked the Court whether, faced with the failure of a Member State to implement that directive, individuals were entitled to rely directly on the Community measure before the national courts in order to obtain its benefits and, in any event, claim damages from the Member State where the directive lacked direct effect. Consequently, the Court was asked, not only about the direct effect of a number of provisions of a directive, but also about compensation for loss or damage resulting from its non-implementation. (24)

Although it found that the relevant provisions of the directive were unconditional and sufficiently precise as regards the determination of the persons entitled to the guarantee and the content of the guarantee itself, the Court held that those provisions could not be relied upon directly before the national court in order to seek the benefit provided for them by the directive. In particular, those provisions did not identify the person liable to provide the guarantee, and the State could not be considered liable on the sole ground that it had failed to take transposition measures within the prescribed period.

16 Turning to whether it was possible for an individual to claim and obtain compensation for any loss or damage sustained, the Court first called to mind the fundamental characteristics of the Community system and, in particular, the tasks conferred on the national courts. It drew the lapidary but incontestable conclusion that `the principle whereby a State must be liable for loss and damage caused to individuals as a result of breaches of Community law for which the State can be held responsible is inherent in the system of the Treaty' (paragraph 35).

More specifically, the Court inferred that principle from two fundamental elements of the Community legal order. First, it pointed out that `the full effectiveness of Community rules would be impaired and the protection of the rights which they grant would be weakened if individuals were unable to obtain redress when their rights are infringed by a breach of Community law for which a Member State can be held responsible' (paragraph 33). The Court also stressed that the possibility of obtaining redress from the Member State is `particularly indispensable where, as in this case, the full effectiveness of Community rules is subject to prior action on the part of the State and where, consequently, in the absence of such action, individuals cannot enforce before the national courts the rights conferred upon them by Community law' (paragraph 34).

Secondly, as it had already done in the judgment in Humblet, (25) it derived and inferred that obligation to make reparation from Article 5 of the EC Treaty, `under which the Member States are required to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure fulfilment of their obligations under Community law', which include precisely `the obligation to nullify the unlawful consequences of a breach of Community law' (paragraph 36).

17 What was contemplated, therefore, was the means made available in order to reinforce the effectiveness of Community provisions through the effectiveness of the judicial supervision of the legal interests created by those provisions and likewise in order not to leave Member States' failures to fulfil obligations without - inter alia, tangible - consequences.

Consequently, it is precisely in the light of those objectives that the position of the individual has been used and given its proper importance. The State's financial liability vis-à-vis individuals for loss or damage caused by legislative inaction has been created by the Court in the final analysis as an instrument for securing protection for individuals and thereby also the proper implementation of Community law. From this point of view, it has remote roots, both in terms of specific precedents for the liability and obligation to compensate of the Member States (26) and in the more general setting of the effective protection of rights asserted by individuals under Community provisions. (27)

18 It should not be overlooked that statements relating to the obligation to provide compensation for breaches of Community law of various kinds are to be found in the Court's case-law, if only incidentally, since the early 1960s. I would refer in the first place to the judgment in Humblet, which I have already mentioned, where the Court held in particular that if it `rules in a judgment that a legislative or administrative procedure adopted by the authorities of a Member State is contrary to Community law, that Member State is obliged, by virtue of Article 86 of the ECSC Treaty, to rescind the measure in question and to make reparation for any unlawful consequences which may have ensued'. (28)

19 In addition, it is on the very assumption that the Member State's failure to fulfil obligations may give rise to a right on the part of an individual to compensation that the Court has, on several occasions, rejected an objection of inadmissibility, despite the fact that the Member State against which infringement proceedings have been brought has fulfilled the relevant obligation in the period between the reasoned opinion and delivery of judgment by the Court. (29)

20 The affirmation of the obligation on Member States to compensate individuals is even more direct and explicit in Russo v AIMA, (30) where the Court held that `If such damage has been caused through an infringement of Community law the State is liable to the injured party for the consequences in the context of the provisions of national law on the liability of the State'.

21 It is unquestionably clear from the above dicta, therefore, that a Member State may indeed be called upon to compensate for the damage sustained by individuals consisting in or resulting from an infringement of Community provisions.

However, the case-law makes it clear that liability has to be made out by the national court `in the context of the provisions of national law on the liability of the State'. (31) Consequently, it is to the legislation of each Member State that reference is made in principle in order to determine whether the State is obliged to compensate for damage caused by failure to comply with a Community provision. (32)

22 That case-law seems to have been overtaken from this particular point of view by the judgment in Francovich, in which the obligation on Member States in breach of their obligations to make reparation is rooted in Community law, even as regards the preconditions for the obligation to make reparation.

Essentially, in Francovich the Court did not confine itself to leaving it to national law to draw all the legal inferences from the infringement of provisions of Community law, but held that Community law itself imposed on the State an obligation to make reparation vis-à-vis individuals by defining, at least as regards the case of liability at issue in that case, the `Community' conditions determining liability.

(b) The `Community' principle of liability: merely a means of closing a lacuna in the protection of rights or a principle of broader scope?

23 What must now be considered is precisely whether the approach which can be discerned from the pre-Francovich case-law (still) has any basis or whether an obligation based on Community law of the Member States to make reparation may and must exist even in cases other than that of failure to implement a directive.

In particular, it has to be determined whether Community law requires a guarantee in terms of compensation even where provisions having direct effect are infringed or whether the fact that in that event an individual may rely directly on the provision in question and therefore ensure that the right claimed is guaranteed by that means rules out that possibility.

24 The German, Netherlands and Irish Governments have argued to that effect in these proceedings. They reason that the Community legislature did not intend to establish a general system of Member State liability for infringements of Community law. This, they maintain, is borne out in particular by the fact that the Member States did not incorporate any provision on this matter in the Maastricht Treaty. The German Government has further argued that it would not be compatible with the system of division of powers between the Community institutions and the Member States as laid down by the Treaty or with the principle of institutional balance for the case-law to flesh out Community law above and beyond cases in which this is justified by a lacuna in the legislation.

In the final analysis, those governments consider that the right to reparation plays merely a residual protective role, in the sense that it comes to the fore only in regard to provisions which could not otherwise be relied on before the national courts. Essentially, the Court used the Francovich judgment in order to bridge a lacuna in the system for the protection of rights by imposing a sanction on the Member State in breach in the shape of an obligation to make reparation. Conversely, where an individual is already able to take action directly in order to enforce the provisions of Community law, as in the cases which gave rise to these proceedings, there is no need for the Community system to require damages to be awarded and there is no basis for imposing this. Individuals may be held to have a right to reparation only if and in so far as this is permitted by national law.

25 I do not consider that that view can be accepted. First, it is clear from the Court's case-law itself, which has contemplated on several occasions financial liability on the part of the State for infringements of provisions with direct effect, that the possibility of substantive protection does not indeed preclude financial protection. (33) Whilst it is true that in those cases the Court merely held that it was for the Member State to make reparation, under the rules of national law, for the damage caused by it, it is also true that the questions raised by the national courts in those cases were not concerned with the specific subject of the right to compensation.

When the subject was specifically tackled in Francovich, the Court deliberately specified that the principle of liability is an inherent principle of Community law by a general affirmation of principle which holds good for any situation in which Community law is infringed and not merely where there has been a failure to implement a directive. (34) As far as failure to implement a directive is concerned, the Court merely stated that the right to redress is `particularly indispensable', precisely because otherwise the individual would be deprived of any protection, contrary to the rights conferred on him by the directive. However, this affirmation does not preclude liability in damages for injury caused by breaches of other types, particularly since the Court itself went on to hold that the conditions under which ... liability gives rise to a right to reparation depend on the nature of the breach of Community law giving rise to the loss and damage (paragraph 38).

26 Neither does it seem to me that affirmation of the principle of State liability for breaches of Community provisions having direct effect conflicts in any way with the division of powers, as laid down by the Treaty, between Community institutions and Member States. I would merely observe in this connection that it is the infringement of Community law itself which creates an imbalance in the division of powers freely accepted and subscribed to by the States. Any requirement which may be imposed by Community law to make reparation for loss or damage caused by such an infringement constitutes merely a means of restoring the upset equilibrium.

The State's responsibility for legislative activity (on the part of the legislature proper or of the administrative authorities) constitutes also from that point of view a natural and necessary part of the Community legal system created by the Treaty and by the Member States themselves. I cannot but remind myself that it was the Member States which, completely freely, agreed the contractual rules underlying the system as a whole; and the Member States are still the decisive protagonists in the process for the formulation of Community measures. Consequently, to hold that liability exists for failure to fulfil obligations is tantamount simply to increasing the effectiveness of the system and does not involve any activity supplementing - let alone supplanting - the legislature.

27 This is all the more true when it is borne in mind that the State's financial liability vis-à-vis individuals for loss or damage caused by legislative action or inaction has been constructed by the Court, I repeat, as an instrument for ensuring protection of individuals and, thereby, also for the purposes of the proper implementation of Community law in all the Member States.

In sum, what is contemplated is the same as that contemplated by the - now consolidated - case-law which established direct effect, in the sense that provisions of the Treaty and secondary legislation may be relied upon by individuals directly before national courts, provided of course that they are sufficiently clear and precise and unconditional.

28 By identifying the direct effect of a Treaty provision addressed to the Member States and containing an obligation on them, for instance to remove certain barriers and not to reintroduce them, the individual's right to the elimination of those barriers which is derived therefrom is identified and made relevant, with the further consequence that that right becomes capable of being asserted before the national court with a view to its being duly protected. In this way, therefore, the right arising out of the State's obligation by which the individual would have benefited if the obligation had been implemented properly and precisely is identified and enhanced.

This applies, not only on the substantive, but also on the procedural, level. Suffice it to mention what the Court itself has held: `all direct protection of the individual rights of individuals would be removed' if it were to be held that the guarantees against an infringement of Treaty provisions imposing obligations on the Member States were confined to those afforded under Article 169. (35) In the final analysis, the individual's legal position, which is directly dependent on the Treaty provision, is utilized, even in the absence of an incorrect application of that provision, in order to guarantee full, effective protection of the rights which compliance with the provision in question by the State should secure.

29 The same viewpoint appears - even more clearly - from the case-law which, from a given time, has imposed a sanction for the non-implementation or late implementation of a directive by attributing direct effect to it, obviously where defined preconditions were fulfilled. (36) This confirms the observation that, even in the case of directives, the Community system has found in the position of the individual an effective lever for securing their implementation where they have not been duly transposed into national law.

30 It is further significant that the Court has reaffirmed the State's obligation to make reparation in the same terms already laid down in Francovich in a case involving precisely the possibility of relying, in relations between private individuals, on the direct effect of provisions of a directive which was not implemented within the prescribed period. (37)

Holding that there is an obligation to make reparation where a directive cannot be relied on directly before the national court, either because of the absence of direct effect of all the provisions needed to secure the benefit of the right which it confers on the individual or because of the absence of `horizontal' direct effect of precise and unconditional directives, therefore also constitutes a means of reinforcing the position of the individual by making it possible to offset, at least from the financial point of view, the imbalance created by the State's failure to fulfil its obligations.

31 In the final analysis, the individual's position directly created by a provision with direct effect binding on the State is used in order to guarantee full, effective protection to the rights conferred by that provision. In the same way, the individual's right to compensation is used to guarantee protection of the rights conferred by a provision which does not have direct effect in the sense that it cannot be invoked directly before the national court, yet also places an obligation on the State, in the case of a failure to fulfil an obligation on the part of the State.

Consequently, the concept remains the same: in order to implement a provision putting the State under an obligation, the individual's legal position is used, on the one hand, in terms of its full, substantive content, on the other, in terms of its financial content. Even the result is the same: on the one hand, the failure of the Member State concerned to fulfil its obligations is remedied; on the other, the individual is guaranteed effective protection of rights claimed under Community provisions. The upshot is that the effectiveness of the provision is reinforced and hence that of the system as a whole.

32 The foregoing remarks show sufficiently clearly that, far from being a moment of eccentricity in the case-law of the Court, Francovich was completely consistent with and a logical extension of a value which has been upheld on several occasions without question in Luxembourg: effectiveness of Community provisions and hence complete judicial protection. (38)

It is undeniable that this is a fundamental value of any legal system, whether Community or national.

It is also undeniable that respecting that value may require guaranteeing individuals, where necessary, the right to compensation for loss or damage sustained by reason of the legislative action or inaction of the public authorities, irrespective of whether or not the individual has other means, in addition to a remedy in damages, of asserting an infringement of the legal position bestowed on him by Community law.

33 Furthermore, the - now uncontested - affirmation of the State's obligation to compensate the individual in cases of failure to implement a directive, hence in cases in which the infringement of the State's obligation (infringement of Articles 189 and 5 of the Treaty) can be linked only indirectly to a breach of a correlative right of the individual, implies - a fortiori - that the same protection should be available where provisions are directly infringed which guarantee the individual a legal position appertaining to himself and can therefore be relied on directly before the national courts.

In this sense, the argument that it is not possible to `go beyond' liability for failure to implement directives cannot be accepted, not only on the grounds set out above, but also because it ignores that it is the Francovich situation itself which represents possibly the furthest which the case-law of the Court can go (and not the nearest port of call). On close inspection, the Francovich judgment conferred a remedy (at least a financial one) where the remedy provided for was that laid down in Article 169, which does not afford direct protection for individuals. On the contrary, in cases of infringement of provisions having direct effect, the protection already exists and a remedy may be asserted directly by the individual, with the result that it is necessary only to accompany it by that something less, which is financial protection. Consequently, in this case not even that `small' logical leap has to be made which, in contrast, has to be made in order to move from infringement of Article 189 to a breach of the right potentially conferred on the individual by the directive.

Nor should it be overlooked that, as far as provisions having direct effect are concerned, the Court has consistently held that they `must be fully and uniformly applied in all the Member States from the date of their entry into force and for so long as they continue in force' (39) and that `this consequence also concerns any national court whose task it is as an organ of a Member State to protect, in a case within its jurisdiction, the rights conferred upon individuals by Community law'. (40) Consequently, it is quite clear that a Community provision with direct effect confers a legal position appertaining to an individual on the individual as from its entry into force and for as long as it continues in force, irrespective of and even despite any pre-existing or subsequent national provision which may negate that legal position. It therefore follows that the national court is under a duty to provide full, effective judicial protection of the rights conferred on the individual by the relevant Community provision.

34 It is unquestionable that the infringement of a provision gives rise to an imbalance consisting in the reduction or annulment of the legal situation affected, in this case that of an individual; it is also unquestionable that every legal situation appertaining to an individual, every `right', if you prefer, has a substantive content and a financial content, which can generally be quantified. Guaranteeing the effectiveness of judicial protection in the case of an infringement of a provision conferring a legal position on an individual means securing the reinstatement of the content of the right impaired by the infringement of the provision. If that which unlawfully adversely affects the individual's right is an act of a public authority - an administrative measure or a law - it is whoever brought it into being who must reinstate the individual's right or at least its financial content.

In the final analysis, reinstating its financial content is something less, a minimum remedy compared with full substantive reinstatement, which remains the optimum means of protection. Annulment of an unlawful measure or setting aside a law which is inconsistent with a superior parameter of legality is necessary in a State governed by the rule of law. At times, however, this is not enough and it may be necessary, in order to render the protection real and effective, to bring back into balance also the financial content of the right which has been impaired and hence to ensure that the damage is made good. Consequently, reinstating financial balance in respect of the right which has been infringed is not something different or something more, even less something novel. Neither does it constitute something optional which is sophisticated and remote in a legal system which seeks and needs to be effective.

To sum up, the principle of the State's financial liability must be applied as a remedy which is both alternative and additional to substantive protection; consequently, it must be applied in the event of infringements both of provisions without direct effect, in the sense of provisions which may not be directly relied on before the national courts, and of provisions which may be so relied on.

(c) The obligation of the State to compensate for acts or omissions of the legislature

35 It does not seem to me that that conclusion may be invalidated by the fact that occasionally or often infringements of Community law are attributable to the legislature.

I would point out in this connection that Francovich, with which not even any of the States which have submitted observations in these proceedings have taken issue, makes no distinction depending on whether the loss or damage ensues from an infringement attributable to omissions of the legislature or of the executive. Certainly, that is no reason for considering that a different conclusion should be reached as regards the circumstances under consideration here.

However, as the national courts have shown in their respective orders for reference, they are debarred from awarding damages by their national law, precisely because the infringements at issue of Community law are attributable to the legislature, either because it failed to amend a national law so as to bring it into conformity with Community law (Case C-46/93 Brasserie du Pêcheur) or because it passed a national law inconsistent with Community law (Case C-48/93 Factortame III). Essentially, therefore, given that it is impossible to bring an action for damages in the event of action or inaction on the part of the legislature, in such cases national law leads to the negation of the very principle of liability.

36 Admittedly, in the past the idea that the State was not liable for acts or omissions of the legislature was a widespread one. Its rationale was that the sovereign could do no wrong or, according to a more modern, democratic version, parliamentary sovereignty. In other words, in so far as it was the highest expression of the sovereign power, the legislature fell in principle outside the general rules governing liability in view, inter alia, of its democratic legitimacy.

That view, which took root above all in legal systems in which the law was not reviewed in the light of some higher parameter, should take on a different complexion where there is a higher norm which can be used to verify and, in an appropriate case, deny the legality of the legislature's activity. Yet, also in those legal systems in which there is not only a clear, formal hierarchy as between constitutional rules and legislative rules, but also a mechanism of ad hoc supervision as to constant compliance with that hierarchy (Austria, Italy, Germany and Spain, for example), the question as to whether compensation can be awarded for loss or damage ensuing from an unconstitutional law is far from having been incontestably resolved. (41) The fact remains, however, that in such a case it cannot be ruled out that the State will be called upon to answer for the loss or damage caused by laws declared unconstitutional.

37 It is true that when the legislature is bound in carrying out its legislative tasks to comply with particular limits imposed by superior rules, there is no reason in general legal theory for denying that the State may be bound to compensate for the damage caused by laws which exceed those limits. In those circumstances, liability for acts or omissions of the legislature is not conceptually very remote or different from responsibility of the administrative authorities for legislative activity, which is upheld more or less everywhere today without difficulty.

And that is not all. It is well known that, in most legal systems, compensation is awarded in certain cases for the diminution of assets sustained by individuals on account of a perfectly lawful activity of the legislature, in that it was brought into being without any infringement of any enabling law: take, for instance, cases of nationalization and expropriation for purposes of public utility. If, therefore, it is conceded that the sacrifice lawfully imposed on the legal and financial situation of individuals for the sake of the public interest must be accompanied by fair compensation, it would be curious, to say the least, not to consider that if such loss or damage is produced by a legislative act which is unlawful because it conflicts with a superior rule (constitutional, Community or in any event prevailing over the act) there is no room for compensation.

38 It is scarcely necessary to point out that, in relationships governed by international law, State responsibility for acts or omissions of the legislature is universally and unquestionably acknowledged. (42) Of the many instances, it is worth recalling the principle laid down by the Permanent Court of International Justice to the effect that the obligation to make reparation is the direct consequence of a harmful act contrary to international law which is attributable to a State. More specifically, `It is a principle of international law that the breach of an engagement involves an obligation to make reparation in an adequate form. Reparation therefore is the indispensable complement of a failure to apply a convention and there is no necessity for this to be stated in the convention itself.' (43)

39 Certainly, I am aware that, in international law, the State's obligation to make reparation for damage arises even where in practice the compensation is aimed at restoring the financial position of individuals vis-à-vis one or more States and not, as is sought in the cases now before the Court, directly vis-à-vis individuals.

However, it does not seem possible to me to ignore the specific, peculiar features of the Community legal order. That system is based, as far as is relevant for present purposes, on a contractual foundation. The Treaty, in common also with other agreements establishing international organizations, contains a series of obligations on Member States with regard to the achievement of the aims set out therein, which have been freely subscribed to, and to the operation of an institutional structure whose powers are very largely, but not wholly, predefined. However, the peculiar, ultimate aim of the contractual basis in the case of the Community is integration and more specifically `lay[ing] the foundations of an ever closer union among the peoples of Europe', (44) inter alia through the achievement of the common market. It follows that traditional instruments, those of international law in fact, prepared in order to promote the due, precise fulfilment of obligations on the part of the Member States have resulted and continue to result to a very great extent in giving maximum, direct relevance to the legal position of individuals. The reason for this is that the obligations of the Member States and Community institutions are directed above all, in the system which the Community system has sought and sets out to be, to the creation of rights of individuals. This is the picture drawn by the authors of the Treaty and consolidated by the Community legislature.

40 In case-law, which is only too well known, the Court has simply taken note of that specific intention of the authors of the Treaty and subsequently of the legislature, observing that the EC Treaty set up its own legal order `for the benefit of which the States have limited their sovereign rights, albeit within limited fields'. (45) The subjects of that legal order comprise not only the States but also individuals, upon whom Community law confers rights which become part of their legal heritage: these rights arise not only where they are expressly granted by the Treaty, but also by reason of the obligations which the Treaty imposes upon individuals, the Member States and the Community institutions.

41 It must therefore be acknowledged that, in relation to the - Community - rules governing the situation of individuals which are recognized as prevailing over domestic rules, a claim that there was a general absence of liability on the part of the national legislature would be without justification. Instead, the very idea of liability of the State qua legislator in relation to the obligations imposed by Community law, and hence entered into contractually by the States themselves or brought into being subsequently by procedures laid down for the purpose, is perfectly consistent with - and hence inherent in - the fundamental and typical characteristics of the Community legal order.

42 In the final analysis, even in the light of Francovich, but if only in view of the specific nature of the Community legal system considered as a whole, it is completely irrelevant whether the unlawful act or omission is attributable to the legislature or to the executive.

Next, in any event the problem of the liability of the State qua legislator is surpassed where the unlawful act or omission is connected with rules having direct effect. The Court's dictum to the effect that `it would be contradictory to rule that an individual may rely upon the provisions of a directive which fulfil the conditions defined above in proceedings before the national courts seeking an order against the administrative authorities, and yet to hold that those authorities are under no obligation to apply the provisions of the directive and refrain from applying provisions of national law which conflict with them' (46) implies in fact that even the administrative authorities are under an obligation to guarantee protection of rights claimed by individuals under Community provisions with direct effect. It follows accordingly that in such a case it is quite possible to enforce the liability of administrative authorities for having adopted prejudicial measures pursuant to a law which is alleged to be incompatible with Community law or, in any event, for having applied such a law.

The French Conseil d'Etat (State Council), for example, seems to have taken that approach in inferring State liability from the breach (faute (47)) of the administrative authorities, at least where they exercised a discretion conferred on them by a domestic law contrary to Community law. (48) Admittedly, in cases of this type the origin of liability is invariably to be found in unlawful conduct attributable to the legislature, that is, in a law incompatible with Community law. However, it is obviously for national law to determine whether attributability to the administrative authorities is an `indispensable' procedural and/or substantive expedient in order to get the legislature to answer or the correct mode of proceeding.

43 What is required by Community law for present purposes is that, in any event, the necessary instruments be made available in order for individuals to be able to seek, and possibly obtain, compensation for loss or damage sustained as a result of infringements of Community law. In this connection, moreover, it should be made very clear that the problem of determining a judicial remedy which is not already known to or permitted by the judicial systems of the Member States is not insuperable or a new problem: this is so on account of the specific factors under consideration in these proceedings, and also because the problem has already been dealt with by the Court in a number of historic, uncontested passages in its case-law.

This is testified to, in particular, by cases such as Simmenthal (49) and Factortame I, (50) in both of which the Court was asked whether a particular judicial remedy, which the national court held was not available under the national judicial system, could or had to be conferred and implemented by virtue of Community law.

44 What was in question in Simmenthal was the Italian court's power itself forthwith to disapply a national provision conflicting with Community law without having first to obtain a prior ruling from the Constitutional Court that it was unconstitutional. By basing on Community law the national court's power/duty to disregard the provision conflicting with Community law, a power/duty unknown to the national system - indeed there was express, repeated case-law of the Constitutional Court to the contrary -, the Court introduced a derogation from the Member States' autonomy in relation to means for the judicial protection of rights conferred on individuals by Community law. Moreover, it is remarkable - also for the present proceedings - that in Simmenthal the Court considered intolerable, not the absence of protection, but even a mere delay in protection, thereby giving pre-eminence to that aspect over the advantages in terms of certainty and finality which the system based on the assessment of constitutionality as hitherto operated undoubtedly possessed.

In Factortame I, the question arose yet again, just as in Simmenthal, as to whether where the national court lacked a power under its national judicial system - namely the power to suspend by interim measure a law suspected but not yet found to be incompatible with Community law - such a power could be based on Community law. As in Simmenthal, the Court ruled that an obstacle to the effective judicial protection of a right claimed under Community provisions by an individual had to be removed by the national court and that hence any measure providing for that obstacle had to be set aside.

45 In the final analysis, the Member States' autonomy in relation to judicial remedies for the infringement of rights conferred by the Community system, albeit affirmed by the Court, (51) is subject to considerable derogations: in particular, whenever it is essential to derogate in order to ensure the proper implementation of Community law and correct, effective protection of the rights claimed by individuals under Community law.

Accordingly, for example, whereas in Salgoil the Court emphasized the obligation on the national courts to ensure direct and immediate protection of individuals' interests, but went on to specify that `it is for the national legal system to determine which court or tribunal has jurisdiction to give this protection and, for this purpose, to decide how the individual position thus protected is to be classified', (52) that ambiguity disappears in Bozzetti v Invernizzi. In that judgment, the Court reaffirmed the obligation to ensure that individual's rights are effectively protected `in each case' and that, within those precise limits only (`subject to that reservation') `it is not for the Court to intervene in order to resolve any questions of jurisdiction which may arise, within the national judicial system, as regards the definition of certain legal situations based on Community law'. (53) The qualification `subject to that reservation' is manifestly the most relevant key to the interpretation of this passage inasmuch as it marks out the limits to the autonomy of the national systems, and it is no accident, to my mind, that the same qualification is set out in paragraph 42 of Francovich.

46 It should not be overlooked that the Community legislature, too, has introduced exceptions to the Member States' autonomy, for example in the field of public contracts governed by Community law, precisely as regards compensation for damage. I refer, obviously, to Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (54) and to the corresponding Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 on remedies in relation to the so-called excluded sectors. (55)

Faced with a large variety of solutions in the Member States' legal systems, the Community legislature acted, not only with regard to aspects relating to substantive, hence real, protection, but also by providing for a system - which was certainly novel to a good many national systems - of damages to compensate for the injury caused by unlawfulness of contract award procedures in the event of the absence or insufficiency of real protection. (56)

47 In the final analysis, it can certainly be said that the Member States' autonomy with regard to judicial remedies for the infringement of rights conferred by Community provisions is firmly

tied to the result sought by Community law. (57)

Where Community provisions are infringed by Member States, the result which should be attained, as far as is relevant for present purposes, for the proper operation of the Community legal system as a whole is that of ensuring, assuming that specific preconditions are satisfied, that the same legal situation is restored, at least in terms of its financial implications, as would have obtained if the Member State had not failed to fulfil the obligation imposed upon it by Community law.

II - Conditions for the State's obligation to pay compensation

48 Consequently, liability attaches to any case in which Community law is infringed, including that in which the loss or damage results from infringements of Treaty provisions having direct effect, regardless of the organ of the State (including the legislature) to which the loss or damage is attributable. It now remains to consider the conditions in which liability exists and, in parallel, the individual's right to compensation.

In the absence of specific Community provisions governing the area, the problem lies in defining the conditions determining State liability and in actually being able to ascertain when they are present. In addition, careful consideration should be given to the practicality of the possible solutions.

49 Certainly, Community law could very well, as some States have proposed in these proceedings, confine itself to affirming that liability exists in principle and that there is an obligation to compensate, whilst leaving it to national law to determine the preconditions and lay down the detailed substantive and procedural rules.

Such a solution, as I mentioned at the beginning, would however have considerable drawbacks, the first among them being that it would not ensure the result sought by Community law through an affirmation of the principle of liability, that is to say, full, effective protection of the rights claimed by individuals under the Community provision which is assumed to have been infringed. That this is a real risk is shown by the very questions referred by the national courts, which arose precisely because the applicable national law did not allow any compensation to be granted in the cases before them. Again, in any event, it is only too obvious that a mere reference to national law would be in danger of endorsing a discriminatory system, in so far as for a given infringement Community citizens would receive different protection, some none at all.

50 In order for protection in damages to be assured in all the Member States in at least a homogeneous - if not exactly uniform - manner, it is vital that it should be Community law itself which lays down at least the minimum conditions determining the right to compensation, in particular the criteria by which those conditions are established, and the `Community' limits imposed on the `national' conditions relating to compensation, be they procedural or otherwise.

This, moreover, was the solution adopted by the Court in Francovich, albeit with some particular features connected with the case at issue. There is no ground for considering that that solution should apply only in the event of failure to implement a directive and not to the infringement of provisions with direct effect.

51 In Francovich, I recall, while specifying that it is in the context of the rules of national law that the State is bound to make reparation for the consequences of the damage caused, the Court itself identified and defined the conditions `sufficient to give rise to a right on the part of individuals to obtain reparation, a right founded directly on Community law' (paragraph 41). The Member State to which the failure to implement a directive is attributable is therefore bound in every case to make reparation for the loss or damage sustained by the individual, provided that the conditions laid down by the Court are fulfilled.

However, this must not be taken as meaning that the presence of those conditions is sufficient for the purposes of compensation with respect to any infringement of Community law whatsoever. As the Court itself explained, `Although State liability is thus required by Community law, the conditions under which that liability gives rise to a right to reparation depend on the nature of the breach of Community law giving rise to the loss and damage' (paragraph 38).

52 Consequently, the necessary requirements in order for Member States to be liable are likely to vary from case to case. However, as in Francovich, the requirements must be identified and defined by Community law itself.

In other words, it is true that, in the case of infringements of Treaty provisions having direct effect, the conditions set out in Francovich may not be necessary and/or sufficient to give rise to a right to reparation. Nevertheless, in such cases too, it will be necessary to identify what conditions are sufficient in order to enable an individual to obtain reparation. It is scarcely necessary to point out that the sufficient conditions, as is clear from the Francovich judgment itself, relate to the substantive preconditions for liability.

53 A rapid appraisal of the rules in force in the national legal systems on liability on the part of public authorities shows that it is commonly accepted at least that the principle should be that the entity to which the event which gave rise to the loss or damage is attributable is answerable for that event, provided that there is causal link between the event and the loss or damage.

The substantive preconditions for liability are more or less the same everywhere: actual damage, a causal link between the damage and conduct on the part of the perpetrator of the damage, and the fact that the conduct was unlawful. In contrast, the differences - which in some cases are important in so far as they affect, for example, even the nature of the individual interests protected (58) - relate to the manner in which those preconditions are defined and the criteria for ascertaining whether they are met.

54 For present purposes, therefore, it is necessary, not so much to identify the general conditions for liability, which in point of fact are practically the same in the various legal systems, but to establish the criteria for determining whether they are met or, if you prefer, those criteria which will enable a common definition to be found of the conditions in question.

To that end, I consider that I should dwell initially on the conditions which the Court considers sufficient in cases of failure to implement a directive in order to give rise to a right on the part of individuals to compensation.

1. The Francovich solution

55 The obligation on the State to make reparation for legislative omissions was recognized by the Court in cases of failure to implement a directive within the prescribed period, subject to finding that the following three conditions were met: `First, the purpose of the directive must be to grant rights to individuals. Second, it must be possible to identify the content of those rights on the basis of the provisions of the directive. Finally, there must be a causal link between the breach of the State's obligation and the damage suffered.' (59)

A first question needs to be asked: are those conditions necessary and sufficient also in a case where the loss or damage was caused by infringement of a Treaty provision having direct effect?

56 Leaving aside for the moment the question of the causal link, which is compulsory for tortious liability, I would observe initially that the first condition, to the effect that the result prescribed by the directive should entail the grant of rights to individuals, is concerned with identifying the legal position of the individuals whose infringement may give rise to compensation. Having regard to the relevant case-law, it must be considered that the Court intended by those words to refer generally to all individual legal positions protected by Community law; hence - by definition - this condition is always met in the case of provisions having direct effect.

The second condition, which at first blush seems merely to specify the first, emphasizes the need for the right resulting from the directive to have a precise content, that is to say, its subject-matter must be capable of determination, with the result that this condition should again be regarded, in principle, as being satisfied by Treaty provisions with direct effect. (60) It is worth stressing at this juncture that in Francovich, as in Joined Cases C-178/94, C-179/94, C-188/94, C-189/94 and C-190/94 Dillenkofer and Others, on which I am also delivering an Opinion today, the content of the right conferred on the individuals coincides exactly and precisely with their pecuniary claims asserted by virtue of that same right under the relevant Community provisions and hence with the loss for which damages may be payable. (61) Of course, this does not mean that the condition in question has to be interpreted as meaning that whether damages may be awarded in respect of the damage sustained by the individual is dependent on whether the exact content of the pecuniary loss sustained by the individual is capable of being identified on the basis of the actual provision infringed. In contrast, it is enough for the infringement of the provision in question, which confers on the individual a right whose subject-matter can be precisely identified, to have affected the injured party's financial interests. If this were not so, in fact, only claims in cases in which the aim of the provision infringed was precisely to confer a `pecuniary' right on the individual would sound in damages.

57 The above observations lead me to an initial conclusion: in so far as they relate to the legal position which an individual must occupy in order to be able to claim a right to reparation, the conditions laid down by the Court in Francovich are manifestly necessary and satisfied even in the case of Treaty provisions having direct effect. What has to be clarified here is whether those conditions are sufficient in every case.

To that end, it is worth examining the reasons which prompted the Court to confine itself to those conditions and not also to specify, for instance, the criteria for holding that the relevant infringement of Community law involves unlawful conduct such as to cause the State to incur liability. In Francovich, as I have already said, the Court referred expressly to only one of the classic preconditions for liability: the causal link. In contrast, it provided no further clarification about the unlawfulness of the conduct of the perpetrator of the loss or damage and the actual existence of the loss or damage, the national court not having been asked to carry out any review in that regard.

58 In my view, the choice made by the Court in Francovich was due, very simply, to the fact that in that case the existence of the aforementioned two preconditions was obvious at first sight. There could be no doubt as to whether the omission on the part of the State was unlawful: the result sought by the directive - in respect of which the State had no margin of discretion, at any rate not in relation to the time within which the directive had to be implemented - was not attained; neither was there any doubt as to whether loss or damage had actually occurred, since it essentially coincided with the amount to which the applicants would have been entitled had the directive been implemented within the prescribed period.

Accordingly, in those circumstances, since the Court had first found that the directive could not be relied on directly by individuals before the national courts, it merely indicated that, for the purposes of the obligation to make reparation of the Member State in breach of its obligations, it must be possible to identify a precise, exact right on the part of the individuals.

59 In sum, it is undeniable that, from the point of view of State liability and the obligation to make reparation, Francovich was virtually a textbook case. The fact that the Court did not feel the need to specify the limits of State liability, in particular in so far as it omitted expressly to indicate the Community criteria for judging whether the conduct of the State was unlawful, should be seen solely in the light of the particular features of the case before it. It is significant in this regard that different, even opposite, reactions are to be encountered in academic writings: according to some commentators, the Court intended only to target serious infringements or infringements involving fault; (62) others, in contrast, take the view that it appears from Francovich that any infringement of Community law gives rise to liability and an obligation to make reparation. (63)

In the final analysis, the fact that the criteria required by Community law in order for the State to incur liability are not clearly defined in Francovich is closely connected with the particularly straightforward nature of that case. The Court's very statement that the conditions under which State liability gives rise to a right to reparation depend `on the nature of the breach of Community law giving rise to the damage' should therefore be construed as meaning not only that the general conditions for liability to be incurred vary according to the type of breach, but also that the particular characteristics of a specific type of breach, such as failure to implement a directive within the prescribed period, may be such as not to require detailed consideration as to whether one or more of the conditions in question are present.

60 To interpret Francovich differently would mean that every infringement of Community law affecting the financial interests of an individual occupying a legal position claimed under the provision infringed entailed per se and automatically a right to reparation.

It does not seem to me that this was the result intended by the Court or by Community law. Moreover, it would not actually be reasonable, given that, as I have already mentioned, in all the legal traditions liability for legislative activity on the part of the public authorities is limited in various ways. What is more, the Court's own case-law on the non-contractual liability of the Community institutions on account of their legislative activities takes a different line.

2. The case-law on the second paragraph of Article 215

61 Although this is not the proper place in which to analyse and discuss this case-law, I consider it necessary at least to point to the need for calm, profound reflection thereon. In these proceedings, the Member States have constantly referred to the case-law in question and asked for the same criteria set forth in that case-law also to be applied in respect of liability for infringements of Community law attributable to them.

That point of view does not seem completely baseless, bearing in mind, first, that the second paragraph of Article 215 refers, for the purposes of the reparation of damage caused by Community institutions in the performance of their duties, to the general principles common to the laws of the Member States and, secondly, that consequently that case-law could and should constitute, regard being had to the absence of uniform rules in this field, a useful frame of reference for common rules on State liability.

62 The Court does not seem - or at least not at first sight and unlike that which Advocate General Mischo proposed in his Opinion in Francovich - to have intended to make State liability hinge on the same restrictive conditions required by the case-law in order for the Community to incur liability.

Nevertheless, I consider it worth preceding my consideration of each of the general conditions for liability by a few observations designed to assess whether, and to what extent, an infringement of Community law attributable to the State is comparable to an infringement on the part of the Community institutions, and whether, in the final analysis, the criteria set forth in the relevant case-law may or may not constitute a useful frame of reference, at least given similar situations.

63 To that end, I would call to mind as a preliminary point that the Court has consistently held that `the liability of the Community on account of its legislative powers depends on the coincidence of a set of conditions as regards the unlawfulness of the act of the institution, the fact of damage and the existence of a direct link in the chain of causality between the act and the damage complained of'. (64) As can be seen, the substantive preconditions are the same - indeed could not be different - also in the case of liability on the part of the Community institutions.

However, the case-law has identified - in particular with regard to the unlawfulness of the conduct imputable to the institutions - conditions which are so restrictive as to make it extremely difficult actually to obtain damages against a Community institution. (65)

64 The limits laid down by the case-law in regard to actions brought under Article 215 of the Treaty are in fact based on the widespread view that, as a matter of principle, compensation may not be recovered for injury caused by the legislature. Moreover, the Court itself has explained its restrictive approach as follows: `the legislative authority, even where the validity of its measures is subject to judicial review, cannot always be hindered in making its decisions by the prospect of applications for damages whenever it has occasion to adopt legislative measures in the public interest which may adversely affect the interests of individuals'. (66)

The application of that approach, however, in a good few cases has made for perplexity.

65 The limits of Community liability are relied upon and applied not only in relation to legislative measures which presuppose the existence of a broad discretion on the part of the relevant institution, but also in relation to measures which fall within the ambit of implementing legislation (typically Commission implementing regulations). (67) Essentially, the Court has applied the restrictive criteria formulated in assessing the Community's liability on account of legislative measures of a general nature even where the damage arose out of an individual measure not in fact involving economic policy choices of such scope as to necessitate the fullest possible protection of the institutions' discretionary powers.

Unquestionably, it would be more correct to apply different rules on liability depending on whether the activity in question was more particularly legislative or in the nature of executive activity, given that, in principle, the discretion available to the Community institutions differs significantly in the two cases. (68) More generally, the requirement for virtually arbitrary conduct in order for non-contractual liability on the part of the Commission to arise is justified where the Community has a broad discretion - as in the field of agricultural policy -, but is not justified where, in contrast, the conditions for the exercise of the discretion conferred on the institution are clearly and precisely defined. (69) In the latter case, the infringement of the relevant provision should in any event be regarded as such as to cause the Community to incur liability. (70)

66 In sum, whilst, according to Francovich, loss or damage caused by a provision of national law incompatible with a Community provision must be held to be amenable to an action for damages, it is not easy to understand why damages should be recoverable for the loss or damage ensuing from a Community measure which is incompatible with the same Community provision only if the restrictive conditions laid down by the Court (until now) are satisfied. (71) Moreover, in a Community governed by the rule of law, which aims to pay increasing attention and to be increasingly sensitive to the protection of individuals, also from the point of view of compensation, at least equal attention should be paid - as a number of parties have argued - to cases in which the loss or damage suffered by the citizen arises out of an unlawful act or omission attributable to the Community institutions themselves. (72)

From that point of view, it does not seem to me either that it can be validly argued that to transpose to national actions in tort the conditions attaching to actions brought under Article 215 would potentially constitute a step back from the situation existing in some legal systems. From the point of view of the requirements of the protection of the rights conferred on individuals by the

Community legal system, it is not acceptable for the judicial protection achievable at Community level to be based on more restrictive and, in the final analysis, less liberal conditions than those obtaining in at least some Member States. (73)

67 In the light of the foregoing, I consider that there is no reason for applying different criteria - naturally in like situations - depending on whether the infringement of Community law in question is attributable to a State or a Community institution. Conversely, different situations can and must lead to different conclusions as regards the criteria employed to find whether the preconditions for liability are satisfied, whether the alleged liability be on the part of the Member States or the Community institutions.

In particular, by way of a first approximation, I take the view that it is absolutely reasonable that State liability - let us be quite clear about this, irrespective of whether or not the provision `breached' has direct effect - should be subject to the same restrictive conditions applying to the Community institutions whenever they have a margin of discretion or the limits imposed on their action by Community provisions, perhaps in sectors falling (partly) within their sphere of competence, are not clear.

Conversely, Member States should be more readily held liable, as in the case of the Community institutions, wherever the infringement is not coupled with the exercise of a broad discretion.

68 In the final analysis, what should be attained is a system of differentiated liability depending on whether or not the Community institutions (and the national authorities) have a broad discretion. To my mind, this is the most correct and consistent manner of bringing about the essential harmonization of the preconditions for liability, in so far as it would be strange, to say the least, to hold Member States liable, on equivalent facts, for infringements of Community law on different (less strict) conditions than those which the Court applies to liability on the part of the Community institutions.

In a Community governed by the rule of law, in which it is the aim that the acts and conduct of all participants in the system should be amenable to judicial review without privileges for anyone, the requirement for effective protection of the rights claimed by individuals under Community law may not vary - given equal situations - depending on whether a Member State or the Community caused the loss or damage.

69 The appraisal set out below will therefore take into consideration, as the point of reference for determining the obligation on Member States to make reparation, inter alia the conditions identified by the Court in its case-law on Article 215. Of course, this will not involve a `blind' transposition of those (restrictive) conditions to the sector under consideration here. I am not overlooking that, in applying Community law, the Member States generally have very limited discretion, with the result that the conditions in question relating to this situation are likely to cause liability more readily to be incurred. At the same time, I consider that it cannot be ruled out that any lack of precision of the obligation on the Member State may be such as to necessitate the application of those same restrictive criteria, even though it does not have a significant margin of discretion in the sector in question.

3. The `Community' criteria relating to the general conditions for liability

70 Having said all this, I shall now turn to consider the individual substantive preconditions for incurring liability, starting with the event which gave rise to the damage, that is to say in this case, infringement of Community provisions with direct effect.

(a) The event which gave rise to the damage: infringement of Community provisions

71 Defining the limits of liability is primarily and essentially linked with the definition of the unlawful conduct. It is undisputed that the harmful conduct - here the legislative measure - must conflict with the rules of the system. In order, however, for such unlawfulness to give rise to liability, and at the same time damages, the individual States employ differing concepts, (74) whose meaning does not always correspond exactly and whose practical application may therefore result in different solutions being applied in respect of the infringement of a given provision. This confirms, if confirmation was needed, that it is necessary - particularly as regards the event which gave rise to the damage - to establish the criteria which will enable a common definition to be achieved.

As regards legislative activity of the public authorities, a first attempt has been made by the Council of Europe in a recommendation, Principle I of which states as follows: `Reparation should be ensured for damage caused by an act due to a failure of a public authority to conduct itself in a way which can reasonably be expected from it in law in relation to the injured person. Such a failure is presumed in the case of transgression of an established legal rule.' (75) Consequently, mere unlawfulness of the measure is not sufficient under that recommendation in order for the State to incur liability: except where the provision alleged to have been breached is clear, the conduct attributed to the public authorities must also have been `unreasonable'.

72 In the Court's case-law on non-contractual liability it has been consistently held that if the damage complained of results from a legislative measure involving choices of economic policy, the fact that the measure in question is invalid is not sufficient to cause the Community to incur liability. In the case of measures of this kind, (76) Community liability cannot arise unless a sufficiently serious breach of a superior rule of law for the protection of the individual has occurred. (77)

Whilst it is true therefore that the prejudicial measure must at least be unlawful in order for non-contractual liability to be incurred, there is the immediate addition of two conditions on which liability for damage caused by measures involving a choice of economic policy depends: the provision infringed must be `a superior rule of law for the protection of the individual' and the breach must be `sufficiently serious' (`grave', `suffisamment caractérisée', `hinreichend qualifiziert').

73 Having said that, I would point out that all the States which submitted observations in these proceedings ruled out an exact match between the reasons for the invalidity of the measure and the preconditions for liability, arguing that not every breach of Community law is capable of causing the State to incur liability and, as a result, of giving rise to an obligation in damages in favour of individuals.

Consequently, for the purposes of holding that there is an obligation in damages on the Member State in breach, the emphasis has been placed, on the one hand, on the same criteria formulated by the case-law on Article 215 - hence essentially on the concept of a manifest and serious breach - and, on the other, on fault as the element necessary to `characterize' (as serious) the breach of the provision or, in any case, as an indispensable, inherent ingredient of liability.

- Manifest and serious nature of the breach

74 Whilst entering all the caveats and making all the distinctions required as regards Community liability, it must therefore be assessed whether, also for the purposes of liability on the part of the Member States, the breach in question must be manifest and serious and, of course, what is to be understood by the breach having to be manifest and serious.

As I have mentioned, in the relevant case-law that criterion is defined in the following terms: `In the context of Community provisions in which one of the chief features is the exercise of a wide discretion indispensable for the implementation of the common agricultural policy, the Community can incur liability only in exceptional cases, namely where the institution concerned manifestly and gravely disregarded the limits on the exercise of its powers', (78) provided of course that the breach in question was of a superior rule of law for the protection of the individual.

75 The latter requirement seems, for present purposes, to be the least controversial. It is obvious that, in order for an individual to be able to claim a right to compensation, the provision breached must be capable of conferring a legal position upon him as an individual. Moreover, this is the sense in which the first two conditions set out in Francovich must be read, conditions which, as I have already stated, are both necessary and satisfied in the case of provisions having direct effect.

In my view, when it comes to Treaty provisions with direct effect, which is what we are concerned with here, some additional specification is needed. In particular, it must be made clear that the fact that such provisions are occasionally or often designed to protect other - ex hypothesi general - interests as well cannot be regarded in itself as preventing them from being for the protection of individuals.

76 Next, as regards the requirement that the provision infringed should be a superior rule, it is scarcely necessary to point out that if a legislative measure is unlawful, this means - by definition - that it conflicts with a higher-ranking provision. Admittedly, that expression is used in the case-law on Article 215, not to penalize every breach of limits imposed by superior rules, albeit for the protection of individuals, but solely breaches of general principles of the legal system and hence, in the final analysis, to categorize the breach in question as serious.

In this connection, I shall say forthwith that I do not consider it appropriate to propose the same solution also for State liability for infringements of Community law. If it is true that the Member States' obligation in damages is imposed in order to guarantee individuals effective protection of rights claimed under Community provisions, it follows it would not be easy to identify reasons justifying limiting that obligation to the breach of a particular class of rule, albeit one fundamental to the Community system.

77 Indeed, if the standpoint of the injured party is taken, it is only too obvious that any infringement of a Community provision which confers a legal position on him as an individual must be capable of giving rise to compensation. Consequently, infringement of a provision of a regulation cannot result for the individual in consequences differing from those arising out of an infringement of a Treaty provision; it seems to me even less appropriate to draw distinctions between actual provisions of the Treaty by deciding, for example, that only breaches of some of them, that is to say, the fundamental provisions and not the others, are capable of causing the Member State in question to incur liability. (79)

In the final analysis, I consider it sufficient, from the point of view of the aspect considered so far, that the provision infringed should confer on the individual a right whose content is capable of determination and precise. It is hardly necessary to add that the same should be true of liability on the part of the Community institutions.

78 This having been clarified, it now falls to me to specify the concept of manifest and serious breach as it arises in this context.

It seems to me that, in order to identify the limits of the possibilities for translating unlawfulness into liability, the discretion factor can and must be the decisive element, irrespective of the rank of the provision infringed (Treaty or secondary legislation, at any rate a provision which takes precedence over national law) and of the measure (legislative or executive) which infringes it. The greater or lesser degree of discretion available to the State coincides, moreover, - at least in most cases - with the greater or lesser degree of clarity and precision of the obligation to which it is subject. In fact, it is quite possible to conceive of obligations which are not at all clear - or better, which are imprecisely demarcated-, even in cases where the States' discretion is small or unimportant. The upshot is that in such cases the limits set to the action of the States are not clearly defined for that very reason, with the result that the situation is not very different substantively from that in which the States have a significant margin of discretion.

79 This means that, even in the case of provisions with direct effect, the State may be guilty of breaches which, not by reason only of their having direct effect, must be categorized as manifest and serious. I shall explain what I mean using an example based on two provisions having direct effect. The prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality (Article 6) identifies precisely and exactly the individual's right, which is - very simply and without any possible alternative - the right not to be discriminated against. The same cannot be said of the provision prohibiting quantitative restrictions and measures having equivalent effect (Article 30) in view of the variety of fact situations conceivable in that area. In that case, the individual's right - which in itself is only too clear - not to be obstructed in his activity by measures contrary to the provision in question may be limited by the provisions of Article 36 or also, in the case of measures applicable without distinction, by imperative requirements relied on by the State with a view to pursuing an objective deemed worthy of protection by Community law itself. The upshot is that the State measure in question, which is in principle incompatible with Community law, may well be taken outside the scope of Article 30 or fall within the exceptions provided for in Article 36. To this end - and it is scarcely necessary to stress this - it may be necessary to obtain a prior determination from the national court and/or from the Community Court.

Furthermore, it is worth pointing out that, for present purposes, it is not decisive in itself whether or not the States have a wide discretion in a given sector, but rather what is decisive is the breadth of the margin of discretion available to them in regard to the individual provision which confers a right on individuals. (80) It is in precisely that way that the discretion ends up by corresponding to the greater or lesser precision of the obligation which it imposes on the States themselves.

80 If the question is seen in those terms, it has to be acknowledged that there will be State liability in principle whenever the State is constrained under Community law to achieve a precise result. This is precisely the case, as already held by the Court in Francovich, where there is a failure to implement a directive within the prescribed period, provided, of course, that the other conditions set out by the Court are fulfilled. But this is also the case with all other provisions, including those of the Treaty, that are confined to imposing on the Member States precise, clearly identified obligations to refrain from some conduct (suffice it to mention the prohibition on the introduction of new customs duties laid down by Article 12 and, more generally, all the standstill clauses) which concurrently give rise to a right for individuals.

So, in all those sectors and with regard to all those provisions which do not give Member States a significant margin of discretion, in the sense described above, there must be held to be liability and an obligation in damages simply on account of the infringement of a Community provision which confers on individuals a right which is precise and whose subject-matter is determinable; no other factors may be taken into account.

81 Where, in contrast, Member States have a more or less wide discretion or the Community obligations imposed on them are not clearly and precisely defined, the same solution will have to be adopted only where the limits set to their action have been manifestly and gravely disregarded. Obviously, this will be the case where the provision assumedly infringed is clear, perhaps in the way described in CILFIT (81) or because it has already been interpreted by the Court with regard to identical or, in any event, similar facts (82) no matter whether the interpretation was given in a preliminary ruling or in a judgment pursuant to Article 169.

As far as the last-mentioned aspect is concerned, it is scarcely necessary to show that, unlike some Member States have argued in these proceedings, there is no reason for making an action for damages dependent upon the Court's having made a prior declaration that the State in question has failed to fulfil its obligations. In this connection, regard must be had to the Commission's discretion in deciding whether or not to initiate infringement proceedings, which would reduce, without any review, the ability of individuals to obtain compensation. Moreover, as the Court itself has held `the rights accruing to individuals derive, not from that judgment [declaring that the Member State failed to fulfil its obligations], but from the actual provisions of Community law having direct effect in the internal legal order.' (83)

82 In contrast, where the Member States have a broad margin of discretion and/or the relevant law is doubtful and has not yet been considered by the Court, even in regard to similar facts, it is impossible for the approach to be different. Simply on an abstract level, it must in fact be considered that in such cases it will be very difficult to find that the limits set to the States' action have been manifestly and gravely disregarded, all the less where this is equated, as in the Article 215 case-law, with virtually arbitrary conduct. (84)

Consequently, in such cases the individual continues to have the possibility of relying on the substantive protection of the legal position which may be conferred upon him by the provision in question. Of course, in the event that the Member State does not remedy reasonably quickly the infringement which has been found in the meantime, the injured party may indeed bring an action for damages.

83 Having said that, it certainly cannot be ruled out that the interpretation of the Community rules in question, as made by the national authorities in their legislative activity (or lack of activity), may prove to be manifestly wrong, with the result that the Member State in breach of its obligations should be held liable in damages also in such cases.

I would next observe that, from the same perspective, as regards the timely, but incorrect, implementation of a provision of a directive, State liability will exist only where the application of the provision by the Member State in question is manifestly wrong. (85)

84 In the final analysis, I consider that, for our purposes, there can be considered to have been a manifest and serious breach where:

(a) obligations whose content is clear and precise in every respect have not been complied with;

(b) the Court's case-law has provided sufficient clarification, either by an interpretation given in a preliminary ruling or by means of a judgment pursuant to Article 169, of doubtful legal situations which are identical or, in any event, similar to that at issue;

(c) the national authorities' interpretation of the relevant Community provisions in their legislative activity (or inactivity) is manifestly wrong.

- Fault: an essential ingredient?

85 It remains now to assess whether fault is an essential ingredient in order to hold Member States liable. In this connection, it is appropriate first to clarify that by fault I mean a subjective factor, or, if you prefer, a mental or psychological factor, which characterizes - as being at fault or negligent or in any sense traditionally attributed to the expression fault - the conduct of the entity to which the infringement and, with it, liability is attributed. From this angle, fault is therefore a factor which is added to the infringement of the enabling provision as a subjective element, by categorizing the conduct which results in the breach, but not directly the breach as such or the legislative measure giving rise to the damage.

Seeking fault in the subjective sense - and, a fortiori, wrongful intent - as regards legislative activity raises some considerable difficulties even at the conceptual level, especially since fault as a condition of State liability has always been the subject of profound reflection and conflicting assessments. In particular, attention has been drawn to the difficulties of identifying conduct displaying fault on the part of the public authorities on the basis of the same criteria used for the purposes of civil law, especially since the mechanisms devised for explaining the actions of legal persons by attributing to them the same manner of acting as natural persons are said to prove completely useless or at least inadequate from this point of view. Indeed, even viewed in the abstract, it appears difficult to identify conduct involving fault in the rule-making activity of the legislator or even to conceive of its possibly being aware of the breach. In contrast, it cannot be presumed that the legislator pursues a general interest invariably and in any event.

86 Despite this, it must be acknowledged that most national legal systems still refer to fault as the basis for liability, (86) even where, essentially, it is equated precisely with the unlawfulness of the measure. I am thinking, in particular, of the French system, in which the ruling principle is that `toute illégalité constitue par elle-même une faute' (any illegality constitutes fault per se) (87) and of the approach of the Italian Corte di Cassazione (Court of Cassation), according to which `as far as unlawful measures are concerned, fault may be found in the infringement per se of the provisions which was brought about by the adoption and implementation of the measure'. (88)

In other words, fault, which is at least presumed every time an unlawful legislative act is brought into being, either in view of the unquestionably voluntary nature of measures adopted by the public authorities or on account of infringement of the principles of legality which those authorities are bound to observe, has ended up by losing every subjective connotation. (89)

87 To put it another way, the search for fault has shifted from the perspective of a person to that of the `organization', with the result that even where it does not coincide simply with the unlawfulness of the measure, it is in any event connected with the content of the provision infringed, inasmuch as it attributes relevance to those rules of conduct with which the administration is bound to comply in performing its institutional tasks. In particular, importance attaches to the fact that the action of the administration is constrained by the limits of legality imposed on it.

Whilst, therefore, it is indeed true that liability is still fault-based in most national legal systems, it is also true that the existence of fault is determined, subject to some exceptions, (90) by objective criteria. (91) In sum, in the Member States themselves fault liability ends up being allowed in only by virtue of a series of devices; in any event, it is becoming increasingly objectified, that is to say, it is decreasingly or not at all coupled with a subjective component.

88 I consider that that solution, which is prevalent in the national legal systems and has been adopted by the Court itself in relation to non-contractual liability on the part of the Community institutions, (92) results in liability of Member States for infringements of Community law being strict, no-fault liability.

On the other hand, even if it were to be sought to base such liability on fault, it seems to me, at least as a first approximation, that it could not, for present purposes, not be linked to the provision allegedly infringed or simply identified with its content.

89 To my mind, it is obvious that if the enabling provision in question is one intended to achieve a particular result, there is no room for making the emergence of a situation of liability depend on the existence of a subjective connotation of the conduct of the State which may be described as fault in the sense defined earlier. The infringement - the unlawful act - crystallizes at the time at which the State failed to achieve the result sought by the provision. There will then be liability on the part of the State, that is to say, strict or no-fault liability or whatever term one wishes to employ.

Conversely, if the enabling provision is a provision relating to conduct, in the sense that it essentially prescribes a duty of care, fault will be an essential component. If so, however, fault is no longer a subjective component characterizing the conduct of the State which brought about the infringement and with it the wrongful damage, but precisely the subject-matter of the infringement. Breach of a duty of care consists precisely in negligent conduct, hence conduct exhibiting fault, with the upshot that fault is the subject-matter of the unlawful act and no longer a subjective component of the conduct.

90 In the final analysis, in order for there to be liability on the part of a Member State which has breached Community obligations to which it is subject, I consider that there is no relevance in inquiring into the existence of fault as a subjective component of the unlawful conduct.

I would therefore reiterate my conviction, as described earlier, that the conduct of the State in breach of Community law must be assessed in the light of objective factors for the purposes of the obligation to make reparation.

(b) Existence of the damage

91 The damage must be real, that is to say, certain and actual. Moreover, those are the requirements generally insisted upon by the national legal systems, and it will be for the national court to find whether they are satisfied in the actual case.

92 Nevertheless, I am minded to dwell, if only briefly, on a number of conditions relating to the nature of the damage which have been prayed in aid or, at any rate, raised during these proceedings, in particular by the French Government, as a criterion for limiting the area of Member State liability following infringements of Community law. I refer, in particular, to the seriousness of the damage, in the sense that the damage should be considerable, and to its special nature, in so far as it should affect a small number of persons.

In my view, those conditions should be regarded as irrelevant for present purposes, even though they have often been applied in the Court's case-law on non-contractual liability. (93)

93 Whilst it is true that under the law of some Member States there are cases in which the right to reparation depends, among other things, on the seriousness of the damage, on its abnormally serious nature and on the special nature of the damage in regard to the injured parties, it is also true and worth stressing that that approach is employed for compensation for damage caused by lawful acts. (94) Accordingly, the terms of the problem are not, and could not be, the same as those arising in this case.

It would indeed be excessive to require of individuals injured by unlawful acts that the damage sustained by them should be abnormal and special, with the result that they would be left to bear, not only consequences of a modest scale, but also those common to a class of individuals which was not of limited size. I consider therefore that the idea of exempting liability for minor loss or damage in this case would be a bad one.

94 In this connection, I would first observe that the argument against accepting the criterion of the seriousness of the financial damage is that an unlawful measure involving a manifest and serious breach contrary to a provision of the system and with the rights of the individual guaranteed thereby, must give rise to compensation in order to restore the balance altered by the unlawful act or omission, irrespective of the scale of the damage. Moreover, if a common approach to liability for unlawful acts or omissions of the public authorities emerges from the laws of the Member States, that approach consists in not making compensation depend on the scale of the damage.

On top of this, State liability does not seem to be able to be confined to cases in which there are specifically determined persons, or groups of persons, and precluded where the legislative act concerns a broad class of persons. Whilst it is true that it could be justifiably argued that public-interest requirements militate in favour of ruling out compensation for damage affecting large classes of persons, inter alia in order to avoid heavy financial burdens, it is also true that that approach is based merely on reasons of expediency. It still leaves the question open, given that liability is dependent on a manifest and serious breach of a higher norm which creates rights of the individual, as to the reasons for which the person with the right to compensation should be given satisfaction on the basis of the number of other persons with the same right which has been breached. (95)

95 In short, it does not seem possible to me to ignore the fact that liability for unlawful measures and compensation for lawful measures are two radically different creatures. It is certainly not without significance that the condition regarding the seriousness and the special nature of the damage was laid down in the French case-law only for damage arising out of lawful legislative measures.

Moreover, when in the judgment in Alivar it depicted State liability for infringements of Community law as responsabilité sans faute, seeing that the national measures were justified by the public interest, the Conseil d'Etat itself took the abnormal and special nature of the damage as established; (96) so much so that this has been referred to as responsabilité sans faute adjusted by the fact that it is not necessary for the damage to be abnormal and special. (97)

96 In the final analysis, I consider it to be only too obvious that conditions relating to the nature of the damage, which may, moreover, even result in the negation of the actual right to compensation, have no basis and no raison d'être where the damage complained of is connected, not with lawful activities, but with unlawful ones. (98) Naturally, this conclusion should also apply to cases of non-contractual liability on the part of the Community. (99)

(c) The causal link

97 The third condition for liability expressly mentioned in Francovich relates to the causal link - an obligatory requirement for liability in tort - according to which the damage complained of must be the direct consequence of the harmful event imputed to its perpetrator, hence, in this case, the unlawful legislative measure.

Obviously, it will be for the national court to establish whether this condition is fulfilled. For present purposes, however, I am minded to make a few observations with regard to a break in the chain of causation from two points of view. First, it is worth examining whether it is possible to consider that under Community law the causal chain may be broken by contributory causes or by negligent conduct on the part of the injured party; secondly, this matter raises, albeit under various guises, the question of the ancillary nature of a damages claim in relation to other national judicial remedies.

- Conduct of the injured party

98 In this connection, it should first be recalled that the Court itself has held that there is `a general principle common to the legal systems of the Member States to the effect that the injured party must show reasonable diligence in limiting the extent of his loss or risk having to bear the damage himself'. (100)

Consequently, the injured party is under a duty to act diligently, a duty which consists in taking steps so as to avoid the damage or, at any rate, to reduce its scale. (101)

99 Moreover, this is the purport of the Council of Europe's aforementioned recommendation of 18 September 1984, Principle III of which reads as follows: `If the victim has, by his own fault or by his failure to use legal remedies, contributed to the damage, the reparation of the damage may be reduced accordingly or disallowed'.

It appears from the wording of that principle that a break in the chain of causation may depend on conduct exhibiting fault on the part of the injured party and that such conduct, in turn, might also consist in his not having made use of the legal remedies available to him.

- Remedies in damages and administrative remedies: independent or ancillary?

100 If the damage could be avoided by the injured party by means of domestic judicial remedies (for example, by contesting the prejudicial measure incompatible with Community law by invoking vis-à-vis the public authorities a right conferred by a provision having direct effect embodied in a directive), it is permissible to ask whether failure to have recourse to such remedies does not break the necessary chain of causation between the breach and the damage.

In other words, the question arises as to whether or not failure to use in time remedies challenging the contested measure precludes the possibility of claiming that the State `in breach of its obligations' is liable. In this sense, apart from being a condition for liability, the prior initiation of substantive remedies could well - equally properly - constitute a requirement for the admissibility of the action for damages.

101 That problem is resolved in different ways in the various Member States, on the basis of three discernible different approaches. The first consists in making the various possible actions completely autonomous and hence in leaving it to the interested party to choose the one which he deems most appropriate in order to protect his interests. (102) The second makes an action for damages dependent on bringing an action for annulment. (103) The third is more closely connected with the causal link, in so far as it allows the administration not to answer for such damage as the person concerned could have avoided by employing substantive remedies, in particular an action for annulment. (104)

As we know, after initially taking the view that the action for damages was ancillary, (105) subsequently the Court's case-law on non-contractual liability firmly adopted the stance that such actions were autonomous and could be brought irrespective of the availability to the applicant of other judicial remedies. In particular, the Court has held that `the action for damages under Article 178 and the second paragraph of Article 215 of the Treaty was established as an autonomous form of action with a particular purpose to fulfil within the system of actions and the exercise of it is subject to conditions imposed in view of the specific objective thereof'. (106)

102 Those dicta show, in particular, that the autonomous nature of the action for damages satisfies needs by way of guarantee, which needs are connected with the various requirements relating to locus standi for bringing an action for annulment as opposed to an action for damages. Under the system of protection provided for in the Treaties, individuals may not challenge acts of a general nature and it is very difficult for them to obtain a ruling that the Community institutions have failed to act. The fact that the action for damages has been held to be autonomous therefore enables that to be obtained by means of damages which is not obtainable or, in any event, has not been able to be obtained by means of an action for annulment.

That this is the rationale of holding that the action for damages is autonomous is borne out by the fact that it is not available in those few cases in which private persons can actually rely on administrative remedies, (107) in particular in the context of Community staff cases. (108)

103 Essentially, the criterion underlying the case-law laying down the rules on actions for non-contractual liability has remained consistent, apart from the formulas adopted from time to time with regard to domestic remedies (preliminary reference on validity in connection with a challenge to the domestic implementing measure) or direct challenges (action for annulment or for failure to act). The aim is to prevent actions for damages from being utilized in order to pursue the same result which could

- effectively, of course - have been attained by means of a different action. Hence, an action for damages cannot be the means of neutralizing the effects of a harmful measure where that objective could also be achieved through a normal action for annulment, whether direct or national via a reference for preliminary ruling on validity to the Court. This is subject to the sole reservation that the (in particular, national) judicial remedy must in any case be capable of securing effective protection.

In the final analysis, the fact that actions for non-contractual liability are autonomous favours private individuals, to whom substantive judicial remedies are normally not available, but not also persons who can effectively invoke such remedies.

104 This means, as far as it is relevant to these proceedings, that the Member States cannot reasonably be debarred from making actions for damages dependent on a previous action for annulment having been brought, if and in so far as the aforementioned condition is also prescribed for similar domestic claims.

Moreover, the idea that the action for damages is ancillary in the case of loss or damage caused by infringements of Community law seems - at least at first sight - to have already received the Court's seal of approval. In Wagner Miret, the action for damages was portrayed as the individual's last resort, that is to say, the route to take when it is impossible otherwise to attain a worthwhile result, not even through the interpretation of the national provisions in question by the national court in conformity with the relevant Community provisions. (109)

4. The other conditions

105 As for the other conditions relating to compensation for damage, it should first be recalled that, in Francovich, after identifying and defining the conditions `sufficient to give rise to a right on the part of individuals to obtain reparation', the Court went on to state that `subject to that reservation, it is on the basis of the rules of national law on liability that the State must make reparation for the consequences of the damage caused' (paragraph 42).

The interpolation `subject to that reservation' manifestly means that, in relation to the rules on the reparation which is due under Community law itself and arises on the conditions laid down by Community law, the relevant rules of national law are applicable only in so far as they are necessary in order to govern the other conditions relating to the reparation. It is therefore the detailed rules for effectuating the individual's right to reparation which are governed by national law, in particular the procedural conditions. (110)

106 As regards those conditions, the Court also held in Francovich that `In the absence of Community legislation, it is for the internal legal order of each Member State to designate the competent courts and lay down the detailed procedural rules for legal proceedings intended fully to safeguard the rights which individuals derive from Community law' (paragraph 42).

In truth, this is no new formula in the Court's case-law, having in fact usually been associated with the Member States' autonomy in procedural matters, an autonomy which, even in that sector, is not however without limits.

107 In that connection, the Court in Francovich emphasized a principle which it had already repeatedly expressed in general terms, (111) namely that `the substantive and procedural conditions for reparation of loss and damage laid down by the national law of the Member States concerning reparation of damage must not be less favourable than those relating to similar domestic claims and must not be so framed as to make it virtually impossible or excessively difficult to obtain reparation' (paragraph 43).

Consequently, also with regard to reparation of damage, Community law confines the Member States'

freedom to laying down procedural and substantive rules on the other conditions relating thereto; here again, this is dependent on the requirement to secure individuals real, effective protection. (112)

108 More specifically, the limit to national treatment, in the sense that judicial protection must at least be equal to that available for similar legal positions created by national provisions, may at times turn out to be completely worthless. It is sufficient to mention the very cases under consideration in these proceedings, in which national law lays down no relevant provision, since the remedy sought is not available in the national legal systems in question. What is doubtless more relevant and determinative, on account of its potential, is the limit consisting in the fact that the national legal system must not be such as to make it virtually impossible to exercise the rights which the national courts are bound to protect by virtue of Community law.

At least two consequences flow from that principle: first, judicial protection, in the case of rights claimed by individuals under Community law, must in any event attain a degree of adequacy; secondly, checking that that level has been attained is a matter for the Court. (113) Whilst it is true, therefore, that it is for the Member States to ensure that Community law is implemented properly, also from the point of view of protection in damages, the Court thereby reserves the right to check the level of adequacy of the protection afforded by the national judicial systems.

109 Lastly, and still with regard to the other conditions of the rules on reparation, there was a discussion in these proceedings in particular of the types of damage or loss for which compensation could be granted and of the quantum of damages. In this connection, given that those questions should in principle be left to the law of the Member States, I shall confine myself to some brief observations.

First, it is all too obvious that reparation of damage may not be merely symbolic, but must correspond to the damage suffered. This requirement, which is linked to the very raison d'être of the action for damages, consists precisely in ensuring that the financial situation of the injured party is restored. Moreover, the relevant national case-law, the Community case-law on Article 215 (114) and the case-law on international relations (115) support this view.

110 Useful indications in this connection may also be found in a number of judgments in which the Court has checked the level of adequacy of the protection afforded by the national legal systems in relation to rights claimed by individuals under Community law. Thus, for example, with regard to the freedom allowed to Member States as respects sanctions for infringements of the prohibition of sex discrimination, the Court stressed that the sanctions in question have to be `such as to guarantee real and effective judicial protection. ... It follows that where a Member State chooses to penalize the breach of the prohibition of discrimination by the award of compensation, that compensation must in any event be adequate in relation to the damage sustained'. (116)

Further, in Marshall II, the Court held that, where a Member State elects to impose a sanction for discrimination in the form of compensation, `such compensation must be full and may not be limited a priori in terms of its amount'. (117)

111 Next, it is scarcely necessary to add that identifying the types of damage for which compensation may be granted is certainly not likely to involve major difficulties, not even from the point of view of the uniformity of the compensation payable in different Member States for given damage. Despite variations in terminology, all the national systems hold that compensation may be granted in respect of financial damage suffered by the injured party, which damage certainly covers consequential damage and loss of profits and earnings, together with interest thereon. As far, more specifically, as the actual quantification of the damage is concerned, it is only too obvious that this is bound to depend on the different economic and social situations peculiar to each Member State and that it will be up to each State to deal with this in accordance with the criteria laid down in this regard in its own national law.

In the final analysis, what is important for Community law is that compensation must be real and effective and hence that the situation which would have obtained if the infringement had not taken place should be restored, at least in terms of its financial content.

5. The time from which the obligation to make reparation starts to run

112 As I have already said, the obligation on Member States to pay compensation cannot be made dependent upon the existence of a judgment of the Court finding that there has been a failure to fulfil the relevant obligation. Consequently, such a judgment, even if one has been given, has no major importance for the purposes of determining the time as from which the State is bound to make reparation for the damage caused by an infringement attributable to it.

Moreover, the conditions suggested in regard to the characteristics of a `manifest and serious' breach make it clear that, if the provision infringed confers identifiable, precise rights on individuals, the obligation in damages on the Member State in breach is bound to arise at the time when the harmful event occurred. The same solution must be adopted where the provision infringed had already been clarified by the case-law at the time when the harmful event occurred. In other cases, where a doubtful legal situation is involved, it will not be until after the national court and/or the Community Court has clarified the matter that the State `in breach' can be obliged to make reparation for the damage, naturally in so far as it does not repair the breach reasonably quickly and only in respect of damage arising after the courts have clarified the situation.

113 Lastly, these proposed solutions lead to the conclusion that there is no reason for limiting the right to reparation to injured parties who have already brought a judicial action or lodged an equivalent claim with the national courts.

I consider that the imperative reasons of legal certainty referred to by the German Government are already sufficiently protected by the fact that the right to compensation may be made subject to the condition - if it is already laid down for similar domestic claims - that the injured party should have taken every step available to him in order to avoid the damage or at least reduce its scale. Apart from this, only the limitation and prescription periods laid down by national law, as in the case of actions for damages based on national law, may determine the time within which individuals may rely on the right to reparation for the damage sustained.

III - Replies to the national courts' questions

114 Before making more specific observations on the cases presently before the Court, I think it is worth recalling the conclusions which I have reached so far:

- in order to secure real, effective protection of rights claimed by individuals under Community law, that law requires that reparation be guaranteed to individuals for the loss or damage sustained by them as a result of infringements of Community law attributable to the State;

- it is completely irrelevant that the infringement in question is attributable to the legislature, as a result of which the restrictive conditions imposed by the national legal system for cases of unlawful action or inaction on the part of the legislature are not applicable;

- in order for the right to reparation to arise it is sufficient that the provision assumedly infringed is precise in all respects and unambiguous, which will be the case, for example, where a Member State fails to fulfil a precise obligation to achieve a result or where it fails to take account of established case-law;

- the criteria relating to the quantification of the damage continue to be governed by national law, provided that they are not less favourable than those applying to similar domestic claims and are not such as to make it excessively difficult or virtually impossible to obtain full compensation for the loss or damage arising as a result of the infringement in question;

- the obligation to make reparation arises at the time when the event which gave rise to the damage occurred in the case of a manifest and serious breach as defined above; otherwise it will not arise until there has been a determination by the national court or the Community Court, in the latter case by means of a preliminary ruling or a judgment given pursuant to Article 169.

(a) Case C-46/93 (Brasserie du Pêcheur)

115 What is at issue here is an infringement of a Treaty provision having direct effect, namely Article 30, which is attributable to the legislature in so far as it failed to amend the BiStG to accord with that provision. The appellant in the main proceedings is seeking compensation for damage sustained by it between 1981 and 1987, that is to say, from the time at which it was no longer able to export beer of its manufacture to Germany because, it alleges, that beer did not satisfy the requirements of the BiStG, until the date of the judgment in which the Court held, by judgment pursuant to Article 169, that that law was incompatible with Article 30.

Having regard to my observations so far, it is only too clear that, in order to decide the case pending before it, the national court has to establish whether the obligation conferred on the States by Article 30 - whose content, as I have already mentioned, can certainly not be regarded as precise and determinable in every respect - had already been clarified by the relevant case-law at the time when the damage occurred with respect to facts such as those of the case pending before it. In other words, it has to be ascertained whether it was clear already in late 1981 that a law such as the BiStG embodied an unjustified obstacle to activities of traders in the sector and was hence incompatible with Community law.

116 To that end, it should first be recalled that, ever since the well-known `Cassis de Dijon' judgment, (118) hence since February 1979, it has been clear that Article 30 prohibits, not only discriminatory measures, but also measures which are applicable without distinction and unjustified by imperative requirements. On top of this, by judgment of 9 September 1981, (119) which therefore was delivered more or less at the same time as the appellant in the main proceedings was obliged to stop exporting beer to Germany, the Court found that national legislation restricting the designation `vinegar' to wine vinegar was incompatible with Community law. Certainly, there is no ground for considering that a different view had to be taken with regard to the BiStG in so far as it restricted the description `beer' to beer produced using the ingredients mandatorily prescribed by that law.

However, it also transpires from the order for reference that the beer produced by the appellant contained additives, whereas the German law in question laid down an absolute prohibition on marketing beer containing additives in Germany. Whilst it is true that by the judgment of 12 March 1987 in Commission v Germany the Court held that the legislation in question was unlawful also from that point of view in so far as it was not justified by the requirement of protecting human health, it is also true that that conclusion could not be regarded as automatic, having regard to the relevant case-law. (120) If the damage complained of by the appellant is connected rather with this second aspect of the national legislation in question, a different solution cannot therefore be ruled out.

117 One final observation. I have already mentioned that a Member State is entitled - for the purposes of the right to reparation and provided that it lays down the same conditions for similar domestic claims - to require the injured party to show diligence and hence to set in train such mechanisms as may obviate or at least reduce the damage.

It appears from the documents in the case that it does not seem that the appellant has taken any such steps. Admittedly, as the appellant showed in these proceedings, it stopped exporting because of failure to renew the distribution contract with its (German) sole importer, which meant that it was substantively impossible for it to challenge any measure. Consequently, it is manifestly for the national court to ascertain whether the appellant was actually precluded from being able in any way to rely on Article 30 directly before the national courts.

(b) Case C-48/93 (Factortame III)

118 In contrast, in the Factortame case the national court has to ascertain whether the infringement which has been found of Articles 7, 52 and 221 of the Treaty and is attributable to the legislature for having passed a national law incompatible with those articles, may be regarded as a manifest and serious breach in the sense defined above.

In other words, it is a question of establishing whether the infringement of provisions conferring clear, precise rights on individuals, such as the right not to be discriminated against on grounds of nationality, is such, despite the discretion available to the Member States in adopting measures relating to the common fisheries policy, as to cause the State to incur liability. In this respect, I consider that a few observations will suffice.

119 Whilst it is true, as the United Kingdom has shown, that the Member States have a certain margin of discretion in adopting measures relating to the common fisheries policy, it is also true that that discretion is normally exercised under the constant supervision of the Commission, to which the Member States are obliged to communicate measures adopted by them. In this case, as transpires from the documents in the case, the Commission informed the United Kingdom in good time that the nationality, residence and domicile conditions laid down by the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 for the registration of fishing vessels in the new shipping register had to be regarded as incompatible with Community law.

What is more, the Court's case-law on the right of establishment is consistent in holding that national measures involving discrimination on grounds of nationality are incompatible with national law; likewise, the Court has held incompatible with Community law the very residence condition imposed on fishing vessels' crews. (121) Lastly, in so far as the legislation in question related to the registration of fishing vessels, its purpose was not to lay down detailed rules on the exploitation of the national fishing quotas and hence could not even be regarded as being justified on that ground.

120 In the final analysis, I do not consider that there can be any doubts as to the manifest and serious nature of the breach in question and hence as to the right to compensation of individuals who suffered damage as a result of it.

Finally, I would observe that, as the Court is well aware, the applicants in the main proceedings have done everything possible in order to avert the damage which eventually occurred. They took steps to that end even before the national provisions subsequently declared incompatible with Community law entered into force, by seeking and obtaining an interlocutory injunction suspending the application of the provisions at issue, the injunction which was set aside by the Court of Appeal and subsequently confirmed by the House of Lords following this Court's judgment of 19 June 1990 in Factortame I.

121 As far as the national court's second question is concerned, it is scarcely necessary to recall in the light of my earlier observations that the determination of the types of loss or damage for which damages may be awarded and the quantification of the damages continue to be governed by national law, but must, in any event, be such as to make full reparation for the loss or damage suffered by the injured parties.

However, the applicants also claim exemplary damages, as provided for by national law for unconstitutional conduct on the part of the administrative authorities, and this warrants separate consideration.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Suffice it to observe in this connection that, in accordance with the principle that the conditions imposed by national rules in order to protect legal situations created by Community law may not be less favourable than those applying to similar domestic claims, a Member State is bound to grant that type of damages to the individuals concerned where the preconditions laid down by the relevant national rules are satisfied; this is so, therefore, even where the head of damages in question is completely unknown to the legal systems of the other Member States.

Conclusion

122 In the light of the foregoing considerations, I therefore propose that the Court should reply as follows to the questions raised in the respective cases by the Bundesgerichtshof and the High Court of Justice, Queen's Bench Division, Divisional Court:

(a) In Case C-46/93 (Brasserie du Pêcheur):

`1. A Member State is bound to make reparation for the loss or damage occasioned to individuals as a result of infringements of Community law attributable to that State, even where the infringement consists in the fact that the legislature omitted to amend a national law so as to bring it into conformity with Community law, provided that the obligation imposed on the State from which the individual's right is derived is precise in every respect or has been clearly specified by the relevant case-law.

2. A Member State is not entitled to make the right to reparation for infringements of Community law subject to the same restrictions laid down for infringements of national constitutional provisions by the legislature where those restrictions have the effect of making the right to reparation virtually impossible.

3. The obligation on the part of the State to make reparation may not be made to depend on finding a subjective component (fault or intention) accompanying the infringement of the provision, if the breach was manifest and serious in the sense explained above.

4.(a) It is for the national legal system to determine the types of injury for which reparation may be awarded and the criteria for quantifying the loss or damage, provided that the requirements laid down to that end are not less favourable than those applying to similar domestic claims and are not such as to make it excessively difficult or virtually impossible for the individual to obtain full reparation for the loss or damage suffered; this would be the case where national law limited the scope of the obligation to legal interests, such as property, yet excluded any possibility of obtaining reparation for lost profits.

(b) The obligation on the Member State to make reparation for loss or damage occasioned to individuals arises at the time when the event which caused the damage occurred if the provision infringed is clear in the sense specified above or, where the legal situation is doubtful, at the time when it was clarified by Community case-law, either by a preliminary ruling or by a judgment pursuant to Article 169.'

(b) Case C-48/93 (Factortame III):

`1. A Member State is bound to make reparation for the loss or damage occasioned to individuals as a result of infringements of Community law attributable to that State, even where the infringement consists in the fact that the legislature passed a national law incompatible with Community law, provided that the obligation imposed on the State from which the individual's right is derived is, as in the case at issue, precise in every respect or has been clearly specified by the relevant case-law.

2. It is for the national legal system to determine the types of injury for which reparation may be awarded and the criteria for quantifying the loss or damage, provided that the requirements laid down to that end are not less favourable than those applying to similar domestic claims and are not such as to make it excessively difficult or virtually impossible for the individual to obtain full reparation for the loss or damage suffered. Where the national legal system also provides for the award of exemplary damages, the relevant rules must therefore be applied, without any discrimination, even where rights asserted by individuals under Community law were infringed.'

(4) - A legislative wrong (legislatives Unrecht) is governed by the same rules as liability of the public authorities (Amtshaftung). It is precisely because of this that the amenability to compensation of damage arising out of a legislative wrong - still a very controversial subject in Germany - is unquestionably allowed where individual-case laws (Einzelfallgesetze) are involved or a legislative measure such as a land development plan (Bebauungsplan).

(7) - In order to give the full picture, it is recalled that following the claimants' appeal to the House of Lords, that court made a reference to the Court of Justice, by judgment of 18 May 1989, for a preliminary ruling on two questions concerning the existence and scope of the jurisdiction of a national court to grant interim relief where rights conferred by Community law were at issue. In its judgment in Case C-213/89 The Queen v Secretary of State for Transport, ex parte Factortame and Others (Factortame I) [1990] ECR I-2433, the Court of Justice ruled that `Community law must be interpreted as meaning that a national court which, in a case before it concerning Community law, considers that the sole obstacle which precludes it from granting interim relief is a rule of national law must set aside that rule'. On 11 October 1990, the House of Lords affirmed the interlocutory injunction granted by the Divisional Court pending the determination of the substantive case.

(10) - Case C-246/89 Commission v United Kingdom [1991] ECR I-4585.

(11) - Although the national court refers solely to 2 November 1989, the date on which the relevant law was partially repealed, it is pointed out that that repeal related, in accordance with the Court's order in Case 246/86 R Commission v United Kingdom, only to those provisions which were discriminatory on grounds of nationality. This means, as the applicants point out in their written observations in these proceedings, that the statute in question ceased to have harmful effects as regards the other conditions held to be discriminatory (residence, domicile) which were the subject of the proceedings in Case C-221/89 Factortame II only on 11 October 1990, when the House of Lords, following the Court's judgment in Factortame I, affirmed the interlocutory injunction requested. However, there are decisions to be found in the less recent case-law in which the duty of care has been identified with the neighbourhood principle, which is essentially equivalent to neminem laedere, since liability may be incurred under that principle for harm done to anyone where it was reasonably foreseeable that the victim might be harmed (see, for example, Donoghue v Stevenson [1932] A.C. 562).

(20) - Albeit that principle does not have the same general scope in all the legal systems - suffice it to cite the British system, in which there is a limit in terms of the (restricted) scope of the duty of care, - it none the less remains that, inasmuch as it refers to the idea of wrongful damage, it may be regarded as the starting point for any discussion of liability.

(24) - I would recall that, as long ago as Case 380/87 Enichem Base and Others v Comune di Cinisello Balsamo [1989] ECR 2491, an Italian court asked the Court whether `the administration [is] required under Community law to pay compensation where an unlawful administrative measure taken by it [unlawfully] infringes a right under Community law (diritto soggettivo comunitario) which upon its incorporation in the Italian legal system, while retaining its Community character, takes the form of a protected interest (interesse legittimo)' (Report for the hearing, loc. cit., at 2494 et seq.). Neither the Advocate General nor the Court answered that question, since it was absorbed into the answers given to other questions. I note, however, that in their observations both the United Kingdom and Italy argued that any right to compensation should be based solely on the substantive and procedural possibilities afforded by national law.

(28) - Humblet v Belgium, cited in footnote 25. That case was concerned more specifically with securing the annulment of a measure by the Belgian State and the restitution of sums unduly levied; but the general wording used by the Court - `make reparation for any unlawful consequences' - can sufficiently clearly cover also cases of compensation for any loss or damage sustained.

(29) - There is a very clear dictum to this effect that `a judgment by the Court under Articles 169 and 171 of the Treaty may be of substantive interest as establishing the basis of a responsibility that a Member State can incur as a result of its default, as regards other Member States, the Community or private parties' (judgment in Case 39/72 Commission v Italy [1973] ECR 101, paragraph 11). The statement that the interest in continuing the proceedings even after the breach at issue has been remedied may consist in `establishing a basis for the liability which a Member State may incur, in particular, towards individuals as a result of the breach of its obligations' is to the same effect (judgment in Case 309/84 Commission v Italy [1986] ECR 599, paragraph 18). That dictum appears quite frequently: Case 103/84 Commission v Italy [1986] ECR 1759, paragraph 9; Case 154/85 Commission v Italy [1987] ECR 2717, paragraph 6; Case C-287/87 Commission v Greece [1990] ECR I-125 (summary publication only). The Court has further held that the interest in pursuing the action `may consist [in particular] in establishing the basis for a liability which a Member State may incur, by reason of its failure to fulfil its obligations, towards those to whom rights accrue as a result of that failure': see the judgments in Case 240/86 Commission v Greece [1988] ECR 1835, paragraph 14, Case C-361/88 Commission v Germany [1991] ECR I-2567, paragraph 31, and Case C-249/88 Commission v Belgium [1991] ECR I-1275, paragraph 41. It is clear that the conferral on individuals of a right to compensation for damage sustained owing to an infringement of the Treaty cannot be inferred from dicta of this type, but only the possibility that, within the limits laid down by national law, the individual may assert his right to compensation in relation to such an infringement.

(30) - Judgment in Case 60/75 Russo v AIMA [1976] ECR 45, paragraph 9.

(31) - Judgment in Russo v AIMA, cited in the preceding footnote, paragraph 9.

(32) - This stance was further emphasized in the judgment in Granaria, where the Court held that `the question of compensation by a national agency for damage caused to private individuals by the agencies and servants of Member States, either by reason of an infringement of Community law or by an act or omission contrary to national law, in the application of Community law does not fall within the second paragraph of Article 215 of the Treaty and must be determined by the national courts in accordance with the national law of the Member State concerned' (judgment in Case 101/78 Granaria v Hoofdproduktschap voor Akkerbouwprodukten [1979] ECR 623, paragraph 14).

(33) - I refer to the judgment in Russo v AIMA, which I have already mentioned, relating to a regulation on the common organization of the agricultural markets, and to the judgment in Case

C-188/89 Foster [1990] ECR I-3313, paragraph 22, in which the Court held that Article 5(1) of Directive 76/207/EEC on equal treatment for men and women `may be relied upon in a claim for damages against a body' responsible for providing a public service. See also, as regards an infringement of Article 30, the judgment in Case 103/84 Commission v Italy, cited in footnote 29, paragraph 9.

(34) - See, in particular, paragraphs 33, 35 and 37 of the judgment.

(35) - Case 26/62 Van Gend & Loos [1963] ECR 1, in particular at 13.

(36) - So much so that direct effect has been from the outset, and continues to be, what is termed vertical, almost, as it were, in order to reinforce the idea that, rather than an intrinsic quality of the provision, it is a remedy for preventing the States from taking advantage of a failure to fulfil their obligations. It is also significant that the Court's assessment of directives has been progressively refined and broadened. For example, the class of public agencies against which directives can be relied on has widened (see the judgments in Case 103/88 Fratelli Costanzo v Comune di Milano [1989] ECR 1839 and Case C-188/89 Foster, cited in footnote 33); likewise stress has been placed on the need for courts and administrative authorities in the Member States to interpret national provisions in conformity with the wording and purpose of the directive (see the judgments in Case 14/83 Von Colson and Kamann v Land Nordrhein-Westfalen [1984] ECR 1891 and Case C-106/89 Marleasing [1990] ECR I-4135, paragraph 8). It is sufficient to observe that the criterion of interpretation in conformity with the wording and purpose of a directive relates to directives as such, irrespective of their possible direct effect and regardless of the entity against which the national provisions are asserted, so much so that, in the ultimate analysis, one is not so far removed from the practical effects which would be achieved by the horizontal effect, pure and simple, of precise and unconditional directives.

(37) - Judgment in Case C-91/92 Faccini Dori v Recreb [1994] ECR I-3325, paragraph 27. After stating that interested parties can enforce an unimplemented directive by relying directly on its provisions having direct effect before a national court or, where that is not possible, by interpreting the relevant provisions of national law, as far as possible, in conformity with the directive, the Court observed that `if the result prescribed by the directive cannot be achieved by way of interpretation,... Community law requires the Member States to make good damage caused to individuals through failure to transpose a directive'. See, to this effect, also the judgment in Case C-334/92 Wagner Miret [1993] ECR I-6911, paragraph 23. In that case, even though a directive (the same as that at issue in Francovich) was involved which had already been transposed into national law, the problem arose on account of the failure to take into account in the relevant national provisions a particular category of workers, with respect to whom the directive had not been implemented.

(38) - In the sense that `the decision in Francovich is undoubtedly consistent with, and a natural and logical extension of, the Court's case-law'; and that, after recognizing direct effect and the obligation upon the Member States to give full effect to Community provisions, `it was but a small step to guarantee their full effect by holding States liable in damages for infringements of those rights for which they were responsible', see Steiner: `From direct effects to Francovich: shifting means of enforcement of Community Law', in European Law Review, 1993, p. 3 et seq., in particular at p. 9. Notoriously, there is now a substantial body of literature on the judgment in Francovich. The most recent contributions include Zenner: `Die Haftung der EG-Mitgliedstaaten für die Anwendung europarechtswidriger Rechtsnormen', Munich, 1995.

(40) - Judgment in Simmenthal, cited in the preceding footnote, paragraph 16.

(41) - For instance, in Germany such a possibility is not ruled out per se, but only to the extent to which the official duty infringed is not referable to a particular third party, which, as I have already mentioned, is true in most cases involving an unlawful act or omission attributable to the legislature; for those very reasons, the possibility in question is unquestionably available in relation to individual-case laws (Einzelfallgesetze). However, the prevalent view among academic writers is that an individual should have the right to compensation at least in the event of breaches of fundamental rights (see, for instance, in this connection, Haverkate: `Amtshaftung bei legislativem Unrecht und die Grundrechtsbildung des Gesetzgebers', in NJW, 1973, p. 441). In Italy, in which the question is still the subject of debate, such a possibility has been allowed, for example, in the specific case of presidential expropriating decrees issued pursuant to the agrarian reform which have been declared unconstitutional, where the agrarian reform agency was held liable in damages even though it was not guilty of any unlawful conduct; hence the conviction that in such case the compensation is more in the nature of restitution of undue payments, relating solely to the value of the asset lost (for some more general observations in this connection, see Zagrebelsky in `Processo costituzionale' in Enciclopedia del Diritto XXXVI, 1987, p. 639).

(42) - In fact, international law contemplates only State liability viewed in the round, that is to say, as a whole: consequently, there is no difference depending on whether the infringement which gave rise to the damage is attributable to the legislature, the judiciary or the executive. Moreover, the same approach can be seen in the Court's case-law on Article 169: the infringement of a Community obligation is imputed to the State in any event, regardless of the entity which was actually responsible for fulfilling the obligation (see, for example, the judgments in Case 77/69 Commission v Belgium [1970] ECR 237, paragraph 15, Case 8/70 Commission v Italy [1970] ECR 961, paragraph 9, and Case 52/75 Commission v Italy [1976] ECR 277, paragraph 14).

(43) - Judgment No 8 of 26 July 1927 Case concerning the Factory at Chorzow, CPGI, Series A, p. 21; my emphasis. The same principle was subsequently reaffirmed by the International Court of Justice in the Advisory Opinion of 30 March 1950 on the interpretation of peace treaties with Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania, CGI, 1950, p. 228.

(44) - The reference is to the preamble to the EC Treaty.

(45) - See, in particular, the judgments in Case 26/62 Van Gend &Loos, cited in footnote 35, and in Case 6/64 Costa v ENEL [1964] ECR 585.

(46) - Judgment in Case 103/88 Fratelli Costanzo v Comune di Milano, cited in footnote 36, paragraph 31.

(47) - It is scarcely necessary to point out that, in relation to legislative activity of the administrative authorities, the term faute is used by academic writers and by French administrative case-law (where the concept was evolved) to denote maladministration and hence, even though this may seem odd, does not require fault. Indeed, the rule often referred to is that `toute décision illégale est en principe fautive'. In short, in the French system the difference between responsabilité pour faute and responsabilité sans faute does not correspond so much to that between fault-based liability and strict liability, but, albeit only fairly roughly, to the distinction between liability for unlawful acts and liability for lawful acts.

(48) - Judgment of 28 February 1992 in Arizona Tobacco Products, in AJDA, 1992, p. 210. (51) - See the judgment in Case 158/80 Rewe v Hauptzollamt Kiel [1981] ECR 1805, paragraph 44, in which the Court held that the Treaty was not intended to create new remedies in the national courts other than those already laid down by national law or to reduce the choice of the courts as to the most effective means of protection. In actual fact, that ruling is much less absolute in scope than would appear at first sight.

(56) - That provision introduced a significant innovation into many Member States' legal systems. For instance, in the Italian system, which, even though it was among those affording the greatest protection and, in any event, one of the few in which it was possible, following the annulment of the unlawful administrative measure, even to have the ensuing contractual situation set aside, provision for compensation for infringement of situations which had traditionally been classed as interessi legittimi (protected interests) and not as diritti soggettivi (individual rights) constitutes nothing less than a cultural revolution (see judgment No 2667 of the Corte di Cassazione of 5 March 1993, in Il Foro It., 1993, I, 3062), albeit confined solely to relationships governed by Community law.

(57) - For a somewhat different approach, see Advocate General Jacobs' Opinion of 15 June 1995 in Joined Cases C-430/93 and C-431/93 Van Schijndel and Van Veen, still pending.

(58) - Suffice it to recall the particularities (but see footnote 5) of the Italian system as regards the lack of a remedy in damages for breaches of interessi legittimi (protected interests). For the `tormented chapter of the protection in tort of interessi legittimi' in Italy, see Ponzanelli: `L'Europa e la responsabilità civile', in Il Foro It., 1992, IV, col. 150. The question raised by the national court in Enichem Base, cited in footnote 24, indeed related to the breach of an interesse legittimo.

(59) - However, the three conditions in question, which the Court identified in Francovich (paragraph 40), are set out here verbatim in the form in which they were stressed and summarized by the Court in Faccini Dori v Recreb, cited in footnote 37, paragraph 27.

(60) - For this aspect, see sections 75 and 76 below.

(61) - In Francovich, I recall, this was the amount owing to the employees following the employer's insolvency; in Dillenkofer and Others it is sums paid by purchasers of package holidays for trips never made.

(62) - It shows, among other things, that failure to implement a directive constitutes a conscious breach, consequently a deliberate one and for that very reason one involving fault, Temple Lang: `New Legal Effects Resulting from the Failure of States to Fulfil Obligations under European Community Law: The Francovich Judgment', in Fordham International Law Journal, 1992-1993, p. 1 et seq.

(67) - See, for example, the judgment in Joined Cases 194/83 to 206/83 Asteris v Commission [1985] ECR 2815, paragraphs 21 and 22, in which the Court held that the Community had incurred no liability for the erroneous fixing by the Commission pursuant to a Council regulation of aid for tomato concentrates. See also the judgment in Case C-152/88 Sofrimport v Commission [1990] ECR I-2477, in which the Community was held liable on account of an essentially individual Commission regulation implementing another Commission regulation which in turn implemented a Council regulation, and the rigid criteria used for legislative measures involving choices of economic policy were applied.

(68) - See Advocate General Biancarelli's Opinion in Case T-120/89 Stahlwerke Peine-Salzgitter v Commission [1991] ECR II-279, at II-340, in which he stated that, as far as liability was concerned, what was important was `- essentially - the margin of appreciation available to the Commission when it adopts its decision and the more or less complex economic context in which the decision is adopted'.

(69) - This issue was recently raised and discussed before the Court of First Instance in an anti-dumping case in which the applicant argued that the question of Community liability should be assessed differently depending on whether the infringement imputed to the institution was attributable to a breach of the rules inherent in the assessment of complex economic facts or, as in that case, to a breach of procedural rules binding on the institutions. The Court, however, disagreed, confining itself to the lapidary statement that anti-dumping measures constitute legislative action involving choices of economic policy (judgment of 18 September 1995 in Case T-167/94 Nölle v Council and Commission [1995] ECR II-0000, paragraphs 44 to 52).

(75) - Recommendation R (84) 15 of 18 September 1984.

(76) - But, as I have already said, under the case-law in question it is as if all Community legislative measures involved choices of economic policy.

(77) - See, in particular, the judgments in HNL v Council and Commission, cited in footnote 66, paragraph 4, and in Joined Cases C-104/89 and C-37/90 Mulder and Others v Council and Commission [1992] ECR I-3061, paragraph 12.

(78) - Grands Moulins de Paris v Council and Commission, cited in footnote 64, paragraph 8. See, in addition, the judgment in Case C-63/89 Assurances du Crédit [1991] ECR I-1799, paragraph 12, and, most recently, the judgement of 14 September 1995 in Case T-571/93 Lefebvre and Others v Commission [1995] ECR II-0000, paragraph 32.

(79) - It would still be necessary to specify which provisions also warrant protection in damages on the ground of their scope and in order to secure their effectiveness: is the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of residence, which is indubitably fundamental for the purposes of ensuring effective freedom to supply services, as fundamental as or less fundamental than the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality?

(80) - I would observe, for example, reiterating what I have already mentioned, that, although Article 30 of the Treaty is certainly not associated with the exercise of a broad discretion on the part of the Member States, it must nevertheless be considered that the limits which it imposes on action by the Member States are not always clear and precise, as clearly emerges, moreover, from the way in which the case-law has evolved. By contrast, the discretion available to the Member States, for instance, under Article 129a of the Treaty (consumer protection), could not in any event be regarded as capable of resulting in the application of more restrictive conditions for liability if, for example, a national provision excluded citizens of other Member States from the benefit of the national provisions.

(81) - Judgment in Case 283/81 CILFIT v Ministry of Health [1982] ECR 3415, paragraphs 16 and 17.

(82) - See, for a remark to similar effect but regarding the obligation to make a reference pursuant to the third paragraph of Article 177 of the Treaty, the judgment in Joined Cases 28/62, 29/62 and 30/62 Da Costa en Schaake v Nederlands Belastingsadministratie [1963] ECR 31.

(83) - Judgment in Joined Cases 314/81 to 316/81 and 83/82 Procureur de la République v Waterkeyn [1982] ECR 4337, paragraph 16.

(84) - See, for a statement of that concept, the judgment in Joined Cases 116/77 and 124/77 Amylum v Council and Commission [1979] ECR 3497, paragraph 19, in which the Court held that, in that case, `these were not errors of such gravity that it may be said that the conduct of the defendant institutions (...) was verging on the arbitrary and was thus of such a kind as to involve the Community in non-contractual liability'. To the same effect, see, most recently, the judgment in Nölle v Council and Commission, cited in footnote 69.

(85) - For a more exact appraisal of this aspect, see the Opinion in Case C-392/93 British Telecommunications plc, also delivered today, in particular paragraphs 33, 34 and 35.

(86) - One exception is certainly the Spanish system, in which liability for legislative measures is strict (see Articles 9(3) and 106(2) of the Constitution and Article 139(1) of the Law of 26 November 1992 on the legal system for the public administration and administrative procedure).

(87) - See, for instance, Paillet: `La faute du service public en droit administratif français', 1980, p. 176.

(88) - Cassazione Civile, Sezioni Unite, judgment No 5361 of 22 October 1984 (in Giustizia Civile, 1985, p. 1419), in which it is also stated that `It cannot be seen... how the voluntary enforcement of an administrative measure which is unlawful for contravening the law and which affected an individual right may not embody per se the elements of fault, even, possibly, slight fault, especially when referred directly to a public structure, organized and competent to act, which is bound to carry out its activities in accordance with the law'. It is also worth citing judgment No 5883 of 24 May 1991 (in Resp. Civ. Prev., 1992, p. 247 et seq.), in which the Corte di Cassazione held that proof of fault on the part of the public administration may consist `either of breach of the rules of common prudence, resulting in negligent or imprudent regulatory activity, or of the infringement of laws and regulations with which the public administration itself is bound to comply, in so far as it has to observe the principles of legality, impartiality and proper procedure laid down by Article 97 of the Constitution'.

(89) - This is also the case in Belgium, Luxembourg, Greece, Portugal and Denmark.

(90) - In the English system, the administrative authorities' liability for legislative activity seems still to be based (and solidly based) on fault as the subjective element of the conduct in question. Thus, an error on the part of the Minister in interpreting the extent of the powers conferred on him may not in itself be regarded as constituting fault (see, for example, Rowling v Takaro Properties [1988] 2 W.L.R., 418 et seq.); likewise, fault, and with it liability, is precluded where the authority in question sought legal advice on the field in which it was called on to act (see Dunlop v Woollahra Municipal Council [1981] 2 W.L.R., 693). Given in addition that damages may not be awarded in the tort of negligence for pure economic loss, it follows that only, or almost only, the unlawful adoption of measures characterized by wrongful intent, namely the tort of misfeasance in public office, constitutes an unlawful act capable of giving rise to liability.

(91) - Such a trend can be seen also in the Netherlands and Germany, where fault is equated to conduct in breach of the duties of normal care. In this context, German commentators themselves now refer to the `Objektivierung des Verschuldens' (see Ossenbühl: `Staatshaftungsrecht', 4th ed., Munich, 1991, p. 61).

(92) - After some initial wavering, even in the Court's case-law fault is of importance only as a synonym of unlawful conduct.

(93) - See in particular, the judgments in HNL v Council and Commission, cited in footnote 66, paragraph 7, Joined Cases 64/76 and 113/76, 167/78 and 239/78, 27/79, 28/79 and 45/79 Dumortier Frères v Council [1979] ECR 3091, paragraph 11, and Case 59/83 Biovilac v EEC [1984] ECR 4057, paragraphs 27 to 30.

(94) - See, for example, the judgment of the Conseil d'Etat of 14 January 1938 in La Fleurette, Recueil Lebon, 1938, p. 25 et seq. The German `Sonderopfer' (special sacrifice) theory in the field of expropriation, which always relates to financial loss arising out of lawful measures adopted in the public interest, should also be subsumed under this head.

(95) - See Advocate General Capotorti's Opinion in Joined Cases 83/76 and 94/76, 4/77, 15/77 and 40/77 HNL v Council and Commission [1978] ECR 1226 et seq., especially at 1234 et seq.

(96) - Judgment of 23 March 1984 in Alivar, AJDA, 1984, p. 396, including a note by Genevois. This case was concerned with a claim for damages for failure to grant an export licence for potatoes introduced by a general administrative measure, which the Court of Justice subsequently held to be contrary to the prohibition of quantitative restrictions on exports set out in Article 34 of the Treaty. The Conseil d'Etat held that all that there could be in that case was responsabilité sans faute, upholding the judgment at first instance, which accepted the damages claim without even inquiring whether the damage was abnormal or special, but found that there was liability on account of an unlawful act (pour faute). See, in addition, the Opinion of Commissaire du Gouvernement Laroque in the judgment of the Conseil d'Etat of 28 February 1992 in Arizona Tobacco Products, cited in footnote 48, in which it is considered that infringements of Community - and international - provisions give rise to a third system of liability which, unlike responsabilité sans faute, does not require the damage to be exceptional in order for a right to compensation to arise.

(98) - This conclusion is also borne out by the Council of Europe's recommendation of 18 September 1984, to which I have already referred. Principle II(1) of that recommendation expressly covers reparation of damage caused by lawful acts by stating that `reparation should be ensured if it would be manifestly unjust to allow the injured person alone to bear the damage, having regard to the following circumstances: the act is in the general interest, only one person or a limited number of persons have suffered the damage and the act was exceptional or the damage was an exceptional result of the act'. For a different view, see Advocate General Léger's Opinion, cited earlier, of 20 June 1995 in Case C-5/94 Lomas, still pending before the Court.

(99) - Indeed, it would appear from the judgment in Mulder and Others, cited in footnote 77, that the Court has already revised, albeit impliedly, its case-law on this point.

(100) - Judgment in Mulder and Others, cited in footnote 77, paragraph 33.

(101) - For an application of that principle in the case-law on Article 215, see, inter alia, the judgment in Joined Cases 5/66, 7/66 and 13/66 to 24/66 Kampffmeyer v Commission [1967] ECR 245, in particular at 265 et seq.; see also the judgment in Case 238/78 Ireks-Arkady v Council and Commission [1979] ECR 2955, paragraph 14.

(102) - This is, for example, the solution adopted in the French system.

(103) - This is the solution in force, for example, in the Italian and British systems.

(104) - This intermediary solution is employed in the German system under the third subparagraph of Paragraph 839 of the Civil Code.

(105) - I refer to the judgment in Case 25/62 Plaumann v Commission [1963] ECR 95.

In the same judgment, the Court held that that action (for damages) is `different from an action for annulment in that it does not seek the cancellation of a specified measure but compensation for damage caused by the institutions in the exercise of their functions; the conditions for actions for damages are laid down with that objective in mind and accordingly are different from those for an action for annulment'.

(107) - See the judgment in Case 175/84 Krohn v Commission [1986] ECR 753, in which the Court held that an application is inadmissible `where an application for compensation is brought for the payment of an amount precisely equal to the duty which the applicant was required to pay under an individual decision, so that the application seeks in fact the withdrawal of that individual decision' (paragraph 33).

(110) - Thus, for example, in Italy an ad hoc measure was adopted by Legislative Decree No 80 of 27 January 1992 (GURI, 13 February 1992, p. 246) in order to give effect to the Francovich judgment; that measure lays down the rules and the limits as regards reparation for failure to implement the directive on insolvency of employers. The rules provide in particular that the action for damages should be brought against the INPS (Istituto Nazionale di Previdenza Sociale), that the magistrate acting as an employment court is to have jurisdiction and that the limitation period for bringing the action is one year.

(111) - See in particular the judgment in Case 33/76 Rewe v Landwirtschaftskammer Saarland [1976] ECR 1989 and, most recently, that in Case C-410/92 Johnson [1994] ECR I-5483, paragraph 21.

(112) - On this point, see, for example, to cite just one of the authorities, Barav, `Sanction de la non-transposition de la directive CEE relative à l'insolvabilité de l'employeur', in La Semaine Juridique, 1992, Nos 2-3, p. 12; see also Kovar, `Voies de droits ouvertes aux individus devant les instances nationales en cas de violation de normes et décisions du droit communautaire', in Les recours des individus devant les instances nationales en cas de violation du droit européen, Brussels, 1978, p. 245 et seq.

(113) - This emerges, for example, from the judgment in Case 199/82 Amministrazione delle Finanze v San Giorgio [1983] ECR 3595, paragraph 14, where the Court held that `any requirement of proof which has the effect of making it virtually impossible or excessively difficult to secure the repayment of charges levied contrary to Community law would be incompatible with Community law'. In addition, the adequacy of judicial protection has been linked with providing a statement of reasons on which administrative measures are based, in the sense that the individual must be enabled to decide whether or not to initiate judicial proceedings to protect his rights; hence the need that the choice should be made in full knowledge of the facts (judgment in Case 222/86 UNECTEF v Heylens [1987] ECR 4097, paragraph 15). There is also the judgment in Dekker, in which the Court stated that, where the sanction chosen by the Member State for infringement of the principle of equal treatment laid down by a directive is contained within the rules governing an employer's civil liability, any breach of the prohibition of discrimination determines the employer's overall liability, `without there being any possibility of invoking the grounds of exemption provided by national law' (Case C-177/88 Dekker [1990] ECR I-3941, paragraph 25). Then again, there is the judgment in Emmott, in which the Court held that time-limits for bringing proceedings laid down by the national system do not start to run until such time as the directive conferring the rights in question has been properly transposed (Case C-208/90 Emmott v Minister for Social Welfare and Attorney General [1991] ECR I-4269, paragraph 24). However, Emmott has been attenuated, from the point of view of relevance to these proceedings, by the judgment in Johnson, cited in footnote 111.

(114) - See the judgment in Mulder and Others, cited in footnote 77, in which the Court expressly held that `the amount of compensation payable by the Community should correspond to the damage which it caused' (paragraph 34).

(115) - In this connection, it is worth calling to mind judgment No 17 of the Permanent Court of International Justice of 13 September 1928 also in the Case concerning the Factory at Chorzow, in which it was held that `reparation must, as far as possible, wipe out all the consequences of the illegal act and re-establish the situation which would, in all probability, have existed if that act had not been committed' (CPGI, Series A, p. 47).

Authority (Marshall II) [1993] ECR I-4367, paragraph 34.

(118) - Judgment of 20 February 1979 in Case 120/78 Rewe-Zentral v Bundesmonopol für Branntwein [1979] ECR 649.

(119) - Case 193/80 Commission v Italy [1981] ECR 3019, paragraphs 24 to 28.

(120) - For example, in the judgment of 6 May 1986 in Case 304/84 Ministère Public v Muller [1986] ECR 1511, the Court held that it was for the Member States to `consider, in the context of factual assessments which they must undertake in that regard, whether the marketing of foodstuffs containing additives may present a risk to public health and whether there is a real need for the additives in the particular foodstuffs. In applying those criteria they must take account of the results of international scientific research and in particular of the work of the Community's Scientific Committee for Food viewed in the light of the eating habits prevailing in the importing Member State' (paragraph 24, my emphasis). In that judgment, which was delivered a good five years after the harmful event complained of by the appellant in the main proceedings, the Court therefore held that Articles 30 and 36 did not preclude national legislation prohibiting the marketing of foodstuffs imported from other Member States, in which they were lawfully sold, which contained particular additives.

(121) - Judgment in Case C-3/87 The Queen v Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, ex parte Agegate [1989] ECR I-4459, paragraphs 22 to 26. Whilst, admittedly, that judgment was delivered after the Merchant Shipping Act entered into force, equally it antedated the judgment in Factortame II, following which the House of Lords upheld the interim measures requested by the applicants. Moreover, in that case what was involved was a condition imposed so that fishing vessels could count their catches against the national fishing quotas, whereas in the instant case that which is at issue is a measure simply preventing the registration of fishing boats and hence the actual exercise of freedom of establishment.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Gulmann delivered on 24 February 1994.
Ballast Nedam Groep NV v Belgian State.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Raad van State - Belgium.
Freedom to provide services - Public works contracts - Registration of contractors - Relevant entity.
Case C-389/92.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

1. The Raad van State, Belgium, has requested the Court to interpret the Community' s directives concerning public works contracts for the purpose of deciding whether it is compatible with those directives to take into account, when examining an application for inclusion on the Belgian list of registered contractors submitted by the dominant legal person in a Netherlands group, only the qualifications of that company itself and not the qualifications of the other companies in the group.

Background to the question referred to the Court

2. The Netherlands company, Ballast Nedam Groep NV (hereinafter referred to as "BNG") was, until 1987, registered as a contractor under the Belgian legal provisions on the registration of contractors. The relevant provisions are laid down in a Decree-Law of 3 February 1947 (1) and in two implementing pieces of legislation, a Royal Decree of 9 August 1982 and a Ministerial Notice of 13 August 1982.

3. In 1989 the Ministry of Public Works decided not to renew BNG' s registration. The decision was taken on the basis of an adverse opinion of the Committee for the Registration of Contractors which was worded as follows:

> "The Committee finds that... the legal entity known as 'Ballast Nedam Groep N.V.' cannot be regarded as a works contractor for the purposes of the rules on registration. Your undertaking appears to be a holding company, whose major assets consist of shareholdings in subsidiaries (operating companies). It is apparent from the references submitted regarding works carried out that the latter were in fact executed by various subsidiaries. Furthermore, it is not apparent from the file that the legal person applying for registration employs workers itself."

4. Referring to that opinion, the Ministry decided that BNG "as an individual legal person, does not satisfy the legal criteria, as laid down in Article 2 of the Decree-Law of 3 February 1947 and Article 2 of the Ministerial Order of 13 August 1982, for the purposes of registration." The Ministry continued: "Nevertheless, it should be pointed out, to all intents and purposes, that since it is apparent from the examination of the file that works in respect of which references were provided were executed by legally independent subsidiaries, those subsidiaries are in a position to submit an application for registration, if they so wish."

5. BNG took the case to the Raad van State, requesting that the opinion of the Committee for the Registration of Contractors and the decision of the Ministry of Public Works be annulled. The Raad van State referred the following question to the Court.

> "Do Directive 71/304/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts and on the award of public works contracts to contractors acting through agencies or branches (2) and Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (3), in particular Articles 1, 6, 21, 23 and 26, permit, in the event of the Belgian rules on the registration of contractors being applied to the dominant legal person within a 'group' governed by Netherlands law, in connection with the assessment of the criteria relating inter alia to technical competence which a contractor must satisfy, account to be taken only of that dominant legal person as a legal entity and not of the 'companies within the group' each of which, having its own legal personality, belongs to that 'group' ?"

The Community rules concerning official lists of recognized contractors

6. In a number of Member States there are official lists of recognized contractors. Those lists enable a prior assessment to be made as to whether the contractors have the qualifications regarded as necessary with regard to carrying out a specific type of work of a particular scale. Contractors who wish to take part in a tendering procedure are thus enabled to establish their qualifications simply by submitting a certificate of enrolment in a particular category,.

7. Member States' official lists of recognized undertakings are dealt with in Article 28 of Directive 71/305/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts.

8. Article 28(1) requires Member States who have official lists of recognized contractors to adapt them to the provisions of Articles 23 to 26 of the Directive.

9. Article 23 lists various situations involving insolvency and forms of misconduct which can justify a contractor being excluded from participation in a tendering procedure. Article 24 concerns enrolment in a Member State' s trade register. Article 25 lays down the way in which a contractor can furnish proof of its financial and economic standing.

Article 26 lays down the means by which a contractor can furnish proof of its technical knowledge or ability. It appears that submission is required of inter alia evidence of qualifications of the managerial staff (Article 26(a)), a list of the works carried out over the past five years and certificates of satisfactory execution thereof (Article 26(b)), a statement of the tools, plant and technical equipment available to the contractor for carrying out the work (Article 26(c)), a statement of the firm' s average annual manpower and the number of managerial staff for the last three years (Article 26(d)) and a statement of the technicians or technical divisions which the contractor can call upon for carrying out the work, whether or not they belong to the firm (Article 26(e)). (4)

10. It is apparent from the foregoing that the prescribed harmonization of the official lists is of limited scope since it only concerns references attesting to the contractors' economic and financial standing and their technical knowledge and ability but not the criteria for their classification.(5)

11. Article 28(3) lays down the extent to which a contractor registered in a list in one Member State is entitled , in relation to the authority awarding contracts in another Member State, to use that enrolment as an alternative means of proof that it satisfies the qualitative criteria of suitability in Articles 23 to 26 of the directive.(6)

12. It cannot be inferred from Article 28 that registration in the official list in the State where the public works contract is being awarded can be required of contractors established in other Member States. (7)

13. Conversely, Article 28(4) gives contractors a right to apply for registration in the official lists in other Member States. The provision states:

"For the registration of contractors of other Member States in such a list, no further proofs and statements may be required other than those requested of nationals and, in any event, only those provided for under Articles 23 to 26." (my emphasis).

Conclusion

14. The opinion of the Committee for the Registration of Contracts quoted above must be understood as a refusal to register BNG on the Belgian list of registered contractors because the company, as a holding company, does not itself fulfil the prescribed technical requirements. The opinion thus refers to the fact that the company' s major assets consist of shareholdings in subsidiaries and that the references submitted concerning works carried out relate to work which was not carried out by the company but by its subsidiaries and that no manpower is employed by the company. That gives rise to two remarks by way of introduction.

15. First, BNG and Commission expressed the view that BNG was refused registration on the Belgian list of approved contractors simply because the company is a holding company in a Netherlands group. On that basis BNG claims that the Belgian authority' s interpretation of the relevant legal rules lead to BNG' s exclusion for a reason that is not mentioned among the grounds for exclusion which are enumerated exhaustively in Article 23 of Directive 71/305/EEC.(8) BNG and the Commission' s view must, however, be rejected because it appears from the opinion quoted that BNG was not refused registration because it is a holding company in a Netherlands group, but because, as a holding company, it does not itself have the necessary technical qualifications. It is, moreover, expressly mentioned in the order for reference that the respondent in the main proceedings denies that BNG was refused registration in the list simply because the company is a holding company in a Netherlands group.

16. Secondly, as mentioned, it is apparent from the opinion cited that it was BNG' s inability, as an independent legal person, to produce evidence of its technical ability that was the reason for the refusal to register it on the list. That means that it is specifically Article 26 of Directive 71/305 which is relevant for the purposes of forming an opinion in this case. In the question referred to the Court a ruling is, however, required concerning "assessment of the criteria relating 'inter alia' to technical competence" (my emphasis). Since the issue is basically the same whether the contractor' s technical ability under Article 26 or its economic and financial standing under Article 25 is concerned, no difficulty will arise if the latter provision too is taken into account when replying to the question. With regard to Article 23, from which it follows that an applicant can be excluded from registration in an official list if he is insolvent or has been guilty of various forms of misconduct, it must be the case that the dominant legal person in a group at all events will not be able to obtain registration in an official list of approved contractors on the basis of the qualifications of a subsidiary which finds itself in one of the situations enumerated in that provision. A parent company must therefore, if necessary, produce proof to show that that is not the case.

17. Since Article 28 gives contractors a right to be registered in other Member States' official lists which may only be made conditional on the submission of the proof and declarations laid down in Articles 23 to 26, the reply to the question referred to the Court will depend on whether those provisions are to be interpreted to the effect that they permit a requirement that the proof in question must concern the applicant company as an independent legal entity.

18. As the Commission and BNG, who alone have submitted observations, maintain, grounds can be adduced for interpreting Articles 23 to 26 to the effect that, in examining whether a company has the qualifications required for registration in an official list in another Member State, the authorities have a duty to take account of whether the company, through the other companies in a given legal structure, actually has available to it the necessary qualifications.

19. The Commission and, to a certain extent BNG, maintain that:

(a) it follows from the directive that groups of contractors which do not have a specific legal form and legal persons who do not themselves intend or are not able themselves to carry out the work are entitled to take part in tendering procedures;

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(b) such tenderers must therefore also be able to take part in other award or registration procedures which take place before a contract is awarded; and

(c) a fortiori that result must apply to companies which form part of a particular legal structure in accordance with the company law of a Member State and where, accordingly, it is possible beforehand to identify the companies who are to carry out the work as a whole or in part.

20. That groups of contractors are entitled to submit tenders is clear from Article 21 of the directive, which provides: "Tenders may be submitted by groups of contractors. These groups may not be required to assume a specific legal form in order to submit the tender; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract."

21. That legal persons who are not themselves able to carry out the work and who are therefore not necessarily contractors in the strict sense of the term but guarantee the undertakings which are to carry out the work can take part in the tendering procedure can be supported on various grounds.

22. First, it follows from the express wording of Article 26(e) that it cannot be required that technicians or technical divisions belong to the undertaking itself, since it is sufficient to produce a statement that "the contractor can call upon [them] for carrying out the work".

23. Secondly, the Commission maintains that the directive allows for the possibility of work being carried out by agents or branches. That view would appear to be supported by Article 1 of the directive, which defines a public works contract and in this connection refers to Directive 71/304. It is true that Article 1 of Directive 71/304 obliges the Member States to abolish restrictions on the performance of public works contracts in respect of natural persons and companies or firms which provide services or act through agencies or branches. Directive 71/305, however, refers solely to Article 2 of Directive 71/304 and it does so for the purpose of restricting the forms of activity which can be the object of a public works contract within the meaning of Directive 71/305. It is hard to conclude with sufficient certainty from that reference who, under the directive, is entitled to take part in tendering procedures.

24. As indicated by the Commission it would, however, appear that at all events under Directive 89/440 (9) which alters the wording of Article 1 in Directive 71/305, a construction can be deduced to the effect that the legal person to whom the contract is awarded does not necessarily have be the one who carries out the work. Public works contracts are defined here as contracts which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works related to particular forms of activity "or the execution by whatever means of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority" (my emphasis). Since it appears from the eighth recital in Directive 89/440 that the directive aims to define more precisely what is meant by public works contracts and thus hardly to broaden the concept, it must be justified to take that definition into account in examining the present case, even though the directive was adopted after the time relevant to the main proceedings.

25. However, I do not consider that the provisions in Articles 1(c) (10) and 6 (11) of the directive provide any further aid to construction in support of the foregoing arguments, as BNG asserts.

26. It must be correct, as maintained by the Commission and to a certain extent by BNG, that on the basis of the foregoing it can be concluded that the criteria which result from Articles 23 to 26 of the directive must, in the circumstances, be interpreted as meaning that they can be fulfilled by groups of undertakings and legal persons who cannot themselves carry out the work in question. In other words a company must be able to produce evidence that it has the necessary economic, financial and technical qualifications by proving that it has the qualifications available, even though they are not integrated in the company as an independent legal entity.

27. It follows that the relevant authorities in a Member State are not entitled to refuse registration in the official list of recognized contractors solely on the ground that the applicant company cannot produce proof to the effect that, as an independent legal person it has the necessary qualifications. It must suffice, in order to obtain registration, that the applicant company can show that the relationship between the companies in a given legal structure is such that the company must be said actually to have available the required qualifications with the result that it will be in a position to ensure satisfactory execution of the works contract in question.

28. Such a result also seems to accord best with the purpose of the directive, which is to implement freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services in connection with public works contracts and thus seeks to ensure that unnecessary hindrances are not created.

29. It is hardly sufficient to reply to the question referred to the Court to the effect that a requirement can be inferred from the directive that in the assessment of an application for registration in an official list of recognized contractors a specific decision should be reached as to whether the applicant company, through the companies linked to it, actually has available the necessary qualifications. The court of reference formulated its question so that it concerns the assessment of an application submitted by the dominant company in a Netherlands group.

30. BNG has advanced a number of facts intended to establish that, as the dominant legal person in the particular structure which corresponds to the legal definition of a group in Netherlands company law, it does actually have available to it the qualifications of its subsidiaries in the group.

31. BNG has in particular explained that the company owns the entire capital of the other companies in the group and accordingly has a decisive influence on those companies, which inter alia is reflected in the fact that BNG can appoint and remove the managers of those companies and thereby determine the companies' policy. Under Article 3 of its statutes BNG also has as one of its objects to act as a contractor, an activity which also forms part of the objects of a number of companies in the group and which is the most important object for the group. BNG thus ensures the central control of the financing, managerial, building and other capital goods requirements of the group of companies. BNG has explained the way the group enters into works contracts as follows:

> "The execution of contracting work - takes place - according to the factual circumstances, including the preferences of the authorities awarding contracts - sometimes through BNG itself and sometimes through one of the companies in the group amongst whose objects is the execution of contract work. The execution of such work takes place by means of a combination of management staff and capital goods in the group which is most suited to carry out work of the type in question. In the administration of the group, expenses and income on the contract are allotted, under guidelines prepared for the purpose by Ballast Nedam Group NV' s management for the entire group, to the company in the group which is regarded as having the works within its sphere of competence, as determined by the NV' s management, on the basis of the type of works involved and their location. When the works are executed by the NV itself or by group company X, but fall within the sphere of group company Y, the management of Company Y is internally responsible for its execution by an organization of the group' s manpower and capital goods which are available to that company or put at its disposal, and the expenses and income are allotted to that company.

In the above case the work is not, therefore, carried by the company in group Y under a sub-contracting agreement, but under guidelines laid down by the NV' s management in its capacity as the group' s main management.

The legal authority of such a decision is based upon the fact that Ballast Nedam Groep NV together with its group companies constitutes a 'group' recognized by Netherlands law and regulated in detail by legislation."

32. It seems to me indisputable that a parent company which, like BNG, has 100% ownership of its subsidiaries and has power to take decisions that imply, with sufficient certainty, that the subsidiaries' qualifications are available for the purpose of carrying out specific works satisfies a requirement that it should actually have available the qualifications of its subsidiaries.

33. The question arises whether it is possible for the Court to give a more abstract reply to the question referred to it, in other words to lay down general criteria governing when a company can be said to have available to a sufficient degree another company' s qualifications for the purpose of registration as a contractor.

34. The natural starting point would seem to be a company' s dominant influence in another company. It must be established when the dominance of the company in question is sufficient in the present connection, that is to say when it is sufficiently certain that its decisions for the purpose of carrying out works can be implemented in relation to the other company.

In that regard it is not possible simply to apply a pre-determined and generally accepted definition. No such definition is to be found either in Community law or in the law of the Member States. It is certain that the definition of dominant influence depends on the actual legal context in which it is to be applied.

35. It could perhaps be considered whether in the present connection there is sufficient dominance when the conditions laid down in Article 24a in the second Company Directive are satisfied (12), that is to say when a "public limited-liability company directly or indirectly holds a majority of the voting rights" in another company or can exercise decisive influence, which is the case when it "has the right to appoint or dismiss a majority of the members of the administrative organ, of the management organ or of the supervisory organ, and is at the same time a shareholder or member of the other company" or when it "is a shareholder or member of the other company and has sole control of a majority of the voting rights of its shareholders or members under an agreement concluded with other shareholders or members of that company."

36. The conditions in the Second Directive were drawn up for the purpose of laying down when a company must be regarded as acquiring its own shares. However, prima facie it would seem reasonable to assume that a company which has the majority of voting rights or otherwise in the ways specified in the directive has a decisive influence on a second company is also, to a sufficient degree, effectively in a position to have available that company' s qualifications.

37. I would, nevertheless, not wish to suggest that the Court apply those criteria in this case, not only because it cannot be excluded than there might be a sufficiently decisive influence by means other than those set out above, but also because there might be grounds for not regarding a company as actually having another company' s qualifications available to it even though it is dominant in the way stated. It cannot, for example, be excluded that in relation to the legislation of a Member State other shareholders or creditors of the subsidiary company might have to be taken into account with the result that the dominant company does not actually have available to it the resources necessary in the present connection, nor can it be excluded that there are rules applicable in national law which could prevent the dominant company from putting its decisions into effect with sufficient certainty and speed for the purpose of ensuring the availability of its subsidiary company' s qualifications. Not least because the Belgian Government has not submitted observations in the case, it is not possible to evaluate the extent to which the Belgian rules might be based on such factors.

38. I would accordingly suggest that the Court confine itself to ruling that in any event a legal person whose dominant influence is founded on the factors set out in paragraph 32 should be able to obtain registration in an official list of recognized contractors on the basis of the qualifications of its subsidiary companies.

39. With regard to the court of reference' s question whether it is incompatible with Directive 71/304 to refuse registration in an official list on the ground that the applicant does not, as an independent legal person, have the necessary qualifications, it is my view that that directive, the purpose of which was to liberalize freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts, has lost its independent meaning in view of the direct applicability of Article 59 of the EEC Treaty. It would, therefore, if need be, be more correct to examine the issue on the basis of Article 59, which does not simply prohibit direct and indirect discrimination as is the case in Directive 71/304, but also other restrictions on freedom to provide services. Since a reply to the question referred to the court can be derived from Directive 71/305, I see no reason in this case to examine the application of the Treaty' s general prohibition of restrictions on freedom to provide services.

Conclusion

In the light of the foregoing considerations, I suggest that the Court should reply as follows to the question referred to it:

When an application for inclusion on a Member State' s list of registered contractors submitted by the dominant legal person in a group formed in accordance with the legislation of another Member State is being assessed, Articles 23 to 26 and 28 of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts preclude the taking into account only of the qualifications of the dominant legal person alone, where that legal person is in a position to establish that it actually has available to it the qualifications of the other companies in the group and that requirement should in any event be regarded as satisfied where the dominant company has 100% ownership of its subsidiaries and can take decisions that imply with sufficient certainty that the subsidiaries' qualifications are available for the purpose of carrying out specific works.

(1) - Article 1.A of the Decree-law lays down the general conditions which a contractor which is to carry out public works must fulfil. In Article 1.B it is specified that special prior registration is required for works exceeding a particular value laid down by Royal Decree. Article 2, setting up a committee which is to give opinions on applications for registration, states in the third paragraph that the committee is to take into account the applicant' s technical and economic standing, its performance ability in the form of plant and qualified manpower, the scale and importance of the work it has carried out previously, the quality of the work carried out and its business probity.

(3) - Official Journal, English Special Edition 1971(II), p. 682. The Directive was amended after the date in question in the main proceedings by Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 (Official Journal 1989 L 210, p. 1) and now appears in a codified version in Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993, Official Journal 1993 L 199, p. 54.

(4) - The Court of Justice has stated that the directive' s enumeration of the proof that may be required to be submitted to show that the tenderer fulfils the conditions of probity and so forth and technical ability is exhaustive, but on the other hand there is nothing the prevent the authority awarding contracts from requesting references other than those mentioned in the directive for the purpose of assessing financial and economic standing: see the judgment in Case 76/81 Transporoute [1982] ECR 417, paragraphs 9 and 10, and the judgment in Joined Cases 27/86

(6) - See the judgment in Joined Cases 27 to 29/86 Bellini [1987] ECR 3347, at paragraphs 23-27, where the Court inter alia stated that registration in an official list can replace the references referred to in Articles 25 and 26 in so far as such registration is based upon equivalent information. Consequently, the authorities awarding contracts are required to accept that a contractor' s economic and financial standing and technical knowledge and ability are sufficient for works corresponding to his classification only in so far as that classification is based on equivalent criteria in regard to the capacities required.

(9) - See footnote 3.

(10) - Article 1(c) defines a tenderer as a contractor who has submitted a tender and a candidate as one who has sought an invitation to take part in a restricted procedure. The provision does not, as BNG maintains, define the term contractor.

(11) - Article 6 enables a special procedure to be adopted in the case of the award of contracts relating to the design and construction of a public housing schemes whose size and complexity, and the estimated duration of the work involved, require that planning be based from the outset on close collaboration within a team comprising representatives of the authorities awarding contracts, experts and the contractor to be responsible for carrying out the works. It is not clear to me how BNG find that provision to be relevant to this particular case.

(12) - See the Council' s Second Directive 77/91/EEC of 13 December 1976 on coordination of safeguards which, for the protection of the interests of members and others, are required by Member States of companies within the meaning of the second paragraph of Article 58 of the Treaty, in respect of the formation of public limited liability companies and the maintenance and alteration of their capital, with a view to making such safeguards equivalent (OJ 1977 L 26, p. 1), as amended by Council Directive 92/101/EEC of 23 November 1992 (OJ 1992 L 347, p. 64).

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Lenz delivered on 9 December 1993.
Gestion Hotelera Internacional SA v Comunidad Autonoma de Canarias, Ayuntamiento de Las Palmas de Gran Canaria and Gran Casino de Las Palmas SA.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunal Superior de Justicia de Canarias - Spain.
Directive 71/305/CEE - Definition of "public works contracts".
Case C-331/92.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

A Introduction

1. This request for a preliminary ruling relates in substance to the classification of a mixed contract for the purpose of determining whether Directive 71/305/EEC (1) concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts is applicable.

2. The main action concerns the invitation to tender for and the award of a project originating in a cooperation agreement (of 14 July 1989) between the Government of the Canary Islands and the municipality of Las Palmas de Gran Canaria (hereinafter referred to as "Las Palmas"). It was intended to open and operate a casino and to continue a hotel business in the premises of the Hotel Santa Catalina, which is owned by the municipality of Las Palmas and is regarded as its emblem. The invitation to tender was arranged by the Government of the Canary Islands, the competent authority for awarding the concession for operating a casino. The agreements between the authorities are to the effect that, so far as the operation of the hotel was concerned, the Government of the Canary Islands would arrange the invitation to tender on behalf of the municipality.

3. By order of 17 July 1989 of the Presidential Counsellor to the Government of the Canary Islands, published in the Boletín Oficial de Canarias of 19 July 1989, an open invitation to tender was issued concerning, first, the award of the final concession for the installation and opening of a casino in Las Palmas, the conditions of tender being set out in Annex I, and, secondly, participation in an open invitation to tender, to be launched on behalf of the municipality of Las Palmas, concerning the use of the building owned by the municipality and the operation of the Hotel Santa Catalina, the conditions of tender being set out in Annex II.

4. The conditions of tender in Annexes I and II refer to each other. Prospective tenderers must submit their tender simultaneously for both parts of the invitation to tender (inter alia, Article 2(i) of Annex I, and Article 2, paragraphs 1 and 3, of Annex II). Article 2 of Annex I, containing the conditions which must be fulfilled by tendering undertakings, states that the sole object of the undertaking must consist in operating casinos. A derogation from this condition is allowed in so far as additional services may be provided. The list of examples of such additional services expressly mentions the operation of the Hotel Santa Catalina, which is ensured by means of an obligation on the part of the prospective successful tenderer.

5. The conditions of tender in Annex II to the invitation to tender for the award of the operation of the Hotel Santa Catalina, which is intended to house the casino as well as the hotel business, lay down minimum requirements for the award of the contract with regard to the installation and operation of the casino, the use of the buildings and the hotel business (Article 1, Annex II). Article 2, paragraph 2, of Annex II stipulates that the successful tenderer must invest at least 1 000 million pesetas in fitting out the hotel and in its surroundings, excluding the installation of the casino, for the purpose of renovation and conversion so that the hotel can retain its five-star status. Furthermore, Article 2, paragraph 2, of Annex II contains an obligation to pay 1 000 million pesetas as consideration for the use of the entire architectural complex for a term corresponding to the initial 10-year term of the contract. The consideration is then divided into two equal parts for the use of the premises for the hotel on the one hand and the casino on the other, with different conditions of payment for the two establishments.

6. By order of 10 January 1990 the Government of the Canary Islands awarded the contract for the entire project to the commercial company Gran Casino Las Palmas, SA.

7. The lessee of the hotel at the time, and plaintiff in the main action, Gestion Hotelera Internacional, SA, brought proceedings under administrative law against the invitation to tender and against the award of the contract. It contended, inter alia, that the contract which is the subject of the invitation to tender is a public works contract within the meaning of Directive 71/305/EEC and therefore the invitation to tender ought to have been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities. This was not done.

8. To clarify this point of law, the national court has referred the following questions to the Court of Justice:

1. Is a mixed contract for the performance of works and the assignment of property to be regarded as included in the concept of "public works contracts" set out in Article 1(a) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971?

2. Are, therefore, "authorities awarding contracts" which wish to award a contract having those characteristics obliged to publish a notice of that contract in the Official Journal of the European Communities?

9. The first defendant, the Government of the Canary Islands, and the second defendant, the municipality of Las Palmas, both take the view that there is no reason for requesting a preliminary ruling from the Court of Justice. They contend that Directive 71/305/EEC has been transposed into national law, so that it is only necessary to interpret the law of a Member State.

10. On the substantive question of classifying the contract concerned, all the parties to the proceedings before the Court, the Spanish Government, the first and second defendants and the Commission, take the view, on different grounds, that the contract is not a public works contract within the meaning of the directive.

11. As none of the parties has made an application for an oral procedure, the Court will give its ruling on the basis of the written procedure.

B Analysis

12. I. First it is necessary to consider the objections concerning admissibility which the two defendants in the main action have raised against the request for a preliminary ruling. Both the first defendant, the Government of the Canary Islands, and the second defendant, the municipality of Las Palmas, claim that as Directive 71/305/EEC has already been transposed into national law, all that remains is a matter of interpretation of the law of a Member State. Since the directive has been transposed, its provisions are not directly applicable. According to the defendants, direct applicability comes into question only if a directive has either not been transposed at all or has been transposed incorrectly. This is not so in the present case. The second defendant, referring to the judgment in CILFIT, (2) contends that there is no reasonable doubt as to the interpretation of Community law. The defendants also take the view that the answer to the question is irrelevant to the decision in the case because the plaintiff has no right to bring proceedings.

13. To take the last argument first, it should be observed that the question of the plaintiff' s right to bring proceedings is a question of the procedural law of a Member State which the Court is not competent to answer. According to the Court' s settled case-law, problems of domestic law

fall within the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of the Member States. (3) The Court can only provide an interpretation of Community law. (4) The Court may not, under the preliminary rulings procedure, give a ruling on the application of provisions of national law or on the relevance of the request for a preliminary ruling. (5) It is solely for the national court to determine both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the question which it submits to the Court. (6)

14. Where the national court' s request concerns the interpretation of a provision of Community law, the Court is in principle bound to reply to it. (7) It can be otherwise only if the questions are purely hypothetical (8) or if a purely fictitious dispute is taken as an occasion for requesting a preliminary ruling from the Court. (9) There is clearly no such exceptional situation in the present case. On the contrary, the national court has made a detailed examination of the facts and the legal problems of the case, (10) so that there can be no grounds for doubting the admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling.

15. The fact that a directive has been transposed into national law does not preclude a reference for a preliminary ruling concerning its interpretation. After a directive has been transposed into national law, individuals are primarily affected by that law. (11) However, the Court has consistently held that "the Member States' obligation arising from a directive to achieve the result envisaged by the directive and their duty under Article 5 of the Treaty to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure the fulfilment of that obligation is binding on all the authorities of Member States including, for matters within their jurisdiction, the courts. It follows that, in applying the national law and in particular the provisions of a national law specifically introduced in order to implement the directive... , national courts are required to interpret their national law in the light of the wording and the purpose of the directive...". (12) It is for the national court to interpret and apply the legislation adopted for the implementation of the directive in conformity with the requirements of Community law, in so far as it is given discretion to do so under national law. (13)

16. Consequently, if a national court "is required to interpret its national law in the light of the wording and the purpose of that directive", (14) it is of course also permissible to request a preliminary ruling from the Court of Justice where there is any doubt as to the interpretation of the directive.

II.(a) First question

17. The first question put by the national court asks in effect whether the invitation to tender and the award of the contract in question fall within the directive concerning the award of public works contracts.

18. With regard to the interpretation needed for classifying the contract in question, it is necessary in the first place to proceed on the basis that Directive 71/305/EEC in its original version, i.e. before it was amended by Directive 89/440/EEC, is the relevant text. (15) Directive 89/440/EEC was notified to the Member States on 10 July 1989, (16) the same day as that on which the notice of the invitation to tender for the project at issue was published in the regional Official Journal. Article 3 of Directive 89/440/EEC gives the Member States one year in which to adopt the measures necessary to comply with the directive. Consequently at the relevant date, that of the invitation to tender, the provisions of Directive 89/440/EEC were not yet to be taken into account.

19. It is common ground that the contract at issue is of a mixed character. The findings of the national court and the submissions of all the parties to the proceedings before this Court agree on this point. The formulation of the question on which a preliminary ruling is sought is therefore ambiguous in that the contract to be appraised is placed in a legal category, and the emphasis is laid on the contract for works that is to be performed. Whether the obligation to carry out building works characterizes the contract is, however, precisely the subject of the question. I therefore propose to take the question in wider terms, in the light of the request for a preliminary ruling, as asking whether an open invitation to tender and the award of a concession to open and operate a casino, and a concession to operate a hotel in conjunction with a lease of the premises necessary for that purpose, in the framework of which an obligation must be entered into for carrying out conversion work, must be regarded as a public works contract within the meaning of Directive 71/305/EEC.

20. In the final analysis, the answer to the question turns solely on whether the project at issue is to be regarded as a works contract within the meaning of Directive 71/305/EEC, and not on positive classification in another category of legal transactions, in particular service contracts. (17) Considerations falling within that perspective are purely hypothetical and can only serve as criteria for demarcation.

21. Regarding the classification of the contract, the participants in the proceedings before the Court have reached the same conclusions on differing grounds.

22. The Commission considers that the contract is mixed in nature and consists, firstly, of a service concession involving permission to use buildings and installations owned by the municipality for opening and operating a casino, and also for a hotel and restaurant business, for a consideration of 1 000 million pesetas. Secondly, there is an assignment of works to be carried out by the tenderer, at his expense, to the value of 1 000 million pesetas. According to the Commission, the services in question are services within the meaning of Directive 92/50/EEC, (18) in accordance with Annex I B, Nos 17 and 26. Directives 92/50/EEC and 71/305/EEC are mutually exclusive. There can only be a works contract if it forms an essential part of a contract, but not if it is incidental to the service contract. The Commission refers to the 16th recital of Directive 92/50/EEC, which reads as follows:

> "Whereas public service contracts, particularly in the field of property management, may from time to time include some works; whereas it results from Directive 71/305/EEC that, for a contract to be a public works contract, its object must be the achievement of a work; whereas, in so far as these works are incidental rather than the object of the contract, they do not justify treating the contract as a public works contract."

23. Consequently it is necessary to ascertain whether the works contract is the main object of the contract or whether it is only incidental and is therefore severable from the other part of the contract. The Commission takes the view that the works contract cannot be severed from the remainder of the contract. This follows, according to the Commission, from the object of the contract. The works are a necessary prerequisite for the opening of the casino, but they are secondary in comparison with the service. From the economic viewpoint the works are also secondary. Alternatively, if the objects are found to be severable, the Commission submits that the works are the consideration for the concession, so that Article 3 of the original version of Directive 71/305/EEC is applicable, which means that the directive does not apply to this concession contract. Finally, the Commission expresses reservations with regard to its classification of the contract as a public service contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50/EEC. It is indeed a service concession which would, according to the proposal for Directive 92/50/EEC, have fallen within its ambit, but the Council did not accept this wording when adopting the directive.

24. The Municipality of Las Palmas states that the licence to operate a casino was issued on 10 January 1990. It proves this by citing at length the text of the order. It contends that the contract is not a works contract but a concession for the operation of a casino and a hotel. The tenderer was given the responsibility for the works and the municipality merely retained rights of supervision and inspection.

25. The Regional Government first entertains doubts as to the initial classification of the contract by the national court when formulating the question referred to this Court for a preliminary ruling. The true nature of the contract consists in the use and management of a building owned by the municipality and in the award of the operation of the hotel business. The fact that the invitation to tender requires a secondary, incidental, service does not alter its object. The building works are inseparable from the licence for the opening and operation of the casino, not only because of the voluntary agreement of the authorities concerned, but also because of the special circumstances. The grant of the concession is characterized by the special feature that the premises do not belong to the tenderer but to the municipality. The agreement that the work is to be carried out at the expense of the lessee does not alter the fact that the contract is in the nature of a lease. According to the specifications in Annex II, the works could be influenced by the licensing authority for gaming. The works entail adapting the premises for the proposed use. Furthermore, the building works are not extensive. The lessee can certainly provide for additional structural alterations.

26. With regard to the classification of public-law contracts, the Regional Government observes that, in the case of mixed contracts, sometimes the absorption theory is propounded, which means that the preponderant part of the contract determines the legal classification of the entire contract, and sometimes the combination theory, which means that each part of the contract is governed by the special rules for the type of contract in question. Practice has decided in favour of the absorption theory, which must be applied in this instance also. In any case it is for the Spanish court to classify the contract.

27. In its written observations the Spanish Government reproduces the relevant parts of the conditions of tender to illustrate the mutual dependence of the various objects of the contract and their ranking with respect to each other. It takes the view that the part of the contract relating to the building works has a supplementary, instrumental character. The works are an indispensable condition for attaining the main object of the contract. The fact that they are secondary to the other parts of the contract is shown by the provision that the execution of the works can be assigned to a third party. The definition of the objects of the tenderer undertaking precludes that undertaking from the outset from carrying out the building works. The main object of the contract, the opening and operation of a casino, cannot be assigned.

28. The Spanish Government adds that the contract constitutes a lease, the obligation to carry out a minimum volume of building works representing part of the consideration for the use of the premises and the licence for the businesses established there. The tenderer is responsible for carrying out the works and must also pay for them. However, he is certainly not an awarding authority. The public authorities did not offer the tenderer a price for the works. The extent of the works was not specified either. Prior specification was not possible because of the object of the invitation to tender. In this connection the Spanish Government refers to the derogation laid down in Article 9(h) of the directive, which states that the directive need not be applied to cases where the nature of the works does not permit prior overall pricing.

29. The project in question, for the classification of which the Court of Justice must provide the national court with the necessary guidance on interpretation, is characterized by the fact that the administrations of various regional and local authorities had to cooperate in implementing the proposed plan. Neither the Regional Government nor the municipality could have carried out the project on their own account. The Regional Government alone has power to grant a concession to operate the casino business. As the idea of the responsible authorities was to establish the casino in the Hotel Santa Catalina which has symbolic status, the cooperation of the municipality was indisputable. Up to then, the municipality, as owner of the building, was also actively involved as the lessor of the hotel.

30. The award of a single contract for the operation of the casino and the hotel businesses is an obvious course of action as they were to be housed in the same group of buildings. Therefore it was open to the municipality not to award a contract independently for the hotel and the conversion works necessary for that purpose, but to do so in collaboration with the Regional Government. It appears from the observations submitted to the Court that the structural alterations are necessary both for installing the casino and for renovating and converting the hotel premises. The execution of the works, which in the final analysis are also for the owner' s benefit, in a single operation is therefore something that obviously suggests itself.

31. However, it was not the primary concern either of the municipality or the Regional Government to carry out the building alterations. The specifications annexed to the invitation to tender indicate that, on the contrary, the intention was to find an operator for the casino and the hotel. It is questionable whether the obligation to carry out building alterations is nevertheless a public works contract within the meaning of Directive 71/305/EEC.

32. The starting point is the definition given in Article 1(a) of the directive. According to that provision, "' public works contracts' are contracts for pecuniary consideration concluded in writing between a contractor (a natural or legal person) and an authority awarding contracts as defined under (b), which have as their object one of the activities referred to in Article 2 of the Council Directive of 26 July 1971 concerning the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts...". Article 2 of Directive 71/304/EEC, (19) to which reference is made, is worded as follows:

> "1. The provisions of this Directive shall apply to activities of self-employed persons which are covered by Major Group 40 in Annex I to the General Programme for the abolition of restrictions on freedom of establishment. Such activities correspond to those which fall within Major Group 40 of the 'Nomenclature of Industries in the European Communities' (NICE); they are given in the Annex to this Directive.
> 2. The Directive shall not apply to...".

33. The Annex to the directive lists a number of activities which are classified under the heading "construction".

34. In the final analysis it is impossible to ascertain whether the conversion works to be carried out fall within those fields of activity because the specifications manifestly give no details of the nature and extent of the works. In my opinion, the decisive factor in this connection is not an appraisal of the individual activities, but the fact that the authorities inviting tenders did not specify precisely the volume of the works to be carried out. An obligation was merely imposed on the tenderer to have conversion works carried out up to a certain financial minimum. The architectural planning and development of the project were to take place at a later date in partial coordination with the authority.

35. In so far as the tenderer, and future tenant and concessionaire for the commercial activities, was to act as the promoter, the contract would not have been placed by an "authority awarding a contract", which is the characteristic of a public works contract. Article 1(b) of Directive 71/305/EEC defines "authorities awarding contracts" as "the State, regional or local authorities and the legal persons governed by public law specified in Annex 1".

36. No other criteria for demarcation can be derived directly from Directive 71/305/EEC or Directive 71/304/EEC. On the other hand, the 16th recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50/EEC contains a clear statement to the effect that a contract is a public works contract only if the building works are the main object of the contract.

37. As already stated, the aim of the project for which, by the joint action of the two authorities, tenders were invited was to find a suitable operator for the casino and the hotel. The fact that this primary obligation is non-assignable also shows that it is the main object of the contract. In contrast, when drafting the conditions of tender, the authorities proceeded on the assumption that the conversion works were to be carried out by another undertaking on behalf and at the expense of the potential tenderer.

38. The conclusion is the same if the matter is approached from the economic point of view. It is true that the cash consideration for an initial 10-year term is the same as the stipulated minimum volume of the future works. However, it must be borne in mind that the specifications contain rent-review clauses and an option to renew the contract for a further 10 years, so that the framework of the investment to be made is considerably extended.

39. The final question to be considered is whether the contract could have been severed, so that the building works could be regarded as an independent contract. Firstly it should be noted that the parties concerned are almost unanimous in claiming that the conversion works were a necessary prerequisite for the award of the concession. The obligation to be undertaken is, in substance and by reference to its position in the structure of the conditions of tender, to be understood as constituting partial consideration for the lease and the concession for commercial use.

40. However, in my opinion the decisive factor is that the contract could not have been severed without altering its legal structure. It was precisely not the authority' s intention to award a works contract on its own account, but to find a company which would have the building works carried out in the framework of its obligations to the authority.

41. Even if the obligation to carry out conversion works is considered in isolation, there can, in my view, be no question of a public works contract. This is due to the following decisive factors: there are no specifications for the work to be carried out. The authorities offer no prospect of payment for the work. The prospective tenderer cannot by definition (20) be a building contractor. The tenderer is under only an indirect obligation to have building works carried out to a certain minimum volume (1 000 million pesetas) and of a certain minimum quality (five-star hotel). According to the conditions of tender, in the future planning of the conversion works the authority stipulated for itself merely a right of participation, either as owner or as building supervision authority.

42. As, in my opinion, this is not a public works contract within the meaning of the directive, the following considerations are put forward only in the alternative. The Commission contends that, if the contract were found to be a public works contract, Article 3 of the original version of Directive 71/305/EEC would apply. Article 3(1) was worded as follows:

> "In the event of the authorities awarding contracts concluding a contract of the same type as that indicated in Article 1(a) except for the fact that the consideration for the works to be carried out consists either solely in the right to exploit the construction or in this right together with payment, the provisions of the Directive shall not apply to this so-called 'concession' contract...".

43. This provision was deleted as a result of amendment by Directive 89/440/EEC. Nevertheless, it applied at the material time.

44. In my opinion, the obligation to carry out building works is not a concession contract within the meaning of Article 3. Apart from the fact that, according to the definition of the contract in Article 3, the public authority awards the concession and possibly makes a payment by way of consideration for the building works, although in the present case the building works form only part of what the concessionaire undertakes to do, it seems to me that the decisive factor is that the concessionaire has no direct obligation to carry out the building works.

II.(b) Second question

45. In so far as an open invitation to tender cannot be classified as a public works contract within the meaning of Directive 71/305/EEC, it is unnecessary to comply with the publication requirements of the directive.

C Conclusion

46. In the result, I propose that the questions referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling be answered as follows:

1. An obligation to have building works carried out by third parties, which is agreed within the framework of a public contract concerning the award of a concession for a casino and a hotel business in conjunction with a lease of the premises necessary for those purposes, does not constitute a public works contract within the meaning of Directive 71/305/EEC.

2. Consequently there is no requirement for publication of the invitation to tender in accordance with Directive 71/305/EEC.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Lenz delivered on 8 March 1994.
Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Spain.
Failure to fulfil obligations - Public supply contracts - Pharmaceutical products and specialities.
Case C-328/92.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

A ° Introduction

1. In these proceedings for infringement of the Treaty, the Commission is seeking a declaration from the Court that, by requiring in the legislation concerning social security that the administration award public contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products and specialities to social security institutions by a direct procedure, and with the social security administration deciding to award nearly all supply contracts directly, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 77/62/EEC (1) coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts. Thus the public supply contracts to be awarded were not published in the Official Journal as required by Article 9 of Directive 77/62.

2. The award of public contracts in Spain is governed by the Ley de Contratos del Estado (Law on State Contracts, hereinafter referred to as "the LCE") and the Reglamento General de Contratacion del Estado (2) (General Regulations concerning State contracts), an implementing regulation. According to the first final provision of the decrees aligning the LCE and the implementing regulation with Community law, (3) those provisions also apply to public contracts awarded by the administrative social security bodies.

3. Article 2, points 3 and 8 of the LCE, which were already the subject of the judgment in Case C-71/92, (4) read as follows:

> "Notwithstanding the provisions of the previous article, this Law shall not apply to the following contracts and legal acts of the administration:
> 3. transactions which the administration effects with private individuals with respect to goods or rights, dealings in which are regulated (' mediatizado') by law, or controlled products (' intervenidos') which are the subject of a monopoly (' estancados') or prohibited (' prohibidos');
> 8. contracts expressly excluded by a Law."

4. The purchase of pharmaceutical products and specialities by hospitals within the social security system is governed by Article 107 of the Ley General de la Seguridad Social (5) (General Law on Social Security, hereinafter referred to as "the LGSS"). That provision, entitled "Purchase and distribution of pharmaceutical products and specialities" provides as follows:

> 2. The social security authority shall purchase directly from the centres of production those pharmaceutical products which are to be used in its institutions, whether open or closed, and for that purpose shall select, according to rigorous scientific criteria, the pharmaceutical products necessary for the care provided in those institutions....
> 3. In all cases, the distribution of pharmaceutical products intended for use outside the institutions

referred to in the previous paragraph shall be carried out through legally established pharmacies, which shall be obliged to carry out such distribution...".

5. There was in force until the end of 1990 an agreement concluded between the State administration and Farmaindustria, the national association of the pharmaceutical industry, under Article 107(4) of the LGSS fixing prices and laying down other financial conditions applying to the purchase and distribution of the pharmaceutical products and specialities in question. While the agreement was in force, and even afterwards, the social security institutions did not normally, with few exceptions, as in the case of vaccines, publish the supply contracts in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

6. The Commission considers the abovementioned provisions and the practice of awarding supply contracts on that basis to be contrary to Community law.

7. The Spanish Government, on the other hand, takes the view that the relevant provisions are compatible with Community law. It contends that the market in pharmaceutical products and specialities constitutes, likewise in accordance with Community law, a highly regulated market in respect of production, the fixing of prices and the observance of industrial property rights. Furthermore, neither the relevant provisions nor the agreement made on the basis thereof preclude observance of the provisions of Community law on publication.

8. The Commission claims that the Court should:

(i) declare that:

° by requiring in the legislation on social security that the administration award public contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products and specialities to social security institutions by a direct procedure; and

° by awarding nearly all of those supply contracts directly, so that no contract notices were published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976;

(ii) order the Kingdom of Spain to pay the costs.

The Kingdom of Spain contends that the Court should:

(i) dismiss the action;

(ii) order the Commission to pay the costs.

9. I shall consider in detail the facts of the case and the submissions of the parties when I come to assess the legal position.

B ° Analysis

1. Definition of the dispute

10. The Commission submits that its attention was first drawn to the problem by a reference for a preliminary ruling (6) from the Audiencia Territorial de Sevilla. (7) The main proceedings were between the Farmaindustria and the Ministry for Health of the Junta de Andalucía concerning an invitation to tender issued by the Ministry in relation to the purchase of medicinal products in disregard of the said agreement.

11. In the preliminary ruling proceedings, the Commission had proposed that the answer to the questions put by the national court should be that Article 30 of the EEC Treaty (8) and Directive 77/62 must be interpreted as precluding a system for awarding public contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products of the kind introduced by the agreement and the legal provisions serving as the basis for it.

12. The reference for a preliminary ruling did not proceed to judgment since the plaintiff in the main proceedings withdrew the action. (9) Nevertheless the Commission pursued the question of the legal position which it considered to be contrary to Community law.

13. On 6 July 1990 the Commission sent a letter of formal notice to the Spanish Government pursuant to Article 169 of the EEC Treaty. On 18 March 1991 it sent a reasoned opinion setting a time-limit of one month for adopting remedial measures, which was extended to 18 June 1991. Finally, on 27 July 1992, it brought the present action for infringement of the Treaty, which was received at the Court on 30 July 1992.

14. The pre-litigation procedure was largely occupied with discussions concerning the legal nature and consequences of the contested agreement. Even in the proceedings before the Court, there was further argument concerning its classification. The agreement however expired on 31 December 1990, that is before the issue of the reasoned opinion of 18 March 1991 and thus before the expiry of the time-limit set therein for adopting the remedial measures. The agreement cannot therefore be the subject of the present proceedings. (10)

15. Since the agreement represented a substantial part of the subject-matter of the dispute in the pre-litigation procedure, the question arises as to how far the subject-matter of the proceedings for infringement of the Treaty, (11) already defined in the pre-litigation procedure, agreed with that of the application. If the subject -matter of the application were even partially new, that could render the application inadmissible. (12)

16. The legal basis of the agreement in Article 107(4) and (5) of the LGSS, the agreement itself and its alleged incompatibility with Directive 77/62 and Article 30 of the EEC Treaty were essential elements of the letter of formal notice. Those aspects are also to be encountered in the reasoned opinion. It is true that the reasoned opinion also objects to Article 107(2) and (3) of the LGSS which, as interpreted by the Commission, lays down that supply contracts are to be awarded directly. On page 9 of that opinion there is a general complaint that the system of supplying pharmaceutical products to social security institutions in Spain is provided for in Article 107 of the LGSS, which is concerned with the award of contracts by the direct procedure. Whatever form of contract is adopted by the social security institution for the award of contracts, the provisions of the directive must be observed.

17. Finally in the reasoned opinion the alleged infringement of the Treaty is also worded in general terms: by requiring in the legislation on social security that the administration award public contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical specialities to social security institutions by a direct procedure, and with the social security administration deciding to award all such supplies to the National Association of Pharmaceutical Undertakings directly, and by failing to publish the contract notices in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 77/62 and Article 30 of the EEC Treaty. That wording is basically the same as that of the application.

18. The Commission did not make the agreement a central issue in its application and failed to mention it at all in the form of order sought. There is no reference to Article 30 of the EEC Treaty in the application, which in that respect causes no problem since the omission constitutes a restriction of the subject-matter. In its reply, (13) the Commission expressly states that Article 30 is not an issue in the proceedings.

19. In the result, the subject-matter of the dispute, limited by the reasoned opinion and substantiated by the application, must be regarded as the objection to the rules in Article 107 of the LGSS governing the award of contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products and specialities to social security institutions, as well as to the direct procedure.

2. Applicability of Directive 77/62

20. It is necessary to start from the premise that since 1 January 1991, that is the period after the expiry of the agreement which gave rise to the proceedings, all public contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products and specialities were awarded (with few exceptions (14)) to social security institutions by the direct procedure. As a rule the supply contracts were not published in the Official Journal of the European Communities. The period monitored by the Commission covers more than one and a half years, namely from 1 January 1991 to the end of July 1992 when the action was brought.

21. Public supply contracts, that is contracts for the supply of goods, (15) in writing and for consideration, concluded between a supplier and a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of the directive, come within the scope of Directive 77/62 only if the estimated value is not less than ECU 200 000. (16) Under Directive 88/295, the time-limit for the implementation of which expired in the case of the Kingdom of Spain on 1 March, (17) a lower value of ECU 130 000 applies for certain contracting authorities. (18)

22. Even if, in the absence of concrete evidence of individual contracts, the volume of contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products and specialities to social security institutions can only be estimated, it must be assumed that in view of the spread of social security institutions in Spain the volume of contracts is considerable. In view of the systematic failure to publish the contract notices in accordance with Article 9 of Directive 77/62, it must be assumed a contrario that supply contracts, which by reason of their value fall within the scope of the directive, were also awarded by the direct procedure.

23. Furthermore, Article 5(2) and (3) of the directive must be observed in estimating the value of the contract. In the case of regular or renewable supply contracts, a type of contract which in the nature of things is most likely to be concluded in the case of supplies to social security institutions, Article 5(2) provides that "the aggregate cost during the 12 months following first delivery or during the term of the contract where this is greater than 12 months must be taken as the basis". For supplies of the same kind Article 5(3) provides:

> "If a proposed purchase of supplies of the same type may lead to contracts being awarded at the same time in separate parts, the estimated value of the sum total of these parts must be taken as the basis ...".

24. It follows that contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products and specialities to social security institutions in principle fall within the scope of the directive.

25. The Spanish Government contended that the pharmaceutical market was highly regulated and that price controls were acceptable, if not mandatory, in the interests of public health care. The Spanish Government refers to the Community legislation on the approximation of provisions laid down by law, regulation or administrative action relating to proprietary medicinal products. (19) Furthermore it cites Directive 89/105/EEC (20) relating to the transparency of measures regulating the pricing of medicinal products for human use and their inclusion in the scope of national health insurance systems, the object of which is "to obtain an overall view of national pricing arrangements...". (21) The Spanish Government therefore considers that agreements fixing prices are unobjectionable from the point of view of Community law. In its view, the Spanish legislation is compatible with all the relevant Community legislation.

26. Those arguments obviously constitute the basis for the Spanish Government' s contention that

Directive 77/62 does not apply.

27. Provisions regulating products, market transparency and the fixing of prices have a different object from those governing the procedure for the award of public contracts. Even if all those provisions are intended to encourage the free movement of goods in the broadest sense, that does not mean that observance of the one exonerates from compliance with the other. The aim of the rules and their addressees are different. It is precisely because those different rules ultimately serve the same purpose that they are not mutually exclusive.

28. The rules on the marketing of products cannot therefore displace the rules governing the procedure for the award of public contracts. (22) The present case, however, is concerned only with observance of the latter. The obligations imposed by Directive 77/62 regarding publication are therefore applicable to the pharmaceutical products sector as well in so far as no exceptions apply.

3. Exceptions to Directive 77/62

29. In considering possible exceptions, it is necessary as a rule to start from the premise that they are granted only within the scope allowed by the directive, (23) since otherwise the object of the directive, namely to coordinate procedures for the award of supply contracts by introducing equal conditions of competition and ensuring transparency, (24) would be jeopardized.

30. The ninth recital in the preamble to Directive 77/62 reads as follows:

> "Provision must be made for exceptional cases where measures concerning the coordination of procedures may not necessarily be applied, but such cases must be expressly limited".

31. Accordingly it is necessary to consider whether the award of contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products by a direct procedure falls within the exceptions provided for in the directive.

32. Article 2(2) of Directive 77/62 provides that the directive is not to apply to certain awarding bodies, namely bodies which administer transport services, (25) and bodies which administer water, energy and telecommunications services. (26) Moreover, Article 2(2)(c) of Directive 77/62, as amended by Directive 88/295, provides for an exception in respect of supplies which are declared secret or when their delivery must be accompanied by special security measures. The exceptions in Article 2 of the directive are certainly not applicable in the present case. Nor is Article 3 which excludes from the scope of the directive public contracts governed by procedural rules which are different and are awarded pursuant to an international agreement (27) or to the specific procedures of an international organization. (28)

33. Article 6 of Directive 77/62 lists the circumstances in which a contracting authority may award a supply contract without observing an "open procedure" (29) or a "restricted procedure". (30) Thus, in those circumstances which are described in detail, the award of a supply contract by the direct procedure is possible with the result that publication of the invitation to tender pursuant to Article 9(1) of the directive may be dispensed with.

34. The Spanish Government considers that Article 6(1)(b) and (d) are both relevant. According to Article 6(1)(b) supply contracts may be awarded by the direct procedure "when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with protection of exclusive rights, the goods supplied may be manufactured or delivered only by a particular supplier".

35. The Spanish Government takes the view that exclusive rights often have to be observed in the pharmaceutical products sector, which excludes a choice between various manufacturers from the outset. A doctor' s freedom of prescription, which, moreover, is consistent with Community law, (31) entails that certain pharmaceutical products should be obtainable from the manufacturers who hold exclusive rights to them. (32)

36. It is undisputed that exclusive rights are to be encountered on the market in medicinal products, even if they are not so common. However, the protection of exclusive rights, such as registered trade marks or marketing licences, may justify the award of a contract by the direct procedure only if the product "may be manufactured or delivered only by a particular supplier (33)". (34) The protection of exclusive rights in the market in medicinal products can in no way go so far as to exclude competition in practically all products. The Spanish Government gives that impression when it seeks to justify the systematic failure to publish public supply contract notices in the Official Journal of the European Communities by reference to the protection of exclusive rights. That is not in keeping with the actual facts, since the market in pharmaceutical products is very much a competitive market.

37. The extent to which medicinal products may, on account of the protection of exclusive rights, be obtained only from one manufacturer in relation to the total needs of the social security institutions cannot be determined here in the absence of specific data. It is clear, however, that it cannot cover all pharmaceutical products and specialities and that it is for the Member State which relies on the exception to adduce grounds.

38. In the result, Article 6(1)(b) may be relied on for at most only a part of the supply contracts for pharmaceutical products, to be specified by the Member State concerned.

39. So far as concerns freedom to prescribe, it may not in any way be called into question. However, that principle, as the Commission has rightly argued, must be viewed separately from meeting in broad terms the needs of a hospital pharmacy. If in particular cases a medicinal product is prescribed which is not in stock, there are usually reasons of extreme urgency within the meaning of Article 6(1)(d) of the directive.

40. Article 6(1)(d) of the directive allows the award of contracts by the direct procedure "in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable by the contracting authorities, the time-limit laid down in the procedures covered by Article 4(1) and (2) (35) cannot be kept".

41. All the conditions laid down in the provision must be met cumulatively in order to justify an exception. That was decided by the Court in relation to the corresponding provision in Directive 71/305/EEC (36) on the coordination of procedures for the award for public works contracts. (37)

42. In cases in which a medical prescription cannot be satisfied at once because the prescribed medicinal product is not in stock in the pharmacy concerned, the contracting authority can no doubt rely on Article 6(1)(d). In the case of such individual orders, the value of the supply contract is generally so small that it will not fall within the scope of the directive. Article 6(1)(d) cannot therefore normally be relied upon to justify the procedure for the award of public contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products, to which the Commission has objected.

4. The legal position in Spain in relation to the award of public supply contracts for pharmaceutical products and specialities by social security institutions

43. The legal basis for breach of the duty regarding publication pursuant to Directive 77/62 is Article 107 of the LGSS in conjunction with Article 2(3) and (8) of the LCE and the corresponding implementing provisions. Article 2(3) of the LCE expressly excludes from the scope of the Law transactions in relation to goods or rights, dealings in which are regulated by law, or to products which are controlled, subject to a monopoly or prohibited. Article 2(8), on the other hand, refers to further exceptions from the general provisions which may be laid down by law. Article 107 of the LGSS extends the possibility of exemption in the case of supply contracts for social security institutions.

44. Article 2(3) and (8) of the LCE and Article 2(3) and (8) of the corresponding implementing regulation have already been discussed in Case C-71/92. In its judgment of 17 November 1993, the Court held that by maintaining those provisions in force the Kingdom of Spain had failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 77/62, which is at issue in this case, and under Directive 71/305. In the grounds of the judgment, the Court refers to the fact that Articles 2(2) and 3 of Directive 77/62, which list the public supply contracts exempted from the directive, did not define the exceptions with regard to the legal nature of the products in question, as the Spanish Government has done. (38)

45. The technique of providing for exceptions (39) in relation to products and by reference to legislation (40) is not compatible with the provisions of Community law in Directive 77/62. In so far as Article 2(3) and (8) of the LCE (41) are incompatible with Community law, the same must be true of Article 107 of the LGSS as a supplement to the statutory reference in Article 2(8).

46. Admittedly, the Spanish Government pleads in its defence that that provision does not preclude the application of Directive 77/62. In its observations in Case C-71/92, (42) however, it had already conceded that the basic provisions on public supply contracts exclude from their scope the market for medicinal products.

47. Finally it need not be decided whether the statutory rules of the Member State mandatorily exclude the general provisions on the publication of invitations to tender and, consequently, Directive 77/62, or whether they offer only the possibility of a divergent procedure beyond the exceptions provided for in Directive 77/62, since any exceptions, including those of an optional nature, which are not covered by the directive are incompatible with it.

48. Article 107(2) of the LGSS, which lays down that "the social security authority shall purchase directly from the centres of production those pharmaceutical products which are to be used in its institutions, whether open or closed,...", is contrary to Community law even if it imposes no obligation, but merely makes it possible, to award a contract by the direct procedure.

Costs

49. Pursuant to Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for.

C ° Conclusion

50. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court:

(1) Declare that,

° by requiring in the legislation on social security that the administration award public contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products and specialities to social security institutions by a direct procedure; and

° by awarding nearly all supply contracts directly, so that no contract notice was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 77/62/EEC;

(2) Order the Kingdom of Spain to pay the costs.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Gulmann delivered on 18 November 1993.
Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic.
Action for failure to fulfil obligations - Public works contracts - Inadmissibility.
Case C-296/92.

Mr President,

1. In bringing these proceedings the Commission is seeking a declaration that the Italian Republic has failed to comply with its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts. (1) It claims that Italy breached its obligations by allowing the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno to conclude a contract concerning the construction of a section of rapid transit highway without putting the work out to public tender and without publishing a notice of invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities and "by not taking steps to preclude at the outset the legal effects thereof which infringe Community law".

2. The section of road in question was part of the "Ascoli - Mare" highway which was to link the town of Ascoli Piceno, which is the capital of the province of the same name and lies some 25 km from the Adriatic coast, with the A14 motorway and the national highway No 16, which runs along the coast, and with the coastal town of San Benedetto del Tronto.

The first sections of the highway, stages I, II and III, and the first part of stage IV were the subject of a restricted tendering procedure and were completed at the beginning of the 1970s. The work for stage IV was awarded to the undertaking Rozzi Costantino. Stage IV, which covered inter alia the link with the A14 motorway and national highway No 16, was subsequently extended by so-called supplementary projects entailing inter alia an extension of the original highway.

3. These proceedings concern the "11th and 12th supplementary projects" which were ultimately treated as a joint project. The project related to an extension of the highway. The object was to overcome the physical barriers represented by national highway No 16 and the railway line between Bologna and Lecce and thus to create a good connection between the port of San Benedetto on the one hand and the main traffic arteries and Ascoli Piceno' s industrial area on the other. The works included the construction of a viaduct over the railway line between Bologna and Lecce. The section of road was only a few kilometres and was to join up the section covered by the 10th supplementary project and a road towards San Benedetto which was being built at the same time by the Commune of Ascoli Piceno.

4. It has been established in these proceedings that the execution of the first ten supplementary projects in stage IV was allocated to the same undertaking which had carried out the original stage IV, that is to say the undertaking Rozzi Costantino.

The 11th and 12th supplementary projects had been approved by the Agenzia per la Promozione dello Sviluppo del Mezzogiorno, which transferred responsibility for the implementation of the project to the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno. On 21 May 1990, without publishing a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the latter concluded a private contract with Rozzi Costantino to carry out the project for a contract amount of some LIT 36 000 million.

The Italian Government has stated, moreover, that the construction of the further extension to San Benedetto of the highway in question here, which, as mentioned above, was the responsibility of the Commune of Ascoli Piceno and not the provincial administration, was also awarded to Rozzi Costantino.

5. The circumstances surrounding the construction of the highway "Ascoli -Mare" came to the attention of the Commission which decided to open Article 169 proceedings against Italy which it confined to the 11th and 12th supplementary projects. The Commission sent its letter of formal notice to the Italian Government on 17 January 1991.

6. It is not disputed in these proceedings that the project at issue is covered by Directive 71/305.

It is also common ground that the procedure applied in awarding the contracts is objectively in breach of the directive unless the derogation under Article 9(b) of the directive applies, that is to say unless the project relates to works which "for technical... reasons ... may only be carried out by a particular contractor".

7. It would have been fairly simple to take a position on the case if the only issue had been whether or not the conditions under Article 9(b) were met.

However, the Italian Government contends that the Commission has formulated its claims in such a way as to seek judgment against the Italian Republic not for the provincial administration' s conduct contrary to the directive but for failing to take steps against that conduct, that is to say for breach of its supervisory obligation.

The Italian Government denies that it failed to fulfil its supervisory obligation with regard to the provincial administration and that is the fundamental basis of its case. Only in the alternative does it contend that the conditions under Article 9(b) were met.

8. It must be observed straightaway that the formulation of the Commission' s claims has given rise to certain procedural problems in this case.

In its defence the Italian Government concentrated on demonstrating that it had not failed to comply with its supervisory obligations. It did indeed mention that non-compliance with obligations under the directive might be justified under Article 9(b) but its treatment of that provision showed that it primarily believed that it could rely on that provision to show that it was far from obvious in the present situation that there had been a breach of the directive. The Italian Government did not submit detailed argument on whether the conditions under Article 9(b) were met.

In its reply the Commission concentrated on the one hand on asserting that according to the consistent case-law of the Court, Member States may be held liable on an objective basis for conduct contrary to directives of State, regional and local bodies, and on the other on showing that the Italian Republic had not merely allowed the conduct of the provisional administration which was contrary to the directive but had also failed to take steps subsequently in order to remove the unlawful legal effects of that conduct.

It was not until its rejoinder that the Italian Government developed substantive arguments concerning the issue whether the conditions under Article 9(b) were met, submitting in that connection working drawings and the like.

9. The Commission sought leave from the Court to submit a new document in order to comment on the working drawings and the like that had been submitted. Leave was granted and the Commission submitted a document, accompanied by a declaration from an expert it had consulted, which disputed that the conditions under Article 9(b) were met.

In that document the Commission further contended that the working drawings and the like which had been submitted should be regarded as new pleas in law which pursuant to Article 42 of the Rules of Procedure could not be introduced.

10. I do not consider that the Court should refrain on the basis of Article 42 of the Rules of Procedure from taking account of the views and information submitted by the Italian Government in its rejoinder concerning the application of Article 9(b).

Article 9(b) was invoked by the Italian Government both in its responses to the Commission' s letters in the administrative procedure and in its defence.

It is certainly in principle questionable for substantive argument concerning the issue of the application of Article 9(b) to be submitted for the first time in the rejoinder but that is at least in part attributable to the content of the form of order sought by the Commission. Moreover, the Commission has had a full opportunity to submit its views in the light of the new views and information in the rejoinder and its procedural rights have therefore not actually been prejudiced.

11. I consider it appropriate to go on to consider first whether the provincial administration could refrain on the basis of Article 9(b) of the directive from putting the contract out to tender and publishing a notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

The fundamental precondition for any judgment being given against the Italian Republic is that the provincial administration acted in breach of the directive.

12. The question is whether the construction of the section of highway in question, and in particular the viaduct over the railway line, involved works which "for technical... reasons... may only be carried out by a particular contractor", that is to say in the present case the contractor responsible for construction of the section of motorway that was to be extended by the project at issue here (the section covered by the 10th supplementary project).

13. In that connection the Italian Government has stated that is apparent from the working drawings submitted that there were such "technical reasons" in the present case in so far as it was impossible:

- to complete the work covered by the 10th supplementary project before certain of the structures covered by the project at issue were put in place,

- to begin work at two different places because of the very cramped nature of the site of the works, and

- to carry out the work in progress separately from the work at issue here because of the close structural connection of the foundations.

14. The Commission denies that those circumstances in themselves reveal technical reasons making it possible to award the work only to the contractor for the section of road covered by the 10th supplementary project.

15. It is apparent from the report of the expert consulted by the Commission - a French engineer - that it was certainly necessary on the basis of the factors referred to by the Italian Government to coordinate the timing and placing of the works at issue in this case with the work in progress but that such coordination would also have to be carried out even if all those works were allocated to the same undertaking and that accordingly there are no "technical reasons" to justify the choice made by the Italian awarding authority in this instance.

16. It does not seem to me that the Italian Government has shifted the burden of proof which, according to the consistent case-law of the Court, (2) is incumbent on it in order for the derogation to apply.

The arguments put forward by the Italian Government were confined to a fairly abstract level. Notwithstanding the production of the working drawings, it has failed to produce cogent evidence of the alleged serious difficulties involved in leaving the construction of the section of highway at issue to an undertaking other than that responsible for the construction of the section of road covered by the 10th supplementary project. It also seems implausible that such serious difficulties exist in the light of the views expressed in the report submitted on behalf of the Commission.

Nor may the fact be altogether overlooked, in my view, that the Italian Government itself in its defence expressed certain doubts as to whether the conditions for the application of Article 9(b) were met.

17. I therefore consider that it may be presumed that, as the Commission has alleged, the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno acted in breach of Directive 71/305.

18. The question is, however, whether judgment may be given against the Italian Republic in respect of that conduct in view of the fact that in the terms of the form of order sought the Italian Republic is charged with having acted in breach of the directive "by allowing" the conduct of the provincial administration which is contrary to the directive "by not taking steps to preclude at the outset the legal effects thereof which infringe Community law".

19. It is not quite clear to me why the Commission formulated its claims in those terms. The formulation is surprising in view of the fact that it is established under the Court' s case-law that a Member State may be found guilty on the basis of objective factors of infringement of the directive irrespective of what State, regional or local body has failed to comply with the rules in the directive. (3)

20. The Court may of course consider that it would be appropriate to hold that a general duty applies for individual Member States as such to ensure in all cases that State, regional and local authorities comply with the directive in connection with their public works and that a Member State may be held to have breached the Treaty whenever it is objectively found that it has failed to comply with its supervisory obligation because action has been taken which is contrary to the directive.

However, that would entail a legal position corresponding to that whereby the Commission reduces the form of order sought by it to a claim that the Member State has breached its obligations under Community law in so far as one of its authorities has acted in breach of the directive.

On that basis, whether the Commission formulated its claim in one manner or another would be immaterial.

21. Quite apart from the fact that claims must naturally be construed on the basis of their terms, the procedural problems which have arisen in this case point up the importance of the Court requiring the Commission' s claims to be precise.

22. For those reasons and in view of the pleadings exchanged and the oral procedure, I consider that the claims must necessarily be construed as seeking judgment against the Italian Government not for the fact that the provincial administration had acted in breach of the directive but for the fact that that was allowed by the Italian Government and that the latter did not take any steps to stop it.

No consideration has been given in these proceedings to the question what authorities in this instance allowed the provincial administration' s conduct and failed to take steps to stop it. It is unnecessary to examine that question further. The form of order sought by the Commission necessarily presupposes that there exist authorities which have such supervisory obligations and which, by the nature of the case, must be State authorities.

23. Judgment against the Member State is therefore conditional on it being established that there were State authorities which allowed the conduct of the provincial administration and failed to take steps to stop it.

The Commission must demonstrate that that was the case.

As mentioned above, the Italian Government denies that State authorities accepted that conduct and that there was in fact any possibility of taking steps against it. It points out that its attention was first drawn to that conduct by the Commission in January 1991, eight months after the contract had been awarded to the undertaking in question, and it had no possibility under Italian law to take appropriate steps in that regard.

24. On that basis I consider that I must propose that the Court dismiss the case against the Italian Republic.

The Commission has failed to demonstrate that the Italian Government or other State authorities expressly or tacitly allowed the conduct of the provincial administration and it has not produced cogent evidence that the Italian Government or other State authorities had any real possibility of subsequently taking steps to remedy the situation.

Conclusion

25. On those grounds I propose that the Court dismiss the case against the Italian Republic and order the Commission to pay the costs.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Gulmann delivered on 14 July 1993.
Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic.
Concession for the lottery computerization system.
Case C-272/91.

Mr President,

1. In Italy only the State may conduct lotteries. (1) In November 1990 the Italian Finance Ministry published a contract notice for the concession for the computerization of the Italian Lotto. The right to tender was reserved to bodies, companies, consortia and groupings the majority of whose capital, considered individually or in aggregate, was held by the public sector. In these proceedings the Commission has claimed that Italy thereby failed to comply with its obligations under Articles 30, 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty and Articles 17 to 25 of Council Directive 77/62/EEC coordinating procedures for the award of public-supply contracts, (2) as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC. (3)

The contract notice was published only in the Italian press. On that basis the Commission has also claimed that Italy has failed to comply with its obligations under Article 9(1), (2) and (4) of Directive 77/62 by failing to publish the contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities and by failing to make known at the beginning of 1990 by means of an indicative notice the total procurement by product area of which the estimated value was equal to or greater than ECU 750 000 and which the Finance Ministry envisaged awarding in 1990.

2. The concession was awarded to the Lottomatica consortium by a decree of the Finance Minister of 14 June 1991 and the contract with Lottomatica was concluded on 22 November 1991. On 31 January 1992 the President of the Court of Justice made an order for interim measures under Article 186 of the Treaty requiring Italy to suspend the legal effect of the decree and performance of the contract. (4) The Italian Government has stated that in November 1992 the Finance Minister issued a decree suspending the implementation of the concession.

The Italian Lotto and the key features of the concession

3. In his Order of 31 January 1992 the President of the Court of Justice gave the following description of the Lotto and the key features of the concession. (5)

4. "It is apparent from the documents before the Court that the lottery is a game of chance operated by the Autonomous State Monopolies Administration (' the Administration'), an administrative body attached to the Ministry of Finance. The system involves players betting on one or more numbers with a view to weekly draws. The stakes are taken at authorized collection points (in particular, tobacconists) and there is a draw every Saturday in each of the ten lottery areas (ruote) into which Italy is subdivided. A bet may be entered either in the draw for the area in which the relevant collection point is situated or in the draw for all the areas. The amount of the winnings is determined, by reference in particular to the stake, in accordance with a formula laid down by Italian legislation, and winnings are payable at the collection point or, if they exceed a certain sum, at the local offices of the Ministry of Finance.

The lottery computerization system which was the subject of the contract comprised, according to the invitation to tender, premises, supplies, equipment, maintenance, operation, transmission of data and everything else necessary for running the lottery.

The invitation to tender provided that the concession was for nine years only and that when it expired the entire computerized system, including premises, apparatus, terminals at collection points, equipment, structures, programs, records and everything else necessary for operating and managing the system was to be handed over without charge for the exclusive use of the Administration.

It specified that the concession comprised three phases: in the first phase the equipment was to be supplied, installed and tested in parallel with the manual system, at the end of which the computerized system was to become operational in one lottery area; in the second phase the system was to be extended to all the lottery areas; and finally in the third, fully operational, phase the number of collection points was to be progressively increased. Tenders had to indicate the time within which each phase would be completed.

The computerization system concessionaire would receive no remuneration during the first phase, but during the second and third phases would receive a percentage of the gross receipts from automatically recorded bets. That percentage was to be indicated in the tender.

The invitation to tender also specified economic and technical criteria for the selection of bodies or undertakings wishing to submit tenders.

The invitation reserved the right to tender to bodies, companies or consortia and groups the majority of whose capital, considered individually or in aggregate, was held by the public sector. The Ministry of Finance was to take into account the particular nature and importance of the computerized operation of the lottery which, as a State monopoly operated for maximum returns, required special guarantees and absolute reliability and security for the setting-up and operation of the system."

The infringement of Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty

5. The Commission claims that the condition in the invitation to tender that only companies, consortia or groupings the majority of whose capital is owned by the public sector can take part in the procedure corresponds to the condition which was held to be contrary to the Treaty in the judgment of the Court of Justice of 5 December 1989 in Case C-3/88 Commission v Italy. (6)

6. In that judgment the Court ruled on the compatibility with Community law of a number of Italian legislative provisions on the introduction of electronic data-processing systems in the public administration in the fields of taxation, health, agriculture and property registers. Under those provisions, only companies in which either the whole or a majority of the shares were held directly or indirectly by the State or the public sector could conclude agreements with the Italian State for the computerization of the administration. Those provisions covered both the development of the data-processing systems, their programming and operation and the provision of the necessary equipment and supplies. The Court held that those provisions were incompatible with Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty and stated:

> "... the principle of equal treatment, of which Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty embody specific instances, prohibits not only overt discrimination by reason of nationality but also all covert forms of discrimination which, by application of other criteria of differentiation, lead in fact to the same result...", and
> "... Although the laws and decree-laws in issue apply without distinction to all companies, whether of Italian or foreign nationality, they essentially favour Italian companies. As the Commission has pointed out, without being contradicted by the Italian Government, there are at present no data-processing companies from other Member States all or the majority of whose shares are in Italian public ownership". (7)

7. The Italian Government does not deny that the content of the condition at issue in the invitation to tender corresponds to the legislative provisions which the Court held to be contrary to the Treaty in its judgment in Case C-3/88. (8) But it contends that there is a decisive difference between the invitation to tender in question and those in Case C-3/88. It points out that these proceedings relate to a concession in which public authority is conferred on the concessionaire, namely part of the power to conduct the lottery which by statute is conferred on the Amministrazione Autonoma dei Monopoli di Stato (Autonomous State Monopolies Administration ° AAMS).

Does the concession relate to the power to conduct the lottery?

8. The Italian Government claims that the invitation to tender in question concerns:

° a concession under which a concessionaire is entrusted with providing a service on behalf of the public administration, namely part of the lottery (that is to say that the concessionaire acts as the provider of services in the public administration' s stead, and that accordingly, contrary to what the Commission contends, it did not relate to:

° an agreement for the provision of services for the public administration, namely the development of software and the introduction and operation of a computerized system (that is to say that the public administration is the recipient of a service) and the supply of goods to the public administration, namely the hardware and any basic software necessary for the computerization of the lottery.

9. In support of its claims the Italian Government has stated that the legal relationship envisaged by the invitation to tender is characterized by a number of features typical of a concession, namely:

° the concessionaire is to be responsible for the operation of the computerized system for a period of nine years;

° the remuneration is fixed as a percentage of the gross revenue from the lottery stakes, and

° Article 7 of the special conditions for the tender provides that everything necessary for operating the computerized system is to be handed over without charge to the State on the expiry of the nine-year concession. (9)

On that basis the Italian Government claims that the agreement in question does not relate to the transfer of goods to the public administration in return for a price corresponding to their value, nor does it relate to the carrying out of services for the public administration or for payment therefor.

10. The Italian Government is probably right in saying that the fact that the consideration is linked to the revenue from exploiting the construction or carrying out the services in question is to be regarded as a typical and possibly necessary component of a concession. (10) In other words, the decisive criterion for the existence of a concession for a public service is whether the concessionaire is given the right to exploit the computerized system to conduct lotteries and to obtain therefrom the consideration for his work. On the other hand, if it is found that the power to conduct lotteries is retained by the Italian State, the setting up and operation of the computerized system must be regarded as services provided to the Italian State in return for consideration which, irrespective of the precise way in which it is calculated, is provided by the State.

11. However the parties' differing views of how the legal relationship in question is to be characterized is not conclusive for deciding whether there has been a breach of Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty. As far as can be seen, the Italian Government is not claiming that the invitation to tender falls outside the scope of those provisions. The explanation for that is that it regards the concession in question as a concession for provision of a public service. Whether the legal relationship is to be characterized as a concession for the provision of a public service, namely the conduct of a lottery, or as an agreement for the performance of services for the public administration, namely the setting up and operation of a computerized system, the condition contained in the invitation to tender will be incompatible with the rules of the Treaty unless that invitation is to be construed as entailing the transfer of public authority.

12. To my mind, however, a correct analysis of the legal relationship between the Italian authorities and the concessionaire shows that the view that the invitation relates to the transfer of the power to conduct a lottery is untenable. (11) Even after the introduction of the computerized system it will be the Italian State which conducts the lottery. In my view it is still the public administration which takes all the major decisions concerning the conduct of the lottery and which receives the revenue therefrom, out of which it pays the agreed consideration to the concessionaire. The invitation to tender therefore concerns not a concession of the power to conduct the lottery but an agreement to carry out services for and the supply of goods to the public administration for the purposes of the administration' s conduct of the lottery. The correctness of this view is borne out by the following analysis of the Italian Government' s arguments concerning the question whether there is a transfer of the power to exercise official authority.

Is there a transfer of the power to exercise official authority?

13. The Italian Government claims that the invitation to tender relates to the transfer of public authority and thus falls under Articles 55 and 66 of the Treaty under which the Treaty provisions on the right of establishment and free movement of services do not apply to activities which are connected, even occasionally, with the exercise of official authority.

14. In Case C-3/88 the Italian Government also maintained that the activities in connection with the operation of the data-processing systems in question were, in view of their confidential nature, connected with the exercise of official authority and thus, pursuant to Articles 55 and 66 of the Treaty, could fall outside the scope of the Treaty rules on the right of establishment and the free movement of services.

The Court rejected that argument stating that the exceptions set out in the Treaty must be restricted to activities "which in themselves involve a direct and specific connection with the exercise of official authority" and that that did not apply in that instance since the activities in question, which concerned the design, programming and operation of data-processing systems, were of a technical nature and thus unrelated to the exercise of official authority. (12)

15. The invitation to tender at issue in these proceedings concerns, as mentioned above, the setting up and operation of a system for computerizing the Italian lottery. Computerization undoubtedly entails fundamental changes to the manner in which the lottery has hitherto been conducted. According to point 1 of the technical programme forming part of the special specifications, the invitation covers: "the premises to house the processing centre in each lottery area, the area committee, the Central Processing Office, the technical and administrative management of the company; transmission lines; the terminals which are to be installed at the collection centres; the apparatus for the processing and transmission of data; software which must be developed by the company; the operation of the whole system for nine years; support in the form of materials and services for the public administration which grants the concession for everything relating to the lottery; everything else that is necessary for the conduct of the lottery".

16. The Italian Government has claimed that exercise of official authority is being entrusted to the concessionaire for all stages of the lottery and in support of that view it has pointed in particular to a number of components of the technical programme.

17. I do not consider that the Italian Government' s arguments are cogent. It is important to bear in mind that the fact that there is a transfer to private persons of duties which are by statute reserved to the public administration is not synonymous with the transfer of activities relating to the exercise of official authority. I consider that the tasks which are to be carried out by the concessionaire in connection with the computerization of the lottery are of a technical nature in the same way as was found in Case C-3/88.

Even if the Court were to hold that the tasks in question go further than mere activities of a technical nature, I consider that they do not in any event constitute tasks which can reasonably be described as being connected with the exercise of official authority within the meaning of the Treaty. It is appropriate to point out in this connection that the Court has held that Articles 55 and 66 are derogations from the fundamental principle in the Treaty that there should be no discrimination on grounds of nationality and they must therefore be interpreted in a manner which limits their scope to what is strictly necessary in order to safeguard the interests which they allow the Member States to protect. (13)

18. The Italian Government states first that in connection with the receipt of stake money it is the computerized system for which the concessionaire is responsible which is to receive stakes and register them. It maintains that in this stage the concessionaire has certain official supervisory powers. On the one hand the concessionaire must take steps in order to "prevent a collector from removing a certain number of registrations concerning stakes that have been accepted but not sent to the processing centres" in each lottery area (Centri di elaborazione di zona) which are centres set up and administered by the concessionaire. On the other the concessionaire must monitor, prevent and refuse stakes that would give entitlement to prizes that cannot be paid.

But it is apparent from the technical programme, in my view, that even after the installation of the computerized system it will be the individual lottery collectors (14) and not the concessionaire who are responsible for receiving stakes. The concessionaire is responsible for installing terminals for the agents and developing and installing the necessary software. On the other hand it is the lottery agents who are to operate those terminals. It is apparent from point 4.1 of the technical programme that lottery agents, by means of the data-processing equipment placed at their disposal, are to be able to monitor, correct, authorize and register stakes received and finally to issue the receipt which the machines will then produce. If the receipt is defective or the lottery agent has otherwise made a mistake, the system must be devised in such a way that the agent can cancel the stake registered and begin again from the beginning.

The concessionaire must also take steps to ensure that the system is set up and programmed in such a way that the agents cannot remove registrations of stakes that have been received before they are transmitted to the processing centres in each area (see point 4.1 of the technical programme) and that stakes that will give entitlement to prizes which cannot be paid are refused (see Article 5(3) in the implementing regulation). It is difficult to construe those provisions as giving the concessionaire the task of actually exercising supervision over the lottery agents in order to ensure that those points are carried out.

19. Secondly the Italian Government has stated that in connection with the draws and decisions on the winning coupons the concessionaire has on the one hand a public monitoring role since the Central Processing Office (Ufficio centrale di elaborazione) in Rome, which is under the authority of the concessionaire, must carry out controls on the result of the draws at the request of the Area Committees (Commissioni di zona), which are State bodies, (15) and on the other hand has a public task of verification since the concessionaire determines which are the winning coupons and in that respect is subject only to the control of the Area Committees.

I consider that the following details are apparent from closer examination of the relevant sections of the technical programme: the registrations of the stakes effected by the lottery agents are notified to the processing centres in each area. These processing centres check that the registrations received are correct and inform the Area Committee in question of the stakes that cannot be accepted. (16) The draws are carried out by the Draw Committees (Commissioni di estrazione) which are State bodies (17) and are notified to the Central Processing Office in Rome which draws up a comprehensive list of the draws in each area which it transmits to the Area Committees through the processing centres in each area which also send the list to the individual lottery agents. On the basis of the registrations of the stakes deposited and the registrations of the draws carried out the processing centres in question determine which coupons have won prizes (see point 4.6 of the technical programme). The list of the winning coupons is transmitted to the Area Commission for approval. (18) Pursuant to point 4.4 of the technical programme the Area Committee is to retain the "data-processing diskettes concerning the stakes" and on that basis, if it considers it necessary, it may request inter alia the Central Processing Office to carry out a check.

Accordingly it can be seen that it is the Area Committee in question and not the concessionaire which is primarily responsible for carrying out checks on the result of the draws and to ensure that the list of winning coupons is correct. The task of the concessionaire is to operate the computerized system on the basis of the data received and thus to provide technical assistance to the Area Committees.

20. Thirdly the Italian Government maintains that the concessionaire has a number of public powers in connection with the payment of winnings since the concessionaire must ensure that the winning coupons are genuine and certify that they are winning coupons and that the winnings have not yet been paid out. The Italian Government has stated that it is only after the concessionaire has exercised those powers to determine, confirm and certify the winning coupons that the State bodies intervene to approve payment of the winnings.

It is true that point 4.10, section 5, of the technical programme concerning winnings to be paid out by the Direzione Generale Monopoli di Stato (19) provides that "the company shall ensure that the coupons which are handed in for payment are genuine and certify that those coupons have won prizes and that the prizes have not yet been paid out. In this connection the Central Processing Office must be in possession of data concerning all the winning coupons and the corresponding payments".

But I consider that these requirements too merely relate to the functions that the computerized system must be capable of carrying out and which are intended to enable the concessionaire to offer assistance which is essentially of a technical nature. As the Italian Government itself has pointed out, ultimately it is still the public administration which sanctions and pays out the prizes.

21. The Italian Government has further observed that point 1 of the technical programme states that the tender also covers "everything else that is necessary for the conduct of the lottery" which in its view, indicates that the concessionaire is to be given independent powers to undertake anything he considers necessary in order to operate the concession. But I do not believe that that provision by itself can give the concessionaire the right to exercise official authority. That provision precisely just gives the concessionaire the right and obligation to undertake everything that is necessary in order to operate the concession and must therefore lie within the framework of that concession.

22. The Italian Government has further pointed out that Article 2(2) of Law No 528 regarding the various stages of the lottery refers to a "unitary system", which, it maintains, signifies that separate legal operations cannot be carried out and accordingly there must be a transfer of part of public powers. I find it difficult to see why the fact that the lottery is a unitary system in itself should show that there is a transfer of official authority. The Italian Government itself maintains precisely that the concession only entails the transfer of part of the powers to hold the lottery which are conferred by law on the AAMS and that partial transfer may, notwithstanding the unitary nature of the system, very well be confined to solely tasks of a technical nature.

23. Finally the Italian Government has stated that the purpose of the concession is to increase and maximise tax revenue from the lottery and that the transfer of a public power to conduct the lottery also relates to the levying of tax.

It should be noted in this respect that voluntary payments made by individuals in order to take part in the lottery are not the levying of tax even if the revenue from the lottery is entered in the State budget under the heading of tax revenue. No weight therefore attaches to the Italian Government' s assertion that there is on this basis exercise of official authority.

24. In the light of the foregoing I believe I may conclude that even after the computerization of the lottery it will be the public administration which conducts the lottery and thereby exploits the computerized system since the key tasks and actual responsibility for the lottery will continue to be a matter for public bodies and that the tasks that are assigned to the concessionaire are of a technical nature and appear, moreover, in all essential respects to correspond to those in Case C-3/88, namely activities "which concern the design, programming and operation of data-processing systems". Hence I conclude that the tender for the computerization of the lottery does not involve the transfer of official authority within the meaning of Articles 55 and 66 of the Treaty.

25. Against that background I would propose that the Court hold that the facts at issue constitute an infringement of Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty.

The question of the infringement of Article 30 of the Treaty

26. The Commission has stated that the tender covers the supply of various goods that are necessary to implement the computerization of the lottery, in particular hardware and pre-existing software. (20) On that basis it claimed that the situation at issue entails serious interference in trade in those goods and therefore constitutes a measure having equivalent effect to a quantitative restriction which is prohibited under Article 30 of the Treaty.

The Commission claims in particular that the condition in dispute is a measure that confines public purchasing to national undertakings alone and it points inter alia to the fact that in each of the three consortia which met the condition at issue and were invited to tender there were member companies that themselves produced data-processing systems. The Commission considers that it may therefore be assumed that the consortium that was awarded the concession would solely use goods produced by companies within that consortium. In its view, therefore, there is also covert discrimination on grounds of nationality within the meaning of Article 30 of the Treaty. (21)

The Commission believes that its views are borne out by the judgment of the Court in Case C-21/88 Du Pont de Nemours (22) according to which Article 30 of the Treaty precludes national rules which reserve a proportion of public-supply contracts to undertakings which have production units in certain parts of national territory. (23)

27. The Italian Government denies that the condition in dispute constitutes a breach of Article 30 of the Treaty. It claims that the tender does entail the transfer of powers to a concessionaire who acts within his own autonomous area in order to achieve the result which is the object of the concession and that consequently there is no State measure within the meaning of Article 30, and that the concessionaire is at liberty to buy national or imported goods and that consequently there is no barrier to trade. It asserts that no reliance can be placed on the Commission' s arguments as to the composition of the consortium selected by the contracting authority. Finally it contends that the judgment of the Court in Du Pont de Nemours is not relevant since that case related to reserving purchases to certain national undertakings while this case relates to a condition affecting the choice of concessionaire.

28. It is not altogether easy to take a position on the Commission' s claims on this point.

29. The Commission is justified in referring to the judgment in Du Pont de Nemours in so far as it may be inferred therefrom that Article 30 applies even when the measures in question only limit the right to supply public authorities to certain ° but not all ° national undertakings. But that judgment cannot serve as a basis, as the Commission claims, for a solution of the actual problem in this case, that is whether the condition at issue entails the reservation of the supply of the necessary goods to national undertakings.

30. It may be appropriate to illustrate the problem by the following hypothetical example: the authorities in a Member State issue an invitation to tender for the construction of a bridge. Under the tendering conditions, only consortia of undertakings the majority of whose capital is owned by the State in question may submit tenders. The tendering conditions do not contain any requirement that the consortium should include cement and steel producers or that cement and steel produced in the State in question must be used. Three consortia submit tenders. They all meet the condition as to majority State ownership. The contract is awarded to the only one of the tendering consortia which includes national undertakings producing cement and steel.

It is possible that it might be held in that situation that there was not merely an infringement of Article 59 of the Treaty but also an infringement of Article 30. But in that case that infringement would not be a consequence of the aforesaid restriction in the tendering conditions. On the other hand an infringement might exist if it can be established that the contracting authorities, in awarding the contract to the consortium in question, were influenced by the fact that that consortium included companies which could and perhaps even would be obliged to supply nationally produced cement and steel for the production of the bridge. A finding of such an infringement would hinge on an actual assessment of the evidence which would certainly not be altogether easy.

31. Prompted by a question from the Italian Government which found the Commission' s arguments unclear, the Commission stressed in its reply that it is claiming that the infringement of Article 30 is a consequence of the condition at issue. But as is apparent from my hypothetical example, there is no causal connection between a condition that the companies taking part must be owned by the public sector and the factual circumstance that the contract is awarded to companies which themselves produce the necessary products.

In my view, the Commission' s claim can be dismissed for that reason alone.

32. Even if the Court were to choose to rule on whether there is an infringement of Article 30 as a result of the fact that the Italian authorities were influenced by the fact that the companies taking part were themselves in a position to produce the necessary hardware and software I do not consider that the Commission' s claims can be upheld.

That is because I consider that the Commission has not established that the Italian authorities did in fact attach importance to that circumstance. As the Commission itself has pointed out, there is no requirement in the tendering documents that the tenderers should themselves be in a position to produce the products in question. The Commission was only able to state that the three consortia or groupings that were invited to tender in fact included companies which themselves produced data-processing systems. (24) But that is not in itself sufficient in order to assess the weight that might have been attached to that circumstance by the contracting authorities. We do not have comprehensive information about the consortia or groupings which applied to take part in the tendering procedure or about their ownership and inter-relationships.

33. Even if the Court were to find that the Commission has adduced sufficient proof that the Italian authorities attached importance to the companies taking part themselves being able to produce the necessary products, it is not wholly certain that those circumstances constitute an infringement of Article 30. I would merely point out in this connection that in any event the tendering conditions do not lay down any requirement that the company or companies which are awarded the contract must supply their own products. If the companies in question choose to buy in hardware and software there is nothing in the tendering documents which requires them to buy national products.

34. The Commission has further claimed that there is an infringement of Article 30 even if the consortium which was awarded the concession did not include companies which themselves produced data-processing systems. Its reasoning is that producers of data-processing systems which in those circumstances would have to supply goods for the computerization of the lottery would have to use the concessionaire as an intermediary for supplies to the public administration. That would, according to the Commission, entail a significant restriction on the producers' freedom of contract and in that situation too there would therefore be a serious disruption of trade.

The fundamental premise of the Commission' s reasoning, so far as I have understood it, is that by putting the computerization of the lottery out to tender as an overall package, the Italian authorities preclude the possibility of supply agreements being concluded directly with companies from other Member States and that that is contrary to Article 30. If my understanding is correct, that view has very wide implications. The ultimate consequence would be that it would be contrary to Article 30 for contracting authorities to conclude contracts with publicly-owned companies which could be implemented by those companies only by concluding agreements for the supply of goods from other companies. It is perhaps not altogether impossible that an in-depth analysis of the question as a whole might show that the Commission' s view is correct but on the present basis I do not consider that it is under any circumstances justifiable to follow it.

35. I therefore consider that the Court should not accept the Commission' s contention that the fact that participation in the tendering procedure for automation of the Italian lottery was confined to companies, consortia or groupings the majority of whose capital was publicly owned constitutes an infringement of Article 30 of the Treaty.

The alleged infringement of Directive 77/62

36. The Commission has stated that the invitation to tender concerns an integrated computerized system which becomes the property of the administration on the expiry of the contract and the price for which is an annual fee calculated on the basis of turnover by a process reminiscent of leasing contracts. The Commission has claimed that one of the aspects of that computerized system is the supply of hardware and pre-existing software and that Directive 77/62 on public procurement is applicable thereto. In support of that view the Commission refers to the judgment in Case C-3/88 in which the Court held that Directive 77/62 applied even though the contracts concerned largely related to the provision of services. The Court stated:

> "The purchase of the equipment required for the establishment of a data-processing system can be separated from the activities involved in its design and operation. The Italian Government could have approached companies specializing in software development for the design of the data-processing systems in question and, in compliance with the directive, could have purchased hardware meeting the technical specifications laid down by such companies". (25)

37. The Italian Government has claimed that Directive 77/62 is not applicable to the invitation to tender in question. In support of that view it contends first that the invitation does not relate to a public supply contract within the meaning of the directive and second that the contract in question is not being concluded by an authority whose contracts are covered by the directive.

38. It has stated that in its view the invitation to tender concerns a concession to carry out a public service and thus not the supply of goods to the Italian contracting authorities.

As I have explained above, I do not believe that the invitation to tender at issue concerns the concession for the provision of a public service since the company or companies which are awarded the contract in question are not assigned the power to conduct the lottery but are only given the task of carrying out the activities of a technical nature relating to the establishment and operation of the computerized system. Accordingly, even after the introduction of the computerized system it will still be the public administration which is in fact responsible for the provision of the public service constituted in the Italian Government' s view by the conduct of the lottery. I therefore consider that it may be presumed that the invitation to tender concerns on the one hand the provision of services for the public administration and on the other the supply of certain goods for the latter.

39. But, as the Italian Government rightly points out, the characteristic of this tendering procedure is that ownership of the goods in question passes to the public administration only after the expiry of the nine-year operating period and that the consideration for those goods is part of the percentage of the revenue from the lottery which constitutes the consideration for the contract as a whole. It must therefore be examined whether a contract having such a content meets the conditions to be a public supply contract within the meaning of Directive 77/62.

40. Article 1 of Directive 77/62 was amended by Directive 88/295 with the result that public-supply contracts no longer cover only contracts "for delivery of the products" but are contracts "involving the purchase, lease, rental or hire purchase with or without option to buy, of products".

The effect of the amendment is that a number of contracts whereby products are provided for the public administration fall within the scope of the directive whether or not they involve a purchase in the narrow sense. According to the preamble to the amending directive it is necessary to make possible stricter enforcement of the prohibition of restrictions on the free movement of goods and to develop the conditions of effective competition for public-supply contracts. It may be presumed that the object of the aforesaid extension of the scope of the directive is inter alia to ensure that the contracting authorities cannot avoid the duty to comply with the rules under the directive by making the content of contracts giving the public administration the right to make use of certain products such that they cannot be defined as supply contracts in the traditional sense.

Clearly, following the amendment of the directive the question whether the public administration acquires the right of ownership of the goods in question is no longer conclusive for the existence of a supply contract within the meaning of the directive. Thus agreements for rental of goods, with or without option to buy, will fall within the scope of the directive. The fact that ownership of the products covered by the invitation to tender in question does not pass to the public administration until after the nine-year operating period is not of conclusive significance.

It is also plain that the question whether there is a close connection between the consideration and the value of the products in question is not conclusive for the existence of a supply contract. Thus even in the case of contracts involving leasing or rental, with or without an option to buy, it will be necessary to determine an abstract consideration and, for the purposes of appraising whether the threshold values set out in the directive are reached, it will be necessary to make an assessment of the total consideration. (26) I therefore consider that conclusive significance cannot attach to the fact that the consideration for the use of the products necessary for computerizing the lottery was fixed in the aforesaid manner.

The actual situation under the invitation to tender at issue is, in my view, that the public administration has placed at its disposal the necessary hardware and any basic software for the purposes of computerization with a view to the conduct of the lottery. I consider that a contract of that nature does fall within the scope of Directive 77/62 as that scope is defined following the adoption of Directive 88/295. That result is not affected, in my view, by the fact that the award relates at the same time to the service of developing special software and commissioning and operating over a nine-year period the whole computerized system, including the servicing and operation of the aforesaid products.

I would finally point out in this connection that the practical significance of the present issues has diminished somewhat as from 1 July 1993 which was the time-limit for the implementation by the Member States of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts. (27) Article 2 thereof provides that the directive applies to public contracts covering both products and services "if the value of the services in question exceeds that of the products covered by the contract".

41. In the alternative the Italian Government claims that in any event it is only Article 2(3) of Directive 77/62 which applies to the invitation to tender in question. Article 2(3) provides:

> "When the State... grants to a body other than the contracting body ... special or exclusive rights to engage in a public service activity, the instrument granting this right shall stipulate that the body in question must observe the principle of non-discrimination by nationality when awarding public-supply contracts to third parties".

In support of its view the Italian Government further states that the invitation to tender concerns the grant to a concessionaire of a special right to provide services, namely part of the power to conduct a lottery. That view is untenable. The provisions of Directive 77/62 to which the Commission' s claim relates are applicable to this invitation to tender for the computerization of the lottery because the legal relationship between the contracting authorities and the concessionaire does not involve the transfer of the power to conduct a lottery but ° in addition to the provision of services ° the supply of products to the public authority which does conduct the lottery.

42. The Italian Government has further claimed that pursuant to the decree on the award of the concession for the computerization of the lottery the contract is to be concluded by the AAMS and that contracts concluded by that authority are not covered by the directive. In this connection it points out that:

° AAMS is not included in the list of contracting authorities referred to in Article 1(1) of Directive 80/767/EEC of 22 July 1980 adapting and supplementing in respect of certain contracting authorities Directive 77/62, (28) and ° Footnote 2 to the aforesaid list, which shows that the Italian Finance Ministry is included amongst the purchasing institutions except as regards purchases made by the tobacco and salt monopolies, is intended to exclude all contracts concluded by the AAMS since the only reason why the lottery is not expressly mentioned is that at the time when that directive was adopted the lottery was not administered by the AAMS.

43. I do not believe that we can be swayed by those arguments. The Commission has claimed, and this has apparently not been disputed by the Italian Government, that the AAMS is merely an administrative body under the authority of the Finance Ministry and acts that are formally attributable to the AAMS are therefore in reality within the ambit of that Ministry. Moreover, Article 4(4) of the Law on the lottery itself designates the Finance Ministry as the contracting authority. (29)

The derogation in Footnote 2 as regards the tobacco and salt monopoly cannot be extended to the lottery. There is nothing to suggest that the intention of the Community legislature was that all areas administered by the AAMS should be excluded from the scope of the directive. On the contrary, as the Commission has emphasized, there are grounds for assuming that that footnote serves a particular purpose linked to the special circumstances of the tobacco and salt sector. To hold the contrary would moreover signify that activities could be kept outside the scope of the directive merely by entrusting the administration thereof to the AAMS. Furthermore, Italy itself mentioned the AAMS on the lists sent to the Commission and GATT of public institutions which are referred to in the directives.

44. On the basis of the foregoing I consider that Directive 77/62 is applicable to the invitation to tender in question. The condition at issue whereby participation in the tendering procedure is actually confined to Italian undertakings is undoubtedly contrary to Articles 17 to 25 of the directive which lay down rules on participation and criteria for qualitative selection. (30) However,

I consider it questionable whether it serves any reasonable purpose to find that the condition entailing discrimination on grounds of nationality at issue, apart from being contrary to Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty, is also contrary to Articles 17 to 25 of the directive.

The Italian Government has also not disputed that it failed to publish in the Official Journal of the European Communities on the one hand an indicative notice concerning the total procurement of a certain value within each product area which the Finance Ministry intended awarding during 1990 and on the other the actual notice of invitation to tender.

45. I shall therefore propose that the Court hold that Italy has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 9(1), (2) and (4) and Articles 17 to 25 of Directive 77/62.

Conclusion

46. In the light of the foregoing I propose that the Court:

(1) declare that the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil the obligations incumbent upon it pursuant to Articles 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty and Articles 17 to 25 of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public-supply contracts, as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC, by providing, in connection with a tendering procedure for a system for computerizing the Italian lottery, that only bodies, companies, consortia and groupings the majority of whose capital, considered individually or collectively, was publicly owned, could take part in the tendering procedure;

(2) declare that the Italian Republic has failed to comply with the obligations incumbent upon it pursuant to Article 9 of Directive 77/62, as amended by Directive 88/295, by failing, at the beginning of 1990, to make known, by means of an indicative notice, the total procurement by product area of which the estimated value was equal to or greater than ECU 750 000 and which the Finance Ministry envisaged awarding during 1990 and by failing to publish in November 1990 a notice of invitation to tender in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities for a system for computerizing the lottery;

(3) for the rest, dismiss the proceedings against the Italian Republic; and

(4) order the Italian Republic to bear the costs.

(8) - By application lodged at the Court on 2 December 1991 the Commission brought proceedings against Italy for the latter' s failure to implement the judgment of the Court in Case C-3/88. The Italian Government subsequently stated that the legislative provisions that were contrary to Community law were abrogated by Article 15 of Law No 142 of 19 February 1992 whereupon the Commission withdrew its application.

(9) - The Italian Government has pointed out that the invitation to tender, the decree regarding the award of the concession and the special conditions for the tender all refer to a concession and that the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale of Lazio has recognized in a decision of 8 July 1991 that the agreement in question relates to a concession for the provision of a public service and has stated in that connection inter alia that the key component of the agreement is the operation of the computerized system while the provision of supplies is of only secondary importance.

(11) - This view signifies inter alia that it is not necessary in these proceedings for the Court to rule on whether the conduct of a lottery can be characterized as the provision of services within the meaning of Article 59 of the Treaty. That question is the subject of proceedings currently pending for a preliminary ruling in Case C-275/92 Schindler in which the Court has been asked to rule whether a lottery is to be defined as trade in goods within the meaning of Article 30 of the Treaty or provision of services within the meaning of Articles 59 and 60 of the Treaty.

(12) - See paragraph 13.

(13) - See judgment in Case 147/86 Commission v Greece [1988] ECR 1637, paragraph 7, and judgment in Case 2/74 Reyners [1974] ECR 631, paragraph 43.

(14) - The Commission has stated that at the moment the registration points for the lottery... are located at certain selling points under a form of monopoly (tobacconists) and at the offices of approved lottery collectors which... are operated by private concessionaires (emphasis added).

(15) - Under Article 5(2) of Law No 528, the Area Committee is appointed by the intendente di finanza (director of the office of the Finance Ministry in the province in question) and consists of a representative of the Amministrazione finanziaria, who acts as president, and two officials from the Ministero del Tesoro and from the Amministrazione autonoma dei monopoli di stato....

(16) - Under Article 6(3) of Law No 528, the Area Commission shall decide on the coupons to be excluded from the draw by decisions that are published in the Bollettino ufficiale in the area in question. Stakes made against coupons which are excluded from participation in the draw shall be forfeit unless reimbursement is sought within one month of such publication.

(17) - Under Article 7 of Law No 528, as amended by Law No 85, draws are to be carried out once a week by the department of the Finance Ministry in each of the provincial capitals which are designated as places for draws in Article 2(1) by a committee consisting of the intendente di finanza or his representative, who shall preside, an official from the Ministero di Tesoro and an official from the Amministrazione autonoma dei monopoli di Stato.

(18) - Under Article 11 of Law No 528, the Area Committee referred to in Article 5 carries out a check of the coupons and confirms the winning coupons in accordance with the lists supplied by the processing centre...

Any player in possession of a coupon taking part in the draw in the area in question may submit a complaint against the decision of the Area Committee...

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

The Committee shall take decisions concerning complaints....

Proceedings against decisions of the Area Committees may be brought ... before the Central Lottery Committee....

The Central Committee shall be designated by a decree of the Minister of Finance and shall consist of the Director-General of the Direzione generale delle entrate speciali (Director-General for Special Revenue), who shall preside, two officials from the same directorate-general, one official from the Ministero de Tesoro and one official from the Amministrazione Autonoma dei Monopoli di Stato....

(19) - Winnings of less than LIT 1 250 000 are to be paid by the lottery agent who received the stake. Point 4.8 of the technical programme sets out a number of circumstances which that agent must check before paying out winnings and in this connection also details certain functions that must be carried out by the automated system. For winnings in excess of that amount, requests for payment are to be submitted to the Intendenza di Finanza, which is the representative of the Finance Ministry in the various provinces or the Ispettorato Compartimentale dei Monopoli di Stato, which is a local body under the authority of the AAMS and are subsequently forwarded to the Direzione Generale Monopoli di Stato, which is also subject to the AAMS.

(20) - The Commission is probably right in pointing out that the development of new software must be regarded as the provision of services.

(21) - In this connection the Commission has stated that it is clear from the Court' s case-law that measures which are potentially such as to hinder trade between Member States are incompatible with Article 30 of the Treaty and it is not necessary for the measures to have an appreciable effect on trade between the Member States. In support of that view it referred inter alia to the judgments in Case 8/74 Dassonville [1974] ECR 837, Case 16/83 Prantl [1984] ECR 1299 and Case 124/85 Commission v Greece [1986] ECR 3935.

(22) - Case C-21/88 Du Pont de Nemours [1990] ECR I-889.

(23) - The Commission states that the reason why it did not assert an infringement of Article 30 of the Treaty in Case C-3/88 was that the judgment in Du Pont de Nemours was not given until after it had initiated the proceedings in Case C-3/88.

(24) - It has been stated in these proceedings that two of the three tenderers selected were Italian subsidiaries of foreign producers of data-processing systems while the Lottomatica consortium includes on the one hand Ing. C. Olivetti & C. SpA which produces both hardware and software, and on the other Sogei SpA which develops software specifically designed for computerization within the public sector.

(25) - Paragraph 19.

(26) - For the sake of completeness it should be noted that the Italian Government has not claimed that the threshold values set out in the directive were not reached. It seems to me clear, therefore, that they were reached.

(29) - Article 4(4) of Law No 528 of 2 August 1982, as amended by Law No 85 of 19 April 1990, provides: The Finance Ministry shall establish ... after hearing the Amministrazione Autonoma dei Monopoli di Stato, by means of an invitation to tender (appalto-concorso), a system for computerizing the lottery....

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Lenz delivered on 6 February 1992.
Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Spain.
Directive 71/305/CEE - Awarding of public contracts - Advertising of contracts - Derogation in urgent cases.
Case C-24/91.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

A - Introduction

1. In the present action for a declaration that the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty, the Commission complains that the relevant provisions of Council Directive 71/305/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (1) were disregarded in the award of a building contract for extending the capacity of the Universidad Complutense, Madrid.

2. In early 1989, the university' s governing council awarded a contract for the extension and renovation of the Faculty of Political Science and Sociology and the School of Social Work by a private contract procedure.

3. The Spanish Government defends the course of action taken by the university authorities on the ground that the urgent nature of the work to be carried out meant that it was impossible to comply with the time-limits laid down in the directive. The funds necessary to initiate a tendering procedure were made available in January 1989. The architect in charge estimated the time required for the work at seven and a half months. Since the work had to be completed by the beginning of the 1989-1990 academic year on 1 October 1989, there was no time to lose. The factual circumstances met the conditions for the operation of the derogating provision in Article 9(d) of the directive, which allows authorities awarding contracts not to comply with the provisions of the directive "in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought by events unforeseen by the authorities awarding contracts, the time limit laid down in other procedures cannot be kept".

4. The Commission takes the view that the conditions for the application of that derogating rule are not met. Even if it were accepted that there was an urgent need to award the contract, it would still have been possible to comply with the shorter form of the award procedure laid down in Article 15 of the directive.

5. The Commission, the applicant, claims that the Court should:

Declare that, inasmuch as the governing council of the Universidad Complutense, Madrid, decided to award contracts for works connected with the extension and renovation of the university' s Faculty of Political Science and Sociology and the School of Social Work by private contract, omitting thus to publish a notice of invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, especially Article 9 and Articles 12 to 19 thereof; and

Order the Kingdom of Spain to pay the costs.

6. The Kingdom of Spain, the defendant, contends that the Court should:

dismiss the Commission' s application; and order the Commission to pay the costs.

B - Opinion

1. Admissibility

8. Although the Spanish Government has not raised an objection of inadmissibility, a few preliminary considerations concerning the admissibility of the application are indicated.

9. In an action for failure to fulfil Treaty obligations, it is essential to establish whether the defendant State may be held responsible for the offending conduct. The problem arises in particular when the State uses the machinery of private law in carrying out its functions. In such cases the possibility of State influence must be established positively. (2)

10. The situation is different where the conduct of a primary State authority is concerned. The Member State is thus responsible, vis-à-vis the Community, for independent bodies even where there is no provision for direct Government intervention in specific areas of conduct.

11. A State university, even if independent from an organizational point of view, is as a rule a State institution. The type of "legal person governed by public law" chosen by the Member State when setting up the university is therefore not so very important. The State may therefore be held responsible, in the context of an action for failure to comply with Treaty obligations, for legal acts of the university.

12. That view is supported by the definition of the persons covered by Directive 71/305, in Article 1(b). Under that provision, "authorities awarding contracts" are to include "the State, regional or local authorities and the legal persons governed by public law specified in Annex I", which are, in Spain, "other corporate bodies subject to public rules for the award of contracts". (3) The fact of being subject to public contract award rules is in itself evidence that the awarding authority is a "public institution".

13. No doubts have been raised in the course of the action either as to the status of the university as a legal person governed by public law or as to the applicability of the directive, so we may proceed on the assumption that responsibility for the conduct complained of may be ascribed to the defendant Member State.

Merits of the application

14. The works contract in issue, with a value of PTA 430 256 250, falls in principle, under Article 7, within the scope of the directive. The fact that the threshold value for the applicability of the directive was increased by Directive 89/440 from ECU 1 000 000 to ECU 5 000 000 is of no consequence in the present action, since that increase did not take effect until after the events in issue.

15. Since it may be assumed that the directive is in principle applicable, the question arises whether there are sufficient grounds to justify a derogation from the provisions governing the award of contracts. Because the directive itself not only sets out, in Article 9, the circumstances in which a derogation is possible but also offers, with the accelerated procedure, a course of action for exceptional circumstances, any departure from the general rules on publication must be confined within the limits laid down by the directive for derogations.

16. The Commission takes the view that, since the funds were made available without difficulty in January 1989, the university could have initiated the tendering procedure earlier. The Spanish Government denies that view, and points out that a tendering procedure cannot be initiated until the relevant budget heading has been definitively confirmed in the Budget Law. The parties differ strongly in their views concerning the measures which would, depending on the circumstances, have at least cleared the way for an earlier award of the contract.

17. From this point on, I wish to base my consideration on the most favourable version of the facts for the defendant Member State, so I shall assume here that the tendering procedure could not have been initiated until the funds had been definitively made available.

18. It has not been possible conclusively to ascertain the exact date on which the funds were made available. The earliest point of reference is 9 February 1989, when the governing council of the Universidad Complutense gave its approval for the building work in issue to be carried out. The question whether any delay occurred between the date on which the funds were definitively made available and the meeting of the governing council on 9 February 1989 must remain open.

19. Since the derogating provision of Article 9(d) of the directive, which may be relevant, is applicable only when, for the reasons specified therein, "the time limit laid down in other procedures cannot be kept", it must first be determined whether the directive makes provision for an appropriate response.

20. The Commission has pointed out that the accelerated procedure under Article 15 of the directive could have been used. Under the restricted procedure, the time limits for the invitation to tender would then have been as follows: the notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities would have had to be published, in accordance with Article 12 of the directive, not later than five days after the date of dispatch. The time limit for the receipt of requests to participate would then have been twelve days under Article 15 of the directive, again calculated from the date of dispatch of the notice, so that it would not have been necessary to add the five-day time limit for publication to those twelve days. Under the restricted accelerated procedure, there is a further time limit for the receipt of tenders of ten days from the date of the invitation to tender. At least 22 days must therefore be allowed from the date of dispatch of the notice to the Official Journal of the European Communities to the final date for the receipt of tenders. A slight delay may occur because the request to submit a tender is dispatched after the period allowed for the submission of a request to participate.

21. The question whether the procedure thus described really enables outside tenderers to participate may be left undecided. In any event, from a purely arithmetical point of view, the accelerated procedure could have been applied in the present case.

22. The governing council of the university decided on 9 February 1989, a Thursday, to have the work carried out. The principal' s office could then without difficulty on the following Friday, 10 February 1989, have initiated the measures necessary for the publication of the invitation to tender and if necessary complied with any further administrative requirements.

23. In fact, it was not until 27 February, two and a half weeks after the governing council' s decision, that the principal' s office took its decision and ordered publication. The Spanish Government has not been able to give any convincing explanation for that two-and-a-half-week delay. Mention has been made of administrative technicalities, but no more detailed explanation has been forthcoming.

24. In a case where speed is of the essence it must be possible to make advance allowance for administrative technicalities in such a way that they do not engender further delay. Thus, if it could be confidently expected that the funds would shortly be made available in the Budget Law - and even the date on which the Budget Law would be adopted was foreseeable - then administrative preparations for the tender procedure could have been made, even though it could not yet formally be initiated.

25. The report of the head of the design office, to be found in Annex IV to the reply, concerning the urgent nature of the work could quite clearly have been obtained before the governing council reached its decision - it was not necessary to wait until 12 February 1989.

26. If we now assume that there was no further delay in dealing with matters after the decision of 9 February 1989, and even if 10, 11 and 12 February are also disregarded, the 22-day period necessary for the completion of the accelerated procedure would have expired on 6 March 1989, the very day on which the actual time-limit for the receipt of tenders pursuant to the announcement of 27 February 1989 did expire. It cannot therefore be claimed that compliance with the procedure laid down in the directive would have led to any delay in carrying out the work.

27. Consideration of the conditions for the application of the derogation under Article 9(d) is therefore only of academic interest. Article 9(d) of the directive makes it a condition that "for reasons of extreme urgency brought by events unforeseen by the authorities awarding contracts, the time limit laid down in other procedures cannot be kept". In my Opinion in Case 199/85 I took the view that a strict interpretation is in principle necessary, and that the conditions of that paragraph must all be satisfied. (4) Therefore, if any one of the material criteria is not met, then the derogating provision cannot apply. Even though in Case 199/85 the situation as regards the urgent nature of the work was different from that in the present case, that makes no difference to the validity of the abstract interpretation of the provision.

28. In its judgment in that case, the Court ruled on the interpretation of Article 9(d), holding that the derogation was to be interpreted strictly. (5)

29. It may well be that at the beginning of 1989 the increase in the number of students compared to the limited space available was seen as an urgent and compelling reason to take steps to expand capacity. But the number of new enrolments was not a sudden and unforeseeable occurrence which took the university by surprise and obliged it to take immediate steps. It may be accepted that a steady increase in student numbers will lead at a given moment to an untenable situation. Such developments are, however, in no way unpredictable. Nor can the precise number of new enrolments be the determining factor, since slight fluctuations are unlikely either to improve or significantly to aggravate the overall situation. In February 1989, moreover, the new enrolments for the 1989-1990 academic year had not yet been registered. That would not be done until July 1989, so that at the beginning of the calendar year any calculations concerning new entries could be made only on the basis of estimates. As far as the increasing gravity of the situation is concerned, therefore, there can be no question of events unforeseen by the authority awarding the contract.

30. As regards the appropriation of the funds, it should be stressed that a tendering procedure cannot be implemented until the funds have been definitively made available. Nevertheless, the funds allocated to the contract in the supplementary budget by the Budget Law did not constitute an unforeseeable event either, so that the university authorities - faced with a difficult situation - were under a clear duty to make careful preparation and deal with the matter without undue delay.

31. In that connection, the Spanish Government has claimed that the allocation of the funds need not necessarily be classed as an unforeseeable event, but in the present case as unforeseen. Only when the event actually took place was it possible to attach any consequences thereto.

32. It must first be pointed out in that regard that such an interpretation of Article 9(d) of the directive is contradicted by the wording of the provision. It also runs contrary to the aim of the measure, which is to establish an objective standard for the applicability of the derogation. The criterion of foreseeability is a standard measure for the degree of care incumbent on an authority awarding a contract in the event of aggravating circumstances. The authority is therefore released from its duty to ensure compliance with the provisions of the directive only if the events in question are objectively unforeseeable.

33. It follows from all the foregoing that the university authorities' misconduct as regards their obligations under Directive 71/305 has been established. Judgment must therefore be given against the defendant Member State in accordance with the application.

C - Conclusion

34. I propose that the Court should:

1. Declare that, inasmuch as the governing council of the Universidad Complutense, Madrid, decided to award contracts for works connected with the extension and renovation of the university' s Faculty of Political Science and Sociology and the School of Social Work by private contract, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts; and

2. Order the Kingdom of Spain to pay the costs of the proceedings.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Lenz delivered on 26 February 1992.
Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic.
Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Public supply contracts - Admissibility.
Case C-362/90.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

A - Introduction

1. In the present Treaty infringement proceedings the Commission claims that the Unità Sanitaria Locale (Local Health Authority, hereinafter referred to as "the USL") XI, Genoa 2, has infringed Directive 77/62/EEC coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts. (1) The USL published on 10 October 1988 an invitation to tender for the supply of several products in the course of 1989, including beef valued at LIT 5 800 000 000. The invitation laid down a minimum condition for admittance to participate in the invitation to tender, namely that the potential tenderer should have supplied identical products to the value of six times the value of each supply requested, 50% of that amount to be made up of supplies to public administrative authorities. The Commission considered that condition to be contrary to Community law. The invitation to tender lapsed on 31 December 1989.

2. The Italian Government responded to the application to the Court by defending itself on a number of levels. First, in the defence, it suggested that the application be withdrawn because the contested clause produced no effects, after the expiry, at the end of 1989, of the invitation to tender and subsequent invitations to tender did not include it. In the further course of the written procedure the defendant Government formally raised an objection of inadmissibility on the ground that when the reasoned opinion was delivered in March 1990, and thus necessarily before the expiry of the period set therein, there was no longer any infringement.

3. The Italian Government also took the view that a Member State could not be charged with infringement of a directive by a public body where the directive had been duly transposed into domestic law. That State thus complied with its obligations under Article 189 of the EEC Treaty. Furthermore national implementing provisions have precedence over a directive with the result that legal protection against any infringements can be granted only within the framework of national law.

4. As regards the substantive content of the action, the Italian Government contends that the contested clause is not an unlawful criterion for exclusion but merely one factor in assessing the evidence, in accordance with the directive, of the technical capacity of the potential tenderer.

5. The Commission claims that the Court should:

- declare that, since the USL imposed a requirement that 50% of the minimum quantity of goods required to have been supplied over the last three years to enable tenderers to participate in a tendering procedure had been supplied to public administrations, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under EEC Council Directive 77/62 of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts;

- order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

6. The Italian Government contends that the Court should:

- dismiss the action;

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

In its rejoinder it contends that the Court should:

- declare the action inadmissible.

7. Reference is made to the Report for the Hearing for the facts of the case, the legal background and the arguments of the parties.

B - Observations

1. Admissibility

8. Only in the rejoinder did the Italian Government formally apply for the action to be dismissed as inadmissible, so that the question arises whether this was sufficient for that application by the defendant to be considered as a proper one made in due time.

9. First, the defendant Government has already put forward in the defence all the arguments which in its view lead to the inadmissibility of the action. Secondly, in the defence to the application it contended the action should be dismissed. That contention also contains the request that the action should be dismissed as inadmissible. The applicant had an opportunity in its reply to deal with the defendant' s arguments. Finally, the admissibility of an action is a matter which it is for the Court to examine of its own motion. On those grounds there is no reason not to consider objections of inadmissibility because they are pleaded belatedly.

10. The application could be inadmissible in the present case because, as the Commission admitted at the hearing, the reasoned opinion in the preliminary procedure was delivered only in March 1990 and therefore, on the expiry of the period stipulated in the reasoned opinion for putting an end to the infringement of the Treaty, the alleged infringement, through the invitation to tender for 1989, could no longer have existed. Furthermore the contested clause was no longer included in the invitations to tender for 1990 and 1991.

11. Pursuant to the second paragraph of Article 169 of the EEC Treaty it is a condition for bringing an action that an infringement of the Treaty should exist after the period laid down in the reasoned opinion. According to the case-law, (2) which has to be read as being to that effect, there is no legal interest in a declaration by the Court of an infringement of the Treaty if the infringement has been terminated before the expiry of that period. That case-law is consistent with the ratio of the preliminary procedure, which is aimed at bringing about the termination of the Treaty infringement before the proceedings before the Court. Accordingly there is in principle no interest in obtaining a declaration of infringement of the Treaty if the infringement had already ceased on the expiry of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion.

12. The case-law relating to the positive finding of an interest in bringing proceedings in the context of the action for failure to fulfil Treaty obligations (3) (such as possible obligations to compensate on the part of the defendant Member State vis-à-vis other Member States of the Community or individuals who are affected) applies only where the alleged infringement of the Treaty was terminated after the expiry of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion. Accordingly, where the infringements were terminated before that period there is in principle no ground for considering that there is an interest in pursuing the action.

13. The only exceptions to that rule are in cases of seasonal infringements (4) where, because of its purpose and legal nature, the infringement of the Treaty is confined to a limited period (as for example in the case of the import and export restrictions introduced on a seasonal basis for the protection of national traders) and where, because of this, the conduct of the procedure prior to the actions for failure fulfil obligations is made, purely in terms of time, more difficult, if not altogether impossible.

14. In my opinion in the present case there is no reason for considering whether it is possible to apply such an exception, even though the contested clause in the invitation to tender was from the outset limited in time, because that period was so calculated that the proper conduct of the Treaty infringement procedure was possible without any difficulty in relation to time: the invitation to tender was published on 10 October 1988 and ceased to have effect at the end of 1989. A period of almost 15 months was therefore available for action to be taken against the irregularities in the context of a pre-litigation procedure.

15. If it is borne in mind that the Commission gave the defendant Member State only 14 days to answer each of its letters in the pre-litigation procedure (the warning letter of 10 September 1989 and the reasoned opinion of 27 March 1990), it cannot be said that work on the case demanded exceptionally long periods, for example, on account of enquiries which had to be made or the complexity of the problem.

16. Since it was objectively possible, without any difficulty, to conduct the procedure prior to the bringing of an action for the infringement of the Treaty during the 15 months in which the invitation to tender was valid, there is no discernible reason to depart from the rule that there must be an infringement of the Treaty after the period laid down in the reasoned opinion has expired. The action must therefore be regarded as inadmissible.

17. At the hearing on 16 January 1992 the Commission submitted that the reasoned opinion of 27 March 1990 was actually a second opinion. The first reasoned opinion had been delivered on 17 August 1989. Since the defendant Government replied to the warning letter, after considerable delay, only on 30 June 1989, a reply received by the Commission on 6 July 1989, and since the content of that reply could not be taken into account in the drafting of the reasoned opinion of 17 August 1989, the Commission considered it expedient to draft a second opinion to take account of all the objections of the Italian Government. The delay in the preliminary procedure was therefore attributable to the defendant Government.

18. The first question which arises in considering those arguments is whether the factual matters put forward for the first time at the hearing can at all be taken into account.

19. Article 42 of the Rules of Procedure provides:

> "1. In reply or rejoinder a party may offer further evidence. The party must, however, give reasons for the delay in offering it.
> 2. No new plea may be introduced in the course of proceedings unless it is based on matters of law or of fact which come to light in the course of the procedure.
> ...
> The decision on the admissibility of the plea shall be reserved for the final judgment."

20. The reasoned opinion directed to the defendant Member State on 17 August 1989 is certainly not a fact which first came to light in the course of the written procedure. The proper conduct of the preliminary procedure is a prior condition for the admissibility of an action for failure to fulfil Treaty obligations under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty and the burden of proving this lies on the Commission. From the outset the Commission relied only on the reasoned opinion of 27 March 1990. Only when the Court enquired about the subject-matter of its action against the background of the reasoned opinion issued on 27 March 1990 and the commencement of the action on 11 December 1990 did the Commission find itself compelled to mention the previous reasoned opinion. The Court' s question can scarcely be regarded as a "matter of law" within the meaning of Article 42(2) of the Rules of Procedure, establishing the relevance of the plea.

21. I am therefore of the opinion that all the submissions on the alleged first reasoned opinion should be dismissed as out of time, and thus inadmissible, so that the inadmissibility of the action as already found remains.

22. Assuming however, for the sake of argument, that the Commission' s arguments are to be regarded a relevant defence, it is difficult to imagine why no account of the objections of the Italian Government in its letter of 30 June 1989, which was received by the Commission on 6 July 1989, could be taken in the opinion of 17 August 1989, although there was a period of six weeks for consideration, while the Italian Government was in each case given only 14 days to reply to the warning letter and the reasoned opinion. I cannot understand why in those circumstances the delivery of a second opinion in March 1990 was the fault of the Italian Government. In my view the Commission alone is responsible for the delay in dealing with the matter in general and, in particular, for the reasoned opinion of 27 March 1990, so that there was no interest in bringing the action because the alleged infringement was terminated before the expiry of the period prescribed in the reasoned opinion.

23. Since the action must thus be dismissed as inadmissible, the following considerations concerning its merits are set out only in the alternative.

2. The merits

(a) The scope of the obligations of a Member State in transposing and applying directives

24. The Italian Government argues, as against the infringement with which it is charged, that once a directive has been properly transposed into domestic law the domestic rules prevail both as regards substantive provisions and as regards legal protection.

25. In the preliminary procedure the defendant Government put forward the defence, in its reply of 30 June 1989, that the contested clause was consistent with the measure implementing Directive 77/62. In the course of the subsequent procedure its premise has always been that the directive had been correctly transposed.

26. The objections of the Italian Government call for a discussion of the extent of the duties of a Member State in transposing and applying directives. The defendant Government is certainly wrong in its view that a Member State, on duly transposing a directive into domestic law, has performed all its duties under Article 189 in implementing Community law. Formal transposition is only one of the obligations of Member State under Community law. In addition, Member States are required to give effect, in their national legal systems, to the objectives of the directive, not only in the abstract by means of legislative measures, but also in a concrete manner. This duty to ensure that a directive is "fully effective" (5) concerns first and foremost all State authorities. It follows, on the one hand, directly from Article 189 of the EEC Treaty and, on the other hand, from Article 5, which requires Member States to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure fulfilment of the obligations arising out of the Treaty or resulting from actions taken by the institutions of the Community.

27. It is against the background of those obligations that it is necessary to respond to the Italian Government' s objection that only in the reply did the Commission submit that the Italian Government had not only to transpose Directive 77/62 into Italian law but also to ensure that it was fully effective. That, according to the Italian Government, is a different plea from those put forward in the reasoned opinion and the application and is therefore one which should be rejected as being out of time.

28. According to the Commission, it was the specific infringement by USL - Genoa' s invitation to tender which was from the outset the subject of the proceedings. It was only in response to the Italian Government' s plea in defence in the proceedings before the Court, namely that after transposing the directive correctly it had no further direct obligations, that the Commission referred to the continuing wider obligation which in its view lay on the Member State.

29. This amounts to no more than an exposition of the Commission' s preliminary view of the law which prompted it to pursue the suspected infringement in the first place. There can therefore be no question of an extension of the subject-matter of the action or a new issue.

30. In principle directives partake of the primacy (6) of Community law. Where, therefore, after correct transposition, doubts arise in the interpretation of the national legal measure, the directive is always the decisive factor. In the event of belated or defective transposition, the Court has even, within the limits which it has set, (7) recognized that the provisions of a directive are directly applicable. (8)

31. If therefore, a discrepancy between the measure transposing the directive and the directive itself were to give rise to a question of infringement of the Treaty, as was suggested in the preliminary procedure, the sole criterion for the purpose would be the directive. In such a case the infringement of Community law would, irrespective of whether it led to specific proceedings for infringement of the Treaty, consist both in the defective transposition of the directive and in the application of the law in a manner contrary to the directive.

32. If, on the other hand the directive were correctly transposed, it would still be necessary, for the purpose of deciding whether there was an infringement of the Treaty, to take the directive as the criterion for interpretation. In any event, therefore, the question is whether, in the case of the USL' s contested invitation to tender, the provisions of Directive 77/62 were correctly applied.

33. A completely different question, which does not arise in the present case, is the legal consequences of a simple infringement of the national implementing provisions by independent persons. In so far as the acts of a State body are in question, the formal responsibility for the measure in the context of Treaty infringement proceedings must be held to lie with the Member State (9) and the authorities and institutions of the Member State must be considered to have a substantive obligation to ensure that effect is given to Community law. (10)

34. If in Treaty infringement proceedings the conduct of State bodies is generally a matter for review because the Member State is responsible vis-à-vis the Community also for those institutions which are organized on an independent basis, that is so a fortiori within the sphere of application of the directive concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts. (11)

35. Article 1(b) of Directive 77/62 provides expressly that '" contracting authorities' shall be the State, regional or local authorities and the legal persons governed by public law or, in Member States where the latter are unknown, bodies corresponding thereto as specified in Annex I".

36. The USL - Genoa 2, which issued the invitation to tender, is a municipal authority and it is not in dispute that it is a "contracting authority" within the meaning of the directive.

37. The judgment in Case 31/87, (12) on which both parties in the present proceedings rely, was concerned with the question whether the relevant authority in that case was to be regarded as a State authority in order to come within the ambit ratione personae of Directive 71/305/EEC on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts. I have to agree with the Italian Government that the judgment in Case 31/87 was by way of a preliminary ruling, so that no decision was given on the responsibility of a Member State in the context of Treaty infringement proceedings in which it was alleged that there was an infringement of the provisions of Community law on invitations to tender. However, in view of the obligation, which I have already mentioned, of the Member State vis-à-vis the Community in the matter of implementing directives, it is necessary in principle to start from the premise that the acts of a State authority for the purposes of the directive fall within the area of responsibility of the Member State as regards the application of Community law. That consequence follows from the definition of the sphere of application ratione personae of the directive on the award of public contracts.

38. The defendant Government' s objections to the applicability of the directive as a criterion for determining whether there is an infringement of the Treaty are accordingly to be rejected.

(b) The relationship between the legal remedies in the Community and in the Member State

39. It is, finally necessary to consider he Italian Government' s argument that the legal remedies for a possible infringement of the provisions of Community law on invitations to tender are to be sought before the courts of the Member State and that in that case, the system of remedies provided by Community law play only an ancillary role.

40. In that respect it must be observed that there is no national legal remedy which could take precedence over Treaty infringement proceedings. In an action for failure to fulfil Treaty obligations the issue is always one of the relationship between the duties of the Member States and the Community. Nor is it possible to set up any general rule according to which the legal remedy afforded by Community law in principle takes second place. At most, it is in the context of actions for damages that situations are conceivable in which a subsidiary role might be accepted. It is also quite possible that a judgment declaratory of an infringement of the Treaty, given in the abstract, may have an effect in an action for damages by an injured party. (13)

41. There is therefore nothing to stand in the way of a substantive examination of the question whether the clause complained of is contrary to Community law. The question comes down to determining whether the condition that proof must be adduced that 50% of supplies have been made to public authorities represents an unlawful condition of participation.

(c) The infringement of Directive 77/62

42. Article 14 of Directive 77/62 provides:

"In restricted procedures, the notice shall include at least the following information:

(d) ... the information and formalities necessary for an appraisal of the minimum economic and technical standards which the contracting authorities require of suppliers for their selections; those requirements may not be other than those referred to in Article 20, 22 and 23."

43. According to Article 23 of the directive, evidence of the supplier' s technical capacity may be furnished by :

(a) a list of the principal deliveries effected in the past three years, with the sums, dates and recipients, public or private, involved:

- where to public authorities awarding contracts, evidenced to be in the form of certificates issued or countersigned by the competent authorities;

- were to private purchasers, delivery to be certified by the purchaser or, failing this, simply declared by the supplier to have been effected".

44. The provision lists the forms of evidence which may serve to prove the volume of contracts of an undertaking during a particular period in order that the necessary conclusions about technical capacity may be drawn. The wording of Article 14 of the directive in conjunction with Article 23 leads to the inference that the enumeration of the forms of proof of technical capacity is exclusive. The situation is different as regards the proof of the financial and economic capacity of the undertaking, but that is not relevant in the present case.

45. Article 23(1)(a) of the directive is concerned primarily with the volume of deliveries. The distinction between public authorities awarding contracts and private purchasers thus seems to have been made because different forms of proof are prescribed with respect to supplies to them.

46. Every minimum amount of deliveries to public authorities awarding contracts or private purchasers laid down in advance in an additional criterion and thus an extension of the requirements of proof laid down in the directive. This is so as regards both a minimum volume of supplies to a class of purchasers and evidence of an absolute minimum amount of supplies as proof of technical capacity, even if the latter is in certain circumstances permissible in connection with proof of financial and economic capacity pursuant to Article 22(1)(a), which, however, is something that need not be considered here.

47. The fixing of a particular percentage of the volume of supplies to public authorities is not, as the Italian Government contends, a question of assessment of the evidence, since from the outset all tenderers are excluded who have not provided the requisite minimum volume of supplies to public authorities. Assessment of the evidence takes place only at a later stage, that is, when the authorized tenderers have adduced evidence of supplies, and then in the selection procedure an assessment is made of the purchasers who have been supplied.

48. In the result, the clause complained of must therefore be regarded as an exclusionary criterion which is not provided for in the directive.

C - Proposal

49. I propose that the Court:

1. dismiss the application;

2. order the Commission to pay the costs.

Mr Advocate General Carl Otto Lenz delivered his Opinion on 30 April 1991. He proposed that the Court rule as follows:

"(1) Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC prohibits Member States from introducing provisions which require the automatic disqualification from the award of public works contracts of certain tenders determined according to a mathematical criterion, instead of obliging the awarding authority to apply the examination procedure laid down in the directive, giving the tenderer an opportunity to furnish explanations.

(2) When implementing Council Directive 71/305, Member States may not depart, to any material extent, from the provisions of Article 29(5) thereof.

(3) Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305 allows Member States to require that tenders be examined when those tenders appear to be abnormally low, and not only when they are obviously abnormally low."

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

A - Facts

1. The case in which I am giving my opinion today is concerned with a television monopoly which the plaintiff in the main proceedings, a public undertaking under State control in accordance with Greek Law No 1730/1987 (the rigour of which, let me say so immediately, was, however, mitigated by Law No 1866/1989 according to which television stations of a local character may be approved by ministerial decision).

2. In view of the fact that in December 1988 the defendants in the main proceedings (a legal person governed by private law and the Mayor of Thessaloniki) set up a television station and began to transmit television broadcasts, proceedings were brought before a judge sitting alone (who has referred the matter to the Court) for protective measures with a view to obtaining, on the basis of the prohibition in Article 16 of Law No 1730/1987, an injunction restraining the transmission of broadcasts and an order for the seizure of the technical equipment and its sequestration.

3. The defendants relied mainly on Community law and the European Convention on Human Rights. Since, in the view of the national judge, serious problems of Community law arose (in particular in relation to the principle of the free movement of goods and the corresponding exception in Article 36 of the EEC Treaty; to Article 90 of the EEC Treaty, applicable, in conjunction with Articles 3(f), 85 and 86, to public undertakings; and to the general provision of Article 2 of the EEC Treaty) and since also problems were seen in relation to Article 10 of the Convention on Human Rights, an order was made on 2 April 1989 to stay the proceedings and refer 10 questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling which I shall not now repeat but which were received by the Court only on 16 August 1989.

4. Having regard to everything that the parties to the main proceedings, the French Government and the Commission of the European Communities have said, my Opinion is as follows.

B - Opinion

5.1. In view of the critical observations of the plaintiff to the effect that a reference under Article 177 of the EEC Treaty is not possible in proceedings for protective measures (since in Greece proceedings must be begun by an action) and that it is also not appropriate to refer questions to the Court of Justice which have already been settled (an obvious reference to the judgment in Case C-155/73(1)), it must straight away be said that that is no ground for finding that the reference is inadmissible.

6. There is well-established authority as regards the first point (Cases C-29/69(2) and C-78/70(3)).

7. As regards, on the other hand, the preliminary ruling in Case

C-155/73, it is significant for the purposes of the present proceedings that in the questions which are now referred to the Court it is obvious that additional aspects are mentioned. In principle however it must be said that even after certain legal questions have been clarified, a national court remains at liberty to refer to the Court once again a question which has been dealt with if in its view it has not been sufficiently clarified.

8.2. As far as concerns the first question, namely whether a law which allows a single television broadcaster to have a television monopoly for the entire territory of a Member State and to make television broadcasts of any kind is consistent with Community law, it must first be observed that in proceedings under Article 177 of the EEC Treaty, as has been repeatedly stressed in the case-law, the Court cannot judge the compatibility of national laws with Community law. It can only - and the question must be reframed accordingly - interpret Community law in relation to the facts at issue in the main proceedings and thus put the national court in a position to form a judgment on the applicability of national law (which, moreover, contrary to the view of the plaintiff in the main proceedings, also applies in regard to constitutional law, which has no precedence over Community law).

9. It may then be said, with regard to the first question, that there is nothing in Community law to suggest that monopolies are in principle illegal. That follows already from Article 37 of the Treaty which only requires monopolies of a commercial character to be adjusted in order to ensure that there is no discrimination between nationals of Member States. The same may also be inferred from Article 90 of the Treaty under which on the one hand it is possible to grant undertakings exclusive rights (admittedly with the proviso that no measures are adopted which are incompatible with the Treaty and in particular with Articles 7 and 85 to 94 thereof) and in which, on the other hand, in relation to financial monopolies, there is reference only to a limited application of the provisions of the Treaty. This was made clear in the abovementioned judgment in Case C-155/73, in which it is stressed that the Treaty does not prevent Member States from removing television broadcasts from competition by granting one or more institutions the exclusive right to broadcast and that such a monopoly is not incompatible with Article 86.

10. As regards moreover the reference in that judgment, in connection with State television monopolies, to "considerations of the public interest" no doubt it is possible to agree with the Commission that in the plaintiff' s case that condition is fulfilled. In that respect the definition of the applicant' s tasks in Article 2 of Law No 1730/1987 and in Article 15 of the Greek Constitution may be cited and also the fact that it is not a question of the protection of an activity of an economic character against competitors (since the plaintiff' s activity is not, under Article 2 of Law No 1730/1987, of a profit-making nature).

11. If it is not desired to let those observations suffice with respect to the first question (and there is reason for this in view of the broad terms of the questions and the observations of the parties), then the following considerations may be borne in mind.

12. As you know, the Commission has put forward observations in relation to the principle of freedom to provide services which assume that for the works of authors from other Member States, contracts for licences can be concluded only with the television monopoly and that this may lead to a limitation of the corresponding demand. It did however rightly add that this does not in itself amount to a restriction for the purposes of the Treaty. That could be said only if State measures resulted in discrimination in favour of national works (nothing, however, was said about that); if there were on the other hand independent conduct by the television monopoly in that regard, it would fall to be judged only under Article 86 of the Treaty.

13. I can be just as brief with regard to the observations - also made by the Commission - in respect of the right of establishment which are to the effect that the existence of the television monopoly involves the exclusion of the establishment of other undertakings in the same field.

14. What matters here is that the restrictions affect domestic and foreign undertakings in the same way so that there can be no question of disregard of the principle of national treatment which is to be inferred from Article 52 of the Treaty.

15. On the other hand, another observation, also emanating from the Commission, deserves greater attention. It is based on the one hand on the fact that television broadcasts, according to the case-law (see the judgments in Cases C-155/73 and C-352/85(4)), are to be regarded as services for the purposes of the Treaty. On the other hand, it is based on the assumption that the plaintiff in the main proceedings has, according to Law No 1730/1987, a monopoly as regards the retransmission of broadcasts from other Member States. (The national court must ultimately decide whether this is actually the case and, as you know, it was vigorously contested at the hearing. In any event, in view of what was said, one may well have the impression that in Greek case-law there are strong indications that the Commission' s view is correct and that in consequence it may be accepted that the 1989 Law was concerned in that respect only to clarify the law by an unambiguous provision).

16. Assuming that programmes from other Member States none the less to a certain extent compete with national programmes (since any linguistic problems do not apply to the whole population or to every kind of broadcast), the Commission thinks that the concentrations of the monopoly to broadcast its own programmes and of the monopoly to retransmit foreign programmes in the same hands must, from the point of view of Community law, appear just as questionable as the facts in Case C-59/75(5) (as we know, that case was concerned with a tobacco monopoly which had its own production activity and an exclusive right to import; the Court held that the latter right constituted discrimination within the meaning of Article 37 of the Treaty) and should be abolished.

17. That in my opinion must be accepted. It is of no consequence that the case cited was concerned with Article 37, which comes under Chapter 2 of the Treaty relating to quantitative restrictions. The prohibition of discrimination - and discrimination is to be regarded as a restriction within the meaning of Article 59 - also applies to the provision of services (see Case C-352/85(6)). It is, however, in fact easy to imagine the danger of discrimination against foreign broadcasts where a monopoly undertaking has its own production company and is entrusted (as is apparent from the preamble to Law No 1730/1987) with the special task of furthering and maintaining the national identity. It may moreover be accepted that the best means to "ensure" (this expression is used in the judgment in Case C-59/75) that there is no such danger is to separate the areas covered by the monopoly, that is to say, to abolish the retransmission monopoly. It cannot therefore be accepted as sufficient that since October 1988 the plaintiff in the main proceedings has in fact retransmitted 10 European programmes broadcast via satellite, since that is obviously a mere practice which may be changed at any time and is not founded on requirements laid down by statute. It is likewise not sufficient to cite the obligation (laid down, moreover, only in the 1989 Law) to plan the plaintiff' s programme in such a way as to ensure that one half of it is composed of European programmes, for this still leaves considerable room for choice, in the exercise of which serious competitors may easily be placed at a disadvantage, since the domestic production also comes within the European programmes section.

18. Whilst therefore there can be no denying that the organization of the plaintiff' s television monopoly, at least under Law No 1730/1987, gives rise to serious reservations from the point of view of Community law, it is of no avail, and let me say this also, for the purpose of dispelling them, that the restrictions must be regarded as acceptable in this sphere on grounds of public policy (which is also mentioned in Article 56) or the general interest. Although it was mentioned in the judgment in Case

C-52/79(7) in relation to the broadcasting of advertisements, it must not be overlooked that in the main proceedings the issue is clearly not one of preventing advertisements (which, moreover, as the Commission rightly observed, could be achieved by less severe measures). Nor does there seem to be any attempt to avert dangers to public policy on other grounds which could arise from foreign television broadcasts. Finally, there is also no question of justification on technical grounds (avoidance of disturbances in view of a limited number of available channels). In that respect the observation that the plaintiff was a long way from using all the 49 available channels (but, evidently, only five) was not challenged and in that respect it is certainly worthy of note that now, according to the 1989 Law, local transmitters can be authorized.

19. It could thus be held with regard to the first question that an organization of a television monopoly whereby the body holding the monopoly has both the exclusive right to broadcast domestic programmes and to retransmit foreign broadcasts is scarcely compatible with Community law.

20. To this it is certainly necessary to add that, in view of what we have heard, it seems highly questionable whether that finding is relevant to the case which is the subject of the main proceedings, since what is at issue is apparently only the broadcasting of local programmes which are produced by the defendants themselves. If that is in fact so (and this is something which ultimately the national judge must decide), the fact that the grant to the plaintiff of the retransmission monopoly must be regarded as unlawful (on the basis of the judgment in Case C-59/75) would scarcely be of assistance. It would then be a matter of purely internal nature for which Community law offers no basis for a solution.

21. It must, moreover, also be borne in mind that now (since the 1989 Law) there is a possibility of authorizing local television stations (of which the defendants have made use by lodging an application); if, however, after the necessary administrative structure has been set up, authorization is in fact granted, it is impossible to see how the applications in the main proceedings can succeed.(8)

22.3. The second and third questions, to which I shall now turn and which I shall deal with together since they are concerned with problems of the free movement of goods, relate firstly to the problem as to whether there is an infringement of Article 9 of the EEC Treaty (because technical material, films and other products which can be used for the broadcasting of television programmes can be intended only for the holder of the monopoly who is at liberty to choose domestic material); the second problem is whether the grant of an exclusive television franchise to an operator may be regarded as a measure having equivalent effect within the meaning of Article 30 of the EEC Treaty.

23.(a) I can again deal with the first part of those questions very briefly. The French Government rightly observes that Article 9, which relates to the customs union, has no bearing on quantitative restrictions on imports but, as the relevant case-law shows, concerns only obstacles to imports by means of charges. Since however there is nothing to show that the problems arising from the Greek television monopoly have anything to do with charges levied on imports it can certainly be said that arguments based on Article 9 of the Treaty have no relevance to the main proceedings.

24.(b) On the other hand, as far as concerns Article 30, it is necessary to point out, as the Commission has done, that the existence of a monopoly, as such, and the fact that it has a right of selection in acquiring the necessary material do not appear to be open to objection from the point of view of Article 30.

25. Objections would arise only if there were discrimination, that is if domestic products were unjustifiably favoured when the right of selection was exercised. In that respect reference may be made to the above mentioned judgment in Case C-155/73 which in paragraphs 7 and 8 describes such conduct as unlawful and also stresses that the exclusive right should not be used to favour, within the Community, particular trade channels or particular commercial operators in relation to others. Similarly, in the judgments in Cases C-271/81(9) and C-30/87(10) relating to monopolies in the provisions of services which may indirectly affect trade between Member States, it is held that such monopolies would infringe the principle of the free movement of goods if there were discrimination against imported products as compared with domestic products.

26. It must also be added, however, that Article 30 applies only if the discriminatory conduct may be attributed to the State; if, on the other hand, what is in point is an independent decision of the monopoly, this can at most be considered from the angle of Article 86 of the Treaty. The national judge must decide what the position in the present case is in that respect. It is also relevant in that regard whether products from other Member States are in fact not considered or whether in acquiring material an objective choice is ensured, because the plaintiff, as it has emphasized, has to adhere to the provisions of Directive 77/62(11) and Decree No 105/89 of the President issued in relation to that directive.

27.4. The fourth question (which is concerned with whether a television monopoly may be justified under Article 36 of the EEC Treaty) likewise calls for few observations.

28. In that respect it is important to note that exclusive television rights are not in principle incompatible with the Treaty and that, in any event, they are, as such, not covered by Article 30 (because they are concerned with the provision of services). This makes it clear that there can also be no question of justification under Article 36, which applies to the free movement of goods.

29. In so far, however, as an obstacle arises to the free movement of goods in the sense of the observations on the previous question (discriminatory conduct by the monopoly attributable to the State), it should be said in that respect (that is, in relation to a phenomenon to which the fourth question almost certainly does not refer) that justification under Article 36 can scarcely be imagined, since it is expressly stated in the last sentence thereof that any restrictions falling for consideration by virtue of Article 36 are not to constitute a means of arbitrary discrimination.

30.5. The next question with which we must now deal relates to Articles 3(f) and 85 of the EEC Treaty. That question requires it to be determined whether the grant of exclusive television rights by the State and their exercise are compatible with the said provisions on competition.

31. So far as Article 3(f) is concerned (it states that the activities of the Community shall include "the institution of a system ensuring that competition in the common market is not distorted"), it is obvious that it is no more than the enunciation of a general principle which had to be given concrete form in other provisions of the Treaty. In itself it cannot therefore constitute a criterion for judging measures taken by undertakings and the State; it can at most do so only if recourse is had at the same time to the other provisions which give it concrete form.

32. In so far as the national court regards Article 85 as such a provision, it is important to note that Article 85 presupposes agreements between undertakings, decisions by associations of undertakings and concerted practices. Since however nothing whatsoever of that nature was mentioned in the order making the reference (the reference at the hearing to the merger - by statute - of two former Greek television undertakings is obviously of no importance), there is no point, in my opinion, of expending more effort on the interpretation of that provision in the present case.

33. For that reason it is probably also superfluous to refer to the fact that according to our case-law (Case C-66/86)(12)Member States are required not to adopt measures which could deprive the competition rules of their "effectiveness". In connection with Article 85 that can at most mean that State measures may not, for example, encourage or bring about the conclusion of agreements between various undertakings.

34. To this it may furthermore be added (with reference to the sixth question which involves Article 90(2)) that, even assuming that the plaintiff is to be regarded as an undertaking entrusted, within the meaning of Article 90(2), with the operation of services of general economic interest, that provision, in conjunction with Articles 3(f) and 85, supplies nothing of relevance to the main proceedings because in the present case the latter provisions are of no significance.

35.6. I come then to questions seven and eight which apparently refer to Article 86 of the EEC Treaty. They seek to ascertain whether an undertaking which has been granted a monopoly on television broadcasting of any kind throughout the national territory of a Member State holds a dominant position in a substantial part of the common market and whether in certain respects there may be said to be an abuse of that position (mention is made of the fixing by the undertaking of monopoly prices for television advertisements and of preferential prices and reference is made to activities which exclude competition because the broadcast of advertisements is possible only through the monopoly and only the monopoly can broadcast films and television programmes).

36. In that respect it is appropriate also to refer to a factor deriving from the sixth question (in which, as we know, mention is made of an undertaking entrusted with services of general economic interest within the meaning of Article 90). It is quite clear that the main proceedings are concerned not with any specific conduct of the plaintiff in the market (which moreover the national court would have to appraise - see paragraph 18 of the judgment in Case C-155/73) but with the question whether a monopoly, created by the State, of the kind held by the plaintiff is compatible with Community law.

37.(a) Assuming that the plaintiff is an undertaking within the meaning of Article 90 (I said at the outset that it was a public undertaking under State control), it follows from that provision that the Hellenic Republic may not adopt with respect to that undertaking any measures incompatible with Articles 85 to 94 (including Article 86, which is here particularly in point).

38. That does not mean that it is unlawful to create a monopoly and to establish a dominant position, which the plaintiff undoubtedly holds (not least because it alone has a network of television transmitters and is financed by fees). That emerges clearly from paragraph 17 of the judgment in Case C-311/84.(13)

39. The State however cannot create a structure which, if it were created by an undertaking holding a dominant position on the market, would be regarded as an abuse within the meaning of Article 86. In that respect reference should be made to the judgment in Case C-6/72(14) in which it was held that Article 3(f) requires that competition should not be eliminated and that it is to be regarded as an abuse within Article 86 if an undertaking in a dominant position strengthens that position in such a way that competition is substantially fettered. It is also appropriate in that regard to recall to mind the judgment in Case C-311/84 in which it was held that it was an abuse within the meaning of Article 86 for an undertaking in a dominant position (or an undertaking belonging to the same group) to reserve for itself an ancillary task which could be carried out by a third undertaking.

40. In the light of that case-law one may in fact, as the Commission has done, express reservations regarding the fact that the applicant has been granted a comprehensive monopoly in areas with divergent interests (the broadcasting of its own programmes and the retransmission of foreign broadcasts). An undertaking in a dominant position could clearly not, in conformity with Article 86, itself create such a situation because, as I have already mentioned in another connection, inherent therein is the danger of discrimination against foreign products and because this - as it must be assumed that the undertaking favours its own products - must be regarded as a kind of limitation of production contrary to Article 86(b).

41. Since it must also be accepted that the other conditions specified in Article 86 are satisfied (where foreign products are placed at a disadvantage it is certain that trade between Member States is affected and it is likewise certain that Greece must be regarded as a substantial part of the common market), it must therefore be concluded that in so far as the plaintiff has been granted a dual monopoly there is an abuse within the meaning of Article 86 which under Article 90(2) the Member State is prohibited from encouraging.

42. On the other hand, no more need now be said about the other possible abuses expressly mentioned in the order for reference (for example, in relation to the plaintiff' s pricing practices), since there is no evidence to suggest that the State exerts any influence on these matters (which, as has already been said, it would be for the national court to determine).

43. Similarly, it is probably not necessary now to discuss further the abuse mentioned at the hearing, constituted by the plaintiff' s refusal to allow local broadcasts. Even if the plaintiff had in that respect in fact a power of decision under the statute applicable in the present case (grant or refusal of authorization), the determining factor for the purposes of the present case would be that such conduct vis-à-vis the defendants does not fall under Article 86 because, as we also heard at the hearing, it is concerned only with the broadcasting of local programmes and so there can be no question of affecting trade between Member States.

44.(b) I must on the other hand still say a few words about an aspect referred to in the sixth question which is relevant in the present context, that is to say, about the problem of what is to be gleaned from Article 90(2) (which, with respect to undertakings entrusted with services of general economic interest, provides that the competition rules of the Treaty apply in so far as they do not obstruct the performance of the particular tasks assigned to such undertakings).

45. In my opinion it can at once be said that it seems wholly impossible to maintain that Article 86 is not at all applicable to the plaintiff by reason of Article 90(2). Article 90(2) must be strictly interpreted and that is why the criterion must be what is indispensible for the performance of the particular tasks assigned to such undertakings. It was however rightly pointed out that the particular tasks assigned to the plaintiff under the Greek Constitution were to be regarded above all in connection with its own productions and that on the other hand they are not of any consequence with respect to the retransmission of foreign broadcasts. It may also be noted on this point that the relaxation of the monopoly under the 1989 Law (according to which local transmitters can also be authorized) permits the conclusion that the performance of the tasks assigned to the plaintiff certainly does not depend on its having a dual monopoly. Should, however, there exist other objections with respect to the retransmission of foreign broadcasts (for example in the field of advertisements), it would be necessary to agree with the Commission that the aim could be achieved by less restrictive means than the grant to the plaintiff of a monopoly in the matter of retransmission.

46.7. All that now remains is to consider the problem, raised in questions nine and ten, as to whether the plaintiff' s television monopoly is compatible with the objective (expressed in the preamble to the EEC Treaty and in Article 2 thereof) of the constant improvement of the living conditions of the peoples of Europe and with Article 10 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights.

47.(a) On the first point, the Commission has, in my view rightly, contended that the abovementioned texts delineate only the aims of the EEC Treaty and the objectives pursued by the creation of the Community. At most they enunciate general obligations of the Member States and the Community institutions and their main function is thus to furnish criteria of interpretation which may be of use in applying specific provisions relating to concrete measures. Indeed it is scarcely conceivable that anything could be derived from those texts, and especially from the part of Article 2 which is expressly mentioned in question 9, which could serve as a criterion for judging a national television monopoly and would be capable of establishing precise obligations on the part of the Member States. If anything, it would be the reference not so much to the "accelerated raising of their standard of living" that would fall for consideration as the reference to the elimination of "the barriers which divide Europe" and the encouragement of "closer relations between the States belonging" to the Community.

48.(b) On the other hand, as regards Article 10 of the Convention on Human Rights (there is mention in it inter alia of the freedom to receive information or ideas regardless of frontiers, albeit evidently subject to certain reservations), it is probably not necessary to consider further the plaintiff' s view that the main function of that provision is to ensure unbiased information and that it says nothing about the lawfulness of television monopolies, which were in fact common when the Convention was signed.

49. The rules of the Convention are to be regarded as part of the Community legal order. In the "television directive"(15) it is stated that Article 10(1) of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms which has been ratified by all the Member States is, as applied to the broadcasting and distribution of television services, a specific manifestation in Community law of a more general principle, namely freedom of expression. That right must therefore be respected by the Community institutions.

50. It is however also clear that it is not primarily the Court of Justice which is called upon to judge alleged or actual infringements by the Member States of the human rights protected by that Convention (that is a matter for the institutions designated by the Convention on Human Rights); in particular, it does not fall to the Court to examine the compatibility of the rules of the Member States with the Convention on Human Rights (this has been clearly established in the case-law; see the judgment in Joined Cases C-60 and C-61/84(16)).

51. If, however, one adheres to the Court' s statement in its judgment in Case C-4/73(17) to the effect that the Convention on Human Rights can supply guidelines which should be followed within the framework of Community law, and if one is minded to apply this in respect of Article 90(2) - in connection with the assessment of the general interest which is relevant in regard to exclusive television rights - it still has to be acknowledged that, in the light of what we have learned from the practice of the Commission on Human Rights and the Court of Human Rights on the subject of Article 10 of the Convention with respect to television monopolies, it almost certainly yields nothing, for the purpose of judging television monopolies, which goes beyond what has already been said in connection with the principle of the freedom to provide services and with Article 90(1) in conjunction with Article 86.

C - Conclusion

52. In conclusion, my summary is as follows. In my view the questions from the Thessaloniki court should be answered as follows:

"(a) A Law authorizing a single television company to exercise a monopoly throughout the territory of a Member State and to transmit television broadcasts of all kinds calls for reservations in the light of Article 59 of the EEC Treaty (which requires the abolition of restrictions on the freedom to provide services), since the combination of a monopoly on domestic broadcasting and a monopoly for the retransmission of foreign broadcasts may give rise to discrimination against the latter.

(b) If the television industry is organized in that way, the provisions on the free movement of goods will be infringed only if the monopoly discriminates against foreign products and that result is attributable to the State which controls the monopoly. Such conduct cannot be justified on the basis of Article 36 of the Treaty.

(c) Article 90 of the Treaty does not prohibit the creation of a monopoly over television broadcasts. However, if one undertaking is vested with both exclusive broadcasting rights and retransmission rights, that must be regarded as an ostensibly illegal measure by virtue of the combined provisions of Articles 90 and 86, which cannot be justified by virtue of Article 90(2).

(d) The preamble to the Treaty and Article 2 thereof do not in themselves provide any criterion for the appraisal of national television monopolies.

(e) The right to freedom of expression applied to broadcasting and the distribution of television services, embodied in Article 10(1) of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, also represents a specific manifestation, in Community law, of a more general principle, namely freedom of expression. For the purpose of appraising television monopolies, it is not possible to derive from that principle anything that goes beyond the foregoing conclusions."

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Lenz delivered on 13 March 1991.
Commission of the European Communities v Portuguese Republic.
Failure to publish notice of a supply contract.
Case C-247/89.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

A - Facts

1. In these proceedings the Commission seeks a declaration that the Portuguese Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty. It asserts that, pursuant to the provisions of Directive 77/62/EEC, (1) the tendering procedure organized by the firm Aeroportos e Navigaçao Aérea ("ANA-EP") on 29 August 1987 for the supply and assembly of a telephone exchange for Lisbon airport should have been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

2. Portugal maintains that the application is inadmissible: since ANA-EP is a legal person governed by public law empowered to act autonomously in administrative and financial matters and in regard to its assets, its conduct cannot be attributed to the State; failure to transpose the directive was an infringement of the general obligation imposed by the directive, which should be distinguished from the specific requirement in Article 9 that certain tendering procedures be published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

3. Portugal claims that the reasoned opinion delivered in the pre-litigation procedure was inadequate. A reasoned opinion, it contends, must contain a clear position on all the arguments put forward by the defendant Member State. Moreover, there was a contradiction between the reasoned opinion and the application: the latter extended the subject-matter of the dispute, which was not permitted.

4. The Portuguese Government was misled: it was able to assume that the legislative change which it had proposed in regard to the State' s supervisory powers over supply contracts for public undertakings would cure the Treaty infringement at least for the future. It was only in the application that the Commission first contended that the proposed change was incapable of curing the infringement.

5. Portugal argues finally that the reasoned opinion gave no indication of what action the Commission believed should have been taken in order to cure the infringement.

6. The Portuguese Government further maintains that ANA-EP is excluded from the scope of the directive, since, as a body which administers transport services, it is covered by the exception contained in Article 2(2) of the directive. Accordingly the supply contract in question was not a supply contract within the meaning of the directive since it was awarded under private law. Nor should the firm be regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of the directive, since the tendering procedure in question was not subject to control by the State.

7. The Commission claims that the Court should:

1. Declare that, by failing to send to the Official Publications Office of the European Communities for publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities a notice of the open tendering procedure for the supply and assembly of a telephone exchange for Lisbon airport, the Portuguese Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Title III, in particular Article 9, of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts;

and

2. Order the Portuguese Republic to pay the costs of the proceedings.

8. The Portuguese Government contends that the Court should:

1. Declare its objection of inadmissibility well founded, and accordingly dismiss the application; in the alternative, hold that it has not failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty, and dismiss the application accordingly;

2. Order the applicant to pay the costs of the proceedings.

9. For the parties' factual and legal submissions I refer to the Report for the Hearing. I shall advert to them below only where the reasoning so requires.

B - Opinion

1. Admissibility

10. In considering whether the application is admissible it is necessary to examine whether ANA-EP' s failure to publish a notice of the tendering procedure in the Official Journal of the European Communities can be attributed to the Portuguese State. At the material time, 29 August 1987, Directive 77/62 had still not been implemented in Portuguese law, and there was accordingly no national implementing measure obliging ANA-EP to act in accordance with the requirements of the directive.

11. Since Portugal was not a Member State of the European Communities at the time Directive 77/62 was adopted, a duty to implement the directive could only arise subsequently, on Portuguese accession.

12. Article 392 of the Act of Accession provides:

> "Upon accession, the new Member States shall be considered as being addressees of and as having received notification of Directives and Decisions within the meaning of Article 189 of the EEC Treaty..., provided that those directives, recommendations and decisions have been notified to all present Member States."

Article 395 of the Act of Accession reads:

> "The new Member States shall put into effect the measures necessary for them to comply, from the date of accession, with the provisions of Directives and Decisions within the meaning of Article 189 of the EEC Treaty ..., unless a time limit is provided for in the list of Annex XXXVI or in any other provisions of this Act."

13. The aforementioned transitional provisions in the Act of Accession are construed by the Commission as meaning, in relation to the present case, that the directive should have been implemented at the date of accession, 1 January 1986.

14. However, even assuming that the duty to act to implement the directive only arose on 1 January 1986, and that the Portuguese Republic should be allowed as much time to transpose it as were the other Member States - eighteen months, pursuant to Article 30 - it would have had to be implemented in national law by the end of June 1987 at the latest.

15. At the time of the tendering procedure, on 29 August 1987, the defendant Member State was unquestionably in default. Failure to act on the part of a Member State is a precondition for a directive being directly applicable, always providing that it contains a clear and unambiguous obligation. The obligation contained in Article 9 of the directive requiring publication in the Official Journal is indeed clear and unambiguous.

16. However, a distinction must be made between the situation of a directive being directly applicable in favour of an individual on whom it confers subjective rights the assertion of which cannot be eluded by a Member State pleading its own infringement of Community law, and the question of whether the conduct of independent legal persons may be attributed to a Member State and hence deemed to constitute an infringement of the Treaty. In the former case an individual may rely on the directive against organizations which are subject to control by the State, or which possess special powers by comparison with the rules which are applicable to relations between individuals. (2) Accordingly a body falls to be regarded as a State body, regardless of its legal form, if it has been entrusted, by legislation, with the provision of a public service under the authority of the State and if, to that end, special powers have been conferred on it. (3)

17. It is consequently quite possible for an organization to be deemed to be "the State", even if, in formal terms, it does not constitute part of the State. (4) Thus if a formally independent authority is dependent on the public authorities in personnel, material or financial terms, it may be appropriate to deem it to be a State body within the meaning of the provision.

18. The above abstract description of a State body in the broadest sense of the term is not sufficient, in Treaty infringement proceedings, to justify attributing the specific conduct complained of to the Member State concerned. The latter must be in some way legally responsible for the conduct. Such responsibility may arise at a number of levels. A Member State might create or support a body in order to promote commercial practices incompatible with Community law; (5) or initiate a financial benefit which infringes Community law and which moreover only became definitive when approved by the State concerned. (6) The essential feature is thus dependence on the State: that is the criterion whereby legally significant actions on the part of the body concerned may be attributed to the Member State.

19. ANA-EP is a legal person governed by public law, empowered to act autonomously in regard to its administration, finances and assets. The mere fact that ANA-EP can be classified as a public undertaking as a result of the State' s dominant influence over appointments to its organs does not suffice for actions on the part of the undertaking to be automatically attributed to the State. For that, public authorities would need to be able to influence matters related to the directive - i.e., the award of supply contracts, as contemplated by the directive.

20. A consideration of whether State control existed in a manner such as to permit the State to influence the award of supply contracts presupposes an examination of Portuguese law, in particular the general provisions applicable to all public undertakings, and the specific rules setting up ANA-EP and establishing its constitution.

21. The parties disagree on how those provisions should be interpreted. That question merges moreover with the question of ANA-EP' s status as a contracting authority within the meaning of the Directive. According to the definition of a contracting authority in Portugal contained in Annex 1 to the directive and common to all language versions, the essential characteristic is that the award of public supply contracts should be subject to State control.

22. I shall therefore leave the question of State control and influence open at present, and address questions of Community law.

23. The Portuguese Government finds further objections to the admissibility of the application in the form and content of the reasoned opinion and in the Commission' s conduct in the pre-litigation procedure. In point of fact all the objections relate to the legislative change proposed by the Portuguese Government in the pre-litigation procedure, whereby restrictions on the control of public undertakings were to be introduced in the general legislation governing all public undertakings. The Government maintains that as a result of the Commission' s conduct it was allowed to believe that the proposed amendment to the law would cure the Treaty infringement at least as to the future. In the reasoned opinion the Commission did not advert to that proposal, nor did it indicate any action which the Portuguese Government ought to take. In the application, however, the Commission stated that an amendment to the law such as that described could not cure the infringement of the Treaty.

24. I shall deal with these objections together, considering first the charge that the reasoned opinion was not supported by an adequate statement of reasons, and that it should contain an unambiguous response to all the arguments put forward by the defendant Member State.

25. Certainly the reasoned opinion in the pre-litigation procedure, like the whole preliminary procedure in proceedings under Article 169, is intended to permit a dispute to be settled amicably. The Member State in question must therefore be given an opportunity to justify its position, (7) and, where appropriate, to amend its conduct. To that end the form of the reasoned opinion must be such as to "contain a coherent and detailed statement of the reasons which led the Commission to conclude that the State in question has failed to fulfil one of its obligations under the Treaty". (8)

26. In a reasoned opinion the Commission may specify the extent of the Member State' s obligations. (9) It may also, in the course of the dialogue which the pre-litigation procedure is intended to facilitate, indicate to the Member State what action would be appropriate in order to cure the infringement.

27. However, the Commission is not under a duty to indicate all the measures which it regards as being capable of eliminating the infringement in question. That is particularly clear where there are a number of possible solutions, the Member State being free to select which means to use.

28. On the other hand, if a Member State is clearly working to eliminate a problem, but the Commission believes that the measures contemplated are inappropriate, the latter would be guilty of bad faith if it failed to make that view known. In such circumstances the pre-litigation procedure cannot fulfil its role of enabling a dispute to be settled amicably.

29. The Commission' s reasoned opinion which preceded these Treaty infringement proceedings is a document of several pages that sets out the facts and the points at issue in a coherent and comprehensible way. The Commission relates the facts to the relevant provisions of the directive, leaving no doubt as what it is that the Member State in question stands accused of: failure to publish notice of the tendering procedure throughout the Community. The parties' differences of opinion on the law as it relates to the case likewise emerge clearly from the reasoning.

30. It is true that no way of remedying the infringement is mentioned in the reasoned opinion. It is, however, clear that at an early stage there was disagreement over the legal appraisal of the facts. The Portuguese Government did not endorse the Commission' s view of the law; it considered that the Treaty had not been infringed.

31. While the Court' s case-law requires the obligations which a Member State must fulfil to be indicated precisely in the reasoned opinion, (10) that does not necessarily include the measures needed to eliminate the infringement. The obligation which, the Commission believes, the defendant Member State should have fulfilled was publication of the tendering procedure in the Official Journal of the European Communities. That is conveyed unmistakeably in the reasoned opinion; that opinion was therefore adequately reasoned.

32. If, in the pre-litigation procedure, the Portuguese Government did indeed intimate its desire to preclude any infringement of the Treaty in the future by amending the law, and if the Commission was indeed convinced that such a course of action would fail to achieve the desired end, then it was unhelpful to refrain from informing the Portuguese Government of that view, thereby obstructing a constructive resolution of the dispute. Yet even if such conduct does run counter to the purpose of the pre-litigation procedure, it cannot make the Treaty infringement action inadmissible since the defendant Member State has refused to admit that any infringement occurred.

33. There is no conflict between the reasoned opinion and the application, since the issue remains the failure to publish a notice of the tendering procedure in the Official Journal of the European Communities. The Commission' s contention in the application that the legislative amendment proposed by the Portuguese Government was not capable of curing the infringement does not represent a broadening of the subject-matter of the proceedings. The substantive charge remained the same in the pre-litigation procedure and in the application; only the legal arguments were amplified.

34. A separate issue is whether there is a legal interest in bringing Treaty infringement proceedings in the case of a past Treaty infringement which has been terminated. Whether an interest in bringing the present action exists would appear to be questionable inasmuch as the contract was awarded on the basis of the tendering procedure of 29 August 1987 without that tendering procedure having been published in conformity with the directive. The award of the contract cannot now be undone; consequently, there is no longer any possibility of influencing a situation which was conclusively determined by events in the past.

35. Initially it might well have been possible to repeat the tendering procedure while complying with the publication provisions laid down in Community law. However, that would have presupposed an admission of wrongful conduct. At no time has the Portuguese Government accepted that its conduct was contrary to the Treaty. Its defence before this Court continues to be that the tendering procedure concerned was not covered by Directive 77/62. Similar conduct in the future cannot be ruled out in the absence of an acknowledgement that it was at fault.

36. The mere fact that there is still a dispute about whether or not a Treaty infringement occurred constitutes a reason for concluding that there is a legal interest in bringing proceedings, in order to obviate similar cases in the future. (11) It is also appropriate to point out that a Member State may not rely on a fait accompli for which it is responsible in order to elude an application against it. (12)

37. The Commission' s application should be ruled admissible, subject to a review of the degree of State control over supply contracts of the type described above.

2. Merits

38. The Portuguese Government argues that the supply contract awarded by ANA-EP does not fall within the ambit of Directive 77/62. First, ANA-EP is covered by the sectoral exception for transport operators contained in Article 2 of the Directive. Secondly, the directive was not applicable to the supply contract in question, since the contract had to be concluded according to the formal requirements of private law, whereas the Directive only covers supply contracts awarded under public law. Lastly, ANA-EP cannot be regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of the directive.

39. (a) Article 2 of Directive 77/62 contains a sectoral exception in respect of public supply contracts awarded by bodies which administer transport services. The Commission argues that ANA-EP cannot be regarded as a body which administers transport services within the meaning of the Directive. In support of its case it refers to the Commission' s Guide to the Community Rules on Open Government Procurement, (13) a manual on the application and interpretation of the public procurement directives. It contains the following passage:

> "In the transport sector the exception covers organizations actually undertaking the carriage of passengers or goods, but not, for example, those running ports or airports, which are covered by the directive."

40. In support of its views the Commission also refers to the amendment to the exception effected by Directive 88/295. Since that reformulation in 1988 the exception relating to the transport sector has read as follows:-

"This directive shall not apply to:

(a) public supply contracts awarded by carriers by land, air, sea or inland waterway;..."

41. The Commission' s view is that this is no more than a clarification involving no substantive change to the scope of the exception.

42. The first point to bear in mind is that it is immaterial to the question before the Court whether the reformulation actually changed the substance of the exception, since at the time of the tendering procedure, August 1987, the original version of Article 2(2)(a) of Directive 77/62 was still in force. As to the reformulation of the exception by Directive 88/295, I shall merely point out that the recitals refer - at least in the German version - to a new definition of the sectoral exceptions, which suggests that the scope of the rules on exceptions was indeed changed.

43. Whether ANA-EP comes within the scope of the directive in its original version can only be determined after an examination of the exception in its legislative context. The words "body which administers transport services" suggest that the whole sector was covered. ANA-EP' s task, consisting in the administration of several Portuguese airports, is indissolubly linked to the pure transport function - the carriage by air of passengers and goods. Air transport is inconceivable without the provision of the requisite infrastructure and airport organization.

44. Directive 90/531, which has since been adopted, concerns the public procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, (14) and affords some insight into the legislative methodology of the directives on the award of public contracts (supply contracts and building contracts), and on the sectors excluded from their scope. The sectors now covered by Directive 90/531 were excluded ab initio from the scope of the directive on the award of public contracts. The underlying idea was to avoid impairing the competitive position of the undertakings concerned vis-à-vis private undertakings, and to prevent unequal treatment ensuing from the variety of legal forms of the bodies providing public services in Member States. The new directive placed the sectors which had initially been excluded under significantly less stringent rules for tendering procedures for public contracts.

45. The foregoing view of the legislative context is underpinned by the preamble to Directive 90/531. These state, for example:

"... the White Paper on the completion of the internal market... contains ... sectors which are currently excluded from... Directive 77/62...

... among such excluded sectors are those concerning the provision of water, energy and transport services...

... the main reason for their exclusion was that entities providing such services are in some cases governed by public law, in others by private law".

46. ANA-EP is unquestionably covered by the new directive on the excluded sectors. This is apparent from Article 2, which states:

"(1) This directive shall apply to contracting entities which:

(a) are public authorities or public undertakings and exercise one of the activities referred to in paragraph 2;

...

(2) Relevant activities for the purposes of this directive shall be:

...

(b) the exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of:

...

(ii) the provision of airport, maritime or inland port or other terminal facilities to carriers by air, sea or inland waterway;

...

(6) The contracting entities listed in Annexes I to X shall fulfil the criteria set out above...."

In Annex VIII of the new Directive, ANA-EP is expressly mentioned under Portugal.

47. The fact that ANA-EP is covered by Directive 90/531 prompts the logical inference that it was previously excluded from the scope of Directive 77/62. That conclusion is not negated by the Commission' s claim that transport undertakings such as ANA-EP were originally covered by the more stringent provisions of Directive 77/62, and only subsequently made subject to the less stringent rules of the new directive. That line of argument runs counter to the scheme and purpose of the directives on the award of public supply contracts.

48. Indeed, the amendment to Directive 77/62 introduced by Directive 90/531 confirms that view. Its purpose is to enable a clear line to be drawn between the fields covered by the two directives. Article 35 of Directive 90/531 provides that:

"(1) Article 2(2) of Directive 77/62/EEC is hereby replaced by the following:

' (2) This directive shall not apply to:

(a) contracts awarded in the fields referred to in Articles 2, 7, 8 and 9 of Council Directive 90/531/EEC... or fulfilling the conditions in Article 6(2) of the said directive;' ".

49. Thus the sectoral exception in Directive 77/62 is defined as covering the contracting authorities covered by the new Directive and the bodies still not covered even by the new Directive.

50. It follows from the foregoing considerations that at the material time ANA-EP did not fall within the scope of the Directive and that the present action is unfounded.

51. (b) I now turn to the Portuguese Government' s argument that ANA-EP' s supply contract for the supply and assembly of a telephone exchange for Lisbon Airport was not covered by the directive on account of the legal form of the contract concerned. In support of that argument the Portuguese Government relies on the Portuguese version of the text of Annex I to the directive coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts. That version defines contracting authorities as

"Legal persons governed by public law whose supply contracts governed by public law are subject to State control". (15)

52. The parties are in dispute over the question of which language version was binding. Precisely which form of words in which language the parties regarded as decisive in the pre-litigation procedure is not a question on which the outcome of these proceedings will turn. The question to settle is an objective one: which is the binding form of words on the basis of which the legal question falls to be decided?

53. Of course, Directive 77/62 was adopted before Portugal became a Member of the European Communities; obligations under the directive could only arise on the occasion of Portuguese accession. Accordingly the Act of Accession contains adjustments to Directive 77/62 and transitional provisions relating thereto; thus "contracting authority" is defined as follows in Annex I to the Directive:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

"XIII. In Portugal:

legal persons governed by public law whose public supply contracts are subject to State control". (16)

54. The content of Point XIII of Annex I to the directive is the same in all Community languages. The form of words relied on by the Portuguese Government was first incorporated in the directive by Directive 88/295/EEC. It is noteworthy that the linguistic variation is only to be found in the Portuguese text. Whatever the reasons for it - whether it was a mere oversight or a translator' s error - an attempt must be made to construe the provision concerned in a uniform way. The Court has consistently held that the necessity for uniform application and accordingly interpretation make it impossible to consider one version of a text in isolation, but require it to be interpreted on the basis of the intention of its author and the aim pursued, in the light of all language versions. (17)

55. Accordingly the Portuguese Government' s view that only the Portuguese text is binding must be firmly rejected. Nor is it likely that the particular form of words in Portuguese was included in the directive intentionally: were that indeed the case, a contracting authority covered by the directive might elude the rules contained therein simply by selecting a particular legal form for its contract with the prospective supplier. Moreover, the supply contracts covered by the directive are defined at Article 1(a), whereas Annex I specifies the "contracting authorities" defined in Article 1(b): that militates against the view that characteristics of the supply contracts dealt with by the directive may be inferred from Annex I.

56. The question whether the words "contracts governed by public law" may be disregarded need not be finally resolved, since at the time of the tendering procedure for the telephone exchange contract, the version of Annex I to Directive 77/62 that was in force was none other than that resulting from the Act of Accession.

57. The Portuguese Government' s objection that the contract could not have come within the scope of the directive because it had to be concluded under private law must therefore be rejected.

58. (c) The Portuguese Government finally raises the objection that ANA-EP is not a contracting authority within the meaning of the directive. Apart from the fact that ANA-EP is in any case excluded from the scope of the directive because it belongs to the transport sector, the question of whether or not it is a "contracting authority" falls to be determined by Article 1 in conjunction with Annex I to Directive 77/62. Article 1(b) states: "' contracting authorities' shall be the State, regional or local authorities and the legal persons governed by public law or... bodies corresponding thereto as specified in Annex I". Once again Point XIII of Annex I is of relevance. The version which, for the reasons set out above, is relevant to the present proceedings reads "other corporate bodies governed by public law subject to a procedure for the award of contracts".

59. In my view, in determining whether an undertaking is covered by the above definition one must look at the facts of the situation. Thus the issue is not whether an undertaking is subject to some form of State control since, as the Portuguese Government rightly points out, all public undertakings are subject to some form of State control. Even the theoretical possibility of State control in the case of supply contracts is not sufficient. What is required is that, under the terms of the relevant legislation, the contract in question be open to State control in such a way as to enable the public authorities to influence the conclusion of the contract.

60. Whether or not ANA-EP is a legal person governed by public law whose awards of public supply contracts are subject to State control is a question to be determined under the relevant provisions of Portuguese law. ANA-EP was set up under Decree-Law No 246/79 of 20 July 1979, to which its constitution is annexed. No direct control on the part of State bodies over the award of supply contracts of the order of magnitude in question can be inferred from those provisions; however, the general rules governing all public undertakings might well be applicable. These are set out in Decree-Law No 260/76 of 6 April 1976, amended by Decree-Law No 29/84 of 20 January 1984. Article 13 of the Decree-Law states that transactions the value of which exceeds ESC 50 000 000 require approval by the Minister responsible. The possibility of amending that provision was also discussed in the pre-litigation exchanges.

61. The Portuguese Government has submitted that the aforesaid general legislation does not apply to ANA-EP' s transactions since the Decree-Laws in question rank equally in the hierarchy of legislation, with Decree-Law No 246/79, which set up ANA-EP, taking precedence as the more specific enactment. Moreover, Decree-Law No 29/84 had provided that the constitutions of public undertakings were to be brought into line with the general rules within a given period. Since no such adjustments had been made, Decree-Law 246/79 and the constitution of ANA-EP remained in force unchanged.

62. I do not wish to embark here on a detailed examination of Portuguese law. However, it seems to me, on the basis of the general theory of laws, that the mere passing of a deadline by which legislation was due to have been amended cannot itself effect a change in the law. However, that would mean that the supply contract for the Lisbon Airport telephone exchange which fell to be awarded in August 1987 was not subject to State control; ANA-EP would then not be a contracting authority within the meaning of the directive; and the application would have to be dismissed on the basis of that - secondary - consideration.

Costs

63. The decision on costs is governed by Article 69 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court. Article 69(2) states that the unsuccessful party shall be ordered to pay the costs where these have been applied for.

C - Conclusion

64. For the reasons set out above I propose that the Court rule as follows:

1. The application is dismissed;

2. The Commission shall bear the costs of the proceedings.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Tesauro delivered on 17 November 1992.
Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Denmark.
Award of a works contract - Bridge over the "Storebaelt".
Case C-243/89.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

1. In the present case the Commission seeks a declaration from the Court that, in the procedure for inviting tenders for the construction of a bridge across the western channel of the Storebaelt (Great Belt), the Kingdom of Denmark has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 30, 48 and 59 of the EEC Treaty and under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts. (1) The Commission challenges two aspects of the procedure for awarding the contract: a) the inclusion in the general tender conditions of a clause which invited tenders on condition that the greatest possible use was made of Danish materials and consumer goods and of Danish labour and equipment (hereinafter the "Danish content clause"); b) the fact that the negotiations with the selected consortium were conducted on the basis of a tender which did not comply with the general tender conditions.

2. The facts and the pre-litigation procedure are described in detail in the Report for the Hearing, to which reference is made. Here I shall therefore merely recapitulate, so far as is necessary to make the subsequent observations easier to follow, the essential aspects of the matter.

The contract for the construction of a bridge over the western channel of the Storebaelt was awarded to the European Storebaelt Group (hereinafter "ESG"), one of the five international consortia which were invited to submit tenders under a restricted invitation to tender put out by Aktieselskabet Storebaeltsforbindelsen (hereinafter "Storebaelt"), a company wholly controlled by the Danish State and the contracting authority for the work in question. Storebaelt, which had drawn up three different projects as a basis for tenders, opened talks with the preselected consortia and then pursued negotiations with ESG, which had exercised the option provided for in Condition 3, Clause 3, of the general tender conditions, of submitting an alternative tender; those negotiations ended in the signature of the contract on 26 June 1989.

3. On 18 May 1989, the Commission had contacted the Danish authorities to express its doubts about the compatibility with Community law of both the Danish content clause and the fact that the negotiations with ESG had been conducted on the basis of a tender which did not comply with Condition 3, Clause 3, of the general tender conditions. Not satisfied with the explanations offered by the Danish Government, the Commission sent a letter of formal notice on 21 June 1989 requesting inter alia postponement of the signature of the contract. In reply to that letter the Danish authorities informed the Commission that they did not consider it appropriate to postpone the signing of the contract, but that, by letter of 21 June, they had requested Storebaelt to remove the Danish content clause, so that it no longer appeared in the final contract.

Considering that an infringement had been committed and that removal of the clause in question after the contract had been awarded did not expunge the failure to fulfil obligations, the Commission, by telex message of 14 July 1989, delivered a reasoned opinion addressed to Denmark in which inter alia it stated that, since the contract had already been signed, the only way for the situation to be remedied was to ask Storebaelt to cancel the contract with ESG and to reopen the tendering procedure.

When the Kingdom of Denmark failed to comply with the reasoned opinion, the Commission brought proceedings under Article 169 and also applied for interim measures pursuant to Article 186 of the Treaty, but only in respect of its objection to the Danish content clause.

4. At the hearing of the application for interim measures on 22 September 1989, the Danish Government stated that it recognized that the Danish content clause constituted a breach of the fundamental principle of non-discrimination enshrined in the EEC Treaty and undertook (a) to avoid any discriminatory clause or practice in relation to future contracts for public works or supplies, (b) to ensure that compensation would be paid for the damage incurred by the tenderers provided that they were able to demonstrate that their claims for damages were well founded in Danish law, and (c) in any event to ensure that bidding costs were recovered through arbitration, without the undertakings concerned having to establish that their failure to be awarded the contract was caused by the discriminatory effect of the Danish content clause.

Following that statement, the Commission withdrew its application for interim measures but continued proceedings under Article 169, retaining as one of its grounds of complaint that on which the application for interim measures had been based. Subsequently, however, the Commission, which in its application initiating proceedings had reserved the right at a later date to supplement and develop the grounds of its application, requested ° and for the most part obtained ° from the Danish Government various documents relating to the tendering procedure and to the final version of the contract, on the basis of which it then adduced, in the form of a reply, new reasons in support of its application. That step prompted the Danish Government to raise, in its rejoinder, a series of preliminary objections of inadmissibility directed at both the ground of application concerning the Danish content clause and that concerning the negotiations which took place between Storebaelt and ESG. Those objections of the Danish Government will now be considered together with the two grounds of application relied on by the Commission.

(a) The Danish content clause

5. The Danish Government objects that the Commission is widening the dispute to include clauses in the general tender conditions other than those referred to in the letter of formal notice or the reasoned opinion since, in substance, new pleas in law are thereby introduced, which are contained and developed only in the reply.

Indeed, in the course of the pre-litigation procedure, the Commission referred to only the Danish content clause as laid down in Condition 6, Clause 2, of the general tender conditions; in its application, however, and especially in its reply, it objected to various other clauses, which were either contained in the same tender conditions or introduced for the first time in the final version of the contract with the result that the Danish content condition still features in the contract, particularly in the form of requirements concerning materials.

The Commission seeks to justify that step by claiming that in the pre-litigation procedure its purpose was to challenge the Danish content clause in general and that, therefore, the submissions contained in the reply should be understood as simply amplifying this more general ground of application and do not constitute new separate pleas in law. Indeed, it cannot be denied that the clauses referred to by the Commission both in the originating application and in the reply are in essence no more than particular instances of the Danish content condition as expressed in Condition 6, Clause 2, of the general tender conditions.

6. That said, it should be pointed out that, according to settled case-law, (2) the scope of an application under Article 169 of the Treaty is delimited by the pre-litigation procedure provided for in that article as well as by the forms of order sought, and both the reasoned opinion and the application must be based on the same grounds and pleas in law. Although the Court allows new matters of fact to be raised in the course of an action if they are "of the same kind as those to which the reasoned opinion referred and constituted the same conduct", (3) those facts must nevertheless, according to Article 42(2) of the Rules of Procedure, have occurred after delivery of the reasoned opinion or, in any event, the applicant must have been unaware of them at the time of lodging the application.

In so far, then, as the objections raised for the first time by the Commission in the application and the reply concern clauses in the general tender conditions, and therefore clauses which already existed when the letter of formal notice was sent, the inescapable conclusion according to settled case-law is that the Commission should have, or at least could have, known of them.

It follows that those "discriminatory" clauses may not be taken into consideration in these proceedings: the preliminary objection of inadmissibility raised by the Danish Government must therefore be upheld.

Nevertheless, I must add that, put in those terms, the question is a purely formal one. By that I mean that, if the Danish content clause is incompatible with Community law ° a fact not in dispute ° it seems to me that the defaulting State has a duty in any case to accept the obvious consequences, that is to say, to remove all those provisions which embody the Danish content condition. That the Danish Government was well aware of this is evident both from its reply to the reasoned opinion, in which it gave assurances that the final version of the contract contained no clause analogous to the Danish content condition, and from its statement to the effect that, since it had to remove the Danish content condition before the contract was signed, and therefore had little time in which to act, some specific instructions regarding the use of Danish materials had escaped its notice, simply because it was acting in haste. (4)

7. Next, with regard to those clauses which were included for the first time in the final version of the contract and which, according to the Commission, also formed Danish content specifications, it should first of all be observed that the form of order sought by the Commission in respect of the plea in law in question concerns only the unlawfulness of the procedure for awarding the contract. Therefore, unlike the "discriminatory" clauses in the general and specific tender conditions, those which were added to the final version of the contract cannot have had any influence on the conduct of that procedure. (5) Strictly speaking, therefore, those clauses could serve as the basis for a separate action because, if they are unlawful, they would clearly constitute an infringement of Community law in the course of being committed, since the construction of the bridge is still in progress.

Of course, it could also be argued that to take into consideration, for the purposes of these proceedings, requirements in those clauses which are possibly unlawful, is unlikely to lead to any significant change in the subject-matter of the action, since the grounds of objection are of the same nature as those raised in the reasoned opinion and relate to the same conduct. Besides, if the final version of the contract was in fact drawn up before the reasoned opinion was delivered, it follows that the applicant institution ° which, moreover, cannot be accused of either delay or negligence given the extreme rapidity with which it brought the present proceedings (less than one month elapsed between the commencement of the pre-litigation procedure and the lodging of the application) ° only gained actual knowledge of it after the action had been brought.

However, in view of the Court' s restrictive approach to the question of the widening of the subject-matter of the action to include facts of which the applicant was unaware at the time of the delivery of the reasoned opinion, I propose, having regard to the principles of procedure which govern actions under Article 169, that the preliminary objection of inadmissibility raised by the Danish Government should be allowed on this point, too.

8. Now that it has been established that the subject-matter of the plea under examination is confined to the Danish content clause, as expressed in Condition 6, Clause 2, of the general tender conditions, and bearing in mind that the incompatibility of that clause with Articles 30, 48 and 59 of the Treaty is not in dispute, the first point to be examined is whether or not the Danish Government, in removing the clause in question, complied with the reasoned opinion. Indeed, as will be recalled, that clause was removed before the contract was signed (26 June) and thus before the Commission delivered its reasoned opinion to the Danish Government (14 July). And it is precisely in view of this circumstance that the Danish Government submits that the application should be declared inadmissible or at the very least dismissed, by analogy with the Court' s decision in Case C-362/90 Commission v Italy. (6) In that connection I must point out immediately that in my opinion the case under examination is not comparable with the case just mentioned.

In Case C-362/90 the infringement complained of had already produced all its effects by the time the reasoned opinion was delivered. Furthermore, the Court specifically criticized the Commission for its failure to "act in good time in order to prevent, by means of procedures available to it, the infringement complained of from producing effects and did not even invoke the existence of circumstances preventing it from concluding the pre-litigation procedure laid down in Article 169 of the Treaty before the infringement ceased to exist". (7)

9. The situation in the case now before us is quite different. As I have already mentioned, in its letter of formal notice the Commission not only requested the explanations sought within seven days but also postponement, during that interval, of the signature of the contract. By meeting the Commission' s requests, the Danish Government could therefore have avoided "consummating" its failure to fulfil obligations; instead of doing that, it announced, in the course of the Treaty infringement proceedings, in its reply to the letter of formal notice, that Storebaelt had already signed the contract. The taking of that step precluded the reopening of the procedure for awarding the contract, which is why, in its reasoned opinion, the applicant requested, as the only way to secure compliance with Community law, that the contract be rescinded and the tendering procedure be reopened. Consequently, in so far as the contract was concluded on the basis of an irregular tendering procedure, it seems to me that ° given the undisputed unlawfulness of the Danish content condition ° the existence of an infringement cannot be denied.

It is obvious that the infringement could have been eliminated only by means of a fresh tendering procedure, since the procedure followed was conducted in flagrant breach of Community law. In other words, it unquestionably follows from the fact that the Danish content clause had influenced the submission of the tenders that its subsequent removal, even before signature of the contract, could not in any circumstances have made good such a serious defect in the tendering procedure.

What is more, I think it unlikely that the Danish Government can rely on the Commission' s statement to the effect that it is no longer possible at this stage to secure full compliance with Community law in contending that the form of order sought by the Commission regarding its objection to the Danish content clause is no longer relevant. Indeed, it would be at the very least unusual if a Member State, which had been in a position to prevent the infringement from producing definitive effects, could later rely on the fact that the breach of obligations had already been consummated in order to avoid a declaration, pursuant to Article 171, that it had taken place. The purpose of a ruling by the Court to that effect is not to declare that Storebaelt should have reopened the tendering procedure but, more simply, to declare that the procedure in question was conducted in breach of the applicable provisions of Community law.

In conclusion, to accept the defendant' s contention that the Danish content clause had already been removed before the reasoned opinion was issued and that, consequently, the formal objection to that clause is no longer relevant following the signature of the contract, would be tantamount to rewarding the fact that, even though infringement proceedings were already in progress, the breach of obligations had been "consummated".

One final observation on this point. In my view, it is all too clear that, if the Court were to accept the argument of the Danish Government, the whole raison d' être of the infringement proceedings would be rendered nugatory where there is a quite specific failure to fulfil obligations, that is to say where there is a risk that the failure will be already "consummated" during the pre-litigation procedure and possibly before delivery of the reasoned opinion. Moreover, that is obviously a risk which arises almost as a matter of course in a sector such as public works contracts. Consequently, unless the procedure under Article 169 regarding breaches of obligations of the kind in question is to be deprived of meaning and devalued, there is little point in relying on the Court' s finding that "a matter may be brought before the Court of Justice only if the State concerned has not complied with the reasoned opinion", (8) nor can one contend, as in Case C-362/90 to which I referred earlier, that "at the date of expiry of the period laid down in the Commission' s reasoned opinion... , the infringement complained of no longer existed" as it had produced all its effects. In the present case, the Commission initiated infringement proceedings in good time to prevent the infringement complained of from producing effects inasmuch as, since the final contract had not yet been signed, the State concerned was in a position to reopen the tendering procedure.

10. That said, it must now be established whether, and if so, to what extent, the Danish Government' s statement of 22 September 1989 made in the proceedings for interim measures has any bearing on these proceedings. In that connection, the Danish Government contends that by that statement it not only recognized the existence of the infringement but also acknowledged its own financial liability towards the tenderers, so that the statement was equivalent in effect to a Court ruling definitively finding that an infringement had been committed.

Although the Danish Government recognized the infringement and gave assurances that compensation would be provided for the damage suffered by the tenderers, the fact is that this does not remove the interest in pursuing proceedings. The fact that the statement caused the applicant institution to withdraw its application for interim measures is merely the result of an agreement between the parties concerning only the proceedings for interim measures so as to settle those proceedings specifically. However, it does not seem to me correct to deduce from that conduct of the Commission that the action is inadmissible or unfounded. Otherwise, the principle would be established that the Commission must abandon an action whenever, in the course of proceedings, the breach of obligations is no longer contested and at the same time it is acknowledged that compensation should be paid for any damage suffered by individuals on account of the breach.

11. Moreover, it appears from the settled case-law on this point, in which the Court has from time to time expressly pointed out that the interest in pursuing an action may reside in establishing the basis of liability which a Member State may incur as a result of its default, (9) that there must in any case be a presumption that the Commission has an interest in pursuing an action which it has initiated under Article 169, even where the breach of obligations is not contested. (10)

In short, as the Court has recognized, (11) the Commission does not have to demonstrate an interest in taking action in order to pursue an action which it has initiated. As "guardian" of the Treaties, the Commission has in any case an interest in obtaining a declaration from the Court that a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations: for that purpose, the only relevant factor is that the State in question did not bring the infringement complained of to an end within the period laid down in the reasoned opinion. On the other hand, the fact that the infringement in question was acknowledged before delivery of the reasoned opinion is, contrary to the Danish Government' s contention, totally irrelevant.

In the light of the foregoing I am therefore of the opinion that, since Storebaelt awarded a public works contract on the basis of a clause which invited tenders subject to the condition that the greatest possible use was made of Danish materials and labour, the Kingdom of Denmark has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 30, 48 and 59 of the Treaty.

(b) The negotiations conducted on the basis of a tender which did not comply with the general tender conditions

12. In relation to this ground of application, the Danish Government has again raised a number of objections of inadmissibility, concerning both the additional matters of fact which the Commission added in its reply in support of the ground in question and ° above all ° an alleged change to the form of order sought, widening its scope.

With regard to the facts mentioned by the Commission for the first time in its reply, that is to say, the "presumed" negotiations between Storebaelt and ESG, which supposedly resulted in a final contract which contained provisions incompatible with the tender conditions, (12) the same considerations apply as have already been made in relation to the ground concerning the Danish content condition. It clearly follows from the settled case-law, already referred to, that the Commission may not base the ground in question on facts which were not challenged in the course of the pre-litigation procedure.

However, the matter of the re-wording of the form of order sought is more delicate. Originally, the Commission took objection to the fact that Storebaelt had held negotiations with ESG on the basis of a tender which did not comply with Condition 3, Clause 3, of the general tender conditions. In its reply the Commission then re-worded the form of order sought, claiming that, on the basis of a tender which did not comply with the general tender conditions, Storebaelt had held negotiations with ESG with the result that the final contract contained amendments to the conditions of the invitation to tender favouring exclusively that individual tenderer and relating in particular to price factors. Furthermore, the Commission added an express reference to the principle of equal treatment as the basis of Directive 71/305, whereas the form of order sought in the original application refers, in particular, to Title IV of that directive.

The Danish Government contends that, by re-wording the form of order sought in that respect, its scope has been widened; it cites settled case-law to the effect that a party may not change the subject-matter of a dispute in the course of proceedings and contends that, consequently, the merits of the action must be assessed with regard only to the form of order sought in the application originating proceedings. (13) The defendant further contends that the form of order sought, as now re-worded, has a new legal basis, namely, the principle of equal treatment which underlies the directive. Such a step is unacceptable in so far as it amounts to a breach of the rights of the defence, since the defendant has had no opportunity to submit its observations on those points in good time and in the prescribed manner.

13. I cannot accept that argument. In the first place, as the Danish Government itself has acknowledged, a reframing of the form of order sought is permissible if it delimits, in the sense of "restricts", the formal claim. In my opinion, that is precisely the position in the present case, in so far as the Commission ° by no longer relying in general on the fact that the negotiations were conducted on the basis of a tender which did not comply with the general tender conditions, but rather on the fact that the subject-matter of those negotiations was a clause in the general tender conditions which was not open to derogation and that they led to results manifestly contrary to the principle underlying Directive 71/305, which is, namely, the equal treatment of tenderers ° in the end essentially delimited and restricted the scope of its charge as expressed in the reasoned opinion.

With regard to the argument that the principle of equal treatment constitutes a new legal basis, I would first of all observe that, although such a principle was actually included in the form of order sought for the first time in the reply, the Commission had already taken issue with the

Danish Government during the pre-litigation procedure for breach of that principle. In particular, I would remind the Court that the Commission expressly stated in its reasoned opinion that the fact of having held negotiations on the basis of a tender which did not comply with the general tender conditions "infringed the principle of equal treatment of all contractors which lies at the heart just as much of national laws in the field of procurement as of Council Directive 71/305". It follows, therefore ° as is clear moreover from both the reply to the reasoned opinion and from the defence ° that the Danish Government had an opportunity to submit its observations in that regard.

14. That said, let me move on to consider the substance of the ground of application. It is appropriate first of all to examine Condition 3, Clause 3, of the general tender conditions, that is to say, the wording of the clause with which ESG failed to comply when submitting its tender.

According to that provision, the price for an alternative tender must include the costs of the detailed design of the project submitted by the tenderer for acceptance by the contracting authority; in addition, the tenderer must itself assume full liability for the project and for its execution, including the risk of variations in the quantities on which the alternative tender is based. Condition 3, Clause 3, also provides that the tenderer must quote a reduced price for the project in the event that the contracting authority decides itself to undertake the detailed design directly. In that case, liability for the planning of the project and the risk of variations in quantities, in so far as they result from the detailed design of the project, is to be borne by the contracting authority.

The alternative tender submitted by ESG for a bridge in reinforced concrete provided, at paragraph 6.1 (actual tender), that the contracting authority was to undertake the detailed design of the project and to assume full liability for its execution, and for the risk of variations in the quantities. At paragraph 6.2 of the tender, ESG proposed a further option whereby it would undertake the design of the project itself for an additional cost of DKR 42 million; even under that arrangement, however, the tenderer considered that it should be for the contracting authority to assume liability for execution of the project and for the risk of variations in the quantities, a risk involving an estimated DKR 5 million.

15. In my opinion, it clearly follows from the wording of paragraph 6.2 that a tender framed in those terms does not comply with Condition 3, Clause 3, of the general tender conditions. The argument put forward by the Danish Government ° according to which the contracting authority is only to assume liability for execution of the project and for the risks of variations in the quantities in the event that it undertakes the design of the project ° is moreover contradicted by Storebaelt itself, as is clear from the note of 21 June 1989 annexed to the Danish Government' s reply to the Commission' s request for clarification. (14)

The Commission originally claimed that, since the tender did not comply with the general tender conditions, the very fact that Storebaelt had given it consideration, and entered into negotiations on that basis, constituted a breach of the principle of equal treatment to which Title IV of Directive 71/305 gives expression.

In particular, although the Commission acknowledges that tenderers may make reservations in their tenders, it believes that the availability of that option had its limit in the fundamental requirements contained in the general tender conditions, of which Condition 3, Clause 3, is certainly an example. It follows that Storebaelt failed to undertake an objective comparison of the tenders submitted under identical conditions, which in turn means that the last stage of the tendering procedure was not conducted in a proper manner so far as the other tenderers were concerned. As I have already mentioned, the Commission then amplified this complaint in its reply, stating that the negotiations between ESG and Storebaelt were incompatible with Community law in so far as they had an effect on prices.

16. Indeed, as I have just explained, ESG had undertaken to take on the detailed design of the project for a fixed sum of DKR 42 million, but did not undertake to assume liability for the project or for the risks involved. Those conditions must, therefore, have been the subject of negotiation, as must the risk relating to quantity variations.

Given the Danish Government' s refusal to provide the Commission with the documents concerning the negotiations in question, (15) it is not possible to say in what way Storebaelt took into account the reservations in question and fixed the corresponding prices. The fact remains, however, that some of the conditions contained in the general tender conditions were amended in the course of the negotiations, with the result that ° given the nature of those conditions ° the contract price, as quoted in the tender, was changed.

Furthermore, it appears from the documents submitted by the Commission that the contract concluded with ESG provides that its liability is to be limited to DKR 300 million and to last no longer than six years, which is clearly contrary not only to Condition 3, Clause 3, of the general tender conditions, under which the contractor must assume full liability in respect of the project and its execution, but also, and above all, to the principle of equal treatment: it is in fact clear that the other tenderers, in establishing a price for the contract, took into account the fact that they would have to assume full liability for the work. As regards the risk of variations in the quantities, the contract provides for a fixed sum of DKR 5 million, which corresponds to the estimate made by ESG in the variation on its tender: it is thus clear that the negotiations in question did indeed affect prices.

Given all those facts, it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the tender conditions, as laid down in the contract documents (and as far as here relevant, in Condition 3, Clause 3) were amended in order to favour a particular tenderer. It follows that the conditions of competition between the tenderers were thereby distorted and that, consequently, the principle of equal treatment between tenderers was breached.

17. The Danish Government contends nevertheless that the increase in the price was quite proportional to the total cost of the work in question and that, in any case, the facts complained of by the Commission are not governed by Community law; in particular, the possibility of accepting offers which contain reservations and the contracting authority' s right to hold negotiations with tenderers are both matters governed by national law. The Danish Government therefore maintains that Directive 71/305 does not govern the limits within which negotiations may take place and that the relevant national law was applied without discrimination of any kind between the different tenderers.

On that point, I would say straightaway that I do not think that the Danish Government' s statement that "on ne peut inférer de la directive 71/305 une règle imposant aux Etats membres des obligations supérieures aux exigences du droit danois en matière de marchés publics en ce qui concerne le fait de ne pas prendre en considération une offre comportant une réserve ou de s' abstenir absolument de toute négociation" ("one cannot deduce from Directive 71/305 the existence of a rule subjecting Member States to obligations which override the requirements of Danish law on public works contracts on the question of not taking into consideration a tender containing a reservation or wholly avoiding negotiation") merits any particular comment. (16) It is self-evident that in so far as Danish rules are shown to be incompatible with Community law, the latter prevails.

Secondly, I do not see the point of the Danish Government' s complaint that the Commission interpreted the directive as having been based on the principle of equal treatment. It would be strange, to say the least, to take the view that, since the principle in question is not expressly codified in any of the provisions of the directive in question, it is extraneous to the directive, when the directive' s very purpose is first and foremost to secure equality for all those who take part in a tendering procedure.

18. It is true that Directive 71/305 does not contain any specific rule regarding reservations; nor does it expressly codify the principle of equal treatment. That does not mean, however, that all matters related to public contracts may be governed by national law without taking into account such a fundamental principle. And quite frankly, I find it astonishing that the parties have expended so much energy in demonstrating, or denying, that the principle of equal treatment lies at the heart of Directive 71/305. On that point, it is hardly necessary to point out that, where a public contract falls to be awarded, it is precisely because the procedure is a competition that it must be ensured that all those who take part have an equal chance: otherwise, it would no longer be a public tendering procedure but private bargaining. In sum, equal treatment underlies any set of rules governing procedures for the award of public contracts since it is the very essence of such procedures.

Furthermore, both the preamble to Directive 71/305 and its provisions, taken as a whole, are more than indicative in this respect. Suffice it to say that it is expressly stated that the fixing of objective criteria for participation constitutes one of the fundamental principles, observation of which must be ensured throughout procedures for the award of public works contracts (third recital); that tenders must be submitted in accordance with the conditions contained in the contract notice, in order to ensure "development of effective competition", and all the more so in the context of restricted procedures (penultimate recital).

19. As regards the joint statement of July 1989, (17) attached to Council Directive 89/440/EEC (18) ° which in open or restricted procedures rules out all negotiation with tenderers on fundamental aspects of contracts, variations in which are likely to distort competition, and in particular on prices ° it does not seem to me possible to accept the Danish Government' s view that the statement in question has no legal consequences and that, in any case, since it postdates the events in issue, it is of no significance in these proceedings.

Nor do I believe, given the observations set out above, that the Danish Government may rely on the Court' s statement in the judgment in Antonissen, (19) according to which the relevance of a declaration depends on its content and on whether reference is made to it in the wording of the provision in question. In my opinion, it is indisputable that the statement referred to is purely declaratory, since the principle of equal treatment of tenderers ° whose purpose in this particular context is, in particular, to ensure that competition between those taking part in the tendering procedure is not distorted ° lies at the very heart of the rules under consideration in this case.

One last point. The defendant Government' s contention that the national law governing the award of public contracts was applied without any discrimination to all those taking part in the tendering procedure raises the question whether, that being the case, it may be concluded that the prohibition of discrimination laid down in Directive 71/305 was infringed. I have no hesitation in replying that if, as in this case, the Danish rules governing the award of public contracts are such that ° even if applied without discrimination ° they conflict with the principle of equal treatment as apparent in Directive 71/305 and as restated in the common statement of July 1989, then that national law must be considered incompatible with Community law.

20. In the light of the foregoing I therefore propose that the Court uphold the application and order the defendant State to pay the costs.

(5) ° Of course, the observations which I have just made hold true in this case, too: it would at the very least be illogical if the Danish Government, having recognized the incompatibility of the Danish content clause with Community law and therefore requested its removal, were then to allow unlawful requirements of the same kind to be included in the final version of the contract.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Van Gerven delivered on 8 May 1990.
A. Foster and others v British Gas plc.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: House of Lords - United Kingdom.
Social policy - Equal treatment for men and women workers - Direct effect of a directive with regard to a nationalized company.
Case C-188/89.

Mr President,

Members of the Court ,

1 . The House of Lords has submitted the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the Treaty :

> "Was the British Gas Corporation (at the material time) a body of such a type that the appellants are entitled in English courts and tribunals to rely directly upon the equal treatment directive (Council Directive 76/207/EEC of 9 February 1976) so as to be entitled to a claim for damages on the ground that the retirement policy of the British Gas Corporation was contrary to the directive ?". (1)

Mrs Foster and the other appellants in the main proceedings are women who were employed by the British Gas Corporation (" the BGC "); on reaching the age of 60 on various dates between 27 December 1985 and 22 July 1986 they were required to retire, in accordance with the general policy of the BGC. During the same period male employees of the BGC were required to retire only at the age of 65.

In its judgments in Defrenne III, (2) Burton, (3) Roberts, (4) Marshall (5) and Beets-Proper (6) the Court ruled that an age-limit applied for the purpose of terminating an employment relationship constitutes a working condition and more particularly a condition governing dismissal whose validity must be examined in the light of Directive 76/207/EEC on equal treatment. (7)

Article 5(1) of that directive provides that :

> "Application of the principle of equal treatment with regard to working conditions, including the conditions governing dismissal, means that men and women shall be guaranteed the same conditions without discrimination on grounds of sex."

The House of Lords points out that during the material period the United Kingdom had not yet brought its national law into conformity with the equal treatment directive. Section 6(4) of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975, which was then in force, provided that the prohibition laid down in Section 6(1)(b) and (2) of the Act of discrimination against women in respect of conditions of recruitment or dismissal applied by employers or any other unfavourable treatment did not apply to provisions regarding death or retirement. (8) (9)

2 . The parties in the main proceedings are agreed that the distinction between men and women in the BGC' s pension policy is unlawful notwithstanding Section 6(4) of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 if Article 5(1) of Directive 76/207 is directly applicable to the conditions of dismissal of the appellants in the main proceedings, but that otherwise the BGC' s policy is valid.

In paragraph 49 of the judgment in Marshall (10) the Court stated that persons may only rely on provisions such as Article 5(1) of Directive 76/207 in their relations with "the State", in its capacity as "employer or public authority", since "it is necessary to prevent the State from taking advantage of its own failure to comply with Community law ". (11) In paragraph 48, on the other hand, the possibility of relying upon such a provision against an individual is excluded, inasmuch as a directive may not of itself impose obligations on an individual. In academic terminology, that means that where the period for their implementation has expired, provisions of directives which from the point of view of their content are unconditional and sufficiently precise (12) have "vertical direct effect" but no "horizontal direct effect ".

The reference for a preliminary ruling thus concerns the issue whether at the material time the BGC was "the State" or "an individual ". In the first hypothesis the appellants in the main proceedings can rely on Article 5(1) of Directive 76/207 but in the second they cannot .

3 . At the material time the BGC was a nationalized gas undertaking; since then it has been privatized by the Gas Act 1986, under which British Gas plc (the respondent in the main proceedings) was established and on 24 August 1986 succeeded to the rights and liabilities of the BGC. (13)

The status of the BGC, the employer of the appellants in the main proceedings at the relevant time, must be viewed in the context of the nationalization of gas production and supply by the Gas Act 1948, which was later replaced by the Gas Act 1972. Under the Gas Act 1948 property, rights and liabilities were allocated to "area boards" or to the "Gas Council ". Under the Gas Act 1972 the Gas Council became the BGC and the property, rights and liabilites were vested in it. The BGC was a body with legal personality operating under the supervision of the authorities and having a monopoly on the supply of gas to homes and businesses in Great Britain. The members of the BGC were appointed by the Secretary of State, and he also determined their remuneration (Section 1(2)(3)). The task of the BGC was to develop and maintain an efficient, coordinated and economical system of gas supply for Great Britain and to satisfy, so far as it was economical to do so, all reasonable demands for gas in Great Britain (Section 2(1)). It was its duty to settle from time to time, in consultation with the Secretary of State, a general programme of research into matters affecting gas supply (Section 3(3)).

The Secretary of State was empowered to require the BGC to report on its activities and, after laying that report before both Houses of Parliament, to give the BGC such directions as he considered appropriate on the basis of that report for the most efficient management of the undertaking (Section 4). The BGC was obliged to give effect to any such directions (Section 4(3)). The Secretary of State could also, after consultation with the BGC, give the BGC general directions for the exercise and performance of its functions, including the exercise of its rights as a shareholder, where in his view the national interest so required, and the BGC was obliged to give effect to any such directions (Section 7). The BGC was obliged, as soon as possible after the end of each financial year, to submit a report to the Minister on the exercise and performance of its functions during that year and on its policy and programmes (Section 8).

The BGC was obliged so to perform its functions and so to exercise its control over its subsidiaries as to ensure that, taking one year with another, the combined revenues of the BGC and its subsidiaries were at least sufficient to meet total operating costs and constitute the necessary reserves in order to be able to comply with any directions given by the Secretary of State (Section 14). The Secretary of State could from time to time, after consultation with the BGC and with the approval of the Treasury, require the BGC to allocate certain amounts to reserves, whether or not for a specific purpose, and the BGC was obliged to comply with any such directions (Section 15). If in any financial year there was a significant excess of income over total costs, the Minister, with the approval of the Treasury, could require the BGC to pay over to him the portion of that income which was surplus to the BGC' s requirements, and the BGC was required to comply.

Under the Gas Act 1972, the BGC was not an agent of the Secretary of State . The employees of the BGC were not in Crown employment for the purpose of United Kingdom employment law. The BGC had no legislative functions .

The basis of the judgment in Marshall : nemo auditur

4 . For the sake of convenience let me begin by quoting the central passage of the Marshall judgment. It is to be found in paragraphs 47 to 49 of the judgment and the second paragraph of its operative part.

Paragraph 47 :

> "That view is based on the consideration that it would be incompatible with the binding nature which Article 189 confers on the directive to hold as a matter of principle that the obligation imposed thereby cannot be relied on by those concerned. From that the Court deduced that a Member State which has not adopted the implementing measures required by the directive within the prescribed period may not plead, as against individuals, its own failure to perform the obligations which the directive entails."

Paragraph 48 :

> "With regard to the argument that a directive may not be relied upon against an individual, it must be emphasized that according to Article 189 of the EEC Treaty the binding nature of a directive, which constitutes the basis for the possibility of relying on the directive before a national court, exists only in relation to 'each Member State to which it is addressed'. It follows that a directive may not of itself impose obligations on an individual and that a provision of a directive may not be relied upon as such against such a person. It must therefore be examined whether, in this case, the respondent must be regarded as having acted as an individual."

Paragraph 49 :

> "In that respect it must be pointed out that where a person involved in legal proceedings is able to rely on a directive as against the State he may do so regardless of the capacity in which the latter is acting, whether employer or public authority. In either case it is necessary to prevent the State from taking advantage of its own failure to comply with Community law."

The Court therefore held that :

> "Article 5(1) of Council Directive No 76/207 of 9 February 1976, which prohibits any discrimination on grounds of sex with regard to working conditions, including the conditions governing dismissal, may be relied upon as against a State authority acting in its capacity as employer, in order to avoid the application of any national provision which does not conform to Article 5(1)."

5 . In Marshall the possibility of relying on an unconditional and sufficiently precise provision of a directive against a Member State was thus clearly linked to the failure of the Member State to implement the directive in national law correctly and at the proper time . (14) Accordingly, the principle "the State cannot plead its own wrong" (15) or the principle nemo auditur propriam turpitudinem allegans were held to constitute the basis for vertical direct effect . At the same time, however, the principle was interpreted broadly : the failure to act can be relied on by individuals against the Member State regardless of the capacity in which the State acts - as "employer or public authority"; moreover, as also appears from later judgments which will be discussed below, the failure to act can be relied on by individuals against independent and/or local authorities which are not themselves responsible for the failure to implement the directive in national law.

As I have already had the opportunity to explain in my Opinion in Barber, (16) the relevant provision of the directive was thus given some restricted effect with regard to third parties, that is to say against authorities other than the defaulting authority. The rationale is (and remains (17)) the desire to prevent the Member State in question from deriving any advantage whatsoever from its failure to comply with Community law.

6 . By giving the term "State" so wide a meaning the Court followed the Opinion of Advocate General Sir Gordon Slynn, in which he stated that

> "(even if contrary to the trend of decisions in cases involving sovereign immunity where the exercise of imperium is distinguished from commercial and similar activities) as a matter of Community law, ... the 'State' must be taken broadly, as including all the organs of the State . In matters of employment... this means all the employees of such organs and not just the central civil service ". (18)

That the Court did in fact wish to give the term "State" a sense going beyond the "personal default" of the authority concerned is clear from the actual circumstances. That is to say, the issue was the possibility of relying on Article 5(1) of Directive 76/207 against a local health authority which was certainly an "agent for the Ministry of Health" (while its employees, including hospital doctors and nurses and administrative staff, were "Crown servants" (19)) but was in no way concerned in or could be responsible for the failure of the legislature in the relevant Member State to implement the directive in national law.

Indeed, such a broad interpretation is also suggested by the choice of words in the judgment : in the language of the case - and also in the other languages (20) - expressions such as "emanation of the State", "organ of the State", "public authority" and "State authority" are used as overlapping and synonymous terms.

Later cases

7 . A few months after the Marshall judgment the Court gave judgment in the Johnston case, (21) concerning the possibility for an employee of relying on Article 3(1) and 4 of Directive 207/76 against the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. The British Government, arguing that those provisions could not be relied on, referred to the fact that the Chief Constable is constitutionally independent of the State. (22) That did not prevent the Court, referring to the Marshall judgment, from stating that :

> "The Court also held in the aforesaid judgment that individuals may rely on the directive as against an organ of the State whether it acts qua employer or qua public authority. As regards an authority like the Chief Constable, it must be observed that, according to the Industrial Tribunal' s decision, the Chief Constable is an official responsible for the direction of the police service. Whatever its relations may be with other organs of the State, such a public authority, charged by the State with the maintenance of public order and safety, does not act as a private individual. It may not take advantage of the failure of the State, of which it is an emanation, to comply with Community law ". (23)

In that quotation it is striking to see the manner in which the relations between the head of a local police force and "other organs of the State" are considered irrelevant, which again shows that autonomous authorities which are independent of other organs of the State, regardless of the level at which they operate, be it central or local, do indeed fall under the broad expression "the State ". It is also striking that the judgment states that the Chief Constable is "charged by the State with the maintenance of public order" and infers from that that he "does not act as private individual ". I assume that in that judgment, unlike in Marshall, the Court referred to the specific public duties of the Chief Constable because the maintenance of public order is regarded as a public function in all the Member States, which is not so clear in respect of health care. That may suggest that although the nature of the duty is not conclusive in determining the public nature of an authority, that is to say in distinguishing it from a private individual, it may nevertheless be a useful pointer.

Finally, the last sentence of the quoted paragraph is also worthy of attention, since it takes up the theme of the "advantage" that the State must not derive from its default and expressly relates it to a constitutionally independent local authority, the Chief Constable of Northern Ireland.

8 . The point of view expressed by the Court in Marshall was applied again in its judgment in Case 103/88 Costanzo v Comune di Milano. (24) That case concerned a directive on public works contracts. The Court was asked whether a municipal authority was obliged, in examining individual tenders, to refrain from applying national rules incompatible with the directive concerned, the period for whose implementation had expired.

The Court held that :

> "when the conditions under which the Court has held that individuals may rely on the provisions of a directive before the national courts are met, all organs of the administration, including decentralized authorities such as municipalities, are obliged to apply those provisions ". (25)

Even outside the area of fundamental rights (equal treatment for men and women), then, the Court has a very broad conception of the "State ": (26) all administrative authorities, at every level of the territorial division of a Member State, form part of "the State" for the purposes of the Marshall judgment.

It is also clear that the "State" does not cover only authorities whose powers are "delegated" from the central authority. The criterion of delegation of powers is not always compatible with the legal situation of municipal authorities in different Member States and is in any event completely inappropriate to the situation in Member States which have a federal structure.

A twofold or a threefold classification?

9 . In what I have said up to now I have tacitly assumed that what the Court must do is draw a dividing line in Community law which will assist national courts in distinguishing the concept of "the State" from the concept of "individual ". That point of departure is implicit in the cases discussed above, although in Marshall and Johnston the Court could rely to some extent on findings in that respect made by the national court itself. In the present case that is clearly not so : the House of Lords has made no assessment of the nature of the BGC, that is to say whether or not it formed part of "the State"; on the contrary, in the questions which it has submitted to the Court it assumes that it is for the Court to set out a Community framework within which the national courts may determine whether the direct effect of provisions of a directive may be relied upon against this or that body .

I would subscribe to that point of view, which indeed has not been disputed by any of the parties that have submitted observations. If the Court itself did not lay down a basis in Community law, the result would be a complete lack of uniformity among the Member States with regard to the direct effect of provisions of directives.

10 . In outlying a Community framework for defining the "State" a fundamental question arises. Are the concepts "State" and "individual" together exhaustive or is there, in between them, a third category of persons or bodies? Such an intermediate category might include bodies such as public undertakings (for instance, the BGC in this case), State universities or even private universities that are financed wholly or virtually wholly by the State, and the like. If the existence of such a category is accepted, the question arises whether with regard to the possible direct effect of provisions of directives it must be put on the same footing as the category "State" or the category "individuals ".

As the appellants in the main proceedings have stated, no support can be found in the judgments of the Court referred to above for the existence of an intermediate category. Paragraph 48 of the judgment in Marshall assumes a twofold and not a threefold classification when it states in its last sentence : "It must therefore be examined whether, in this case, the respondent must be regarded as having acted as an individual ". Similarly, in the passage of his Opinion in that case quoted above, Sir Gordon Slynn appears to bring both "the exercise of imperium" and "commercial and similar activities" under the concept of "the State" in Community law. That point of view is also supported in later judgments of the Court, in the Kolpinghuis Nijmegen judgment of 8 October 1987 (27) and the Busseni judgment of 22 February 1990. (28)

The advantage of a twofold classification is that the problem of definition can be approached from two sides. We may ask on the one hand who is the State and on the other who must be regarded as an individual . It seems easier to decide who is an individual and who is not, on the basis of the prevailing conceptions : thus public undertakings are not private parties in the sense in which that is understood in everyday language, which leads to the conclusion, in the hypothesis of a twofold classification, that they are part of the "State ".

Although it is my view that there is no basis in the Court' s case-law in this regard for a threefold classification, I shall not use such complementary and mutually supporting definitions of "individuals" and "State ". The point is not who is the State or an individual in the abstract but against whom the failure of a Member State to implement a directive correctly and in good time in its own legal system can be pleaded, having regard to the underlying reasons. According to Marshall and Johnston the basic thinking is that a Member State, and any public body charged with functions by the State, regardless of the capacity in which it acts or its relations with other public bodies, may in no event derive advantage from the failure of the Member State to comply with Community law.

It must now be considered whether, having regard to that reasoning, a public undertaking such as the BGC must not benefit from the default of its Member State and in that sense must be brought under the concept of "the State ".

Analogies from other areas of Community law

11 . Before discussing the positions of the parties and giving my own views, I should like by way of comparison to discuss briefly a few areas of Community law in which some notion of public authority plays a role . The most important general conclusion to be drawn from this comparison is that an interpretation is sought of each measure which is most in keeping with its place in the Treaty and thus with the purpose of the concept of public authority which is used. That conclusion suggests that in the present context too an approach should be chosen which will give the concept of "the State" the meaning that corresponds most closely to the underlying reasoning, discussed above, of the Marshall judgment. The comparison also elicits a number of criteria which may be useful in the present context.

12 . Reference may be made first of all to the concept of an aid measure under Article 92 of the EEC Treaty. As the Court has consistently held, no distinction may be drawn "between cases where aid is granted directly by the State and cases where it is granted by public or private bodies established or appointed by the State to administer the aid ". (29) As concrete indications of the public nature of the aid measure reference has been made for example to the fact that a Member State held directly or indirectly 50% of the shares in the undertaking granting the aid and appointed half the members of the supervisory board, and that the tariffs applied by the undertaking granting the aid had to be approved by a government minister. (30) That was sufficient to show that in determining its tariffs the undertaking in no way enjoyed full autonomy, but acted under the control and on the instructions of the public authorities. (31) It could therefore be concluded that the fixing of the contested tariff was the result of action by the Member State and thus fell within the concept "aid granted by a Member State" for the purposes of Article 92 . (32)

That definition of the State as the author of aid measures reflects a broad interpretation which corresponds to the purpose of Article 92(1) of the Treaty, that of encompassing all aid measures : "any aid granted by a Member State or through State resources in any form whatsoever ". (33)

A somewhat different intention lies behind Commission Directive 80/723/EEC of 25 June 1980 on the transparency of financial relations between Member States and public undertakings. (34) It appears from the sixth recital in the preamble to the directive that its purpose is to "enable a clear distinction to be made between the role of the State as public authority and its role as proprietor ". Accordingly, Article 2 defines first "public authorities" (the State and regional or local authorities) and then "public undertakings" (any undertaking over which the public authorities may exercise directly or indirectly a dominant influence by virtue of their ownership of it, their financial participation therein, or the rules which govern it). (35)

13 . A second area of Community law that may offer an analogy is that of public works contracts. In Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (36) "the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several such authorities or bodies governed by public law" are described as "contracting authorities ".

A "body governed by public law" means any body : (a) established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, (b) having legal personality, and (c) financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law (see Article 1 of the directive). Article 1a of the directive goes on to provide that contracting authorities which subsidize directly by more than 50% a works contract awarded by an entity other than themselves must ensure compliance with the directive. This concept of the State, too, is interpreted by the Court in a flexible manner in accordance with the aim of the measure. (37)

14 . A third possible point of departure is the exceptional provision in the first subparagraph of Article 4(5) of the Sixth Council Directive on VAT. (38) As its wording indicates, that provision is restricted to the activities or transactions in which States, regional and local authorities and other bodies governed by public law engage "as public authorities ". That is also apparent from the case-law of the Court. (39) The important distinction here is thus the capacity in which the public authority acts : as an authority or as a normal taxable person.

15 . A final point of comparison (40) can be found in the case-law of the Court on Article 30 of the EEC Treaty, in which it is determined whether a particular restrictive practice can be ascribed to the authorities. In the Buy Irish judgment it was demonstrated that the restrictive practice in question (a promotional campaign for the purchase and sale of Irish products) could be ascribed to the government and that Ireland had therefore failed to comply with its obligations under Article 30. (41) Proof that the campaign in question was a "measure" for the purposes of Article 30 was inferred from the carefully thought out and coherent set of initiatives emanating from the government, although the actual implementation of those initiatives was left to an association governed by private law.

Again in connection with the free movement of goods, reference may be made to the meaning given by the Court to the concept of State monopolies of a commercial character within the meaning of Article 37 : that article applies to all "situations in which the national authorities are in a position to supervise, determine or even appreciably influence trade between Member States through a body established for that purpose or a monopoly delegated to others ". That includes "a situation in which the monopoly in question is operated by an undertaking or a group of undertakings, or by the territorial units of a State such as communes ". (42) Every means at the disposal of national authorities for influencing trade in goods, regardless of whether the body "used" is governed by private or public law, thus falls under Article 37.

16 . As I have said, all these examples illustrate the desire to ensure that the concept of "the State" is given full and proper effect, that is to say a meaning which achieves the goals of the measure in question. Depending on the aim of the measure the term "State" may be interpreted broadly (for example in connection with aid measures governed by Article 92, supra, point 12, in connection with public works contracts, supra, point 13, or in connection with State monopolies governed by Article 37, supra, point 15), or a distinction may be drawn according to the role played by the State (for example, in connection with the transparency of relations between Member States and public undertakings, by distinguishing between the State qua authority and qua owner : supra, paragraph 12, and in connection with the levying of VAT, by distinguishing between its activities as an authority and its activities as a taxable individual : supra, paragraph 14).

A further point should be emphasized : whenever, in the light of the underlying purpose of the measure, the concept of "the State" is given a broad interpretation, reference is made to the criterion of actual control, dominating influence and the possibility on the part of the authorities to give binding directions, regardless of the manner in which such control is exercised (by means of ownership, financial participation, dependence for purposes of management or finance, or through legislative provisions : supra, points 12, 13 and 15). Somewhat different but nevertheless parallel reasoning lies behind the criterion used in the Buy Irish judgment (supra, point 15) of whether a particular practice can be attributed to the government. In each case the assumption is thus that there is a "core" of authority (broadly defined to include all central, regional and local authorities) which, for the purpose of the measure concerned, imparts a public character by its control and influence to other bodies or transactions, even where these are governed by private law.

The positions of the parties

17 . In the light of the foregoing I should now like briefly to discuss and comment upon the observations submitted to the Court.

The appellants in the main proceedings support a broad interpretation of the concept of "the State ". They rely on the opinion of Advocate General Sir Gordon Slynn in Marshall, cited above, and on the judgment in Costanzo. They reject a criterion of public authority based strictly on "the classic duties of the State" since an evaluation of what constitute "duties of the State" would give rise to differences between Member States and uncertainty in application. They also reject the suggestion that State authorities should be limited to Crown bodies or bodies of a non-commercial character.

Although the appellants in the main proceedings do not in their observations put it in such extreme terms, they do in fact proceed on the basis that every undertaking which is actually controlled by the political authorities, such as the BGC at the material time, must be brought under the concept of "the State ". Stated in such extreme terms that view seems to me to go too far, in so far as it encompasses every type of public control, even where it has nothing to do with the matter to which the Member State' s failure to implement a particular provision of a directive in national law relates.

18 . The respondent in the main proceedings takes a restrictive view . Basing itself on the principle that the State cannot take advantage of its own wrong, it proposes that the concept of "the State" should be understood as comprising the three elements of the State as analysed by Montesquieu, including bodies which exercise the authority of those three elements of the State by way of delegation. In all the Member States the maintenance of public order falls within such authority .

I do not think that the criterion of delegation (with which, if I have understood correctly, the status of "Crown servant" is connected) is an appropriate one for the problem with which we are concerned here . First of all, that criterion depends closely on the State structure : it is difficult to use in countries with a federal structure, in which various authorities have autonomous powers, so that it is not a suitable basis for a Community framework of assessment . Similarly, the distinction made in that connection between classical and non-classical duties of the State is in my view of no service (infra, point 19). Finally and above all, a criterion based on delegation seems to me to be incompatible with the broad view taken by the Court in, for example, the Johnston and Constanzo judgments (supra, points 7 and 8), which give the principle nemo auditur a broad scope so that the failure to act of the public authorities actually in default can be relied on also against the entirely independent public authorities referred to above. It is significant that the respondent in the main proceedings does not mention the Costanzo judgment.

19 . The remarks of the United Kingdom take the same approach as those of the respondent. At the hearing its representative explained that there are two groups of bodies which may come under the concept of "the State" as defined in Marshall : bodies which exercise directly or as agents the classical legislative, judicial and executive functions of the State and bodies which carry out other functions (such as the supply of gas) where the State has taken on the responsibility of carrying out those functions itself or delegating them to others. The fact that in the case of the BGC a degree of supervision is exercised by organs of the State is not, however, sufficient to bring the BGC within the concept of "the State"; in any event the existence of a power of control is not a determining criterion .

Here again we encounter the same difficulties as before : what, precisely, constitute the classical functions of the State, in particular of the executive. According to the United Kingdom, public security is included (although even that function can be "privatized" to a certain extent by contracting out to approved security services), but not the supply of water, gas and electricity, although in a modern welfare State such supplies are of essential importance for the population and for industry. What, then, of public health, which was assumed in Marshall to fall within the tasks of the State although, as the Commission mentions in its written observations, in some Member States health care is "privatized" to a large extent? The United Kingdom nevertheless brings the health authority at issue in Marshall within the concept of "the State" by referring inter alia to the fact that its employees are "Crown servants ". We thus come back to the notion of delegation, the unsuitability of which as a basis for a Community framework has already been emphasized (supra, point 18).

However, the main objection to the proposed view is again the fact that it is not explained why the default of the Member State should not equally be relied on against other public bodies which do not fall within the (classic) concept of the State or exercise authority delegated by it, having regard to the cases already dealt with in Marshall and later judgments.

20 . According to the Commission, finally, there are various criteria which may bring a public body within the concept of "the State" for the purposes of Marshall. First of all there is the criterion of "carrying out a public function on behalf of the State ". That criterion covers public corporations established to run nationalized industries, such as the BGC, public bodies which exercise regulatory powers and universities which award degrees recognized by the Member States. If this criterion alone is used, a problem arises with regard to undertakings in which the State holds 100% or a majority of the shares. According to the Commission, there is no good reason to treat an undertaking in which the State holds a controlling shareholding any differently from a nationalized undertaking. It therefore asks whether a criterion of "State control over the body in question in relation to the matter at issue" may be used, and seeks to determine what is to be understood by control. Substantial funding by the State is not sufficient, and neither is the possibility of compulsion by any means (since the State can equally compel any individual to do something by means of general legislation). Similarly, control on the basis of a legal right is not a conclusive answer; all the circumstances from which control appears possible (in other words the "economic reality ") must be taken into account.

After those helpful remarks, which I think take us a considerable way in the right direction, the Commission nevertheless concludes that even such a criterion of control would exclude the Royal Ulster Constabulary from the concept of "the State" since it carries out its functions independently. It therefore comes to the conclusion that it does not appear possible to formulate one test to cover all possible situations but that both the criterion "exercise of a public function" and that of "real control" can bring a person, in this case an employer, within the concept of "the State" for the purposes of Marshall . In the present case the BGC is in any event a public body and the answer to be given to the House of Lords can accordingly be restricted to that category of entities.

Proposed solution

21 . The observations submitted to the Court contain a number of factors which may assist in giving an appropriate answer to the question referred by the House of Lords.

As I have already repeatedly emphasized, the point of departure must be the reasoning lying behind the Marshall and Johnston cases : a Member State, but also any other public body charged with a particular duty by the Member State from which it derives its authority, should not be allowed to benefit from the failure of the Member State to implement the relevant provision of a directive in national law. That, however, raises the question how far the expressions "public body", "charged with a particular duty" and "from which it derives its authority" precisely extend. Moreover, it is not entirely possible to give those expressions a precise Community meaning : whether someone forms part of the government, whether a particular duty is a public duty and whether someone derives his authority from the State (whether or not in the sense that he exercises authority delegated by the State) are difficult matters to define, and their meaning differs significantly not just from one Member State to another and within each Member State from one period to another but also in Community law, in so far as they are used there, according to the matter in issue .

In the cases I have referred to, the Court did not attempt to define those concepts in the abstract, and I think it was right not to do so . Nevertheless it appears from those cases that the concept of a public body must be understood very broadly and that all bodies which pursuant to the constitutional structure of a Member State can exercise any authority over individuals fall within the concept of "the State ". In that respect it is immaterial how that authority (which I shall call public authority) is organized and how the various bodies which exercise that authority are related. In the light of the Marshall, Johnston and Costanzo judgments (and the judgment in Auer (43) which preceded them) there can be no doubt that they all fall under the concept of "the State", and there is no need for any criterion of delegation or control by other public authorities . That much is certain.

The question in the case now before us is how much further the application of those judgments can extend, in particular with regard to undertakings, in this case public undertakings, which as such exercise no authority in the strict sense over individuals. I think the answer is this : it may extend as far as "the State" (in the broad sense described in the preceding paragraph) has given itself powers which place it in a position to decisively influence the conduct of persons - whatever their nature, public or private, or their sphere of activity - with regard to the subject-matter of the directive which has not been correctly implemented. It is immaterial in that regard in what manner "the State" can influence the conduct of those persons : de jure or de facto, for example because the organ of authority has a general or specific power (or is simply able as a matter of fact) to give that person binding directions, whether or not by the exercise of rights as a shareholder, to approve its decisions in advance or suspend or annul them after the fact, to appoint or dismiss (the majority of) its directors, or to interrupt its funding wholly or in part so as to threaten its continued existence, with, however, the provisos that : (1) the possibility of exercising influence must stem from something other than a general legislative power (since otherwise all individuals subject to such general legislative power would be brought within the scope of Marshall and related judgments, which would go beyond their purpose), and (2) as I have already said, the possibility of exercising influence must exist inter alia (or in particular) in connection with the matter to which the provision of a directive which has not yet been implemented relates or can relate.

Once the State (in the broad sense) has retained such a power to exercise influence over a person (in this case the BGC) with regard inter alia to the subject-matter of the relevant provision of a directive, from the point of view of individuals it has brought that person within its sphere of authority. For that reason individuals may then rely against that person on the Member State' s failure to implement a directive. The reasoning lying behind Marshall and the related cases implies that the State may not benefit from its default in respect of anything that lies within the sphere of responsibility which by its own free choice it has taken upon itself, irrespective of the person through whom that responsibility is exercised.

22 . On the basis of the foregoing I propose that the following answer should be given to the House of Lords. Individuals may rely on an unconditional and sufficiently precise provision such as Article 5(1) of Directive 76/207 against a person or body, in this case a public undertaking, in respect of which the State (understood as any body endowed with public authority, regardless of its relationship with other public bodies or the nature of the duties entrusted to it) has assumed responsibilities which put it in a position to decisively influence the conduct of that person or body in any manner whatsoever (other than by means of general legislation) with regard to the matter in respect of which the relevant provision of a directive imposes an obligation which the Member State has failed to implement in national law.

It is for the national courts to apply that criterion in specific cases . I may, however, be permitted to point out that in the case of the BGC the competent Secretary of State had the power at the material time to give the BGC binding directions with regard both to the most efficient management of its activities and to the exercise and performance of its functions in general if the national interest so required (supra, point 3). It seems to me that compliance with the law, including Community law binding on the Member State, is an objective of national interest, so that binding instructions could have been given to the BGC to comply with the provisions of Directive 76/207, which at the material time had not yet been formally implemented in national law. It was also the Secretary of State who appointed the members of the BGC and, I assume, could compel them to resign, and he could also exercise pressure on the management of the corporation by appropriate financial arrangements.

In that connection I should also point out that the answer suggested above is in accordance, mutatis mutandis, that is to say having regard to the difference in the objectives of the various measures, with the legislation and case-law in other areas of Community law where the concept of "the State", as in the present situation, must be given a broad scope : in those areas too bodies other than those endowed with public authority are brought under the measure in question when their conduct can be influenced by the authorities (supra, point 16).

The question of damages

23 . In the second part of its question the House of Lords seeks to determine whether the appellants, if they can rely on the equal treatment directive against the BGC, have "a claim for damages on the ground that the retirement policy of the BGC was contrary to the directive ".

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

In the absence of any specific rule in Community law that is in principle a question which must be answered in accordance with the national law of the Member State. Even so, there are restrictions in Community law on the liberty left to the Member States to determine the substantive and procedural aspects of the sanctions associated with the obligations which result for a Member State from a directive

More specifically, with regard to the sanctions on the obligation arising from Article 5(1) of Directive 76/207, which is in issue in this case, the Court held in paragraph 28 of the judgment of 10 April 1984 in Von Colson (44) that

> "although Directive 76/207/EEC, for the purpose of imposing a sanction for the breach of the prohibition of discrimination, leaves the Member States free to choose between the different solutions suitable for achieving its objective, it nevertheless requires that if a Member State chooses to penalize breaches of that prohibition by the award of compensation, then in order to ensure that it is effective and that it has a deterrent effect, that compensation must in any event be adequate in relation to the damage sustained and must therefore amount to more than purely nominal compensation...".

It is for the national court to find a means, within its own legal system, of meeting that requirement under Community law.

Decision

24 . I propose that the question referred by the House of Lords should be answered as follows :

> "Individuals may rely on an unconditional and sufficiently precise provision such as Article 5(1) of Directive 76/207/EEC against an undertaking in respect of which the State (understood as any body endowed with public authority, regardless of its relationship with other public bodies or the nature of the duties entrusted to it) has assumed responsibilities which put it in a position to decisively influence the conduct of that undertaking in any manner whatsoever (other than by means of general legislation) with regard to the matter in respect of which the relevant provision of a directive imposes an obligation which the Member State has failed to implement in national law.
> Although Directive 76/207/EEC, for the purpose of imposing a sanction for breach of the prohibition of discrimination, leaves the Member States free to choose between the different solutions suitable for achieving its objective, it nevertheless requires that if a Member State chooses to penalize breaches of that prohibition by the award of compensation, then in order to ensure that it is effective and that it has a deterrent effect, that compensation must in any event be adequate in relation to the damage sustained. It is for the national court to find a means within its own legal system of meeting that requirement under Community law."

Mancini, in which he stated that a directive may be pleaded against institutions which, although they are not organs of the State in the true sense of the term, in one way or another implement the policy of the State (at p . 2751). The case concerned professional organizations of veterinary surgeons which were responsible for the exercise of public authority, namely the recognition of professional qualifications obtained in other Member States.

The case concerned a Member State which sought to rely in proceedings against an individual on a directive which had not yet been implemented in national law; the Court naturally refused to permit it to do so, in the light of the judgment in Marshall . Case C-351/88.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

1. The case in which I am called to give my opinion today is one of four references for a preliminary ruling concerning the same subject matter.(1) It is concerned with a requirement laid down in Italian legislation that at least 30% of all public supply contracts are to be given to undertakings established in the Mezzogiorno.

2. In Case C-21/88 the Court had occasion to rule on a legal situation identical to the present, Case C-351/88. In particular, the way in which intra-Community trade is affected in the present case is similar to Case C-21/88. In Case C-21/88 the plaintiff claimed that it obtained 80% of its X-ray material from Germany. In the present case, the plaintiff in the main proceedings obtain a significant proportion of the equipment it distributes from France.

3. In Case C-21/88 I delivered my opinion on 28 November 1989 and it was broadly followed by the Court in its judgment of 20 March 1990.

4. The similarity to Case C-21/88 of the reference for a preliminary ruling in this case was drawn to the attention of the national court. However, the reference for a preliminary ruling has not yet been withdrawn - probably for reasons connected with the national rules of procedure. For that reason, the procedure in the present case must be taken to its formal conclusion.

5. In order to answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, I refer to my Opinion of 28 November 1989 and the judgment of 2 March 1990 in Case C-21/88.

6. Even though the legal problems correspond to those in Case C-21/88 - as, moreover, the parties to the proceedings agree - and the question referred for a preliminary ruling must therefore be regarded as answered by the judgment, in view of the observations made by the plaintiff' s representative at the hearing on 5 June 1991 some remarks on the duties arising from a judgment of the Court of Justice are called for.

7. The plaintiff' s representative emphasized that, more than a year after the Court' s judgment in Case C-21/88, no measures had been adopted to bring the Italian legislation into conformity with Community law. He stated that no steps had been taken, whether by legislative measures or administrative directions or the latest annual law on the Community, to give effect to the consequences of the judgment. Efforts to make the Commission bring proceedings for breach of Treaty obligations had been fruitless.

8. It must first be stated that a judgment in proceedings for a preliminary ruling is a judgment on interpretation and binds only the parties to the proceedings and the courts charged with ruling on the case. Nonetheless, Member States are required to rectify a provision in their internal legal order which is contrary to Community law, when such a situation can be deduced from a judgment in proceedings for a preliminary ruling. If a Member State fails to take the necessary measures and thereby maintains in force the legal situation that is contrary to the Treaty, it commits a breach of the Treaty, which the Commission, in the first place, is required to pursue.

9. The practice of the Commission has therefore been to react to judgments delivered by the Court of Justice in proceedings for a preliminary ruling by bringing proceedings against the Member States concerned. As examples of where such an approach has been taken, one can cite proceedings for a breach of a Treaty obligation(2) brought against the Federal Republic of Germany regarding "butter ships"(3) and proceedings for breach of a Treaty obligation(4) brought against Belgium in connection with the levying of a registration fee for students known under the name of "minerval".(5)

10. In order to provide legal protection to individual persons, it is, admittedly, not absolutely essential to amend national law as individuals can rely on Community law before the courts even in the absence of legislative measures to that effect. In this way individuals can, as in the main proceedings, achieve the implementation of Community law through courts prepared to apply it - which is, moreover, a duty of each of the courts of the Member States.

11. However, the situation becomes particularly critical if - as in the period following the judgment in Case C-21/88, according to the assertions made by the plaintiff' s representative at the hearing - courts in the Member States maintain that the legal situation contrary to Community law is lawful, in spite of the clear wording to the contrary of a judgment of the Court of Justice, and fail to apply Community law. Such a denial of legal protection in itself constitutes a fresh breach of the Treaty.

12. Action by the Member State concerned is necessary both to clarify the legal situation and to avoid further breaches of the Treaty. In the event that the Member State fails to take any action, the Commission, whose task it is to monitor the application of the Treaty (Article 155 of the EEC Treaty), may and ought to remind it of its obligations under Community law by means of the procedures for breach of Treaty obligations and urge it to bring its internal legal order into conformity.

13. In so doing, the Commission must act on its own initiative, because it cannot be obliged by individual persons to intervene. Natural or legal persons may bring proceedings under Article 175 of the EEC Treaty for failure to take action only if a Community institution has failed to address to them a binding legal act (third paragraph of Article 175 of the EEC Treaty). As regards the bringing of proceedings for breach of Treaty obligations individuals are restricted to making informal complaints and observations.

14. Lastly, it should be stated again, in order to make the legal position absolutely clear, that Article 30 of the EEC Treaty prohibits the contested rules from reserving part of the public supply market, and the rules cannot be justified by the provisions of the Directive coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts.(6) I have already discussed that point in paragraph 49 et seq. of my Opinion in Case C-21/88. Paragraph 17 of the judgment in that case expressly states that Article 26 of the directive cannot impede the application of Article 30 of the EEC Treaty.

15. In its original version Article 26 of the Directive stated:

> "This Directive shall not prevent the implementation of provisions contained in Italian Law No 835 of 6 October 1950 (Official Gazette No 245 of 24 October 1950 of the Italian Republic) and in modifications thereto in force on the date on which this Directive is adopted; this is without prejudice to the compatibility of these provisions with the Treaty."(7)

16. That rule is comparable to a provision of a directive which was referred to in the two cases on milk substitutes,(8) in order to justify legal provisions which were incompatible with Article 30 of the EEC Treaty. The Court of Justice also stated in those two cases that:

> "Without its even being necessary to rule on whether Article 5 of Regulation No 1898/87 is retroactive it is sufficient to observe that that article provides that national regulations may be maintained only on condition that the general provisions of the EEC Treaty are complied with. However, as the Court has held above, the provision at issue in this case is contrary to Article 30 of the EEC Treaty and therefore does not satisfy the conditions laid down by Article 5 of Regulation No 1898/87."(9)

17. The subsequent amendment of Article 26 of Directive 77/62(10) is equally incapable of justifying rules of the kind referred to. The wording of the amended Article is as follows:

"(1) This Directive shall not prevent, until 31 December 1992, the application of existing national provisions on the award of public supply contracts which have as their objective the reduction of regional disparities and the promotion of job creation in the most disadvantaged regions and in declining industrial regions, on condition that the provisions concerned are compatible with the Treaty and with the Community' s international obligations." (11)

18. In particular, the amended version cannot - as was argued at the hearing - excuse the Commission' s inactivity as regards bringing proceedings for breach of a Treaty obligation. The time-limit of 31 December 1992 laid down in Article 26 for the exceptions cannot remove the incompatibility of the system of preferences with the Treaty.

Costs

19. The proceedings for a preliminary ruling are in the nature of a step in the proceedings pending before the national court. For that reason, it is for the national court to rule on the costs as between the parties to the main proceedings. The costs incurred by the Italian Government and the Commission are not recoverable.

20. Having regard to the fact that it is not for the Court of Justice in preliminary-ruling proceedings to rule on whether or not a provision of a national law is in conformity with Community law, I suggest that, in reply to the request for an assessment under Community law of the rules reserving the award of contracts to certain undertakings, the Court should adopt the formulation contained in its judgment in Case C-21/88 and rule as follows:

"(1) Article 30 of the EEC Treaty must be interpreted as precluding national rules which reserve to undertakings established in particular regions of the national territory a proportion of public supply contracts.

(2) The fact that national rules might be regarded as aid within the meaning of Article 92 of the Treaty cannot exempt them from the prohibition set out in Article 30 of the Treaty."

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Lenz delivered on 25 April 1989.
Fratelli Costanzo SpA v Comune di Milano.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Lombardia - Italy.
Public works contracts - Abnormally low tenders - Direct effect of directives in relation to administrative authorities.
Case 103/88.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

A - Facts of the case

1 . The proceedings for a preliminary ruling on which I shall give my views today are concerned with the interpretation and effect of Council Directive 71/305 of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts. (1) The court submitting the questions, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia, wishes essentially to establish the content and scope of Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305, and to ascertain whether it is directly applicable and whether national administrative authorities are entitled - or indeed obliged - to apply Article 29(5) even in the face of conflicting national law.

2 . The questions submitted to this court are relevant to the decision on a dispute between Fratelli Costanzo SpA and the Comune di Milano (Municipality of Milan) in which the plaintiff contests the procedure for the award of the contract for the modernization of the "G . Meazza Stadium" in preparation for the 1990 World Cup for football . In accordance with Article 24(a)(2) of Law No 584 of 8 August 1977, implementing Directive 71/305, the criterion for the award was that of the lowest priced bid, subject to the admission of supplementary bids. Under a transitional arrangement introduced by decree law, intended to accelerate procedures for the award of public works contracts during a two-year period, (2) the invitation to tender allowed for the automatic exclusion of abnormally low tenders, determined on a purely arithmetical basis. Through the application of that temporary special rule the plaintiff was excluded from the tendering procedure. The plaintiff was the only tenderer whose bid was less than the basic amount of LIT 82 043 643 386. The contract was won by a consortium (Ing. Lodigiani S.p.A.) whose tender exceeded the set figure by 9.85 %.

3 . Subsequently the validity of Article 4 of the Decree Law - the legal basis for the accelerated procedure - was disputed and it was not converted into statute. However, administrative measures adopted under the Decree Law were declared definitive.

4 . The plaintiff argues inter alia that the criteria whose application led to its elimination are incompatible with Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305. The national court has put a series of questions to this court concerning the interpretation of that Directive . It also wishes to know whether the defendant municipal authority was "empowered, or obliged, to disregard the domestic provisions which conflicted with the... Community provision...".

5 . Reference is made to the Report for the Hearing for a fuller account of the facts of the case and the submissions of the parties.

B - Opinion

6 . Although the questions submitted by the national court were considered in the written procedure to be inadmissible in part, it must be accepted that the request addressed to the Court was legitimate . At most, there may be some doubt as to the admissibility of the questions in so far as they ask whether national law is compatible with Community law. The Court has consistently held that it is not its duty to examine whether national law is compatible with Community law. In such cases the Court regularly reformulates the questions and lays down the guiding criteria on the basis of which the national court may resolve for itself the issue of compatibility.

7 . Whenever questions on the interpretation of Community law are unclear the Court has taken upon itself the task of establishing the relevant issue of Community law and answering the national court accordingly .

8 . The questions referred to the Court should be arranged in a logical order as follows : first, the criteria for the interpretation of Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 must be defined, on the basis of which the compatibility of national legal measures with Community law can be assessed by the national court. Only in the event of their being found to be incompatible does the question arise whether the provision in the Directive is directly applicable. If it is, consideration must be given to the extent to which State bodies - specifically, the administrative authorities of the Member States - are entitled and obliged to give effect to Community law.

9 . Question A of the reference for a preliminary ruling asks, in effect, to what extent the legislative content of Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 must be incorporated in the national provision implementing it. The terms used are somewhat confused, inasmuch as they distinguish between the "provisions as to results" and the "provisions as to form and methods" of a directive. That distinction is an oblique reference to the definition of a directive contained in Article 189 of the EEC Treaty, according to which a directive is binding, as to the result to be achieved, upon each Member State to which it is addressed, but leaves to the national authorities the choice of form and methods. The formulation itself shows that it is inappropriate to distinguish within a directive between provisions as to results and provisions as to form and methods, since by definition a directive is silent as to the form and methods of transposition.

10 . The extent to which a Member State is obliged to incorporate the provisions of a directive without amendments or, conversely, is permitted to depart from them must be determined by the interpretation of the provision at issue. The basis must be the wording of the provision, and the purpose and objectives of the Directive must be ascertained . Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305, which is at issue here, is worded as follows :

> "If, for a given contract, tenders are obviously abnormally low in relation to the transaction, the authority awarding contracts shall examine the details of the tenders before deciding to whom it will award the contract. The result of this examination shall be taken into account.

For this purpose it shall request the tenderer to furnish the necessary explanations and, where appropriate, it shall indicate which parts it finds unacceptable.

If the documents relating to the contract provide for its award at the lowest price tendered, the authority awarding contracts must justify to the Advisory Committee set up by the Council Decision of 26 July 1971 the rejection of tenders which it considers to be too low."

11 . Article 29 of Directive 71/305 enumerates the criteria for the award of a contract and lays down the procedure to be followed in each case . The enumeration of the criteria governing the award and the establishment of the procedure to be observed give transparency to what is done and at the same time represent an element of legal certainty . It is precisely the standardization of procedure which that article seeks to achieve that gives potential tenderers a clearer view of the conditions to which they submit when taking part in the tendering procedure. Thus Article 29(5) not only requires the awarding authority to examine tenders which are obviously abnormally low in relation to the transaction, and states how that must be done, but also provides a procedural guarantee for the tenderer concerned. He cannot be disqualified on account of an obviously abnormally low tender until an official procedure to examine it has been conducted. (3)

12 . A similar procedural guarantee is contained in the obligation, set out in the last sentence of Article 29(5), to state the reasons for the rejection of a tender considered to be too low if the criterion chosen for the award of the contract is that of the lowest price tendered. The commencement, conduct and conclusion of the examination procedure are laid down in binding terms. They constitute a kind of a common minimum standard.

13 . As a rule it is not possible to depart from such "binding" provisions of directives on account of exceptional circumstances or particular urgency unless the directive itself recognizes exceptions of that kind.

14 . By contrast, Article 29(5) does not indicate precisely what is to be understood by an "obviously abnormally low tender"; no specific procedure is laid down for determining such a tender. Here there is undoubtedly room for specific provisions in the implementing measures of the Member States. For the same reason it is not absolutely essential for the terms to be reproduced verbatim in the implementing measure . It is more important to emphasize the exceptional nature of the low tender, such that it raises doubts whether the tender is a genuine one . The investigation and, where appropriate, elimination of those doubts is the purpose of the examination procedure. The imbalance between the transaction and the tender is what characterizes the situation envisaged, and this must be reflected in the implementing measure.

15 . Whilst the procedure for designating a tender as being obviously abnormally low is left open, once its abnormality has been affirmed the examination procedure must be initiated. Automatic disqualification would be incompatible with that rule. If an implementing measure meets the criteria set out above, discrepancies in the terms used, such as "abnormally low tenders" instead of "obviously abnormally low tenders" do not make the measure inconsistent with Community law (Question C(a) and (b)).

16 . It remains to be determined (Question B - 1) whether a national measure enacted for the implementation of a directive may subsequently be amended by the legislature of the Member State concerned . The first point is that in formal terms a national implementing measure is entirely the same as the autonomous legislation of a Member State. A priori, therefore, it may be amended in just the same way as any other national legal measure. However, in so far as the national legislature was bound by the substance of a directive when adopting the implementing provisions in the first place, the same must necessarily apply to subsequent amendments.

17 . In areas in which the national legislature enjoys some discretion it may certainly introduce subsequent amendments. It is, indeed, in accordance with Community law to introduce improvements by reference to Community provisions where the need arises. Provisions which run counter to the provisions and objectives of a directive are not permitted.

18 . The form to be taken by amendments which are acceptable in substance is determined by national law alone (Question B - 2). Since in formal terms this is autonomous national legislation, procedural principles governing the Community legislative process cannot be transposed to the legal system of a Member State as a supplementary condition of validity. The requirement under Article 190 of the EEC Treaty to state the reasons on which Community acts are based therefore has no bearing on the adoption of national legal provisions

19 . In Question D of the reference to the Court the Tribunale amministrativo asks whether the municipal authority was bound by Community provisions, in the event that the Court should find the Italian legislation in question to be inconsistent with Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305. Since, as I have already pointed out, it is not for the Court of Justice but for the national court to resolve this point, on the basis of the criteria set out by the Court of Justice, any further discussion must proceed on the assumption that the national implementing measures are incompatible with the Directive.

20 . In determining whether and to what extent the national administrative authorities are bound by Community provisions in the event of inconsistency between Community and national law, a distinction must first be drawn according to the legal nature of the relevant Community measures.

21 . Community regulations, which have general application and are binding in their entirety and directly applicable in all Member States(second paragraph of Article 189 of the EEC Treaty), partake without qualification of the primacy of Community law and thus have priority over conflicting national law. This is a hierarchy of legal rules established a priori. The application of a regulation must reflect the primacy of Community law.

22 . The effect of a directive calls for a more modulated approach. Since a directive, containing instructions to adopt certain measures, is addressed to the Member State, it does not, in the first instance, give rise to rights or obligations on the part of individuals. The Court has held that exceptions from that rule are possible only where the Member State has failed to comply, or has complied incorrectly, with its obligation under Community law to implement the directive. (4)

23 . The judgments of the Court do not seek to put in question the legal nature of directives but amount to sanctioning the unlawful conduct of a Member State, in the interests of Community citizens. The case-law on the direct applicability of directives is not intended to secure comprehensive observance of the directive otherwise than through its implementation in national law, as is clear from the fact that the provisions of a directive which impose obligations on individuals cannot be directly applicable.

24 . Before a provision of a directive can be directly applicable it must therefore meet specific requirements. In the absence of implementing measures adopted within the prescribed period, individuals may rely upon "the provisions of a directive ((which)) appear, as far as their subject-matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise... as against any national provision which is incompatible with the directive or in so far as the provisions define rights which individuals are able to assert against the State ". (4) Where the Community legislature seeks to vest rights in the individual through national law and the obligation of the Member State to grant those rights has become definitive - following the expiry of the prescribed period, for example - the Member State' s failure to act can no longer work to the detriment of the individual.

25 . The situation must be viewed differently if the Member State has already adopted an implementing provision. A distinction must be drawn here between correct and incorrect implementation. If the implementation is correct, the individual will be governed solely by the national measure, (5) with the result that there will be no possibility of relying upon the directive. (6) It is therefore not possible to invoke the directive even if the national measure departs, within the permitted limits, from the content of the directive. Incorrect implementation may consist in a legal measure incompatible with the directive ab initio or a subsequent change in the legal situation which only later causes it to be incompatible. In such circumstances the Member States' obligation under Articles 189 and 5 of the EEC Treaty to implement directives fully and accurately continues to subsist or is revived, as the case may be. In such cases, too, the Court of Justice has allowed individuals to rely on the directive. (7) It should be noted in this connection that the subsequent amendment of the legal situation constitutes a separate act contrary to Community law. For their part, State authorities may not rely against individuals on action by the Member State which is contrary to Community law. (8)

26 . On the assumption that the relevant Italian legal provisions are incompatible with Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305, the question arises whether that article is directly applicable. The question whether the administrative authorities are required to take account of it has already received an affirmative answer. The Court has ruled, in its judgment in Case 31/87, (9) that Article 29 of Directive 71/305 may in principle have direct effect. Although the Court did not give that ruling with express reference to Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305, it must be equally valid in respect of that provision : the examination procedure to be commenced in the event of an imbalance between a transaction and a tender which is obviously abnormally low is not subject to any other condition and is laid down in detail . The provision is therefore unconditional and sufficiently precise . Its application does not necessarily presuppose the adoption of further legal measures.

27 . Lastly, Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 is of such a nature as to create rights for individuals. As the Court ruled in the Transporoute (10) judgment, and confirmed in Case 31/87, (11) "the aim of the provision... is to protect tenderers against arbitrariness on the part of the authority awarding contracts ". That aim could not be achieved if it were left to that authority to judge whether or not it was appropriate to seek explanations. The obligation to examine the tender, which has the effect of a procedural guarantee, may be construed as a right vesting in the tenderer who submits an obviously abnormally low tender.

28 . In order to answer the question whether administrative authorities may be entitled, or indeed obliged, to refrain from applying national law which contravenes Community law (inasmuch as it is incompatible with a directive), it must first be recalled that :

(i) Community law forms part of the national legal system; (12)

(ii) Community law takes precedence over the law of the Member States; and

(iii) all State authorities are, as a matter of principle, obliged to conduct themselves in accordance with Community law.

29 . The obligation to apply Community law thus also concerns State authorities . When the State as a whole is prohibited from relying against individuals on provisions derogating from the directive which were introduced or maintained in disregard of obligations under Community law, the State authorities are also materially affected. (13) This comprehensive duty to act in accordance with Community law finds expression in Article 5 of the EEC Treaty.

30 . In previous cases where a national of a Member State has pleaded the direct applicability of the provisions of a directive, the Court has always proceeded on the assumption that he does so in proceedings before the national courts, and that those courts must observe the directly applicable measures as valid Community law. (14)

31 . However that may be, the individual must also have the right to rely on a directly applicable directive in dealings with State administrative authorities. If he succeeds, then the authorities of the Member State have acted in accordance with Community law. From the point of view of Community law there is then no need to bring proceedings before a court of law. Thus the matter does not necessarily have to come before a court. Applied to the present case, this means that if the Comune di Milano had adhered to the procedure under Article 29(5) and had taken account of the outcome when making its decision, from the point of view of Community law there would have been no need for proceedings before a court of law.

32 . Such proceedings are required only if the individual has invoked the directly applicable directive unsuccessfully in his dealings with the authorities. In such a case it is the duty of the courts to safeguard the individual' s position with regard to Community law.

33 . From the point of view of the individual it is essential that he should be able to rely on the directly applicable measures. If need be he must take the matter to court, and in doing so may avail himself of the full range of national legal remedies, as if he were basing his case on national law alone. However, the possibilities for relying on a directly applicable provision of a directive do not go so far as to create new procedures for the protection of legal interests . (15)

34 . Since the Court has held in another context that the system of legal protection established by the Treaty, as set out in particular in Article 177, implies "that it must be possible for every type of action provided for by national law to be available before the national courts for the purpose of ensuring observance of Community provisions having direct effect, on the same conditions concerning admissibility and procedure as would apply were it a question of ensuring observance of national law", (16) it may legitimately be said to represent a form of guarantee of legal redress serving to give effect to directly applicable Community law.

35 . From the point of view of the administrative authorities, on the other hand, a distinction should be drawn according to whether the authorities are in doubt as to the consistency of the national provision with Community law or the dispute has already been the subject of a judicial ruling. In that regard we must base ourselves on established case-law, whereby an individual may rely on such provisions in court proceedings. If he may do so before the courts he must also be accorded the right to do so in dealings with the administrative authorities, so as to ensure that those authorities are fully informed of the individual' s basic position in the matter to be resolved . If, however, the individual has the right to present his arguments to the administrative authorities, then those authorities must be given the right to agree with them. It would indeed be absurd to prevent the authorities from making a decision consistent with Community law, as they are ultimately obliged to do.

36 . The sole question is whether it is possible to oblige them under Community law to do so. In my view it is not possible, because it is not open to the administrative authorities to refer the matter to the Court of Justice and obtain a ruling on the direct applicability of the relevant provision of the directive. If it applies the directly applicable provisions of a directive and disregards conflicting national law, it does so at its own risk and without the endorsement of the Court. In my opinion they are entitled to act in this manner but are not obliged to do so, because the Treaty does not afford it the requisite legal protection for doing so.

37 . That conclusion also resolves the problem raised during the oral procedure by the representative of the Commission, namely whether the Commission has two opportunities to bring an action against a Member State which has not given effect to a directive - first on account of failure to implement it and secondly for failure to apply it . In so far as the administrative authorities are not, I submit, obliged to apply directly a provision in a directive, there is no possibility of bringing an action against a Member State. This is where it differs from a regulation. The administrative authorities of the Member States are not merely entitled but positively obliged to apply a regulation, even in the face of conflicting national law. In doing so they enjoy the protection of Article 189 of the EEC Treaty : the binding nature and direct applicability of a regulation are beyond doubt . The application of provisions of that kind falls within the normal duties of all administrative authorities.

38 . The counter-arguments, which basically rely on the thesis that the differences between a directive and a regulation have been effaced, do not refute my view, in so far as administrative authorities are not also obliged to observe directly applicable directives . In that regard, the fact that an authority has no legal means of referring the matter to the Court directly for a preliminary ruling does not represent a problem. It will apply the directly applicable provision of the directive only if it is convinced that its applicability is, in the specific circumstances of the case, beyond doubt . In that event it acts as a body giving effect to Community law . For the rest, the duty of the legislature to amend national law is unaffected, since only proper implementation can create the obligation for the administrative authority to give effect to a legal situation consistent with

39 . The circumstances are similar in the event of a prior judicial ruling . Once the conflict of rules has been resolved in abstracto the administrative authorities cannot be prevented from applying the directly applicable measures in concreto, especially since they are no longer entitled to rely against an individual on the measures contrary to Community law. (17) The matter need not necessarily have been resolved by a national court but may instead have been settled by the Court of Justice in previous proceedings for a preliminary ruling. Although preliminary rulings do not formally have effect erga omnes, the Court has held in respect of rulings concerning the validity of Community provisions in proceedings under Article 177 of the EEC Treaty that a judgment, although addressed only to the national court which has requested it, is sufficient reason for any other national court to regard the act in question as void for the purposes of a judgment which it has to give. The Court of Justice bases its decision on the requirements of a uniform application of Community law and the need for legal certainty. (18) An individual must also have the right to rely on a directive in dealings with administrative authorities, and those authorities must be entitled to comply with his request .

40 . Subject to those stringent conditions, a directly applicable provision of a directive may be given the same effect as other provisions of Community law having general application. Since, in those circumstances, the conflict of rules is settled by their abstract hierarchical relationship no further judicial proceedings are needed .

41 . In view of the fact that Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 has been held in a preliminary ruling to be directly applicable, (19) it may be inferred for the purpose of answering the questions now before the Court that the administrative authorities were entitled to apply Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 directly. It is true that the judgment referred to was not delivered until after the authority had made its decision. (20)

42 . Nevertheless, the illegality of a procedure for the automatic exclusion of an "obviously abnormally low tender" had already been established by the Court. (21) In substantive law there were therefore cogent grounds for the authority concerned to refrain from applying a legal measure requiring exclusion on a purely arithmetical basis .

43 . Although it is therefore possible to infer justification under Community law for refraining to apply the national legal measures in question, no obligation to do so can be derived from the above considerations. Whenever serious doubts remain as to the applicability of Community law, the administrative authorities must have the opportunity of seeking guidance. Even the courts are at liberty to submit further questions to the Court of Justice for clarification following an earlier preliminary ruling. Indeed, they are entitled to do so whether the earlier ruling relates to another legal dispute or even to the same legal proceedings.

Costs

44 . In so far as the parties to the main action are concerned, the proceedings are in the nature of a step in the proceedings before the national court. The decision on costs is therefore a matter for that court . The costs incurred by the Spanish and Italian Governments and by the Commission are not recoverable.

C - Conclusion

45 . (1) The examination procedure required by Article 29(5) of Regulation No 71/305/EEC when tenders are "obviously abnormally low" is indispensable and must therefore be incorporated in national implementing measures (Question A). The precise definition of an "obviously abnormally low" tender, on the other hand, is for the national legislature to determine (Question C).

(2) In principle, every Member State is entitled to amend the measures adopted to give effect to a directive, provided that the provisions remain, in substance, within the limits laid down by the directive . The form and methods by which amendments are made are governed by national law alone (Question B).

(3) In the event that national implementing provisions are incompatible with the directive, the administrative authorities are entitled - and, once the content and scope of the measures have been clarified in judicial proceedings, obliged - to refrain from applying national law. However, if the authority is in doubt as to the legal position it is quite at liberty to seek clarification from the courts, and in doing so may use any means available under national law (Question D).

Case C-21/88.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

A - Facts

1 . The case in which I am to give my Opinion today involves an assessment in the light of Community law of the preferential system established in Italy for the benefit of the Mezzogiorno (Southern Italy). This case is only one of the several references for preliminary rulings with similar facts which are at present pending before the Court. (1) The reference was made by the tribunale amministrativo regionale della Toscana, which seeks a ruling on the interpretation of Articles 30, 92 and 93 of the EEC Treaty.

2 . The plaintiff in the main proceedings, Du Pont de Nemours SpA, brought two separate actions, which were joined by the national court, against decisions of Unità sanitaria locale No 2 di Carrara (" the defendant ").

3 . The plaintiff was invited to take part in a restricted tendering procedure organized by the defendant and published in a notice dated 15 February 1986.

4 . On 1 March 1986, Law No 64/86 came into force; that law extended the scope ratione materiae and ratione personae of the existing preferential system designed to assist Southern Italy. Under that law, the defendant, as a local health authority, was required to procure at least 30% of the supplies it needed from undertakings with establishments and fixed plant located within the area covered by the preferential system in which the products must have undergone at least partial processing.

5 . The defendant accordingly laid down, by decision of 3 June 1986, the conditions governing the award of contracts for the supply of radiological films and liquids and, according to the terms and conditions set out in the annex, divided the supplies into two lots, one of which - equal to 30% of the total amount - was reserved to undertakings established in Southern Italy. That decision forms the subject of the main proceedings, together with a decision adopted by the defendant on 15 June 1986 awarding a contract for the lot amounting to 70% of the total amount. The plaintiff was prevented from participating in the tendering procedure for the remaining lot of 30% on the ground that it had no establishments in Southern Italy.

6 . The national court has raised a number of questions on the interpretation of Community law with a view to the assessment of the compatibility of Law No 64/86 with Community law.

7 . The first question seeks to ascertain whether Article 30, which prohibits quantitative restrictions on imports and any measures having equivalent effect, precludes the contested national rules. Next, the national court asks whether the national rules may be regarded as "aid" within the meaning of Article 92 of the EEC Treaty and, if so, whether the Commission alone is entitled to determine the compatibility of aid with the common market or whether this can also be determined by the national court.

8 . Du Pont de Nemours Deutschland GmbH has intervened in the case in support of the plaintiff; 3M Italia SpA has intervened in support of the defendant. The interveners have also submitted observations to the Court .

9 . For an account of the facts, the applicable legal provisions and the submissions of the parties, reference is made to the Report for the Hearing .

B - Opinion

1 . The competitive relationship between Article 30 and Article 92 of the EEC Treaty

10 . It is appropriate to consider the competitive relationship between Article 30 and Article 92, because the applicability of one of those provisions may preclude the applicability of the other. The question arises as to whether a measure adopted by a Member State, which is to be regarded as a measure having an effect equivalent to a quantitative restriction on imports, may at the same time constitute an aid within the meaning of Article 92. The question may also be relevant if put the other way round : can a measure which is to be regarded as a State aid also be assessed in the light of the provisions on the free movement of goods, in particular Article 30.

11 . In principle, the starting point must be that both the prohibition of quantitative restrictions on imports and of measures having equivalent effect and the prohibition laid down by Article 92 of aid granted by the State or through State sources pursue a common purpose, which is to ensure the free movement of goods between Member States under normal conditions of competition. (2)

12 . It follows from the prohibition in Article 30 of measures having an effect equivalent to quantitative restrictions on imports, and from the prohibition in Article 92(1) of aid which distorts or threatens to distort competition in so far as it affects trade between Member States, that a national measure which falls foul of those prohibitions is unlawful. Concurrent application of those two provisions would thus lead to the same result in terms of substantive law, in so far as the legal consequence of the two prohibitions is that the national measure in question is incompatible with Community law .

13 . However, it is necessary to draw a distinction on procedural grounds, since Article 30 incontestably has direct effect and any Community national may rely, in an appropriate case, upon that provision before the courts of the Member States. In contrast, Article 92(1) does not have direct effect, since the prohibition which it lays down is neither absolute nor unconditional, (3) as is clear both from Article 92(1) and (2) and from Article 93. In addition, pursuant to the review of systems of aid provided for in Article 93, the assessment of whether an aid is prohibited under Article 92(1), permitted under Article 92(2) or to be regarded as compatible with the common market under Article 92(3), comes within the jurisdiction of the Commission.

14 . With the exception of the last sentence of Article 93(3), Articles 92 and 93 may be relied upon before the courts of the Member States only "where they have been put in concrete form by acts having general application provided for by Article 94 or by decisions in particular cases envisaged by Article 93(2)". (4)

15 . Those differing procedural consequences constitute in themselves an indication that the provisions in question have in principle different fields of application. The Court of Justice stated as follows with regard to this question of demarcation in the judgment in Iannelli & Volpi : (5)

> "however wide the field of application of Article 30 may be, it nevertheless does not include obstacles to trade covered by other provisions of the Treaty"
> "similarly the fact that a system of aids provided by the State or by means of State resources may, simply because it benefits certain national undertakings or products, hinder, at least indirectly, the importation of similar or competing products coming from other Member States is not in itself sufficient to put an aid as such on the same footing as a measure having an effect equivalent to a quantitative restriction within the meaning of Article 30 ".

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

The Court went on to state that :

> "the effect of an interpretation of Article 30 which is so wide as to treat an aid as such within the meaning of Article 92 as being similar to a quantitative restriction referred to in Article 30 would be to alter the scope of Articles 92 and 93 of the Treaty and to interfere with the system adopted... for the division of powers...". 3

16 . Although that reasoning provides some support for the proposition that Articles 92 and 93 are in a special position in relation to Article 30, regard should nevertheless be had to the wording used by the Court, which speaks of an aid "as such ". According to the Court, moreover, it is necessary to distinguish between the respective fields of application of the provisions in question "except in those cases which may fall simultaneously within the field of application of two or more provisions of Community law ". 5

17 . In the same judgment, the Court acknowledges the possibility, when analysing a system of aid, of separating those factors which are not necessary for the attainment of its object.

> "In the latter case there are no reasons based on the division of powers under Articles 92 and 93 which permit the conclusion to be drawn that, if other provisions of the Treaty which have direct effect are infringed, those provisions may not be invoked before national courts simply because the factor in question is an aspect of aid ". (6)

18 . The Court has followed that case-law and confirmed that Articles 92 and 93 of the EEC Treaty cannot hinder the application of Article 30, provided that the contested measures constitute an aspect of an aid scheme which is not necessary for the attainment of the object or the proper functioning of the scheme. (7)

19 . Accordingly, if the Court considers that it is possible to invoke Article 30 and therefore proceeds on the assumption that Article 30 may be applied even though on the whole the legal categorization of the measure in question as aid is uncontested, there is all the more reason for taking this to be the case where a national system cannot be classified in one or other of those categories clearly and unequivocally.

20 . In the judgment relating to the "Buy Irish" promotion campaign, the Court did not follow the Irish Government' s argument to the effect that Articles 92 and 93 take precedence over Article 30. (8) Instead, the Court held that the fact that a substantial part of the campaign was financed by the Irish Government and that Articles 92 and 93 of the Treaty might be applicable to financing of that kind, did not mean that the campaign itself might escape the prohibitions laid down in Article 30. (9)

21 . If that reasoning is applied to this case of a system of regional preference, whose nature as aid is complicated in particular by the question of its financing out of State resources and of the calculation of the amount of aid, it follows that the reserved quota system must be assessed in the light of Article 30 and cannot a priori be exempted from such an assessment because it may be in the nature of aid .

22 . In the same vein, the Court has stated in another connection that Articles 92 and 94 cannot be used to frustrate the rules of the Treaty on the free movement of goods : (10)

> "the mere fact that a national measure may possibly be defined as aid within the meaning of Article 92 is therefore not an adequate reason for exempting it from the prohibition contained in Article 30 ". (11)

23 . Accordingly, it is necessary to assess the compatibility of the Italian reserved quota system with the principle of the free movement of goods and, in particular, with Article 30 of the Treaty. The order in which that assessment is carried out is justified inter alia by the possible far-reaching consequences of the direct applicability of Article 30 . (12)

2 . The compatibility of the reserved quota system with Article 30 of the EEC Treaty

24 . Article 30 of the EEC Treaty imposes an unconditional and absolute prohibition on quantitative restrictions on imports between Member States and on all measures having equivalent effect. Since the judgment in Dassonville, (13) which the Court has consistently reaffirmed, "all trading rules enacted by Member States which are capable of hindering, directly or indirectly, actually or potentially, intra-Community trade" are to be considered as measures having an effect equivalent to quantitative restrictions on imports.

25 . Even provisions applicable to domestic and imported goods without distinction may constitute measures having equivalent effect in so far as they specifically affect the imported goods and make it more difficult, if not impossible, to market them. However, there is no need in the present case to have recourse to that broad definition in order to establish that, in view of its effects, the reserved quota system is in the nature of a measure having equivalent effect within the meaning of Article 30.

26 . The obligation imposed on all public authorities, regions, provinces, municipalities, local health authorities, upland communities, companies and bodies in the State holding sector, universities and independent hospitals to procure at least 30% of the material they need from undertakings with establishments and fixed plant within the area covered by the preferential system certainly causes a substantial reduction in demand for imported goods. The impact of the system is aggravated by the fact that the figure of 30% of supplies and services must be attained at the end of the financial year, which means that, in order to compensate for the fact that some products are not manufactured in the areas covered by the preferential system, the reserved quota is liable considerably to exceed the prescribed figure of 30% in the case of other orders. Provision is even made for the unused portion of reserved quotas to be carried forward to the next financial year. (14)

27 . The economic dimension of the reserved quota system has become clearer in the course of the proceedings. Referring to the Commission' s communication of 24 July 1989, (15) public procurement, regional and social aspects, the plaintiff estimated at the hearing that the volume of public procurement subject to the regional preference scheme was ECU 16 to 17 000 million a year. In the radiography sector, some LIT 210 000 million was spent every year, 85% of that sum being accounted for by public supply contracts.

28 . The French Government pointed out that Southern Italy was 140 000 square kilometres in area, that is to say approximately one half of Italy' s national territory, and was inhabited by 40% of Italy' s population .

29 . It is plain the system at issue is not only an abstract threat to intra-Community trade simply from the facts of the main proceedings : the amount of the contract which was to be awarded was subsequently reduced by 30%, contrary to the initial notice. In the written procedure, the plaintiff stated, unchallenged, that its German sister company, which has intervened in the proceedings, manufactured photographic products for radiographical applications on behalf of the plaintiff . An estimated 12% of its company' s production capacity was given over to the manufacture of goods for the Italian market. The Italian market was fairly important, since it accounted for 18% of the European market for radiographical products. All such products, excluding the products manufactured by the 3M company, were imported.

30 . It can be inferred from those economic data that the reserved quota system provided for in Article 17 of Law No 64/86 has definitely impeded trade.

31 . The fact that approximately 85% of radiographical material is purchased by health authorities, which are bound to comply with the reserved quota system, casts light on the extent of the trade restrictions.

32 . The preferential system at issue is also clearly discriminatory . The obligation on the part of the undertakings concerned to procure 30% of their needs from suppliers with an establishment in Southern Italy totally excludes foreign-manufactured goods from possible supply contracts . Because the reserved quota system is binding, its discriminatory effect is more far-reaching than national measures designed to promote the purchase of domestic products through advertising campaigns supported by the State, (16) subsidies, (17) tax relief, (18) more favourable credit terms (19) or the mere requirement that goods from abroad should be stamped with the indication "foreign ". (20)

33 . The preferential system is more than a financial inducement to obtain supplies on the domestic market. The reserved quota system does not leave economic operators any alternative. Such an alternative existed in the examples referred to above, albeit on condition that certain financial sacrifices were accepted. Accordingly the problem lies not in the existence or otherwise of discrimination against foreign goods, but in the fact that even Italian manufacturers without an establishment in the areas covered by the preferential system suffer discrimination, since they are excluded from the supply contracts in the same way as foreign manufacturers. The Court has not had to consider such a situation before.

34 . In assessing the national measure in the light of Community law, pride of place should be given to its effect on international trade . The fact that the Italian undertakings which suffered discrimination may possibly be indirectly affected by the consequences of an assessment of the measure in question in the light of Community law is merely a side-effect.

35 . The impact of the reserved quota system - albeit restricted to certain regions - is significantly greater in economic terms, in particular on intra-Community trade, than many other measures having equivalent effect within the meaning of Article 30 which apply throughout the territory of a Member State (for instance, the requirement that certain souvenirs manufactured abroad must bear an indication of their foreign origin (21) or the grant of aid to municipal transport undertakings for the purchase of electric vehicles, a case in which two applications for aid were pending at the time of the hearing (22)). Even though not all Italian manufacturers benefit by the reserved quota system, nevertheless the fact remains that the undertakings which do benefit are almost invariably domestic undertakings.

36 . The extent of the impediments to trade arising from the reserved quota system therefore suggests that it should be regarded as a measure having equivalent effect within the meaning of Article 30. The decisive criteria for the purposes of that assessment are, on the one hand, the size of the area covered by the preferential system and, on the other, the large number of institutions bound by the system. (23) Finally, the share of the potential volume of procurement contracts of economic operators subject to the system is considerable

3 . The compatibility of the reserved quota system with Directive 70/50/EEC (24)

37 . In the written procedure it was argued that the contested statutory system should be regarded as a measure having an effect equivalent to a quantitative restriction on imports, and consequently prohibited, also on the ground that it falls within Article 2(3)(k) of Directive 70/50.

38 . The first point in that regard is that recourse to the directive is unnecessary if the contested system must be regarded as a measure having equivalent effect within the meaning of Article 30 on the basis of the criteria set out in the case-law. The directive, which is based on Article 33(7) of the EEC Treaty, contains merely a series of particularly noteworthy examples of measures covered by Article 30 and does not seek to provide a complete list. (25)

39 . Whether it is possible in this case to derive from the provisions of the directive an autonomous prohibition distinct from that laid down in Article 30 is questionable for two reasons. In the first place, the directive, in view of its legal nature, is addressed to the Member States and hence direct effect cannot be attributed to it as a matter of course. Furthermore, the general prohibition of measures having an effect equivalent to quantitative restrictions on imports follows directly from the Treaty. Secondly, it is expressly stated in the preamble to the directive that it does not apply to the aids mentioned in Article 92, (26) with the result that there would be a barrier to its application if the contested provision were in the nature of aid, even if only to some extent.

40 . Nevertheless, some provisions of the directive may serve as an aid for interpretation for the purpose of assessing whether a national measure is a measure having equivalent effect. According to Article 2(2) of the directive, the latter covers, in particular, measures which favour domestic products or grant them a preference. Article 2(3) lists examples of the kind of measures covered by this provision . According to Article 2(3)(k), those measures must be taken to include measures which "hinder the purchase by private individuals of imported products only, or encourage, require or give preference to the purchase of domestic products only ". (27) There are therefore four possibilities, of which the last two are relevant here, since the preferential system gives preference to a substantial number of domestic products and at the same time requires such products to be purchased .

41 . Consideration of the provisions of the directive therefore lends weight to the view that the disputed national system is a measure having equivalent effect to a quantitative restriction. Moreover, for the reasons referred to earlier, the fact that not all domestic goods of a specified kind are accorded preferential treatment does not preclude that classification. The preferential system applies only to goods which are at least in part domestically produced

4 . Possible exceptions to the prohibition of measures having equivalent effect within the meaning of Article 30 of the EEC Treaty

42 . (a) The interests protected by Article 36 of the EEC Treaty in respect of which derogations may be made from the prohibitions of quantitative restrictions on imports and exports and of measures having equivalent effect laid down by Articles 30 and 34 of the EEC Treaty are expressly enumerated in Article 36. Since that is a derogating provision, it must be interpreted restrictively, as regards both the scope of each exception and the applicability of Article 36 to any "unnamed exceptions ". The grounds on which derogations may be made which are listed in Article 36 cannot be applied either to the substance or to the aims of the reserved quota system. Moreover, the Court has decided in a consistent line of cases that measures with an economic aim cannot be justified by Article 36. (28)

43 . (b) Nevertheless, the preferential system might be justified by "mandatory requirements ". (29) Mandatory requirements may relate, for instance, to the effectiveness of fiscal supervision, the fairness of commercial transactions and consumer or environmental protection.

44 . The reserved quota system does not fall within any of those categories . Whether the measure in question may be justified on the ground of some other mandatory requirement depends on its aim and purpose . In so far as it cannot be assumed that the preferential system pursues exclusively protectionistic aims, it must be regarded as a regional support measure. Regional support is an objective recognized by the Treaty, as may be inferred from Article 92(3)(a) and Article 130(a) of the EEC Treaty.

45 . However, the legal basis for the implementation of an objective authorized or even laid down by the Treaty must be derived from the provisions of the Treaty in so far as express provisions are to be found there . Recourse to an unwritten legal basis is, therefore, precluded in so far as the machinery provided for in the Treaty affords a sufficient guarantee of the achievement of the objective pursued . Accordingly, regional support measures cannot be regarded as mandatory requirements. Furthermore, it is a well-established principle that a Member State may not rely on mandatory requirements in order to protect its domestic economy.

5 . Assessment of the reserved quota system in the context of Directives 77/62/EEC (30) and 70/32/EEC (31)

46 . According to the plaintiff, the reserved quota system is contrary to Community law also because it infringes Council Directive 77/62 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts . In its view, that directive applies the principles laid down in the EEC Treaty and therefore prohibits all discrimination, irrespective as to whether it is based on the origin of the products to be supplied or on the place at which the supplier is established.

47 . It is true that restrictions on the free movement of goods within the meaning of Article 30 are also prohibited in the case of supplies of goods to the State and to bodies governed by public law and in the case of the award of public supply contracts. The legislative authorities of the Community have therefore adopted coordination directives with a view to ensuring the free movement of goods also in the case of supply contracts awarded in the public sector . The preamble to Commission Directive 70/32 on provision of goods to the State, to local authorities and other official bodies states as follows :

> "... such provisions, by reserving outlets for domestic products... hinder imports which might take place in the absence of such provisions and therefore have an effect equivalent to quantitative restrictions on imports ".

The scope of the directive is defined in Article 3(1)(b) as applying to provisions "which restrict supplies, either wholly or in part, to domestic products or give them preference other than by way of aid within the meaning of Article 92 of the Treaty, whether conditionally or otherwise ".

48 . Directive 77/62 pursues comparable objectives with regard to procedures for the award of public supply contracts. As is clear from the preamble to the directive, it is also designed to ensure a degree of transparency in the award of public contracts in order to permit supervision to take place of the prohibition of restrictions on the free movement of goods.

49 . The question arises, however, whether Article 26, which is included amongst the final provisions, provides for an exception for the contested preferential system. It reads as follows :

> "This directive shall not prevent the implementation of provisions contained in Italian Law No 835 of 6 October 1950 (Official Gazette No 245 of 24.10.1950 of the Italian Republic) and in modifications thereto in force on the date on which this directive is adopted; this is without prejudice to the compatibility of these provisions with the Treaty ."

50 . In support of the view that that provision may constitute a derogation from the principles of the free movement of goods, it is argued that the predecessors of the reserved quota system are stated to be unaffected by the directive. Although, on account of its publication date, the amendment of that provision by Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988 (32) cannot be decisive for the purposes of the dispute in the main proceedings, it also supports the view that the provision in question is still a derogating provision. The amended version of Article 26(1) reads as follows :

> "This directive shall not prevent, until 31 December 1992, the application of existing national provisions on the award of public supply contracts which have as their objective the reduction of regional disparities and promotion of job creation in the most disadvantaged regions and in declining industrial regions, on condition that the provisions concerned are compatible with the Treaty and with the Community' s international obligations."

51 . The Italian preferential system is no longer expressly mentioned in that provision. It could at most be regarded, for the purposes of the new version, as a national provision whose aim is to reduce regional disparities.

52 . The decisive factor, in my view, is that the phrase "without prejudice to the compatibility of these provisions with the Treaty" was already to be found in the original version, and has now been incorporated in an equivalent formula in the new version. Those forms of words make it clear that, notwithstanding possible derogations from the directive, the fundamental principles of the Treaty, particularly those relating to the free movement of goods, remain valid without any limitation . The incompatibility of the reserved quota system established by Article 17 of Law No 64/86 with Article 30 cannot therefore be cured by the derogating provision in the directive.

53 . In Cases 216/84 (33) and 76/86 (34) a number of similar legal issues had to be resolved. The defendant Member States relied on a derogating provision in a directive in order to justify national legislation which had the effect of hindering intra-Community trade. The Court rejected that argument put forward in those cases. It pointed out that the derogating provision justified the maintenance of national provisions only on condition that the general provisions of the EEC Treaty were complied with.

54 . If, therefore, the preferential system cannot find justification for the purposes of Community law in the derogating provisions of Directive 77/62 either, it still remains to be considered what bearing it might have on the validity of the system if it could be regarded as aid.

55 . As is already apparent from the discussion of the competitive relationship between Articles 30 and 92, it is not possible for an infringement of Community law by a national measure on account of its incompatibility with the provisions of Article 30 to be cured by the fact that it exhibits aid-like features.

6 . Whether the reserved quota system may be regarded as aid and the consequences resulting therefrom

56 . The following considerations militate against the proposition that the contested system is in the nature of aid.

The essential feature of aid is that it is State assistance or assistance given through State resources. Admittedly, the Italian Government stated that in the case of supply contracts concluded under the reserved quota system the prices paid are higher than the prices which would be paid under an unrestricted tendering procedure. The additional amount is borne by the State, since the contracting authorities are public bodies or at least entities in which the State has a shareholding.

57 . The plaintiff stated, however, at the hearing that the local health authorities are autonomous bodies which, as far as their expenditure is concerned, are not dependent on the State. Nor can it be assumed that costs incurred by companies operating in accordance with the market economy which are only partly in public ownership are borne by the State.

58 . In addition, in order for aid within the meaning of Article 92 to be involved, the amount of aid must at least be capable of being determined in each case. That is also untrue in this instance, since in many cases the extra amount paid can be calculated only by making a hypothetical comparison between a contract awarded under conditions in which there is freedom of competition and supply contracts awarded under the reserved quota system. Furthermore, there is no conclusive evidence that any extra amount is actually payable. Nor is the payment of a price supplement the sole object of the reserved quota system, which is also aimed at the maintenance of production plant and, consequently, of employment, solely by means of the obligation to purchase goods which have been, at least partially, processed in areas covered by the preferential system. Moreover, a preferential system which has been in force for a decade may also have had, as its purpose and effect, the setting-up of new industries, which in no way implies that they operate uneconomically; as a result, it is possible that goods manufactured in the areas in question come onto the market at wholly competitive prices.

59 . Let me add a final remark concerning the nature of the reserved quota system as aid and its relationship with Article 30. According to the case-law, some elements of aid may - as stated earlier - be impermissible on account of their incompatibility with Article 30 where the aim pursued by the aid is attainable by less radical means. It would certainly be possible to promote regional development through measures less restrictive of the movement of goods within the Community, (35) since the promotion of regional development as such is permissible in accordance with the criteria and within the limits laid down by the EEC Treaty. Thus, aid within the meaning of Article 92(3)(a) of the EEC Treaty may be regarded as being compatible with the common market. However, development measures based on those provisions must be situated in a Community-law context and may not conflict with the aims and objectives of the Community. In order to permit coordination between regional aid schemes, the Commission has worked out principles in the light of which the permissibility of regional aid is to be assessed. Those principles have been published in a Commission communication. (36)

60 . Furthermore, regional development measures may also be adopted on the basis of Article 130a of the EEC Treaty. However, that provision is expressly concerned with the achievement of a Community objective, with the result that only Community development programmes, or development programmes authorized by the Community, may be taken into account.

61 . It is irrelevant to the outcome of the assessment of the legality under Community law of the reserved quota system and especially to the consequences to be drawn therefrom by the national court whether or not the measure in question is in the nature of aid. The contested system could at most constitute an unauthorized aid. In view of the content and aim of the system, it could only be aid capable of being approved under Article 92(3)(a) of the EEC Treaty.

62 . Assessment of the compatibility of a national aid measure with the common market does not fall within the jurisdiction of the national courts. Nor has the Commission, in its capacity as the authority responsible for supervising aid, authorized the system as aid . (37) Although the Italian Government notified it in due time of the draft law which was enacted as Law No 64/86, the Commission, according to the assurances which it gave in the course of the proceedings, never initiated the aid-review procedure in relation to the preferential system. Accordingly, on those facts the last sentence of Article 93(3) of the EEC Treaty, which prohibits the Member State concerned from putting its proposed measure into effect until the Commission has taken a final decision, does not apply in this case . Considered from this angle only, the reserved quota system is not invalid as a measure adopted contrary to Article 93(3); if it had been invalid for that reason that invalidity would have had to be taken into account by the national courts and authorities.

Costs

63 . The costs incurred by the Italian Government and the Commission are not recoverable. These proceedings are, in so far as the parties to the main proceedings are concerned, in the nature of a step in the proceedings before the national court. The decision on costs is a matter for that court.

C - Conclusion

64 . In the light of the foregoing considerations, I suggest that the questions submitted by the national court should be answered as follows :

> "(1) The reserved quota system established by Law No 64/86 must be regarded as a measure having equivalent effect to a quantitative restriction within the meaning of Article 30 of the EEC Treaty. The resultant illegality of that system under Community law must be taken into account by the national courts and authorities.

(2) The exception provided for in Article 26 of Directive 77/62/EEC does not have the effect of making the reserved quota system compatible with Community law.

(3) The reserved quota system is not in the nature of aid. Even if it were regarded as aid, that would not have any direct repercussions on the dispute in the main proceedings."

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Mischo delivered on 4 October 1989.
Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic.
Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Public supply contracts in the data-processing sector - Undertakings partly or wholly in public ownership - National legislatrion not in compliance with obligations under Community law.
Case C-3/88.

Mr President,

1 . In the Article 169 action in Case C-3/88, the Commission seeks a declaration from the Court that by adopting or maintaining in force legislation under which only companies in which all or a majority of the shares are directly or indirectly in public or State ownership may conclude agreements with the Italian State for the development of data-processing systems on behalf of the public authorities, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty and Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (Official Journal L 13, 15.1.1977, p. 1).

2 . For a description of the Italian laws and decree-laws in issue, reference may be made to Part II of the Report for the Hearing. Those enactments all concern the establishment of complete data-processing systems, from the design of the system and the definition of the software (programs) to their technical operation, including the purchase of the equipment required for their operation.

3 . The allegation of infringement of Articles 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty is directed at that aspect of the Italian legislation which relates to the design, programming and operation of the data-processing systems (hereinafter referred to collectively as "software "), while that of infringement of Directive 77/62/EEC is directed at the legislation in so far as it relates to the supply of equipment (hereinafter referred to as "hardware ").

I - Articles 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty

4 . In its judgment of 14 January 1988 in Case 63/86 Commission v Italy ((1988)) ECR 29, the Court pointed out that

> "Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty are essentially intended to give effect, in the field of activities as self-employed persons, to the principle of equal treatment enshrined in Article 7 according to which 'within the scope of application of this Treaty, and without prejudice to any special provisions contained therein, any discrimination on grounds of nationality shall be prohibited'.

Those two articles are thus intended to secure the benefit of national treatment for a national of a Member State who wishes to pursue an activity as a self-employed person in another Member State and they prohibit all discrimination on grounds of nationality resulting from national or regional legislation and preventing the taking up or pursuit of such an activity" (paragraphs 12 and 13).

5 . In the present case, the Italian Government claims primarily that the laws and decree-laws in issue do not make any reference to the nationality of companies entitled to conclude the contracts and agreements in question with the Italian State.

6 . At a formal level, the Italian Government is undoubtedly right - the Italian legislation in issue applies without distinction to both Italian and non-Italian companies. The criterion of distinction is not the "nationality" of the companies, but rather whether all or a majority of the shares are in public ownership. It is not disputed that "public ownership" here means Italian public ownership.

7 . The Commission, in its reply (point 3.2.2), counters by asserting that > "provisions which, while making no explicit reference to nationality, in fact affect solely or overwhelmingly nationals (or corporations) of the other Member States... are also covered by the prohibition of discrimination ".

8 . That claim of indirect (or disguised) discrimination on the basis of nationality had already been raised by the Commission in Case 221/85 Commission v Belgium ((1987)) ECR 719, to which it refers. In its judgment of 12 February 1987 in that case, the Court found that the Belgian law in issue did not prevent nationals of other Member States from establishing themselves in Belgium and carrying out the activities in question and that it thus applied without distinction to Belgian nationals and those of other Member States, and added that > "its provisions and objectives do not permit the conclusion that it was adopted for discriminatory purposes or that it produces discriminatory effects" (paragraph 11).

9 . In other, more recent, cases, the Court has also indicated that the criterion of indirect discrimination on the basis of nationality may indeed be applied to rules applicable without distinction.

10 . In its judgments of 7 July 1988 in Case 143/87 Stanton v Inasti and in Joined Cases 154 and 155/87 Inasti v Wolf and Others and Inasti v RSVZ (1) the Court found as follows :

> "the national legislation which gave rise to the main proceedings is applicable without distinction to all self-employed persons working in Belgium and does not discriminate according to the nationality of those persons. Although it is true that self-employed persons whose principal occupation is employment in a Member State other than Belgium are thereby placed at a disadvantage, nothing has been submitted to the Court to show that the persons disadvantaged are exclusively or mainly foreign nationals ".

The Court concluded that

> "nor, therefore, can the national legislation at issue be considered to result in indirect discrimination on grounds of nationality"

and that

> "consequently, Article 7 of the Treaty may be dismissed from consideration" (paragraph 9).

11 . In its judgment of 20 September 1988 in Case 31/87 Gebroeders Beentjes v Netherlands, (2) the Court declared that > "the obligation to employ long-term unemployed persons could inter alia infringe the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality laid down in the second paragraph of Article 7 of the Treaty if it became apparent that such a condition could be satisfied only by tenderers from the State concerned or indeed that tenderers from other Member States would have difficulty in complying with it ".

As the case was a reference for a preliminary ruling, it added that > "it is for the national court to determine, in the light of all the circumstances of the case, whether the imposition of such a condition is directly or indirectly discriminatory" (paragraph 30).

12 . Furthermore, in its judgment of 7 June 1988 in Case 20/85 Roviello v Landesversicherungsanstalt Schwaben, (3) the Court applied the same reasoning, this time not to national legislation but to a provision of Community law in the field of social security, and confirmed that

"the principle of equal treatment prohibits not merely overt discrimination based on nationality but all covert forms of discrimination which, by applying other distinguishing criteria, in fact achieve the same result" (paragraph 14). (4)

13 . Those various recent judgments confirm the validity of the Commission' s claim that provisions of national law which, while applicable without distinction to nationals of all the Member States, in fact hinder or disadvantage primarily nationals of other Member States may also be covered by the prohibition in Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty . It is, moreover, significant that the General Programmes for the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services and on freedom of establishment laid down by the Council on 18 December 1961 (Official Journal, English Special Edition, Second Series IX, pp . 3 and 7), which, as the Court has noted on several occasions, (5) provide useful guidance with a view to the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Treaty, both consider that the restrictions prohibited include

"any requirements imposed, pursuant to any provision laid down by law, regulation or administrative action or in consequence of any administrative practice, in respect of the provision of services ((or the taking up or pursuit of an activity as a self-employed person)) ... where, although applicable irrespective of nationality, their effect is exclusively or principally to hinder the provision of services ((or the taking up or pursuit of such activity)) by foreign nationals ".

14 . Moreover, in its judgments of 7 July 1988 in the Inasti cases, cited above, the Court declared very generally that "the provisions of the Treaty relating to the free movement of persons are thus intended to facilitate the pursuit by Community citizens of occupational activities of all kinds throughout the Community, and preclude national legislation which might place Community citizens at a disadvantage when they wish to extend their activities beyond the territory of a single Member State" (paragraph 13).

15 . Applied to the present case, that approach implies that the Italian legislation in issue, while not preventing companies from other Member States from establishing themselves in Italy or engaging in the activities in question, is incompatible with Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty in so far as its effect is to prevent non-Italian companies from concluding the contracts in question.

16 . In its rejoinder (p. 5), however, the Italian Government objects that the disputed rules treat Italian private undertakings and foreign private undertakings in exactly the same way, both in fact and in law, and that they merely draw a distinction between private undertakings and public undertakings, with no reference to nationality

17 . In the present case, however, it is not appropriate to make any differentiation in reasoning between private undertakings and public undertakings. First, the Commission is not alleging any discrimination by Italy against foreign private undertakings in relation to Italian private undertakings. Secondly, the discriminatory criterion is not that of public ownership, but that of Italian public ownership, the effect of which is that only undertakings controlled by the Italian public sector can be considered for the work in question. Those companies are, in fact, all companies which are incorporated or have their registered offices in Italy, that is to say they are Italian companies.

18 . Not all Italian companies are treated more favourably than foreign companies, but all the companies receiving favourable treatment under the legislation are Italian.

19 . The defendant claims, however, that the Italian State or public sector has acquired majority holdings in a number of foreign companies, including an American company specialized in data processing .

20 . In that connection, it must be acknowledged that a company having the nationality of another Member State, provided that all or a majority of its shares were in Italian public ownership, would meet the conditions laid down by the laws in question. But even if some such company were to exist, the Italian legislation, while not affording favourable treatment exclusively to Italian companies, would still afford such treatment mainly to those companies, and would still be incompatible with the Treaty.

21 . The Commission has nevertheless pointed out, without being contradicted, that there are at present no data-processing companies having the nationality of another Member State all or a majority of whose shares are in Italian public ownership, and that the agreements concluded under the contested rules have in fact been concluded with Italian companies.

22 . In its rejoinder (pp. 5 and 6), the Italian Government also maintains that the criterion of Italian public ownership is justified by the type of services which the companies in question are called upon to provide, and in particular by the fact that their task may involve the operation of data-processing systems in strategic sectors such as taxation, organized crime, public health, etc.

23 . In that connection, it must be noted that a number of the laws in question provide only that the task of operating the data-processing systems may, if appropriate, be temporarily entrusted to the companies which developed those systems. Those provisions refer, moreover, to the technical operation of the systems, and that operation is to remain under the direction and supervision of the administrative authorities, so that it does not necessarily involve access to "strategic" data by the operators.

24 . Finally, the State can undoubtedly guard against any unwelcome use of the data in question by having recourse to other measures which are less restrictive of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services, such as a duty of official secrecy laid on the staff of the companies concerned. Furthermore, Decree-Law No 688 of 30 September 1982, providing for emergency measures to counteract tax evasion, extends the general duty of official secrecy, which applies under the Italian Penal Code to public officials and those responsible for public services, to "employees and staff of companies awarded contracts who are involved in any manner in the operations provided for in the contracts ". There is no reason to suppose that compliance with that duty would necessarily be less strict or less complete in the case of staff of companies none of whose shares were in Italian State ownership than in the case of staff of those some of whose shares were in Italian State ownership.

25 . Similar considerations may be advanced in relation to the Italian Government' s alternative argument that Articles 52 and 59 cannot be applied in any event because of the exceptions provided for in Articles 55, 56(1) and 66 of the Treaty.

26 . With regard to the exception for activities involving the exercise of official authority provided for in Article 55, it must first be emphasized, as the Court reiterated in its judgment of 15 March 1988 in Case 147/86 Commission v Greece (6) that

> "since it derogates from the fundamental rule of freedom of establishment ((and, through Article 66, from that of freedom to provide services)) Article 55 of the Treaty must be interpreted in a manner which limits its scope to what is strictly necessary in order to safeguard the interests which it allows the Member States to protect" (paragraph 7).

The Court added, moreover, that

> "the possible application of restrictions on freedom of establishment provided for by Article 55(1) must be appraised separately in respect of each Member State. However, that appraisal must take account of the Community character of the limits set by Article 55 to the exceptions which are permitted to the principle of freedom of establishment, in order to prevent the effectiveness of the Treaty in this area from being undermined by unilateral provisions adopted by the Member States" (paragraph 8).

27 . However, the Court has never, in its decisions, given a definition in general and abstract terms of what is meant by "activities which... are connected, even occasionally, with the exercise of official authority ".

28 . In its judgment of 21 June 1974 in Case 2/74 Reyners v Belgium ((1974)) ECR 631, it did, however, declare that the most typical activities of the profession of avocat cannot be considered to be connected with the exercise of that authority, and ruled that "the exception to freedom of establishment provided for by the first paragraph of Article 55 must be restricted to those of the activities referred to in Article 52 which in themselves involve a direct and specific connection with the exercise of official authority ".

It follows from that judgment that even if certain activities are performed by virtue of a legal duty or monopoly, they are not necessarily connected with the exercise of official authority.

29 . Furthermore, in its judgment of 15 March 1988 in Commission v Greece, cited above, concerning activities which although engaged in by private individuals fell within the field of education, where it is for each Member State to determine the role and responsibilities of the official authorities, the Court held that the exception in Article 55 was not applicable because those activities remained subject to supervision by the official authorities, which had at their disposal appropriate means for ensuring in all circumstances the protection of the interests entrusted to them, and there was no need to restrict freedom of establishment for that purpose.

30 . In my view, the Court has thus given the concept of "connection with the exercise of official authority" a narrower interpretation than that which it has given to the concept of "employment in the public service" contained in Article 48(4) of the Treaty, which, according to the Court' s decisions, includes not only those posts which involve direct participation but also those which involve indirect participation in the exercise of powers conferred by public law and even in the discharge of functions whose purpose is to safeguard merely the general interests of the State or of other public authorities . (7)

31 . In view of the foregoing, I do not feel that it is possible to consider that companies awarded contracts for the development and technical operation of data-processing systems on behalf of the public authorities are "directly and specifically" involved in the exercise of official authority. As we have seen, moreover, the services to be provided by those companies are to remain under the direction and supervision of the public authorities, which thereby retain control.

32 . Finally, in so far as the development and technical operation of data-processing systems may unavoidably involve access to data of a confidential nature and of public importance, Member States have, in the duty of official secrecy, a sufficiently effective means of guarding against disclosure without there being any need to restrict freedom of establishment or freedom to provide services for that purpose .

33 . With regard to the exception contained in Article 56(1), to which Article 66 also refers, and which makes it permissible to maintain national rules providing for special treatment for foreign nationals on grounds of public policy, public security or public health, it should first be pointed out that the grounds on which the exercise of certain activities may be exempted from the prohibitions contained in Articles 52 and 59 are to be found not in the aims specific to the relevant rules themselves but in the reasons for which they impose restrictions on foreign nationals. The Italian

Government' s argument that it is, in establishing these data-processing systems, pursuing aims which are not solely economic but also involve the public interest, including counteracting tax evasion, fighting organized crime, providing therapeutic measures for drug-addiction and counteracting fraud in the pharmaceutical and agricultural sectors, is therefore not relevant for the purpose of justifying the restrictions imposed on foreign companies. To give an example, the mere fact that one of the data-processing systems in question is intended to meet the requirements of national health planning and supervision of the national health fund does not mean that any participation of foreign companies in its establishment and operation would endanger public health in Italy. (8)

34 . The only reasons of public policy or public security which might justify the exclusion of foreign companies therefore lie in the protection of the data processed by the systems in question. According to the Italian Government,

> "that information has undeniable public implication; it cannot be allowed to fall into unauthorized hands and must not be used in any manner which is improper or actually contrary to the interests of the State" (end of point II, 2.(b) of the rejoinder).

35 . What is true for measures adopted under Article 56 is also true for any measure providing for special treatment for foreign nationals, whether based on objective criteria of general interest or on Article 55; that is to say, they must not be disproportionate to the aim they seek to achieve. As the Court pointed out in its judgment of 26 April 1988 in Case 352/85 Bond van Averteeders and Others v Netherlands ((1988)) ECR 2085,

> "as an exception to a fundamental principle of the Treaty, Article 56 of the Treaty must be interpreted in such a way that its effects are limited to that which is necessary in order to protect the interests which it seeks to safeguard" (paragraph 36).

36 . It is also impossible, for the reasons outlined in those contexts, to justify the exclusion of companies other than those in which all or a majority of the shares are in Italian public ownership on grounds of public policy or public security within the meaning of Article 56 of the Treaty.

37 . In conclusion, the Commission' s application should be upheld in so far as it is based on an infringement of Articles 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty.

II - Council Directive 77/62/EEC

38 . In its second head of claim, the Commission seeks a declaration that the Italian legislation in issue authorizes, with regard to the purchase of the hardware required for the establishment of the data-processing systems in question, procedures for the award of public supply contracts which are incompatible with the principles of Council Directive 77/62/EEC, and in particular that the advertising rules contained in Article 9 of that directive, which require appropriate notices to be published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, have never been observed.

39 . The Italian Government argues primarily that the directive does not apply to the contracts and agreements in issue. A data-processing system forms a whole from which the hardware cannot be separated and of which it is merely a secondary, ancillary constituent. As complex assemblages comprising, in addition to the hardware, software-related operations and services (design, maintenance, commissioning and sometimes operation), data-processing systems such as those defined in the legislation in question cannot be regarded as constituting "products" within the meaning of Article 1(a) of the directive.

40 . That argument advanced by the Italian government cannot, in my opinion, be accepted.

41 . It is true that there can be no doubt, and the Commission is in full agreement with the Italian Government on this point, that

"following the necessary design state, hardware and software are the indispensable and inseparable elements acquired for the establishment of a data-processing system" (reply, p. 2).

42 . But that does not mean that they cannot be purchased separately

43 . The Italian Government could first have approached a company specializing in software for the design of the system. Such a company could have produced a very detailed description of the technical requirements for the most appropriate machines. The government could then have purchased those machines by following a procedure complying with the rules laid down in Directive 77/62/EEC. It was in fact confirmed at the hearing that the Italian Government has finally become the owner of the equipment chosen and purchased on its behalf by the companies with which the contracts were concluded.

44 . The question whether the hardware and software, taken together, constitute a "product" within the meaning of Article 1 of the directive does not, therefore, arise.

45 . In any event, the directive does not contain any provision which would allow certain deliveries of products to be excluded from its scope of application on the ground that they were merely ancillary to more extensive operations or services. It does, however, to a limited extent, provide the opposite : Article 1(a) provides that the delivery of products covered by public supply contracts within the meaning of the directive "may in addition include siting and installation operations ". It is obviously out of the question to conclude that in the field of data-processing software is secondary to hardware and must be treated in the same way. I feel, however, that it may justifiably be considered that if the Council had intended to allow hardware not to be made subject to the directive on the ground that it is ancillary to software, then it would have said so explicitly .

46 . It is, moreover, significant to note that although the Council, in Article 6(1)(h), authorized Member States not to apply the prescribed procedures "for equipment supply contracts in the field of data-processing", that exception was available only until 1 January 1981, in the absence of any decision to modify that date, and was subject to the Council' s right to exclude certain categories of material from its scope. That explicit exception shows, by contrary inference, that data-processing hardware is, in principle, a product within the meaning of the directive. It cannot be deduced from the scope or wording of either Council Decision 79/783/EEC of 11 September 1979 adopting a multiannual programme (1979-83) in the field of data processing (Official Journal L 231, 13.9.1979, p. 23) or Council Decision 84/559/EEC of 22 November 1984 amending that decision in respect of general measures in the field of data processing (Official Journal L 308, 27.11.1984, p. 49) that those decisions may have extended, even implicitly, the period of validity of that exception. The directive has therefore been applicable to equipment supply contracts in the field of data processing since 1 January 1981. (It may be pointed out, in passing, that the current text of the directive, as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988, (9) no longer contains the exception in question.)

47 . That conclusion cannot be impugned by the observation that the value of the software is generally greater than that of the hardware in the establishment of data-processing systems. The directive merely fixes a lower limit below which the prescribed procedures need not be applied to public supply contracts, and that limit is expressed in absolute terms : Article 5(1)(a) sets it at 200 000 European units of account, now ECU 200 000. The Italian Government' s answer to the question put by the Court shows that in the present case that limit was exceeded with respect to the hardware - indeed, the Italian Government has never claimed otherwise.

48 . It should also be pointed out that the purpose of Directive 77/62/EEC, as stated in the first two recitals in its preamble, is merely to supplement, by the coordination of the procedures relating to public supply contracts, the prohibition of restrictions on the free movement of goods in that field already contained in Articles 30 et seq . of the EEC Treaty. None of those provisions envisages any exemption from that prohibition in cases where the goods involved are to be delivered within the wider framework of operations which also, or principally, comprise the performance of work or the provision of services .

49 . Furthermore, in its judgment of 22 September 1988 in Case 45/87 Commission v Ireland ((1988)) ECR 4929, the Court relied on the general character of the prohibitions laid down by Article 30 in dismissing the Irish Government' s argument that they should not apply to imports of materials ancillary to a public works contract. The Court held that the provisions of the Treaty relating to the freedom to provide services did not lay down any specific rule relating to particular barriers to the free movement of goods, and explicitly declared that > "the fact that a public works contract relates to the provision of services cannot remove a clause in an invitation to tender restricting the materials that may be used from the scope of the prohibitions set out in Article 30" (see paragraphs 14 to 17).

50 . That reasoning is also applicable in the present case, inasmuch as the fact that a delivery of goods falls within the framework of activities carried out under either Article 52 or Article 59 of the Treaty does not exempt those goods from the prohibitions contained in Article 30 .

51 . It was therefore wrong not to provide, in the three Italian enactments in issue, for the application of the procedures prescribed in Directive 77/62/EEC in relation to the purchase of the hardware required for the establishment of the data-processing systems in question .

52 . With regard to the Italian Government' s alternative submission that the public supply contracts in issue are covered by one or more of the derogations provided for in the directive, I agree with the Commission in considering that none of those derogations is applicable in this case. Since I am in full agreement with the arguments advanced by the Commission in that regard, as they are set out in Part IV.2 of the Report for the Hearing, I shall merely refer to that document .

Conclusion

53 . For all the above reasons, I propose that the Commission' s application should be allowed in its entirety, and that the Italian Republic should be ordered to pay the costs.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Darmon delivered on 21 June 1988.
Commission of the European Communities v Ireland.
Public works contract - Community tender procedure - Applicability of Article 30 of the EEC Treaty.
Case 45/87.

Mr President,

1 . In this action the Commission is asking the Court for a declaration that by allowing the inclusion in the invitation to tender for a public works contract concerning the supply of water for Dundalk of a clause providing that the pipes to be used are to be certified as complying with an Irish standard and by refusing to consider a tender providing for the use of pipes not certified as complying with that standard, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 30 of the EEC Treaty and Article 10 of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (hereinafter referred to as "the directive "). (1)

2 . The promoter of the project, called the "Dundalk Water Supply Augmentation Scheme", is the Dundalk Urban District Council. Within that project, the contract in question is contract No 4. It concerns the construction of a water-main to transport water from the River Fane source to a treatment plant and thence into the existing supply system . In the contract specifications, Clause 4.29 provides that : "Asbestos cement pressure pipes shall be certified as complying with Irish Standard Specification 188:1975 in accordance with the Irish Standard Mark Licensing Scheme of the Institute for Industrial Research and Standards. All asbestos cement water-mains are to have a bituminous coating internally and externally. Such coatings shall be applied at the factory by dipping ". Following a complaint by an Irish public works undertaking, Walls, one of whose very competitively priced tenders was rejected because it envisaged the use of Spanish Uralita pipes that did not have the certification required, the Commission commenced the procedure provided for in Article 169 of the EEC Treaty .

3 . It is necessary first of all to describe the legal background to the arguments which will enable the Court to determine whether Ireland has failed to fulfil certain of its obligations under Community law.

4 . The Commission considers that the infringement must be considered in the light, in particular, of the obligations arising under Article 10 of the directive. Noting that, according to Article 3 (5) of the directive, its provisions do not apply in particular to public works contracts awarded by the production, distribution, transmission or transportation services for water, the Commission points out that, since Ireland referred to the compulsory notice provided for in the directive in order to publish a notice of the contract in question in the Official Journal of the European Communities, it is obliged to comply with all of the provisions of the directive, in particular Article 10 (2). That provision prohibits in principle, in clauses of contracts governed by the directive, "the indication of trade marks, patents, types, or of a specific origin or production"; however, it authorizes such an indication subject to certain conditions if it is accompanied by the words "or equivalent ".

5 . There is no doubt that the contract in question, which was one of a number of contracts for works designed to augment the Dundalk water supply, thus belonged to a category of contracts outside the scope of the directive and that, from that point of view, Ireland was not a priori obliged to comply with its provisions. It is contended, however, that Ireland voluntarily submitted itself

to its application

6 . Apparently, the publication of the notice of the contract in question in accordance with the conditions laid down in the directive was initially linked to Ireland' s plan to seek Community finance for the project . Its plan came to nothing but the Commission wishes the Court to declare that once a Member State publishes, on its own initiative, a notice of an invitation to tender in the form provided for in the directive, it must subsequently apply all the provisions of the directive, so that the apparent situation is complied with, as it were .

7 . With regard to that argument, which has been supported by Spain, I share the view of Ireland that the perfectly clear wording of the provisions excluding contracts relating to the production, distribution, transmission or transportation of water from the scope of the directive must prevail. To those provisions the Community legislature has added no qualification to the effect that authorities awarding contracts may voluntarily make their invitations to tender subject to a set of rules which is a priori inapplicable to them. I do not believe that in its judgment the Court may infer, from the form of the publication of a notice of invitation to tender, consequences which the Community legislature, which laid down those formal requirements, did not envisage.

8 . Neither the Commission nor Spain has truly explained how, as a matter of law, the Member States could unilaterally, in the absence of any supporting legal provision, override the effect of Article 3 (5) of the directive and no previous judgments of the Court have been cited in support of this view.

9 . Certainly, one cannot ignore the need to protect the interests of contractors who might draw certain conclusions from publication of the notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities. However, it seems to me that, given the Community legislature' s very clear position as regards the exclusion of certain contracts from the scope of the directive, a qualification added by a decision of the Court to the effect that a Member State may voluntarily submit itself to the application of the provisions of the directive would have the disadvantage of introducing ambiguity into the interpretation of the provisions of a directive where there is none at present. In several of its judgments the Court has emphasized in this regard the necessity for Member States not to place economic operators in a position of uncertainty through contradictions in legislation or regulations. (2) In my view, that principle applies a fortiori to strictly Community provisions and in the present circumstances prohibits the perfectly clear meaning of Article 3 (5) of the directive from being obscured.

10 . For that reason I consider that in the present case the directive could not apply to the contract in question and consequently that it is unnecessary to consider how Ireland failed in this case to fulfil the obligations laid down therein.

11 . It would therefore appear that Ireland' s conduct may be assessed only in the light of the obligations arising under Article 30 of the Treaty.

12 . Here again, Ireland considers that the provisions of Article 30 cannot apply to the facts referred to by the Commission and that its reliance on Article 30 has no sound basis.

13 . That view is based on an apparently simple line of argument. Ireland is being challenged on an issue concerning the non-conformity with Community law of one aspect of the invitation to tender for a public works contract. Invitations to tender are governed by provisions which implement the articles of the Treaty relating to the freedom to provide services. Therefore, Ireland' s conduct cannot, according to the case-law of the Court, be assessed with reference to the provisions of the Treaty relating to the free movement of goods. Ireland relies in this connection on the judgment of the Court of 22 March 1977 in Ianelli v Meroni in which the Court stated that :

"however wide the field of application of Article 30 may be, it nevertheless does not include obstacles to trade covered by other provisions of the Treaty ". (3)

14 . Before assessing the merits of Ireland' s point of view, it must be set out in somewhat greater detail. Invitations to tender for public works contract are governed by Directive 71/305. That directive is based in particular on Article 59 (2) and Article 66 of the Treaty . A public works contract should therefore be regarded as a provision of services and any challenge to a clause in such a contract should be examined with reference to the requirements of the freedom to provide services. Each clause, whatever its subject-matter, is merely ancillary to the provision of the services. Therefore, in the case of obstacles covered by specific provisions of the Treaty, as referred to in the judgment in Ianelli, Article 30 cannot be relied upon .

15 . For the sake of completeness it must be noted that ultimately that line of argument would necessarily lead to the conclusion that any attempt to find an infringement of obligations arising under the Treaty would be futile in the present case. Besides the fundamental impossibility of relying on the obligations laid down in Article 30, there is the effect of the special provision of the directive, (4) which excludes from the scope of the directive in particular public works contracts relating to the supply of water. Such contracts, being governed ratione materiae by the rules of the Treaty relating to the freedom to provide services, fall outside the provisions of the directive implementing those Treaty rules by virtue of an exception provided for in the directive.

16 . Like the Commission and Spain, I am not convinced by that line of argument .

17 . First of all, it is necesary to recall how, according to the case-law of the Court, the scope of Article 30 is delimited in relation to that of other provisions of the Treaty. In its judgment of 3 March 1988 in Bergandi the Court stated that Article 30

"covers generally all measures impeding imports which are not already specifically covered by other provisions of the Treaty ". (5)

This clearly shows that Article 30 must give way only to provisions specifically covering "measures impeding imports" in a given case. As Advocate General Sir Gordon Slynn observed in his Opinion in the case of Cinéthèque SA, the provisions of the Treaty relating to the freedom to provide services are all aimed at

"eliminating measures which impose on the national of one Member State more rigorous rules, or put him in law or in fact in an unfavourable position compared with the national of the Member State imposing the measure ". (6)

They do not therefore specifically cover measures impeding imports. From that point of view, there are consequently already grounds for doubting whether the fact that a service is provided means in principle that Article 30 is inapplicable to measures which, in the context of the provision of that service, would impede imports.

18 . In actual fact, an examination of the case-law of the Court leads to the conclusion that in general the clear desire is for the maximum number of obstacles to the importation of goods to be caught through Article 30.

19 . One illustration is to be found in the judgments in cases concerning processes for the manufacture of physical articles where the Court relies on Article 60 of the Treaty so as to let classification as the provision of a service operate only in subordination to classification as supply of goods. (7)

20 . An even more convincing illustration of the "attractive effect" of Article 30 is afforded by the case-law of the Court concerning the applicability of Article 30 to operations covered by the provisions on State aids . In its judgment in Ianelli, cited above, the Court ruled

"the aids referred to in Articles 92 and 93 of the Treaty do not as such fall within the field of application of the prohibition of quantitative restrictions on imports and measures having equivalent effect laid down by Article 30 but the aspects of aid which are not necessary for the attainment of its object or for its proper functioning and which contravene this prohibition may for that reason be held to be incompatible with this provision ". (8)

21 . The possibility of applying Article 30 to certain aspects of aid is expressed even more clearly in recent judgments. In the aforementioned judgment of 7 May 1985 in Commission v France the Court pointed out that

"Articles 92 and 94 cannot... be used to frustrate the rules of the Treaty on the free movement of goods"

and that

"the mere fact that a national measure may possibly be defined as aid within the meaning of Article 92 is therefore not an adequate reason for exempting it from the prohibition contained in Article 30 ". (9)

Similar words are to be found in the Court' s judgment of 5 June 1986 in Commission v Italy. (10)

22 . In fact, the only cases in which the Court has in the past considered that the application of certain provisions of the Treaty precludes reliance on Article 30 are those concerning "obstacles which are of a fiscal nature or have equivalent effect", (11) which corresponds closely to the abovementioned passage from the Bergandi judgment . (12)

23 . It may therefore be deduced from the case-law of the Court that the fact that a given situation is, as a whole, governed by certain provisions of the Treaty does not in all cases prevent a particular aspect of that situation from giving rise to the application of Article 30 . More precisely, the fact that a service is provided would not appear to exclude an assessment of the compatibility of certain aspects of the provision of that service with Article 30.

24 . That impression can only be reinforced by a reading of the judgment of 30 April 1974 in Sacchi in which the Court ruled that, although "the transmission of television signals, including those in the nature of advertisements, comes, as such, within the rules of the Treaty relating to services",

"trade in material, sound recordings, films, apparatus and other products used for the diffusion of television signals is subject to the rules relating to freedom of movement for goods ". (13)

25 . The case-law of the Court, in the light of that judgment, therefore gives grounds for considering that, although a public works contract constitutes a provision of services, the materials used to perform it are covered by the provisions of Article 30.

26 . In support of that view, which, I believe, simply takes account of the principles laid down in the judgments of the Court, I would like to put forward a consideration prompted by the particular legal factors of this case. In my opinion, Ireland' s argument leads to a considerable weakening of the effectiveness of certain fundamental rules of the Treaty, those relating to the free movement of goods. To say that all the aspects of a public works contract are covered exclusively by the provisions of the Treaty concerning the freedom to provide services when the directive implementing those provisions in the field of public works contracts excludes from its scope contracts relating to energy and water would ultimately render the principle of free movement ineffective as regards materials of considerable importance . I do not believe that such a situation could have been envisaged by the authors of the Treaty. Nor can I imagine that the Community legislature, which drafted the directive, had the intention or even the power to frustrate to some extent the application of the fundamental provisions of the Treaty on freedom of movement in that way .

27 . I therefore consider that the interpretation of the rules of the Treaty relating to the free movement of goods and the freedom to provide services, as regards the relation between their respective fields of application, must not entail the ineffectiveness, with regard to major areas of trade, of a fundamental provision which has been recognized by the Court as having direct effect (14) or the invalidity of a set of Community rules.

28 . Incidentally, it may also be noted that certain provisions of the directive, for example Article 10, essentially implement the principle of the free movement of goods. This well illustrates that not all the aspects of a public works contract are covered exclusively by the rules relating to the freedom to provide services.

29 . I am therefore satisfied that there are no grounds for accepting Ireland' s argument and that it is now necessary to consider the conduct which the Commission regards as a breach of Ireland' s obligations under Article 30 of the EEC Treaty. In other words, the question is whether Ireland' s conduct in this case meets the classic definition of a measure having equivalent effect given in the judgment in Dassonville. (15)

30 . At the centre of the argument is the inclusion in the contract specification in question of Clause 4.29 in so far as it provides that the pipes are to be certified as complying with Irish Standard Specification 188:1975. The standard in question, IS 188, was adopted in 1975 by the Institute for Industrial Research and Standards (IIRS), a multi-disciplinary technical body created in Ireland by an Act of 1961 in order, in particular, to lay down and publish standards and apply certification schemes. From 1 January 1985 the latter two activities were taken over by another body acting on behalf of the IIRS, the National Standards Authority of Ireland (NSAI). Compliance with a standard is usually certified by a mark called the "Irish Standard Mark" and it is the issue by the NSAI of an "Irish Standard Mark Licence" that authorizes a manufacturer to attach the mark to his products .

31 . According to a document dated 27 October 1986 originating from the NSAI and annexed to Ireland' s defence, the geometrical characteristics of IS 188 distinguish pipes manufactured according to that standard from other pipes which, like those of Uralita, comply with the specifications of the international standard, ISO 160; the physical and mechanical characteristics are not therefore in question . More precisely, IS 188 refers to the "outside" diameter, including the wall of the pipes, whereas ISO 160 refers to the "internal" diameter, not including the wall of the pipes.

32 . It is necessary to add that ISO 160, with which the pipes manufactured by Uralita comply, was adopted by the International Organization for Standardization, which is a world-wide federation of national standards institutes. It was approved, within that organization, by the member committees of nine countries now belonging to the EEC : Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Italy, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain and the United Kingdom. As regards the United Kingdom, however, it must be noted that it applies standard BS 486 which the Irish authorities, and in particular the NSAI, regard as equivalent to IS 188.

33 . Conformity with IS 188 was stipulated in the clause in question and if that requirement was not met tenders were inadmissible, as is quite clear from the answer given by Ireland to the first question addressed to it by the Court. Ireland stated that, in accordance with "standard practice", Dundalk Urban District Council' s consulting engineer had rejected Walls' tender based on the use of Uralita pipes at the end of a meeting from which it emerged that "the proposed pipes were not in conformity with Clause 4.29 of the specifications" and those pipes "were not examined at that stage ". Ireland explained to the Court that the "standard practice" consisted in "specifying the standards according to which the materials must be made,... those conditions ((being)) set out in specifications before the invitation to tender is made. When the tenders are then examined, the consulting engineer requires proof that the conditions are satisfied ".

34 . The content of IS 188 and the part which it plays through its insertion in public works contracts show quite clearly that the insertion of such a clause is likely to impede imports of pipes into Ireland . If, as the Commission and Spain rightly point out, account is taken of the fact that public works contracts are the main, if not exclusive, outlet for pipes of the type in question in this case, it becomes clear that the requirement of conformity with a national standard laid down in a Member State which, if not complied with, entails the inadmissibility of tenders, is likely to obstruct the importation into that State of pipes manufactured in other Member States . That assessment is reinforced by the fact that the approval procedure in Ireland for pipes manufactured in another Member State is not a mere procedural requirement. A manufacturer of pipes cannot obtain the licence authorizing him to attach the Irish Standard Mark certifying conformity with IS 188 unless he manufactures his products in accordance with the specifications of that standard, as is shown by the NSAI' s refusal to grant Uralita approval in December 1986. Consequently, pipes lawfully manufactured and marketed in a Member State and also complying with an international standard cannot be marketed in Ireland. In order to have access to the Irish market, manufacturers must modify their products.

35 . Consequently, in my view, the insertion in an invitation to tender for a public works contract of a clause requiring pipes to conform with a national standard such as IS 188 indirectly, but undoubtedly, impedes imports of pipes manufactured in other Member States .

36 . Ireland puts forward a number of arguments in order to show that the requirement of compliance with IS 188 specified in the invitation to tender for a public works contract cannot be a barrier to imports of pipes. It states that that requirement does not constitute a "trading rule" within the meaning of the Court' s judgment in Dassonville (supra), and that pipe manufacturers in other Member States had every opportunity to obtain a licence from the NSAI to apply the Irish Standard Mark to their products to show that they complied with IS 188.

37 . It may be countered, first, that according to the Court' s judgment of 20 May 1976 in de Peijper (16) a practice may also be covered by the prohibition laid down in Article 30. But in reality Ireland' s argument is that clauses in invitations to tender for public works contracts cannot, by definition, be regarded as relating to imports, and that a manufacturer' s right to import its products into a Member State cannot be affected by the content of such clauses . However, it is clear that there is practically no opening for the sale of products such as pipes other than for use in works, and essentially public works. Accordingly, the requirement of compliance with IS 188, which deters contractors from providing in their tenders for the use of materials not complying with that standard, impedes the importation of such materials, indirectly admittedly, yet virtually absolutely .

38 . With regard to the possibility for manufacturers from other Member States to comply with IS 188, as I have already pointed out, that in fact amounts to an obligation to modify their products and hence to forgo selling in Ireland pipes lawfully produced and marketed in their country of origin. Consequently, that possibility is the proof rather than the negation of the existence of the barrier to imports, and the situation seems, when analysed in this way, to be completely comparable to the situations which, according to the Court' s "Cassis de Dijon" case-law, are covered by Article 30.

39 . The subsidiary argument that compliance with IS 188 is required irrespective of the geographical origin of the materials can be dismissed in the light of that same case-law, according to which measures applicable without distinction to national and imported products may be prohibited under Article 30. Consequently, as Sir Gordon Slynn stated in his Opinion in the Cinéthèque case (cited above), a measure is in breach of Article 30 if,

> "although not directed to importation as such but covering both national goods and imports, it requires a producer or distributor to take steps additional to those which he would normally and lawfully take in the marketing of his goods, which thereby render importation more difficult, so that imports may be restricted and national producers be given protection in practice ".

40 . The words used there seem to fit the facts in this case precisely .

41 . Lastly in this first limb of its defence, Ireland claims that public works contracts are characterized by a sort of indivisibility which precludes the assessment of the compatibility of a particular clause with Article 30 in so far as this could affect the internal consistency of all the clauses of the contract in question. In fact, that reasoning overlaps with the argument that Article 30 does not apply to an aspect of the provision of services, which I have already considered, and it does not seem necessary to return to that point.

42 . At this juncture it is necessary to consider whether the requirement to comply with standard IS 188 is justified by "mandatory requirements" within the meaning of the "Cassis de Dijon" case-law.

43 . Ireland argues essentially that "the interest or value" which the standard serves to protect is "a high standard and uniformity of design in such piping and a capacity to cope efficiently with Irish conditions and pre-existing services ". (17)

44 . Does that constitute grounds for considering that the measure in question is justified because it serves a purpose which is in the general interest?

45 . Due regard being had to the technical problems of compatibility between the water supply systems to be built and existing systems or between the piping used and accessories (fittings for example) it seems to me that such problems - assuming that they satisfy the test of the general interest laid down in the Court' s case-law - do not warrant a measure which is as restrictive of imports as the requirement that the pipe must comply with IS 188.

46 . Indeed, and this observation seems to me to hold good for most of the technical objections raised in this case, the actual award procedure itself, with its detailed perusal of tenders, is sufficient to enable any technical shortcomings of particular aspects of a tender and their economic ramifications to be assessed, and to identify incompatibilities in materials. I would observe that in this case the Dundalk Urban District Council made use of a procedure which enabled the advantages and shortcomings of the tenders to be assessed from various points of view. The notice of invitation to tender published in the Official Journal of the European Communities stated that the contract would be awarded to the contractor who submitted the tender "adjudged to be the most economically advantageous... in respect of price, period of completion, technical merit and running costs ". This clearly shows that use of an award procedure which enables tenders to be assessed from various points of view is enough to protect the interests invoked by Ireland.

47 . Accordingly, the requirement for the pipe to comply with IS 188 goes far beyond what is necessary in order to protect interests which could be safeguarded without taking a measure impeding imports, in the normal course of an award procedure of the type to which I have just adverted, and which was indeed applicable in the case at issue.

48 . In the alternative, Ireland raises reasons which, in its view, justify, under Article 36 of the EEC Treaty, the restriction on imports resulting from the measure in question. More specifically, Ireland claims in the first place that it was imperative for the protection of the health of the people of Dundalk and the surrounding area that there be no delay in improving their water supply.

49 . In order to assess that argument it must be observed that according to the case-law of the Court,

> "National rules or practices do not fall within the exception specified in Article 36 if the health and life of humans can as effectively be protected by measures which do not restrict intra-Community trade so much ". (18)

50 . Here again, it is clear that in the course of the award procedure Dundalk Urban District Council could perfectly well have taken account, in choosing the "most economically advantageous tender", of requirements of protection of public health connected with the period of completion of the work and not taken up tenders which, for one reason or another, would not have allowed work to be completed in good time. Consequently, the desire to avoid delay in the completion of the work did not warrant a measure as restrictive on imports as the requirement of compliance with IS 188, and the derogation set out in Article 36 may not therefore be validly invoked with regard thereto.

51 . Ireland also contends that the requirements of standard IS 188 relative to bitumen coating are based upon the need to ensure the health and safety of persons using drinking water flowing through the pipes in question, since the bitumen coating ensures that there is no contact between the water and the asbestos fibres of the concrete piping .

52 . The Commission stated that only white asbestos fibres were used in the manufacture of the pipes and that, in contrast to blue asbestos, white asbestos does not pose any health risk. It added that the bitumen coating was separately specified in the contract specification and Uralita quoted for pipes on that basis.

53 . In that connection, I would observe that in the standard in question the specification of bitumen coating is optional. According to Specification 2.3 of IS 188 (Annex II to the Commission' s application) pipes are to be coated with a solution of bitumen "if required by the purchaser at the time of ordering ". It also provides that "alternative coatings as agreed between the purchaser and the manufacturer may be used ". Clause 4.29 of the contract specification itself is made up of three parts. It stipulates first that asbestos cement pipes must comply with IS 188, secondly that all the pipes are to have a "bituminous coating internally and externally", and thirdly that such coatings are to be applied at the factory by dipping.

54 . Without entering into a discussion of the comparative merits of white and blue asbestos, I consider that Ireland' s argument cannot be accepted . In the first place, I would point out that the Commission criticized Clause 4.29 only in so far as it required the pipes to comply with IS 188 and not because it specified the need for a bituminous coating. Secondly, the Irish Government' s answer to the first question put by the Court in the written procedure, as seen in the light of the minutes - unofficial but not contested by Ireland - of the meeting held on Tuesday 24 June 1986 (19) at which Dundalk Urban District Council' s consulting engineers rejected Walls' s tender, establishes that the question whether or not the Uralita pipes were coated with bitumen was not at issue in the discussions on compliance with the standard. The tender providing for the use of Uralita pipes was plainly rejected on the basis of the purely formal finding that the manufacturer was not among those authorized to use the Irish Standard Mark and that hence its products did not comply with IS 188, irrespective of the question of the coating. Lastly, I would observe that according to the NSAI the differences between pipes complying with IS 188 and those complying with ISO 160 are purely geometrical . Consequently, I consider that, as conceived and put into effect by Ireland, the requirement of compliance with standard IS 188 as criticized by the Commission is distinct from the nature of the coating of the pipes, and it is therefore unnecessary to take into consideration justifications relating to the importance of that coating for public health.

55 . It follows from the foregoing that the obligation to comply with IS 188 is not based on mandatory requirements within the meaning of the Court' s "Cassis de Dijon" case-law and cannot be justified under Article 36. But before it can be held that Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 30 two points raised at the hearing have to be resolved.

56 . The first point relates to whether the measure is a "State" measure .

57 . The case-law of the Court affords a number of illustrations of instances where Member States have been held to have failed to fulfil their obligations on account of acts or omissions attributable to local authorities. For example, Italy was held to have failed to fulfil its obligations because the region of Sicily adopted legislation incompatible with a Community regulation (20) and also because the municipality of Milan failed to publish a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, contrary to Directive 71/305/EEC. (21) Likewise, Belgium was held to have failed to fulfil its obligations because the municipalities of Brussels and Auderghem made Belgian nationality a condition of entry for certain municipal posts contrary to Article 48 of the EEC Treaty, (22) and because several municipalities adopted tax by-laws contrary to the Protocol on the Privileges and Immunities of the European Communities . (23)

58 . However, I have found no trace in the case-law of instances where Member States have been held to have failed to fulfil their obligations under Article 30 on account of the conduct of a local authority . On the other hand, in one case the Court did find that Ireland was in breach of its obligations under Article 30 owing to the activity of a body governed by private law acting on behalf of the Government . (24) Moreover, in a preliminary ruling the Court has held in connection with the definition of the kindred concept of charges having equivalent effect to customs duties that the fact that a duty was levied by an independent institution governed by public law rather than the State did not affect the definition of that duty as such a charge "since the prohibition under Article 13 (2) ((of the EEC Treaty)) attaches solely to the effect of such charges and not to the manner in which they are imposed ". (25)

59 . Despite the lack of a precedent in the case-law I can see no reason in principle why a Member State should not be answerable, in proceedings for failure to fulfil obligations under Article 30, for measures implemented by one of its local authorities. The classic principle set out in the Court' s judgment of 5 May 1970 in Commission v Belgium (26) according to which "the liability of a Member State under Article 169 arises whatever the agency of the State whose action or inaction is the cause of the failure to fulfil its obligations" should, it seems, be interpreted as being of general application.

60 . Moreover, the State' s involvement has not really been challenged in these proceedings. The Commission' s claim that the Irish Minister for the Environment has to approve the award of contracts was confirmed at the hearing by the Irish Government' s representative, who added that, from that point of view, there was State "involvement ". But perhaps the best illustration of the active role played by the State in the situation at issue is provided by the uncontested information given at the hearing by the representative of the Kingdom of Spain to the effect that the Irish Minister for the Environment sent a circular to local authorities on 1 July 1987 setting out instructions on the drafting of invitations to tender for public works contracts. The existence of such a circular - the content of which is doubtless not unrelated to these proceedings - clearly establishes the power of initiative preserved by the State.

61 . The second point to be clarified relates to some of the characteristics which a State practice must exhibit in order to be caught by Article 30. In the judgment of 9 May 1985 in Commission v France the Court emphasized that

> "for an administrative practice to constitute a measure prohibited under Article 30 that practice must show a certain degree of consistency and generality ". (27)

62 . It may be asked whether the inclusion in a given contract specification of a clause requiring pipes to comply with IS 188 exhibits the characteristics required according to that judgment in order for it to constitute a measure prohibited by Article 30. On the face of it, by referring in its application to Clause 4.29 of the contract specification for the Dundalk Water Supply Augmentation Scheme : Contract No 4, the Commission has asked the Court to rule on a specific measure rather than on a practice showing a sufficient measure of consistency and generality. Consequently, on a very strict interpretation of some of the conditions laid down by the Court' s case-law, there might be a temptation to hold that the application should be dismissed.

63 . However, in my view such a conclusion would amount to a formal, but incorrect, application of those conditions. The Court' s requirement that a practice must show a degree of consistency and generality for it to be caught by Article 30 means that a Member State must not have to answer for an isolated measure. This may, moreover, explain the absence of decisions in which the Court has declared that there has been a failure to fulfil obligations under Article 30 on account of activities of local authorities. It is not usually within the powers of local authorities to adopt rules or practices affecting imports . At the most, local authorities are capable of isolated acts, which, as a general rule, cannot constitute failures to fulfil obligations under Article 30.

64 . In this case, however, the Court is confronted with a very different situation. The requirement of compliance with IS 188 does indeed show the characteristics of consistency and generality in Ireland, as the Irish Government admitted when it stated that this was "in accordance with the usual practice followed in relation to public works contracts in Ireland ". (28) Hence the inclusion of the contested clause was not an isolated act, but constituted a specific manifestation of a general practice and, in addition, brought that practice to the attention of the Community institutions.

65 . It is for that reason that I consider that it is possible to hold that there has been a failure to fulfil obligations in this case, moreover, without really straining the terms of the Court' s case-law

66 . Indeed, after setting out the requirement for "a certain degree of consistency and generality", the Court' s abovementioned judgment of 9 May 1985 goes on to say that that generality must be > "assessed differently according to whether the market concerned is one on which there are numerous traders or whether it is a market... on which only a few undertakings are active", in which case

> "a national administration' s treatment of a single undertaking may constitute a measure incompatible with Article 30 ". (29)

67 . It appears to me to be possible to take a lead in this case from that relaxation of the requirements of consistency and generality . As I have already stated, it can be considered that public works contracts of the type at issue afford the main commercial outlet for asbestos cement pipes. It is not an everyday occurrence for sizeable contracts to be put out to tender, and each such contract has major commercial consequences in two respects. Each contract represents in itself a commercial project for manufacturers and, depending on the size of the contract, a barrier to imports erected with respect to a given contract may have significant consequences immediately. But it must be borne in mind that a barrier set up with respect to a particular contract also has implications for later contracts, and hence future commercial projects, in so far as in the light of their first experience public works contractors will tend not to provide for the use of imported material in their tenders.

68 . Accordingly, in view of the magnitude of the potential short - and medium-term effects on imports of a single public works contract, I consider that a barrier to imports in connection with such a contract is capable of constituting a failure to fulfil obligations under Article 30. The particulars of the case before the Court seem to me to fit perfectly within this analytical framework and justify the Court' s granting the Commission' s application.

69 . This would establish an infringement in respect of a situation which seems, in very tangible terms, to be completely alien to the principles underlying the EEC. For as there are only two firms which have been granted the Irish Standard Mark Licence in respect of IS 188, namely an Irish firm, for all sizes of pipe, and a German firm, for a particular size of pipe, in most cases the Irish firm is predestined to be the supplier of the pipes before the tenders are even considered.

70 . In its application the Commission asks the Court to declare that Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations by allowing the inclusion of the contested clause in the Dundalk contract "and consequently refusing to consider (or rejecting without adequate justification)" a tender providing for the use of asbestos cement pipes manufactured to an alternative standard affording equivalent guarantees . It has not been possible to determine as clearly as could be wished from the Commission' s answers to the questions put by the Court both during the written procedure and at the hearing the nature of the claim relating to the refusal to consider the offer or its rejection without adequate justification.

71 . If that limb of the claim is separate from and subsidiary to the claim concerning the inclusion of the contested clause, the Court should rule on it only if it holds that there has been no failure to fulfil obligations with respect to the first limb. In that regard, the failure to fulfil obligations appears to me to be sufficiently clear-cut as to make it unnecessary to consider that alternative limb of the claim, and I further take the view that if the Court were to hold that there has been no failure to fulfil obligations in respect of the first limb, it would have to reach the same conclusion for the same reasons as regards the second, since the same Community rules are alleged to have been infringed in each case.

72 . If the second part of the Commission' s claim is in fact directed at the mere implementation of the measure complained of in the first part, the Court may refer to the solution adopted in its aforementioned judgment of 18 March 1986 in Commission v Belgium, (30) and hold that separate complaints are not involved and that therefore a separate decision is not called for.

73 . I therefore propose that the Court should

(1) Declare that, by including in the contract specification for the Dundalk Water Supply Augmentation Scheme : Contract No 4, Clause 4.29 requiring asbestos cement pressure pipes to be certified as complying with Irish Standard Specification IS 188:1975, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 30 of the EEC Treaty;

(2) Order Ireland to pay the costs.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Darmon delivered on 4 May 1988.
Gebroeders Beentjes BV v State of the Netherlands.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Arrondissementsrechtbank 's-Gravenhage - Netherlands.
Procedure for the award of public works contracts.
Case 31/87.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

1 . The questions referred to the Court by a judgment of 28 January 1987 of the Arrondissementsrechtbank, The Hague, relate to the interpretation of certain provisions of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts. (1)

2 . They arose in proceedings in which Beentjes BV claimed damages from the Netherlands State in respect of the loss arising from the fact that although it had submitted the lowest tender under an invitation to tender for a public works contract issued by the Waterland Local Land Consolidation Committee (hereinafter referred to as "the local committee "), did not obtain the contract, which was awarded to the tenderer with the next lowest price. The local committee justified its rejection of Beentjes' tender on the ground that it was less well qualified. Since Beentjes' claim was based directly on the alleged failure of the local committee to comply with provisions of the directive, the national court took the view that it was necessary to obtain clarification from the Court of certain conditions for its application.

3 . The first question concerns the scope of the directive. It seeks to establish whether the directive governs the award of public works contracts by a body such as a local land consolidation committee in the Netherlands.

4 . According to the preamble to the directive, the coordination of national procedures for the award of public works contracts is, together with the abolition of restrictions, one of the means necessary for "the simultaneous attainment of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts awarded in Member States on behalf of the State or regional or local authorities or other legal persons governed by public law ". (2) As regards the substantive rules, Article 1 (b) of the directive defines the "authorities awarding contracts" governed by its provisions as "the State, regional or local authorities and the legal persons governed by public law specified in Annex I ". Annex I refers to the local authorities in all the Member States; in the Netherlands specifically, it mentions various categories of bodies, in particular university bodies.

5 . According to the information provided by the national court, the local land consolidation committee is a body which "has no legal personality of its own" and is responsible for carrying out land consolidation. It is appointed by the Provincial Executive of the province concerned and must comply with rules laid down by a Central Committee set up by Royal Decree, whose members are appointed by the Crown .

6 . In view of the fact that the local committee does not have legal personality, a fact to which the national court expressly drew attention, it is in my view unnecessary to attribute any other significance to the expression "body" used in its first question than that of "organ" or "authority ".

7 . The argument put forward in the main proceedings by the Netherlands Government that the directive does not apply to the award of contracts by bodies such as the local committee is based on a simple comparison of the characteristics of this committee with the abovementioned provisions of the Community measure. Since the local committee is not a department of the State administration, an administrative department of a local authority or one of the "legal persons governed by public law specified in Annex I" of the directive, in the Government' s view public works contracts awarded by the body in question are not covered by the directive.

8 . In this regard one should not ignore the paradoxical position of the local land consolidation committee inasmuch as, according to the information expressly provided by the judgment of the national court, Article 35 of the rules drawn up by the Central Committee required the local committee to apply the directive when awarding works contracts. It may therefore be asked whether the applicability of the directive, which is the subject of the first question, can genuinely be in doubt, since the Netherlands public authorities - and here I refer to the express terms of paragraph 5.4 of the national court' s judgment - have decided that it is necessary for the local committee to implement its provisions.

9 . Nevertheless, for reasons of legal precision, the Court must reply in terms of principle to the question referred by the national court . The mere finding that a rule in fact applies can be explained by the use of discretionary power, and is therefore not sufficient to establish the existence of a legal obligation.

10 . In fact, the Court is faced with a phenomenon which is common in the administrative life of developed societies : the "fragmentation of the administration ". With increasing frequency, the laws of States entrust functions which are by definition public to organs which are not attached to the traditional administrative organization, but nevertheless have no legal personality of their own. This fragmentation reflects a desire to associate closely with the functions concerned persons from outside the administration - this being reflected in the composition of the organs - or to reinforce the independence of such organs in the eyes of the public, by means of the fact that the traditional administrative authorities may not give them instructions. Indeed, it may also correspond to a mixture of the two concerns . Thus, for example, we have witnessed for a number of years the appearance in certain States of "independent administrative authorities" endowed with important powers, in particular that of laying down rules. But even leaving aside these recent creations, the everyday organization of the administration has for a long time given rise to organs such as examining boards whose activity is in substance administrative but is carried out separately and independently from the traditional structures of the administration, which, because it has no hierarchical authority, is in functional terms held at arm' s length .

11 . In so far as local land consolidation committees in the Netherlands are in my view an expression of this phenomenon of fragmentation of the administration, the fundamental question put to the Court amounts to whether or not it is possible for organs outside the traditional structures of the administration which have no legal personality of their own but carry out functions which normally fall within the competence of the State or local authorities to evade the effect of Community rules binding on the latter.

12 . In this respect it is important not to confuse functional independence and autonomy. While such organs are not subordinate in hierarchical terms to the "traditional" administration, whether central or local, their activities are carried out in the pursuit of interests which are not distinct from those of the State or a local authority . Their objectives fall within the normal competence of the State or a local authority. When an examining board issues diplomas it does so in the name of the State or, depending on the relevant legislation, a local authority, and not in the name of undefinable separate interests. The fact that the interests of the general public are taken into account, either in the composition of the organs or by their functional independence, is not sufficient to transform their purpose, which, since they have no legal personality of their own, is merely to represent, in an innovative way, the State or a local authority . It follows that in the absence of specific provisions the Community rules applicable to the State or to local authorities must automatically govern the activities of organs of the type considered here .

13 . In examining the application of the Community rules in question, however, it is necessary to determine the criteria for deciding whether certain organs are in fact inseparable from the State or local authorities.

14 . In my view, where an organ which has no legal personality of its own and whose members are appointed by the State or a local authority has a function which falls within the ordinary competence of such authorities or the State and is endowed by them with the means enabling it to carry out such functions, the award of works contracts relating to the exercise of those functions is governed by the provisions of the directive.

15 . This approach which I propose, that of not keeping strictly to the letter of expressions such as the "State" or "regional or local authorities" is not new to the Court.

16 . Thus, in an action aganst a Member State for failure to fulfil its obligations, in the judgment of 24 November 1982 in Commission v Ireland, (3) the Court considered that where a government "appoints the members of the Management Committee" of an organ, "grants it public subsidies which cover the greater part of its expenses and, finally, defines the aims and the broad outline of the campaign conducted by that institution to promote the sale and purchase of ((national)) products...", it cannot "rely on the fact that the campaign was conducted by a private company in order to escape any liability it may have under the provisions of the Treaty ". (4)

17 . Moreover, in a reference for a preliminary ruling, in the judgment of 6 October 1981 in Broekmeulen, (5) the Court held that the "Appeals Committee for General Medicine" established by the Royal Netherlands Society for the Promotion of Medicine, an association governed by private law, was to be regarded, "in the absence, in practice, of any right of appeal to the ordinary courts... in a matter involving the application of Community law", as a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty since it operates with the consent and cooperation of the public authorities and its decisions, taken after contentious proceedings, are as a matter of fact recognized as final.

18 . It therefore seems to me to be consistent with the realistic approach adopted by the Court in its decisions to regard the Community provisions governing the award of public works contracts by the State and regional and local authorities as applying to the award of works contracts by an organ whose constitutive documents, while establishing its functional independence, show that it acts on behalf of the State or a regional or local authority.

19 . In this instance, the committee in question is responsible under legislation for carrying out land consolidation at local level. In view of the fact that its activity in this respect must comply with the instructions of a central committee whose members are appointed by the Crown and that under the Netherlands law concerning appeals against administrative decisions it is regarded as an administrative organ of the central authorities, it is clear that the local committee, which has no legal personality of its own, performs an administrative function on behalf of the State. In addition, its members are appointed by the Provincial Executive, a public authority, and the expenses which it incurs are financed by the public authorities .

20 . If the Court accepts this analysis, it must find that the public works contracts awarded by organs such as a local land consolidation committee in the Netherlands are awarded on behalf of the State and, accordingly, are governed by the provisions of the directive .

21 . The second question relates to the substance of the directive and seeks to establish whether, under its provisions, it is possible to exclude a tenderer on the basis of various qualitative criteria not expressly specified in the contract notice.

22 . Article 20 of the directive lays down, as a matter of principle, a distinction between criteria for checking the suitability of contractors and criteria for awarding the contract :

> "Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Chapter 2... after the suitability of contractors... has been checked by the authorities awarding contracts in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing and of technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 25 to 28."

23 . The directive deals with the assessment of whether contractors are qualified under two heads : financial and economic standing on the one hand (Article 25), and technical knowledge and ability on the other (Article 26).

24 . With regard to economic and financial standing, which has not been disputed in the main proceedings but is mentioned in the national provisions cited by the Netherlands State and referred to in the wording of the question, it may be seen that, pursuant to Article 25 of the directive, proof may be furnished "as a general rule" by one or more of three "references" described in the three indents (a) to (c) of that article; the awarding authorities must specify in the contract notice which reference or references they have chosen and "what references other than those mentioned under (a), (b) and (c) are to be produced ".

25 . Article 26 provides that proof of technical knowledge or ability "may be furnished by" references described under the five indents (a) to (e) of that article and that the awarding authorities must specify in the notice which of these references are to be produced .

26 . This brief summary of the provisions of the directive concerning the assessment of the suitability of contractors calls for three comments.

27 . In the first place, contrary to the affirmations of the Netherlands State referred to at paragraph 6.2 in the national court' s judgment, it appears that the purpose of Articles 25 and 26 of the directive is not solely to standardize the documents which may be required in applying criteria of qualitative selection. They also fix these criteria, as is shown by Article 20. In so far as Articles 25 and 26 set out the various references which may be demanded by the awarding authorities, it must be concluded that the qualitative criteria to which these references relate constitute the criteria referred to in Article 20.

28 . Clearly these criteria are to some extent incomplete, because, as Mr Advocate General Mischo noted in his Opinion delivered on 11 June 1987 in cases concerning questions referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling by the Belgian Conseil d' Etat, (6) the references set out in Article 25 and 26 designate qualitative aspects - for instance work carried out previously, tools, plant and technical equipment, average manpower - without laying down any requirement as to the standard. It follows that with regard to such requirements the awarding authorities are left a certain leeway. However, those requirements must apply to the qualitative criteria concerned by the references set out in Articles 25 and 26, under the conditions which I now propose to specify.

29 . My second comment is drawn from a comparison of the wording of Article 25 and Article 26 and is that the criteria derived from the technical references described under indents (a) to (e) of Article 26 are exhaustive in character since the awarding authorities are not empowered to seek "other references", as they may do under Article 25 with regard to financial and economic standing. They are therefore not entitled to apply criteria concerning additional qualitative aspects not referred to in the indents in question. In the Transporoute judgment of 10 February 1982 (7) the Court has already emphasized the exhaustive nature of the references other than those concerning economic and financial standing.

30 . My third comment concerns the legal effects of statements in the contract notice. Articles 25 and 26 provide that the awarding authorities must specify, in the notice, "the references... ((which)) are to be produced ". In view of the importance of the references described in these articles, which in the light of Article 20 must be interpreted as both listing the qualitative factors for assessment and describing the documents to be used for that assessment, it seems to me that by requiring the awarding authorities to specify in the notice the references which are to be produced the directive imposes upon them inter alia a duty to inform contractors of the qualitative aspects, in other words the criteria, on the basis of which their suitability will be checked. Accordingly, in my view, the provisions in question prohibit an awarding authority from excluding a contractor on the basis of qualitative aspects in respect of which references were not required in the contract notice. To decide otherwise would, I believe, create a risk of destabilizing the structure erected by the directive and of deliberately disregarding the obligations which it lays down concerning the exchange of information between awarding authorities and contractors.

31 . In accordance with the model contract notice set out in Annex I to Council Directive 72/277/EEC concerning the details of publication of notices of public works contracts and concessions in the Official Journal of the European Communities, (8) the notice must state, under heading 11, "the minimum economic and technical conditions required of the contractors ". Without wishing to underestimate the value, in particular in budgetary terms, of standardizing the publication of contract notices in the Official Journal of the European Communities, I think it would be excessive to consider that the references concerning economic and financial standing and technical knowledge and ability required by awarding authorities must appear exclusively, if the notice is to be valid, under heading 11 and that a reference concerning the qualitative aspects provided for in Articles 25 and 26 but appearing under another heading in the notice would be void. This approach cannot in my view be reconciled with the intention behind the adoption of Directive 72/277/EEC or with the concerns addressed by the Community legislature in the basic measure, Directive 71/305/EEC.

32 . In the case which is the subject of the national proceedings, the contract notice, section 11 of which was blank, stated in fine that > "the work-force must be made up of at least 70% long-term unemployed persons employed through the regional employment office ".

This gives rise to the observation that, although qualitative aspects may properly be mentioned in the contract notice without being formally included under section 11, they must nevertheless fall within the compass of Articles 25 and 26, as, moreover, is required under Article 16 (l) of Directive 71/305/EEC. A statement such as that referred to above cannot by definition be a reference capable of proving economic and financial standing in accordance with Article 25, and does not appear to have any relation to one of the indents of Article 26, which, as I have stressed, are exhaustive. This situation may seem paradoxical in so far as the absence in the invitation to tender of any valid statement of criteria regarding economic and financial standing means that there is no condition whatsoever as to the suitability of contractors and thus that in principle any undertaking is suitable. However, it must be stressed that it is the awarding authority which, by wrongly applying the directive, has placed itself in this situation. The paradox is therefore the result not of the directive but of a failure to comply with it.

33 . For the sake of completeness in the discussion of the second question, I think it is also necessary to clarify, having regard to the situation which gave rise to this reference for a preliminary ruling, the conditions of application of the provisions of the directive concerning the criteria for awarding the contract.

34 . Under Article 20 contracts must be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Chapter 2. In that chapter, Article 29 (1) provides that :

"the criteria on which the authorities awarding contracts shall base the award of contracts shall be :

either the lowest price only;

or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract : e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit ".

Article 29 (2) states that in the event of an award on the basis of the most economically advantageous offer,

"the awarding authorities shall state in the contract documents or in the contract notice all the criteria they intend to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance ".

35 . It may be noted that although Article 29 contains no exhaustive list of the criteria for awarding the contract when the lowest price is not the sole criterion, it does draw attention to a common factor to be shared by such criteria : they must, like those expressly cited, concern the nature of the work to be carried out or the manner in which it is to be done, to the exclusion of any considerations relating to the contractor. In simpler terms, it may be said that the criteria for the award "to the most economically advantageous tender" concern the "product" and not the "producer", the quality of the "work" and not that of the contractor.

36 . The directive thus draws a clear distinction between the criteria for checking the suitability of a contractor, which concern the qualities of the contractor as such, and those for awarding the contract, which relate to the qualities of the service which he offers, of the work which he proposes to carry out.

37 . In those circumstances, compliance with the provisions of the directive requires that the criteria should not be confused and that criteria relating to the contractor' s suitability should not be taken into account in connection with the award of the contract. In this respect I agree with the Italian Republic' s analysis. I do not however feel able to endorse its suggestion of a rigid chronological division between the two stages, that of the checking of the contractor' s suitability and that of the award of the contract. A criterion of suitability cannot be used as a criterion for making the award, but I do not think that the directive places a time-limit on the assessment of suitability. An awarding authority belatedly informed of a reason for a contractor' s unsuitability must be able to rely on it up to the last moment, so long as there is no misuse of powers and it is not a disguised refusal to allow the criteria for awarding the contract to operate in the normal way.

38 . The contract notice did not include any statement under section 13, which pursuant to Directive 72/277/EEC is reserved for "criteria for the award of the contract ". The sole "criterion" appearing in the notice was that referred to above, concerning the employment of a certain quota of unemployed persons to carry out the work. This criterion, which has no relation to the intrinsic qualities of the work to be carried out, of the service to be provided, of the "product", could not be regarded as one of the criteria for the award of the contract within the meaning of the directive, and consequently constitute a ground for excluding a tenderer. In such a situation, in which no criterion for awarding the contract has been validly specified in the contract notice or the contract documents, it appears that under the actual terms of Article 29 only the criterion of the lowest price may be applied.

39 . Accordingly, in my view the Court should reply to the second question by stating that under the directive it is permissible to exclude a contractor only on the basis of one or more of the suitability criteria concerning the factors set out in Articles 25 and 26 and specified in the contract notice, or on the basis of one or more of the criteria for the award of contracts laid down in Article 29 and specified in the contract notice or the contract documents, in which case the criterion of the lowest price is not applied.

40 . The third question may be considered more briefly. As the Commission pointed out, the direct effect of the provisions concerned appears already to have been confirmed, at least by implication, in the Court' s judgment in the abovementioned Transporoute case.

41 . In the present case, the national court asks whether the provisions of the directive, whose substance I have just discussed, may be relied upon by an individual

> "if in the incorporation of those provisions... in national legislation the contracting authority is given wider powers to refuse to award a contract than are permitted under the directive ".

In the Transporoute judgment, with regard to national provisions which, in the words of Mr Advocate General Reischl, did not reproduce exactly the terms of Article 29 of the directive, the Court held that the provisions of the article should be applied by the awarding authority, which clearly implies that the provisions in question are directly applicable. The Court held that > "the aim of the provision, which is to protect tenderers against arbitrariness on the part of the authority awarding contracts, could not be achieved if it were left to that authority to judge whether or not it was appropriate to seek explanations ".

42 . In this case we are asked to consider several provisions of the directive, including Article 29, whose purpose, which is identical, may be frustrated by a national implementing provision leaving a general discretion to the awarding authority. In my view the same reply must be given as in the 1982 judgment. It is clear that the legal structure defined in Articles 20, 25, 26 and 29 of the directive is intended, through the fixing of criteria of suitability and criteria for the award of the contract, to protect the tenderer from arbitrariness on the part of the awarding authority. It is equally clear that this structure would be undermined by a provision such as Article 21 (2) of the Uniform Rules, the national measure implementing the directive, whose effect is to release the awarding authority from the duty to comply with the criteria laid down in the directive . Accordingly it is my view that the tenderer must be given the protection intended by the directive, whose relevant provisions must override the national implementing provision.

43 . Consequently, I propose that the reply to the questions submitted by the Arrondissementsrechtbank, The Hague, should be as follows :

> "(1) The provisions of Council Directive 71/305/EEC apply to works contracts awarded by a body which has no legal personality of its own where its composition, its function and the means it has for carrying out that function show that it acts on behalf of the State or a regional or local authority.
> (2)Under these provisions a contractor may be excluded only on the basis of one or more of the criteria of suitability concerning the aspects set out in Articles 25 or 26 and specified in the contract notice, or on the basis of one or more of the criteria for the award of contracts contained in Article 29 and specified in the contract notice or the contract documents, where the lowest price is not taken as the exclusive criterion for awarding the contract.
> (3) A public awarding authority is bound to comply with those provisions, and may not rely on a national implementing provision which confers on it a general discretion concerning assessment of the contractor and his tender."

Procedure for the award of public works contracts - Determination of the constructor's financial and economic standing.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

In Joined Cases 27, 28 and 29/86, the Conseil d' Etat of the Kingdom of Belgium has submitted to the Court three questions on the interpretation of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 (1 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts.

That directive was adopted on the same day as Council Directive 71/304/EEC (2) concerning the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts and on the award of public works contracts to contractors acting through agencies or branches . Directive 71/304 requires Member States to abolish in particular restrictions which prevent persons covered by the Community provision (" beneficiaries ") from providing services under the same conditions and with the same rights as nationals, those existing by reason of administrative practices which result in treatment being applied to beneficiaries which is discriminatory by comparison with that applied to nationals, and those existing by reason of practices which, although applicable irrespective of nationality, none the less hinder exclusively or principally the professional or trade activities of nationals of other Member States (see Article 3 of Directive 71/304). I cite those provisions because they circumscribe the underlying objectives of the Council' s legislation in this field.

Directive 71/305/EEC, to which these proceedings relate, provides both for the abolition of restrictions and the coordination of national procedures for the award of public works contracts.

According to the second recital in the preamble to the directive, that coordination must take into account as far as possible the procedures and administrative practices in force in each Member State

Accordingly, Article 2 provides that : "In awarding public works contracts, the authorities awarding contracts shall apply their national procedures adapted to the provisions of this directive ".

It should therefore be borne in mind from the outset that any matters not dealt with by Directive 71/305 fall to be determined under the national law of each Member State (provided, of course, that there is no discrimination between Community nationals).

The questions submitted by the Conseil d' Etat relate to Title IV of the directive, entitled "Common rules on participation", and in particular Chapter I thereof relating to criteria for qualitative selection . The text of Articles 25, 26 and 28, to which those questions relate, is set out in the Report for the Hearing.

Article 25 enumerates the documents which may be submitted in order to establish a contractor' s financial and economic standing. Those documents are termed "references ".

Article 26 sets out the documents which may be used to establish a contractor' s technical knowledge or ability, while Article 28 stipulates the effect which must be given to the official lists of recognized contractors which exist in certain Member States.

In the Commission proposal (3) those provisions were followed by an article with the following

wording :

"The authorities awarding contracts shall determine the standard of the references to be submitted by contractors pursuant to the last subparagraph of Article 20 and Articles 22 to 25 on the basis of the nature, scale and value of the works to be carried out and having regard to the financing and payment rules laid down under Articles 14 and 16" (Article 26 of the proposal; emphasis added).

At that time evidence of financial and technical standing was to be governed by Article 23 and evidence of technical knowledge and ability by Article 24, both of which therefore came under the terms of the provision just cited.

That provision, however, was not incorporated in the final text of the directive adopted by the Council.

On the other hand the concept of the "standard of references" is now to be found in another form in Article 16, which reads as follows :

"In open procedures, the notice shall include at least the following information :

(l) the minimum economic and technical standards which the authorities awarding contracts require of contractors for their selection; these requirements may not be other than those specified in Articles 25 and 26;

...".

The corresponding wording in the Commission proposal for the directive (Article 14) was as follows :

"In open procedures, the notice shall include at least the following information :

(i) the documentation which must be enclosed with the tender in order to establish the contractor' s technical qualifications and economic standing as provided for in Articles 20 to 26."

It therefore seems to me that the Council probably took the view that the Commission proposal left a lacuna in not requiring the notice of call for tender to specify the minimum standards or the standard of the references required of contractors in order to be able to submit tenders for a specific contract. Accordingly, the Council supplemented the article relating to notices of tender with a provision requiring publication of minimum standards and omitted the proposed Article 26 as unnecessary. Unfortunately, in drawing up the new Article 16 (l), which provides that those requirements may not be other than those specified in Articles 25 and 26, the Council forgot that the remainder of the provisions no longer refers to the standard but merely to the types of references. Logically the Council should therefore have used a form of wording such as "fulfilment of those requirements may not be established otherwise than as provided for in Articles 25 and 26 ".

Even if my speculation as to what happened at the time of the drawing up of the directive is not altogether accurate, the fact remains in any event that Article 16 (l) does require publication of the "minimum economic and technical standards which the authorities awarding contracts require of contractors ". Yet the simple presentation of a bank statement or balance sheet or a statement of turnover can never be regarded as meeting a minimum standard; otherwise, to take an extreme case, it would suffice for a contractor to prove that he had 1*000 ECU in the bank in order to establish that he was suitable for the execution of works of whatever magnitude.

It may therefore be inferred that Articles 25 and 26 enumerate only methods of proof and that it is for the authority awarding contracts to determine in each call for tender what needs to be established, namely the standard of references required. That interpretation is in keeping with the general scheme of the directive, which is solely intended to coordinate the procedures for the award of public works contracts and even for that purpose seeks as far as possible to take account of national procedures. It follows a*fortiori that the standard of economic and technical qualification required of contractors must be laid down by the national authorities.

The answers to the questions submitted by the Conseil d' Etat follow in large measure from that conclusion.

I - Question 1 in Case 27/86

Question 1 is worded as follows :

> "Are the references enabling a contractor' s financial and economic standing to be determined exhaustively enumerated in Article 25 of Directive 71/305/EEC?"

It is no longer in serious dispute between the parties to the main action that that question must be answered in the negative, and that is my view as well.

The first paragraph of Article 25 provides that "proof of the contractor' s financial and economic standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by... the following references ".

The second paragraph provides that the authorities awarding contracts must specify "what references other than those mentioned under (a), (b) or (c) are to be produced ".

Finally, the third paragraph of Article 25 provides that "if, for any valid reason, the contractor is unable to supply the references requested by the authorities awarding contracts, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the authorities awarding contracts consider appropriate ".

The clear and unambiguous meaning of those provisions was confirmed by the Court in its judgment in Transporoute (4) at paragraph 9 of the decision :

> "Thus Article 27 states that the authority awarding contracts may invite the contractor to supplement the certificates and documents submitted only within the limits of Articles 23 to 26 (5 of the directive, according to which Member States may request references other than those expressly mentioned in the directive only for the purpose of assessing the financial and economic standing of the contractors as provided for in Article 25 of the directive."

I therefore propose that the Court answer Question 1 as follows :

The references enabling a contractor' s financial and economic standing to be determined are not exhaustively enumerated in Article 25 of Directive 71/305/EEC.

Nevertheless, authorities awarding contracts which wish to have submitted to them references other than those mentioned in Article 25 (a), (b) and (c) must specify them in the notice or the invitation to tender .

II - Question 2 in Case 27/86

In Question 2 the Conseil d' Etat asks :

> "can the value of the works which may be carried out at one time be regarded as a reference enabling a contractor' s financial and economic standing to be determined within the meaning of Article 25 of the directive?"

I should point out immediately that "the value of the works which may be carried out at one time" cannot in any event constitute a reference within the meaning of Article 25. It is quite clearly a criterion of evaluation, and the question which needs to be examined is whether it can legitimately be applied having regard to the provisions of the directive.

On the other hand, the list and the value of the works which a contractor will have in hand at a particular time do constitute references . For that reason in Case 27/86 the awarding authority was in fact asking for a reference when it requested the contractors who submitted tenders to "forward the list and corresponding values of both public and private works which you have or will have to carry out at the same time having regard to the state of progress of the contracts in the course of completion in the event of the contract (for works on the Chênée-Grosses Battes link) being awarded to you ". (6) The information requested related to facts which a contractor had to submit in the form of a written document.

It remains to be considered whether such a reference may be regarded as being of the type provided for by Article 25, namely references enabling a contractor' s economic and financial standing to be evidenced or proved.

Under the terms of Article 20 of the directive, an awarding authority must check "the suitability of contractors... in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing and of technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 25 to 28 ".

We have seen that (like Article 26) Article 25 does not actually lay down criteria but rather enumerates the appropriate methods of proof . Article 16 (l), however, requires the publication of the "minimum economic and technical standards which the authorities awarding contracts require of contractors for their selection ".

It is clear from that provision that of all those contractors not excluded automatically under Article 23 (bankruptcy, etc.) only those who meet the prescribed minimum standards are eligible to have contracts awarded to them.

Those minimum standards obviously relate primarily to the size of the undertaking as defined by its turnover in the three previous financial years, its balance sheet, and the sums held in its bank accounts or the credit which banks are willing to extend to it.

Nevertheless, the significance of the fact that an undertaking has had a high turnover in the past or that its financial reserves are at a particular level is not the same when it has undertaken five large-scale projects at one time as when it has undertaken fifty.

Whatever the nature of the undertaking, a contractor' s financial standing cannot be determined in the abstract; it must be examined in the light of its debts and short-term liabilities (wage-bills, supplies, equipment purchased on credit, etc).

The total value of the works to be carried out by a contractor at a given time is a factor which must logically enter into the evaluation of his suitability to take on an additional project of some size.

It is therefore consonant with the spirit of Articles 20 and 25 for an awarding authority to wish to be informed of that total value and it is legitimate for such an authority to take the view that an undertaking of a given size in economic and financial terms cannot safely undertake works above a certain total value.

The plaintiff in the main action argues, however, that the criterion of the total value of the public and private works which may be carried out at one time serves a number of additional objects which have nothing to do with a contractor' s intrinsic merits. As the Conseil d' Etat itself has stated, its aim "is to avoid any monopoly and to permit a rational allocation of work and to avoid any unbridled competition or speculation on the part of contractors resulting in their incurring commitments beyond their means ". (7)

In order for that criterion to comply with Article 25, however, it is enough in my view if the aim of preventing contractors from undertaking commitments beyond their means was one of the objectives which prompted the Belgian legislature to adopt it. That aim is in fact a legitimate and plausible one and, if applied without discrimination, does not constitute an obstacle to the freedom of undertakings in other Member States to provide services.

Moreover, it must be acknowledged that the other objectives pursued by reference to that criterion are not contrary to the provisions of the EEC Treaty and that they fall within spheres of competence which Directive 71/305 was not intended to affect.

CEI further argues that the total value of the works which may be carried out at one time constitutes a "criterion external to the contractor" and bears no relation to the contractor' s intrinsic economic and financial strength. In fact the criterion constitutes a disqualification rule comparable to those laid down in Article 23.

However, it is clear from what I have already said that the situation in this regard is no different from that regarding the other references provided for by Article 25. Accordingly that argument cannot be accepted.

Banking statements, balance sheets, statements of turnover, and the total value of works in progress are references which give an indication of a contractor' s intrinsic circumstances. On the other hand the thresholds laid down by the awarding authority, namely a minimum amount of own funds or assets, minimum balance-sheet figures, minimum turnover and the maximum value of the works which may be carried out at one time, constitute criteria external to the contractors which are determined in the light of the nature and scale of the works to be awarded. We have seen that the adoption of such criteria is not only legitimate but indispensable.

They must enable the competent authorities to reject tenders which may be low, but are from contractors who lack the economic and financial standing necessary for the proper performance of the works in question or who have taken on so many large-scale works that their ability to complete them satisfactorily is questionable despite their considerable resources.

I therefore propose that Question 2 be answered as follows :

The total value of the works which a contractor would be carrying out at one time if the works put out to tender were awarded to him constitutes a reference which, taken together with the other references required, enables his financial and economic standing to be determined . An authority awarding contracts is entitled to take the view that if that total value exceeds a particular level which it has determined on the basis of objective criteria, the contractor' s financial and economic standing is insufficient.

Clearly, by virtue of Article 25, the awarding authority must specify in the notice that that reference is to be produced.

It will be for the Belgian Conseil d' Etat to establish whether that requirement was fulfilled in this instance.

It seems to me that it may have been. The notice of call for tender specified the class in which contractors had to be recognized in order to be eligible to tender. In Belgium that class automatically determines the maximum value of the works which may be carried out at one time . A notice requiring contractors to be recognized in a particular class may therefore be taken to imply that a reference relating to the total value of works in progress must be produced and that the criterion of the maximum value corresponding to that class will be applied.

The plaintiff in the main action further argues that three of the four requirements which must be satisfied in order for the competent Belgian authorities to ask the Recognition Committee for an exemption from the maximum total value of works themselves constitute criteria external to the tenderer or his undertaking (see part B, paragraph 10, of the plaintiffs' observations).

That is certainly true. In my view, however, it is of no concern to the Court in what circumstances a Member State will grant exemptions from its own legislation in regard to the value of the works which may be carried out at one time provided that the relevant rules do not create any discrimination between nationals of different Member States

For the present the Conseil d' Etat has merely asked the Court whether, in principle, a criterion based on the total value of works may be applied. I have proposed that the Court answer that question in the affirmative.

III - The question submitted in Cases 28 and 29/86

In the two actions brought by Bellini, the Belgian Conseil d' Etat has submitted to the Court two identical questions, which are worded as follows :

> "Does Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, and in particular Article 25 and Article 26 (d) thereof, permit a Belgian awarding authority to reject a tender submitted by an Italian contractor on the grounds that the undertaking has not shown that it possesses the minimum amount of own funds required by Belgian legislation and that it does not have in its employ on average the minimum number of workers and managerial staff required by that legislation, when the contractor is recognized in Italy in a class equivalent to that required in Belgium by virtue of the value of the contract to be awarded?"

I have already made it clear that an awarding authority is entitled to lay down minimum standards as regards both the amount of own funds and the manpower of tenderers, including both managerial staff and workers .

This third question asks in substance if those standards may no longer be required where a contractor is recognized in his own country in a class which enables him to carry out works in that country on the same scale as those put out to tender.

In other words, where a contractor may carry out works in Belgium for a value of BFR*130 million only if his undertaking has own resources of BFR*30 million and a workforce of 100 workers and 4 managerial staff, must he be regarded, by virtue of Article 28 of the directive, as being suitable to carry out such works because the legislation of his own country authorizes him to carry out works up to BFR*142 million even if his undertaking' s own resources and manpower are less than those required in Belgium for that kind of contract?

The question is therefore what is covered by the presumption of suitability referred to in Article 28 (3) of the directive.

As the Court stated at paragraph 13 of its decision in Transporoute, cited above, registration in such a list constitutes an alternative means of proof.

Like the Belgian Régie des bâtiments, the Confédération nationale de la construction, the Belgian State, the Kingdom of Spain and the Commission, I take the view that the effect of the presumption of suitability established by Article 28 of the directive is that a certificate of registration in a list of recognized contractors in a Member State replaces, for the purposes of another Member State, the presentation of a balance sheet and a statement of turnover (Article 25 (b) and (c )) and also a statement of manpower (Article 26 (d)).

However, the fact that this is a mere presumption of suitability means that it is rebuttable. Only "information which can be deduced from registration in official lists may not be questioned" (second subparagraph of Article 28 (3)*). It is protected by an irrebuttable presumption .

The alternative means of proof constituted by the certificate of recognition does not in my view limit the awarding authority' s discretion with regard to the requirement of detailed references or the determination of the contractor' s financial and economic standing and technical ability for the purposes of Articles 25 and 26 of the directive (for example, the minimum number of workers and managerial staff).

This, I think, is proved by the second sentence of Article 28 (2), which provides that "this certificate shall state the references which enabled them to be registered in the list and the classification given in this list ".

The inclusion of those references in the certificate of recognition cannot have any practical value unless the awarding authority is able to deduce from it objective information on the evidence provided by the certificate of recognition. The corollary of the competent authority' s freedom to determine the level of financial and economic standing and technical ability which it requires is its power not to award a public works contract to tenderers who cannot establish that they are of that minimum standing. The "references which enabled them to be registered" are the basis on which an awarding authority in Member State "A" must decide, without calling them into question, whether the recognition granted in Member State "B" proves that the contractor has the standing and ability required for the contract in question .

It may therefore evaluate the information deducible from a certificate of recognition which is covered by the presumption of suitability and decide at its own discretion that the contractor' s own funds and average manpower do not satisfy the minimum requirements of standing and ability thought necessary for the public works contract in question. In that way it rebuts the presumption. Since the same minimum standing and ability is required of Belgian contractors, there is no discrimination.

For all those reasons I propose that the Court answer the Conseil d' Etat' s third question in the terms suggested by the Commission, namely :

The second subparagraph of Article 28 (3) of Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts prohibits a Member State from questioning the information deducible from a contractor' s registration in an official list of recognized contractors but does not affect its power to ascertain whether the criteria for registration in an official list are equivalent in number and severity to the criteria required for the recognition of contractors established within its own territory. The first subparagraph of Article 28 (3) defines the limits of the presumption of suitability created by registration in such lists and an awarding authority continues to enjoy a discretion outside those limits.

Articles 25, 26 (d) and 28 of the directive do not preclude an awarding authority from requiring a contractor from another Member State to furnish proof that he has at his disposal the minimum amount of own funds and number of workers and managerial staff which its national legislation requires of all tenderers for a public works contract, provided that there is no discrimination even if the contractor established in another Member State is recognized in that State in a class corresponding to the class required by the said national legislation having regard to the value of the works to be awarded .

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Lenz delivered on 26 February 1991.
Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic.
Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Measure having equivalent effect - Aid for the purchase of motor vehicles of domestic manufacture.
Case C-263/85.

Advocate General Carl Otto Lenz delivered his Opinion on 26 February 1991. (*) He concluded as follows:

"The only possible conclusion (which, at the hearing, the defendant, too, accepted as being correct) is that the view taken by the Commission must be upheld. It should accordingly be declared, following the terms of the claim, that by requiring public bodies to buy vehicles of domestic manufacture in order to benefit from the aid provided for by Law No 151 of 10 April 1981, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 30 of the EEC Treaty. Since that is the result of the proceedings, the defendant must also be ordered to pay the costs."

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Lenz delivered on 13 January 1987.
Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic.
Failure to publish a notice of a public works contract.
Case 199/85.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

A - 1 . In the case to be considered today the Italian Republic is charged with having failed to comply with the Council Directive of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (Official Journal, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p . 682), which was incorporated into Italian law by Law No 584 of 8 August 1977.

2 . The directive provides that, where public works contracts above a specific value are to be awarded by the State or regional or local authorities, notice thereof must be published in the Official Journal of the European Communities (Article 12). The purpose of that provision is to ensure that all interested undertakings in the Community are able to participate in the procedure. However, under Article 9, public works contracts may be awarded without applying the provisions of the directive, inter alia,

> "(b) when, for technical or artistic reasons or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the works may only be carried out by a particular contractor;
> ...
> (d) in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought by events unforeseen by the authorities awarding contracts, the time-limit laid down in other procedures cannot be kept;

3 . The following facts must be known about the present proceedings

4 . In the Municipality of Milan during the 1970s the Azienda Municipale Nettezza Urbana di Milano, that is to say the Municipal Refuse Disposal Corporation, operated two refuse incinerators built by it . It was decided to build two more plants. It was considered that these plants, together with additional refuse dumps, would be sufficient for the disposal of waste.

5 . After the notorious accident at Seveso in which dioxin played a significant part, the Azienda was (according to the Municipality of Milan) forced to close one of the incinerators and to limit the operation of the other in view of the fact that the existing incinerators emitted dioxin into the air. It also had to abandon the plan to construct two additional incinerators because the Regional Pollution Committee advised against their construction. In addition, local citizens had blockaded the existing refuse dumps. It thus became necessary to construct another plant for the recycling of solid waste . To that end, the board of the Azienda established an advisory technical commission in September 1978 which considered the tenders of a number of undertakings - including non-Italian undertakings - which might carry out the work. Some months later it concluded in favour of awarding the contract to three Italian undertakings. After that preliminary work had been studied by a group of experts appointed in April 1979, the board of the Azienda decided, in July 1979, to award the aforementioned building contract by private contract to a consortium of three Italian undertakings. On 5 November 1979 the Municipal Council of Milan adopted a resolution approving that decision .

6 . After the Commission became aware of those facts and the fact that no contract notice had been published in the Official Journal, letters were sent to the Italian Government between 1980 and 1983 in which the Commission expressed misgivings about the application of the aforementioned directive and requested information. Since the views expressed by the Municipality of Milan appeared unsatisfactory, the Commission formally instituted the procedure provided for by Article 169 of the EEC Treaty in August 1983. In a letter dated 1 August 1983 the Commission raised the matter of an infringement of Article 12 of the directive - on the ground of the failure to publish a notice - and stated that reliance on Article 9 (b) and (d) was unjustified. With regard to Article 9 (b), the Commission did not accept that the only suitable candidate was a consortium of three Italian undertakings on account of their special technical skills and existing exclusive rights; it took the view, after examining the documents in the case, that other undertakings in the Community were also capable of carrying out the proposed works. With regard to Article 9 (d), the Commission did not accept the argument that this case was extremely urgent (put forward on the basis that, in view of the adverse opinion of the Regional Pollution Committee, the additional incinerators which had orginally been planned could no longer be constructed after the Seveso accident). In that connection the Commission stated that Article 9 (d) had to be interpreted strictly and according to such an interpretation it laid down three requirements, each of which had to be satisfied. In relation to the events of 1979 they were, however, not satisfied since the need for a new plant was not unforeseen and secondly the works were not limited to what was strictly necessary (namely the replacement of existing plant) but were intended to increase capacity.

7 . The Mayor of Milan gave his views in a letter of November 1983 which was forwarded to the Commission. With regard to Article 9 (b), it was stated that the plant proposed by the three Italian undertakings to whom the contract had been awarded would guarantee the greatest degree of efficiency and that it involved the use of exclusive rights belonging to those undertakings. With regard to Article 9 (d), reference was again made to the need to change the earlier plans as a result of the Seveso accident.

8 . Not convinced by those arguments, the Commission delivered a reasoned opinion under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty in March 1984. In that opinion the Commission, after pointing out that other undertakings in the Community were capable of carrying out the works, objected that the Municipality of Milan had given no details of the alleged exclusive rights of the three Italian undertakings to whom the contract had been awarded (patent number, entries in the register of patents). It also objected with regard to Article 9 (d) that the necessary technical evidence had not been produced and, in addition, pointed out that Article 15 of the directive provides for an accelerated procedure. At the end of the opinion, which is based on an assumed infringement of Community law by the Municipality of Milan, the Italian Republic is again called upon "to adopt the measures necessary to comply with this reasoned opinion within 30 days" (" ad adottare le misure necessarie per conformarsi al presente parere motivato ")) and, since the Commission presumed that the allegedly urgent works had virtually been completed and that the contracts which had been awarded could no longer be suspended or rescinded, it added "by necessary measures is meant above all a written undertaking by the Municipality of Milan that it will comply with all the provisions of Directive 71/305/EEC in future" (" per misure necessarie, deve essere inteso soprattutto un impegno scritto del Comune di Milano di rispettare in futuro tutte le disposizioni della direttiva 71/305/EEC ")).

9 . Thereupon the Italian Minister for the Interior instructed the Prefect of Milan to enjoin the Municipality of Milan to comply with the directive in future and to provide a written undertaking to that effect . In April 1984 the Mayor of Milan complied with that request by issuing a declaration in which he declared - after an examination of the Commission' s reasoned opinion and in the conviction that the municipal administration had acted lawfully - that "the Municipality of Milan will ensure that, in the future, too, its administrative action is in conformity with the provisions of primary and secondary legislation, including all the provisions of Directive 71/305/EEC, by according them full respect, in both form and substance" ((" il Comune di Milano uniformerà anche per il futuro la sua azione amministrativa alle norme di legge e di regolamento, ivi comprese le disposizioni tutte della direttiva 71/305/EEC, assicurandone il pieno rispetto, sia nella forma, che nella sostanza ")).

10 . As the Court is aware, the Italian Government considers that the Municipality of Milan has thereby complied with the Commission' s reasoned opinion in good time and that there are no grounds for instituting proceedings before the Court for a declaration that it has failed to fulfil its obligations.

11 . Nevertheless, in June 1985 the Commission instituted proceedings before the Court seeking a declaration that the Italian Republic, and in particular the Municipality of Milan, as a regional or local authority, by deciding to award by private contract a contract for the construction of a plant for the recycling of solid urban waste and failing to publish notice thereof in the Official Journal of the European Communities, had failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 71/305.

12 . The Commission takes the view that the declaration by the Mayor of Milan is ambiguous and that it does not provide any guarantee for the future of proper compliance with the reasoned opinion. In addition, in 1984 the Commission discovered - as a result of an application for finance submitted to the European Investment Bank on which the Commission had to give an opinion - what it considered to be a further infringement of the directive in the award by the same authority of a contract for the same works (namely a plant at Muggiano for the processing of solid urban waste with thermal energy recuperation and the salvage of various substances). By a telex message in December 1984 the Commission drew attention to that fact and stated that since the conduct of which it had complained had continued it could not accept the Mayor of Milan' s declaration. The Commision states that subsequently (after the statement in defence had been lodged) it also discovered that the works which had been decided upon in 1979 had never been commenced - a fact which strengthened its position . During the proceedings before the Court and in answer to a question posed by the Court it was learnt that the project decided upon in 1979 has not in fact been realized (namely because in 1982 new rules for the disposal of waste were introduced which necessitated considerable alterations), that apart from those alterations the plant intended to be built at Muggiano corresponds to the plant decided upon in 1979, that the task of constructing the plant had also been entrusted to the three aforementioned Italian undertakings and that (in August 1986) only the preliminary work had been carried out (whereas according to the Commission' s submissions at the hearing work on the plant had not been begun at all).

B - 13 . In the light of all the written and oral submissions presented to the Court, the issues before the Court call for the following observations.

I - Admissibility

14 . The Italian Government takes the view that the application is inadmissible and restricts its written submissions to that contention . A precondition for instituting proceedings under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty is that the Member State in question must have failed to comply with the Commission' s reasoned opinion, within the period laid down . In the Italian Government' s opinion, no such failure has occurred in this case since the reasoned opinion required above all (" suprattutto ") a written declaration by the Municipality of Milan that it would comply with the provisions of the directive in future and that requirement was satisfied by the delivery of the declaration by the Mayor of Milan dated 19 April 1984. In so far as the Commission also refers to events in 1984 (contract for the construction of a plant at Muggiano), it is clear, in the Italian Government' s view, that they cannot fall within the scope of these proceedings since the Italian Government has still not had the opportunity to submit its observations in the preliminary procedure provided for by Article 169 of the EEC Treaty.

1 . 15 . As far as that argument is concerned, it must be admitted in the light of the sparse facts with which the Court has been acquainted that the second part thereof appears to be justified. According to the strict interpretation given to Article 169 in the Court' s case-law, it is in fact impossible to deal in these proceedings with events which occurred in 1984 and which were not mentioned in the communication commencing the procedure or in the Commission' s reasoned opinion. In particular, those events cannot be considered in view of the fact that the Italian Government stated in answer to a question asked by the Court that the original plans underwent significant changes in 1982 and that therefore the new plans did not simply amount to a postponement of the original project and the fact that this was not disputed by the Commission.

16 . Consequently, where the application lodged by the Commission, which is worded in very broad terms, refers to the award of a contract for the construction of a plant for the recycling of solid urban waste by the City of Milan, that can only mean the aforementioned events of 1979 and the question whether or not the directive has been observed is to be examined only in relation to those events.

2 . 17 . However, I am inclined to the view that once the subject-matter of the proceedings is so defined there can be no question of inadmissibility.

(a) 18 . With regard to the defendant' s main objection, it is in fact difficult to accept - if my understanding of the general tenor of the Commission' s reasoned opinion is correct - that the requirement at the end thereof, to give a written undertaking to comply with the directive in the future, was satisfactorily met by the Mayor of Milan' s aforementioned declaration.

19 . If one tries to find a logical explanation for that requirement (whether or not it was expressed correctly in the Italian Minister for the Interior' s letter of 29 March 1984 cannot be decisive), one finds that it entails - and here I agree with the Commission - an implied recognition of the fact that the conduct of the Municipality of Milan in 1979 was unlawful. That interpretation arises from the fact that such a requirement is to be regarded as altogether unusual (for compliance with the requirement involves no legal changes since the duty to comply with the directive arises directly from the directive itself in conjunction with the national measures implementing it; moreover, it involves no change in the factual situation since as far as the legal position was concerned the matter had already been pointed out to the Municipality of Milan by the Commission' s letter of August 1983). As far as the addressees of the requirement were concerned, the undertaking sought could only be taken to mean that the Commission was acting on the assumption that the contract which had been awarded had been completed and could not therefore be rescinded and that its only concern was to ensure that such conduct was not repeated, which, however, undoubtedly implies that the conduct was unlawful.

20 . However, there is absolutely no recognition in the Mayor of Milan' s declaration that the award of the contract in 1979 did not conform to the directive; on the contrary, it begins with the express statement that the Mayor is convinced that the Municipal Administration had acted in a lawful manner (" abbia agito legittimamente ").

21 . The Mayor then goes on to state in the declaration - and this is another important point - that the Municipality of Milan will ensure that, in the future, too, its administrative action is in conformity with the directive. Apparently, he is saying that in the future the Municipality will, if the situation arises, act as it had done in 1979.

22 . Viewed in that light and contrary to the view of the Italian Government the aforementioned declaration cannot in fact be regarded as a categorical guarantee that the provisions of the directive will be observed . The Commission was right to complain that the declaration was incomplete and that, because of the reservation in the first sentence, it was not clear. Consequently, it cannot be said that, by giving his declaration, the Mayor of Milan did everything that was necessary to comply with the Commission' s reasoned opinion.

(b) 23 . There is also a further reason why it cannot be said that the reasoned opinion was complied with in full.

24 . Although it is stated in the final paragraph of the reasoned opinion that the necessary measures mean above all a written undertaking by the Municipality of Milan that it will comply with the directive in the future, the preceding paragraph refers quite generally to the measures which must be adopted to comply with the reasoned opinion. That could only mean that, if the Commission' s assumption that the contract had been performed was to prove incorrect (and the addressee of the reasoned opinion knew or should have known that was in fact the position since at that time not even a site for the proposed plant had been found), the Commission' s concern was that the conduct of the Municipality of Milan should be brought into conformity with the reasoned opinion.

Viewed in that light, the reasoned opinion therefore also required the award of the contract to be rescinded (which appeared quite feasible on the assumption that it was unlawful) and a proper procedure for the award of a contract to be instituted. The defendant should therefore have given directions to that effect or (if it is correct that in serious cases the government has only limited influence on independent municipalities which are essentially subject to the regional supervisory committees) it should at least have given clear indications about the need for efforts at the municipal level to rescind the contract and recommence the procedure for the award of contracts .

25 . At least in so far as nothing of the kind was done and in his letter to the Prefect of Milan the Minister for the Interior merely requested that the Municipality of Milan should produce the written declaration, it certainly cannot be said that everything necessary was done to comply with the reasoned opinion within the period laid down and that therefore there were no grounds for instituting proceedings before the Court.

(c) 26 . Finally, it is necessary to consider, with regard to the facts known to the Court and in connection with the question of admissibility, whether the Commission has any interest at all in proceedings which are limited to events that occurred in 1979 when it is now clear that the original decision was never put into effect.

27 . I am inclined to think that, if indeed such an interest matters in proceedings under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty, the Commission has such an interest in this case and it is a sufficient interest. The important point in this regard is that in 1979 in Milan a procedure for the award of a contract was commenced and brought to a formal conclusion in contravention of the basic rules of the directive. However, as has been made clear in a different context, it is perfectly possible for proceedings under Article 169 to be instituted in relation to matters which have occurred entirely in the past. Also of relevance is the fact that in relation to the form of the procedure the Municipality of Milan relies upon provisions of the directive whose clarification is of fundamental importance since they may become relevant again and again (at the hearing the Commission referred to a number of other cases where local authorities had failed to comply with the directive). Not least, it is also of interest that the events of 1979 clearly formed a sort of basis and starting point for subsequent actions involving a further failure to follow the correct procedure under the directive. In fact the contract to construct the plant which was subsequently decided upon was awarded to the same three undertakings which had been awarded the contract for the original project in 1979, which suggests that there was no new procedure for awarding the contract but that the contracts concluded in 1979 were simply amended.

(d) 28 . Consequently, there are really no decisive reasons why the application should not be admissible. Nothing should therefore prevent the Court of Justice from interpreting the Council directive in the light of the circumstances of this case in order to clarify the obligations which arise therefrom for the Member States.

II - Substance

29 . It is not disputed that in 1979 the Municipality of Milan awarded a public works contract without following the procedure laid down in Article 12 of Directive 71/305 which provides as follows :

"Authorities awarding contracts who wish to award a public works contract by open or restricted procedure shall make known their intention by means of a notice.

Such notice shall be sent to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities and shall be published in full in the Official Journal of the European Communities in the official languages of the Communities...".

30 . However, its action constitutes an infringement of Community law only if Article 9 is not applicable (paragraphs (b) and (d) of that provision are relied upon by the Municipality of Milan). Article 9 provides as follows :

"Authorities awarding contracts may award their works contracts without applying the provisions of this directive, except those of Article 10, in the following cases :

(b) when, for technical or artistic reasons or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the works may only be carried out by a particular contractor;

...

(d) in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought by events unforeseen by the authorities awarding contracts, the time limit laid down in other procedures cannot be kept;

31 . The crucial question is therefore the meaning to be given to the provisions just cited and whether it has been shown that the conditions for their application were satisfied in 1979. In that connection we can only rely - as far as the Italian side is concerned - on the not very detailed statements made by the Municipality of Milan in the preliminary procedure since the Italian Government has restricted itself during the proceedings before the Court almost entirely to the question of admissibility.

(1) 32 . With regard, first, to Article 9 (b), it is certainly necessary to agree with the Commission that the provision is a derogation which in principle must be strictly construed and that the awarding authority which relies on it must prove that the conditions for its application are satisfied.

33 . It also appears that the Commission' s conclusion that, according to its investigations, undertakings in the Community other than those to whom the contract was awarded were also in a position to construct such a plant is not disputed. In that connection the Municipality of Milan merely contended (see its letter of 11 October 1983) that the advisory technical commission appointed to consider the matter came to the conclusion that the plant proposed by the three Italian undertakings to whom the contract was awarded guaranteed the greatest efficiency (" garanzie di migliore funzionalità "). However, that is hardly sufficient, in connection with the application of Article 9 (b), to show that "for technical... reasons..., the works may only be carried out by a particular contractor", especially since further and more detailed particulars were not provided.

34 . In so far as the Municipality of Milan also relies, in relation to Article 9 (b), on the alleged exclusive rights of the Italian undertakings to whom the contract was awarded, which rights were necessary for a proper realization of the project, it is sufficient to refer to the Commission' s observation that since more detailed information has not been provided at any stage (for example regarding the patent number or entries in the patent register) the necessary supporting evidence is lacking.

35 . Consequently, it is not possible to find that the Municipality of Milan was right to rely on Article 9 (b) of the directive, thereby justifying the failure to apply Article 12 thereof.

(2) 36 . With regard, secondly, to Article 9 (d), the position is the same as it was with Article 9 (b), namely that the provision must in principle be interpreted strictly and that according to its wording there is no doubt that the conditions contained therein must all be satisfied .

37 . In the present case, it is not, however, necessary to consider them all . According to the Commission' s statements at the hearing, the total extra time needed to comply with the directive (period of notice, allowing time for the receipt of tenders and time for examining the tenders) would be a few months. In fact, merely what is known of the course of the procedure up to November 1979 shows that this was not a case of extreme urgency, for the board of Azienda was aware of the situation since September 1978; only a few months after the establishment of an advisory technical commission, the three Italian undertakings to whom the contract was subsequently awarded were designated; in April 1979 those undertakings were then evaluated by a group of experts and finally they were awarded the contract by a decision taken in July 1979 which the Municipality approved in November 1979. Reference may also be made to the fact that until 1984 it was not known where the plant was to be constructed (because a suitable site had not been found), the fact that it was decided in 1984 to build it at Muggiano, the further fact that it was stated in the application for finance made to the European Investment Bank that the work had been begun in 1984 and would be completed by 1987 and finally to the fact that it was stated in August 1986 in response to a question asked by the Court that by that date the preliminary work (" interventi preliminari ") had been completed (which was in fact emphatically disputed by the Commission at the hearing).

38 . In those circumstances, it is difficult to see how it could be said that compliance with the periods laid down by the directive in relation to the publication of notices would be greatly prejudicial. Consequently, the Municipality of Milan cannot rely on Article 9 (d) of the directive either.

C - 39 . In view of all the foregoing I can only propose that the Court should allow the Commission' s application, which in my view is admissible, and that it should make the declaration sought therein. The defendant should also be ordered to pay the costs.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Mischo delivered on 4 November 1986.
Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic.
Transparency of financial relations between Member States and public undertakings.
Case 118/85.

Mr President,

Members of the Court,

This Opinion concerns an application for a declaration that by refusing to supply information concerning the manufactured tobacco sector, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 5 (2) of Commission Directive 80/723/EEC of 25 June 1980 on the transparency of financial relations between Member States and public undertakings (Official Journal, L 195, p. 35).

That provision requires the Member States to supply to the Commission, at its request, information concerning the financial relations between "public authorities" and "public undertakings ".

The Italian Government refused to supply such information on the ground that the Amministrazione Autonoma dei Monopoli di Stato (AAMS), which operates in the sector in question, cannot be regarded as a "public undertaking" within the meaning of Article 2 of the said directive but is a "public authority" within the meaning of the same article .

In reality, the dispute thus concerns the interpretation of those two expressions.

According to Article 2 of Directive 80/723/EEC, "public authorities" means "the State and regional or local authorities" and "public undertaking" means "any undertaking over which the public authorities may exercise directly or indirectly a dominant influence by virtue of their ownership of it, their financial participation therein, or the rules which govern it."

In concrete terms, the question is whether the AAMS, as a State body without a legal personality separate from that of the State, something which the Commission does not contest, is for that reason one of the "public authorities" or, on the contrary, whether the fact that in the manufactured tobacco sector it offers goods and services on the market and participates in economic activity, something which the Italian Government admits, is sufficient to place it in the category of "public undertakings ".

Since, at the time it was adopted, Directive 80/723 was the subject of an application for annulment brought by France, Italy and the United Kingdom (Joined Cases 188 to 190/80), let me refer, for details of the directive and comments upon it, to the judgment of the Court of 6 July 1982 (((1982)) ECR 2545).

1 . Can a State body constitute a "public undertaking"?

The Italian Government states that "in the Italian legal order, the production and marketing of manufactured tobacco is one of the public and institutional responsibilities of the State" and that "if the monopoly administration, being a State body, is a 'public authority' , it cannot at the same time be a 'public undertaking' within the meaning of the directive ".

The Italian State obviously cannot be denied the right to consider that it is in the public interest that it should itself assume the activities in question and that it therefore also assumes a "public service" duty in that regard.

However, I am of opinion that "public service" and "public undertaking" are not mutually exclusive concepts so that a public authority, including the State itself, may in certain cases also be regarded as a "public undertaking ".

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

In my opinion, the criteria for distinguishing between "public authorities" and "public undertakings" are not to be sought in the concept of public service but in the industrial and commercial nature of the activity of public bodies.

Italian legal writers have in fact coined a term for this type of activity - "imprese-organo", meaning an unincorporated State enterprise . (1)

In Case 78/82, (2) the Italian Government itself relied on Article 90 (2) of the EEC Treaty in favour of the AAMS in order to justify a measure contested by the Commission. However, that provision presupposes the existence of an undertaking and I find it difficult to accept that a body which constitutes an undertaking within the meaning of Article 90 (2) may no longer be regarded as such for the purposes of Directive 80/723, which is based on the third paragraph of the same article and whose purpose is to facilitate its implementation.

Furthermore, the fact that it is possible to draw a distinction, among the activities of the State, between its activities as an authority and its activities as an undertaking is confirmed by the case-law of the Court.

For example, in its judgment of 11 July 1985 in Case 107/84, (3) the Court held that only a part of the postal activities carried on by a body governed by public law may be regarded as the activities of a public authority in the strict sense of the term.

It has also been established in a line of decisions (4) that only "posts which involve direct or indirect participation in the exercise of powers conferred by public law and duties designed to safeguard the general interests of the State or of other public authorities" come within the scope of the exception provided for in Article 48 (4) of the Treaty concerning freedom of movement for workers.

The Court expressly wished to exclude posts which, whilst coming under the State or other bodies governed by public law, involve responsibilities of an economic and social character which the public authorities assume in the various Member States or other activities which cannot be assimilated to the functions which are typical of the public administration (see, in particular, paragraphs 10 and 11 of the judgment of 17 December 1980, ((1980)) ECR 3900).

The applicability of one or other of those provisions is thus not established by the mere existence of a public administration or a public body . The decisive factor is the activities carried on.

In the few rare cases in which the Court has been called upon to assess whether or not a body governed by public law is an "undertaking", it has also been led to draw a distinction according to the nature of those activities.

In its judgment of 30 April 1974 in Case 155/73 (Sacchi, ((1974)) ECR 409), it expressly rejected the argument put forward by the Italian and German Governments to the effect that television undertakings are not "undertakings" within the meaning of the provisions of the Treaty and decided that, even if a Member State, for considerations of public interest, of a non-economic nature, has conferred an exclusive right to conduct radio and television transmissions on one or more establishments, for the performance of their tasks, these establishments "to the extent that this performance comprises activities of an economic nature, fall under the provisions referred to in Article 90 relating to public undertakings and undertakings to which Member States grant special or exclusive rights" (paragraph 14).

Similarly, in its judgment of 18 June 1975 in Case 94/74 IGAV v ENCC ((1975)) ECR 699, the Court stated that "the activities of an institution of a public nature, even if autonomous, fall under the provisions referred to ((concerning interference by the Member States with the normal functioning of competition)) and not under Articles 85 and 86, even if its interventions take place in the public interest and are devoid of a commercial character" (paragraph 35). It may legitimately be concluded that the commercial activities of a public body, whether autonomous or not, fall under Articles 85 and 86, specifically referred to in Article 90.

Finally, in its judgment of 20 March 1985 in Case 41/83 Italy v Commission ((1985)) ECR 873, the Court expressly rejected the Italian Government' s argument to the effect that "the rule-making activities of a body governed by public law may not be regarded as the activities of an undertaking for the purposes of Article 86" (paragraph 13) on the ground that "the schemes ((adopted by British Telecom under rule-making powers conferred on it by law))... must be regarded as an integral part of BT' s business activity" (paragraph 20). It thus confirmed that the activities of a statutory corporation, (which the Court described as a "nationalized undertaking", see paragraph 2) are subject to the Community competition rules once it engages in industrial or commercial activities.

Returning to Directive 80/723, I would point out that in the abovementioned judgment in Joined Cases 188 to 190/80, the Court decided that the directive was valid.

The purpose of that directive, according to the sixth recital in the preamble thereto, is to "enable a clear distinction to be made between the role of the State as public authority and its role as proprietor ".

I do not therefore see on the basis of what line of reasoning it is possible to arrive at the conclusion that "the directive does not make it possible to distinguish, in regard to public authorities, between public authority activities and entrepreneurial activities" (defence, first paragraph on page 8).

On the contrary, it seems to me that the directive is based precisely on the acknowledged fact that States frequently have such a "split personality ".

The reasons which led the Commission to regard it as necessary to make a distinction between the rôle of the State as public authority and the role of the State as proprietor are, in my view, a fortiori relevant when the State is not only proprietor but also directly manages the activity in question.

Furthermore, Article 2 of the directive states that "public undertakings" means "any undertaking over which the public authorities may exercise directly or indirectly a dominant influence by virtue of ... the rules which govern it ". However, in this case, the rules governing the AAMS, namely the fact that it is integrated into the administration of the State, make possible the exercise of influence which is not merely dominant but also direct and exclusive.

It does not therefore seem excessive to conclude that, having regard to the criteria laid down in the second paragraph of that article, the "imprese-organo directly managed by the State" (reply to the letter requesting observations, page 4) constitute the highest form of public undertakings referred to by the directive in question.

2 . Must a public undertaking necessarily have legal personality distinct from that of the State?

According to the Italian Government, "in order for the public authorities to be able to exercise their influence over a public undertaking, the two entities should be legally separate ".

However, it seems to me that that influence may be exercised even more effectively when the State as a public authority and the State as an undertaking are one and the same legal person. (It could in fact be asked whether it is not precisely for that reason that certain public bodies are not granted a separate legal personality.)

In such situations, the establishment of transparency is even more necessary .

In fact, the whole purpose of the directive is to ensure "a fair and effective application of the aid rules in the Treaty to both public and private undertakings" (fifth recital).

Moreover, it can be seen from the Court' s case-law that, in the context of the competition rules laid down in the EEC Treaty, an economic or functional approach, rather than a merely legal one, must prevail in defining the term "undertaking ".

It is certainly true that in the context of the ECSC Treaty the Court began by defining the term "undertaking" in relation to the concept of legal personality (5) and it is that definition which is traditionally cited by legal writers. (6) However, the Court has increasingly qualified that position. (7)

In the context of the EEC Treaty, the Court has only recently deemed it necessary to define the term "undertaking", namely in its judgment of 12 July 1984 in Case 170/83 Hydrotherm v Compact ((1984)) ECR 2999, in which it decided that "in competition law, the term 'undertaking' must be understood as designating an economic unit for the purpose of the subject-matter of the agreement in question even if in law that economic unit consists of several persons, natural or legal" (paragraph 11).

I note that the Court has thus merely drawn the logical conclusions, in regard to the definition of the term "undertaking", from its previous case-law regarding competition. Thus, in particular (8) in its judgment of 25 November 1971 in Case 22/71 Béguelin Import v G.L. Import and Export ((1971)) ECR 949, it held that "an exclusive dealing agreement does not fall under the prohibition imposed by Article 85 (1) of the Treaty merely because the concession granted under that agreement has been transferred from a parent company to its subsidiary, which, although having a separate legal personality, enjoys no economic independence" (summary, paragraph 1).

Similarly, in its judgment of 14 July 1972 in Case 48/69 ICI v Commission ((1972)) ECR 619, it rejected the applicants' argument to the effect that possible infringements of Article 85 (1) could only be imputed to their subsidiaries on the ground that "the fact that a subsidiary has separate legal personality is not sufficient to exclude the possibility of imputing its conduct to theparent company", which is the case "where a subsidiary does not enjoy real autonomy in determining its course of action in the market" (paragraphs 132 and 134).

Although it is true that those judgments were based essentially on the consideration that competition between companies economically dependent on each other is impossible and, rather than providing a definition of the term "undertaking", accept the principle that the acts of subsidiaries may be imputed to the parent company, it is clear from them that in competition law legal personality is not the decisive factor for the purposes of the application of Articles 85 to 90 of the Treaty to undertakings. The judgment in Case 170/83 confirms this by identifying an undertaking as an economic unit, even if it is composed of several legal persons.

Since, like Articles 85 and 86, Article 90 is contained in Part 3, Title I, Chapter 1, Section 1 of the Treaty, entitled "Rules applying to undertakings", and since, subject to paragraph 2 thereof, it makes public undertakings subject to all the rules laid down in the Treaty which apply also to private undertakings (judgment of 6 July 1982 in Joined Cases 188 to 190/80, cited above, paragraph 12), it may logically be concluded that the term "undertaking" has the same meaning, independently of whether the undertaking concerned is private or public . (9)

I have stated that in the judgments concerning Article 90, cited in Section 1 above, the Court in fact adopted the same economic and functional approach, even if the question of legal personality was not directly at issue in those cases.

3 . Are financial relations possible only between separate legal persons?

The Italian Government states that "it can be seen from the very nature of the financial relations whose transparency must be ensured (Article 3 of the directive) that such relations exist and must exist between separate legal persons" or that "financial relations cannot exist within the same legal person ". In that regard, I would like to make the following observations.

It cannot be denied that it is not possible to speak of "financial relations" unless a sufficiently clear distinction can be drawn between the source of the finance and the recipient.

In this instance, that seems to me to be the case. Although the existence of a separate budget must not necessarily be regarded as an essential condition for the existence of "financial relations", it is certain that in the instant case, an "autonomous administration" with a separate and distinct budget does exist.

As was stated in the defence and as can be seen from Article 9 of Decree-Law No 2258 of 8 December 1927 later converted into Law No*3474 of 6 December 1928, which set up the AAMS, the draft budget of the income and expenditure of the AAMS must be submitted to parliament for approval as an annex to the estimate of expenditure of the Ministry of Finance and the balance sheet is annexed to the general accounts of the State .

Joined to it is a separate balance sheet (" conto consuntivo ") and an "economic account" (" conto economico ") for each of the "aziende" (tobacco, salt, quinine) and a general statement of account (" riassunto ") for the whole administration.

The industrial and commercial receipts of the AAMS are entered in the budget of the autonomous administration (Article 4). Only the fiscal receipts are entered directly in the budget of the State.

Finally and most importantly, the budget of the autonomous administration also provides for a series of transfers between that administration and the State Treasury. (10)

Thus, Item No 169 of the budget concerns the "sums paid by the Treasury for the repayment of advances made by the deposit and loan bank to cover administrative deficits ".

That item could possibly constitute one of the "financial relations" referred to by Article 3 of Directive 80/723, namely "the setting-off of operating losses ".

Then there is Item No 510, "Sums paid by the Treasury for the construction of the new tobacco factory at Lucca"; it could be asked whether this constitutes "the provision of capital" or "non-refundable grants ".

On the expenditure side, Item No 128 covers the "reimbursement to the Treasury of expenditure corresponding to the emoluments of employees of the State' s general accounting service working at the AAMS", Item No 129 the "reimbursement to the Treasury of the AAMS share of the funding of the 'Guardia di Finanza' and Item No 137 "taxes and other charges payable on immovable property owned by the AAMS ".

It thus seems to me that it may be concluded that "financial relations" do exist between the autonomous administration on the one hand and the Italian State as such (through the Treasury) on the other . Directive 80/723 must therefore apply to those relations since I have found in another connection that the AAMS may be regarded as a "public undertaking ".

The final objection raised by the Italian Government must now be considered .

It contends that it follows from Annex I to Council Directive 80/767/EEC of 22 July 1980 adapting and supplementing in respect of certain contracting authorities Directive 77/62/EEC coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (Official Journal, L 215, p . 1) that "the tobacco monopoly is an organ of the Italian Ministry of Finance" (page 4 of the defence).

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Annex I to Directive 80/767/EEC lays down the list of "purchasing entities" or "contracting authorities" which are required, when they conclude a public supply contract, to comply with the rules laid down by the directive and, in particular, the prohibition of discrimination on the ground of nationality.

The Italian Ministry of Finance is included in that list. A footnote relating to that Ministry states : "Not including purchases made by the tobacco and salt monopolies ".

It seems to me that two conclusions may be drawn from Annex I.

The first is that the AAMS is an adjunct of the Ministry of Finance, as the Italian Government rightly points out. However, it has also been seen that the AAMS, as its name indicates, enjoys a large measure of autonomy and has a budget separate from that of the Ministry.

The second conclusion which may be drawn from that list is that contracts entered into by the AAMS are not of the same type as those entered into by the Ministry of Finance itself because if they were, they would not be excluded. That tends to prove that the AAMS pursues activities which differ in nature from the traditional activities of the Ministries. Having regard to what is known above on the status and activities of the AAMS, it may be concluded that the contracts it enters into are of the same type as those awarded by a private industrial or commercial undertaking.

4 . Consequences of the proposition that the directive is inapplicable

Finally, the issue may usefully be clarified by considering the implications of a judgment of the Court in which it was held that a body such as the AAMS did not come within the scope of Directive 80/723 .

(a)*If it were to decide that a body which offers goods or services on the market can never be regarded as an undertaking if it does not itself have legal personality, the Court would be abandoning first of all the economic or functional interpretation which it has given to the term "undertaking" in the context of the EEC Treaty.

Secondly, it would call into question the uniform application of Directive 80/723 in all the Member States.

It can be seen from a comparative analysis of the actual situation in the various Member States that the legal forms in which the public authorities, that is to say, the State or local authorities, carry out economic activities are very varied. They vary from one Member State to another and within each Member State, and also vary in time, in accordance with prevailing national legislation and policies. The choice of one form or another does not necessarily reflect objective criteria but is often a function of political or historical considerations or even of simple expediency or convenience of management .

By making possession of a separate legal personality a necessary criterion for the existence of a public undertaking, the AAMS would be excluded from the scope of Directive 80/723 but the "Service d' exploitation industrielle des tabacs et des allumettes" (Seita), which exercises a similar activity in France, would continue to come within the scope of that directive.

The Danish railways, which constitute a Directorate-General of a Ministry, would be subject to the directive whereas the Deutsche Bundesbahn (German Federal Railways), established in the form of a "special fund" "Sondervermoegen" and enjoying a certain autonomy of management without having legal personality, would not be affected.(11)

For the same reason, the Deutsche Bundespost (German Federal Post Office) would not be subject to the directive whereas the Régie des postes and the Régie des télégraphes et des téléphones in Belgium, established as State bodies with legal personality but subject to the supervision of the Ministry concerned, would come within the scope of the directive. Furthermore, it is interesting to note in this connection that, until the beginning of the 1970s, the Belgian postal administration was regarded as a State undertaking and, for that reason, although carrying out exactly the same activities and also coming under the authority of the Minister concerned, did not have its own legal personality.

It is also interesting to note that in Belgium, gas and electricity are sometimes distributed at the municipal level through municipal bodies established under local government law and managed separately from the general services of the municipality without, however, having separate legal personality. At the intermunicipal level, the same services are provided by public law associations which do have legal personality .

In Italy, differences appear to exist even within the category of "Amministrazioni autonome" of the State. Certain have legal personality while others, such as the AAMS do not. One writer (12) also indicates that the latter could be transformed into a "ente pubblico di gestione", a category having legal personality.

Those examples clearly emphasize that at the Community level the expression "public undertaking", which must necessarily have a uniform meaning, cannot be defined by reference to the different legal concepts of the national legal systems. For the purposes of defining the concept of an "undertaking" within the meaning of Community competition law and the expression "public undertaking" within the meaning of Directive 80/723, greater importance must therefore be attached to function than to form.

(b)*If the Court were to decide that Directive 80/723, as presently drafted, does not cover State bodies which do not have legal personality and that therefore the AAMS does not come within the scope of the directive, the Commission would probably consider itself compelled to amend it.

Such an amendment would undoubtedly take the form of a provision such as the following :

> '" Public undertakings' within the meaning of this directive includes State bodies which offer, for consideration, goods or services on the market, even if those bodies do not have a legal personality separate from that of the State."

However, as we have seen, the Italian Government states that "in order for the public authorities to be able to exercise influence over a public undertaking, both must have a distinct legal personality" and that "it can be seen from the very nature of the financial relations the transparency of which must be ensured that such relations exist and must exist between separate legal persons ".

That government would therefore probably raise the same objections to the new version of the directive as it raised to the previous one and we would be back where we started.

(c)*Faced with such a situation, some might ask whether it is really necessary that the directive should apply to "imprese-organo ". Don' t Articles 92 and 93 of the Treaty already permit the Commission to supervise aid granted by the Member States?

That objection has already been raised in Joined Cases 188 to 190/80, in which it was claimed that "in the sphere of State aids Article 93 (1) empowers the Commission to keep under constant review all systems of aid in the Member States. The requirement of cooperation, read together with Article 5, would enable the Commission to ask for information if it suspected that aid had been granted but not notified : if the information was provided, the Commission could examine the measure in question; if not, it could proceed under Article 169" (France, Italy and United Kingdom v Commission ((1982)) ECR 2545 at p. 2569).

However, in its judgment in that case the Court rejected that argument and stated, in particular, that :

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

"In view of the diverse forms of public undertakings in the various Member States and the ramifications of their activities, it is inevitable that their financial relations with public authorities should themselves be very diverse, often complex and therefore difficult to supervise, even with the assistance of the sources of published information to which the applicant governments have referred . In those circumstances there is an undeniable need for the Commission to seek additional information on those relations by establishing common criteria for all the Member States and for all the undertakings in question" (paragraph 18).

For the reasons explained above, I am of the opinion that the expression "all the undertakings in question" also includes public undertakings which are State bodies and which do not have legal personality .

Conclusion

I therefore propose that the Commission' s application should be granted and that the Court should :

Declare that by refusing to supply the information requested by the Commission concerning the Amministrazione Autonoma dei Monopoli di Stato, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 5 (2) of Commission Directive 80/723 of 25 June 1980 on the transparency of financial relations between Member States and public undertakings;

Order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Klagenævnet for Udbud

RESUMÉER AF AFGØRELSER OM UDBUD FRA EU-DOMSTOLEN (tidligere EF-domstolen) OG RETTEN I FØRSTE INSTANS FRA OG MED 2009

NB! Resuméernes henvisninger til retsregler m.m. vil/kan efterhånden blive forældede, da resuméerne principielt er udarbejdet kort efter afgørelserne

Dette hæfte indeholder resuméer af de afgørelser, der er truffet af EU-domstolen (til 31. december 2009 benævnt EF-domstolen) og Retten i Første Instans inden for udbudsområdet fra og med 2009, og som er optaget på De Europæiske Fællesskabers Domstols websted på Internettet http://curia.eu.int/.

Resuméerne er udarbejdet af Klagenævnet for Udbud, der har ansvaret for dem alene.

Den dato, der angives ved begyndelsen af hvert resumé, er datoen for den pågældende afgørelse. Den betegnelse for sagen, der angives ved hvert resumé, er afgørelsens officielle betegnelse, sådan som den er angivet på Internettet.

Særligt om afgørelserne fra Retten i Første Instans bemærkes:

Afgørelserne om udbud fra Retten i Første Instans angår udbud foretaget af EU-organerne, dvs. Kommissionen, Rådet og Parlamentet mfl., idet Retten i Første Instans er klageorgan vedrørende sådanne udbud.

For EU-organernes udbud gælder nogle regler, der er indeholdt i to forordninger, dels »Finansforordningen«, dvs. Rådets forordning nr. 1605/2002 med senere ændringer, dels »Gennemførelsesforordningen«, dvs. Kommissionens forordning nr. 2342/2002 med senere ændringer.

De pågældende regler svarer i det væsentlige til de udbudsregler, der gælder for de ordregivende myndigheder i medlemsstaterne. Afgørelserne om udbud fra Retten i Første Instans kan derfor have en vis almen interesse, for så vidt som de (reelt) kan bidrage til fortolkningen af de udbudsregler, der gælder for de ordregivende myndigheder i medlemsstaterne, dvs. Udbudsdirektivet og Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet m.m.

I resuméerne af afgørelser fra Retten i Første Instans er som almindelig regel kun medtaget de dele af afgørelserne, der belyser forståelsen af almindelige udbudsretlige principper. Resuméerne omfatter således principielt ikke dele af afgørelserne, der angår specifikke reguleringer af EU-organernes optræden eller formelle spørgsmål om Rettens kompetence.

NB! Resuméernes henvisninger til retsregler m.m. vil/kan efterhånden blive forældede, da resuméerne principielt er udarbejdet kort efter afgørelserne.

Indholdsfortegnelse vedrørende afgørelsernes emner

Udbyderen har en vid skønsmargen, og Rettens kontrol med en udbyder er derfor begrænset til, om reglerne er overholdt, og om udbyderens skøn er åbenbart urigtigt. Ligebehandlingsprincippet betyder, at ensartede situationer ikke må behandles forskelligt, og at uensartede situationer ikke må behandles ens, medmindre dette er objektivt begrundet. Gennemsigtighedsprincippet har til formål at sikre ligebehandlingsprincippets overholdelse og at beskytte tilbudsgiverne mod unødvendige tab, og ingen af disse formål var tilsidesat 7

Indkøbsdirektivet og direktivet om medicinsk udstyr overtrådt ved nogle græske sygehuses afvisning af EF-mærket medicinsk udstyr 8

Belgien havde ikke implementeret Udbudsdirektivet fyldestgørende 9

En medlemsstat kan fastsætte andre udelukkelsesgrunde end dem, der er angivet i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, med det formål at sikre overholdelsen af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed, under forudsætning af, at de nationalt fastsatte udelukkelsesgrunde er i overensstemmelse med proportionalitetsprincippet. En italiensk lovbestemmelse, hvorefter virksomheder med et indbyrdes kontrolforhold ubetinget skulle udelukkes, var i strid med proportionalitetsprincippet 9

Udbyderens oplysning om de samlede pointtal, der ved tilbudsvurderingen var tildelt sagsøgerens tilbud og den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud, var ikke tilstrækkelig oplysning om det valgte tilbuds karakteristika og relative fordele. Tilbudsprisen i den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud var blandt dette tilbuds karakteristika og relative fordele, hvorfor udbyderen havde været uberettiget til at nægte at oplyse den 10

Om en udbyders ret til at annullere et udbud og om retsvirkningerne af en sådan annullation 12

En undtagelsesbestemmelse i det tidligere forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektiv om fritagelse for udbudspligten, hvis alle tilbud er uantagelige, skulle fortolkes snævert, og bevisbyrden påhviler den, der påberåber sig en sådan undtagelsesbestemmelse. Bestemmelsens betingelser var imidlertid opfyldt i det foreliggende tilfælde. Ordregiverens meddelelse af begrundelsen for afvisning af et tilbud efter ca. to måneder opfyldte ikke et krav i direktivet om, at begrundelsen skulle gives hurtigst muligt 13

Nogle offentlige myndigheder kunne uden EU-udbud indgå en aftale om forbrænding af renovation. Et samarbejde mellem offentlige myndigheder er ikke i strid med udbudsreglerne, når samarbejdet kun varetager offentlige formål under overholdelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet, således at ingen privat virksomhed får en konkurrencefordel 14

En national regel om, at en 10-dages frist mellem ordregiverens meddelelse om tildelingsbeslutningen og kontraktsindgåelsen i hastetilfælde kan forkortes i forhold til situationens krav, var ikke i strid med kontroldirektiverne som affattet før ændringerne ved direktiv 2007/66. En national regel om, at klage først kan indgives på et nærmere angivet tidspunkt efter forhåndsorientering til ordregiveren om, at der vil blive klaget, var derimod i strid med kontroldirektiverne 16

Retten i Første Instans har ikke kompetence til at tage stilling til, om en national regel strider mod EU-retten. En forbigået tilbudsgiver havde ikke retlig interesse i at klage over tildelingsbeslutningen, da tilbudsgiverens tilbud ikke kunne komme i betragtning, fordi det ikke opfyldte et krav i udbudsbetingelserne 18

Klage over, at den valgte tilbudsgiver ikke overholdt udbudsbetingelsernes krav, ikke taget til følge, da klagen angik den valgte tilbudsgivers overholdelse af kontrakten med udbyderen og ikke udbyderens tildelingsbeslutning. Om betingelserne for, at der foreligger virksomhedsoverdragelse ved udbud af tjenesteydelser. Ligebehandlingsprincippet har til formål at sikre en sund konkurrence, og gennemsigtighedsprincippet har til formål at undgå favorisering, Udbyderens oplysning til en forbigået tilbudsgiver om hvem, der var valgt som tilbudsgiver, og om de points, som den forbigåede tilbudsgiver og den valgte tilbudsgiver havde fået ved tilbudsvurderingen, var tilstrækkelig begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen. En tilbudsgiver behøver ikke have de nødvendige medarbejdere ved tilbuddets afgivelse. Udbyderen havde pligt til efter anmodning at give en forbigået tilbudsgiver oplysning om hvem, der havde foretaget tilbudsvurderingen. Om betingelserne for erstatning 20

Begrebet tjenesteydelseskoncession er det samme i Udbudsdirektivet og Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet. Det er tilstrækkeligt for at anse en kontrakt for en tjenesteydelseskoncession i henhold til Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet, at ordregiveren ikke betaler vederlag til tjenesteyderen, og at tjenesteyderen får vederlaget fra tredjemand, under forudsætning af, at ordregiverens driftsrisiko eller en væsentlig del af den overføres til tjenesteyderen, også selvom denne risiko er meget begrænset som følge af offentlig regulering 22

Om betingelserne for at anse et selskab for in house i forhold til en ordregivende myndighed. Kontrolkriteriet er opfyldt, når selskabets aktiviteter er begrænset til de ejende ordregivende myndigheders område, og når de ejende ordregivende myndigheder udøver en bestemmende indflydelse på selskabets strategiske målsætninger og vigtige beslutninger. Den blotte mulighed for privat deltagelse i selskabet er ikke til hinder for at anse kontrolkriteriet for opfyldt 24

Nogle ordregivende myndigheder kunne uden forudgående offentliggørelse give et selskab koncession på udførelse af en tjenesteydelse, selvom selskabet havde privat deltagelse og derfor ikke kunne være in house, idet den private deltager i selskabet var fundet gennem et EU-udbud 26

Der kunne ikke uden udbud indgås kontrakt om et it-system til registrering af motorkøretøjer, selvom det hidtidige it-system var brudt sammen, da betingelserne i de påberåbte undtagelser fra udbudspligten (at det nye it-system kun kunne leveres af én leverandør, streng nødvendighed) ikke var opfyldt. Undtagelser fra udbudspligten skal fortolkes snævert, og den, der påberåber sig en sådan undtagelse, har bevisbyrden for, at betingelserne er opfyldt 28

En lejekontrakt om en ordregivende myndigheds leje af nogle bygninger, der ifølge lejekontrakten skulle opføres af udlejeren i overensstemmelse med den ordregivende myndigheds anvisninger, var en udbudspligtig bygge- og anlægskontrakt 29

Principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed betyder, at tilbudsgivere og potentielle tilbudsgivere skal have ens chancer. Det var i strid med ligebehandlingsprincippet, at udbudsbekendtgørelsen besværliggjorde visse potentielle udenlandske tilbudsgiveres mulighed for at dokumentere deres kvalifikationer. Kriterier, der i det væsentlige angår tilbudsgivernes evne til at udføre den udbudte opgave, kan ikke anvendes som underkriterier 30

En særlig fransk fremgangsmåde ved ordregivende myndigheders tildeling af kontrakter var i strid med Udbudsdirektivet 31

Udbyderens indhentning af supplerende oplysninger fra nogle tilbudsgivere om deres tilbuds prismæssige sammensætning var ikke i strid med forhandlingsforbuddet eller ligebehandlingsprincippet. Indhentningen af de supplerende oplysninger kunne ske efter, at en forbigået tilbudsgiver i standstill-perioden havde protesteret mod udbyderens tildelingsbeslutning, idet standstill-reglerne ellers ville være uden indhold, ligesom udbyderen kunne ændre tildelingsbeslutningen på grundlag af de supplerende oplysninger. Almindelige fællesskabsretlige principper, herunder proportionalitetsprincippet, kan føre til en

pligt for en udbyder til at indhente supplerende oplysninger fra tilbudsgiverne i visse tilfælde 32

Nogle italienske lovregler om, at et konsortium og et medlem af konsortiet ikke kan afgive tilbud under samme udbud, var i strid med fællesskabsrettens grundlæggende principper, herunder proportionalitetsprincippet. Traktatens grundlæggende principper, navnlig ligebehandlingsprincippet, gælder for udbud under tærskelværdien under forudsætning af, at der foreligger en grænseoverskridende interesse. Medlemsstaterne har en vis skønsmargin med hensyn til, hvorledes overholdelsen af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed skal sikres, men proportionalitetsprincippet skal overholdes..... 34

At et organ modtager offentlig finansiering eller statsstøtte, er ikke i sig selv til hinder for, at organet afgiver tilbud under et EU-udbud. National ret må ikke udelukke universiteter o.l., der ikke driver virksomhed med gevinst for øje, og som har ret til at tilbyde udførelse af tjenesteydelser, fra at afgive tilbud under EU-udbud vedrørende de pågældende tjenesteydelser..... 36

En national klagefrist skal først løbe fra det tidspunkt, hvor klageren kendte eller burde kende den påberåbte overtrædelse af udbudsreglerne..... 37

Det var i strid med 1. kontroldirektiv, at en udbyder ikke gav tilbudsgiver E underretning om udbyderens beslutning om at indgå kontrakt med tilbudsgiver C, men kun havde givet E underretning om udbyderens forudgående beslutning om at indlede forhandlinger med C. Det var desuden i strid med 1. kontroldirektiv, at en national regel om klagefrist blev anvendt på andre beslutninger end dem, som reglen udtrykkeligt angik, ligesom det var i strid med 1. kontroldirektiv, at reglen var formuleret på en måde, der gav anledning til retsusikkerhed..... 38

Der må ikke anvendes delkriterier, som ikke er oplyst på forhånd, men en udbyder kan under visse betingelser uden forudgående oplysning anvende »vægtningskoofficienter« vedrørende underkriterierne. Det var beklageligt, at udbyderen ikke havde sikret sig bevis for tidspunktet for afsendelsen af en uddybende begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen, som en tilbudsgiver havde anmodet om, men forholdet havde ikke påvirket tilbudsgiverens retsstilling. Udbyderen havde uberettiget taget et tilbud i betragtning, selvom tilbuddet ikke som krævet i udbudsbetingelserne var afsendt med anbefalet brev senest på dagen for tilbudsfristens udløb, idet en postkvittering og en erklæring fra en postfunktionær af nærmere angivne grunde ikke kunne sidestilles med dokumentation for et anbefalet brev. Udbyderen var ikke forpligtet til at indgå kontrakt med den eneste konditionsmæssige tilbudsgiver, men kunne i stedet annullere udbuddet..... 39

En deltager i konsortium, der ikke var en juridisk person, kunne anlægge sag vedrørende et udbud, som konsortiet havde afgivet tilbud under. Diverse klagepunkter ikke taget til følge..... 42

Udbudsdirektivet omfatter ikke salg af fast ejendom og omfatter kun gensidigt bebyrdende aftaler. For at en aftale kan anses for gensidigt bebyrdende, skal den give den ordregivende myndighed en økonomisk fordel. Opfyldelsen af en generel byplanmæssig interesse er ikke en sådan økonomisk fordel, og direktivet omfatter ikke, at en ordregivende myndighed udøver sine beføjelser som planmyndighed. Begrebet koncession forudsætter, at der overføres råderet fra koncessionsgiveren til koncessionshaveren, og at koncessionshaveren har i hvert fald en væsentlig del af risikoen. Denne risiko skal være forbundet med driften, hvilket ikke er tilfældet med hensyn til den risiko, der følger af planmyndighedens dispositioner. Tidsubegrænsede koncessioner er formentlig i strid med EU-retten..... 43

Resuméer

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 28. januar 2009, sag T-125/06, Centro Studio Manieri mod Rådet

Udbyderen har en vid skønsmargen, og Rettens kontrol med en udbyder er derfor begrænset til, om reglerne er overholdt, og om udbyderens skøn er åbenbart urigtigt. Ligebehandlingsprincippet betyder, at ensartede situationer ikke må behandles forskelligt, og at uensartede situationer ikke må behandles ens, medmindre dette er objektivt begrundet. Gennemsigtighedsprincippet har til formål at sikre ligebehandlingsprincippets overholdelse og at beskytte tilbudsgiverne mod unødvendige tab, og ingen af disse formål var tilsidesat

Rådet iværksatte et begrænset udbud vedrørende drift af en vuggestue, og der indkom tilbud fra flere prækvalificerede virksomheder. Efter tilbuddenes modtagelse indledte Rådet forhandlinger om den udbudte opgaves udførelse med OIB, dvs. en institution, der hører under Kommissionen, og som har til funktion at sørge for visse velfærdsydelser til medarbejdere. OIB havde ikke afgivet tilbud i henhold til udbuddet. Rådet orienterede ikke tilbudsgiverne om forhandlingerne med OIB, men ca. et år efter tilbuddenes modtagelse annullerede Rådet udbuddet med henvisning til, at Rådet havde besluttet at tildele den udbudte opgave til OIB. I forbindelse hermed indgik Rådet en aftale med OIB om opgavens udførelse.

En af tilbudsgiverne anlagde sag mod Rådet ved Retten i Første Instans med påstand om annullation af Rådets annullation af udbuddet og af Rådets beslutning om at tildele opgaven til OIB.

Sagsøgeren gjorde en række forskellige anbringender gældende, herunder at Rådet havde overtrådt princippерne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed m.m.

Rådet blev imidlertid frifundet. Fra dommens præmisser kan nævnes følgende udtalelser af almen interesse:

Rådet kunne tildele OIB opgaven uden forudgående udbud, da aftalen mellem Rådet og OIB var en aftale mellem to af fællesskabsinstitutionernes tjenestegrene, og da sådanne aftaler ifølge en bestemmelse i Gennemførelsesforordningen er undtaget fra udbudspligten (præmis 53, jf. præmis 45).

Rådets henvisning ved annullationen af udbuddet til, at Rådet havde besluttet at tildele OIB opgaven, opfyldte et almindeligt princip om, at EU-organernes afgørelser skal begrundes (præmis 60-61).

Et anbringende fra sagsøgeren om, at Rådets beslutning om at tildele OIB opgaven byggede på et urigtigt skøn, kunne ikke tages til følge. Retten henviste til, at en institution, der har iværksat et udbud, har en vid skønsmargen, og at Rettens kontrol derfor er begrænset til, om reglerne er overholdt og om udbyderens skøn er åbenbart urigtigt. Det var imidlertid ikke godtgjort, at Rådets beslutning om at tildele OIB opgaven byggede på et åbenbart urigtigt skøn (præmis 62). I samme præmis yderligere henvist til, at Rådet ikke over for en tilbudsgiver havde pligt til at bevise fordelene ved at gennemføre de omhandlede tjenesteydelser ved anvendelse af egne ressourcer.

Rådet havde ikke overtrådt ligebehandlingsprincippet ved at tildele OIB opgaven, selvom OIB ikke havde afgivet tilbud i henhold til udbuddet. Ligebehandlingsprincippet betyder, at ensartede situationer ikke må behandles forskelligt, og at uensartede situationer ikke må behandles ens, medmindre dette er objektivt begrundet. Da OIB var en tjenestegren under en af fællesskabsinstitutionerne, kunne OIB imidlertid ikke sammenlignes med en tilbudsgiver. (Præmis 82-83).

Gennemsigtighedsprincippet medfører pligt for en ordregivende myndigheder til at offentliggøre præcise oplysninger om hele udbudsprocedurens forløb, og sagsøgeren fik ikke før ved Rådets annullation af udbuddet underretning om forhandlingerne mellem Rådet og OIB (præmis 87-88). Gennemsigtighedsprincippet har imidlertid til formål dels at sikre, at alle tilbudsgivere får lige chancer, dels at beskytte tilbudsgiverne mod tab som følge af tilbudsafgivningen, og sagsøgeren havde ikke godtgjort, at Rådet havde tilsidesat nogen af disse formål. Dels var tilbudsgiverne blevet behandlet lige, idet ingen af dem havde fået underretning om forhandlingerne mellem Rådet og OIB, dels havde sagsøgeren ikke haft udgifter ud over de risici, der er forbundet med at deltage i en udbudsprocedure (præmis 89-90).

Direktiv 93/42 om medicinsk udstyr går i hovedtræk ud på at etablere en EF-mærkning, således at medlemsstaterne ikke må hindre markedsføring og ibrugtagning af medicinsk udstyr, der er forsynet med EF-mærkningen. En medlemsstat kan dog under visse betingelser forbyde markedsføring og brug af EF-mærket medicinsk udstyr. Medlemsstaten skal i så fald følge en nærmere fastsat fremgangsmåde.

Sagen angik forskellige EU-udbud, der var iværksat af et antal græske sygehuse i henhold til det dagældende Indkøbsdirektiv 93/36, vedrørende indkøb af medicinsk udstyr. I udbuddene henvistes i overensstemmelse med Indkøbsdirektivets regler om tekniske specifikationer til ordningen om EF-mærkning af medicinsk udstyr. Ikke desto mindre afviste udbyderne tilbud om forskelligt EF-mærket udstyr under henvisning til den offentlige sundhed, uden at fremgangsmåden i henhold til direktivet om medicinsk udstyr blev fulgt. Det fremgår, at den græske stat flere gange over for sygehusene havde indskærpet reglerne om EF-mærkning, uden at dette havde ført til, at reglerne altid blev overholdt, ligesom den græske stat havde overvejelser om at indføre sanktioner mod sygehuse, der ikke overholdt reglerne.

EF-domstolen konstaterede ved dommen, at sygehusenes omtalte afvisning af tilbud om EF-mærket medicinsk udstyr, uden at fremgangsmåden i henhold til direktivet om medicinsk udstyr var blevet fulgt, var i strid med Indkøbsdirektivet og med direktivet om medicinsk udstyr.

Sagen minder om sagen C-6/05, Medipac-Kazantzkis, der blev afgjort ved EF-domstolens dom af 14. juni 2007, og som angik EF-mærkede suturartikler.

EF-domstolens dom af 23. april 2009, sag C-292/07, Kommissionen mod Belgien

Belgien havde ikke implementeret Udbudsdirektivet fyldestgørende

Ved denne dom fastslog EF-domstolen, at Belgien ikke havde foretaget en fyldestgørende implementering af forskellige bestemmelser i Udbudsdirektivet.

Refereres ikke, da dommen ikke skønnes at have almen interesse.

EF-domstolens dom af 19. maj 2009, sag C-538/07, Assitur

En medlemsstat kan fastsætte andre udelukkelsesgrunde end dem, der er angivet i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, med det formål at sikre overholdelsen af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed, under forudsætning af, at de nationalt fastsatte udelukkelsesgrunde er i overensstemmelse med proportionalitetsprincippet. En italiensk lovbestemmelse, hvorefter virksomheder med et indbyrdes kontrolforhold ubetinget skulle udelukkes, var i strid med proportionalitetsprincippet

En bestemmelse i den italienske lov om offentlige kontrakter angik virksomheder med et indbyrdes »kontrolforhold«, dvs. et indbyrdes forhold gående ud på, at den ene virksomhed udøvede en dominerende indflydelse på den anden virksomhed, fx ved at besidde flertallet af de stemmeberettigede aktier i den m.m. Ifølge bestemmelsen skulle virksomheder med et sådant indbyrdes kontrolforhold udelukkes fra deltagelse i samme udbudsprocedure. Bestemmelsen havde til formål at sikre konkurrencen ved at undgå aftaler mellem tilbudsgivere.

Sagen angik en italiensk ordregivende myndigheds udbud af postbefordring. Der indkom tilbud fra tre tilbudsgivere. En af tilbudsgiverne, A, gjorde over for ordregiveren gældende, at der bestod et kontrolforhold mellem de to andre tilbudsgivere, og at de derfor skulle udelukkes. Ordregiveren gav ikke A medhold heri bl.a. med henvisning til, at den omtalte lovbestemmelse efter ordregiverens opfattelse ikke var gældende for udbuddet, og ordregiveren besluttede at indgå kontrakt med en af de to andre tilbudsgivere. A anlagde derefter sag ved en forvaltningsdomstol med påstand om annullation af tildelingsbeslutningen.

Forvaltningsdomstolen lagde til grund, at den omtalte lovbestemmelse var gældende for udbuddet, men var i tvivl med hensyn til, om bestemmelsen var i overensstemmelse med reglen om udelukkelsesgrunde i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 29 (den tilsvarende regel i Udbudsdirektivet er artikel 45). Forvaltningsdomstolen forelagde derfor sagen for EF-domstolen med et spørgsmål, der kan gengives således:

Er angivelsen af udelukkelsesgrunde i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 29 udtømmende, således at den italienske lovbestemmelse om udelukkelse af virksomheder med et indbyrdes kontrolforhold er i strid med artikel 29?

EF-domstolens udtalelser kan kort gengives således:

Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 29 er ikke til hinder for, at en medlemsstat fastsætter andre udelukkelsesgrunde end dem, der er angivet i bestemmelsen med det formål at sikre overholdelsen af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed. Det er imidlertid en forudsætning, at sådanne nationalt fastsatte udelukkelsesgrunde ikke går videre end nødvendigt for at opfylde dette formål. Det afgørende var derfor, om den ita-lienske lovbestemmelse var i overensstemmelse med proportionalitetsprincippet (præmis 23-24).

Den italienske lovbestemmelse gik imidlertid videre end nødvendigt for at opfylde formålet om at sikre overholdelsen af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed, idet lovbestemmelsen også omfattede tilfælde, hvor et indbyrdes kontrolforhold ikke har nogen indflydelse på de pågældende virksomheders adfærd, og idet lovbestemmelsen ikke gav virksomhederne mulighed for at godtgøre, at der ikke forelå reel risiko for krænkelse af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed. Dette var i strid med proportionalitetsprincippet (præmis 29-30).

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter spørgsmålet i overensstemmelse med det anførte.

Afgørelsen svarer reelt ganske til EF-domstolens dom af 16. december 2008, Michaniki, om udelukkelsesgrundene i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, og dommen henviser også til bl.a. Michaniki-dommen.

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 20. maj 2009, sag T-89/07, VIP Car Solutions mod Parlamentet

Udbyderens oplysning om de samlede pointtal, der ved tilbudsvurderingen var tildelt sagsøgerens tilbud og den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud, var ikke tilstrækkelig oplysning om det valgte tilbuds karakteristika og relative fordele. Tilbudsprisen i den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud var blandt dette tilbuds karakteristika og relative fordele, hvorfor udbyderen havde været uberettiget til at nægte at oplyse den

Finansforordningen og Gennemførelsesforordningen indeholder nogle regler om EU-organernes underretning til tilbudsgivere om tildelingsbeslutninger m.m. Disse regler svarer i det væsentlige til de tilsvarende regler i Udbudsdirektivets artikel 41. Bl.a. skal EU-organerne på begæring give forbigåede tilbudsgivere oplysning om det antagne tilbuds karakteristika og relative fordele (tilsvarende Udbudsdirektivets artikel 41, stk. 2, 3. afsnit).

Sagen angik et udbud iværksat af Parlamentet vedrørende persontransport. Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud på grundlag af følgende underkriterier, der vægtedes som angivet: 1. pris (55 %), 2. køretøjer stillet til rådighed, kvantitativt og kvalitativt (30 %), 3. køretøjernes miljøforhold (7 %), 4. social politik over for de anvendte medarbejdere (6 %) og 5. præsentation af tilbuddet (2 %).

Efter tilbuddenes modtagelse besluttede Parlamentet at indgå kontrakt med en af tilbudsgiverne og gav de andre tilbudsgivere underretning herom alene med den begrundelse, at deres tilbud ikke var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige.

En af de forbigåede tilbudsgivere, V, anmodede Parlamentet om oplysning om det valgte tilbuds karakteristika og relative fordele. Efter ar V havde rykket for svar, besvarede Parlamentet anmodningen ved et brev, i hvilket Parlamentet oplyste den valgte tilbudsgivers identitet og desuden blot angav, at det valgte tilbud ved tilbudsvurderingen havde opnået 566 points, hvorimod V's tilbud trods en lidt lavere pris havde opnået 504 points og derved var blevet placeret som nr. 2.

V anmodede derefter Parlamentet om en kopi af den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud. V begrundede anmodningen med, at V ønskede at få oplysning om den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbudspris. V henviste herved til, at V's tilbudspris var særdeles lav.

Parlamentet afslog denne anmodning med henvisning til en regel i Finansforordningen, hvorefter bl.a. oplysninger, der vil skade offentlige eller private interesser, kan undlades (reglen svarer til Udbudsdirektivets artikel 41, stk. 3). Parlamentet henviste yderligere bl.a. til, at der efter indgåelse af kontrakten med den valgte tilbudsgiver ville blive optaget oplysning om kontrakten i EF-Tidende med angivelse af kontraktprisen.

V anlagde derefter sag ved Retten i Første Instans med påstand om annullation af tildelingsbeslutningen og om erstatning m.m.

V gjorde under retssagen to anbringender gældende, dels at Parlamentets begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen ikke var fyldestgørende, dels at Parlamentet havde været uberettiget til at nægte at oplyse den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbudspris.

Efter sagsanlægget redegjorde Parlamentet udførligt over for Retten for tilbudsvurderingen, herunder for, hvorledes der var blevet givet tilbuddene points i relation til de enkelte underkriterier. Fra disse oplysninger, der er gengivet i dommen, kan nævnes:

V's tilbudspris var 31,70 Euro pr. time, og at den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbudspris var 37,50 Euro pr. time. Dette havde ført til, at V's tilbud var blevet tildelt 343,5 points vedrørende underkriterium 1. pris, mens den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud havde fået tildelt 290,4 points vedrørende dette underkriterium.

Med hensyn til underkriterium 2. køretøjer stillet til rådighed, kvalitativt og kvantitativt, havde Parlamentet foretaget særskilte vurderinger af det kvantitative og det kvalitative, dvs. af de tilbudte køretøjers antal henholdsvis kvalitet. Med hensyn til det kvantitative fik den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud 120 points og V's tilbud 70 points. Dette skyldtes, at V i modsætning til den valgte tilbudsgiver ikke selv ejede de fleste af de køretøjer, der ville blive stillet til rådighed, men ville leje dem hos et andet selskab. Med hensyn til det kvalitative fik V's tilbud og den valgte tilbudsgivernes tilbud begge 60 points.

Med hensyn til resten af underkriterierne fik V's tilbud med forskellige begrundelser et lavere pointtal end den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud.

Den anvendte evalueringsmodel forekommer noget kompliceret, og ovenstående refereret har langt fra medtaget enkelthederne i evalueringsmodellen. Til illustration kan nævnes, at pointtildelingen vedrørende underkriterium 1. pris skete ud fra følgende princip:

Der blev givet points efter en skala fra 0 til 10. En pris på 33 Euro pr. time blev anset for rimelig og udløste 6 points. Fx V's tilbud fik herefter tildelt points efter følgende formel: (33/31,7) x 6 x 55 =343,5.

Fra Rettens præmisser kan nævnes:

Ad V's anbringende om, at Parlamentets begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen ikke var fyldestgørende:

Parlamentets oplysning over for V om de samlede pointtal, der var blevet tildelt V's tilbud og den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud, var ikke en oplysning om det antagne tilbuds karakteristika og relative fordele og havde ikke givet V klare og utvetydige oplysninger om Parlamentets begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen. Sådanne oplysninger havde ikke mindst været nødvendige som følge af, at prisen vægtede med 55 %. (Præmis 69-71). Parlamentets begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen havde således ikke været fyldestgørende (præmis 78).

Ad V's anbringende om, at Parlamentet havde været uberettiget til at nægte at oplyse den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbudspris over for V:

Tilbudsprisen i det valgte tilbud var et af dette tilbuds karakteristika og relative fordele. Parlamentet havde derfor haft pligt til at give V oplysning om den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbudspris, ikke mindst fordi tilbudsprisen vægtede med 55 % (præmis 88). Parlamentet havde endvidere ikke nærmere begrundet et synspunkt om, at oplysningen ville være til skade for den valgte tilbudsgiver, og Parlamentet havde da også henvist til, at tilbudsprisen var blevet offentliggjort i angivelsen i EF-Tidende om kontraktsindgåelsen (præmis 91). Parlamentet havde således været uberettiget til at nægte at oplyse den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbudspris over for V (præmis 93).

Retten annullerede Parlamentets beslutning om at indgå kontrakt med den valgte tilbudsgiver (præmis 94). V's øvrige påstande blev derimod ikke taget til følge (præmis 95-112).

Følgende bemærkes:

En identisk sag for Klagenævnet for Udbud ville formentlig være blevet koncentreret om eller i hvert fald have medinddraget spørgsmålet, om udbyderen havde overtrådt principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed ved tilbudsvurderingen. Fx forekommer det umiddelbart noget tvivlsomt, om udbyderen var berettiget til at lægge vægt på, at de fleste af V's køretøjer var lejede.

At dommen ikke forholder sig til disse spørgsmål, hænger formentlig sammen med Rettens procesform.

Retten i Første Instans' kendelse af 2. juni 2009, sag T-254/08, AVLUX mod Parlamentet

Om en udbyders ret til at annullere et udbud og om retsvirkningerne af en sådan annullation

Parlamentet iværksatte et udbud vedrørende en tjenesteydelse. Efter tilbuddenes modtagelse besluttede Parlamentet at indgå kontrakt med en af tilbudsgiverne. En anden tilbudsgiver, A, protesterede over for Parlamentet mod tildelingsbeslutningen, og der var herefter en korrespondance mellem A og Parlamentet. Under korrespondancen anlagde A sag mod Parlamentet med påstand om annullation af tildelingsbeslutningen.

Parlamentet annullerede derefter udbuddet tilsyneladende med begrundelse, at ingen af tilbuddene opfyldte udbudsbetingelsernes krav. I forbindelse hermed nedlagde Parlamentet for Retten påstand om, at Retten traf afgørelse om ikke at tage stilling[1] til A's påstand.

A overlod det til Rettens afgørelse, om Retten skulle følge Parlamentets påstand, men påstod sig tillagt sagsomkostninger og nedlagde desuden en påstand om, at Retten skulle forbeholde A enhver rettighed i sagens anledning.

Retten henviste til en regel i Finansforordningen, hvorefter en ordregivende myndighed kan undlade at indgå kontrakt i henhold til et udbud eller kan annullere et udbud, uden at tilbudsgivere eller ansøgere om prækvalifikation kan fremsætte erstatningskrav i den anledning (præmis 23).

[1] Dvs. at Retten afsagde en »non-lieu à statuer«, dvs. »afgørelse om ikke at statuere«. Der er tale om en særlig afgørelsesform, der synes overtaget fra fransk procesret, og som ikke er det samme som afvisning. Klagenævnet for Udbud bruger efter omstændighederne reelt en tilsvarende afgørelsesform, for så vidt som Klagenævnet i en del kendelser har udtalt, at Klagenævnet ikke tog stilling til den eller den påstand.

Retten henviste desuden til forskellige tidligere afgørelser, herunder EF-domstolens kendelse af 16. oktober 2003 i sag C-244/02, Kauppatalo Hansel, hvor EF-domstolen i overensstemmelse med nogle tidligere afgørelser bl.a. udtalte, at det ikke er en betingelse for en udbyders annullation af et udbud, at der er tale om et undtagelsestilfælde, eller at der foreligger vægtige grunde (samme præmis). Retten henviste videre bl.a. til, at en annullation af Parlamentets tildelingsbeslutning ville være uden retsvirkning som følge af Parlamentets annullation af udbuddet (præmis 25).

Retten traf herefter afgørelse om ikke at tage stilling til A's påstand (præmis 29), men pålagde Parlamentet at betale sagens omkostninger (præmis 33). Retten afviste A's påstand om at forbeholde A enhver rettighed i sagens anledning (præmis 27-28).

EF-domstolens dom af 4. juni 2009, sag C-250/07, Kommissionen mod Grækenland

En undtagelsesbestemmelse i det tidligere forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektiv om fritagelse for udbudspligten, hvis alle tilbud er uantagelige, skulle fortolkes snævert, og bevisbyrden påhviler den, der påberåber sig en sådan undtagelsesbestemmelse. Bestemmelsens betingelser var imidlertid opfyldt i det foreliggende tilfælde. Ordregiverens meddelelse af begrundelsen for afvisning af et tilbud efter ca. to måneder opfyldte ikke et krav i direktivet om, at begrundelsen skulle gives hurtigst muligt

Efter artikel 20, stk. 2, a, i det tidligere forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektiv 93/38 kunne en ordregiver undlade at foretage udbud, herunder hvis der under et udbud ikke var afgivet noget antageligt bud, under forudsætning af, at de oprindelige kontraktsbetingelser ikke ændredes væsentligt. (Artikel 20, stk. 2, indeholdt også forskellige andre undtagelsesbestemmelser om tilfælde, hvor udbud kunne undlades. Den tilsvarende regel i det nugældende forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektiv er artikel 40, stk. 3).

Efter artikel 41, stk. 4, i forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38 skulle ordregiverne hurtigst muligt efter skriftlig anmodning give en begrundelse for forkastelse af et tilbud m.m. (Den tilsvarende bestemmelse i det nugældende forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektiv er artikel 49, stk. 2, der er noget anderledes udformet, og som fastsætter en frist på 15 dage fra den skriftlige anmodning).

Sagen angik en græsk ordregivende myndigheds EU-udbud i henhold til det tidligere forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektiv 93/38 vedrørende etablering af to elektricitetsværker. Der indkom tilbud fra 5 tilbudsgivere. Ordregiveren anså alle tilbud som uantagelige, da ingen af dem var i overensstemmelse med kravene i udbudsbetingelserne. Ordregiveren iværksatte derfor en ny tilbudsindhentning, der ikke havde karakter af tilbudsindhentning under et EU-udbud.

På et tidspunkt derefter meddelte ordregiveren uden begrundelse en af tilbudsgiverne, at dennes tilbud var blevet afvist. Knap to måneder senere og efter flere henvendelser fra tilbudsgiveren sendte ordregiveren tilbudsgiveren en skriftlig begrundelse for afvisningen.

Den omtalte tilbudsgiver indbragte sagen for en domstol, men fik ikke medhold, hvorefter ordregiveren indgik kontrakt med en anden af tilbudsgiverne.

Den først omtalte tilbudsgiver klagede til Kommissionen, der anlagde sag mod Grækenland ved EF-domstolen. Kommissionen gjorde gælden-de, at følgende forhold var en overtrædelse af det tidligere forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektiv 93/38:

1) De indkomne tilbud i henhold til EU-udbuddet kunne ikke karakteriseres som uantagelige, og ordregiveren havde derfor ved at indhente nye tilbud overtrådt direktivets artikel 20, stk. 2, a.

2) De oprindelige kontraktsbetingelser var blevet ændret væsentligt, hvilket var en yderligere overtrædelse af den nævnte bestemmelse i direktivet.

3) Ordregiveren havde yderligere overtrådt en anden af undtagelsesbestemmelserne i artikel 20, stk. 2.

4) Ordregiverens meddelelse af begrundelsen for afvisningen af den omtalte tilbudsgivers tilbud var ikke blevet sendt hurtigst muligt, hvorved ordregiveren havde overtrådt direktivets artikel 41, stk. 4.

EF-domstolens udtalelser er yderst udførlige, men kan kort gengives således:

Ad 1: Artikel 20, stk. 2, i det tidligere forsyningsvirksomhed 93/38 skal som en undtagelsesbestemmelse fortolkes snævert, og bevisbyrden påhviler den part, der påberåber sig bestemmelsen (præmis 34-39). Af nærmere angivne grunde havde ordregiveren imidlertid været berettiget til at anse tilbuddene i henhold til EU-udbuddet for uantagelige (præmis 41-50).

Ad 2: Af nærmere angivne grunde var de oprindelige kontraktsbetingelser ikke blevet ændret væsentligt (præmis 51-58), og Kommissionen havde herefter ikke godtgjort, at artikel 20, stk. 2, a var blevet overtrådt (præmis 59).

Ad 3: Grækenland havde ikke påberåbt sig den pågældende undtagelsesbestemmelse, hvorfor Kommissionen ikke kunne påberåbe sig, at den var overtrådt (præmis 60-62).

Ad 4: Da forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38 ikke angav en bestemt frist for ordregiverens oplysning om begrundelse m.m., afhang det af en konkret vurdering, om en oplysning var sendt »hurtigst muligt«. Der var imidlertid ikke fremkommet konkrete oplysninger, der kunne begrunde, at ordregiveren først havde givet begrundelsen efter 2 måneder. (Præmis 64-72).

Kommissionen fik således medhold i punkt 4, men fik ikke medhold i punkt 1-3.

Det fremgår ikke ganske, hvordan udtalelsen i præmis 59, der synes at forudsætte en bevisbyrde hos Kommissionen, skal forstås i forhold til udtalelsen i præmis 34 om, at bevisbyrden ligger hos den, der påberåber sig undtagelsesbestemmelsen i artikel 20, stk. 2.

Den danske udgave af dommen er på visse punkter inkonsistent, hvorfor referatet til dels bygger på den franske udgave.

EF-domstolens dom af 9. juni 2009, sag C-480/06, Kommissionen mod Tyskland

Nogle offentlige myndigheder kunne uden EU-udbud indgå en aftale om forbrænding af renovation. Et samarbejde mellem offentlige myndigheder er ikke i strid med udbudsreglerne, når samarbejdet kun varetager offentlige formål under overholdelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet, således at ingen privat virksomhed får en konkurrencefordel

Dommens fremstilling af sagens faktum forekommer noget lapidarisk, men faktum kan tilsyneladende gengives således:

I sidste halvdel af 1990'erne blev der projekteret og opført et nyt fjernvarmeværk i Hamburg-distriktet Rugenberger Damm. Fjernvarmeværket er et selvstændigt selskab, der ifølge dets websted på Internettet har navnet »MVR Müllvervaltung Rugenberger Damm Gmbh & Co.KG«.

(www.mvr-hh.de/Muellverbrennung-in-Hamburg.53.0.html).

Projekteringen og opførelsen blev tilsyneladende foretaget af Hamburg Kommune sammen med nogle private selskaber. I hvert fald ejes fjernvarmeværket af Hamburg Kommune sammen med nogle selskaber. I dommens præmis 36 er således angivet, at fjernvarmeværkets kapital delvis er privat, og ifølge fjenvarmeværkets websted ejes det af Hamburg Kommune med 25 %, Vattenfall Europe med 55 % og EWE Aktiengesellschaft (et tysk aktieselskab) med 20 %.

(www.mvr-hh.de/Organisation-und-Beteiligungen.51.0.html).

Fjernvarmeværkets virksomhed består i produktion af fjervarme ved forbrænding af renovation m.m.

(www.mvr-hh.de/Unsere-Aufgaben.50.0.html).

Fjernvarmeværket blev projekteret med henblik på, at det ikke alene skal aftage og forbrænde renovation fra Hamburg Kommune, men at det også skal også skal aftage og forbrænde renovation fra 4 nærmere angivne tilstødende »Landkreise« (dvs. landkredse, svarer formentlig nogenlunde til de tidligere danske amter). Som følge heraf blev der i forbindelse med projekteringen indgået en aftale mellem Hamburg Kommune og de 4 Landkreise. Denne aftale går tilsyneladende i hovedtræk ud på følgende:

Fjernvarmeværket aftager renovation fra de 4 Landkreise, der betaler for forbrændingen af renovationen efter fastsatte takster. De 4 Landkreise aftager slagger fra fjernvarmeværket til egen deponering i forhold til den renovationsmængde, som de har leveret til fjernvarmeværket. Tilsyneladende har de 4 Landkreise alene kontraktsforhold til Hamburg Kommune, der repræsenterer dem over for fjernvarmeværket, således at de ikke har noget kontraktsforhold til fjernvarmeværket. Bl.a. sker de 4 Landkreises betaling for forbrændingen af deres renovation til Hamburg Kommune, der står for viderebetaling til fjernvarmeværket. De 4 Landkreise stiller endvidere renovationsmateriel til rådighed for Hamburg Kommune i et vist omfang.

Hamburg Kommune har (naturligvis) en aftale med fjernvarmeværket, og ovenstående kan formentlig derfor udtrykkes således: Det er kun Hamburg Kommune, der er kontraktspart i forhold til fjernvarmeværket. De 4 Landkreise er derimod alene kontraktsparter i forhold til Hamburg Kommune.

Sagen var anlagt af Kommissionen, idet det efter Kommissionens opfattelse var en overtrædelse af det dagældende tjenesteydelsesdirektiv 92/50, at aftalen mellem de 4 Landkreise og Hamburg Kommune var indgået uden forudgående EU-udbud foretaget af de 4 Landkreise.

Kommissionen fik ikke medhold.

EF-domstolens udtalelser kan ikke gengives kort. Fra udtalelserne kan nævnes:

Kommissionens sagsanlæg angik alene aftalen mellem Hamburg Kommune og de 4 Landkreise og ikke aftalen mellem Hamburg Kommune og fjernvarmeværket (præmis 31). Der er tale om et samarbejde mellem offentlige myndigheder til varetagelse af en public service opgave, der er knyttet til overholdelsen af et direktiv om affaldshåndtering (præmis 37). Aftalen mellem Hamburg Kommune og de 4 Landkreise blev udelukkende indgået af offentlige myndigheder uden at foregribe udbudspligtige ydelser i forbindelse med fjernvarmeværkets opførelse og drift, og offentlige myndigheder kan udføre deres public service-opgaver i samarbejde med andre offentlige myndigheder (præmis 44-45). Det var uden betydning, at Hamburg Kommune og de 4 Landkreise ikke havde etableret et særligt offentligretligt organ til udførelsen af de omhandlede public service-opgaver, hvilket efter Kommissionens opfattelse havde været tilstrækkeligt, da fællesskabsretten ikke forpligter de offentlige myndigheder til at anvende en særlig retlig form ved udførelsen af deres public service-opgaver (præmis 46-47). Et samarbejde mellem offentlige myndigheder er endvidere ikke i strid med udbudsreglerne, når samarbejdet kun varetager offentlige formål under overholdelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet, således at ingen privat virksomhed får en konkurrencefordel, og aftalen mellem Hamburg Kommune og de 4 Landkreise har ikke til formål at omgå udbudsreglerne (præmis 47-48). Ud fra en samlet vurdering skulle Tyskland herefter frifindes (præmis 49).

Hvis man skal sætte aftalen mellem Hamburg Kommune og de 4 Landkreise i relation til de nugældende udbudsregler, forekommer det nærliggende at karakterisere Hamburg Kommune som en »indkøbscentral« i forhold til de 4 Landkreise, jf. herved definitionen af indkøbscentraler i Udbudsdirektivets artikel 1, stk. 10. Klagenævnet er dog ikke bekendt med, om Tyskland har implementeret Udbudsdirektivets regler om indkøbscentraler.

Under alle omstændigheder er afgørelsen tydeligvis udtryk for den velvilje over for fælleskommunale samarbejder og andre samarbejder mellem offentlige myndigheder, der har fundet udtryk i EF-domstolens dom af 13. november 2008, Coditel Brabrant, til hvilken der også henvises flere steder i dommen.

Forholdet mellem udbudsreglerne og Hamburg Kommunes kontrakt med fjernvarmeværket er et spørgsmål for sig. Som nævnt henviste EF-domstolen udtrykkeligt til, at dette spørgsmål ikke var omfattet af sagen.

Den danske udgave af dommen er på flere punkter vanskeligt forståelig, hvorfor referatet af dommen til dels har bygget på de franske og tyske udgaver.

EF-domstolens dom af 11. juni 2009, sag C-327/08, Kommissionen mod Frankrig

En national regel om, at en 10-dages frist mellem ordregiverens meddelelse om tildelingsbeslutningen og kontraktsindgåelsen i hastetilfælde kan forkortes i forhold til situationens krav, var ikke i strid med kontroldirektiverne som affattet før ændringerne ved direktiv 2007/66. En national regel om, at klage først kan indgives på et nærmere angivet tidspunkt efter forhåndsorientering til ordregiveren om, at der vil blive klaget, var derimod i strid med kontroldirektiverne

Den franske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter indeholder bl.a. følgende bestemmelser:

1) Efter en ordregivende myndigheds underretning til tilbudsgiverne om tildelingsbeslutningen skal der gå mindst 10 dage før ordregiverens indgåelse af kontrakt med den valgte tilbudsgiver. I hastetilfælde kan 10-dages fristen dog forkortes i forhold til situationens krav.

2) En virksomhed, der vil klage til et klageorgan over en ordregivende myndighed, skal forhåndsorientere den ordregivende myndighed om, at der vil blive indgivet klage. Den ordregivende myndighed har herefter 10 dage til at afgive et svar, og klage kan først indgives, når den ordregivende myndighed har svaret, eller efter udløbet af 10 dages-fristen, hvis den ordregivende myndighed ikke har svaret forinden.

Sagen var anlagt af Kommissionen, der gjorde gældende, at muligheden for i hastetilfælde at forkorte 10-dages fristen for kontraktsindgåelsen, jf. punkt 1, samt den under punkt 2 nævnte regel er i strid med kontroldirektiverne, således som de er affattet før ændringerne ved direktiv 2007/66.

Frankrig gjorde gældende, at sagsanlægget var uden mening, da direktiv 2007/66 netop tager sigte på at regulere spørgsmål som de foreliggende, og da dette direktiv er under implementering i Frankrig. Frankrig fik imidlertid ikke medhold heri, idet EF-domstolen henviste til sin faste praksis, hvorefter en medlemsstats manglende overholdelse af EU-retten skal bedømmes efter forholdene på tidspunktet for udløbet af fristen i Kommissionens begrundede udtalelse (præmis 22-23). Frankrig gjorde desuden gældende, at selvom Kommissionen fik medhold, ville sagsanlægget være uden praktisk betydning som følge af, at Frankrigs efterkommelse af dommen kun kunne ske som et led i implementeringen af direktiv 2007/66. Frankrig fik heller ikke medhold heri, idet EF-domstolen henviste til sin faste praksis, hvorefter det tilkommer Kommissionen at vurdere hensigtsmæssigheden af et sagsanlæg mod en medlemsstat (præmis 26).

EF-domstolen udtalte endvidere (noget sammentrængt gengivet):

Ad den franske regel om, at 10-dages fristen for kontraktsindgåelsen kan forkortes i hastetilfælde:

Kontroldirektiverne som affattet før ændringen ved direktiv 2007/66 stiller ikke krav om, at der skal gå et bestemt tidsrum mellem ordregiverens meddelelse om tildelingsbeslutningen og kontraktsindgåelsen, og der kan således ikke af kontroldirektiverne udledes en regel om, at der skal gå 10 dage. En regel om, at der skal gå et bestemt tidsrum, er først indført ved direktiv 2007/66. (Præmis 36-38). Derimod har EF-domstolen i sin praksis fastlagt, at der skal gå en rimelig tid mellem meddelelsen om tildelingsbeslutningen og kontraktsindgåelsen (præmis 41). Den omhandlede franske regel går imidlertid kun ud på, at fristen i hastetilfælde kan forkortes i forhold til situationens krav. Dette er ensbetydende med, at forkortelsen af fristen skal ske i overensstemmelse med proportionalitetsprincippet, og tilbudsgiverne skal stadig have en rimelig frist til at indgive klage (præmis 42-44). Kommissionen havde herefter ikke påvist, at den omhandlede franske regel var i strid med kontroldirektiverne, hvorfor Kommissionen ikke fik medhold på det omhandlede punkt.

EF-domstolene henviste yderligere til, at kontroldirektiverne som affattet før direktiv 2007/66 er ikke til hinder for, at fristen forkortes i hastetilfælde, hvilket bestyrkes af, at direktiv 2007/66 i visse tilfælde ikke stiller krav om, at der skal gå et bestemt tidsrum, jf. punkt 8 i præamblen til dette direktiv (præmis 39-40).

Ad reglen om, at klage først kan indgives efter, at ordregiveren har besvaret en forhåndsorientering om, at der vil blive klaget, eller efter 10 dage efter forhåndsorienteringen:

Denne regel gør det umuligt for en klager at klage til et klageorgan før kontraktsindgåelsen med begæring om opsættende virkning (»référé précontractuel«) i tilfælde, hvor den ordregivende myndighed først har svaret på forhåndsorienteringen efter 10 dage, og hvor kontrakten er indgået i mellemtiden (præmis 55). Reglen bevirker således, at der i visse tilfælde ikke reelt ikke er nogen frist mellem meddelelsen om tildelingsbeslutningen og kontraktsindgåelsen med deraf følgende afskæring af muligheden for at klage med begæring om opsættende virkning før kontraktsindgåelsen (præmis 57). Reglen var derfor i strid med kontroldirektiverne (præmis 59-60).

Følgende bemærkes:

EF-domstolens begrundelse for, at den omtalte franske regel er i strid med kontroldirektiverne, kan måske umiddelbart virke lidt svært at forstå. Det centrale i sammenhængen er imidlertid, at ordregiverens 10-dages frist til at svare på en forhåndsorientering om, at der vil blive klaget, ikke medfører nogen udsættelse af 10-dages fristen for ordregiverens indgåelse af kontrakt med den valgte tilbudsgiver, hvilket også blev påpeget af Kommissionen.

Forholdet kan illustreres med et eksempel: Ordregiveren giver den 1. maj tilbudsgiverne underretning om tildelingsbeslutningen. En forbigået tilbudsgiver orienterer den 3. maj ordregiveren om, at tilbudsgiveren vil klage til et klageorgan. Ordregiveren svarer ikke på forhåndsorienteringen, og den forbigåede tilbudsgiver kan derfor først klage til klageorganet den 13. maj. Fristen for ordregiverens indgåelse af kontrakt med den valgte tilbudsgiver udløber imidlertid den 11. maj, og ved at indgå kontrakten på denne dag afskærer ordregiveren den forbigåede tilbudsgiver fra at klage før kontraktsindgåelsen, idet den forbigåede tilbudsgiver som nævnt først kan klage den 13. maj.

Retten i Første Instans' kendelse af 2. juli 2009 i sag T-279/06, Evropaïki Dynamiki mod ECB

Retten i Første Instans har ikke kompetence til at tage stilling til, om en national regel strider mod EU-retten. En forbigået tilbudsgiver havde ikke retlig interesse i at klage over tildelingsbeslutningen, da tilbudsgiverens tilbud ikke kunne komme i betragtning, fordi det ikke opfyldte et krav i udbudsbetingelserne

Referatet omfatter kun de dele af kendelsen, der skønnes at have almen udbudsretlig interesse.

Den Europæiske Centralbank (ECB), der er en EU-institution beliggende i Frankfurt, iværksatte et begrænset EU-udbud vedrørende indgåelse af rammeaftaler om en it-ydelse. Tildelingskriteriet var tilsyneladende det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud. I udbudsbetingelserne var angivet, at tilbudsgiverne senest ved kontraktindgåelse skulle have en tysk autorisation til midlertidig beskæftigelse af arbejdskraft i henhold til et tysk lovkrav herom.

Der indkom tilbud fra nogle prækvalificerede virksomheder, herunder et græsk konsortium, E. Efter at udbyderen havde besluttet at indgå kontrakter med to andre tilbudsgivere, anlagde E sag mod udbyderen ved Retten i Første Instans med påstand om annullation af tildelingsbeslutningen.

I mellemtiden havde E konstateret, at E ikke kunne opnå den omtalte tyske autorisation, hvilket E gav oplysning om i skriftvekslingen for Ret-ten. Dette skyldtes efter det foreliggende, at det var en betingelse for at få den tyske autorisation, at E havde en tilsvarende autorisation i Grækenland, hvilket E som følge af den græske lovgivning ikke kunne opnå.

Udbyderen påstod sagen afvist med henvisning til, at E, som følge af, at E ikke kunne opnå den tyske autorisation, ikke havde mulighed for at få tildelt en kontrakt og derfor ikke havde retlig interesse i sagsanlægget. Retten gav imidlertid ikke udbyderen medhold i, at sagen som sådan skulle afvises med denne begrundelse og henviste herved bl.a. til artikel 1, stk. 3, i første kontroldirektiv, hvorefter der skal kunne klages af enhver, der har lidt eller vil kunne lide skade som følge af en påstået overtrædelse (præmis 41 og 44).

E gjorde bl.a. gældende at det tyske lovkrav om autorisation var i strid med Traktatens artikel 49 EF om fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser. Retten afviste imidlertid at tage stilling til dette anbringende med henvisning til, at Retten ikke har kompetence til at tage stilling til, om en national regel strider mod fællesskabsretten, og at spørgsmål herom i givet fald må afgøres ved sagsanlæg ved en national domstol med eventuel forelæggelse for EF-domstolen (præmis 82).

E gjorde desuden bl.a. gældende, at udbudsbetingelsernes krav om tysk autorisation stred mod udbudsreglerne på forskellige punkter, men fik ikke medhold heri. Retten udtalte således bl.a., at kravet ikke som hævdet af E stred mod gennemsigtighedsprincippet, da det var gældende for alle ansøgere om prækvalifikation (præmis 92).

E gjorde endvidere gældende, at udbyderens tildelingsbeslutning stred mod udbudsreglerne på en længere række forskellige punkter. Retten afviste imidlertid at tage stilling til E's anbringender herom med henvisning til, at E ikke havde retlig interesse i annullation af tildelingsbeslutningen som følge af, at E på grund af den manglende tyske autorisation ikke havde mulighed for at få tildelt en kontrakt (præmis 98-99).

Sagen blev herefter afgjort dels ved afvisning, dels ved frifindelse (»le recours doit être rejeté en partie comme…irrecevable et en partie comme…non fondé«, præmis 101).

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 9. september 2009, sag T-437/05, Brink's Security Luxembourg mod Kommissionen

Klage over, at den valgte tilbudsgiver ikke overholdt udbudsbetingelsernes krav, ikke taget til følge, da klagen angik den valgte tilbudsgivers overholdelse af kontrakten med udbyderen og ikke udbyderens tildelingsbeslutning. Om betingelserne for, at der foreligger virksomhedsoverdragelse ved udbud af tjenesteydelser. Ligebehandlingsprincippet har til formål at sikre en sund konkurrence, og gennemsigtighedsprincippet har til formål at undgå favorisering, Udbyderens oplysning til en forbigået tilbudsgiver om hvem, der var valgt som tilbudsgiver, og om de points, som den forbigåede tilbudsgiver og den valgte tilbudsgiver havde fået ved tilbudsvurderingen, var tilstrækkelig begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen. En tilbudsgiver behøver ikke have de nødvendige medarbejdere ved tilbuddets afgivelse. Udbyderen havde pligt til efter anmodning at give en forbigået tilbudsgiver oplysning om hvem, der havde foretaget tilbudsvurderingen. Om betingelserne for erstatning

Denne dom er omfattende og beskæftiger sig med en lang række forskellige spørgsmål. Den refereres kun, i det omfang den skønnes at have nogenlunde almen udbudsretlig interesse.

Sagen drejede sig om et udbud, der var iværksat af Kommissionen vedrørende udførelse af vagttjeneste. Sagsøgeren var en virksomhed, der hidtil havde udført ydelsen, men som ikke havde fået tildelt kontrakten i henhold til udbuddet. Sagsøgeren fremsatte en række forskellige anbringender. Af disse anbringender og Rettens stillingtagen til dem kan refereres (Klagenævnets litrering):

Anbringende 1: Den valgte tilbudsgiver havde ikke overholdt et krav i udbudsbetingelserne vedrørende medarbejdernes kvalifikationer:

Ikke taget til følge, da lovligheden af en retsakt skal bedømmes på grundlag af forholdene på tidspunktet for retsakten, og da anbringendet angik gennemførelsen af kontrakten med den valgte tilbudsgiver (præmis 42-43).

Anbringende 2: Kommissionen kunne ikke tage den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud i betragtning, da sagen var omfattet af direktivet om virksomhedsoverdragelse og den luxembourgske lov, der har implementeret direktivet, og da den valgte tilbudsgiver havde tilkendegivet, at tilbudsgiveren kun ville overtage en del af de medarbejdere, som sagsøgeren havde anvendt ved udførelsen af den udbudte ydelse:

Ikke taget til følge, da der ikke forelå virksomhedsoverdragelse (præmis 89-99). Bl.a. udtalt: At den tjenesteydelse, som udføres af den gamle og den nye tjenesteyder, er den samme, er ikke i sig selv tilstrækkeligt til, at der er tale om virksomhedsoverdragelse (»overførsel af en økonomisk enhed«, præmis 92), og Kommissionen kunne ikke på tidspunkterne for udbuddet og tildelingsbeslutningen vide, om betingelserne for, at der var tale om virksomhedsoverdragelse, var opfyldt (præmis 94).

Anbringende 3: Udbudsbetingelserne skulle have indeholdt en fortegnelse over de medarbejdere, som sagsøgeren brugte ved udførelsen af den udbudte ydelse, af hensyn til den valgte tilbudsgivers forpligtelse til at overtage disse medarbejdere efter reglerne om virksomhedsoverdragelse:

Ikke taget til følge, da det ikke lå fast, at reglerne om virksomhedsoverdragelse skulle anvendes, og da det i udbudsbetingelserne var bestemt, at den valgte tilbudsgiver skulle overholde lovgivningen i Luxembourg (præmis 104-105).

Anbringende 4: Kommissionen havde overtrådt ligebehandlingsprincippet til fordel for de andre tilbudsgivere ved at fastsætte i udbudsbetingelserne, at de medarbejdere, der udførte visse dele af den udbudte opgave, skulle have mindst et års erhvervserfaring, idet de tilsvarende medarbejdere hos sagsøgeren havde længere erhvervserfaring:

Ikke taget til følge. Bl.a. udtalt: Ligebehandlingsprincippet har til formål at fremme en sund og effektiv konkurrence ved at give alle bydende lige chancer ved udformningen af deres tilbud (præmis 114). Gennemsigtighedsprincippet, der følger af ligebehandlingsprincippet, har i det væsentlige til formål at sikre, at der ikke er risiko for favorisering og vilkårlighed (præmis 115). Kravet om et års erhvervserfaring var gældende for alle tilbudsgivere, og kravet var formuleret klart, præcist og utvetydigt og var passende (præmis 118-121). Kommissionen ville have begrænset udviklingen af en effektiv konkurrence, hvis den havde krævet mere end et års erhvervserfaring (præmis 122). Da der ikke var tale om virksomhedsoverdragelse, havde Kommissionen endvidere ikke haft pligt til at foreskrive, at sagsøgerens medarbejdere skulle overtages, og Kommissionen kan ikke pålægge en virksomhed at ansætte personer, som virksomheden ikke selv har valgt (præmis 123).

Anbringende 5: Som følge af forløbet i en forudgående fusionssag for Kommissionen var den valgte tilbudsgiver i besiddelse af forskellige oplysninger om sagsøgerens forhold, hvilket var i strid med ligebehandlingsprincippet:

Ikke taget til følge, da forholdet ikke var bevist (præmis 136).

Anbringende 6: Kommissionen havde ikke givet sagsøgeren tilstrækkelig begrundelse for ikke at antage sagsøgerens tilbud:

Ikke taget til følge. Bl.a. henvist til følgende: En begrundelse skal klart og utvetydigt angive de betragtninger, der er lagt til grund, således at den kompetente ret kan udøve sin prøvelsesret (præmis 158). Kommissionen havde imidlertid opfyldt sin begrundelsespligt ved at give sagsøgeren oplysning om den valgte tilbudsgiver og om de points, der ved tilbudsvurderingen var blevet tildelt sagsøgerens tilbud og den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud (præmis 162-175).

Anbringende 7: Kommissionen kunne ikke tage den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud i betragtning, da den valgte tilbudsgiver ikke ved afgivelsen af sit tilbud tidspunkt havde dokumenteret, at tilbudsgiveren havde de nødvendige medarbejdere:

Ikke taget til følge med en udførlig begrundelse (præmis 193-206). Bl.a. udtalt, at et krav om, at tilbudsgiverne ved tilbuddets afgivelse råder over de nødvendige medarbejdere, ville give den hidtidige tjenesteyder en fordel (præmis 198).

Anbringende 8: Kommissionen havde overtrådt reglerne om aktindsigt ved at nægte at give sagsøgeren oplysning om medlemmerne af det bedømmelsesudvalg, der havde foretaget tilbudsvurderingen:

Taget til følge med henvisning til, oplysningen ikke ville have krænket de pågældendes privatliv (præmis 217).

Anbringende 9: Der var familieforbindelse mellem et medlem af bedømmelsesudvalget og en ansat hos den valgte tilbudsgiver:

Ikke taget til følge, da anbringendet ikke var understøttet af det mindste bevis (præmis 223).

Retten frifandt Kommissionen for en erstatningspåstand og udtalte som begrundelse herfor bl.a.: Betingelserne for at pålægge en fællesskabsinstitution at betale erstatning, er, at institutionen har handlet retsstridigt, at der foreligger et virkeligt tab, og at der er årsagssammenhæng (præmis 240). Disse betingelser var ikke opfyldt, da Kommissionen kun havde handlet retsstridigt ved nægtelsen af oplysning om bedømmelsesudvalgets medlemmer, og da der ikke var årsagsforbindelse mellem denne overtrædelse og sagsøgerens hævdede tab (præmis 243-244).

EF-domstolens dom af 10. september 2009, sag C-206/08, Eurawasser
Begrebet tjenesteydelseskoncession er det samme i Udbudsdirektivet og Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet. Det er tilstrækkeligt for at anse en kontrakt for en tjenesteydelseskoncession i henhold til Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet, at ordregiveren ikke betaler vederlag til tjenesteyderen, og at tjenesteyderen får vederlaget fra tredjemand, under forudsætning af, at ordregiverens driftsrisiko eller en væsentlig del af den overføres til tjenesteyderen, også selvom denne risiko er meget begrænset som følge af offentlig regulering

Ifølge Udbudsdirektivets artikel 17 og Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivets artikel 18 gælder (kort gengivet) udbudspligten ikke for tildeling af tjenesteydelseskoncessioner. Sådanne koncessioner er i Udbudsdirektivets artikel 1, stk. 4, og Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivets artikel 1, stk. 3, litra b, defineret som kontrakter om tjenesteydelser, hvor vederlaget består i retten til at udnytte tjenesteydelsen eller af denne ret sammen med en pris. Ifølge flere tilkendegivelser fra EF-domstolen er det centrale i begrebet tjenesteydelseskoncession, at det er tjenesteyderen og ikke ordregiveren, der har den økonomiske risiko vedrørende den tjenesteydelse, der er tale om. Se domstolens domme af 18. oktober 2005 i sag C-458/03, Parking Brixen, og 18. juli 2007 i sag C-382/05, Kommissionen mod Italien.

Den her refererede dom angik spørgsmålet, om en tjenesteyder havde den økonomiske risiko i et sådant omfang, at der var tale om en tjenesteydelseskoncession. Sagen drejede sig nærmere om følgende:

En tysk ordregivende myndighed, der stod for vand- og kloakforsyningen i et område, iværksatte et EU-udbud vedrørende en tjenesteydelseskoncession bestående i driften af vand- og kloakforsyningen i en 20-årig periode. Af udbudsbekendtgørelsen og/eller udbudsbetingelserne fremgik: Koncessionshaveren skulle levere ydelserne til forbrugerne i henhold til kontrakter mellem koncessionshaveren og forbrugerne. Forbrugerne havde principielt pligt til at tilslutte sig den vand- og kloakforsyning, der var tale om, og koncessionshaveren skulle opkræve vederlaget hos forbrugerne i henhold til nogle takster, der var fastsat af det offentlige. Koncessionshaveren skulle leje de tekniske installationer af ordregiveren.

En virksomhed klagede til en klageorgan og gjorde gældende, at der ikke var tale om en tjenesteydelseskoncession, og at udbuddet derfor skulle gennemføres som et almindeligt udbud vedrørende en udbudspligtig tjenesteydelse. Klageorganet gav klageren medhold. Udbyderen indbragte sagen for en ankeinstans, der forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen med nogle spørgsmål. Disse spørgsmål sigtede i deres kerne til, om tjenesteyderen skulle anses for at have en sådan økonomisk risiko, at der var tale om en tjenesteydelseskoncession, også selvom tjenesteyderens økonomiske risiko ville blive meget begrænset som følge af forbrugernes tilslutningspligt og de faste takster.

Fra EF-domstolens udtalelser kan nævnes (af overskuelighedsgrunde omformuleret i mindre omfang):

Begrebet tjenesteydelseskoncession skal forstås på samme måde i Udbudsdirektivet og Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet (præmis 43).

EF-domstolen foretog i præmis 49-59 en gennemgang af begrebet tjenesteydelseskoncession og af sin egen praksis med hensyn til, hvornår der foreligger en tjenesteydelseskoncession.

EF-domstolen tog i præmis 70 afstand fra et synspunkt fra Kommissionen, hvorefter den risiko, der overføres fra ordregiveren til tjenesteyderen, skal være væsentlig, for at der er tale om en tjenesteydelseskoncession. EF-domstolen udtalte videre:

Visse sektorer, navnlig sektorer vedrørende almennyttige aktiviteter som vand- og kloakforsyning, er reguleret i et omfang, der kan indebære en begrænsning af den økonomiske risiko, og den offentlige regulering letter kontrollen med udførelsen af en tjenesteydelse inden for sådanne områder og reducerer de faktorer, der kan skade gennemsigtigheden og fordreje konkurrencen (præmis 72-73). Ordregivende myndigheder, der handler i god tro, skal kunne sikre levering af [sådanne] tjenesteydelser ved brug af en koncession, hvis de anser dette for den bedste måde at sikre leveringen på. Dette gælder, selvom driftsrisikoen er meget begrænset, og det ville ikke være rimeligt at kræve, at de ordregivende myndigheder skulle foranledige en højere risiko end den begrænsede risiko, der følger af den offentlige regulering. I situationer som de omtalte, hvor den ordregivende myndighed ikke har nogen indflydelse på tjenesteydelsens retlige udformning, er det umuligt for den ordregivende myndighed at etablere og dermed overføre risikofaktorer. (Præmis 74-76).

Selvom der [i disse tilfælde] således er tale om en meget begrænset risiko, er det imidlertid nødvendigt for at anse en kontrakt for en tjenesteydelseskoncession, at hele eller i det mindste en væsentlig del af driftsrisikoen overføres til tjenesteyderen. Det tilkom den nationale domstol at vurdere, om der var sket en overførelse af hele eller en væsentlig del af den ordregivende myndigheds risiko. Der skulle ikke herved tages hensyn til risici som følge af lovændringer i kontraktens løbetid. (Præmis 77-79).

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter de stillede spørgsmål således: Det er tilstrækkeligt for at anse en kontrakt for en tjenesteydelseskoncession i henhold til Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet, at den ordregivende myndighed ikke umiddelbart skal betale et vederlag til tjenesteyderen, og at tjenesteyderen kan opkræve vederlag fra tredjemand, under forudsætning af, at tjenesteyderen påtager sig hele eller i det mindste en væsentlig del af den ordregivende myndigheds driftsrisiko, også selvom denne risiko er meget begrænset som følge af tjenesteydelsens offentligretlige karakter.

EF-domstolens dom af 10. september 2009, sag C-573/07, Sea
Om betingelserne for at anse et selskab for in house i forhold til en ordregivende myndighed. Kontrolkriteriet er opfyldt, når selskabets aktiviteter er begrænset til de ejende ordregivende myndigheders område, og når de ejende ordregivende myndigheder udøver en bestemmende indflydelse på selskabets strategiske målsætninger og vigtige beslutninger. Den blotte mulighed for privat deltagelse i selskabet er ikke til hinder for at anse kontrolkriteriet for opfyldt

En italiensk kommune, P, overlod uden forudgående udbud affaldshåndteringen i kommunen til et fælleskommunalt aktieselskab, som kommunen ejede aktierne i sammen med nogle andre kommuner. Aktieselskabet havde til formål at udføre affaldshåndtering og forskellig forsyningsvirksomhed for de ejende kommuner.

En virksomhed, der hidtil havde udført affaldshåndteringen for P, klagede til en forvaltningsdomstol. Klageren gjorde gældende, at P ikke udførte samme kontrol med aktieselskabet som med sine egne tjenestegrene, og at P's overladelse af affaldshåndteringen til selskabet derfor ikke kunne ske uden forudgående udbud.

Klagen sigtede umiddelbart til en bestemmelse i den italienske kommunallovgivning, hvorefter en kommune uden udbud kan tildele en tjenesteydelseskontrakt til et selskab, der er 100 % offentligt ejet, såfremt den eller de offentlige myndigheder, der ejer selskabet, udøver en kontrol med selskabet svarende til kontrollen med egne tjenestegrene, og såfremt selskabet udøver hovedparten af sin virksomhed sammen med den eller de offentlige myndigheder, den ejes af. Den nævnte bestemmelse i den italienske kommunallovgivning er imidlertid blot en implementering af to betingelser, som EF-domstolen i en række domme har opstillet for at anse et selskab for »in house« i forhold til en ordregivende myndighed med den konsekvens, at den ordregivende myndighed kan overlade udbudspligtige ydelser til selskabet uden udbud. Disse to betingelser er 1) kontrolkriteriet, dvs. at den ordregivende myndighed skal udøve samme kontrol med selskabet som med sine egne tjenestegrene, og 2) virksomhedskriteriet, dvs. at virksomheden skal udføre hovedparten af sine opgaver sammen med den eller de ordregivende myndigheder, den ejes af.

Den italienske forvaltningsdomstol var i tvivl med hensyn til, om kontrolkriteriet var opfyldt. Dette skyldtes for det første, at der efter aktieselskabets vedtægter var mulighed for at udstede aktier til lokale borgere og/eller erhvervsdrivende. EF-domstolen har imidlertid i flere afgørelser tilkendegivet, at kontrolkriteriet ikke er opfyldt, hvis der er privat deltagelse i det selskab, der er tale om, eller er mulighed herfor, således i dom af 21. juli 2005 i sag C-231/03, Coname, se også dom af 18. november 2008 i sag C-324/07, Coditel Brabrant. For det andet skyldtes forvaltningsdomstolens tvivl nogle vedtægtsbestemmelser, der efter forvaltningsdomstolens opfattelse kunne bevirke, at de deltagende kommuner reelt ikke udøvede en kontrol med selskabet svarende til kontrollen med egne tjenestegrene. Forvaltningsdomstolen forelagde derfor sagen for EF-domstolen.

EF-domstolens udtalelser er yderst omfattende og kan ikke gengives kort. Fra udtalelserne kan nævnes:

Det var uden betydning, om der var tale om en tjenesteydelseskontrakt eller en tjenesteydelseskoncession (præmis 35 ff.). Det fremgår, at dette sigter til, at in house spørgsmålet er det samme i relation til udbudspligtige anskaffelser og i relation til en slags begrænset udbudspligt, som EF-domstolen bl.a. i Coname-dommen har opstillet med hensyn til visse anskaffelser, der ikke er omfattet af udbudspligten efter udbudsdirektiverne, bl.a. tjenesteydelseskoncessioner.

Hvis flere offentlige myndigheder ejer et selskab, til hvilket de overlader udførelsen af deres public service-opgaver, kan de offentlige myndigheder kontrol med selskabet føres i fællesskab (præmis 59). Denne udtalelse svarer til en tilsvarende udtalelse i Coditel Brabrant-dommen.

Ad spørgsmålet om privat deltagelse i det selskab, der er tale om: Privat deltagelse udelukker under alle omstændigheder, at en ordregivende myndighed kan føre samme kontrol med selskabet som med sine egne tjenestegrene (præmis 46). Den blotte mulighed for privat deltagelse udelukker imidlertid ikke en sådan kontrol (præmis 51), men hvis der i en kontrakts løbetid indtræder privat kapital i selskabet, kan dette gøre det nødvendigt at foretage udbud (præmis 53).

Ad spørgsmålet, om selskabets vedtægter kunne medføre, at kontrol svarende til kontrollen med egne tjenestegrene ikke var reel: Det tilkom den nationale domstol at tage stilling til dette spørgsmål (præmis 88). Vedtægtsbestemmelserne for selskabet skulle imidlertid anses for at gøre det muligt for de deltagende myndigheder at udøve en bestemmende indflydelse i forhold til selskabets strategiske målsætninger og vigtige beslutninger (præmis 86). Dette sigtede efter det foreliggende til, at der i selskabets ledende organer indgik en tilsynsmyndighed og nogle udvalg med repræsentanter for alle ejere.

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter forvaltningsdomstolens spørgsmål således (præmis 90):

En tjenesteydelseskontrakt kan tildeles et 100 % offentligt ejet selskab uden udbud, når den ordregivende myndighed fører samme kontrol med selskabet som med sine egne tjenestegrene, og når selskabet udfører hovedparten af sin virksomhed sammen med den eller de offentlige myndigheder, som det ejes af.

En kontrol svarende til kontrollen med egne tjenestegrene skal anses for at foreligge, når selskabets aktiviteter er begrænset til de ejende ordregivende myndigheders område og i det væsentlige udføres til fordel for disse, og når kontrollen udøves gennem vedtægtsmæssige organer, der består af repræsentanter for de ejende ordregivende myndigheder, og når disse udøver en bestemmende indflydelse i forhold til selskabets strategiske målsætninger og vigtige beslutninger.

Følgende bemærkes:

Det væsentligste nye i forhold til EF-domstolens hidtil seneste afgørelse om in house-spørgsmålet, dvs. Coditel Brabrant-dommen af 18. november 2008, er formentlig dels angivelsen af, at den blotte mulighed for privat deltagelse ikke udelukker, at et selskab kan være in house, dels angivelsen af, at kontrolkriteriet er opfyldt, når de ejende ordregivende myndigheder (i fælleskab) udøver bestemmende indflydelse på selskabets strategi og vigtige beslutninger. I det sidste må ligge, at kontrolkriteriet er opfyldt, selvom de ordregivende myndigheder kun udøver indflydelse på selskabets strategi og vigtige beslutninger, dvs. ikke har indflydelse på selskabets daglige ledelse.

Det kan ligesom efter Coditel Brabrant-dommen konstateres, at kontrolkriteriets reelle indhold ikke længere svarer til kriteriets ordlyd.

Spændet mellem kriteriets indhold og ordlyd øges tilsyneladende en smule ved hver ny afgørelse fra EF-domstolen om emnet.

EF-domstolens dom af 15. oktober 2009, sag C-196/08, Acoset
Nogle ordregivende myndigheder kunne uden forudgående offentliggørelse give et selskab koncession på udførelse af en tjenesteydelse, selvom selskabet havde privat deltagelse og derfor ikke kunne være in house, idet den private deltager i selskabet var fundet gennem et EU-udbud

En italiensk region besluttede sammen med regionens kommuner at stifte et selskab til at stå for vandforsyningen i regionen. Selskabet skulle stiftes som et »halvoffentligt selskab med overvejende offentlig deltagelse«. Heri lå, at 49 % af aktiekapitalen skulle ejes af en privat virksomhed, medens 51 % af aktiekapitalen skulle ejes af de stiftende myndigheder. Det fremgår, at regionen og kommunerne ville give aktieselskabet koncession på driften af vandforsyningen, således at den private deltager i selskabet skulle stå for den praktiske drift. Det fremgår ikke, hvorledes den private deltager skulle honoreres herfor, og hvorledes den private deltagers aktieandel skulle etableres.

Regionen og kommunerne iværksatte herefter et EU-udbud med henblik på at finde den omtalte private virksomhed. Det synes at fremgå, at dette udbud blev foretaget med hjemmel i en bestemmelse i den italienske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter. Der indkom tilbud fra nogle virksomheder, men det konstateredes, at kun en af tilbudsgiverne, en virksomhed A, ønskede at indgå kontrakt.

Regionen og kommunerne annullerede imidlertid EU-udbuddet og besluttede tilsyneladende at drive vandforsyningen uden privat deltagelse. Dette skyldtes en frygt for, at oprindeligt påtænkte konstruktion med privat deltagelse var i strid med fællesskabsretten.

A anlagde herefter sag mod regionen og kommunerne ved en italiensk forvaltningsdomstol og gjorde gældende, at den omtalte italienske lovbestemmelse var i overensstemmelse med fællesskabsretten. Dette foranledigede forvaltningsdomstolen til at forelægge sagen for EF-domstolen med et spørgsmål, der sigtede til, om den oprindeligt påtænkte konstruktion med et »halvoffentligt« selskab var i overensstemmelse med fællesskabsretten.

Fra EF-domstolens udtalelser kan nævnes (noget sammentrængt gengivet):

Der var tale om at give det omhandlede aktieselskab en koncession vedrørende udførelse af tjenesteydelser (præmis 42 og 45), hvilket ikke er omfattet af udbudspligten efter Udbudsdirektivet og Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet (præmis 44). Traktatens grundlæggende principper m.m. finder imidlertid anvendelse på koncessioner om tjenesteydelser, og der er derfor pligt til at sikre en passende offentlighed til fordel for enhver potentiel tilbudsgiver (præmis 46-50). Disse udtalelser svarer til, hvad EF-domstolen har udtalt i flere tidligere domme, senest i dom af 13. november 2008 i sag C-324/07, Coditel Brabrant.

Traktatens grundlæggende principper m.m. med deraf følgende pligt til en passende offentlighed finder imidlertid ikke anvendelse, hvis den kontrol, som den ordregivende myndighed fører med koncessionshaveren, svarer til den kontrol, den fører med sine egne tjenestegrene, og hvis koncessionshaveren udfører hovedparten af sin virksomhed sammen med den virksomhed, den ejes af (præmis 51).[2] Privat medejerskab for koncessionshaveren udelukker, at den ordregivende myndighed kan føre samme kontrol med koncessionshaveren som med sine egne tjenestegrene, og dette var tilfældet med hensyn til den koncession, som sagen angik (præmis 53-54).

Det udbud, som regionen og kommunerne havde iværksat med henblik på at finde den private deltager i aktieselskabet, opfyldte imidlertid traktatens grundlæggende principper m.m., da de private virksomheder, der ønskede at komme i betragtning, skulle dokumentere deres tekniske forudsætninger og de fordele, som antagelsen af deres tilbud ville medføre (præmis 59). Det ville endvidere være uhensigtsmæssigt at skulle gennemføre en dobbelt procedure, dvs. først en indledende udvælgelse af den private deltager og derefter tildeling af koncessionen (præmis 61). EF-domstolen henviste også til, at udvælgelsen af den private deltager bl.a. var baseret på dennes tekniske færdigheder, hvorfor udvælgelsen af koncessionshaveren var en følge af valget af den private deltager (præmis 60). EF-domstolen udtalte, at et selskab med en blandet offentlig og privat kapital som det omhandlede skal bevare det samme samfundsmæssige formål gennem hele koncessionens varighed, og at enhver væsentlig ændring medfører pligt til at foretage konkurrenceudsættelse[3] (præmis 62).

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter forvaltningsdomstolens spørgsmål med (stærkt sammentrængt gengivet), at forskellige nærmere angivne traktatbestemmelser ikke var til hinder for en selskabskonstruktion som den omhandlede.

Følgende bemærkes:

Denne dom kan måske ses som (endnu) et eksempel på, at EF-domstolen er på vej bort fra sine tidligere gentagne tilkendegivelser om, at et selskab ikke kan være in house, hvis der er privat deltagelse i selskabet eller mulighed for privat deltagelse. I Sea-dommen af 10. september 2009 i sag C-573/07 accepterede EF-domstolen, at et selskab var in house, selvom der var mulighed for privat deltagelse. I Acoset-dommen accepterer EF-domstolen tilsyneladende reelt, at et selskab med privat deltagelse er in house, hvis den private deltager er fundet gennem en procedure med forudgående offentliggørelse.

[2] Dvs. hvis koncessionshaveren er »in house«, se om dette begreb fx Klagenævnets resumé af EF-domstolens dom af 10. september 2009 i sag C-573/07, Sea.

[3] Ifølge den danske udgave af dommen »pligt til at afholde udbud«. Dette er formentlig udtryk for en uheldig oversættelse, da der næppe kan være pligt til at afholde et egentligt EU-udbud som følge af, at tjenesteydelseskoncessioner som også nævnt i dommen ikke er omfattet af udbudspligten efter udbudsdirektiverne. Den franske version af dommen bruger formuleringen »obligation de mise en concurrence«.

EF-domstolens dom af 15. oktober 2009, sag C-275/08, Kommissionen mod Tyskland

Der kunne ikke uden udbud indgås kontrakt om et it-system til registrering af motorkøretøjer, selvom det hidtidige it-system var brudt sammen, da betingelserne i de påberåbte undtagelser fra udbudspligten (at det nye it-system kun kunne leveres af én leverandør, streng nødvendighed) ikke var opfyldt. Undtagelser fra udbudspligten skal fortolkes snævert, og den, der påberåber sig en sådan undtagelse, har bevisbyrden for, at betingelserne er opfyldt

Dommen er ikke oversat til dansk, og referatet er udformet på grundlag af den franske version af dommen.

En tysk ordregivende myndighed, der stod for registreringen af motorkøretøjer i en tysk delstat, administrerede registreringen ved brug af et it-system. I januar 2005 begyndte it-systemet at udvise fejlfunktioner, og i maj 2005 brød it-systemet sammen. Den ordregivende myndighed iværksatte herefter uden forudgående udbud forhandlinger med en tysk virksomhed om virksomhedens levering af et nyt it-system, og i december 2005 indgik den ordregivende myndighed kontrakt med virksomheden herom, stadig uden udbud.

Sagen var anlagt af Kommissionen, der gjorde gældende, at den ordregivende myndighed skulle have foretaget [offentligt eller begrænset] udbud i medfør af det dagældende indkøbsdirektiv 93/36. Tyskland gjorde heroverfor gældende, at kontrakten var omfattet af Indkøbsdirektivets artikel 6, stk. 3, litra c-d, hvorefter der kunne iværksættes udbud med forhandling uden forudgående udbudsbekendtgørelse med hensyn til varer, hvis fremstilling eller levering af bl.a. tekniske årsager kun kunne overdrages til en bestemt leverandør, samt i visse begrænsede tilfælde, når det var strengt nødvendigt af årsager, der ikke kunne tilskrives ordregiveren selv (tilsvarende bestemmelser er indeholdt i Udbudsdirektivets artikel 31, litra 1, b-c).

EF-domstolen gav Kommissionen medhold. Fra dommens præmisser kan nævnes:

Undtagelser fra udbudspligten skal fortolkes snævert, og den, der påberåber sig sådanne undtagelser, har bevisbyrden for, at betingelserne for undtagelsen er opfyldt (præmis 55-56). Tyskland kunne ikke påberåbe sig undtagelsen med hensyn til varer, hvis fremstilling eller levering kun kan overdrages til en bestemt leverandør, idet det ikke var tilstrækkeligt blot at hævde, at betingelserne for denne undtagelse var opfyldt, og idet det fremgik, at den ordregivende myndighed før kontraktens indgåelse kun havde undersøgt muligheden for at finde leverandører på det nationale plan og ikke på det europæiske plan (præmis 61-64). Betingelserne for undtagelsen med hensyn til strengt nødvendige tilfælde var heller ikke opfyldt. EF-domstolen henviste herved til, at der var gået adskillige måneder mellem den ordregivende myndigheds beslutning om at anskaffe et nyt it-system og kontraktens indgåelse, og til, at den ordregivende myndighed kunne have iværksat et udbud efter konstateringen af problemerne i januar 2005, således at det i mindste ville have været muligt at gennemføre et udbud i form af en hasteprocedure. Den påberåbte nødvendighed måtte derfor i hvert fald til dels tilskrives den ordregivende myndighed selv. (Præmis 70-76).

Tyskland havde påstået sagen afvist med henvisning til, at de tyske klagemyndigheder havde taget endelig stilling til en klage over kontrakten, men fik ikke medhold heri (præmis 42).

EF-domstolens dom af 29. oktober 2009, sag C-536/07, Kommissionen mod Tyskland

En lejekontrakt om en ordregivende myndigheds leje af nogle bygninger, der ifølge lejekontrakten skulle opføres af udlejeren i overensstemmelse med den ordregivende myndigheds anvisninger, var en udbudspligtig bygge- og anlægskontrakt

Den danske version af dommen indeholder en meningsforstyrrende oversættelsesfejl i præmis 10, hvorfor referatet til dels er udformet på grundlag af den franske version af dommen.

Köln Kommune ejer sammen med en tysk delstat og nogle brancheorganisationer m.m. et selskab K, der har til formål at organisere messer og udstillinger.

K solgte et grundareal til et privat firma G med henblik på at G skulle bygge nogle messehaller på arealet til en værdi af ca. 235 mio. €. I forbindelse hermed blev der mellem Köln Kommune og G indgået en lejekontrakt, hvorefter kommunen af G lejede arealet med de kommende bygninger for 30 år mod en nærmere angivet leje, tilsammen over lejekontraktens løbetid ca. 600 mio. €. Lejekontrakten indeholdt nærmere angivelser om, hvorledes de kommende bygninger skulle opføres og indrettes. Ved en anden lejekontrakt, der blev indgået nogenlunde samtidig, fremlejede kommunen de kommende bygninger til K. Af sagsfremstillingen i generaladvokatens forslag til afgørelse fremgår, at K til kommunen skulle betale en leje, der svarede til den leje, som kommunen skulle betale til G, og at K's salg af grundarealet til G og de to lejekontrakter udgjorde et samlet arrangement, der havde til formål at gennemføre og finansiere en fornyelse af messefaciliteterne i Köln. (Set under ét synes transaktionerne at minde om finansieringsformen »sale and lease back«).

Kommissionen gjorde gældende, at det nævnte forløb var udtryk for, at kommunen havde iværksat et bygge- og anlægsarbejde, der skulle have været udbudt efter det dagældende bygge- og anlægsdirektiv 93/37. Kommissionen fik medhold, idet EF-domstolen fastslog, at det var en overtrædelse af bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, at lejekontrakten mellem kommunen og G var indgået uden forudgående udbud i henhold til direktivet.

Fra EF-domstolens udtalelser kan nævnes:

Ad et anbringende fra Tyskland, om, at det var K, der var G's egentlige kontraktpart, hvorfor der ikke skulle gennemføres udbud, da K ikke var en ordregivende myndighed i henhold til bygge- og anlægsdirektivet: Ikke taget til følge med henvisning til, at det var kommunen, der indgik lejekontrakten med G, og til, at denne lejekontrakt indeholdt detaljerede krav fra kommunen vedrørende byggeriet (præmis 45). Også bl.a. udtalt, at det var irrelevant, at byggeriet var bestemt for K (præmis 50).

I øvrigt bl.a. udtalt:

Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet omfatter kontrakter mellem en ordregivende myndighed og en entreprenør med det formål, at entreprenøren udfører et bygge- og anlægsarbejde, uanset hvordan en sådan kontrakt formelt kvalificeres (præmis 55). Hovedformålet med lejekontrakten mellem kommunen og G var opførelsen af messehallerne i overensstemmelse med de af kommunen fastlagte behov, og lejekontrakten var derfor en bygge- og anlægskontrakt, der skulle have været udbudt efter bygge- og anlægsdirektivet (præmis 63). Selvom den samlede leje oversteg byggeriets værdi, skulle lejekontrakten ikke som hævdet af Tyskland anses for en tjenesteydelseskontrakt om udlejning eller finansiering (præmis 60-61).

EF-domstolens dom af 12. november 2009, sag C-199/07, Kommissionen mod Grækenland

Principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed betyder, at tilbudsgivere og potentielle tilbudsgivere skal have ens chancer. Det var i strid med ligebehandlingsprincippet, at udbudsbekendtgørelsen besværliggjorde visse potentielle udenlandske tilbudsgiveres mulighed for at dokumentere deres kvalifikationer. Kriterier, der i det væsentlige angår tilbudsgivernes evne til at udføre den udbudte opgave, kan ikke anvendes som underkriterier

En græsk ordregivende myndighed iværksatte et offentligt udbud efter det tidligere forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektiv vedrørende udførelse af et analysearbejde ved opførelsen af en jernbanestation.

Udbudsbekendtgørelsen indeholdt forskellige angivelser om de kvalifikationer, som tilbudsgivere skulle være i besiddelse af.

Udbudsbekendtgørelsen indeholdt endvidere en særlig klausul om udenlandske virksomheder gående ud på, at følgende udenlandske virksomheder ikke kunne komme i betragtning som tilbudsgivere: Udenlandske virksomheder, der inden for det sidste halve år havde udtrykt interesse i at deltage i udbud fra samme ordregiver, og som i forbindelse hermed havde oplyst kvalifikationer, der adskilte sig fra dem, der nu blev stillet krav om.

Denne klausul var tilsyneladende en græsk standardklausul. Klausulens formål og nærmere rækkevidde fremgår ikke af dommen. Grækenland gjorde imidlertid gældende, at klausulen altid var blevet anvendt på den måde, at en virksomhed, der var i tvivl om klausulens rækkevidde, kunne henvende sig til udbyderen og få afklaret, hvorledes virksomhedens kvalifikationer skulle dokumenteres.

Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud på grundlag af følgende underkriterier (kort gengivet): 1. Erfaring med tilsvarende opgaver og 2. Kapacitet til at udføre den udbudte opgave.

Sagen var anlagt af Kommissionen, der gjorde gældende, at både den omtalte særlige klausul om udenlandske virksomheder og underkriterierne til tildelingskriteriet var i strid med EU-udbudsretten.

Grækenland påstod søgsmålet afvist bl.a. med henvisning til, at den græske lov, som udbuddet var foretaget efter, er afløst af en ny lov, der er i overensstemmelse med Kommissionens synspunkter, og til, at ophævelse af en indgået kontrakt efter græsk ret ikke kan finde sted.

EF-domstolen tog stilling til sagen således:

Ad afvisningspåstanden:

Ikke taget til følge, da de påberåbte forhold ikke medførte, at Kommissionens søgsmål var blevet uden genstand (præmis 23 og 25), og da udførelsen af den udbudte kontrakt ikke var afsluttet ved afgivelsen af Kommissionens begrundede udtalelse (præmis 26-27).

Ad den særlige klausul om udenlandske virksomheder:

Bl.a. udtalt: Ligebehandlingsprincippet omfatter princippet om gennemsigtighed, og de to principper betyder, at tilbudsgivere og potentielle tilbudsgivere skal have samme muligheder (præmis 37). Det er ikke i overensstemmelse med de to principper, at en særlig kategori af potentielle tilbudsgivere skal henvende sig til ordregiveren for at få supplerende og afklarende oplysninger (præmis 38), og den omhandlede klausul kan have en afskrækkende virkning på udenlandske potentielle tilbudsgivere, hvilket i øvrigt også havde været tilfældet i sagen (præmis 40).

EF-domstolen konkluderede herefter, at den omtalte klausul var i strid med ligebehandlingsprincippet.

Ad underkriterierne til tildelingskriteriet:

Bl.a. udtalt: Vurderingen af tilbudsgivernes kvalifikationer og tilbudsvurderingen kan finde sted samtidig, men er særskilte processer, der er omfattet forskellige regler (præmis 51). Kriterier, der ikke har til formål at identificere det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud, men i det væsentlige er forbundet med tilbudsgivernes evne til at udføre den udbudte opgave, kan ikke være tildelingskriterier (præmis 55). Dette var tilfældet for de underkriterier, der var anvendt ved udbuddet, og disse underkriterier kunne derfor ikke udgøre tildelingskriterier (præmis 56).

EF-domstolen konstaterede herefter, at de anvendte underkriterier var i strid med reglen om tildelingskriterier i det tidligere forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektiv.

EF-domstolens dom af 10. december 2009, sag C-299/08, Kommissionen mod Frankrig

En særlig fransk fremgangsmåde ved ordregivende myndigheders tildeling af kontrakter var i strid med Udbudsdirektivet

Denne dom angår en særlig fransk fremgangsmåde ved ordregivende myndigheders tildeling af kontrakter. Dommen indeholder ikke en beskrivelse af denne fremgangsmåde, men indskrænker sig til at gengive de franske lovregler om den. Disse regler er imidlertid ikke umiddelbart let forståelige, hverken i den danske oversættelse eller i den franske original.

Den omtalte fremgangsmåde synes i hvert fald til dels at kunne gå ud på følgende: Hvis en ordregivende myndighed ikke kan definere sit behov, kan ordregiveren indgå »definitionsaftaler« (marchés de définition) med et antal virksomheder. Efterfølgende kan ordregiveren indgå en eller flere »udførelsesaftaler« (marchés d'execution) med en eller flere af de virksomheder, som ordregiveren har indgået definitionsaftaler med.

Som et eksempel kan formentlig nævnes (med det forbehold, at de franske regler som omtalt ikke er lette at forstå): En kommune ønsker et nyt it-system, men er usikker på, hvilke krav der skal stilles til systemet. Kommunen iværksætter derfor et EU-udbud om indgåelse af definitionsaftaler, dvs. aftaler om at opstille kravspecifikationer til det nye it-system. På grundlag af udbuddet indgår kommunen definitionsaftaler med et antal it-virksomheder. Senere indhenter kommunen tilbud fra de pågældende it-virksomheder om levering af et nyt it-system, og på grundlag af denne tilbudsindhentning indgår kommunen udførelsesaftale med en eller flere af disse virksomheder, dvs. aftale(r) om levering af et eller flere nye it-systemer.

Fremgangsmåden minder om udbudsformen konkurrencepræget dialog, og Frankrig gjorde da også under sagen gældende, at fremgangsmåden om ikke andet havde hjemmel i Udbudsdirektivets regler om konkurrencepræget dialog. Frankrig fik imidlertid ikke medhold heri, jf. nedenfor.

EF-domstolen konstaterede i dommen af 10. december 2009, at den omtalte fremgangsmåde er i strid med Udbudsdirektivet. EF-domstolen udtalte bl.a.: Medlemsstaterne kan ikke fastsætte andre fremgangsmåder for indgåelse af ordregivende myndigheders kontrakter end dem, der er fastsat i Udbudsdirektivet (præmis 33). Den omtalte fremgangsmåde adskiller sig grundlæggende fra udbudsformen konkurrencepræget dialog, idet denne udbudsform er en fremgangsmåde for tildeling af en enkelt kontrakt, hvorimod den omhandlede franske fremgangsmåde angår tildeling af adskillige kontrakter af forskellig art, dvs. dels definitionsaftalerne, dels udførelsesaftalen eller -aftalerne (præmis 37). Det er i strid med ligebehandlingsprincippet, at kun virksomheder, med hvem der er indgået definitionsaftaler, kan afgive tilbud på udførelsesaftaler (præmis 40).

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 10. december 2009, sag T-195/08, Antwerpse Bouwwerken mod Kommissionen

Udbyderens indhentning af supplerende oplysninger fra nogle tilbudsgivere om deres tilbuds prismæssige sammensætning var ikke i strid med forhandlingsforbuddet eller ligebehandlingsprincippet. Indhentningen af de supplerende oplysninger kunne ske efter, at en forbigået tilbudsgiver i standstill-perioden havde protesteret mod udbyderens tildelingsbeslutning, idet standstill-reglerne ellers ville være uden indhold, ligesom udbyderen kunne ændre tildelingsbeslutningen på grundlag af de supplerende oplysninger. Almindelige fællesskabsretlige principper, herunder proportionalitetsprincippet, kan føre til en pligt for en udbyder til at indhente supplerende oplysninger fra tilbudsgiverne i visse tilfælde

Dommens fremstilling af sagens faktum virker noget kortfattet, men faktum kan tilsyneladende gengives således:

Kommissionen iværksatte et udbud vedrørende et byggearbejde. Tildelingskriteriet var laveste pris. Udbudsbetingelserne indeholdt en klausul om, at tilbud skulle angive alle delpriser, idet de ellers ville blive afvist.

Der indkom tilbud fra 4 tilbudsgivere, herunder fra en tilbudsgiver A og en tilbudsgiver C. A's tilbudspris, ca. 10,3 mio. €, var højere end bl.a. C's tilbudspris. Kommissionen konstaterede, at der i alle tilbud bortset fra A's tilbud manglede angivelse af en enkelt mindre delpris. Øjensynlig som følge af den omtalte klausul i udbudsbetingelserne anså Kommissionen herefter alle tilbud bortset fra A's tilbud som ukonditionsmæssige. Kommissionen meddelte derfor tilbudsgiverne, at den var indstillet på at indgå kontrakt med A.

Kommissionen tog dog samtidig over for A forbehold om at suspendere underskrivelsen af kontrakten med henblik på en supplerende undersøgelse, hvis der fremkom bemærkninger fra andre tilbudsgivere m.m. Dette forbehold var tydeligvis udformet på grundlag af Gennemførelsesforordningen artikel 158 a om standstill-periode. Efter denne bestemmelse kan udbyderen suspendere underskrivelsen af kontrakten og iværksætte supplerende undersøgelser, hvis der i standstill-perioden fremkommer kommentarer fra forbigåede tilbudsgivere eller andre oplysninger, der taler herfor.

C protesterede i standstill-perioden over for Kommissionen og gjorde gældende, at C's tilbud omfattede alle delpriser. Som følge af C's protest suspenderede Kommissionen kontraktunderskrivelsen med henvisning til Gennemførelsesforordningens artikel 158 a, ligesom Kommissionen indhentede supplerende oplysninger fra alle tilbudsgiverne bortset fra A om deres tilbuds prismæssige sammensætning.

Det fremgår ikke ganske klart, hvad de nævnte supplerende oplysninger gik ud på, men følgende synes at fremgå: Konklusionen af oplysningerne var, at den omtalte delpris reelt var indeholdt i de pågældende tilbud, men at den ved en fejl ikke var blevet medtaget i tilbudsgivernes opgørelser af den samlede tilbudspris. På baggrund af oplysningerne foretog Kommissionen derfor mindre justeringer af de samlede tilbudspriser i alle de pågældende tilbud, gående ud på en forhøjelse af hver tilbudspris med ca. 900 €. Kommissionen foretog også en mindre justering af tilbudsprisen i A's tilbud. Det fremgår ikke, hvad denne justering byggede på.

Kommissionen foretog derefter en vurdering af de justerede tilbud og konstaterede herved, at C's tilbud havde laveste tilbudspris, og at A's tilbud havde tredje laveste tilbudspris. Kommissionen besluttede herefter at indgå kontrakt med C.

A anlagde derefter sagen ved Retten i Første Instans og gjorde i det væsentligste gældende, at Kommissionen havde overtrådt ligebehandlingsprincippet og forhandlingsforbuddet ved den omtalte indhentning af supplerende oplysninger fra de andre tilbudsgivere om deres tilbuds prismæssige sammensætning.

Følgende bemærkes i sammenhængen:

Det forhandlingsforbud, der var tale om, følger af Gennemførelsesforordningens artikel 148, hvorefter kontakt mellem en ordregiver og tilbudsgiverne under en udbudsprocedure kun må finde sted undtagelsesvis. Som en specifik undtagelse nævnes i artikel 148, stk. 3, at ordregiveren kan kontakte en tilbudsgiver, hvis tilbuddet gør det nødvendigt at indhente yderligere oplysninger, eller hvis åbenlyse skrivefejl i tilbuddet skal rettes, under forudsætning af, at kontakten ikke fører til ændring af vilkårene i tilbuddet.

Forhandlingsforbuddet i Gennemførelsesforordningens artikel 148 må antages at svare ganske til det almindelige EU-retlige forhandlingsforbud. Den omtalte undtagelse i artikel 148, stk. 3, må antages at svare til, hvad der i den generelle udbudsretlige terminologi kaldes en tilladelig afklaring.

Rettens præmisser om sagens realitet (præmis 49-85) er udførlige. Sagens hovedproblem bestod imidlertid tilsyneladende blot af to ret enkle spørgsmål, dvs.:

1) Var Kommissionens indhentning af supplerende prisoplysninger i strid med forhandlingsforbuddet, eller var den blot en tilladelig afklaring som hjemlet i Gennemførelsesforordningens artikel 148, stk. 3?

2) Hvis Kommissionens indhentning af supplerende prisoplysninger ikke var i strid med forhandlingsforbuddet, kunne den så alligevel ikke finde sted som følge af udbudsbetingelsernes klausul om, at tilbud, der ikke indeholdt angivelse af alle delpriser, ville blive afvist?

Fra Rettens præmisser kan nævnes:

Gennemførelsesforordningens artikel 148, stk. 3, pålægger ikke ordregiverne pligt til at tage kontakt med tilbudsgiverne i de undtagelsestilfælde, som bestemmelsen angår. En sådan pligt kan dog følge af almindelige fællesskabsretlige principper, hvilket vil være tilfældet, hvis en tvetydighed i et tilbud sandsynligvis kan forklares på en enkel måde og let kan fjernes. En sådan pligt kan endvidere følge af proportionalitetsprincippet. (Præmis 54-57).

Den delpris, der tilsyneladende manglede i C's tilbud, var reelt indeholdt i tilbuddet og var blot ved en fejl ikke angivet i C's sammenfatning af tilbudsprisen. Der var således tale om en simpel fejl i tilbuddet eller i det mindste en tvetydighed, der kunne forklares på en enkel måde, og som nemt kunne fjernes (præmis 74). Kommissionen havde derfor kunnet indhente oplysninger fra C uden at overtræde udbudsbetingelsernes klausul om, at tilbuddene skulle omfatte alle delpriser (præmis 75).

Det var uden betydning, at Kommissionens anmodning til C om supplerende oplysninger var fremsat, efter at C havde protesteret mod Kommissionens meddelelse om, at Kommissionen var indstillet på at indgå kontrakt med A, idet den ovenfor refererede regel i Gennemførelsesforordningens artikel 158 a om suspension af kontraktunderskrivelsen m.m. i modsat fald ville være uden indhold (præmis 76). Denne udtalelse sigtede efter det foreliggende til et anbringende fra A om, at Kommissionen var bundet af sin oprindelige beslutning om at indgå kontrakt med A (præmis 45, anbringendet kan formentlig gengives således).

Kommissionen havde efter modtagelsen af de supplerende oplysninger modtagelse med rette anset C's tilbudspris som den laveste (præmis 77). Kommissionen havde endvidere ikke overtrådt forhandlingsforbuddet, men havde alene benyttet sig af sin adgang til at indhente yderligere oplysninger i henhold til Gennemførelsesforordningens artikel 148, stk. 3 (præmis 78). Kommissionen havde desuden overholdt ligebehandlingsprincippet, idet den havde anmodet alle de tilbudsgivere, hvis tilbud havde samme fejl som C's tilbud, om yderligere oplysninger (præmis 80).

Kommissionen blev herefter frifundet og blev også frifundet for en erstatningspåstand fra C.

Som det fremgår, besvarede Retten reelt de to spørgsmål, der er opstillet ovenfor, således:

Ad spørgsmål 1: Kommissionens indhentelse af supplerende prisoplysninger var ikke i strid med forhandlingsforbuddet, men var en tilladelig afklaring med hjemmel i Gennemførelsesforordningens artikel 148, stk. 3.

Ad spørgsmål 2: Kommissionens indhentelse af yderligere prisoplysninger fra C var ikke i strid med udbudsbetingelsernes klausul om, at tilbud, der ikke angav alle delpriser, ville blive afvist, idet alle delpriserne reelt var indeholdt i C's tilbud.

(Det fremgår forudsætningsvist, at heller ikke Kommissionens indhentelse af yderligere prisoplysninger fra de øvrige tilbudsgivere bortset fra A og C var i strid med den omtalte klausul i udbudsbetingelserne).

Nogle enkelte yderligere spørgsmål, der ikke skønnes at have almen udbudsretlig interesse, er ikke omtalt i ovenstående referat.

EF-domstolens dom af 23. december 2009, sag C-376/08, Serrantoni og Consorzio stabile edili

Nogle italienske lovregler om, at et konsortium og et medlem af konsortiet ikke kan afgive tilbud under samme udbud, var i strid med fællesskabsrettens grundlæggende principper, herunder proportionalitetsprincippet. Traktatens grundlæggende principper, navnlig ligebehandlingsprincippet, gælder for udbud under tærskelværdien under forudsætning af, at der foreligger en grænseoverskridende interesse. Medlemsstaterne har en vis skønsmargin med hensyn til, hvorledes overholdelsen af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed skal sikres, men proportionalitetsprincippet skal overholdes

Den italienske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter indeholder nogle regler om konsortiers adgang til at afgive tilbud. Disse regler omfatter bl.a. »stabile konsortier«, dvs. konsortier, der er indgået for en varighed af mindst 5 år.

Ifølge den italienske lovgivning kan et stabilt konsortium og et medlem af konsortiet ikke begge afgive tilbud under samme udbud. Hvis det alligevel sker, skal både konsortiet og det pågældende medlem af konsortiet udelukkes fra at afgive tilbud, ligesom kan der blive tale om strafansvar. Formålet med disse regler og baggrunden for dem fremgår ikke af dommen.

Sagen angik et udbud iværksat af en italiensk ordregivende myndighed vedrørende en tjenesteydelse. Der blev afgivet tilbud af et stabilt konsortium og af en virksomhed, der var medlem af det stabile konsortium. Som følge af de ovennævnte regler udelukkede udbyderen både konsortiet og den pågældende virksomhed fra at afgive tilbud, ligesom udbyderen indgav politianmeldelse.

Sagen blev indbragt for en italiensk forvaltningsdomstol, der tilsyneladende navnlig var i tvivl med hensyn til, om de omtalte italienske regler var i strid med det EU-retlige ligebehandlingsprincip, fordi de kun gælder for stabile konsortier og ikke for andre konsortier. Forvaltningsdomstolen forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen med nogle spørgsmål, der sigtede til, om de omtalte italienske regler er i strid med Udbudsdirektivet og forskellige traktatbestemmelser.

Fra EF-domstolens udtalelser kan nævnes:

Udbuddets værdi var under Udbudsdirektivets tærskelværdi, hvorfor det var ufornødent at tage stilling til, om de italienske regler var i strid med Udbudsdirektivet (præmis 21 og 28). Traktatens grundlæggende principper, navnlig ligebehandlingsprincippet, gælder imidlertid også for udbud under tærskelværdien (præmis 22), hvilket dog forudsætter (»présuppose«) en grænseoverskridende interesse (præmis 24).

Spørgsmålet i sagen var, om de italienske regler var i strid med principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed (præmis 29). Medlemsstaterne har en vis skønsmargin med hensyn til, hvordan disse princippers overholdelse skal sikres (præmis 31-32), men proportionalitetsprincippet skal overholdes (præmis 33).

EF-domstolen udtalte sig herefter udførligt i præmis 34-45, om hvorvidt regler, der udelukker et konsortium og et medlem af konsortiet fra at afgive tilbud under samme udbud, er i strid med fællesskabsretten. Udtalelserne kan ikke gengives kort, men kan formentlig sammenfattes således: Sådanne regler har grænseoverskridende interesse. De kan eventuelt være begrundet i legitime formål vedrørende bekæmpelse af konkurrencebegrænsende aftaler (»collusions potentielles«) mellem et konsortium og dets medlemmer. Regler som de omhandlede italienske regler er imidlertid i strid med proportionalitetsprincippet, idet de opstiller en uafkræftelig formodning for konkurrencefordrejning, hvorved de går videre, end hvad der er nødvendigt for at opnå de nævnte formål.

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter forvaltningsdomstolens spørgsmål med, at regler som de omhandlede italienske regler er i strid med fællesskabsretten.

EF-domstolens dom af 23. december 2009, sag C-305/08, CoNISMa

At et organ modtager offentlig finansiering eller statsstøtte, er ikke i sig selv til hinder for, at organet afgiver tilbud under et EU-udbud. National ret må ikke udelukke universiteter o.l., der ikke driver virksomhed med gevinst for øje, og som har ret til at tilbyde udførelse af tjenesteydelser, fra at afgive tilbud under EU-udbud vedrørende de pågældende tjenesteydelser

Den italienske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter indeholder en opregning af, hvem der kan afgive tilbud.

En italiensk ordregivende myndighed iværksatte et udbud vedrørende en tjenesteydelse. Blandt tilbudsgiverne var et konsortium C, der består af nogle italienske universiteter og ministerier. Udbyderen udelukkede imidlertid C fra at afgive tilbud, efter det foreliggende fordi lovgivningens opregning af, hvem der kan afgive tilbud, efter udbyderens opfattelse skulle fortolkes således, at et konsortium som C ikke var omfattet af opregningen.

C klagede til den italienske regering, der indhentede en udtalelse fra et rådgivende organ, Consiglio di stato, der på sin side forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen.

Følgende synes at fremgå: Den fortolkning af den italienske lovgivning, der lå bag udbyderens udelukkelse af C, gik i sin kerne ud på, at kun virksomheder, der arbejder med gevinst for øje, kan afgive tilbud. Denne fortolkning var nogenlunde gængs, men Consiglio di stato var i tvivl om fortolkningens overensstemmelse med Udbudsdirektivet. Det, som navnlig voldte tvivl hos Consiglio di stato, var Udbudsdirektivets begreb »økonomisk aktør«, jf. Udbudsdirektivets artikel 1, stk. 2, litra a, og stk. 8. Consiglio di stato stillede EF-domstolen to spørgsmål, der kort kan gengives således:

1) Skal Udbudsdirektivet forstås således, at et konsortium, der udelukkende består af universiteter og offentlige myndigheder, er udelukket fra at afgive tilbud under et udbud om en tjenesteydelse?

2) Er den italienske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter i strid med Udbudsdirektivet, hvis denne lovgivning skal fortolkes således, at organer, der ikke driver virksomhed med gevinst for øje, ikke kan afgive tilbud?

Fra EF-domstolens udtalelser kan nævnes (af overskuelighedsgrunde til dels stærkt sammentrængt og omformuleret gengivet):

Consiglio di stato er en ret, der kan forelægge præjudicielle spørgsmål for EF-domstolen (præmis 25).

Ad spørgsmål 1:

Udbudsdirektivet definerer ikke begrebet økonomisk aktør, og direktivet åbner mulighed for, at offentligretlige organer afgiver tilbud (præmis 28-29). At en økonomisk aktør har en fordelagtig stilling som følge af offentlig finansiering eller statsstøtte, udelukker ikke i sig selv (»a priori«) fra deltagelse i et udbud. En anden fortolkning af Udbudsdirektivet ville medføre, at ordregivende myndigheder uden udbud kunne indgå kontrakter med organer, der ikke i det væsentlige handler med gevinst for øje (præmis 43).

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter spørgsmål 1 således: Organer, der ikke hovedsageligt driver virksomhed med gevinst for øje, som ikke organisatorisk er opbygget som en virksomhed, og som ikke er fast til stede på markedet, såsom universiteter og konsortier bestående af universiteter og ministerier, kan deltage i EU-udbud vedrørende tjenesteydelser.

Ad spørgsmål 2:

Det følger af Udbudsdirektivets artikel 4, stk. 1 (om økonomiske aktører, der har ret til at udøve virksomhed i deres egen medlemsstat), at medlemsstaterne kan tillade universiteter mfl. at virke på markedet og tilbyde udførelse af visse tjenesteydelser, og national lovgivning om implementering af Udbudsdirektivet kan ikke forbyde universiteter mfl., der har en sådan tilladelse, at afgive tilbud under EU-udbud vedrørende de pågældende tjenesteydelser (præmis 47-49). Det påhvilede endvidere den forelæggende ret i videst muligt omfang at fortolke national ret i overensstemmelse med Udbudsdirektivet og om fornødent at undlade at anvende en modstridende bestemmelse i national ret (præmis 50).

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter spørgsmål 2 med, at Udbudsdirektivet er til hinder for fortolkning af national lovgivning således, at national lovgivning forbyder enheder som universiteter mfl., der ikke hovedsageligt forfølger et formål med gevinst for øje, at give tilbud vedrørende en tjenesteydelse, som de i henhold til national ret er berettiget til at tilbyde.

EU-domstolens dom af 28. januar 2010 i sag C-406/08, Uniplex

En national klagefrist skal først løbe fra det tidspunkt, hvor klageren kendte eller burde kende den påberåbte overtrædelse af udbudsreglerne

Den engelske lov om offentlige kontrakter indeholder en regel om, at retssager skal anlægges ufortøvet og under alle omstændigheder (»promptly and in any event«) senest tre måneder efter, at grundene til sagsanlægget opstod, medmindre retten finder, at der foreligger en god grund til at forlænge fristen.

For en engelsk domstol verserede en sag, der var anlagt af en forbigået tilbudsgiver mod en ordregivende myndighed vedrørende overtrædelse af udbudsreglerne. Det var under sagen et stridspunkt, om den ovenfor nævnte frist på tre måneder skulle regnes fra ordregiverens meddelelse til tilbudsgiveren om tildelingsbeslutningen eller fra ordregiverens senere uddybende begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen. Dette foranledigede den engelske domstol til at forelægge sagen for EU-domstolen med to spørgsmål. EU-domstolen omformulerede reelt spørgsmålene til tre spørgsmål, der stærkt sammentrængt kan gengives således (i gengivelsen bruges ordet klage som synonymt for sagsanlæg og ordet klager som synonymt for sagsøger):

1) Skal en national klagefrist løbe fra tidspunktet for den påståede overtrædelse af udbudsreglerne eller fra det tidspunkt, hvor klageren kendte eller burde kende overtrædelsen?

2) Er 1. kontroldirektiv til hinder for en national lovbestemmelse om, at klager skal indgives ufortøvet?

3) Hvorledes forholder den engelske lovbestemmelse om, at retten kan forlænge klagefristen, sig til 1. kontroldirektiv?

Fra EU-domstolens udtalelser kan nævnes:

Ad spørgsmål 1: Der kan fastsættes en national klagefrist, men formålet med 1. kontroldirektiv kan kun opfyldes, hvis en sådan frist først løber fra det tidspunkt, hvor klageren kendte eller burde kende den påberåbte overtrædelse (præmis 26 og 32).

Ad spørgsmål 2: En national bestemmelse om, at klage skal indgives ufortøvet og under alle omstændigheder inden for tre måneder, indebærer usikkerhed og medfører, at klagefristens længde ikke kan forudsiges. En national lovbestemmelse, der giver klageinstansen beføjelse til en skønsmæssig anvendelse af en regel om, at klage skal indgives ufortøvet, er derfor i strid med 1. kontroldirektiv (præmis 41-43).

Ad spørgsmål 3: Den nationale domstol havde pligt til at anvende sin beføjelse til at forlænge fristen således, at det blev sikret, at fristen først løb fra det tidspunkt, hvor klageren kendte eller burde kende den påberåbte overtrædelse af udbudsreglerne (præmis 47). Hvis en sådan fortolkning ikke var mulig, havde den nationale domstol pligt til at undlade at anvende reglen om klagefrist (præmis 49).

EU-domstolens dom af 28. januar 2010, sag C-456/08, Kommissionen mod Irland

Det var i strid med 1. kontroldirektiv, at en udbyder ikke gav tilbudsgiver E underretning om udbyderens beslutning om at indgå kontrakt med tilbudsgiver C, men kun havde givet E underretning om udbyderens forudgående beslutning om at indlede forhandlinger med C. Det var desuden i strid med 1. kontroldirektiv, at en national regel om klagefrist blev anvendt på andre beslutninger end dem, som reglen udtrykkeligt angik, ligesom det var i strid med 1. kontroldirektiv, at reglen var formuleret på en måde, der gav anledning til retsusikkerhed

En irsk vejmyndighed iværksatte et EU-udbud med forhandling vedrørende anlæg og drift af en vejstrækning. Der indkom tilbud fra to konsortier C og E. På et tidspunkt meddelte udbyderen E, at udbyderen ville indlede forhandlinger med C, og at forhandlingerne kunne føre til, at C fik tildelt kontrakten. Udbyderen tog dog forbehold om at indlede forhandlinger med E, hvis forhandlingerne med C endte uden resultat.

Nogle måneder senere besluttede udbyderen at indgå kontrakt med C, og en sådan kontrakt blev indgået. Udbyderen gav ikke E underretning om beslutningen om at indgå kontrakt med C eller om indgåelsen af kontrakten.

En virksomhed, der havde deltaget i E, anlagde retssag mod udbyderen ved en irsk domstol og gjorde gældende, at udbyderen havde overtrådt udbudsreglerne på forskellige punkter.

Den irske domstol afviste imidlertid sagen. Dette skyldtes en irsk lovbestemmelse, der går ud på følgende: En retssag vedrørende en ordregivende myndigheds tildeling af en kontrakt eller kontraktindgåelse skal anlægges så hurtigt som muligt og under alle omstændigheder inden for tre måneder efter, at grunden til sagsanlægget er indtrådt, medmindre retten finder det rimeligt at forlænge fristen. Den irske domstol anså tremåneders fristen for at løbe fra udbyderens meddelelse om, at udbyderen ville indlede forhandlinger med C. Denne meddelelse var givet mere end tre måneder før sagsanlægget, og domstolen konkluderede derfor, at sagen var anlagt for sent.

Sagsøgeren klagede til Kommissionen, der anlagde sagen mod Irland ved EU-domstolen under påberåbelse af, at Irland havde overtrådt 1. kontroldirektiv m.m. på forskellige punkter i sammenhængen.

EU-domstolen gav Kommissionen medhold. Fra EU-domstolens udtalelser kan nævnes (Klagenævnets litrering, til dels lidt omformuleret gengivet):

1) Det var en overtrædelse af artikel 8, stk. 2, i 1. kontroldirektiv, at udbyderen ikke havde givet E underretning om beslutningen om at indgå kontrakt med C (præmis 34).

2) Det var en overtrædelse af 1. kontroldirektiv, at den irske lovbestemmelse gør det muligt for de irske domstole at anvende tre-måneders fristen på beslutninger, som en ordregivende myndighed træffer under et udbud før tildelingsbeslutningen, selvom det ikke fremgår udtrykkeligt af lovbestemmelsen, at fristen finder anvendelse på sådanne beslutninger (præmis 66).

3) Den irske lovbestemmelse medfører retsusikkerhed som følge af, at det efter bestemmelsens formulering ikke kan udelukkes, at en domstol afviser et sagsanlæg, selvom sagsanlægget er sket før udløbet af tre-måneders fristen. Denne retsusikkerhed er i strid med 1. kontroldirektiv (præmis 74-75). Det var uden betydning, at ingen irsk domstol efter det oplyste har afvist en sag, der var anlagt før udløbet af tre-måneders fristen (præmis 77), ligesom det ikke var afgørende, at retten efter lovbestemmelsen kan forlænge fristen for sagsanlæg (præmis 81).

Sagsøgeren havde for den irske domstol gjort gældende, at tre-måneders fristen skulle regnes fra udbyderens indgåelse af kontrakten med C, og at sagen derfor var anlagt rettidigt, idet den var anlagt mindre end tre måneder senere. EU-domstolen havde ikke anledning til at tage stilling til dette spørgsmål.

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 2. marts 2010, sag T-70/05, Evropaïki Dynamiki mod EMSA

Der må ikke anvendes delkriterier, som ikke er oplyst på forhånd, men en udbyder kan under visse betingelser uden forudgående oplysning anvende »vægtningskoofficienter« vedrørende underkriterierne. Det var beklageligt, at udbyderen ikke havde sikret sig bevis for tidspunktet for afsendelsen af en uddybende begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen, som en tilbudsgiver havde anmodet om, men forholdet havde ikke påvirket tilbudsgiverens retsstilling. Udbyderen havde uberettiget taget et tilbud i betragtning, selvom tilbuddet ikke som krævet i udbudsbetingelserne var afsendt med anbefalet brev senest på dagen for tilbudsfristens udløb, idet en postkvittering og en erklæring fra en postfunktionær af nærmere angivne grunde ikke kunne sidestilles med dokumentation for et anbefalet brev. Udbyderen var ikke forpligtet til at indgå kontrakt med den eneste konditionsmæssige tilbudsgiver, men kunne i stedet annullere udbuddet

Denne dom, der er meget lang (217 præmisser), refereres kun i det omfang den skønnes at have nogenlunde almen udbudsretlig interesse. Dommen er ikke oversat til dansk, og referatet er udformet på grundlag af den franske version af dommen.

Det europæiske maritime sikkerhedsagentur (EMSA), der er en fællesskabsinstitution, iværksatte to udbud vedrørende henholdsvis evaluering og fremtidig udvikling af et sikkerhedssystem (udbud 1) og etablering af et informationssystem (udbud 2). I begge udbud var tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud. Sagen var anlagt af en virksomhed, der havde afgivet tilbud vedrørende begge udbud, men som ikke havde fået tildelt kontrakten i henhold til nogen af dem.

Vedrørende udbud 1:

Sagsøgerens anbringender og Rettens stillingtagen til dem kan gengives således:

Anbringende 1: Udbyderen havde overtrådt udbudsreglerne ved ikke at besvare nogle spørgsmål fra sagsøgeren med henvisning til, at spørgsmålene var fremkommet for sent.

Dette anbringende sigtede efter det foreliggende til følgende: Tilbudsfristen udløb den 9. august, og ifølge udbudsbetingelserne skulle spørgsmål være modtaget af udbyderen 10 dage forinden. Udbyderen havde imidlertid først modtaget de pågældende spørgsmål fra sagsøgeren med telefax den 2. august. Sagsøgeren gjorde bl.a. gældende, at sagsøgeren havde søgt at sende spørgsmålene pr. telefax den 31. juli, men at dette var mislykkedes, tilsyneladende på grund af fejlfunktioner ved udbyderens telefax.

Anbringendet blev ikke taget til følge bl.a. med henvisning til, at 10 dage før 9. august er 30. juli, og at fristen for at stille spørgsmål derfor var udløbet den 30. juli (præmis 117).

Anbringende 2: Underkriterierne var uklare:

Ikke taget til følge. Retten fremsatte i præmis 129-132 nogle udtalelser om udformningen af underkriterier til tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud. Udtalelserne refereres ikke, da de ikke skønnes at indeholde nydannelser. Retten fandt endvidere, at det fremgik tilstrækkeligt af udbudsbetingelserne, hvad der sigtedes til med underkriterierne (præmis 136) og konkluderede, at underkriterierne ikke var uklare (præmis 138).

Anbringende 3: Det var i strid med udbudsreglerne, at udbyderen i forbindelse med tilbudsvurderingen havde opstillet en række delkriterier til et af underkriterierne og havde vurderet tilbuddene på grundlag af disse delkriterier:

Ikke taget til følge. Udtalt, at en udbyder ikke må anvende delkriterier, som tilbudsgiverne ikke har fået oplysning om på forhånd (præmis 147). En udbyder må imidlertid uden forudgående oplysning herom anvende vægtningskoofficienter (»coefficients de pondération«) for underkriterierne under forudsætning af, at sådanne vægtningskoofficenter 1) ikke ændrer underkriterierne, 2) ikke indeholder elementer, der kunne have påvirket tilbuddenes indhold, hvis de havde været kendt på forhånd, og 3) ikke virker diskriminerende (præmis 148). Sagsøgeren havde ikke påvist, at udbyderen havde overtrådt disse betingelser ved tilbudsvurderingen i relation til det underkriterium, der var tale om (præmis 155).

Anbringende 4: Udbyderen havde ikke givet sagsøgeren fyldestgørende begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen og beslutningen om ikke at antage sagsøgerens tilbud.

Anbringendet sigtede bl.a. til, at udbyderen efter sagsøgerens opfattelse ikke havde givet sagsøgeren en klar forklaring på tildelingsbeslutningen, og til, at sagsøgeren ifølge sin angivelse først modtog en uddybende begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen, som sagsøgeren havde anmodet om, efter at sagsøgeren rykket for den. Udbyderen gjorde på det sidstnævnte punkt gældende, at den uddybende begrundelse var blevet sendt tidligere ved et almindeligt brev.

Anbringendet blev ikke taget til følge (præmis 181). Bl.a. henvist til, at udbyderen havde opfyldt sine forpligtelser med hensyn til underretning om tildelingsbeslutningen og uddybende begrundelse efter anmodning (præmis 174-179). Udtalt, at det var beklageligt, at udbyderen ikke havde sikret sig bevis for, at sagsøgeren havde modtaget den oprindelige uddybende begrundelse, men at forholdet ikke havde påvirket sagsøgerens retsstilling (præmis 175).

Anbringende 5: Udbyderens tilbudsvurdering var forkert:

Ikke taget til følge med henvisning til forskellige forhold, herunder udbyderens skønsbeføjelse (præmis 196). Det var uden betydning, at udbyderens evalueringsrapport nævnede visse mindre fejl i den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud (præmis 202).

Sagsøgeren fik således ikke medhold på noget punkt vedrørende udbud nr. 1.

Vedrørende udbud 2:

Sagsøgeren fremsatte forskellige anbringender, men Retten fandt kun anledning til at tage stilling til et af disse anbringender, nemlig et anbringende om, at udbyderen havde været uberettiget til at tage den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud i betragtning som følge af, at dette tilbud var indgivet for sent.

Dette anbringende sigtede til følgende:

Ifølge udbudsbetingelserne udløb fristen for at afgive tilbud den 9. august, således at tilbuddene enten skulle være afleveret til udbyderen inden kl. 16 på denne dag eller være afsendt med anbefalet brev senest på denne dag.

Udbyderen åbnede tilbuddene den 25. august og konstaterede i forbindelse hermed, at tilbuddet fra den tilbudsgiver, der senere blev valgt, var modtaget hos udbyderen den 10. august, og at den konvolut, som tilbuddet lå i, ikke havde noget poststempel. I et brev af 26. august bad udbyderen tilbudsgiveren om dokumentation for, at tilbuddet var afsendt rettidigt i overensstemmelse med udbudsbetingelserne. Tilbudsgiveren sendte derefter udbyderen en postkvittering dateret 6. august og en erklæring af 2. september fra en postfunktionær, hvorefter det pågældende postkontor havde ekspederet et brev fra tilbudsgiveren til udbyderen den 6. august. Udbyderen anså herefter tilbudsgiverens tilbud for rettidigt afsendt og besluttede at indgå kontrakt med tilbudsgiveren.

Retten fandt, at postkvitteringen ikke kunne sidestilles med sædvanlig dokumentation for afsendelse af et anbefalet brev. Retten henviste herved til, at postkvitteringen ikke indeholdt angivelse af afsender og modtager og til, at det efter sagens oplysninger da også var erklæringen fra postfunktionæren, der havde bevirket, at udbyderen anså tilbuddet for rettidigt afsendt. Retten henviste videre til, at erklæringen fra postfunktionæren ikke gav nogen forklaring på, at der ikke var poststempel på konvolutten, og til, at erklæringen ikke gik ud på, at brevet var sendt anbefalet. (Præmis 94-96). Udbyderen havde endvidere ingen skønsbeføjelse med hensyn til sin konstatering af, om et tilbud var rettidigt (præmis 100), og udbyderen havde herefter ikke været berettiget til at tage den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud i betragtning (præmis 102). Det var uden betydning, at der kun var én anden tilbudsgiver, dvs. sagsøgeren, idet udbyderen ikke var forpligtet til at indgå kontrakt med sagsøgeren, men kunne have annulleret udbuddet (præmis 105).

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 19. marts 2010 i sag T-50/05, Evropaïki Dynamiki mod Kommissionen

En deltager i konsortium, der ikke var en juridisk person, kunne anlægge sag vedrørende et udbud, som konsortiet havde afgivet tilbud under. Diverse klagepunkter ikke taget til følge

Denne dom er meget omfattende, men refereres stærkt sammentrængt, da dommen ikke skønnes at have den store almene udbudsretlige interesse.

Kommissionen iværksatte et udbud vedrørende en it-ydelse. Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud på grundlag af forskellige underkriterier om kvalitet og pris m.m. Af udbudsbetingelserne fremgik, at kun tilbud, der opnåede nogle nærmere angivne points ved tilbudsvurderingen, ville blive taget i betragtning.

Der indkom et antal tilbud, hvoraf tre blev taget i betragtning, og Kommissionen besluttede at tildele kontrakten til en af de tre tilbudsgivere. En af de tre andre tilbudsgivere var et konsortium, og en virksomhed, som var indgået i dette konsortium, anlagde derefter sagen ved Retten i Første instans.

Retten henviste til, at det tilbudsgivende konsortium, som sagsøgeren havde deltaget i, ikke var en juridisk person, og at sagsøgeren derfor kunne anlægge sagen (præmis 40). Retten tog i øvrigt stilling til sagen således (Klagenævnets litrering):

Anbringende 1: Kommissionen havde overtrådt ligebehandlingsprincippet som følge af, at kun den valgte tilbudsgiver havde haft nogle nærmere angivne tekniske oplysninger:

Ikke taget til følge, da anbringendets rigtighed med hensyn til nogle af de pågældende oplysninger ikke var godtgjort, og da sagsøgeren ikke havde godtgjort, at de øvrige oplysninger havde haft betydning (præmis 74 og præmis 100-101). Herved fremsat forskellige generelle udtalelser om principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed (præmis 55-59).

Anbringende 2: Underkriterierne var uegnede:

Ikke taget til følge, da anbringendets rigtighed ikke var bevist m.m. (præmis 111-115).

Anbringende 3: Kommissionen havde ikke udvist tilstrækkelig omhu og havde derved tilsidesat princippet om god forvaltningsskik:

Ikke taget til følge, da der ikke var grundlag herfor (præmis 127).

Anbringende 4: Kommissionen havde ikke givet tilstrækkelig begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen:

Ikke taget til følge, da Kommissionen havde givet tilstrækkelig begrundelse, således at sagsøgeren kunne forsvare sine rettigheder og Retten kunne udøve sin prøvelsesret (præmis 142). En mindre overskridelse af 15-dages fristen for uddybende begrundelse efter anmodning var beklagelig, men var uden betydning (præmis 141).

Anbringende 5: Kommissionens tildelingsbeslutning var forkert:

Ikke taget til følge, da det ikke var godtgjort, at Kommissionen havde udøvet et åbenbart urigtigt skøn ved tilbudsvurderingen (præmis 178).

Kommissionen blev herefter frifundet.

EU-domstolens dom af 25. marts 2010 i sag C-451/08, Helmut Müller
Udbudsdirektivet omfatter ikke salg af fast ejendom og omfatter kun gensidigt bebyrdende aftaler. For at en aftale kan anses for gensidigt bebyrdende, skal den give den ordregivende myndighed en økonomisk fordel. Opfyldelsen af en generel byplanmæssig interesse er ikke en sådan økonomisk fordel, og direktivet omfatter ikke, at en ordregivende myndighed udøver sine beføjelser som planmyndighed. Begrebet koncession forudsætter, at der overføres råderet fra koncessionsgiveren til koncessionshaveren, og at koncessionshaveren har i hvert fald en væsentlig del af risikoen. Denne risiko skal være forbundet med driften, hvilket ikke er tilfældet med hensyn til den risiko, der følger af planmyndighedens dispositioner. Tidsubegrænsede koncessioner er formentlig i strid med EU-retten

Denne dom angår Udbudsdirektivets regler om koncessioner vedrørende bygge- og anlægskontrakter (artikel 56-65). Disse regler kan ikke gengives kort, men går i deres kerne ud på, at koncessioner om bygge- og anlægsarbejder er omfattet af udbudspligten.

Dommen forekommer umiddelbart vanskeligt tilgængelig, hvilket tilsyneladende i hvert fald delvis hænger sammen med følgende: Den forelæggende tyske domstols spørgsmål havde reference dels til nogle bestemmelser i den tyske lovgivning, som efter den tyske domstols opfattelse var i strid med EU-retten, dels til en bestemmelse, der er affattet anderledes i den tyske version af Udbudsdirektivet end i de øvrige sprogversioner af dette direktiv. Hertil kommer, at EU-domstolens udtalelser reelt kun var udtryk for svar på nogle af den tyske domstols spørgsmål.

Dommens resultat synes imidlertid at være relativt enkelt, jf. resuméets tre afsluttende afsnit. Dommen kan gengives således:

En tysk forbundsmyndighed, der var ejer af en nedlagt kaserne, satte kasernen til salg i form af et udbud og solgte kasernen til den højstbydende. Samtidig foregik der overvejelser i den kommune, hvor kasernen lå, om etablering af en byplan for kaserneområdet. Det fremgår, at en sådan byplan efter den tyske lovgivning kan kombineres med en aftale mellem planmyndigheden og en privat virksomhed om, at den private virksomhed får eneret og pligt til at bebygge planområdet i overensstemmelse med byplanen. Der var tilsyneladende i kommunen overvejelser om at indgå en sådan aftale med den virksomhed, der havde købt den tidligere kaserne.

En anden af de virksomheder, der havde givet tilbud på køb af kasernen, klagede til et klageorgan og gjorde gældende, at salget af kasernen skulle have været udbudt efter Udbudsdirektivet. Klageorganet tog ikke klagen til følge. Sagen blev indbragt for en tysk domstol, der umiddelbart var af den opfattelse, at der var tale om en koncession vedrørende et bygge- og anlægsarbejde som følge af, at køberen af kaserneområdet formentlig ville få eneret til at bebygge området. Den tyske domstol forelagde sagen for EU-domstolen med en længere række spørgsmål.

EU-domstolens udtalelser kan gengives således (Klagenævnets litrering):

1) Salg af fast ejendom er ikke omfattet af udbudspligten efter Udbudsdirektivet (præmis 41). Direktivet omfatter endvidere kun gensidigt bebyrdende aftaler (præmis 47). Heri ligger, at den ordregivende myndighed skal modtage en ydelse mod vederlag, og en sådan ydelse skal give den ordregivende myndighed en økonomisk fordel (præmis 48-49). En sådan økonomisk fordel foreligger, hvis den ordregivende myndighed bliver ejer af eller får rådighed over bygge- og anlægsarbejderne m.m. (præmis 50-52). Opfyldelsen af en offentlig byplanmæssig interesse er derimod ikke en økonomisk fordel som omtalt (præmis 57).

2) Da Udbudsdirektivet kun omfatter gensidigt bebyrdende aftaler, forudsætter begrebet bygge- og anlægskontrakt, at den ordregivende myndighed efter national har en retligt bindende forpligtelse til direkte eller indirekte at gennemføre de arbejder, der er genstand for kontrakten. (Præmis 60 og 63. Ikke mindst disse udtalelser forekommer vanskeligt forståelige, bl.a. fordi de umiddelbart synes at referere til noget helt andet end det, som den tyske domstol havde spurgt om på det pågældende punkt. Udtalelserne sigter tilsyneladende til, at den ordregivende myndighed skal have en eller anden form for privatretlig forpligtelse i sammenhængen).

3) Angivelsen i Udbudsdirektivets artikel 1, stk. 2, litra b) om, at der ved offentlige bygge- og anlægskontrakter bl.a. forstås »udførelse ved et hvilket som helst middel af et bygge- og anlægsarbejde, der svarer til behov præciseret af den ordregivende myndighed«, omfatter ikke, at en ordregivende myndighed undersøger et byggeprojekt eller udøver sine beføjelser som planmyndighed (præmis 69).

4) En koncession forudsætter, at den ordregivende myndighed har retten til at råde over det, som koncessionen angår. Ved koncessionen overfører den ordregivende myndighed denne ret til koncessionshaveren. (Præmis 72). En sådan overførelse sker imidlertid normalt ikke, når den anden part har ejendomsretten og dermed råderetten i forvejen (Præmis 73). Kernen i begrebet koncession består endvidere af, at koncessionshaveren har den væsentligste eller i hvert fald en væsentlig del af den økonomiske risiko. Denne risiko skal være forbundet med driften (præmis 75), hvilket ikke var tilfældet i den foreliggende sag, idet risikoen for køberen af kasernen bestod i kommunens dispositioner som byplanmyndighed og ikke lå i et kontraktforhold om en koncession (præmis 78). Tungtvejende grunde taler i øvrigt for at anse en tidsubegrænset koncession som værende i strid med EU-retten (præmis 79).

5) Udbudsdirektivet finder ikke anvendelse på en situation som den foreliggende, hvor en offentlig myndighed sælger en grund til en virksomhed, mens en anden offentlig myndighed har til hensigt at indgå en bygge- og anlægskontrakt vedrørende grunden (præmis 89).

EU-domstolen besvarede herefter de stillede spørgsmål i overensstemmelse med det anførte.

Afgørelsen kan formentlig sammenfattes således:

At en ordregivende myndighed i sin egenskab af planmyndighed giver ejeren af et areal eneret til at bebygge arealet i overensstemmelse den offentlige planlægning, er ikke en udbudspligtig koncession om et bygge- og anlægsarbejde.

Dette skyldes følgende: Der ikke er tale om en gensidigt bebyrdende aftale, hvilket udbudspligten forudsætter, da den ordregivende myndighed ikke får nogen modydelse, men blot får opfyldt sin planlægning. Den ordregivende myndighed overfører endvidere ikke nogen råderet over arealet fra sig selv til arealets ejer, men overførelse af råderet er en betingelse for, at der foreligger koncession. Hertil kommer, at der ikke ved tildelingen af eneretten påføres arealets ejer nogen økonomisk driftsrisiko, men det er en betingelse for, at der foreligger koncession, at koncessionshave-ren får en væsentlig del af en økonomisk driftsrisiko. Desuden vil eneretten for arealets ejer til at udnytte arealet efter sin natur være tidsubegrænset, og dette taler i sig selv mod at anse tildelingen af eneretten for en koncession, da EU-retten formentlig ikke tillader tidsubegrænsede koncessioner.

RESUMÉER AF AFGØRELSER OM UDBUD FRA EF-DOMSTOLEN OG RETTEN I FØRSTE INSTANS 2006-2008

NB! Resuméernes henvisninger til retsregler m.m. vil/kan efterhånden blive forældede, da resuméerne principielt er udarbejdet kort efter afgørelserne

Dette hæfte indeholder resuméer af afgørelser inden for udbudsområdet truffet af EF-domstolen og Retten i Første Instans 2006-2008, og som er optaget på EF-domstolens websted http://curia.eu.int/.

Resuméerne er udarbejdet af Klagenævnet for Udbud, der har ansvar for dem alene.

Den dato, der angives ved begyndelsen af hvert resumé, er datoen for den pågældende afgørelse. Den betegnelse for sagen, der angives ved hvert resumé, er EF-domstolens officielle betegnelse, sådan som den er angivet på Internettet.

Særligt om afgørelserne fra Retten i Første Instans bemærkes:

Afgørelserne om udbud fra Retten i Første Instans angår udbud foretaget af EU-organerne, dvs. Kommissionen, Rådet og Parlamentet mfl., idet Retten i Første Instans er klageorgan vedrørende sådanne udbud.

For EU-organernes udbud gælder nogle regler, der er indeholdt i to forordninger, dels »Finansforordningen«, dvs. Rådets forordning nr. 1605/2002 med senere ændringer, dels »Gennemførelsesforordningen«, dvs. Kommissionens forordning nr. 2342/2002 med senere ændringer.

De pågældende regler svarer i det væsentlige til de udbudsregler, der gælder for de ordregivende myndigheder i medlemsstaterne. Afgørelserne om udbud fra Retten i Første Instans kan derfor have en vis almen interesse, for så vidt som de (reelt) kan bidrage til fortolkningen af de udbudsregler, der gælder for de ordregivende myndigheder i medlemsstaterne, dvs. Udbudsdirektivet og Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet m.m.

I resuméerne af afgørelser fra Retten i Første Instans er som almindelig regel kun medtaget de dele af afgørelserne, der belyser forståelsen af almindelige udbudsretlige principper. Resuméerne omfatter således principielt ikke dele af afgørelserne, der angår specifikke reguleringer af EU-organernes optræden eller formelle spørgsmål om Rettens kompetence.

NB! Resuméernes henvisninger til retsregler m.m. vil/kan efterhånden blive forældede, da resuméerne principielt er udarbejdet kort efter afgørelserne.

Indholdsfortegnelse vedrørende afgørelsernes emner

Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 29 danner grænsen for, hvornår tjenesteydere kan udelukkes fra en udbudsprocedure, og medlemsstaterne kan fastsætte lempeligere regler. Det afhænger af national ret, hvornår tjenesteydere skal have opfyldt deres pligt til at betale socialt bidrag og skat, og om tjenesteydere kan opfylde denne pligt ved at indgå en afdragsordning eller ved at klage. National ret må dog ikke fuldstændig undlade at tillægge klage betydning 8

Kommissionen havde med rette afvist tilbud fra to tilbudsgivere, der tilhørte samme »juridiske gruppe«, da forholdet medførte risiko for konkurrencefordrejning og interessekonflikt 9

En ordregiver udøvede ikke samme kontrol med en virksomhed som med sine egne tjenestegrene, da virksomhedens og et mellemliggende holdingselskabs bestyrelser havde meget vidtgående beføjelser, og da holdingselskabets eksistens kunne svække kontrollen. En virksomhed udøver kun hovedparten af sine aktiviteter sammen den ordregiver, den ejes af, hvis andre aktiviteter har marginal betydning. Hvis virksomheden ejes af flere ordregivere, skal hovedparten af aktiviteterne udøves sammen med dem. Artikel 13 i det tidligere Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektiv finder ikke anvendelse på Indkøbsdirektivet 10

Et sagsanlæg fra en forbigået tilbudsgiver tillagt opsættende virkning, da der forelå »fumus boni juris« og uopsættelighed, og da en interesseafvejning ikke kunne føre til andet resultat 12

En kommunes indgåelse af kontrakt med en virksomhed om gennemførelse af et byplanprojekt var omfattet af Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, da projektets hovedformål var at gennemføre bygge- og anlægsopgaver. Det var uden betydning, at virksomheden skulle lade bygge- og anlægsarbejderne udføre af entreprenører, og at virksomheden selv var omfattet af direktivets udbudspligt. Virksomheden var ikke in house, da den var et halvoffentligt selskab med private kapitalinteresser. Projektets værdi var dets samlede værdi. Udtrykket entreprenør i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 1, a) sigter ikke til, at den ordregivende myndigheds kontraktspart selv skal være entreprenør 13

Tilbud fra et konsortium vedrørende en evalueringsopgave afvist med rette, da konsortiets hoveddeltagere til dels selv udførte de opgaver, der skulle evalueres, og derfor befandt sig i en interessekonflikt. Udbyderens begrundelse for afvisningen havde klart og utvetydigt angivet grunden til afvisningen. Udbyderen havde ikke haft pligt til at indhente supplerende oplysninger fra konsortiet..... 15

Et selskab, der ejes af den spanske stat med 96 % og af nogle spanske regioner med 4 %, er in house i forhold til både staten og de pågældende regioner. En virksomhed, der ejes af flere offentlige myndigheder, er in house i forhold til alle disse, hvis virksomheden udøver hovedparten af sine opgaver for dem, og det kræves ikke, at virksomheden udøver hovedparten af opgaverne for en enkelt af dem 17

Indkøbsdirektivet gælder ikke for udbud under tærskelværdien, men principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed gælder for sådanne udbud. Det var i strid med disse principper, at en fremgangsmåde i henhold til direktivet om medicinsk udstyr ikke var blevet fulgt 18

Om en aftale om tjenesteydelser skal anses for en tjenesteydelseskoncession, således at der ikke er pligt til EU-udbud, er et fællesskabsretligt spørgsmål, og national rets forståelse af koncessionsbegrebet er uden betydning. Definition af tjenesteydelseskoncessioner. Nogle aftaler om tjenesteydelser var ikke tjenesteydelseskoncessioner og skulle derfor have været udbudt 19

Antagelse af tilbud i strid med udvælgelseskriterier angår ligebehandlingsprincippet, ikke gennemsigtighedsprincippet. Det generelle ligebehandlingsprincip ikke har selvstændig betydning ved siden af en direktivregel, der udmønter princippet. I øvrigt konkret afgørelse 20

Ved ikke at foranledige ophævelse af en 30-årig kontrakt indgået i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet havde Tyskland tilsidesat sin forpligtelse efter traktatens artikel 228 til at efterkomme en tidligere dom fra EF-domstolen, ved hvilken kontraktens strid med direktivet var konstateret 21

Første kontroldirektiv er ikke er til hinder for, at national ret tillægger deltagere i tilbudsgivende konsortier klageadgang..... 23

Sag om hævdet traktatbrud som følge af manglende EU-udbud afvist, da de pågældende kontrakter havde udtømt deres virkninger før udløbet af fristen i Kommissionens begrundede udtalelse, og da det ikke lå tilstrækkelig klart, at der senere var indgået nye tilsvarende aftaler 23

En national regel om klagefrist må ikke anvendes sådan, at den i det konkrete tilfælde gør en klage praktisk umulig eller uforholdsmæssig vanskelig. National ret skal fortolkes i overensstemmelse med første kontroldirektivs formål, og er en sådan fortolkning ikke mulig, skal den nationale domstol forkaste nationale bestemmelser i strid med direktivet 24

Den irske stat kunne overlade udførelse af en bilag I B-tjenesteydelse til det irske postvæsen uden forudgående offentliggørelse, da der ikke var ført bevis for noget grænseoverskridende element 25

Licensfinansiering af nogle public service tv- og radiostationer var udtryk for, at stationerne var finansieret af staten. Stationerne skulle herefter foretage EU-udbud af rengøring, da de var offentligretlige organer, og da det var uden betydning, at staten ikke kunne udøve bestemmende indflydelse på kontraktstildelingen. En undtagelse fra udbudspligten i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet og Udbudsdirektivet vedrørende radio- og tv-stationer angår ikke kontrakter om rengøring..... 26

En offentlig myndigheds aftale med en virksomhed om postbefordring, der ikke er omfattet af en eneret for virksomheden i overensstemmelse med Postdirektivet, skal udbydes, hvis aftalens værdi når op på tærskelværdien for tjenesteydelser. Hvis aftalens værdi er under tærskelværdien, skal der ske en passende offentliggørelse. Et statsligt postvæsen var ikke in house i forhold til staten, da virksomhedskriteriet ikke var opfyldt 28

En italiensk lovbestemmelse om, at ordregivende myndigheder kun kan indgå kontrakter om tjenesteydelser med kapitalselskaber, var i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 26 29

Nogle underkriterier angik tilbudsgivernes egnethed og var derfor i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet. Underkriterier til underkriterier skal som almindelig regel være oplyst på forhånd 30

Fortrolige oplysninger kan unddrages fra en klagers aktindsigt, men klageorganet skal selv have de nødvendige oplysninger, og der skal før udlevering af muligt fortrolige oplysninger indhentes en udtalelse fra den berørte virksomhed 32

Ligebehandlingsprincippet har til formål at sikre konkurrencen og give tilbudsgiverne ens chancer. Gennemsigtighedsprincippet er et supplement til ligebehandlingsprincippet og skal sikre mod favorisering og vilkårlighed. Ved udbud af kontrakter om tjenesteydelser er visse fordele for den hidtidige tjenesteyder uundgåelige. Udbyderens forsømmelser med hensyn til at give tilbudsgiverne oplysninger havde ikke haft indflydelse på tilbudsvurderingen. 32

Udstationeringsdirektivet og traktatens artikel 49 er til hinder for en national lovbestemmelse, hvorefter offentlige byggekontrakter kun må indgås på vilkår om betaling af overenskomstmæssig mindsteløn..... 35

Spanien havde overtrådt 1. kontroldirektiv som følge af, at der i visse tilfælde ikke er mulighed for at klage over en tildelingsbeslutning før kontraktsindgåelsen. Spanien havde derimod ikke overtrådt direktivet ved en regel om, at ugyldige kontrakter kan opretholdes midlertidigt under visse betingelser..... 37

Italien havde overtrådt de tidligere indkøbsdirektiver ved en fast praksis om indkøb af helikoptere uden EU-udbud. En virksomhed, der er delvis privatejet, er aldrig in house i forhold til en offentlig ordregiver, heller ikke selvom den private ejerandel er en minoritetsandel 37

En ordregiver, der driver virksomhed under Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet, er ikke omfattet af dette direktiv med hensyn til anden virksomhed. Et fjernvarmeselskab var et offentligretligt organ. Alle kontrakter, der indgås af et offentligretligt organ, er omfattet af udbudsdirektiverne, også kontrakter, der angår rent erhvervsmæssige aktiviteter..... 38

Traktatens grundlæggende regler gælder kun for kontrakter under tærskelværdien, hvis kontrakterne har en klar grænseoverskridende interesse. Der kan i den nationale lovgivning fastsættes kriterier herom 39

Udbyderens afvisning af et tilbud, fordi tilbuddet ikke opfyldte et krav i udbudsbetingelserne om et bestemt timetal, skulle ske under overholdelse af reglerne om unormalt lave bud, da disse regler omfatter alle underkriterier. Udbyderen frifundet for krav fra tilbudsgiver om erstatning til dækning af positiv opfyldelsesinteresse, da det ikke var bevist, at tilbudsgiveren ville have fået kontrakten, hvis udbyderen ikke havde overtrådt udbudsreglerne, og da det tværtimod kunne lægges til grund, at tilbudsgiveren ikke ville have fået kontrakten 41

Væsentlige ændringer af en udbudspligtig aftale bevirker, at der foreligger en ny aftale med deraf følgende ny udbudspligt. En intern omstrukturering hos ordregiverens medkontrahent er ikke en væsentlig ændring, og det er i princippet heller ikke en væsentlig ændring, at en medkontrahent, der er en juridisk person, skifter ejerkreds. EU-retten indeholder på sit nuværende udviklingstrin ikke et forbud mod tidsubegrænsede aftaler om tjenesteydelser. En aftaleklausul om uopsigelighed i en kortere periode medfører ikke risiko for konkurrencefordrejning under forudsætning af, at den ikke systematisk genindsættes..... 43

Når en forbigået tilbudsgiver har anmodet om en begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen, er det ønskeligt, at udbyderen sender tilbudsgiveren evalueringsdokumentet, om nødvendigt med udeladelse af fortrolige oplysninger..... 44

Annullation af beslutning om ikke at prækvalificere en tilbudsgiver som følge af, at udbyderen havde givet en urigtig og vildledende begrundelse for beslutningen 45

Italien havde overtrådt Indkøbsdirektivet ved at tillade offentlige ordregivere at indkøbe helikoptere til politi og brandvæsen uden EU-udbud..... 46

Begrundelsen for udbyderens annullation af et udbud skal i en klar og relevant form angive de væsentlige faktiske og retlige omstændigheder, der ligger til grund for annullationen, men begrundelsen kan være kortfattet og behøver ikke angive samtlige omstændigheder. Det var ikke i strid med udbudsreglerne, at udbyderens beslutning om annullation af udbuddet først blev truffet efter godt ½ år 46

In house-begrebets kontrolkriterium er opfyldt, hvis der ikke er privat deltagelse i den virksomhed, der er tale om, og hvis virksomhedens formål er at udøve opgaver af offentlig interesse. Dette gælder, selvom virksomhedens ledelse har selvstændige beføjelser, og beslutninger i virksomheden træffes ved stemmeflerhed blandt de offentlige myndigheder, der ejer virksomheden 47

Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets regler om udelukkelse er udtømmende, men er ikke til hinder for fastsættelse af yderligere nationale udelukkelsesgrunde til sikring af ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed under forudsætning af, at sådanne nationale regler ikke går ud over, hvad der er nødvendigt for at opnå dette formål. Nationale regler, der afskærer ejere mfl. af visse virksomheder fra at levere til det offentlige, går ud over det nødvendige, hvis reglerne ikke giver mulighed for i det enkelte tilfælde at godtgøre, at der ikke foreligger reel risiko for konkurrencefordrejning..... 49

EF-domstolens dom af 9. februar 2006, sager C-226/04 og C-228/04, Cascina og Zilch

Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 29 danner grænsen for, hvornår tjenesteydere kan udelukkes fra en udbudsprocedure, og medlemsstaterne kan fastsætte lempeligere regler. Det afhænger af national ret, hvornår tjenesteydere skal have opfyldt deres pligt til at betale socialt bidrag og skat, og om tjenesteydere kan opfylde denne pligt ved at indgå en afdragsordning eller ved at klage. National ret må dog ikke fuldstændig undlade at tillægge klage betydning

Det italienske forsvarsministerium iværksatte et begrænset udbud i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet vedrørende kantinedrift. Efter at tilbuddene var indkommet, besluttede udbyderen at udelukke tre tilbudsgivere, alle italienske virksomheder, fordi disse tilbudsgivere var i restance med hensyn til betaling af pligtige sociale bidrag henholdsvis i skatterestance.

Efter Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 29 kan en tjenesteyder udelukkes fra en udbudsprocedure, hvis tjenesteyderen er under konkurs m.m., herunder hvis tjenesteyderen ikke har opfyldt sine forpligtelser til at betale sociale bidrag eller skatter, bestemmelsens litra e) og f).

Udelukkelsen af de tre tilbudsgivere skete med hjemmel i en italiensk lovbestemmelse. Denne lovbestemmelse svarer til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 29 e) og f), dog således, at ordene »ikke har opfyldt sine forpligtelser« i den italienske lovbestemmelse er blevet til »ikke behørigt har opfyldt sine forpligtelser.«

De tre tilbudsgivere klagede til en italiensk forvaltningsdomstol og henviste over for forvaltningsdomstolen til, at de efterfølgende havde betalt de skyldige sociale bidrag henholdsvis havde fået skattenedsættelse og en afdragsordning for skat.

Den italienske forvaltningsdomstol stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen, der udtalte (noget ombrudt og omformuleret, Klagenævnets litrering):

1) Ad et spørgsmål, der sigtede til, om den italienske lovbestemmelse var en rigtig gennemførelse af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 29 under hensyn til. at udtrykket »behørigt« i den italienske lovbestemmelse synes at lempe kravene til tjenesteyderne i forhold til artikel 29, litra e) og f):

Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 29 udgør grænsen for medlemsstaternes muligheder, således at medlemsstaterne ikke kan fastsætte andre udelukkelsesgrunde end dem, der er anført i artikel 29. Dette følger også af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed. Medlemsstaterne kan imidlertid undlade at fastsætte udelukkelsesgrunde som i artikel 29 og har således kompetence til at lempe kriterierne i artikel 29 eller gøre dem mere fleksible. Under alle omstændigheder er der ingen indholdsmæssig forskel mellem de to formuleringer. (Præmis 22-23 og 27.)

2) Ad spørgsmål, der sigtede til, hvornår forpligtelserne til at betale sociale bidrag og skatter skal være opfyldt:

Forholdet afhænger af national ret. Det beror således på national ret, om betalingerne skal være sket ved anmodningen om prækvalifikation, ved tilbudsfristens udløb eller ved tildelingen af kontrakten. Som følge af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed skal det imidlertid på forhånd være gjort klart, hvad der gælder på dette punkt, enten i den nationale lovgivning eller af udbyderen i henhold til hjemmel i den nationale lovgivning. (Præmis 29-33.)

3) Ad spørgsmål, der sigtede til, om det er foreneligt med artikel 29 at give tjenesteydere i restance mulighed for at komme ud af restancen ved indgåelse af en afdragsordning ol.:

Forholdet afhænger af national ret. Det er således ikke uforeneligt med artikel 29 at anse tjenesteydere for at have opfyldt deres forpligtelser til betaling af sociale bidrag og skat ved indgåelse af en afdragsordning ol. (præmis 36).

4) Ad spørgsmål, der sigtede til, om det har betydning, at tjenesteyderen har klaget til de relevante klagemyndigheder over det pålæg af socialt bidrag eller skat, der er tale om:

Det afhænger af national ret, om en tjenesteyder skal anses for at have opfyldt sin forpligtelse til at betale et socialt bidrag eller en skat ved at klage til en relevant klagemyndighed (præmis 39). Det kan dog være i strid med tjenesteyderens grundlæggende rettigheder, hvis national ret slet ikke tillægger det betydning, at der er klaget (præmis 38).

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 14. februar 2006 i sager T-376/05 og T-383/05, TEA-CEGOS og STG mod Kommissionen

Kommissionen havde med rette afvist tilbud fra to tilbudsgivere, der tilhørte samme »juridiske gruppe«, da forholdet medførte risiko for konkurrencefordrejning og interessekonflikt

Dommen refereres kun i det omfang, den skønnes at have almen udbudsretlig interesse.

Dansk Center for Internationale Studier og Menneskerettigheder (DCISM) spiller en central rolle i denne sag. Dette center omfatter to institutter, dels Dansk Institut for Internationale Studier (DIIS), dels Institut for menneskerettigheder (IMR).

Sagen angik et udbud iværksat af Kommissionen vedrørende ydelse af teknisk bistand til udviklingslande.

I udbudsbekendtgørelsen var angivet, at virksomheder, der tilhørte samme juridiske gruppe[1], kun kunne indgive ét tilbud, og at tilbud fra flere virksomheder, der tilhørte samme juridiske gruppe, ikke ville blive taget i betragtning. Denne angivelse var en udmøntning af en regel i Finansforordningen, hvorefter tilbud fra tilbudsgivere, der befinder sig i en interessekonflikt, ikke må tages i betragtning.

Der indkom bl.a. tilbud fra et konsortium, der havde deltagelse af DIIS, og fra et andet konsortium, der havde deltagelse af IMR. Kommissionen afviste begge tilbud med henvisning til, at DIIS og IMR tilhørte samme juridiske gruppe. Sagen var anlagt af de to konsortier mod Kommissionen, og de to konsortier gjorde bl.a. gældende, at DIIS og IMR ikke tilhørte samme juridiske gruppe.

Fra Rettens udtalelser kan nævnes:

[1] I den franske version af dommen groupement juridique, i den engelske version legal group.

Begrebet samme juridiske gruppe er ikke defineret eller fastlagt i retspraksis (præmis 52). Ved sin vurdering af, om DIIS og IMR tilhørte samme juridiske gruppe, skulle Kommissionen derfor foretage en vurdering af, om DIIS og IMR var organisatorisk forbundet med DCISM, eller om der forelå andre forhold, der medførte risiko for interessekonflikter eller konkurrencefordrejning (præmis 53, der må skulle forstås således).

DIIS og IMR bliver begge administreret af DCISM, og nogle bestyrelsesmedlemmer i DCISM udpeges af DIIS og IMR. Der kunne således på højt niveau ske en udveksling af synspunkter mellem DIIS og IMR (præmis 57). DIIS og IMR tilhørte derfor samme juridiske gruppe, hvorfor der var risiko for konkurrencefordrejning og interessekonflikt mellem tilbudsgiverne, og hvorfor Kommissionen ikke havde udøvet et åbenbart urigtigt skøn ved at anse DIIS og IMR for at tilhøre samme juridiske gruppe (præmis 58).

EF-domstolens dom af 11. maj 2006, sag C-340/04, Cabotermo og Consorzio Alisei

En ordregiver udøvede ikke samme kontrol med en virksomhed som med sine egne tjenestegrene, da virksomhedens og et mellemliggende holdingselskabs bestyrelser havde meget vidtgående beføjelser, og da holdingselskabets eksistens kunne svække kontrollen. En virksomhed udøver kun hovedparten af sine aktiviteter sammen den ordregiver, den ejes af, hvis andre aktiviteter har marginal betydning. Hvis virksomheden ejes af flere ordregivere, skal hovedparten af aktiviteterne udøves sammen med dem. Artikel 13 i det tidligere Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektiv finder ikke anvendelse på Indkøbsdirektivet

En italiensk kommune, BA, stiftede i 1997 et holding-aktieselskab, AH. BA ejer 99,98 % af aktierne i AH, mens de øvrige aktier ejes af nogle andre kommuner. Af AH's vedtægter fremgår:

AH's formål er at udføre tjenesteydelser for det offentlige inden for forskellige områder, bl.a. vedrørende gas, vand, parkering og varmeforsyning. Andre kommuner og private virksomheder m.m. kan erhverve aktier, men BA skal have aktiemajoriteten, og private aktionærer kan ikke eje mere end 10 % af aktiekapitalen hver. Bestyrelsen har »de mest vidtgående beføjelser…, herunder mulighed for at udføre alle de handlinger, som den finder nødvendige for at gennemføre og opnå selskabets formål, alene med undtagelse af de handlinger, som loven eller vedtægterne udtrykkeligt forholder generalforsamlingen«.

I 2000 stiftede AH et andet aktieselskab, A, i hvilket AH ejer alle aktier. Af A's vedtægter fremgår:

A's formål svarer til AH's formål, dog tilsyneladende sådan, at A kan operere inden for flere områder end omfattet af AH's formål (bl.a. fx vedrørende geoteknik og edb). Ingen aktionær med undtagelse af AH må eje mere end 10 % af aktierne i A. A's bestyrelse har »de mest vidtgående beføjelser, uden begrænsning, til at varetage selskabets ordinære og ekstraordinære drift«.

I september 2003 iværksatte BA et udbud, tilsyneladende i henhold til Indkøbsdirektivet 93/36, af leverance af brændsel og tjenesteydelser vedrørende varmeinstallationer.

EF-domstolen har i flere domme opstillet følgende betingelser for offentlige ordregiveres indgåelse af kontrakt uden EU-udbud med en ekstern juridisk person, således fx i domme af 18. november 1999, Teckal, og 11. januar 2005, Stadt Halle mfl.:

a. Ordregiveren skal føre samme kontrol med leverandøren som med sin egne tjenestegrene, og
b. Leverandøren skal udføre hovedparten af sin virksomhed sammen med den eller de myndigheder, den ejes af.

Få dage før BA's iværksættelse af det omtalte udbud havde den højeste italienske forvaltningsdomstol (?), Consiglio di Stato, ved en dom statueret, at en myndighed kan indgå en aftale med en leverandør uden udbud, hvis myndigheden udøver en kontrol med leverandøren, som svarer til den kontrol, som den fører med sine egne tjenestegrene, og hvis leverandøren udfører hovedparten af sine aktiviteter sammen med den myndighed, som kontrollerer leverandøren. Dette var tydeligvis en udmøntning af EF-domstolens to omtalte betingelser. Det fremgår ikke, om der var tilsigtet nogen realitetsforskel med, at »ejes« i betingelse b. var blevet til »kontrollerer«.

På et tidspunkt blev BA øjensynlig opmærksom på Consiglio di Stato's dom. BA annullerede det igangværende EU-udbud og indgik i stedet kontrakt med A om de pågældende leverancer. Denne kontrakt blev således indgået uden udbud.

To virksomheder klagede til en forvaltningsdomstol herover, og forvaltningsdomstolen stillede følgende spørgsmål til EF-domstolen (Klagenævnets litrering, af forståelsesgrunde omformuleret og stærkt sammentrængt):

1) Kan der indgås kontrakt uden EU-udbud i en situation som den foreliggende?

2) Er EF-domstolens betingelse b. opfyldt, når den pågældende virksomhed har hovedparten af sin omsætning inden for området for den myndighed, som virksomheden ejes af?

3) Fandt artikel 13 i Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38 anvendelse? (Denne bestemmelse gik ud på, at offentlige ordregivere under visse betingelser kunne indgå tjenesteydelsesaftaler uden udbud bl.a. med »tilknyttede« virksomheder.)

EF-domstolen udtalte (af forståelsesgrunde noget sammentrængt og omformuleret):

Ad 1): Ved bedømmelsen af, om en ordregivende myndighed udøver en kontrol med en leverandør svarende til kontrollen med sine egne tjenestegrene (betingelse a.) skal alle relevante omstændigheder tages i betragtning. Kontrollen skal gøre det muligt for ordregiveren at påvirke leverandørens beslutninger, og indflydelsen skal være bestemmende, præmis 36. AH's og A's bestyrelser har de mest vidtgående beføjelser, og BA's kontrol med de to selskaber svarer i det væsentlige til det råderum, som selskabsretten giver en flertalsaktionær, hvilket betydeligt begrænser BA's mulighed for at få indflydelse på selskabernes beslutninger, præmis 38. Hertil kommer, at BA's eventuelle indflydelse på A udøves gennem et holdingselskab, hvilket kan svække kontrollen, præmis 39. Under sådanne omstændigheder udøver ordregiveren ikke en kontrol svarende til kontrollen med ordregiverens egne tjenestegrene, præmis 40.

Ad 2):

Kravet om, at leverandøren skal udføre hovedparten af sin virksomhed sammen med den myndighed, den ejes af (betingelse b.), har til navnlig til formål at undgå konkurrencefordrejning, præmis 59. En virksomhed berøves nemlig ikke nødvendigvis sin handlefrihed, selvom den kontrolleres af den myndighed, den ejes af, hvis den stadig kan udøve en væsentlig del af sin aktivitet med andre aktører, præmis 61. En virksomhed udøver herefter kun hovedparten af sin virksomhed sammen med den ordregivende myndighed, den ejes af, hvis virksomhedens aktivitet hovedsagelig er bestemt for denne myndighed, således at enhver anden aktivitet kun har marginal karakter, præmis 63. Ved vurderingen af, om dette er tilfældet, skal der tages hensyn til alle omstændigheder. Den afgørende omsætning er den, som virksomheden opnår i kraft af tildelingsbeslutninger truffet af den ordregivende myndighed, og det er uden betydning, hvem der betaler til virksomheden, dvs. om det er den ordregivende myndighed eller de enkelte brugere, præmis 65-67.

Hvis virksomheden ejes af flere ordregivere, er den omhandlede betingelse opfyldt, hvis hovedparten af virksomhedens aktivitet udøves sammen med disse myndigheder (»samtlige disse myndigheder«), og det kræves ikke, at hovedparten af aktiviteten udøves sammen med en enkelt af dem (»ikke nødvendigvis sammen med den ene eller den anden af disse myndigheder«), præmis 71-72.

Ad 3): Artikel 13 i Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38 er en undtagelsesbestemmelse, der skal fortolkes indskrænkende, og som ikke finder anvendelse på Indkøbsdirektivet 93/36. Dette resultat bestyrkes af, at det nugældende Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektiv 2004/17 i artikel 23 indeholder en tilsvarende bestemmelse, men at det nugældende Udbudsdirektiv 2004/18 ikke gør det. (Præmis 55-56.)

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter de stillede spørgsmål i overensstemmelse med det anførte.

Retten i Første Instans' kendelse af 20. juli 2006 i sag T-114/06 R, Globe mod Kommissionen

Et sagsanlæg fra en forbigået tilbudsgiver tillagt opsættende virkning, da der forelå »fumus boni juris« og uopsættelighed, og da en interesseafvejning ikke kunne føre til andet resultat

Kommissionen iværksatte et offentligt udbud vedrørende en it-ydelse, der omfattede leverance af nogle printere og blækpatroner til printerne. Ved et rettelsesblad, der blev offentliggjort på Internettet 14 dage før tilbudsfristens udløb, blev antallet af de blækpatroner, der skulle leveres, nedskåret væsentligt i forhold til antalsangivelsen i de oprindelige udbudsbetingelser.

Tildelingskriteriet var laveste pris, Der indkom tilbud fra nogle tilbudsgivere. Tilbuddet fra en tilbudsgiver G havde laveste tilbudspris, medens tilbuddet fra en tilbudsgiver I havde næstlaveste tilbudspris.

Det fremgik af I's tilbud, at I havde beregnet tilbudsprisen på grundlag af angivelsen af antal blækpatroner i de oprindelige udbudsbetingelser, og at I øjensynligt ikke var opmærksom på, at antallet af blækpatroner var nedskåret i det omtalte rettelsesblad. Kommissionen gav derfor I lejlighed til at ændre sit tilbud til at angå antallet af blækpatroner i henhold til rettelsesbladet. I's tilbudspris var herefter den laveste, hvorfor Kommissionen besluttede at indgå kontrakt med I.

G anlagde derefter sagen ved Retten i Første Instans og påstod sagsanlægget tillagt opsættende virkning. Rettens kendelse af 20. juli 2006 angår alene spørgsmålet om opsættende virkning.

G gjorde forskellige anbringender gældende. Kendelsen beskæftigede sig kun med et enkelt af disse anbringender, nemlig at Kommissionen havde overtrådt udbudsreglerne 1) ved at give I lejlighed til at ændre sit tilbud som nævnt ovenfor og 2) ved at have taget I's tilbud i betragtning, selvom de af I tilbudte printere ikke kunne udskrive i det format og med den hastighed, der var krævet i udbudsbetingelserne.

Retten henviste til forskellige omstændigheder i sagen i relation til det nævnte anbringende fra G og udtalte herefter, at der var meget alvorlig tvivl med hensyn til, om Kommissionens tildelingsbeslutning var lovlig. Der forelå derfor »fumus boni juris[2]« (præmis 87). Der forelå endvidere uopsættelighed (præmis 140-141), ligesom en interesseafvejning ikke kunne falde ud til fordel for I eller Kommissionen (præmis 152 og 156).

G's sagsanlæg blev herefter tillagt opsættende virkning.

Retten synes ikke at have truffet realitetsafgørelse i sagen, hvilket vel kunne tyde på, at sagen er blevet forligt på grundlag af kendelsen af 20. juli 2006.

EF-domstolens dom af 18. januar 2007, sag C-220/05, Auroux mfl.

En kommunes indgåelse af kontrakt med en virksomhed om gennemførelse af et byplanprojekt var omfattet af Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, da projektets hovedformål var at gennemføre bygge- og anlægsopgaver. Det var uden betydning, at virksomheden skulle lade bygge- og anlægsarbejderne udføre af entreprenører, og at virksomheden selv var omfattet af direktivets udbudspligt. Virksomheden var ikke in house, da den var et halvoffentligt selskab med private kapitalinteresser. Projektets værdi var dets samlede værdi. Udtrykket entreprenør i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 1, a) sigter ikke til, at den ordregivende myndigheds kontraktspart selv skal være entreprenør

En fransk bykommune (Roanne kommune, beliggende ved Loire ca. 100 km NV for Lyon) ønskede at omdanne sit banegårdskvarter til turistområde. I henhold til den franske byplanlovgivning indgik kommunen i den anledning aftale med et selskab ved navn SEDL om, at SEDL skulle forestå etablering af et fritidscenter med biograf, hotel, butikslokaler og parkeringsplads m.m. i banegårdskvarteret. SEDL beskrives i dommen som et »halvoffentligt selskab«, og SEDL ejes tilsyneladende af nogle offentlige myndigheder og private virksomheder.

I henhold til aftalen mellem kommunen og SEDL skulle SEDL gennemføre projektet ved erhvervelse af ejendomme, tilsyneladende eventuelt ved ekspropriation, opførelse af nye ejendomme og anlæg af parkeringsplads og adgangsveje m.m. SEDL skulle sælge de nye ejendomme til tredjemand, medens parkeringspladsen og adgangsvejene m.m. skulle overgå til kommunen. SEDL skulle ikke selv udføre bygge- og anlægsarbejderne under projektet, men skulle lade udførelsen ske gennem entreprenører, og det fremgår, at SEDL's funktioner ved projektets gennemførelse skulle være af administrativ og planlægningsmæssig karakter. Den samlede udgift ved projektet var anslået til godt 14 mio. €. Heraf skulle

[2] Dvs. »en røg af god ret«, altså sandsynlighed for, at sagsanlægget var berettiget.

SEDL oppebære ca. 8 mio. € ved salgene af de nyopførte ejendomme til tredjemand, medens kommunen skulle betale resten til SEDL, dels som betaling for parkeringspladsen og adgangsvejene, dels som vederlag for SEDL's gennemførelse af projektet.

Kommunens aftale med SEDL blev indgået uden forudgående EU-udbud, men det var i aftalen fastsat, at SEDL skulle følge reglerne om udbud i den franske lov om offentlige aftaler. Det fremgår, at dette medførte pligt for SEDL til at foretage EU-udbud af bygge- og anlægsarbejder, der oversteg Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets tærskelværdi.

Nogle virksomheder anlagde sag mod kommunen ved en fransk forvaltningsdomstol og gjorde gældende, at kommunen skulle have foretaget EU-udbud af den aftale, som kommunen havde indgået med SEDL. Forvaltningsdomstolen stillede følgende spørgsmål til EF-domstolen (omformuleret af forståelsesgrunde):

Spørgsmål 1: Skal en aftale som aftalen mellem kommunen og SEDL anses for en offentlig bygge- og anlægskontrakt i henhold til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 1, a)?

Dette spørgsmål sigtede til følgende: SEDL's funktioner ved projektet havde karakter af tjenesteydelser, der ikke er omfattet af Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet. Som følge af, at de nyopførte ejendomme skulle sælges til tredjemand, var det endvidere opfattelsen hos den franske regering, at der ikke var tale om et bygge- og anlægsarbejde til opfyldelse af kommunens behov, hvilket efter direktivets artikel 1, a) ville være en betingelse for udbudspligt.

Den polske regering, der afgav et indlæg i sagen, gjorde desuden gældende, at SEDL ikke var entreprenør, fordi bygge- og anlægsarbejderne under projektet skulle udføres af entreprenører antaget af SEDL, således at kommunens aftale med SEDL ikke var en aftale mellem en ordregivende myndighed og en entreprenør som krævet i artikel 1, a).

Spørgsmål 2: Hvorledes skal værdien af et sådant projekt i forhold til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets tærskelværdi i givet fald beregnes?

Forvaltningsdomstolen nævnede herved følgende muligheder for beregningen af værdien: 1) som svarende til kommunens betaling for parkeringspladsen og adgangsvejene, 2) som svarende til hele det beløb, som kommunen skulle betale til SEDL, 3) som svarende til projektets samlede værdi, dvs. hele det beløb, som kommunen skulle betale til SEDL, med tillæg af det beløb, som SEDL skulle oppebære ved salget af de nyopførte ejendomme.

Spørgsmål 3 (generelt formuleret): Fritog det under alle omstændigheder kommunen for udbudspligt i henhold til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, at SEDL selv skulle gennemføre udbud af de bygge- og anlægskontrakter, som SEDL indgik med entreprenører?

EF-domstolen udtalte (af forståelsesgrunde stærkt sammentrængt og til dels omformuleret):

Ad spørgsmål 1:

Når en kontrakt både angår bygge- og anlægsopgaver og andre opgaver, er kontraktens hovedformål afgørende (præmis 37). Hovedformålet med aftalen mellem kommunen og SEDL var gennemførelse af et bygge- og anlægsarbejde, og tjenesteydelseselementerne i aftalen sigtede til at gennemføre hovedformålet (præmis 46). Endvidere var formålet med projektet at opfylde et behov hos kommunen (præmis 42). Det var uden betydning, at SEDL skulle lade bygge- og anlægsarbejderne udføre af un-derentreprenører, da ordet »entreprenør« i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 1, a) ikke sigter til, at den, som den ordregivende myndighed indgår kontrakt med, selv skal gennemføre den aftalte ydelse direkte (præmis 38).

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter spørgsmål 1 med, at aftalen mellem kommunen og SEDL var en offentlig bygge- og anlægskontrakt som omhandlet i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 1, a).

Ad spørgsmål 2:

Projektets værdi i relation til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets tærskelværdi var projektets samlede værdi, dvs. hele det beløb, som kommunen skulle betale til SEDL, med tillæg af det beløb, som SEDL ville få ved salg af de nyopførte ejendomme (præmis 54). Noget andet ville undergrave Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets formål (præmis 55), og tærskelværdien for koncessionskontrakter i direktivets artikel 3 omfatter netop også beløb, der indkommer fra tredjemand (præmis 56).

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter spørgsmål 2 med, at værdien af et projekt som det pågældende i relation til direktivets tærskelværdi er projektets samlede værdi.

Ad spørgsmål 3:

I modsætning til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet indeholder Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet ikke en regel om, at kontrakter, som en ordregivende myndighed indgår med en anden ordregivende myndighed, er fritaget for udbudspligt (præmis 59-60). SEDL var ikke en »in house«- virksomhed i forhold til kommunen, da SEDL er et halvoffentligt selskab med private kapitalandele (præmis 64). Selvom SEDL havde udbudspligt i henhold til aftalen med kommunen, ville det endvidere åbne mulighed for omgåelse, hvis der ikke var udbudspligt for kommunen selv, idet værdien af de enkelte bygge- og anlægskontrakter, som SEDL skulle indgå med underentreprenører, kunne blive mindre end Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets tærskelværdi, således at disse bygge- og anlægskontrakter kunne indgås uden EU-udbud (præmis 67).

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter spørgsmål 3 med (generelt formuleret), at det ikke fritog kommunen for udbudspligt, at SEDL selv havde udbudspligt.

Det bemærkes, at sagen muligvis havde fået et andet udfald, hvis den havde været omfattet af det nugældende udbudsdirektiv 2004/18, idet dette direktiv åbner mulighed for fritagelse for udbudspligt med hensyn til kontrakter, som ordregivende myndigheder indgår med indkøbscentraler, jf. artikel 1, stk. 10, og artikel 11. Hvis sagen skulle have været afgjort efter udbudsdirektivet 2004/18, og SEDL kunne karakteriseres som en indkøbscentral, skulle spørgsmål 3 derfor muligvis have været besvaret anderledes.

EF-domstolen kom ikke nærmere ind på disse spørgsmål, men konstaterede blot, at udbudsdirektivet 2004/18 ikke fandt anvendelse (præmis 61).

Retten i Første Instans dom af 18. april 2007 i sag T-195/05, Deloitte mod Kommissionen

Tilbud fra et konsortium vedrørende en evalueringsopgave afvist med rette, da konsortiets hoveddeltagere til dels selv udførte de opgaver, der skulle evalueres, og derfor befandt sig i en interessekonflikt. Udbyderens begrundelse for afvisningen havde klart og utvetydigt angivet grunden til afvisningen. Udbyderen havde ikke haft pligt til at indhente supplerende oplysninger fra konsortiet

Kommissionen iværksatte et udbud om en tjenesteydelse, der gik ud på evaluering af Fællesskabets indsats vedrørende folkesundhed. Udbudsbetingelserne indeholdt nogle angivelser om, at tilbud fra tilbudsgivere, der befandt sig i en interessekonflikt, ikke ville blive taget i betragtning. Disse angivelser var en udmøntning af en bestemmelse i Finansforordningen om obligatorisk udelukkelse af tilbudsgivere m.m., der befinder sig i en interessekonflikt.

Kommissionen afviste tilbuddet fra et konsortium med den begrundelse, at konsortiets hoveddeltagere befandt sig i en interessekonflikt. Dette sigtede til, at konsortiets hoveddeltagere udførte opgaver for Fællesskabet vedrørende folkesundhed, således at der var risiko for, at konsortiets hoveddeltagere ville komme til at evaluere deres egen indsats, hvis konsortiet fik tildelt den udbudte kontrakt.

Konsortiet anlagde herefter sagen ved Retten i Første Instans under påberåbelse af forskellige anbringender. Af disse anbringender skønnes følgende at have almen udbudsretlig interesse:

1) Kommissionen havde ikke givet en fyldestgørende begrundelse for afvisningen af konsortiets tilbud,

2) Konsortiets deltagere befandt sig ikke i en interessekonflikt, og konsortiets tilbud var netop udformet med henblik på at undgå interessekonflikter,

3) Kommissionen burde før afvisningen af konsortiets tilbud have henvendt sig til konsortiet og anmodet om uddybende oplysninger.

Konsortiet fik ikke medhold, idet Retten tog stilling til anbringenderne således:

Ad 1: Kommissionens meddelelse om afvisning af konsortiets tilbud havde klart og utvetydigt angivet de betragtninger, som Kommissionen havde lagt til grund for afvisningsbeslutningen, således at konsortiet kunne forsvare sine rettigheder og Retten kunne udøve sin prøvelsesret (præmis 47).

Ad 2: Rettens udtalelser vedrørende dette anbringende kan ikke gengives kort. Fra udtalelserne kan nævnes:

For at et tilbud kan afvises med den begrundelse, at der foreligger en interessekonflikt, skal der foreligge en reel risiko for, at der vil opstå en interessekonflikt, og der skal foretages en konkret risikovurdering (præmis 67). Kommissionen havde imidlertid med rette fundet, at der forelå en interessekonflikt, der kunne skade konsortiets upartiske gennemførelse af opgaven (præmis 77).

Ad 3: Retten henviste til ordlyden af Gennemførelsesforordningens artikel 146, stk. 3, hvorefter en udbyder kan anmode tilbudsgiverne om supplerende dokumentation vedrørende udelukkelses- og udvælgelseskriterier (en tilsvarende regel er indeholdt i Udbudsdirektivets artikel 51), og udtalte, at bestemmelsen ikke kan forstås som en forpligtelse for udbyderen til at fremsætte en sådan anmodning (præmis 102).

Herefter, og da konsortiet heller ikke fik medhold i de anbringender, der ikke er refereret ovenfor, blev Kommissionen frifundet.

Retten havde i en kendelse af 20. september 2005 under sagsnummer T-195/05 R afslået en begæring fra konsortiet om opsættende virkning.

EF-domstolens dom 19. april 2007, sag C-295/05, Asociaión Nacional de Empresas Forestales (kaldet Asemfo eller Tragsa)

Et selskab, der ejes af den spanske stat med 96 % og af nogle spanske regioner med 4 %, er in house i forhold til både staten og de pågældende regioner. En virksomhed, der ejes af flere offentlige myndigheder, er in house i forhold til alle disse, hvis virksomheden udøver hovedparten af sine opgaver for dem, og det kræves ikke, at virksomheden udøver hovedparten af opgaverne for en enkelt af dem

Denne dom angår spørgsmålet, om den spanske stats og nogle spanske regioners overladelse af opgaver til en virksomhed ved navn Tragsa er i overensstemmelse med EU-retten.

Tragsa er et aktieselskab, der er oprettet ved lov. Den spanske stat ejer 96 % af aktierne. De selvstyrende spanske regioner kan med statens godkendelse erhverve aktier i Tragsa, og 4 regioner ejer i henhold hertil hver 1 % af aktierne. Tragsa's formål er at udøve rådgivnings- og anlægsvirksomhed vedrørende landbrug og skovdrift og at medvirke til udvikling af landdistrikter og at udføre katastrofebekæmpelse m.m. Opgaverne udføres efter rekvisition fra staten eller regionerne, og Tragsa har pligt til at udføre de rekvirerede opgaver. Tragsa får betaling for udførelsen af opgaverne i henhold til takster, der er fastsat af staten.

EF-domstolen beskæftigede sig med Tragsa i en dom af 8. maj 2003 i sag C-349/97. Den pågældende sag angik spørgsmålet, om Spanien havde foretaget en korrekt afregning af landbrugsstøtte, og det fremgik, at Tragsa havde udført tjenesteydelser i forbindelse afregningen. I præmisserne 204-206 i dommen af 8. maj 2003 udtalte EF-domstolen med henvisning til sin praksis vedrørende »in house«-spørgsmålet, at Tragsa var et instrument for staten og regionerne, og at de spanske myndigheder derfor havde været berettiget til at tildele Tragsa de pågældende opgaver uden forudgående udbud.

Den her resumerede dom angik en klage fra en spansk virksomhed til et spansk klageorgan. Klageren gjorde gældende, at Tragsa misbrugte sin dominerende stilling på det spanske marked, og at den retlige ordning for Tragsa var uforenelig med fællesskabsrettens regler om udbud.

Efter at sagen havde passeret forskellige retsinstanser, stillede den øverste instans, Tribunal Supremo, følgende spørgsmål til EF-domstolen (af overskuelighedsgrunde gengivet sammentrængt og omformuleret):

Spørgsmål 1): Er Tragsa's virksomhed i strid med i Traktatens artikel 86, stk. 1 EF?

(Denne regel går kort gengivet ud på et forbud mod, at offentlige virksomheder m.m. misbruger en dominerende stilling eller udøver national diskrimination).

Spørgsmål 2): Er de spanske myndigheders overladelse af opgaver til Tragsa uden forudgående udbud i strid med udbudsdirektiverne?

Spørgsmål 3): Står EF-domstolens udtalelser om Tragsa i dommen af 8. maj 2003 ved magt?

EF-domstolen besvarede spørgsmålene således (noget omformuleret):

Ad spørgsmål 1:

EF-domstolen havde ikke tilstrækkelige oplysninger til at kunne besvare dette spørgsmål, præmis 44.

Ad spørgsmål 2:

EF-domstolen henviste til sin praksis, hvorefter følgende to betingelser skal være opfyldt, for at en virksomhed kan anses for »in house« i forhold til en ordregivende myndighed med den konsekvens, at den ordregivende myndighed kan overlade virksomheden opgaver uden forudgående EU-udbud: a. Den ordregivende myndighed skal udøve samme kontrol med virksomheden som med sine egne tjenestegrene, og b. virksomheden skal udføre hovedparten af sine opgaver sammen med den eller de myndigheder, den ejes af (præmis 55). De to betingelser benævnes i det følgende henholdsvis kontrolkriteriet og virksomhedskriteriet.

Vedrørende kontrolkriteriet henviste EF-domstolen til, at når en ordregivende myndighed ejer en virksomhed alene eller sammen med andre offentlige myndigheder, peger dette i retning af, at den ordregivende myndighed udøver samme kontrol med virksomheden som med sine egne tjenestegrene. EF-domstolen henviste endvidere til, at Tragsa havde pligt til at udføre rekvirerede opgaver og ikke frit kunne fastsætte takster herfor, således at Tragsa's forhold til regionerne ikke var af kontraktmæssig karakter. (Præmis 57-60).

Vedrørende virksomhedskriteriet henviste EF-domstolen til, at Tragsa efter sagens oplysninger udfører over 55 % af sin virksomhed for regionerne og ca. 35 % for staten. EF-domstolen henviste videre til, at i tilfælde, hvor en virksomhed ejes af flere myndigheder, er virksomhedskriteriet efter domstolens praksis opfyldt, hvis virksomheden udfører hovedparten af sine opgaver for disse myndigheder, således at det ikke kræves, at hovedparten af opgaverne udføres for en enkelt af dem. (Præmis 62-65).

De spanske myndigheders overladelse af opgaver til Tragsa uden forudgående EU-udbud var herefter ikke i strid med udbudsdirektiverne (præmis 65).

Ad spørgsmål 3:

Som følge af besvarelsen af spørgsmål 2 var det ufornødent at besvare spørgsmål 3 (præmis 66).

Henvisningen ad spørgsmål 2 til, at Tragsa's forhold til regionerne ikke var af kontraktmæssig karakter, synes at sigte til det almindelige princip, hvorefter udbudsdirektiverne kun omfatter gensidigt bebyrdende aftaler, se fx artikel 1, stk. 2, a, i udbudsdirektivet af 2004. Forholdet synes dog ikke at have spillet nogen selvstændig rolle for afgørelsen.

Det fremgår ikke, hvem de sidste ca. 10 % af Tragsa's opgaver udføres for.

EF-domstolens dom af 14. juni 2007, sag C-6/05, Medipac-Kazantzkis

Indkøbsdirektivet gælder ikke for udbud under tærskelværdien, men principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed gælder for sådanne udbud. Det var i strid med disse principper, at en fremgangsmåde i henhold til direktivet om medicinsk udstyr ikke var blevet fulgt

Sagen angik et offentligt udbud af indkøb af kirurgiske suturartikler, iværksat af et græsk sygehus, der var offentlig ordregiver. Udbuddets værdi var under tærskelværdien i det dagældende indkøbsdirektiv (direktiv 93/36), men det synes at fremgå, at udbuddet desuagtet blev foretaget i henhold til dette direktiv. Tildelingskriteriet var tilsyneladende laveste bud.

De udbudte suturartikler var omfattet af direktiv 93/42 om medicinsk udstyr. Dette direktiv går i hovedtræk ud på at etablere en EF-mærkning, således at medlemsstaterne ikke må hindre markedsføring og ibrugtagning af medicinsk udstyr, der er forsynet med EF-mærkningen. En medlemsstat kan dog under visse betingelser forbyde markedsføring og brug af sådant udstyr, men skal i så fald følge en nærmere angivet fremgangsmåde.

Der indkom tilbud fra et antal tilbudsgivere. Udbyderen afviste tilbuddet fra en af tilbudsgiverne, M, med den begrundelse, at de tilbudte suturartikler ikke var i overensstemmelse med udbuddets tekniske specifikationer. Dette sigtede til, at M's suturartikler efter udbyderens opfattelse ikke havde tilstrækkelig kvalitet, uanset at de var EF-mærkede.

M klagede til den øverste græske forvaltningsdomstol, og forvaltningsdomstolen stillede EF-domstolen nogle spørgsmål, der sigtede til, om udbyderens fremgangsmåde havde været berettiget. I det første spørgsmål, der var det centrale, henvistes til Indkøbsdirektivet.

Østrig gjorde for EF-domstolen gældende, at sagen skulle afvises, fordi forvaltningsdomstolens spørgsmål angik Indkøbsdirektivet, selvom udbuddet ikke var omfattet af dette direktiv.

EF-domstolen udtalte:

Indkøbsdirektivet gælder udelukkende for udbud, hvis værdi mindst svarer til direktivets tærskelværdi. Ordregivende myndigheder skal imidlertid overholde fællesskabsrettens almindelige principper, såsom principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed, og EF-domstolen kan i sit svar på præjudicielle spørgsmål inddrage fællesskabsretlige regler, som den nationale domstol ikke har henvist til. Sagen skulle derfor antages til realitetsbehandling. (Præmis 30, 33-34 og 36.)

EF-domstolen tog herefter stilling til forvaltningsdomstolens spørgsmål og udtalte herunder bl.a., det var i strid med principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed, at fremgangsmåden i henhold til direktivet om medicinsk udstyr ikke var blevet fulgt (præmis 55).

EF-domstolens dom af 18. juli 2007, sag C-382/05, Kommissionen mod Italien

Om en aftale om tjenesteydelser skal anses for en tjenesteydelseskoncession, således at der ikke er pligt til EU-udbud, er et fællesskabsretligt spørgsmål, og national rets forståelse af koncessionsbegrebet er uden betydning. Definition af tjenesteydelseskoncessioner. Nogle aftaler om tjenesteydelser var ikke tjenesteydelseskoncessioner og skulle derfor have været udbudt

En italiensk offentlig ordregiver indgik aftaler med nogle virksomheder om genanvendelse af affald. Der var foretaget annoncering i EF-Tidende i form af en forhåndsmeddelelse, ligesom der havde været annonceret i en regional publikation, men der var ikke gennemført EU-udbud. Sagen var anlagt af Kommissionen mod Italien med påstand om, at EF-domstolen skulle konstatere, at undladelsen af at iværksætte EU-udbud var en overtrædelse af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, dvs. direktiv 92/50, der var gældende ved aftalernes indgåelse.

Italien påstod frifindelse under anbringende af, at der var tale om koncessioner, der ikke var omfattet af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet.

(Det ligger fast, at Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ikke omfattede koncessioner. Koncessioner vedrørende tjenesteydelser er heller ikke omfattet af det nugældende Udbudsdirektiv 2004/18, jf. artikel 17 i dette direktiv.)

Som begrundelse for anbringendet om, at der var tale om koncessioner, henviste Italien til følgende, der tilsyneladende havde sammenhæng med koncessionsbegrebets forståelse i italiensk ret: a) der var tale om tjenesteydelser af almindelig interesse, hvis kontinuitet tjenesteyderne havde pligt til at sikre, b) tjenesteydelserne præsteredes direkte til de pågældende indbyggere, som betalte for dem i form af betaling til vedkommende kommune, der derefter formidlede betalingen til tjenesteyderne, c) tjenesteyderne havde indtægt ved salg af energi produceret ved genanvendelsen af affaldet, d) tjenesteydernes fortjeneste var usikker som følge af aftalernes lange løbetid (20 år) og som følge af, at en del af fortjenesten hidrørte fra salget af den producerede energi, og e) organiseringen og driften af affaldsgenanvendelsen påhvilede alene tjenesteyderne, således at myndighederne kun havde en kontrolfunktion.

Kommissionen fik medhold. EF-domstolen udtalte (temmelig sammentrængt):

Spørgsmålet, om de omhandlede aftaler skulle anses for koncessioner, således at de ikke var omfattet af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, skulle udelukkende vurderes efter fællesskabsretten, og det var uden betydning, hvorledes aftalerne skulle karakteriseres efter italiensk ret (præmis 30-31).

En tjenesteydelsesaftale i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets forstand indebærer en modydelse, der betales direkte af den ordregivende myndighed (præmis 33).

Der er derimod tale om en tjenesteydelseskoncession, når den aftalte godtgørelsesform består i tjenesteyderens ret til at udnytte sin egen ydelse, således at tjenesteyderen har risikoen ved driften af tjenesteydelserne. Disse betingelser var ikke opfyldt med hensyn til de tjenesteydelser, som sagen angik, idet tjenesteydernes godtgørelse i det væsentlige bestod i betaling fra det offentlige og ikke i retten til at udnytte tjenesteydelserne, og idet aftalerne om tjenesteydelserne indeholdt nærmere angivne bestemmelser med henblik på at sikre tjenesteyderne økonomisk. De pågældende aftaler var derfor tjenesteydelsesaftaler omfattet af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet og var ikke koncessioner. Der skulle således have været iværksat EU-udbud (præmis 34-37).

EF-domstolen tog i præmis 38-44 afstand fra Italiens begrundelse for anbringendet om, at der var tale om koncessioner.

EF-domstolen henviste til flere af sine tidligere domme, bl.a. dom af 18. oktober 2005 i sag C-458/03, Parking Brixen, der indeholder en definition af begrebet tjenesteydelseskoncessioner svarende til definitionen i den her resumerede dom.

EF-domstolens dom af 18. juli 2007, sag C-399/05, Kommissionen mod Grækenland

Antagelse af tilbud i strid med udvælgelseskriterier angår ligebehandlingsprincippet, ikke gennemsigtighedsprincippet. Det generelle ligebehandlingsprincip ikke har selvstændig betydning ved siden af en direktivregel, der udmønter princippet. I øvrigt konkret afgørelse

Sagen angik et udbud i henhold til Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38 vedrørende projektering, opførelse, idriftsættelse og vedligeholdelse af et kraftvarmeværk. Udbuddet var foretaget af en græsk offentlig ordregiver, øjensynligt som udbud efter forhandling. Der indkom tilbud fra nogle tilbudsgivere, hvorefter udbyderen besluttede at indgå kontrakt med en af tilbudsgiverne.

Sagen var anlagt af Kommissionen mod Grækenland på baggrund af en klage fra en virksomhed, der havde afstået fra at give tilbud. Kommissionens påstand gik ud på, at der var sket overtrædelse af forbuddet mod forskelsbehandling i direktivets artikel 4, stk. 2, samt af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed, fordi

1) et af tilbuddene var taget i betragtning, selvom tilbudsgiveren ikke opfyldte de fastsatte udvælgelseskriterier, og fordi

2) et andet tilbud var taget i betragtning, selvom vedligeholdelsen af en gasturbine, der var et led i projektet, ifølge tilbuddet skulle udføres af tilbudsgiveren selv, hvorimod det efter Kommissionens opfattelse fulgte af udvælgelseskriterierne, at den pågældende vedligeholdelse skulle udføres af leverandøren af gasturbinen.

Kommissionen fik ikke medhold.

Vedrørende punkt 1) fastslog EF-domstolen ud fra en fortolkning af udvælgelseskriterierne, at tilbudsgiveren opfyldte udvælgelseskriterierne.

Vedrørende punkt 2) henviste EF-domstolen bl.a. til, at udvælgelseskriterierne måtte forstås sådan, at vedligeholdelsen af gasturbinen ikke nødvendigvis skulle udføres af leverandøren af turbinen.

EF-domstolen udtalte endvidere, at en udbyders antagelse af et tilbud i strid med de fastsatte udvælgelseskriterier vedrører ligebehandlingsprincippet og ikke gennemsigtighedsprincippet, og (noget omformuleret) at det generelle ligebehandlingsprincip ikke har selvstændig betydning inden for et direktivs område, hvis en regel i direktivet er en udmøntning af princippet.

EF-domstolens dom af 18. juli 2007, sag C-503/04, Kommissionen mod Tyskland

Ved ikke at foranledige ophævelse af en 30-årig kontrakt indgået i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet havde Tyskland tilsidesat sin forpligtelse efter traktatens artikel 228 til at efterkomme en tidligere dom fra EF-domstolen, ved hvilken kontraktens strid med direktivet var konstateret

Ved dom af 10. april 2003 i sagerne C-20/01 og C-28/01, Kommissionen mod Tyskland, fastslog EF-domstolen, at Tyskland havde overtrådt Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ved, at to kommuner i delstaten Niedersachsen havde foretaget følgende:

1) Bockhorn Kommune havde indgået en kontrakt om bortledning af spildevand uden forudgående EU-udbud.

2) Braunschweig Kommune havde indgået en kontrakt om bortskaffelse af dagrenovation på grundlag af et udbud efter forhandling uden forudgående udbudsbekendtgørelse.

Efter dommen spurgte Kommissionen Tyskland, hvilke foranstaltninger Tyskland havde iværksat for at efterkomme dommen. Tyskland svarede, at den tyske forbundsregering i et brev af 23. december 2003 havde indskærpet over for delstaten, at udbudsreglerne skulle overholdes nøje. Tyskland henviste desuden til, at fællesskabsretten efter Tysklands opfattelse ikke førte til krav om ophævelse af de omtalte kontrakter. I en begrundet udtalelse fastsatte Kommissionen herefter en frist med udløb den 1. juni 2004 til Tysklands opfyldelse af dommen.

Da Tyskland efter Kommissionens opfattelse ikke havde opfyldt dommen ved fristens udløb, anlagde Kommissionen en ny sag mod Tyskland ved EF-domstolen med påstand om, at det skulle fastslås, at Tyskland havde overtrådt traktatens artikel 228 EF ved ikke at have truffet de foranstaltninger, der fulgte af dommen af 10. april 2003, og med påstand om, at der skulle pålægges Tyskland tvangsbøder.

Under sagens forberedelse oplyste Tyskland, at Bockhorn Kommunes kontrakt om bortledning af spildevand ville blive ophævet. Kommissionen frafaldt påstanden vedrørende Bockhorn Kommune, og Bockhorn Kommunes kontrakt blev ophævet.

Sagen angik herefter kun Braunschweig Kommunes kontrakt om bortskaffelse af dagrenovation. Denne kontrakt var indgået for 30 år. Også denne kontrakt blev ophævet under sagens forberedelse. Kommissionen frafaldt herefter påstanden om tvangsbøder, men fastholdt påstanden om, at det skulle fastslås, at Tyskland ikke havde truffet de nødvendige foranstaltninger til opfyldelse af dommen af 10. april 2003 med hensyn til Braunschweig Kommune. Sagen drejede sig herefter alene om dette spørgsmål.

Tyskland fremsatte nogle formelle indsigelser, herunder at sagsgenstanden var bortfaldet som følge af ophævelsen af Braunschweig Kommunes kontrakt, men fik ikke medhold i disse indsigelser (præmis 13-24).

Med hensyn til sagens realitet gjorde Tyskland følgende indsigelser gældende (til dels sammentrængt gengivet):

a. Tysklands indskærpelse over for delstaten i brevet af 23. december 2003 af, at udbudsreglerne skulle overholdes nøje, var tilstrækkelige foranstaltninger til opfyldelse af dommen af 10. april 2003.

b., støttet af Finland, Frankrig og Holland: Artikel 2, stk. 6, 2. pkt., i 1. kontroldirektiv medfører, at der ikke er pligt til at ophæve en indgået kontrakt. Til støtte herfor henviste Tyskland til principperne om retssikkerhed, beskyttelse af berettigede forventninger og aftalers bindende virkning. Tyskland henviste desuden til traktatens artikel 295 EF, hvorefter medlemsstaternes ejendomsretlige ordninger ikke berøres af traktaten, samt til EF-domstolens praksis om en doms tidsmæssige virkninger.

(Artikel 2, stk. 6, 2. pkt., i 1. kontroldirektiv går kort gengivet ud på, at medlemsstaterne kan begrænse klageorganernes beføjelser til at pålægge ordregiverne at betale erstatning.)

Tyskland fik heller ikke medhold vedrørende sagens realitet.

Ad indsigelse a. henviste EF-domstolen til følgende: Tysklands indskærpelse over for delstaten havde alene til formål at forhindre nye overtrædelser, men havde ikke forhindret virkningen af Braunschweig Kommunes kontrakt. Endvidere kunne traktatbruddet i henhold til denne kontrakt være fortsat i årtier, da kontrakten var indgået for 30 år. I en situation som den foreliggende havde Tyskland herefter ikke foretaget de nødvendige foranstaltninger til opfyldelse af dommen af 10. april 2003 (præmis 28-31).

Ad indsigelse b. udtalte EF-domstolen (noget sammentrængt):

Artikel 2, stk. 6, 2. pkt., i 1. kontroldirektiv har ikke betydning for anvendelsen af traktatens artikel 228 EF og ville i modsat fald indskrænke rækkevidden af traktatbestemmelserne om det indre marked (præmis 34). Som følge af sin særegne beskaffenhed regulerer bestemmelsen endvidere ikke forholdet mellem en medlemsstat og fællesskabet (præmis 35).

Selvom en ordregivende myndigheds medkontrahent muligvis kan påberåbe sig principperne om retssikkerhed etc., kan en medlemsstat ikke påberåbe sig dem som begrundelse for ikke at opfylde en dom, der har fastslået et traktatbrud (præmis 36).

Traktatens artikel 295 EF fører ikke til, at medlemsstaternes ejendomsretlige ordninger ikke er omfattet af traktatens grundlæggende principper. Særegenheder i en medlemsstats ejendomsretlige ordning kan ikke begrunde en krænkelse af den frie udveksling af tjenesteydelser, og en medlemsstat kan ikke påberåbe sig sin nationale retsorden til støtte for ikke at overholde fællesskabsretlige forpligtelser (præmis 37-38).

Domstolens praksis om en doms tidsmæssige virkninger kan ikke begrunde manglende opfyldelse af en dom, der har fastslået et traktatbrud (præmis 39).

EF-domstolen fastslog herefter, at Tyskland ikke ved udløbet af fristen i Kommissionens begrundede udtalelse havde truffet de nødvendige foranstaltninger til opfyldelse af dommen af 10. april 2003 med hensyn til Braunschweig Kommunes kontrakt om bortskaffelse af dagrenovation.

EF-domstolens kendelse 4. oktober 2007, sag C-492/06, Conzorzio Elisoccorso San Raffaele

Første kontroldirektiv er ikke er til hinder for, at national ret tillægger deltagere i tilbudsgivende konsortier klageadgang

Ved denne kendelse blev følgende fastslået: Første kontroldirektiv er ikke er til hinder for, at national ret tillægger deltagere i tilbudsgivende konsortier klageadgang.

Refereres i øvrigt ikke, da resultatet forekommer oplagt. Også EF-domstolen anså resultatet for oplagt og afgjorde derfor sagen ved kendelse, jf. præmis 18.

EF-domstolens dom af 11. oktober 2007, sag C-237/05, Kommissionen mod Grækenland

Sag om hævdet traktatbrud som følge af manglende EU-udbud afvist, da de pågældende kontrakter havde udtømt deres virkninger før udløbet af fristen i Kommissionens begrundede udtalelse, og da det ikke lå tilstrækkelig klart, at der senere var indgået nye tilsvarende aftaler

I 2001 indgik det græske landbrugsministerium en aftale med de græske landboforeningers forbund om administrationen af EU's landbrugsstøtteordning for året 2001. Aftalen gik ud på, de lokale landboforeninger skulle yde landmændene bistand ved udfyldelse af ansøgningsskemaer m.m., og at der skulle indgås aftaler herom mellem de enkelte lokale landboforeninger og den stedlige præfekt. Sådanne lokale aftaler blev indgået, og landboforeningernes forbunds rolle i sammenhængen var at koordinere deres indgåelse.

Sagen var anlagt af Kommissionen mod Grækenland med påstand om, at det skulle konstateres, at Grækenland havde overtrådt Tjenesteydelses-direktivet ved, at aftalerne mellem de lokale landboforeninger og præfekterne var indgået uden forudgående EU-udbud.

EF-domstolen afviste sagen med henvisning til følgende (stærkt sammentrængt):

Aftalen mellem landbrugsministeriet og landboforeningernes forbund og aftalerne mellem de lokale landboforeninger og præfekterne angik kun 2001 og havde udtømt deres virkninger før udløbet af den frist, der var fastsat i Kommissionens begrundede udtalelse, dvs. 19. februar 2004. Det fulgte heraf af EF-domstolens praksis, at sagen skulle afvises. Således som sagen var oplyst, havde Kommissionen endvidere ikke med tilstrækkelig klarhed kunnet vise rigtigheden af et anbringende om, at det hævdede traktatbrud var fortsat i årene efter 2001.

EF-domstolens dom af 11. oktober 2007, sag C-241/06, Lämmerzahl

En national regel om klagefrist må ikke anvendes sådan, at den i det konkrete tilfælde gør en klage praktisk umulig eller uforholdsmæssig vanskelig. National ret skal fortolkes i overensstemmelse med første kontroldirektivs formål, og er en sådan fortolkning ikke mulig, skal den nationale domstol forkaste nationale bestemmelser i strid med direktivet

En tysk kommune iværksatte et offentligt udbud af anskaffelse af standardsoftware til brug for socialrådgivning m.m. Udbuddet blev ikke foretaget som EU-udbud. Det blev ikke ved udbuddet oplyst, hvor mange softwarelicenser udbuddet omfattede, og udbyderen svarede undvigende og uklart på et spørgsmål herom fra en potentiel tilbudsgiver, L. Det fremgår imidlertid, at udbuddets værdi oversteg tærskelværdierne både for indkøb og tjenesteydelser.

L afgav tilbud, men udbyderen besluttede at tildele en anden tilbudsgiver kontrakten med den begrundelse, at den anden tilbudsgivers tilbud var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige.

L klagede derefter til et klageorgan, Vergabekammer, og gjorde gældende dels, at der skulle have været foretaget EU-udbud som følge af, at udbuddets værdi oversteg tærskelværdien, dels at kommunen havde begået fejl ved tilbudsvurderingen.

Vergabekammer afviste klagen med den begrundelse, at den var indgivet for sent. Dette sigtede til en bestemmelse i den tyske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter, hvorefter en klage over et forhold, der fremgår af en udbudsbekendtgørelse, skal indgives til den ordregivende myndighed inden udløbet af fristen for afgivelse af tilbud eller indgivelse af ansøgning om prækvalifikation. Da L ikke havde klaget til kommunen inden tilbudsfristens udløb, medførte denne bestemmelse efter Vergabekammers opfattelse, at L var afskåret fra at klage både over, at der ikke var foretaget EU-udbud, og over kommunens tilbudsvurdering.

L indbragte sagen for en højere instans, Oberlandesgericht, og begærede opsættende virkning, men Oberlandesgericht afslog at tillægge klagen opsættende virkning. Som begrundelse herfor tilsluttede Oberlandesgericht sig Vergabekammers synspunkt om, at L som følge af den omhandlede bestemmelse i den tyske lovgivning var afskåret fra at klage både over det manglende EU-udbud og over tilbudsvurderingen.

Senere kom Oberlandesgericht øjensynlig i tvivl med hensyn til, om afskæringen af L's klageadgang var i overensstemmelse med første kontroldirektiv, og Oberlandesgericht forelagde derfor sagen for EF-domstolen, der udtalte (stærkt sammentrængt, Klagenævnets litrering):

1) Sagen var omfattet af det dagældende indkøbsdirektiv, direktiv 93/36, og ifølge § 9, stk. 4, i dette direktiv skulle kontraktens samlede mængde og omfang angives i udbudsbekendtgørelsen. Undladelse af en sådan angivelse skal i medfør af første kontroldirektiv kunne gøres til genstand for en klage. (Præmis 38-44. Den tilsvarende bestemmelse er i dag Udbudsdirektivets artikel 36, stk. 1).

2) Første kontroldirektiv er ikke til hinder for, at der i national ret fastsættes klagefrister, men sådanne klagefrister må ikke gøre det praktisk umuligt eller uforholdsmæssigt vanskeligt at udøve de rettigheder, der kan udledes af fællesskabsretten (præmis 50-52). Hvis en udbudsbekendtgørelse mangler oplysning om kontraktens samlede værdi, og udbyderen svarer undvigende på en potentiel tilbudsgivers spørgsmål herom, vil en regel som den omhandlede tyske regel gøre det uforholdsmæssigt vanskeligt for den potentielle tilbudsgiver at udøve sine rettigheder i henhold til fællesskabsretten. Selvom den tyske regel i princippet er forenelig med fællesskabsretten, var dens anvendelse i det foreliggende tilfælde derfor i strid med det effektivitetsprincip, der følger af første kontroldirektiv (præmis 53-57).

3) Den omhandlede tyske regel kan efter sit indhold kun finde anvendelse på forhold, der kan konstateres før udløbet af fristen for afgivelse af tilbud eller ansøgning om prækvalifikation, men kan derimod ikke finde anvendelse på forhold, som først opstår senere. Oberlandesgericht havde imidlertid anvendt reglen således, at den fandt anvendelse på alle udbyderens beslutninger under udbuddet, hvilket var i strid med første kontroldirektiv. Den nationale ret skal fortolke den nationale ret i overensstemmelse med formålet i første kontroldirektiv, og er en sådan fortolkning ikke mulig, skal den nationale ret forkaste nationale bestemmelser i strid med direktivet. (Præmis 68-63).

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter nogle spørgsmål fra Oberlandesgericht i overensstemmelse med det anførte.

EF-domstolens dom af 13. november 2007, sag C-507/03, Kommissionen mod Irland

Den irske stat kunne overlade udførelse af en bilag I B-tjenesteydelse til det irske postvæsen uden forudgående offentliggørelse, da der ikke var ført bevis for noget grænseoverskridende element

Den irske regering indgik en kontrakt med det irske postvæsen, der har betegnelsen »An Post«, om, at modtagere af sociale ydelser kunne hæve ydelserne på posthusene.

(Det bemærkes, at »An Post« betyder »Postvæsnet«. Ordet »An« synes at være gælisk).

Sagen var anlagt af Kommissionen med påstand om, at det skulle konstateres, at Irland havde overtrådt reglerne i traktatens artikel 43 EF og 49 EF om henholdsvis den frie etableringsret og den frie udveksling af tjenesteydelser samt principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed ved at have indgået kontrakten uden en forudgående offentliggørelse.

EF-domstolen udtalte (noget sammentrængt):

Der var tale om en tjenesteydelse, som var omfattet af bilag I B i det dagældende tjenesteydelsesdirektiv 92/50 (nu bilag II B i udbudsdirektivet af 2004). Sådanne tjenesteydelser er ikke omfattet af udbudspligten, fordi de ikke umiddelbart frembyder nogen grænseoverskridende interesse. Fællesskabsrettens grundlæggende principper, herunder principperne om fri etableringsret og fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser, gælder ganske vist for indgåelse af offentlige kontrakter om sådanne tjenesteydelser, såfremt sådanne kontrakter alligevel frembyder en grænseoverskridende interesse, ligesom der kan blive tale om forskelsbehandling, hvis der ikke er gennemsigtighed (præmis 25-31). Det påhvilede imidlertid Kommissionen at bevise, at den omhandlede kontrakt havde haft en vis interesse for en virksomhed i en anden medlemsstater, og at denne virksomhed var blevet afskåret fra at tilkendegive sin interesse før kontrakten, fordi den ikke havde haft adgang til passende information for tildelingen af kontrakten. Et sådant bevis var ikke ført, og Kommissionen kunne ikke påberåbe sig nogen formodning for, at der forelå et traktatbrud (præmis 32-34).

Irland blev herefter frifundet.

EF-domstolen har i flere tidligere afgørelse fastslået, at der kan være pligt til en forudgående offentliggørelse vedrørende offentlige ordregiveres indgåelse af kontrakter, der ikke er omfattet af udbudsdirektivernes udbudspligt. Dette gælder således bl.a. domstolens domme af 21. juli 2005, Coname, og 13. oktober 2005, Parking Brixen, begge vedrørende tjenesteydelseskoncessioner.

Den her resumerede dom introducerer som betingelse for en sådan pligt, at der skal foreligge et grænseoverskridende element. Dommen blev afsagt af EF-domstolens store afdeling, hvilket må tages som udtryk for, at der er tale om principiel modifikation af den hidtidige praksis.

Betingelsen om et grænseoverskridende element er gentaget og udbygget i EF-domstolens dom af 15. maj 2008 i sagerne C-147/06 og C-148/06, Secap, der er resumeret nedenfor. Betingelsen har næppe den store betydning for danske ordregivende myndigheder, se bemærkningerne til Secap-dommen nedenfor.

EF-domstolens dom af 13. december 2007, sag C-337/06, Bayerische Rundfunk mfl.

Licensfinansiering af nogle public service tv- og radiostationer var udtryk for, at stationerne var finansieret af staten. Stationerne skulle herefter foretage EU-udbud af rengøring, da de var offentligretlige organer, og da det var uden betydning, at staten ikke kunne udøve bestemmende indflydelse på kontraktstildelingen. En undtagelse fra udbudspligten i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet og Udbudsdirektivet vedrørende radio- og tv-stationer angår ikke kontrakter om rengøring

Tyskland har et antal tv- og radioselskaber, der udøver virksomhed i form af public service, i det følgende benævnt public service-stationerne. I hvert fald over halvdelen af public-service-stationernes indtægter består af licensbetalinger, der opkræves hos de enkelte indehavere af tv- og radioapparater. Licensens størrelse fastsættes af delstaterne, der dog i princippet har pligt til at følge indstillinger fra et særligt landsdækkende udvalg.

Den tyske grundlov indeholder en bestemmelse, der sikrer pressefriheden m.m., og denne bestemmelse fortolkes i tysk ret som et forbud mod offentlige myndigheders indblanding i public service-stationernes aktiviteter.

Det fremgår, at public service-stationerne er offentligretlige organer, der har til opgave at imødekomme almenhedens behov, jf. Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 1, b, nu Udbudsdirektivets artikel 1, stk. 9. Det følger af de nævnte bestemmelser, at sådanne offentligretlige organer var/er omfattet af de to direktivers udbudspligt, bl.a. hvis de for over halvdelens vedkommende er finansieret af staten eller er underlagt statens kontrol. (Med hensyn til finansieringsandelen bruger Udbudsdirektivet udtrykket »størstedelen«, hvor Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet brugte udtrykket »halvdelen«, men de to bestemmelser betyder det samme, jf. præmis 30 i den her resumerede dom).

Public service-stationerne har etableret et samarbejdsorgan, i sagen benævnt GEZ, der udfører forskellige opgaver i forbindelse med licensopkrævning. GEZ er ikke en juridisk person.

Sagen angik en klage fra et rengøringsfirma til en klageinstans over, at GEZ havde indgået kontrakt om rengøring af GEZ' lokaler uden EU-udbud. Kontraktens værdi var over tærskelværdien i det dagældende tjenesteydelsesdirektiv. Klageren fik medhold, hvorefter public service-stationerne indbragte sagen for en overinstans, Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf.

Public service-stationerne gjorde øjensynlig gældende, at de ikke var omfattet af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets udbudspligt, dels fordi de ikke opfyldte den ovenfor nævnte betingelse om statens finansiering eller kontrol, dels fordi Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet i medfør af direktivets artikel 1, a, iv, ikke omfattede radio- og tv-selskabers indkøb m.m. (En tilsvarende bestemmelse indeholdes i Udbudsdirektivets artikel 16, b).

Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf stillede følgende spørgsmål til EF-domstolen (af overskuelighedsgrunde gengivet stærkt sammentrængt og noget omformuleret):

Spørgsmål 1) Er public service-stationernes finansiering ved licensbetaling udtryk for, at stationerne finansieres af staten?

Spørgsmål 2) Er det en betingelse for at anse et organ for at være finansieret af staten, at staten kan udøve en direkte indflydelse ved organets tildeling af kontrakter?

Spørgsmål 3) Omfatter undtagelsen fra udbudspligt for radio- og tv-selskabers indkøb mv. tjenesteydelser, der ikke vedrører programmerne?

EF-stolen besvarede spørgsmålene således (ligeledes gengivet stærkt sammentrængt og til dels omformuleret):

Ad spørgsmål 1): Public service-stationernes finansiering ved licensbetaling er udtryk for, at stationerne finansieres af staten. EF-domstolen henviste herved til udbudsdirektivernes formål m.m. (præmis 34-50).

Ad spørgsmål 2): Det er ikke en betingelse for at anse et organ for finansieret af staten, at staten kan udøve bestemmende indflydelse ved organets indgåelse af kontrakter som den i sagen omhandlede. EF-domstolen henviste herved bl.a. til, at public service-stationernes eksistens afhænger af staten (præmis 55-60).

Ad spørgsmål 3): Bestemmelsen om undtagelse fra udbudspligt for radio- og tv-stationer omfatter kun de tjenesteydelser, der nævnes i bestemmelsen. EF-domstolen henviste herved bl.a. til, at bestemmelsen som følge af sin karakter af undtagelse fra hovedformålet må fortolkes indskrænkende, og til, at det af betragtning 25 (ved en skrivefejl angivet som 28) i præamblen til Udbudsdirektivet er anført, at undtagelsen ikke skal gælde for levering af teknisk materiel (præmis 64-65). Det fremgår, at svaret skal forstås sådan, at radio- og tv-stationers indgåelse af en rengøringskontrakt ikke er omfattet af undtagelsen fra udbudspligt.

Som også berørt ovenfor fremgår det af dommens præmis 30, at sagen ville have fået samme udfald, hvis den havde været omfattet af det nugældende udbudsdirektiv.

EF-domstolens dom af 18. december 2007, sag C-220/06, Asociación Profesional de Empresas de Reparto y Manipulado de Correspondencia

En offentlig myndigheds aftale med en virksomhed om postbefordring, der ikke er omfattet af en eneret for virksomheden i overensstemmelse med Postdirektivet, skal udbydes, hvis aftalens værdi når op på tærskelværdien for tjenesteydelser. Hvis aftalens værdi er under tærskelværdien, skal der ske en passende offentliggørelse. Et statsligt postvæsen var ikke in house i forhold til staten, da virksomhedskriteriet ikke var opfyldt

Direktiv 97/67, i det følgende kaldet Postdirektivet, går bl.a. ud på følgende: 1) Hver medlemsstat skal sørge for, at der i medlemsstaten findes mindst én virksomhed, der har pligt til at udføre postbefordring, 2) medlemsstaten kan give den eller de virksomheder, der har pligt til at udføre postbefordring, eneret til at udføre befordring bl.a. af forsendelser under 350 g.

I Spanien ligger pligten til at udføre postbefordring hos det spanske post- og telegrafvæsen, et statsejet aktieselskab, der i sagen omtales som Correos. Ved den spanske lovgivning er der tillagt Correos eneret til at udføre visse former for postbefordring, tilsyneladende i overensstemmelse med Postdirektivets regler om eneret.

Efter den spanske lovgivning kan offentlige myndigheder indgå samarbejdsaftaler med Correos, og sagen angår en sådan samarbejdsaftale indgået mellem det spanske undervisningsministerium og Correos. Denne samarbejdsaftale, der er indgået uden tidsbegrænsning, går ud på, at Correos mod en nærmere fastsat betaling udfører postbefordring m.m. for undervisningsministeriet, også postbefordring, der ikke er omfattet af Correos' eneret.

En virksomhed klagede til en domstol over, at den omtalte samarbejdsaftale var indgået uden forudgående udbud. Domstolen forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen med et spørgsmål, om hvorvidt Traktatens bestemmelser om fri etableringsret og fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser m.m. var til hinder for en samarbejdsaftale som den omtalte.

EF-domstolen udtalte (Klagenævnets litrering, af forståelsesgrunde stærkt sammentrængt og til dels omformuleret):

1) Fællesskabsretten er ikke til hinder for at, at offentlige myndigheder i en medlemsstat uden udbud overlader postbesørgelse til et statsligt selskab, der har postbefordringspligten i medlemsstaten, i det omfang den overladte postbesørgelse er omfattet af en eneret, som virksomheden har fået tillagt i overensstemmelse med Postdirektivet. EF-domstolens stillingtagen skulle således kun angå postbesørgelse, der ikke er omfattet af en sådan eneret. (Præmis 39-42).

2) Afgørende for, om der var udbudspligt, dvs. i henhold til det dagældende tjenesteydelsesdirektiv, var dels, om samarbejdsaftalens værdi nåede op på direktivets tærskeværdi, dels om samarbejdsaftalen kunne anses for en egentlig aftale. Det tilkom den nationale domstol at tage stilling til disse spørgsmål. Den nationale domstol skulle herunder undersøge, om

Correos kunne forhandle aftalens indhold og betalingen, og om Correos kunne opsige aftalen. (Præmis 48 og 54-55).

3) Correos kunne ikke anses for »in house« i forhold til den spanske stat, da den ene af de to betingelser, som EF-domstolen har opstillet for at anse en selvstændig juridisk person for in house, ikke var opfyldt, dvs. en betingelse om, at den pågældende virksomhed udfører hovedparten af sin virksomhed sammen med den eller de myndigheder, der ejes af. Hovedparten af Correos' virksomhed udføres nemlig ikke for det offentlige, men for et ubestemt antal kunder. (Præmis 58-59).

(De to omtalte betingelser for at anse en selvstændig juridisk person for in house er opstillet i et antal tidligere domme fra EF-domstolen, senest i dom af 19. april 2007 i sag C-295/05). I Klagenævnets resumé af denne dom er den her omtalte betingelse kaldt »virksomhedskriteriet«.

4) Aftalen var ikke omfattet af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 6, hvorefter direktivet ikke fandt anvendelse på tjenesteydelsesaftaler med en ordregivende myndighed på grundlag af en eneret, der er tildelt den pågældende ordregivende myndighed i overensstemmelse med traktaten. (En tilsvarende bestemmelse indeholdes i det nugældende udbudsdirektivs artikel 18). En eventuel eneret for Correos til at udføre postbesørgelse for den offentlige administration er i nemlig strid med Postdirektivet, hvis den angår postbefordring, for hvis vedkommende en tildeling af en eneret ikke har hjemmel i Postdirektivet. Domstolen fremsatte i forbindelse hermed nogle udtalelser om rækkevidden af begrebet eneret i henhold til Postdirektivet (Præmis 64-68).

5) For det tilfælde, at værdien af samarbejdsaftalen mellem undervisningsministeriet og Correos ikke nåede op på Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets tærskelværdi, fremsatte EF-domstolen nogle udførlige udtalelser, der ikke kan gengives kort (præmis 70-88). Som de mest centrale af disse udtalelser kan nævnes:

Principperne om forbud mod forskelsbehandling på grund af nationalitet, fri etableringsret, fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser og ligebehandling finder anvendelse. Der er herefter et krav om gennemskuelighed, hvorfor der skal sikres en passende grad af offentlighed til fordel for enhver potentiel tilbudsgiver. (Præmis 73-76).

Traktatens artikel 86, stk. 2 (om virksomheder, der udfører tjenesteydelser af almindelig økonomisk interesse) kan ikke påberåbes med hensyn til postbefordring, der ikke er omfattet af eneret i overensstemmelse med Postdirektivet (præmis 79-83).

EF-domstolens dom af 18. december 2007, sag C-357/06, Frigerio Luigi & C.

En italiensk lovbestemmelse om, at ordregivende myndigheder kun kan indgå kontrakter om tjenesteydelser med kapitalselskaber, var i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 26

Efter den italienske lovgivning kan offentlige myndigheder kun indgå kontrakter om udførelse af tjenesteydelser med kapitalselskaber (dvs. selskaber med begrænset hæftelse, der opfylder visse minimumskrav, i dansk ret aktie- og anpartsselskaber).

Et interessentskab, F, havde i en årrække sammen med et andet interessentskab udført renovationsarbejdet for en kommune, og F var opført på en fortegnelse over virksomheder med ret til at varetage affaldsaktiviteter. På et tidspunkt overdrog kommunen uden forudgående udbud renovationsarbejdet til et aktieselskab, som kommunen samtidig indtrådte i.

F klagede til en forvaltningsdomstol over, at kommunens overdragelse af renovationsarbejdet til aktieselskabet var sket uden EU-udbud. Kommunen påstod klagen afvist med den begrundelse, at F ikke havde retlig interesse, fordi F ikke var et kapitalselskab.

Forvaltningsdomstolen forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen med nogle spørgsmål, der med forskellige formuleringer sigtede til, om den ovennævnte bestemmelse i den italienske lovgivning var i overensstemmelse med fællesskabsretten.

EF-domstolen udtalte (noget sammentrængt):

Det var Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, der fandt anvendelse.

Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 26, stk. 2, er til hinder for en national lovbestemmelse, der udelukker virksomheder med ret til at udføre en tjenesteydelse i deres egen medlemsstat fra at være tilbudsgivere med hensyn til denne tjenesteydelse på grund af den kategori af juridiske personer, de tilhører. F havde endvidere ret til at udføre affaldsaktiviteter i Italien. (Den tilsvarende bestemmelse er i dag Udbudsdirektivets artikel 4, stk. 1).

Det følger af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 26, stk. 1, at en ordregivende myndighed ikke kan kræve, at en sammenslutning af tjenesteydere omdannes til en bestemt retlig form med henblik på afgivelse af tilbud. (Den tilsvarende bestemmelse i Udbudsdirektivet er artikel 4, stk. 2).

Den nationale domstol er forpligtet til at fortolke og anvende en national lovbestemmelse i overensstemmelse med fællesskabsretten og til om fornødent at undlade at anvende en national lovbestemmelse, der strider mod fællesskabsretten.

Det fandtes ufornødent at besvare to af de stillede spørgsmål, der direkte gik på, om den omtalte regel i den italienske lovgivning var i strid med fællesskabsretten, da den italienske domstol ved EF-domstolens udtalelser i øvrigt havde fået tilstrækkeligt grundlag til at afgøre den konkrete sag, hvorfor besvarelsen af de to spørgsmål udelukkende ville være af hypotetisk interesse.

EF-domstolens dom af 24. januar 2008, sag C-532/06, Lianakis mfl.
Nogle underkriterier angik tilbudsgivernes egnethed og var derfor i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet. Underkriterier til underkriterier skal som almindelig regel være oplyst på forhånd

En græsk kommune iværksatte et EU-udbud i henhold til det dagældende tjenesteydelsesdirektiv vedrørende en tjenesteydelse bestående af opmåling m.m. i en bydel. Kriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud. I udbudsbekendtgørelsen var angivet følgende underkriterier i prioriteret orden: 1) tilbudsgiverens erfaring, 2) tilbudsgiverens personale og udstyr og 3) tilbudsgiverens evne til at gennemføre undersøgelsen inden for den fastsatte tid.

Efter tilbuddenes afgivelse fastsatte ordregiveren vægtningsprocenter for de tre underkriterier, henholdsvis 60 %, 20 % og 20 %.

Ordregiveren besluttede desuden, at pointtildelingen til tilbuddene vedrørende hvert af underkriterierne efter nærmere angivne beregningsmetoder skulle ske på grundlag af følgende forhold: Vedrørende underkriterium 1) værdien af de undersøgelser, som tilbudsgiveren havde udført, vedrørende underkriterium 2) størrelsen af tilbudsgiverens personale og vedrørende underkriterium 3) omfanget af den tilbudte undersøgelse. Denne beslutning kaldes i dommen, at ordregiveren fastsatte underkriterier til underkriterierne, hvilken terminologi benyttes i det følgende.

En tilbudsgiver, der ikke fik tildelt kontrakten, klagede til en græsk forvaltningsdomstol over, at underkriteriernes vægtning og underkriterierne til underkriterierne ikke havde været oplyst på forhånd.

Forvaltningsdomstolen forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen med et spørgsmål om, hvorvidt det var i overensstemmelse med tjenesteydelsesdirektivet først at fastsætte vægtningen af underkriterier efter udbuddet.

EF-domstolen udtalte (gengivet stærkt sammentrængt og til dels omformuleret):

1) taget op ex officio på grundlag af et indlæg fra Kommissionen: Efterprøvelsen af tilbudsgivernes kvalifikationer og tildelingen af en udbudt kontrakt kan finde sted samtidig. Der er imidlertid tale om to særskilte processer, der er omfattet af forskellige regler, og underkriterier skal have til formål at identificere det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud. Dette var ikke tilfældet for underkriterierne i det udbud, som sagen angik, da de vedrørte tilbudsgivernes evne til at gennemføre den udbudte ydelse. De anvendte underkriterier var derfor i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets regler om vurdering af tilbudsgivernes egnethed og tildelingskriterier. (Præmis 24-32).

2) Af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed følger, at potentielle tilbudsgivere skal kunne skaffe sig kendskab til alle forhold, som ordregiveren tager i betragtning ved udvælgelsen af det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud. En ordregiver har derfor ikke ret til at anvende bestemmelser om vægtning eller underkriterier til underkriterier, som ikke forudgående er bragt til tilbudsgivernes kundskab. (Præmis 33-40).

EF-domstolen udtalte videre (præmis 41-44), at disse konstateringer ikke er uforenelige med domstolens dom af 24. november 2005 i sagen ATI EAC mfl., som den græske forvaltningsdomstol havde henvist til, da denne dom angik en anden situation, og da der i den blev opstillet følgende betingelser for, at en ordregiver kan undlade at oplyse vægtning af underkriterier til underkriterier på forhånd: 1) at der ikke sker ændring af de oplyste underkriterier, 2) at der ikke sker ændringer af betydning for tilbuddenes udformning, og 3) at der ikke sker diskrimination af tilbudsgivere.

Følgende bemærkes:

En pligt til forhåndsoplysning af underkriteriernes indbyrdes vægtning følger i dag af § 4, stk. 2, i Udbudsdirektivet. Derimod indeholder Udbudsdirektivet ikke en regel om, at principperne for pointtildeling vedrørende de enkelte underkriterier skal være oplyst på forhånd.

For det tilfælde, at pointtildelingen sker på grundlag af bestemte forhold, i dommen omtalt som underkriterier til underkriterierne, opstiller den her resumerede dom et krav om, om disse forhold skal være oplyst på forhånd. Derimod tager dommen ikke stilling til, om principperne for pointtildeling skal oplyses på forhånd.

Den i dommen omtalte tidligere dom af 24. november 2005, ATI EAC mfl. angik et tilfælde med noget anderledes omstændigheder end den foreliggende sag. ATI EAC-sagen drejede sig om, hvorvidt den indbyrdes vægtningen af underkriterierne til et underkriterium med deraf følgende pointtildeling skulle have været oplyst på forhånd, og EF-domstolen nåede frem til, at ordregiveren ikke havde haft pligt til dette. Oplysningsniveauet var imidlertid langt højere i ATI EAC-sagen end i den foreliggende sag, idet underkriteriernes vægtning og underkriterierne til det omtalte underkriterium var oplyst på forhånd.

EF-domstolens dom af 14. februar 2008, sag C-450/06, Varec

Fortrolige oplysninger kan unddrages fra en klagers aktindsigt, men klageorganet skal selv have de nødvendige oplysninger, og der skal før udlevering af muligt fortrolige oplysninger indhentes en udtalelse fra den berørte virksomhed

Denne dom angik en klage til en belgisk domstol over et EU-udbud vedrørende indkøb af dele til kampvogne. Klagen var indgivet af en tilbudsgiver, der ikke havde fået kontrakten. Klageren havde ikke fået aktindsigt i hele tilbuddet fra den valgte tilbudsgiver, og der forelå under sagen et spørgsmål om konsekvenserne heraf.

Den belgiske domstol forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen med et spørgsmål, der gik på, om det efter første kontroldirektiv og EU-udbudsreglerne er berettiget at unddrage fortrolige oplysninger og forretningshemmeligheder fra en klagers aktindsigt.

EF-domstolen besvarede spørgsmålet bekræftende og henviste herved til forskellige forhold, herunder at udlevering af visse oplysninger til en konkurrent kan være konkurrencefordrejende. EF-domstolen udtalte desuden bl.a., at klageorganet selv skal have de nødvendige oplysninger (præmis 53), og at klageorganet inden udleveringen af eventuelt fortrolige oplysninger til en klager skal indhente en udtalelse fra den berørte virksomhed (præmis 54).

Dommen har næppe den store umiddelbare interesse set fra en dansk synsvinkel, idet Klagenævnet for Udbud administrerer klageres aktindsigt i overensstemmelse med dommen i medfør af Forvaltningslovens § 15, stk. 1. Referatet ovenfor er derfor yderst summarisk.

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 12. marts 2008 i sag T-332/03, European Service Network mod Kommissionen

Ligebehandlingsprincippet har til formål at sikre konkurrencen og give tilbudsgiverne ens chancer. Gennemsigtighedsprincippet er et supplement til ligebehandlingsprincippet og skal sikre mod favorisering og vilkårlighed. Ved udbud af kontrakter om tjenesteydelser er visse fordele for den hidtidige tjenesteyder uundgåelige. Udbyderens forsømmelser med hensyn til at give tilbudsgiverne oplysninger havde ikke haft indflydelse på tilbudsvurderingen.

Dommen er særdeles udførlig. Nedenstående referat er yderst summarisk og omfatter kun de dele af dommen, der skønnes at have nogenlunde almen udbudsretlig interesse.

Kommissionen iværksatte et EU-udbud vedrørende en tjenesteydelse. Tildelingskriteriet var det mest fordelagtige cost benefit-forhold.[3] Som underkriterier var angivet nogle kvalitative underkriterier samt prisen. De kvalitative underkriterier var, stærkt sammentrængt gengivet: 1. teknisk værdi, 2. arbejdsmetoder, 3. kreativitet og 4. tidsplan.

[3] »le rapport coût-efficacité le plus avantageux». Dette tildelingskriterium skal formentlig ses på baggrund af, at der tilsyneladende ikke på udbuddets tidspunkt var faste regler, om hvilke tildelingskriterier EU-institutionerne skulle anvende. Efter de nugældende regler skal EU-institutionerne anvende tildelingskriterier svarende til Udbudsdirektivets tildelingskriterier, jf. Gennemførelsesforordningens artikel 138.

I udbudsbetingelserne var angivet, at tilbuddene ville få tildelt points i relation til hvert af de kvalitative underkriterier inden for en skala med et nærmere angivet maksimum for hvert underkriterium, således at tilbuddene højst kunne få 100 points for de kvalitative underkriterier tilsammen. Fastsættelsen af de enkelte maksima var udtryk for en indbyrdes vægtning af de kvalitative underkriterier.

I udbudsbetingelserne var endvidere angivet, at tilbud, der ikke opnåede mindst 50 % af de mulige points pr. kvalitativt underkriterium og mindst 60 points tilsammen for de kvalitative underkriterier, ikke ville blive taget i betragtning.

Følgende fremgik desuden af udbudsbetingelserne: Når der var tildelt tilbuddene points for de kvalitative underkriterier, ville Kommissionen sætte »prisfaktoren« i relation til »kvalitetsfaktoren«. Det var tilsyneladende ikke angivet, hvorledes denne relation ville blive beregnet.

Der indkom tilbud fra nogle tilbudsgivere, herunder den virksomhed, der aktuelt udførte den udbudte tjenesteydelse. Kommissionen tildelte tilbuddene points vedrørende de kvalitative underkriterier og beregnede derefter den omtalte relation mellem prisfaktoren og kvalitetsfaktoren. Denne beregning blev foretaget ved brug af følgende formel:

$$\frac{\text{samlet pointtal for de kvalitative underkriterier x 1 mio.}}{\text{tilbudspris}}$$

Beregningen førte til den bedste relation for tilbuddet fra den aktuelle tjenesteyder, efter det foreliggende reelt som følge af en lav tilbudspris, hvorfor Kommissionen besluttede at indgå kontrakt med den aktuelle tjenesteyder.

En af de andre tilbudsgivere anlagde sagen med påstand om annullation af udbuddet og under påberåbelse af forskellige anbringender. Rettens afgørelse kan gengives således:

1) Ad et anbringende om overtrædelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet ved et krav i udbudsbetingelserne om, at en ny kontraktpart skulle gennemgå en obligatorisk indkøringsperiode på tre måneder uden betaling:

Ikke taget til følge, bl.a. med henvisning til, at der ikke var tale om en obligatorisk indkøringsperiode på tre måneder (præmis 77). Ud fra en samlet vurdering forelå der ikke en overtrædelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet (præmis 87).

2) Ad et anbringende om overtrædelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet ved et krav om, at en ny kontraktpart skulle betale for forskellige oplysninger m.m.:

Ikke taget til følge (præmis 95), da der ikke var stillet et sådant krav (præmis 93).

3) Ad et anbringende om overtrædelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet ved, at alene den hidtidige tjenesteyder havde adgang til forskellige væsentlige oplysninger m.m.:

Retten udtalelser vedrørende dette anbringende (præmis 97-178) er særdeles omfattende og kan ikke gengives kort. Fra udtalelserne kan nævnes: Ligebehandlingsprincippet har til formål at fremme konkurrencen, og det følger af ligebehandlingsprincippet, at alle tilbudsgivere skal have ens chancer (præmis 125). Gennemsigtigtighedsprincippet er et supplement (»corrollaire«) til ligebehandlingsprincippet og har som hoved-formål at sikre mod favorisering og vilkårlighed (præmis 126). At alene den hidtidige tjenesteyder har visse oplysninger m.m., er en integreret og uundgåelig konsekvens ved udbud af ydelser, der hidtil er udført af en enkelt kontraktpart (præmis 142). Der skulle foretages en afvejning (præmis 147), og visse oplysninger, der var fremkommet for sent fra Kommissionen, var ikke afgørende for tilbudsudformningen (præmis 151). Kommissionen havde udvist forskellige forsømmelser med hensyn med hensyn til at give tilbudsgiverne oplysninger (præmis 164-166), men forsømmelserne havde ikke haft indflydelse på tilbudsvurderingen (præmis 173 og 177).

Anbringendet blev herefter ikke taget til følge (præmis 178).

4) Ad et anbringende om, at Kommissionen havde vurderet tilbuddene i strid med den tilbudsvurdering, der var angivet i udbudsbetingelserne.

Anbringendet sigtede navnlig til, at den anvendte formel for relationen mellem de kvalitative underkriterier og prisen efter sagsøgerens opfattelse ikke tillagde de kvalitative underkriterier tilstrækkelig vægt.

Anbringendet blev ikke taget til følge, da der ikke var grundlag herfor (præmis 201). Herved bl.a. henvist til nogle formler opstillet af Retten (præmis 197).

5) Ad et anbringende om, at Kommissionens vurdering af sagsøgerens tilbud med hensyn til tilbuddets kvalitet m.m. var sket i strid med udbudsbetingelserne:

Ikke taget til følge (præmis 227), idet Kommissionen efter Rettens vurdering havde foretaget tilbudsvurderingen i overensstemmelse med udbudsbetingelserne (præmis 225).

Kommissionen blev herefter frifundet. En yderligere påstand, der ikke er refereret ovenfor, blev dog afvist.

Rettens dom af samme dag i sag T-345/03, Evropaïki Dynamiki mod Kommissionen (er set benævnt Cordis), angår en særlig delaftale under samme udbud.

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 12. marts 2008 i sag T-345/03, Evropaïki Dynamiki mod Kommissionen (er set benævnt Cordis)

Udbyderen tilsidesatte ligebehandlingsprincippet ved ikke at give tilbudsgiverne alle nødvendige oplysninger med den konsekvens, at kun den valgte tilbudsgiver som følge af sit samarbejde med den aktuelle tjenesteyder havde alle oplysningerne. Tildelingsbeslutningen annulleret

Sagen angår et EU-udbud vedrørende en tjenesteydelse, iværksat af Kommissionen. Sagen var anlagt af en tilbudsgiver, der ikke havde fået tildelt kontrakten, med påstand om annullation af tildelingsbeslutningen.

Dommen angår samme udbud som Rettens dom af samme dag i sag T-332/03, European Service Network mod Kommissionen, men angår en særlig delaftale under udbuddet. Med hensyn til tildelingskriteriet og principperne for tilbudsvurderingen ol. henvises til resuméet af dommen i European Service Network-sagen.

Rettens stillingtagen til sagsøgerens anbringender i den her resumerede dom kan gengives således:

1) Ad et anbringende om overtrædelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet ved et krav i udbudsbetingelserne om, at en ny kontraktpart skulle gennemgå en obligatorisk indkøringsperiode på tre måneder uden betaling:

Ikke taget til følge med henvisning til, at der ikke var tale om en obligatorisk indkøringsperiode på tre måneder (præmis 86). Afgørelsen svarer til den tilsvarende afgørelse om samme spørgsmål i European Service Network-sagen (om end præmisserne ikke er identiske).

2) Ad et anbringende om overtrædelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet ved, at alle tilbudsgiverne ikke eller ikke rettidigt havde fået alle nødvendige oplysninger.

Dette anbringende sigtede til dels til, at den valgte tilbudsgiver havde samarbejde med den aktuelle tjenesteyder og ville benytte denne som underleverandør, hvorfor den valgte tilbudsgiver efter sagsøgerens opfattelse havde et bedre kendskab til den udbudte tjenesteydelse end de øvrige tilbudsgivere.

Retten fremsatte nogle generelle udtalelser om principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed. Disse udtalelser svarer til de tilsvarende generelle udtalelser om emnet i European Service Network-dommen, og der henvises om dem til resuméet af denne dom.

Med hensyn til visse af de omhandlede oplysninger tog Retten ikke anbringendet til følge med henvisning til, at forholdet ikke havde haft betydning for tilbudsvurderingen (præmis 169). Afgørelsen herom svarer til den tilsvarende afgørelse i European Service Network-sagen.

Retten lagde derimod til grund, at fuldt kendskab var nødvendigt på et andet punkt, dvs. med hensyn til opbygningen og kildekoden for et edb-system, der aktuelt blev brugt ved tjenesteydelsens udførelse. Som følge af manglende eller ufuldstændige oplysninger herom over for tilbudsgiverne var det kun den valgte tilbudsgiver og den aktuelle tjenesteyder, der havde kendskab til edb-systemet, hvilket havde givet den valgte tilbudsgiver en uberettiget fordel (præmis 175 ff.). Det var endvidere på troværdig måde påvist, at forholdet kunne have haft betydelig negativ indvirkning på sagsøgerens tilbudspris og derved kunne have frataget sagsøgeren muligheden for at få kontrakten (præmis 203).

Retten annullerede herefter Kommissionens tildelingsbeslutning.

EF-domstolens dom af 3. april 2008 i sag C-346/06, Rüffert

Referatet nedenfor er stærkt sammentrængt og kun medtaget for at henlede opmærksomheden på dommen.

Sagen angår direktiv 96/71 om udstationering af arbejdstagere som led i udveksling af tjenesteydelser, i det følgende kaldet Udstationeringsdirektivet. Dette direktiv angår virksomheder i en medlemsstat, der i forbindelse med levering af tjenesteydelser over grænserne udstationerer arbejdstagere på en anden medlemsstats område. Direktivet finder således bl.a. anvendelse, når et byggefirma i en medlemsstat udfører byggearbejde i en anden medlemsstat.

Udstationeringsdirektivet går (meget stærkt sammentrængt) ud på følgende: Medlemsstaterne påser, at virksomheder fra en anden medlemsstat sikrer udstationerede arbejdstagere de arbejds- og ansættelsesvilkår, herunder mindsteløn, som følger af lovgivning eller af kollektive aftaler, der finder generel anvendelse i den medlemsstat, hvor arbejdet udføres. Ved kollektive aftaler, der finder generel anvendelse, forstås kollektive aftaler, der skal overholdes af alle virksomheder inden for sektoren, eller – hvis sådanne aftaler ikke findes – aftaler, som er alment gældende for alle til-svarende virksomheder i området, eller som er indgået af de mest repræsentative arbejdsmarkedsparter på nationalt plan for hele det nationale område.

Sagen angik et fængselsbyggeri i en tysk delstat foretaget af delstaten efter EU-udbud. Kontrakten blev tildelt et tysk byggefirma og indeholdt en klausul om, at byggefirmaet skulle overholde en kollektiv overenskomst om offentlige bygge- og anlægsarbejder. Dette var i overensstemmelse med delstatens lov om offentlige kontrakter, hvorefter offentlige kontrakter om bygge- og anlægsarbejder kun må gives til virksomheder, som har forpligtet sig til at betale sine ansatte den på leveringsstedet overenskomstmæssigt fastsatte løn.

Byggefirmaet antog en polsk virksomhed som underentreprenør. Efter at det var kommet frem, at den polske virksomhed udbetalte en lavere løn til sine medarbejdere end mindstelønnen i henhold til den omtalte overenskomst, hævede udbyderen kontrakten med det tyske byggefirma, der derefter gik konkurs. Der verserede herefter en retssag mellem byggefirmaets konkursbo og udbyderen, tilsyneladende om et erstatningskrav fra konkursboet.

Den tyske domstol forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen med et spørgsmål om, hvorvidt den omtalte lovbestemmelse var i overensstemmelse med traktatens regler om fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser.

EF-domstolen udtalte:

Delstatens lov om offentlige kontrakter var ikke en lov som omhandlet i Udstationeringsdirektivet, da loven ikke fastsatte en mindsteløn (præmis 24). Endvidere fandt den omtalte kollektive overenskomst efter sagens oplysninger ikke generel anvendelse, og den var heller ikke alment gældende, da den kun angik offentlige byggerier (præmis 28 og 29). Herefter, og da forskellige nærmere angivne regler i direktivet ikke fandt anvendelse, besvarede EF-domstolen det stillede spørgsmål således: Udstationeringsdirektivet og traktatens artikel 49 (om fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser) er til hinder for en national lovbestemmelse om, at en ordregivende myndighed kun må indgå kontrakter med virksomheder, som har forpligtet sig til at udbetale deres ansatte den overenskomstmæssige mindsteløn, der gælder på leveringsstedet.

Følgende bemærkes yderligere:

Udstationeringsdirektivet angår forskellige andre spørgsmål end mindsteløn, dvs. hviletidsregler m.m. EF-domstolen har også beskæftiget sig med direktivet i dom af 18. december 2007 i sag C-341/05, Laval und Partneri (også kaldet Vaxholm). Denne sag angik berettigelsen af kollektive kampskridt til gennemførelse af forskellige nationale overenskomstbestemmelser om andet end mindsteløn.

Udstationeringsdirektivet er implementeret i Danmark ved lovbekendtgørelse nr. 849 af 21. juli 2006 om udstationering af lønmodtagere. Denne lov indeholder ikke regler om mindsteløn. Arbejdsministeriet har inidlertid ved cirkulæreskrivelse nr. 114 af 18. maj 1996 tilkendegivet, at der i statslige byggekontrakter m.m. over en vis størrelse skal indsættes en klausul om, at bl.a. lønvilkår ikke må være mindre gunstige end sædvanlige vilkår. Denne cirkulæreskrivelse bygger på en ILO-konvention, til hvilken der henvises i cirkulæreskrivelsen. I Konkurrencestyrelsens vejledning om sociale aftaler henvises s. 8 hertil og udtales desuden, at en virksomhed, der er etableret i et andet EU-land, ikke kan udelukkes fra at deltage i et udbud, blot fordi den ikke har tilsluttet sig en kollektiv overenskomst i Danmark.

Umiddelbart forekommer det usikkert, om den omtalte cirkulæreskrivelse kan opretholdes efter den her resumerede dom, og om en offentlig ordregiver kan fastsætte som vilkår for et EU-udbud, at tilbudsgiverne skal aflønne deres ansatte svarende til dansk mindsteløn.

EF-domstolens dom af 3. april 2008, sag C-444/06, Kommissionen mod Spanien

Spanien havde overtrådt 1. kontroldirektiv som følge af, at der i visse tilfælde ikke er mulighed for at klage over en tildelingsbeslutning før kontraktsindgåelsen. Spanien havde derimod ikke overtrådt direktivet ved en regel om, at ugyldige kontrakter kan opretholdes midlertidigt under visse betingelser

Ved denne dom statueredes, at Spanien havde overtrådt 1. kontroldirektiv på grund af følgende: Den spanske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter var indrettet sådan, at der i visse tilfælde ikke var mulighed for at klage over en tildelingsbeslutning fra en ordregiver før ordregiverens indgåelse af kontrakt med den valgte tilbudsgiver.

Derimod havde Kommissionen ikke godtgjort, at Spanien havde overtrådt kontroldirektivet ved en regel i den spanske lovgivning, hvorefter kontrakter, der er erklæret ugyldige, under visse betingelser kan opretholdes midlertidigt for at undgå at forstyrre den offentlige tjeneste alvorligt. Herved bl.a. henvist til, at formålet med denne bestemmelse ikke var at forhindre ugyldigheden af en kontrakt, men at undgå uforholdsmæssige og eventuelt skadelige konsekvenser for almenvellet.

EF-domstolens dom af 8. april 2008, sag C-337/05, Kommissionen mod Italien

Italien havde overtrådt de tidligere indkøbsdirektiver ved en fast praksis om indkøb af helikoptere uden EU-udbud. En virksomhed, der er delvis privatejet, er aldrig in house i forhold til en offentlig ordregiver, heller ikke selvom den private ejerandel er en minoritetsandel

Ved denne dom statueredes, at Italien havde overtrådt de tidligere indkøbsdirektiver ved en fast praksis om indkøb af helikoptere fra helikopterproducenten Augusta uden forudgående EU-udbud og uden at følge procedurerne i direktiverne.

EF-domstolen udtalte herunder bl.a.:

Helikopterfirmaet Augusta kunne ikke som påberåbt af Italien anses for »in house« i forhold til den italienske stat med den begrundelse, at Augusta delvis ejes af staten. EF-domstolen henviste herved til, at Augusta er delvis privatejet og derfor ikke opfylder det af EF-domstolen opstillede kontrolkriterium, hvorefter en virksomhed for at være in house i forhold til en ordregiver skal være undergivet samme kontrol fra ordregiveren som ordregiverens kontrol med sine egne tjenestegrene. Udtalt, at en privat ejerandel under alle omstændigheder udelukker, at kontrolkriteriet er opfyldt, også selvom den private ejerandel er en minoritetsandel (præmis 38).

Italien kunne ikke påberåbe sig forskellige traktatbestemmelser om legitime nationale hensyn og den offentlige sikkerhed m.m. som begrundelse for at undlade udbud. Herved bl.a. henvist til, at helikopterne til dels blev brugt til civile formål (præmis 42-49).

Italien kunne ikke påberåbe sig en undtagelsesbestemmelse i de tidligere indkøbsdirektiver om indkøbsaftaler, der er hemmelige, eller som ledsages af særlige sikkerhedsforanstaltninger. (Den tilsvarende bestemmelse i Udbudsdirektivet 2004/18 er artikel 14). Herved henvist til, at Italien ikke havde godtgjort, at formålet ikke kunne forfølges inden for rammerne af en udbudsprocedure (præmis 53).

Italien havde ikke som hævdet kunnet iværksætte udbud efter forhandling i medfør af de tidligere indkøbsdirektivers regler om udbud efter forhandling med hensyn til varer, der kun kan overdrages til en bestemt leverandør m.m. (De tilsvarende regler i Udbudsdirektivet 2004/18 er artikel, litra 1, a og b). Herved bl.a. henvist til, at Italien ikke havde godtgjort, at udelukkende Augustas helikoptere havde de krævede tekniske egenskaber (præmis 59).

EF-domstolens dom af 10. april 2008, sag C-393/06, Ing. Aigner

En ordregiver, der driver virksomhed under Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet, er ikke omfattet af dette direktiv med hensyn til anden virksomhed. Et fjernvarmeselskab var et offentligretligt organ. Alle kontrakter, der indgås af et offentligretligt organ, er omfattet af udbudsdirektiverne, også kontrakter, der angår rent erhvervsmæssige aktiviteter

Aktieselskabet Fernwärme Wien varetager fjernvarmeforsyningen i Wien og har reelt monopol herpå. Denne aktivitet er omfattet af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet. Herudover driver Fernwärme Wien på almindelige markedsvilkår virksomhed med etablering af køleanlæg, hvilket ikke er omfattet af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet. Fernwärme Wien ejes og kontrolleres af byen Wien.

Sagen angik et udbud iværksat af Fernwärme Wien vedrørende udførelse af et køleanlæg. Udbuddet blev ikke foretaget som EU-udbud, da Fernwärme Wien ikke mente at have pligt hertil. Efter at Fernwärme Wien havde meddelt en tilbudsgiver, at tilbudsgiverens tilbud ikke kom i betragtning, klagede tilbudsgiveren til et klageorgan og gjorde gældende, at udbuddet var omfattet af EU-udbudsreglerne.

Klageorganet stillede tre spørgsmål til EF-domstolen. Spørgsmålene kan lidt omformuleret gengives således:

Spørgsmål 1): Er en ordregiver, der udøver virksomhed omfattet af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet, også omfattet af dette direktiv med hensyn til en anden virksomhed, som ordregiveren udøver?

Spørgsmål 2): Er et selskab som Fernwärme Wien et offentligretligt organ?

Spørgsmål 3): Er et offentligretligt organ omfattet af udbudsdirektiverne med hensyn til en erhvervsmæssig virksomhed, som det offentligretlige organ udøver ved siden af sin virksomhed som offentligretligt organ, og som regnskabsmæssigt m.m. er klart adskilt fra denne virksomhed?

EF-domstolen besvarede spørgsmålene således (noget sammentrængt og af forståelsesgrunde til dels omformuleret):

Ad spørgsmål 1): En ordregiver, der udøver virksomhed omfattet af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet, er ikke omfattet af dette direktiv med hensyn til en anden virksomhed, som ordregiveren udøver. Herved bl.a. henvist til, at Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet har begrænset rækkevidde og for så vidt skal fortolkes indskrænkende (præmis 27).

Ad spørgsmål 2): Et selskab som Fernwärme Wien er et offentligretligt organ, da det opfylder udbudsdirektivernes betingelser herfor (præmis 34-46). Herved bl.a. henvist til, at Fernwärme Wien reelt har monopol på levering af fjernvarme (præmis 44). Det er uden betydning, at Fernwärme Wien ved siden af sin virksomhed til imødekommelse af almenhedens behov også udøver erhvervsmæssig virksomhed (»udøver andre former for virksomhed med profit for øje«, præmis 47).

Ad spørgsmål 3): Ordregivende myndigheder, herunder offentligretlige organer, skal udbyde alle kontrakter [dvs. om anskaffelser omfattet af udbudsdirektiverne]. Hvis kontrakterne har relation til en aktivitet omfattet af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet, skal fremgangsmåden i dette direktiv følges. Alle andre kontrakter skal udbydes efter Udbudsdirektivet (præmis 56-58). Det er uden betydning, om det offentligretlige organ fører særskilt regnskab for sine erhvervsmæssige aktiviteter ud over sin virksomhed til imødekommelse af almenhedens behov, idet det er særdeles tvivlsomt, om aktiviteterne i praksis kan holdes ude fra hinanden (præmis 49-54).

Følgende bemærkes yderligere:

Om begrebet »offentligretligt organ«, dvs. en særlig type ordregiver, der er omfattet af udbudsdirektivernes udbudspligt, henvises til definitionerne i Udbudsdirektivets artikel 1, stk. 9, og Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivets artikel 2, stk. 1, a. De to definitioner er formuleret lidt forskelligt, men karakteriseres i dommen som enslydende (præmis 35). De er overtaget fra de tidligere udbudsdirektiver og skal utvivlsomt forstås i overensstemmelse med dem, hvilket også fremgår af, at dommen henviser til forskellige afgørelser vedrørende begrebet offentligretligt organ under de tidligere udbudsdirektiver.

Klagenævnet har i sit resumé af en af de tidligere afgørelser, dvs. dom af 27. februar 2003 i sag C-373/00, Adolf Truley, givet en generel fremstilling af begrebet offentligretligt organ. Adolf Truley-sagen minder meget om den aktuelle sag, og EF-domstolens udtalelser i den her resumerede dom synes ikke at være udtryk for noget nyt.

EF-domstolens dom af 15. maj 2008, sager C-147/06 og C-148/06, Secap

Traktatens grundlæggende regler gælder kun for kontrakter under tærskelværdien, hvis kontrakterne har en klar grænseoverskridende interesse. Der kan i den nationale lovgivning fastsættes kriterier herom

En italiensk lov om offentlige bygge- og anlægsarbejder indeholdt en regel om unormalt lave bud ved udbud med tildelingskriteriet laveste pris. Denne regel kan kort gengives således:

Tilbud, hvis tilbudsbeløb i et nærmere angivet omfang lå under gennemsnittet af alle tilbudsbeløb, skulle anses som unormalt lave bud, og udbyderen skulle med hensyn til sådanne tilbud forholde sig således:

Hvis kontraktens værdi nåede op på eller oversteg Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets tærskelværdi, skulle udbyderen følge regler svarende til direktivets artikel 30 om fremgangsmåden med hensyn til unormalt lave bud (hvorefter udbyderen skulle kontrollere sammensætningen af det eller de pågældende tilbud; de tilsvarende regler er i dag indeholdt i Udbudsdirektivets artikel 55).

Hvis kontraktens værdi ikke nåede op på tærskelværdien, skulle udbyderen automatisk udelukke unormalt lave bud fra at komme i betragtning, medmindre der var indkommet mindre end 5 tilbud.

Sagen angik to udbud iværksat af en italiensk kommune vedrørende bygge- og anlægsarbejder. Værdien af begge udbud lå under Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets tærskelværdi. Tildelingskriteriet var øjensynligt laveste pris ved begge udbud. I udbudsbetingelserne for begge udbud var angivet, at udbyderen ikke automatisk ville undlade at tage unormalt lave bud i betragtning.

To virksomheder, der havde afgivet tilbud ved hver sit af de to udbud, klagede til en italiensk forvaltningsdomstol over, at udbyderen ved begge udbud havde taget unormalt lave bud i betragtning. Virksomhederne gjorde gældende, at udbyderen havde været uberettiget hertil som følge af den omtalte italienske lovbestemmelse om automatisk udelukkelse af unormalt lave bud ved indgåelse af kontrakter under tærskelværdien.

Forvaltningsdomstolen frifandt udbyderen med begrundelse, at udbyderen ikke havde haft pligt til automatisk at udelukke unormalt lave bud, og at udbyderen havde været berettiget til i stedet for – hvilket var sket – at kontrollere de pågældende tilbuds sammensætning (dvs. havde været berettiget til at følge den omtalte italienske lovregel, der svarede til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets regel om fremgangsmåden ved unormalt lave bud).

De to virksomheder indbragte sagen for en ankeinstans, der øjensynligt var i tvivl om, hvorvidt den omtalte italienske lovbestemmelse om automatisk udelukkelse af unormalt lave bud ved indgåelse af kontrakter under tærskelværdien var i strid med EU-retten. Ankeinstansen forelagde derfor sagen for EF-domstolen med spørgsmål om, hvorvidt udbudsdirektivernes regler om fremgangsmåden ved unormalt lave bud er udtryk for grundlæggende fællesskabsretlige principper.

EF-domstolen kommenterede forelæggelsen ret udførligt og udtalte herunder bl.a.:

De fremgangsmåder, der er fastsat i udbudsdirektiverne, finder kun anvendelse ved indgåelse af kontrakter, hvis værdi [når op på eller] overskrider tærskelværdien (præmis 19).

Med hensyn til kontrakter under tærskelværdien skal de ordregivende myndigheder imidlertid overholde traktatens grundlæggende regler, navnlig forbuddet mod forskelsbehandling på grund af nationalitet (præmis 20).

Dette forudsætter dog, at de pågældende kontrakter under tærskelværdien har en klar grænseoverskridende interesse (præmis 21). En national regel om automatisk udelukkelse af unormalt lave bud vil således ved kontrakter med klar grænseoverskridende interesse være i strid med traktatens grundlæggende regler om fri bevægelighed og i strid med det generelle forbud mod forskelsbehandling. En sådan regel vil også stride mod de ordregivende myndigheders egen interesse (præmis 29).

Den ordregivende myndighed skal vurdere, om en kontrakt under udbudsdirektivernes tærskelværdi har grænseoverskridende interesse, men spørgsmålet skal kunne indbringes for domstolene. Der kan endvidere i den nationale lovgivning fastsættes kriterier for, hvornår en kontrakt har klar grænseoverskridende interesse, bl.a. kriterier vedrørende kontraktens størrelse og udførelsesstedet (præmis 30-31).

Selvom der foreligger en klar grænseoverskridende interesse, vil en automatisk udelukkelse af unormalt lave bud dog være acceptabel, hvis udelukkelsen er begrundet i et usædvanligt stort antal bud, således at det ville overstige ordregiverens kapacitet at følge udbudsdirektivernes regler om fremgangsmåden ved unormalt lave bud. Kriterier herom kan fastsættes i den nationale lovgivning eller af den ordregivende myndighed selv. Grænsen på 5 tilbud i den italienske lovregel er ikke rimelig (præmis 32-33).

Den italienske ankeinstans skulle foretage en indgående vurdering af, om der forelå en klar grænseoverskridende interesse i hovedsagen (præmis 34).

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter de stillede spørgsmål i overensstemmelse med det anførte.

Følgende bemærkes:

EF-domstolen har i en række tidligere afgørelser statueret, at de ordregivende myndigheder har pligt til at overholde almindelige principper om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed med hensyn til kontrakter, der ikke er omfattet af udbudspligten efter udbudsdirektiverne, fx dom af 14. juni 2007 i sag C-06/05, Medipac-Kazantzkis. Af disse afgørelser er fremgået, at der derfor gælder en vis form for offentliggørelsespligt for sådanne kontrakter, se fx dom af 21. juli 2005 i sag C-231/03, Coname.

Det synes at være nyt, at disse forpligtelser forudsætter et grænseoverskridende element. Dette er første gang nævnt i dom af 13. november 2007 i sag C-507/03, Kommissionen mod Irland (An Post), som blev afsagt af domstolens store afdeling. Den her resumerede dom følger dette op og uddyber det.

Det nye kriterium om et grænseoverskridende element har dog næppe den store umiddelbare interesse for de danske ordregivende myndigheder. De retningslinjer, der følger af den omtalte praksis fra EF-domstolen, er implementeret i Danmark ved Tilbudslovens afsnit II, som ikke anvender begrebet grænseoverskridende element, og som danske ordregivende myndigheder skal følge under alle omstændigheder.

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 21. maj 2008 i sag T-495/04, Belfass mod Rådet

Udbyderens afvisning af et tilbud, fordi tilbuddet ikke opfyldte et krav i udbudsbetingelserne om et bestemt timetal, skulle ske under overholdelse af reglerne om unormalt lave bud, da disse regler omfatter alle underkriterier. Udbyderen frifundet for krav fra tilbudsgiver om erstatning til dækning af positiv opfyldelsesinteresse, da det ikke var bevist, at tilbudsgiveren ville have fået kontrakten, hvis udbyderen ikke havde overtrådt udbudsreglerne, og da det tværtimod kunne lægges til grund, at tilbudsgiveren ikke ville have fået kontrakten

Rådet iværksatte et EU-udbud vedrørende rengøring. Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud. Tilbudsvurderingen blev foretaget ved brug af en evalueringsmodel, der tilsyneladende svarede nogenlunde til den evalueringsmodel, der blev anvendt i sagen T-332/03, European Service Network mod Kommissionen, se resuméet af Rettens dom af 12. marts 2008 i denne sag.

I tilbuddene skulle gives oplysning om tilbudsgiverens timesats ved aflønningen af rengøringspersonalet og om antallet af de arbejdstimer, der ville blive anvendt ved rengøringsarbejdets udførelse. I udbudsbetingelserne var endvidere angivet, at et tilbud ikke ville blive taget i betragtning, hvis tilbudsgiverens timesats lå under en overenskomstmæssig belgisk timesats, og/eller hvis antallet af de arbejdstimer, der ville blive anvendt, lå mere end en bestemt procentdel under gennemsnittet for arbejdstimerne i henhold til alle tilbud.

Udbuddet omfattede to delaftaler. En tilbudsgiver B afgav tilbud vedrørende begge delaftaler. Udbyderen afviste B's tilbud vedrørende delaftale 1 med henvisning til, at B's timepris vedrørende denne delaftale lå under den overenskomstmæssige belgiske mindsteløn. Udbyderen afviste endvidere B's tilbud vedrørende delaftale 2 med henvisning til, at antallet af de arbejdstimer, som B ville anvende i denne delaftale, lå under den omtalte procentdel af gennemsnittet for arbejdstimerne i henhold til alle tilbud.

B anlagde herefter sagen og gjorde forskellige anbringender gældende. Retten tog stilling til sagen således:

1) Ad et anbringende vedrørende afvisningen af B's tilbud om delaftale 1 gående ud på (stærkt sammentrængt gengivet), at udbyderen burde have indset, at angivelsen af timesats i B's tilbud skyldtes en regnefejl, hvorfor udbyderen burde have foretaget nærmere undersøgelser:

Ikke taget til følge med henvisning til, at der af nærmere angivne grunde ikke var tale om en åbenlys fejl i B's tilbud som omhandlet i Gennemførelsesforordningens artikel 148, stk. 3. Udbyderen kunne derfor ikke kritiseres for ikke at have givet B mulighed for at berigtige fejlen (præmis 71).

Det bemærkes, at den omtalte regel i Gennemførelsesforordningens artikel 148, stk. 3, går ud på, at den ordregivende myndighed »kan« kontakte en tilbudsgiver om en åbenlys skrivefejl i tilbuddet. En tilsvarende regel må antages at gælde for udbud efter udbudsdirektiverne. Det fremgår ikke, om Rettens formulering skal forstås sådan, at en ordregivende myndighed efter omstændighederne har pligt til at tage en sådan kontakt.

2) Ad forskellige anbringender vedrørende afvisningen af B's tilbud om delaftale 2. Disse anbringender gik på den ene side ud på, at klausulen i udbudsbetingelserne om afvisning af tilbud med et lavt antal arbejdstimer i sig selv var diskriminerende m.m., og gik på den anden side ud på, at udbyderen før afvisningen af B's tilbud burde have fulgt fremgangsmåden med hensyn til unormalt lave bud (Gennemførelsesforordningens artikel 139, stk. 1, der svarer til Udbudsdirektivets artikel 55 og lignende bestemmelser i de tidligere udbudsdirektiver).

Retten tog kun stilling til anbringendet om, at udbyderen skulle have fulgt fremgangsmåden ved unormalt lave bud. Rettens udtalelser kan formentlig gengives således (noget sammentrængt og til dels omformuleret):

Gennemførelsesforordningens regel om fremgangsmåden ved unormalt lave bud svarer til de tilsvarende regler i udbudsdirektiverne (præmis 93). Reglen har til formål at sikre en sund konkurrence og indeholder et grundlæggende krav om, at udbyderen skal kontrollere ethvert unormalt lavt bud ved en kontradiktorisk procedure (præmis 97-98). Dette grundlæggende krav finder anvendelse på alle underkriterier til tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud, for så vidt som det er muligt at fastlægge en objektiv tærskel for, hvornår et tilbud er unormalt lavt (præmis 100). Udbyderen havde endvidere afvist B' s tilbud, fordi timetallet i tilbuddet var unormalt lavt, og det var derfor en overtrædelse af udbudsreglerne, at udbyderen ikke før afvisningen havde fulgt fremgangsmåden i henhold til Gennemførelsesforordningens regel om unormalt lave tilbud (præmis 103-104).

Retten annullerede herefter udbyderens beslutning om at afvise B's tilbud vedrørende delaftale 2.

En påstand fra B om, at udbyderen skulle erstatte B's manglende fortjeneste ved ikke at have fået kontrakten vedrørende delaftale 2, blev ikke taget til følge, da det ikke var bevist, at B ville have fået denne kontrakt, hvis udbyderen ikke havde afvist B's tilbud om delaftale 2, og da det tværtimod efter sagens oplysninger kunne lægges til grund, at B ikke ville have fået kontrakten (præmis 125-126).

EF-domstolens dom af 19. juni 2008 i sag C-454/06, Pressetext Nachrichtenagentur GmbH

Væsentlige ændringer af en udbudspligtig aftale bevirker, at der foreligger en ny aftale med deraf følgende ny udbudspligt. En intern omstrukturering hos ordregiverens medkontrahent er ikke en væsentlig ændring, og det er i princippet heller ikke en væsentlig ændring, at en medkontrahent, der er en juridisk person, skifter ejerkreds. EU-retten indeholder på sit nuværende udviklingstrin ikke et forbud mod tidsubegrænsede aftaler om tjenesteydelser. En aftaleklausul om uopsigelighed i en kortere periode medfører ikke risiko for konkurrencefordrejning under forudsætning af, at den ikke systematisk genindsættes

I 1994, dvs. før Østrigs tiltrædelse af fællesskabet, indgik den østrigske stat en aftale med et østrigsk nyhedsagentur, APA, om adgang til nogle databaser og adgang til at udsende pressemeddelelser. Aftalen indeholdt forskellige regler om vederlaget herfor. Det var et led i aftalen, at den tidligst kunne opsiges pr. 31. december 1999.

APA er et andelsselskab, hvis andelshavere er den østrigske radiofoni og stort set alle østrigske dagblade.

I 2000 oprettede APA et andelsselskab med betegnelsen APA-OTS, i hvilket APA ejer alle andele, og overførte nogle aktiviteter til APA-OTS. Den omtalte aftale med den østrigske stat blev i forbindelse hermed i hvert fald delvis ændret til at angå APA-OTS i stedet for APA.

I 2001 blev aftalens regler om vederlag ændret på forskellig måde i forbindelse med, at Østrig overgik til Euro.

I 2005 blev aftalen ændret på ny, dels ved forlængelse af uopsigeligheden til 31. december 2008, dels ved ændring af en rabatbestemmelse.

I 2006 klagede et andet nyhedsagentur til et østrigsk klageorgan og gjorde gældende, at der skulle have været foretaget EU-udbud før ændringen i 2000 af aftalen til at angå APA-OTS og før ændringerne af aftalen i 2001 og 2005.

Klageorganet forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen med 7 spørgsmål. De første tre spørgsmål kan yderst sammentrængt og omformuleret gengives således:

Spørgsmål 1: Var det i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, at ændringen af aftalen i 2000 til at angå APA-OTS skete uden forudgående EU-udbud, og har det betydning i denne forbindelse, at APA kan videreoverdrage andelene i APA-OTS?

Spørgsmål 2: Var det i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, at ændringen af aftalen i 2000 i forbindelse med Østrigs overgang til Euro skete uden forudgående EU-udbud?

Spørgsmål 3: Var det i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, at ændringen af aftalen i 2005 skete uden forudgående EU-udbud?

De øvrige spørgsmål, dvs. spørgsmål 4-7, angik traktatens forbud mod misbrug af dominerende stilling m.m. samt forholdet mellem første kontroldirektiv og klagereglerne i den østrigske lovgivning.

EF-domstolen kommenterede spørgsmål 1-3 udførligt og udtalte herunder bl.a.:

Generelt: Selvom den oprindelige aftale blev indgået før Østrigs tiltrædelse af fællesskabet, finder fællesskabsreglerne anvendelse på aftalen (præmis 28). Ændring af en udbudspligtig aftale bevirker, at der foreligger en ny aftale, hvis de nye bestemmelser i aftalen er væsentligt forskellige fra de oprindelige bestemmelser og derfor bærer præg af, at det var parternes vilje at genforhandle aftalens væsentlige elementer. (Præmis 34. Den danske oversættelse af denne præmis forekommer usikker, hvorfor resuméet her bygger på den franske og den tyske version af dommen).

Ad spørgsmål 1: Ændringen af aftalen i 2000 til at angå APA-OTS var ikke en væsentlig ændring, men var derimod en intern omstrukturering hos ordregiverens medkontrahent (præmis 45). Ændringer i ejerkredsen for en medkontrahent, der er en juridisk person, er endvidere i princippet ikke en væsentlig ændring (præmis 51-52).

Ad spørgsmål 2: Ændringen af aftalen i 2001 som følge af Østrigs overgang til Euro var en ikke-væsentlig justering (præmis 57-69).

Ad spørgsmål 3: Forlængelsen af uopsigeligheden ved aftalen i 2005 var ikke en væsentlig ændring (præmis 79). Herved henvist til, at der ikke på fællesskabsrettens nuværende udviklingstrin er noget til hinder for tidsubegrænsede tjenesteydelsesaftaler (præmis 74). Desuden henvist til, at aftalen ikke var blevet opsagt, således at der ved ændringen i 2005 kun var tale om en forlængelse på 3 år, og til, at det ikke var påvist, at en sådan uopsigelighedsklausul indebærer risiko for konkurrencefordrejning under forudsætning af, at den ikke systematisk genindsættes i aftalen (præmis 79). Ændringen af rabatbestemmelsen var endvidere af nærmere angivne grunde ikke væsentlig (præmis 81-87).

EF-domstolen besvarede spørgsmål 1-3 i overensstemmelse med det anførte og fandt det herefter ufornødent at besvare de øvrige spørgsmål (præmis 89).

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 10. september 2008 i sag T-59/05, Evropaïki Dynamiki mod Kommissionen

Når en forbigået tilbudsgiver har anmodet om en begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen, er det ønskeligt, at udbyderen sender tilbudsgiveren evalueringsdokumentet, om nødvendigt med udeladelse af fortrolige oplysninger

Kommissionen iværksatte et udbud vedrørende en tjenesteydelse. Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud på grundlag af et underkriterium om pris og følgende kvalitative underkriterier (stærkt sammentrængt gengivet): 1. kvaliteten af den tilbudte løsning, 2. løsningens opfyldelse af udbyderens behov og 3. kvalitetskontrol.

Tilbudsvurderingen blev foretaget ved brug af følgende evalueringsmodel:

Tilbuddene fik tildelt points i relation til hvert af de kvalitative underkriterier inden for en skala med et nærmere angivet maksimum for hvert underkriterium, således at tilbuddene højst kunne få 100 points for de kvalitative underkriterier tilsammen. Fastsættelsen af de enkelte maksima var udtryk for en indbyrdes vægtning af de kvalitative underkriterier. Tilbud, der ikke opnåede mindst 50 % af de mulige points pr. kvalitativt underkriterium og mindst 65 points tilsammen for de kvalitative underkriterier, blev ikke taget i betragtning. De opnåede points blev divideret med tilbudsgiverens vægtede tilbudspris, og det tilbud, der herved opnåede det højeste tal, var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud. Udbyderen udfærdigede et evalueringsdokument om tilbudsvurderingen.

Sagen var anlagt af en tilbudsgiver, der ikke havde fået kontrakten, idet tilbudsgiverens tilbud ved den omtalte beregning var blevet placeret som nr. 4.

Sagsøgeren gjorde forskellige anbringender gældende, men fik ikke medhold i nogen af dem. Kun et anbringende om, at udbyderen havde givet en utilstrækkelig begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen, og Rettens udtalelser om dette anbringende skønnes at have almen udbudsretlig interesse.

Fra Rettens udtalelser om det omtalte anbringende kan nævnes:

Selvom udbyderens evalueringsdokument var beklageligt kortfattet, opfyldte det udbyderens forpligtelse til (dvs. efter anmodning) at give en begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen (præmis 133).

Når en tilbudsgiver har anmodet om en begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen, er det ønskeligt, at udbyderen sender tilbudsgiveren evalueringsdokumentet, om nødvendigt med udeladelse af fortrolige oplysninger (præmis 135).

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 10. september 2008 i sag T-272/06, Evropaïki Dynamiki mod EF-domstolen

Annullation af beslutning om ikke at prækvalificere en tilbudsgiver som følge af, at udbyderen havde givet en urigtig og vildledende begrundelse for beslutningen

EF-domstolen iværksatte et begrænset udbud vedrørende en tjenesteydelse. Efter tilbuddenes modtagelse meddelte udbyderen en tilbudsgiver E, at E ikke var blevet prækvalificeret, fordi tilbuddet ikke opfyldte betingelserne herfor. Under en efterfølgende korrespondance henviste udbyderen til, at der efter udbudsbekendtgørelsen skulle prækvalificeres 5 virksomheder, og at E var blevet vurderet som nr. 6. E anlagde herefter sagen ved Retten i Første Instans.

Retten konstaterede:

1) E's tilbud var indgået i tilbudsvurderingen og var blevet vurderet ved denne. Det var således ikke rigtigt, at E ikke var blevet prækvalificeret. Der kunne ikke tages hensyn til et anbringende fra udbyderen om, at vurderingen af E's tilbud blot var sket for en sikkerheds skyld (præmis 36).

2) Udbyderen havde under korrespondancen med E ladet forstå, at E's referencer var for gamle. Dette var imidlertid vildledende, idet udbyderen ikke havde anset alle referencerne som for gamle (præmis 37 ff.).

Retten udtalte, at udbyderen som følge af disse forhold havde handlet i strid med gennemsigtighedsprincippet og begrundelsesreglen i Finansforordningens artikel 100 (præmis 43), og annullerede udbyderens beslutning om ikke at prækvalificere E.

Dommen foreligger ikke på dansk, og resuméet ovenfor bygger på den franske udgave af dommen. I resuméet er anvendt ordet »prækvalificere«, der ikke synes at have et umiddelbart sidestykke på fransk, hvor dommen bruger udtryk som udvælge (sélectionner) og tage i betragtning (retenir) m.m.

EF-domstolens dom af 2. oktober 2008, sag C-157/06, Kommissionen mod Italien

Italien havde overtrådt Indkøbsdirektivet ved at tillade offentlige ordregivere at indkøbe helikoptere til politi og brandvæsen uden EU-udbud

Ved denne dom blev det fastslået, at Italien havde overtrådt indkøbsdirektivet 93/36 ved udstede en bekendtgørelse, hvorefter offentlige ordregivere kunne indkøbe helikoptere til politi og brandvæsen uden EU-udbud.

EF-domstolen traf en lignende afgørelse ved dom af 8. april 2008 i sag C 337/05, Kommissionen mod Italien, vedrørende en fast italiensk praksis om indkøb af helikoptere uden EU-udbud.

Refereres i øvrigt ikke, da resultatet forekommer oplagt.

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 8. oktober 2008 i sag T-411/06, Sogelma mod Det Europæiske Genopbygningsagentur

Begrundelsen for udbyderens annullation af et udbud skal i en klar og relevant form angive de væsentlige faktiske og retlige omstændigheder, der ligger til grund for annullationen, men begrundelsen kan være kortfattet og behøver ikke angive samtlige omstændigheder. Det var ikke i strid med udbudsreglerne, at udbyderens beslutning om annullation af udbuddet først blev truffet efter godt ½ år

Det Europæiske Genopbygningsagentur (AER), der er en EU-institution, iværksatte i september 2005 et udbud vedrørende fjernelse af ueksploderede bomber i nogle vandveje. Der indkom bl.a. tilbud fra et konsortium med deltagelse af et selskab S.

I marts 2006 anmodede udbyderen tilbudsgiverne om supplerende oplysninger, og i oktober 2006 annullerede udbyderen udbuddet med den begrundelse, at ingen af de modtagne tilbud opfyldte de krævede tekniske betingelser. Udbyderen anførte desuden, at nogle nøglepersoner hos S ikke opfyldte udbudsbetingelsernes krav. Efter at S havde anmodet udbyderen om en uddybning, oplyste udbyderen yderligere, at udbyderen havde valgt at annullere udbuddet og iværksætte et nyt udbud som følge af, at de tekniske omstændigheder var ændret i betydeligt omfang.

Sagen var anlagt af S mod udbyderen med påstand om annullation af udbyderens beslutning om at annullere udbuddet og iværksætte et nyt udbud. Det meste af dommen angår forskellige formelle spørgsmål om overholdelse af søgsmålsfrist og S' kompetence til at anlægge sagen m.m. Disse dele af dommen refereres ikke.

Retten tog stilling til sagens realitet således (gengivet stærkt sammentrængt og af forståelsesgrunde til dels omformuleret):

1) Ad et anbringende fra S om, at udbyderen ikke havde givet tilstrækkelig begrundelse for annullationen af udbuddet og beslutningen om at iværksætte et nyt udbud, og om, at den givne begrundelse var ulogisk og selvmodsigende:

Retten henviste til Finansforordningens artikel 101, hvorefter der skal gives tilbudsgiverne en begrundelse for en beslutning om annullation af et udbud. Retten udtalte videre, at en sådan begrundelse klart og utvetydigt skal angive de betragtninger, som udbyderen har lagt til grund (præmis 119). Begrundelsen skal dog ikke angive samtlige relevante momenter, og det er tilstrækkeligt, at begrundelsen på en kortfattet måde angiver de væsentlige retlige og faktiske omstændigheder i en klar og relevant form (præmis 120). udbyderen havde endvidere givet en kortfattet, klar og relevant begrundelse (præmis 123). Den givne begrundelse var endvidere ikke selvmodsigende (præmis 130-131) og svarede til den egentlige begrundelse (præmis 142).

Udbyderen blev herefter frifundet for S' annullationspåstand.

2) Ad en erstatningspåstand fra S:

Udbyderen blev frifundet med henvisning til, at udbyderen ikke havde overtrådt udbudsreglerne (præmis 148), og til, at det ikke var retsstridigt, at der var gået mere end 6 måneder mellem udbyderens anmodning om supplerende oplysninger og annullationen (præmis 149). Der var endvidere ikke årsagsforbindelse mellem den begåede tid og S's udgifter til udarbejdelse af tilbud (præmis 150).

EF-domstolens dom af 13. november 2008, sag C-324/07, Coditel Brabrant

In house-begrebets kontrolkriterium er opfyldt, hvis der ikke er privat deltagelse i den virksomhed, der er tale om, og hvis virksomhedens formål er at udøve opgaver af offentlig interesse. Dette gælder, selvom virksomhedens ledelse har selvstændige beføjelser, og beslutninger i virksomheden træffes ved stemmeflerhed blandt de offentlige myndigheder, der ejer virksomheden

En belgisk kommune ejede et telekommunikationsnet, der var etableret i kommunens område. Efter at have gjort forgæves forsøg på at finde en koncessionshaver til drift af telekommunikationsnettet eller en køber af nettet meddelte kommunen uden forudgående udbud eller annoncering et fælleskommunalt selskab, Brutélé, koncession på drift af nettet. Kommunen indtrådte samtidig i Brutélé.

Brutélé, der synes at være en væsentlig belgisk teleoperatør, er et andelsselskab, hvis andelshavere er kommuner og en kommunal sammenslutning, der kun består af kommuner.

En belgisk virksomhed, Coditel, der tilsyneladende er en privat teleoperatør, anlagde sag mod kommunen ved en belgisk domstol og gjorde gældende, at kommunen havde overtrådt fællesskabsretten ved tildele Brutélé driften af telekommunikationsnettet uden forudgående offentliggørelse (lidt omformuleret af forståelsesgrunde).

Koncessionen til Brutélé vedrørende driften af telekommunikationsnettet angik en tjenesteydelse, og koncessioner om tjenesteydelser er ikke omfattet af EU-udbudsreglerne. Dette er fastslået i flere domme fra EF-domstolen og er nævnt udtrykkeligt i Udbudsdirektivets artikel 17.

EF-domstolen har imidlertid i flere afgørelser tilkendegivet, at ordregivende myndigheders anskaffelser af ikke-udbudspligtige ydelser skal ske efter en passende offentliggørelse, således dom af 21. juli 2005 i sag C-231/03, Coname (om tjenesteydelseskoncessioner) og dom af 15. maj

2008 i sagerne C-147/06 og C-148/06, Secap (om anskaffelser under tærskelværdien med klar grænseoverskridende interesse).

EF-domstolen har endvidere i nogle afgørelser opstillet to betingelser for, at en virksomhed kan anses for »in house« i forhold til en ordregivende myndighed med den konsekvens, at den ordregivende myndighed kan foretage udbudspligtige anskaffelser fra den pågældende virksomhed uden EU-udbud, således fx dom af 19. april 2007 i sag C-295/05, kaldet Asemfo eller Tragsa. De to betingelser er 1) kontrolkriteriet, dvs. at den ordregivende myndighed skal udøve kontrol med virksomheden svarende til den kontrol, den udøver med sine egne tjenestegrene, og 2) virksomhedskriteriet, dvs. at virksomheden skal udføre hovedparten af sine opgaver sammen med den eller de virksomheder, den ejes af.

Når en virksomhed er in house i forhold til en ordregivende myndighed, kan den ordregivende myndighed således foretage udbudspligtige anskaffelser fra virksomheden uden forudgående udbud. Heraf må så meget mere følge, at en ordregivende myndighed kan foretage ikke-udbudspligtige anskaffelser fra en in house-virksomhed uden den forudgående offentliggørelse med hensyn til ikke-udbudspligtige anskaffelser, som EF-domstolen ellers har foreskrevet, jf. ovenfor. Dette fremgår bl.a. direkte af den her resumerede dom (præmis 26).

Afgørende for den retssag, som Coditel havde anlagt mod kommunen ved en belgisk domstol, var derfor, om Brutélé kunne anses for in house i forhold til kommunen. Den belgiske domstol var i tvivl på dette punkt, idet den anså det for tvivlsomt, om kontrolkriteriet var opfyldt, dvs. om kommunen kunne anses for at udføre samme kontrol med Brutélé som med sine egne tjenestegrene. Tvivlen skyldtes, at kommunen som én andelshaver blandt mange i Brutélé kun havde begrænset indflydelse på Brutélé's dispositioner. Den belgiske domstol stillede derfor EF-domstolen nogle spørgsmål, der sigtede til, om kontrolkriteriet var opfyldt.

EF-domstolen fremsatte i præmis 28 og fremefter en lang række udtalelser om kontrolkriteriets indhold. Disse udtalelser sigter efter deres formulering først og fremmest til kontrolkriteriets indhold i relation til tjenesteydelseskoncessioner, men skal utvivlsomt forstås som sigtende til kontrolkriteriets indhold i almindelighed. Fra udtalelserne kan nævnes, gengivet sammentrængt og af forståelsesgrunde til dels omformuleret:

Kontrolkriteriet er ikke opfyldt, hvis den virksomhed, der er tale om, har en eller flere private deltagere (præmis 30 og 32).

Selvom virksomhedens ledende organer har selvstændige beføjelser, er kontrolkriteriet opfyldt, hvis virksomhedens formål er at udføre en opgave af offentlig interesse, således at virksomheden ikke varetager andre opgaver end de opgaver, der hører under de tilsluttede offentlige myndigheder (præmis 38 og 39).

Dette gælder så meget mere i et tilfælde som det foreliggende, hvor de kommuner, der er tilsluttet Brutélé, har særlig indflydelse på Brutélé's aktiviteter i deres eget område (præmis 40, der må forstås således).

Kontrolkriteriet er opfyldt, selvom kontrollen med virksomheden føres i fællesskab af de offentlige myndigheder, der ejer den, således at afgørelser i givet fald træffes ved stemmeflerhed (navnlig præmis 54).

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter de stillede spørgsmål i overensstemmelse med det anførte.

Følgende bemærkes:

Kontrolkriteriet og virksomhedskriteriet blev første gang opstillet i EF-domstolens dom af 18. november 1999 i sag C-107/98, Teckal (ganske kort udtrykt i præmis 50 i denne dom). Begge kriterier er senere uddybet i forskellige afgørelser fra EF-domstolen.

Således som kontrolkriteriet er blevet uddybet i den her resumerede dom, synes det efterhånden nærmest kun at gå ud på, at der ikke må være privat deltagelse i den virksomhed, der er tale om. Hvis denne forståelse er rigtig, er kontrolkriteriets formulering (kontrol svarende til kontrollen med egne tjenestegrene) blevet fuldstændig misvisende.

EF-domstolens dom af 16. december 2008, sag C-213/07, Michaniki
Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets regler om udelukkelse er udtømmende, men er ikke til hinder for fastsættelse af yderligere nationale udelukkelsesgrunde til sikring af ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed under forudsætning af, at sådanne nationale regler ikke går ud over, hvad der er nødvendigt for at opnå dette formål. Nationale regler, der afskærer ejere mfl. af visse virksomheder fra at levere til det offentlige, går ud over det nødvendige, hvis reglerne ikke giver mulighed for i det enkelte tilfælde at godtgøre, at der ikke foreligger reel risiko for konkurrencefordrejning

Sagen angår reglerne i det tidligere bygge- og anlægsdirektivs artikel 24 om udelukkelse af tilbudsgivere. Efter disse regler kunne de ordregivende myndigheder udelukke virksomheder, der var under konkurs eller i skatterestance m.m., fra deltagelse i en udbudsprocedure.

(Udbudsdirektivets artikel 45 indeholder lignende regler og indeholder derudover en regel om, at virksomheder, der har deltaget i en kriminel organisation m.m., skal udelukkes).

Med betegnelserne »ejere« og »ejet« sigtes i det følgende til ejere, hovedaktionærer, og ledere mfl.

Den græske forfatning indeholder nogle regler om mediernes ejerforhold med henblik på at sikre demokratiet og modvirke korruption. Disse regler går bl.a. ud på, at virksomheder, som leverer til det offentlige, ikke må være ejet af ejere af medievirksomheder eller af ægtefæller og slægtninge til ejere af medievirksomheder.

I henhold til en hjemmel i forfatningen er de nævnte regler udmøntet i en særlig lovgivning. Af denne lovgivning fremgår bl.a., at ægtefæller og slægtninge til ejere af en medievirksomhed kan være ejere af virksomheder, der leverer til det offentlige, hvis de kan godtgøre, at de er økonomisk uafhængige af medievirksomhedens ejer.

Sagen angik en græsk ordregivende myndigheds EU-udbud af et bygge- og anlægsarbejde i henhold til det tidligere bygge- og anlægsdirektiv. Kontrakten blev tildelt en virksomhed, hvis hovedaktionær var slægtning til et bestyrelsesmedlem i en medievirksomhed. Tildelingen skete, efter at et kontrolorgan havde tilkendegivet, at den omtalte hovedaktionær var økonomisk uafhængig af det omtalte bestyrelsesmedlem.

En forbigået tilbudsgiver anlagde ved en græsk domstol sag mod kontrolorganet og den græske stat. Tilbudsgiveren gjorde gældende, at den omtalte lovgivning, hvorefter ægtefæller og slægtninge kan godtgøre økonomisk uafhængighed, er i strid med de nævnte forfatningsbestemmelser.

Den græske domstol forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen med tre spørgsmål, der stærkt omformuleret og sammentrængt kan gengives således:

1) Indeholder Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets regler om udelukkelse af tilbudsgivere en udtømmende opregning af de tilfælde, hvor der kan ske udelukkelse?

2) Hvis disse regler ikke er udtømmende, er de omtalte græske regler så i strid med proportionalitetsprincippet?

3) Hvis udelukkelsesreglerne i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet er udtømmende, er disse regler så i strid med traktaten?

EF-domstolen udtalte (af forståelsesgrunde stærkt sammentrængt og noget omformuleret):

Ad spørgsmål 1: Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets opregning af udelukkelsesgrunde er udtømmende (præmis 43), men er ikke til hinder for, at medlemsstaterne fastsætter yderligere udelukkelsesgrunde for at sikre principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed (præmis 47), under forudsætning af, at sådanne udelukkelsesforanstaltninger ikke går ud over, hvad der er nødvendigt for at opnå dette formål (præmis 48).

Ad spørgsmål 2: Nationale regler, der generelt afskærer en virksomhed fra at levere til det offentlige på grund af ejerforhold etc., uden at der gives mulighed for at godtgøre, at der ikke foreligger nogen reel risiko for konkurrencefordrejning og korruption m.m., går ud over, hvad der er nødvendigt for at opnå ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed (præmis 60 samt 62 og følgende).

Ad spørgsmål 3: Det var ufornødent at besvare dette spørgsmål.

Afgørelsen svarer reelt ganske til EF-domstolens senere afgørelse i dom af 19. maj 2009, Assitur, vedrørende udelukkelsesgrundene i det tidligere tjenesteydelsesdirektiv.

Afgørelserne om udbud fra Retten i Første Instans angår udbud foretaget af EU-organerne, dvs. Kommissionen, Rådet og Parlamentet mfl., idet Retten i Første Instans er klageorgan vedrørende sådanne udbud.

For EU-organernes udbud gælder nogle regler, der er indeholdt i to forordninger, dels »Finansforordningen«, dvs. Rådets forordning nr. 1605/2002 med senere ændringer, dels »Gennemførelsesforordningen«, dvs. Kommissionens forordning nr. 2342/2002 med senere ændringer.

De pågældende regler svarer i det væsentlige til de udbudsregler, der gælder for de ordregivende myndigheder i medlemsstaterne. Afgørelserne om udbud fra Retten i Første Instans kan derfor have en vis almen interesse, for så vidt som de (reelt) kan bidrage til fortolkningen af de udbudsregler, der gælder for de ordregivende myndigheder i medlemsstaterne, dvs. Udbudsdirektivet og Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet m.m.

I resuméerne af afgørelser fra Retten i Første Instans er som almindelig regel kun medtaget de dele af afgørelserne, der belyser forståelsen af almindelige udbudsretlige principper. Resuméerne omfatter således principielt ikke dele af afgørelserne, der angår specifikke reguleringer af EU-organernes optræden eller formelle spørgsmål om Rettens kompetence.

NB! Resuméernes henvisninger til retsregler m.m. vil/kan efterhånden blive forældede, da resuméerne principielt er udarbejdet kort efter afgørelserne.

Om klageadgang. Har næppe særlig generel interesse 8

Klage over, at udbyderen ved tilbudsvurderingen lagde vægt på, at klagerens tilbudspris på nogle punkter var unormalt lav, ikke taget til følge, da udbyderen havde fulgt fremgangsmåden med hensyn til unormalt lave bud, uden at klageren var kommet med en overbevisende forklaring. Klage over udbyderens beregning af klagerens samlede tilbudspris heller ikke taget til følge 9

Klage over tilbudsvurdering i relation til nogle underkriterier ikke taget tilfølge 10

En klagefrist på 60 dage var ikke i sig selv strid med første kontroldirektiv, men der skulle ses væk fra fristen som følge af sagens omstændigheder 10

Almenhedens behov er et fællesskabsretligt begreb. Bedemandsvirksomhed kan opfylde almenhedens behov. Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets fortegnelse over offentligretlige organer er ikke udtømmende. Udførlig beskrivelse af udbudsdirektivernes formål. Erhvervsdrivende offentligretlige organer. Kriteriet om, at et offentligretligt organ skal være undergivet offentlig kontrol 12

Ved afgørelse om opsættende virkning må der tages hensyn til en forhåndsvurdering af klagesagens udfald 16

Om klageadgang for tilbudsgivere med ukonditionsmæssige tilbud 19

Et klageorgan må tage et forhold op ex officio, men parterne skal have adgang til at udtale sig om forholdet, og klageorganet må ikke afvise klagen som følge af forholdet. Referencer til andre kunder og mulighed for besigtigelse inden for en vis afstand fra udbyderens etableringssted må ikke bruges som underkriterier 20

Der må ikke stilles krav om inddragelse af et mæglingsorgan før en klage 21

Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet fandt ikke anvendelse på en tjenesteydelse, der af militære grunde skulle ledsages af særlige sikkerhedsforanstaltninger, jf. direktivets artikel 4, stk. 2 22

Et statsejet aktieselskab, der stod for fængselsbyggeri, var omfattet af udbudspligten 22

Hvis udbudsbetingelserne ikke angiver mindstekrav for alternative tilbud, kan alternative tilbud ikke tages i betragtning. Henvisning til en national regel om, at alternative tilbud skal være ligeværdige, er ikke tilstrækkelig angivelse af mindstekrav 23

Udbudsdirektiverne regulerer ikke udbyders annullation af udbud. En sådan annullation skal overholde de grundlæggende fællesskabsretlige principper såsom ligebehandlingsprincippet. Det er ikke en betingelse, at udbyders annullation kun sker i undtagelsestilfælde eller har vægtige grunde 24

Levering af energi fra vedvarende energikilder kan anvendes som underkriterium og kan vægtes højt, men udbyderen skal kunne kontrollere kriteriets opfyldelse, og kriteriet skal angå kontraktens genstand. En udbyder skal annullere udbudet, hvis et klageorgan har annulleret et underkriterium som ulovligt 25

Et erstatningskrav mod Kommissionen i anledning af henlæggelse af en klage afvist. Desuden afvist en påstand om pålæg til Kommissionen 27

Der er klageadgang for potentielle tilbudsgivere, men klager fra sådanne over diskriminerende udbudsbetingelser skal indgives straks og må ikke afvente udbudets afslutning. Der må ikke stilles krav om inddragelse af et mæglingsorgan før en klage 28

Ordregiver må i opfyldelsesfasen begrænse brugen af underentreprenører, hvis formåen ikke har kunnet efterprøves i udvælgelsesfasen 29

Det følger af kontroldirektiverne, at alle tilbudsgivere skal have underretning om tildelingsbeslutningen, og at der derefter skal gå rimelig tid inden kontraktsindgåelsen 31

Det er en betingelse for opsættende virkning, at der foreligger uopsættelighed. Denne betingelse forudsætter, at manglende opsættende virkning medfører et alvorligt og uopretteligt tab hos den, der har fremsat begæringen om opsættende virkning, og dette vil i princippet ikke være tilfældet, hvis der kan betales erstatning. I den foreliggende sag var betingelsen kun opfyldt, hvis manglende opsættende virkning ville true sagsøgerens eksistens, hvilket imidlertid ikke var tilfældet 32

Tyskland havde overtrådt Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet som følge af manglende EU-udbud. EF-domstolen behandler en sag om en medlemsstats overtrædelse af fællesskabsretten, selvom medlemsstaten har erkendt overtrædelsen 32

Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet overtrådt som følge af manglende EU-udbud. Betingelserne for udbud efter forhandling i artikel 7, stk. 3, var ikke opfyldt. En særlig formulering i den italienske version af direktivet var uden betydning 33

Det følger af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed, at et udbud klart skal definere kontraktens art og kriterierne for tildeling af den. Der kunne ikke indgås kontrakt om projektering m.m. på grundlag af en projektkonkurrence om analyse. Bistand ved valg af tilbudsgiver er ikke omfattet af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets regler om projektkonkurrencer 34

Den portugisiske lovgivning om offentlige myndigheders erstatningsansvar var i strid med første kontroldirektiv 35

Det er en betingelse for opsættende virkning, at der foreligger uopsættelighed. Dette forudsætter, at den begærende part ville lide et uopretteligt tab, hvis der ikke meddeles opsættende virkning, hvilket ikke er tilfældet, hvis der senere kan betales erstatning. I den foreliggende sag var betingelsen om uopsættelighed kun opfyldt, hvis manglende opsættende virkning ville true klagerens eksistens eller ændre klagerens markedsposition uopretteligt, og dette var ikke tilfældet. Der var endvidere ikke årsagsforbindelse mellem det af klageren hævdede tab og den beslutning, som klageren ønskede udsat ved begæringen om opsættende virkning 36

Udbudspligt, eventuelt som hasteprocedure, for en kommunes antagelse af underleverandør til affaldsbortskaffelse, som kommunen udførte for anden myndighed som kommerciel opgave, selvom den anden myndighed havde foretaget EU-udbud. Undtagelsesbestemmelsen i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 11, stk. 3, d, skal fortolkes indskrænkende og kunne ikke anvendes. Ikke taget stilling til, hvordan medlemsstaten skulle gennemføre dommen 37

Begæring om opsættende virkning på ny afslået 39

Der skal kunne klages over en ordregivende myndigheds beslutning om ikke at foretage EU-udbud. Der er udbudspligt ved en ordregivende myndigheds overladelse af udførelsen af en tjenesteydelse til et selskab, som den ordregivende myndighed ejer sammen med en eller flere private virksomheder 39

Statueret, at Spanien på nogle punkter ikke havde implementeret Indkøbsdirektivet og Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet rigtigt 40

Et sagsanlæg ikke tillagt opsættende virkning, selvom der forelå »fumus boni juris«, da der ikke forelå uopsættelighed 41

Ligebehandlingsprincippet er til hinder for, at personer, der har udført forberedende arbejde vedrørende et udbud, ubetinget afskæres fra at afgive tilbud. Udbyders afvisning af et tilbud med den begrundelse, at tilbudsgiveren er »inhabil«, skal meddeles tilbudsgiveren i rimelig tid inden tildelingsbeslutningen 42

Tyskland havde overtrådt Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ved manglende EU-udbud. Tysklands erkendelse afskar ikke Kommissionen fra at anlægge sagen. Ikke taget stilling til, om der var pligt til at ophæve en kontrakt indgået i strid med direktivet 43

Udbyderen overtrådte ligebehandlingsprincippet ved ikke at undersøge, om den valgte tilbudsgiver som følge af forbindelse til et medlem af udbyderens bedømmelsesudvalg skulle udelukkes fra at afgive tilbud. En forbigået tilbudsgiver blev ikke tillagt erstatning til dækning af positiv opfyldelsesinteresse, da det ikke med sikkerhed kunne fastslås, at den forbigåede tilbudsgiver ville have fået kontrakten, hvis den valgte tilbudsgiver var blevet udelukket, men blev tillagt erstatning til dækning af negativ kontraktinteresse, da udbyderens tilsidesættelse af fællesskabsretten havde påvirket den forbigåede tilbudsgivers muligheder for at få tildelt kontrakten 44

Det følger af første kontroldirektiv, at et klageorgan skal undlade at anvende en national regel, der forhindrer klageorganet i at efterprøve udbyderes annullation af udbud 44

Det er en betingelse for opsættende virkning, at den begærende part vil lide et alvorligt og uopretteligt tab, hvis der ikke meddeles opsættende virkning, og det var ikke bevist, at manglende opsættende virkning ville påføre sagsøgeren et sådant tab. Medmindre der foreligger særlige omstændigheder, kan et tab ikke betragtes som uopretteligt eller vanskeligt opretteligt, hvis der senere kan betales erstatning 45

Om anvendelsesområdet for Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38 46

Et tilbud var ikke unormalt lavt, og reglerne om unormalt lave tilbud var irrelevante, da udbyderen ikke havde anset tilbuddet for unormalt lavt.

Udbudsreglerne stiller ikke krav om, at en tilbudsgiver har det nødvendige personale på tilbuddets tidspunkt. Udbyderen kunne indgå en midlertidig kontrakt med den valgte tilbudsgiver for en kortere periode, indtil tilbudsgiveren opfyldte udbudsbetingelsernes krav 47

Koncessionskontrakter om tjenesteydelser er ikke nødvendigvis omfattet af udbudspligten. Medmindre der foreligger særlige omstændigheder, skal tildeling af sådanne kontrakter dog ske under iagttagelse af gennemsigtighed, således at virksomheder fra andre medlemsstater kan tilkendegive deres interesse i kontrakten. Det var ikke en særlig omstændighed, at ordregiveren delvis ejede den virksomhed, der fik tildelt en koncessionskontrakt, da ordregiverens ejerandel var lille, og da virksomheden var åben for privat kapital..... 49

Første kontroldirektiv er ikke til hinder for en national bestemmelse, hvorefter en klage fra et konsortium, der ikke er en juridisk person, skal indgives af samtlige medlemmer af konsortiet 50

Ikke opsættende virkning, selvom der forelå »fumus boni juris«, da der ikke forelå uopsættelighed, idet en uoprettelig skade, som sagsøgeren ville lide ved manglende opsættende virkning, ikke var tilstrækkeligt alvorlig, samt da en interesseafvejning talte mod opsættende virkning. Resuméer

Retten i Første instans' kendelse af 26. maj 1998, sag T-60/98 R, Ecord Consortium mod Kommissionen
Tilbud modtaget efter tilbudsfristens udløb som følge af tilbuddets adressering. Ikke opsættende virkning for et sagsanlæg med hensyn til, om tilbuddet var indgivet rettidigt, da udbyderen klart havde angivet, hvem tilbuddet skulle sendes til, hvorfor der ikke forelå »fumus boni juris«

Kommissionen iværksatte et begrænset udbud vedrørende en tjenesteydelse. I opfordringen til de prækvalificerede virksomheder om at afgive tilbud angav Kommissionen, at tilbud skulle sendes til en konsulentvirksomhed på en nærmere angivet adresse, og at Kommissionen ikke måtte nævnes som adressat, idet dette kunne medføre, at tilbuddet først blev modtaget efter tilbudsfristens udløb.

Et konsortium, der afgav tilbud, sendte sit tilbud med angivelse af den omtalte konsulentvirksomhed som adressat, men nævnede også Kommissionen i adressatangivelsen. Som følge af Kommissionens procedurer for postmodtagelse medførte dette, at tilbuddet først blev modtaget af konsulentvirksomheden efter tilbudsfristens udløb. Kommissionen afviste derfor tilbuddet som for sent indgivet.

Konsortiet anlagde derefter sag mod Kommissionen ved Retten i Første Instans og påstod principalt Kommissionen tilpligtet at tage konsortiets tilbud i betragtning. Konsortiet begærede endvidere sagsanlægget tillagt opsættende virkning, og kendelsen af 26. maj 1998 er Rettens afgørelse af spørgsmålet om opsættende virkning.

Retten tog ikke begæringen om opsættende virkning til følge med henvisning til, at der ikke forelå »fumus boni juris«[1], idet konsortiet ikke havde fulgt angivelsen af, at Kommissionen ikke måtte nævnes som adressat.

23. januar 2003, sag C-57/01, Makedoniko Metro og Michaniki
Om klageadgang. Har næppe særlig generel interesse

Den græske stat udbød i henhold til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet projektering, opførelse, selvfinansiering og udnyttelse af en metro. Udbudet var opdelt i forskellige faser, dvs. prækvalifikation, afgivelse af tilbud, vurdering af tilbudene, forhandlinger med den foreløbigt udvalgte tilbudsgiver og indgåelse af kontrakt.

Der prækvalificeredes et antal sammenslutninger af entreprenører. I udbudsbetingelserne var anført, at de prækvalificerede sammenslutninger kunne udvides med nye deltagere indtil afgivelsen af tilbud.

Efter tilbudenes indgivelse indledte udbyderen forhandlinger med en af de prækvalificerede sammenslutninger. Parterne kunne imidlertid ikke nå til enighed, hvorfor udbyderen erklærede forhandlingerne afsluttet og indledte forhandlinger med en anden tilbudsgiver.

Den sammenslutning af entreprenører, der havde været forhandlet med, klagede til et klageorgan over udbyderens beslutning om at afbryde forhandlingerne. Klageorganet afviste imidlertid klagen med henvisning til, at sammenslutningens sammensætning i strid med udbudsbetingelserne var blevet ændret efter tilbudets indgivelse. Sammenslutningen anlagde derefter erstatningssag mod udbyderen ved en forvaltningsdomstol, men denne afviste sagen med en tilsvarende begrundelse.

[1] Dvs. en røg af god ret, altså sandsynlighed for, at sagsanlægget var berettiget.

Sammenslutningen appellerede til en overinstans. Denne stillede et præjudicielt spørgsmål til EF-domstolen, som omformulerede spørgsmålet til at gå ud på to spørgsmål, nemlig (noget sammentrængt):

1) Er Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet til hinder for nationale bestemmelser, som forbyder ændring af en tilbudsgivers sammensætning efter tilbudets afgivelse?

2) I hvilket omfang giver første kontroldirektiv, direktiv 89/665, en sådan tilbudsgiver klageadgang?

EF-domstolen besvarede spørgsmålene således:

Ad spørgsmål 1): Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet er ikke til hinder for nationale bestemmelser som omhandlet.

Ad spørgsmål 2): EF-domstolen henviste til de almindelige fællesskabsretlige principper og udtalte, at det tilkom den nationale domstol at tage stilling til, om disse principper fandt anvendelse i sagen, og om sammenslutningen også i sin nye sammensætning havde haft interesse i kontrakten og havde lidt skade ved udbyderens beslutning om at afbryde forhandlingerne. EF-domstolen besvarede herefter spørgsmålet med, at hvis en udbyders beslutning skader de rettigheder, som fællesskabsretten tillægger en sammenslutning af entreprenører, skal sammenslutningen havde adgang til klageprocedurerne i henhold til første kontroldirektiv.

Sagen synes meget konkret og har næppe særlig generel interesse.

Set fra en dansk synsvinkel er besvarelsen af spørgsmål 1) vel ret oplagt. Det forekommer mere interessant at stille det omvendte spørgsmål, dvs. om EU's udbudsregler er til hinder for at tillade ændringer i en tilbudsgivers sammensætning under et udbudsforløb. Kommissionen berørte dette emne i sit indlæg i sagen, og også Østrig berørte det i et indlæg. Domstolen kom imidlertid ikke ind på emnet.

Domstolens besvarelse af spørgsmål 2) synes reelt at svare til den danske regel om, at der er klageadgang for den, der har retlig interesse i at klage.

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 25. februar 2003 i sag T-4/01, Renco mod Rådet

Klage over, at udbyderen ved tilbudsvurderingen lagde vægt på, at klagerens tilbudspris på nogle punkter var unormalt lav, ikke taget til følge, da udbyderen havde fulgt fremgangsmåden med hensyn til unormalt lave bud, uden at klageren var kommet med en overbevisende forklaring. Klage over udbyderens beregning af klagerens samlede tilbudspris heller ikke taget til følge

Rådet iværksatte et udbud vedrørende en rammekontrakt om bygningsvedligeholdelse m.m. Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud.

Der indkom tilbud fra tre tilbudsgivere, hvorefter Rådet besluttede at indgå kontrakt med en af tilbudsgiverne. De to andre tilbudsgivere anlagde derefter begge sag mod Rådet ved Retten i Første Instans. Den dom, som dette resumé angår, er Rettens afgørelse i sagen anlagt af den ene til-budsgiver, medens Rettens dom af 25. februar 2003 i sag T-183/00, Strabag Benelux mod Rådet, angår sagen anlagt af den anden tilbudsgiver.

Som begrundelse for ikke at tildele sagsøgeren kontrakten havde Rådet bl.a. angivet, at sagsøgerens tilbudspris på forskellige punkter var unormalt lav, og at sagsøgerens samlede tilbudspris som følge af sin sammensætning på et nærmere angivet punkt var højere end den valgte tilbudsgivers samlede tilbudspris. Rådet havde før tildelingsbeslutningen anmodet sagsøgeren om nærmere oplysning om de dele af sagsøgerens tilbudspris, som Rådet anså for unormalt lave.

Sagsøgeren gjorde bl.a. gældende. at den nævnte begrundelse var udtryk for en tilbudsvurdering i strid med udbudsbetingelserne, men fik ikke medhold. Retten udtalte bl.a. at Rådet ikke klart og i betydelig grad havde overskredet grænserne for sin skønsbeføjelse ved at tage hensyn til de mange unormalt lave priser i sagsøgerens tilbud. Retten henviste herved til, at Rådet havde fulgt fremgangsmåden med hensyn til unormalt lave bud i § 30, stk. 4, i det tidligere Bygge- og anlægsdirektiv (der var gældende for udbuddet i medfør af en regel i den dagældende finansforordning), og at der ikke var fremkommet en overbevisende forklaring fra sagsøgeren på de pågældende priser (præmis 77-78). Rådet havde heller ikke udøvet et åbenbart urigtigt skøn ved sin beregning af sagsøgerens samlede tilbudspris (præmis 83).

Er kun refereret i det omfang dommen skønnes at have almen udbudsretlig interesse.

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 25. februar 2003 i sag T-183/00, Strabag Benelux mod Rådet

Klage over tilbudsvurdering i relation til nogle underkriterier ikke taget tilfølge

Rådet iværksatte et udbud vedrørende en rammekontrakt om bygningsvedligeholdelse m.m. Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud.

Der indkom tilbud fra tre tilbudsgivere, hvorefter Rådet besluttede at indgå kontrakt med en af tilbudsgiverne. De to andre tilbudsgivere anlagde derefter begge sag mod Rådet ved Retten i Første Instans. Den dom, som dette resumé angår, er Rettens afgørelse i sagen anlagt af den ene tilbudsgiver, medens Rettens dom af 25. februar 2003 i sag T-4/01, Renco mod Rådet, angår sagen anlagt af den anden tilbudsgiver.

Sagsøgeren gjorde forskellige anbringender gældende, herunder at udbyderen havde bedømt sagsøgerens tilbud forkert i relation til nogle af underkriterierne til tildelingskriteriet. Sagsøgeren fik ikke medhold.

Refereres i øvrigt ikke, da dommen ikke skønnes at have almen udbudsretlig interesse, i hvert fald ikke på tidspunktet for udarbejdelse af dette resumé (december 2009).

27. februar 2003, sag C-327/00, Santex

En klagefrist på 60 dage var ikke i sig selv strid med første kontroldirektiv, men der skulle ses væk fra fristen som følge af sagens omstændigheder

En italiensk myndighed udbød den 23. oktober 1996 i henhold til Indkøbsdirektivet indkøb af nogle hjælpemidler til levering i patienternes hjem. I udbudsbekendtgørelsen var angivet, at kun virksomheder, der i de sidste tre år havde haft en omsætning ved en ydelse som den udbudte på mindst tre gange værdien af den udbudte kontrakt, ville få adgang til at afgive tilbud.

Efter at en virksomhed, Santex, havde tilkendegivet over for udbyderen, at man anså den citerede klausul for en ulovlig konkurrencebegrænsning, meddelte udbyderen den 25. november 1996, at klausulen kunne forstås som en henvisning til tilbudsgivernes samlede omsætning, således at omsætningen på hjælpemidler som de udbudte blot ville indgå i vurderingen af tilbudene.

Den virksomhed, som hidtil havde udført leverancen, protesterede herimod. Den 24. februar 1997 besluttede udbyderen at udelukke de virksomheder, der ikke opfyldte klausulen i dens oprindelige formulering, herunder Santex, fra at afgive tilbud. Den 8. april 1997 besluttede udbyderen at tildele den hidtidige leverandør kontrakten.

Santex anlagde herefter sag mod udbyderen ved en italiensk forvaltningsdomstol. Udbyderen og den hidtidige leverandør, der indtrådte i sagen, gjorde for forvaltningsdomstolen gældende, at sagen var anlagt for sent, idet der i henhold til den italienske lovgivning gælder en frist på 60 dage for klager over en forvaltningsafgørelse.

Forvaltningsdomstolen stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen.

Det fremgår, at 60-dages fristen i den foreliggende sag løb fra udbudsbekendtgørelsen. Forvaltningsdomstolen henviste imidlertid til en særlig regel i den italienske lovgivning, hvorefter en regel kan tilsidesættes, hvis den er i strid med en trinhøjere regel og berører en individuel rettighed. Forvaltningsdomstolen henviste herved bl.a. til Menneskerettighedskonventionen. Forvaltningsdomstolen henviste også til, at den omhandlede klausul i udbudsbetingelserne var i strid med Indkøbsdirektivets artikel 22 (om krav til tilbudsgivernes formåen), og anførte, at udbyderen havde forhindret et sagsanlæg inden fristens udløb ved at forlede Santex til at tro, at klausulen ville blive fortolket restriktivt eller omformuleret.

Efter en omformulering af forvaltningsdomstolens spørgsmål udtalte EF-domstolen (stærkt sammentrængt):

Som udtalt i dom af 12. december 2002, Universale-Bau, er første kontroldirektiv ikke til hinder for nationale klagefrister, og en klagefrist på 60 dage er rimelig. Også en klagefrist, der løber fra meddelelsen af den pågældende retsakt eller fra den dag, da den berørte har fået fuldt kendskab til den, er i overensstemmelse med effektivitetsprincippet. De konkrete omstændigheder kan imidlertid bevirke, at fristen bliver i strid med effektivitetsprincippet, og i den foreliggende sag havde udbyderen ved sin skiftende handlemåde gjort det uforholdsmæssigt vanskeligt for Santex at udøve sine rettigheder i henhold til fællesskabsretten.

Den nationale domstol skal i videst muligt omfang fortolke den nationale lovgivning i overensstemmelse med fællesskabsretten, og er en sådan fortolkning ikke mulig, er den nationale domstol forpligtet til at anvende fællesskabsretten og skal herved om nødvendigt undlade at anvende en national bestemmelse.

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter de omformulerede spørgsmål ved at udtale at første kontroldirektiv skal fortolkes således: Hvis en ordregivende myndighed har gjort det umuligt eller uforholdsmæssigt vanskeligt for en unionsborger at udøve sine rettigheder i henhold til fællesskabsretten, skal de nationale retsinstanser realitetsbehandle en klage over udbudsbekendtgørelsen, idet de i givet fald gøre brug af deres adgang i henhold til national ret til at undlade at anvende nationale præklusionsregler.

Det er bemærkelsesværdigt, at forvaltningsdomstolen fandt det nødvendigt at forelægge sagen for EF-domstolen, når forvaltningsdomstolen (efter sin angivelse) havde adgang i national ret til at se bort fra klagefristen. Det var måske tvivlsomt, om denne adgang i virkeligheden var til stede. Sagen kan give en fornemmelse af, at forelæggelsens egentlige formål var at få opbakning i forhold til appelinstansen, der på et tidspunkt i forløbet havde ophævet forvaltningsdomstolens bestemmelse om opsættende virkning.

27. februar 2003, sag C-373/00, Adolf Truley

Almenhedens behov er et fællesskabsretligt begreb. Bedemandsvirksomhed kan opfylde almenhedens behov. Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets fortegnelse over offentligretlige organer er ikke udtømmende. Udførlig beskrivelse af udbudsdirektivernes formål. Erhvervsdrivende offentligretlige organer. Kriteriet om, at et offentligretligt organ skal være undergivet offentlig kontrol

Begrebet »offentligretligt organ«. Terminologi

Denne dom angår et emne, som EF-domstolen har beskæftiget sig med i flere domme, nemlig begrebet »offentligretligt organ«. Dette begreb er reelt næppe særligt indviklet, men forståelsen kompliceres af rent sproglige årsager. I det følgende forsøges en sproglig forenkling med henblik på at gøre det lettere at forstå og fastholde begrebet.

Alle udbudsdirektiverne indeholder en regel om, at »offentligretlige organer« er omfattet af udbudspligten. I de såkaldt klassiske udbudsdirektiver, dvs. Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, Indkøbsdirektivet og Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, er reglen placeret i artikel 1, b. I Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet står reglen i artikel 1, 1.

Selvom reglen er formuleret lidt forskelligt i de enkelte direktiver, skal den formentlig forstås ganske på samme måde, uanset hvilket direktiv, der er tale om. Denne antagelse bekræftes af EF-domstolens dom af 12. december 2002, Universale-Bau, ved hvilken EF-domstolen bortfortolkede en særlig formulering i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet.

Reglen består af en hovedregel med en undtagelse. Hovedreglen kan lidt forenklet gengives sådan:

Et offentligretligt organ er et organ,

a) som har til opgave at opfylde almenhedens behov,
b) som er en juridisk person,
c) og som finansieres eller kontrolleres af det offentlige.

Organer, der opfylder disse tre betingelser, kaldes i det følgende almene organer.

Som nævnt er der imidlertid en undtagelse. Den går ud på, at et alment organ alligevel ikke er et offentligretligt organ med udbudspligt, hvis organets virksomhed er erhvervsmæssig.

Undtagelsen er i alle udbudsdirektiverne indeholdt i udformningen af betingelsen om, at organet skal have til formål at opfylde almenhedens behov. Formuleringen er lidt forskellig fra direktiv til direktiv, men dette er givetvis ikke udtryk for nogen realitetsforskel. I Indkøbsdirektivet, som den her resumerede dom angår, lyder formuleringen: »…ethvert organ, hvis opgave det er at imødekomme almenhedens behov, dog ikke på det industrielle eller forretningsmæssige område…«.

Almene organer, hvis virksomhed er erhvervsmæssig, og som derfor ikke er offentligretlige organer med udbudspligt, benævnes i det følgende erhvervsmæssige almene organer. Almene organer, hvis virksomhed ikke er erhvervsmæssig, og som derfor er offentligretlige organer med udbudspligt, benævnes i det følgende ikke-erhvervsmæssige almene organer. Som følge af brugen af disse betegnelser er referatet nedenfor af de præjudicielle spørgsmål i sagen og af EF-domstolens svar til dels formuleret noget anderledes end spørgsmålene og svarene selv.

EF-domstolen har i nogle afgørelser taget stilling til, hvornår et alment organ skal anses for erhvervsmæssigt. Det drejer sig om dom af 15. januar 1998, Mannesmann Anlagenbau (Strohal), 10. november 1998, BFI Holding (Arnhem), 10. maj 2001, Agorà, og den her resumerede dom. Af disse domme kan tilsyneladende bl.a. udledes følgende:

Et alment organ er kun erhvervsmæssigt med deraf følgende fritagelse for udbudspligt, hvis dets virksomhed udelukkende er erhvervsmæssig.

Hvis et alment organ derimod både driver erhvervsmæssig og ikke-erhvervsmæssig virksomhed, skal organet anses for et ikke-erhvervsmæssigt alment organ med deraf følgende udbudspligt. Dette gælder, selvom den ikke-erhvervsmæssige del af organets virksomhed er relativt ubetydelig.

Se også resuméet nedenfor af dommen af 22. maj 2003, Korhonen mfl. Denne dom beskæftiger sig ligeledes med begrebet ikke-erhvervsmæssige almene organer.

Resumé af dommen

Den her resumerede dom drejede sig et kommunalt aktieselskab, Bestattung Wien GmbH (Bestattung Wien), der gennem et holdingselskab ejes af Wiens Kommune. Som ofte med hensyn til domme vedrørende præjudicielle spørgsmål er det vanskeligt at få hold på, hvad sagens faktum nærmere gik ud på, men følgende synes at fremgå:

Bestattung Wien udøver egentlig begravelsesvirksomhed, dvs. ligbrænding, jordfæstelse og drift af kirkegårde ol. Denne form for virksomhed omtales i sagen som »bedemandsydelser i snæver forstand«.

Bestattung Wien udøver imidlertid også virksomhed med udfærdigelse af dødsattester og dødsannoncer, iklædning og kistelægning og transport af kiste m.m. Sådanne aktiviteter omtales i sagen som »bedemandsydelser i vid forstand«. Dommen og dens sagsfremstilling tyder på, at Bestattung Wiens hovedopgave er at udføre bedemandsydelser i »vid« forstand, og at Bestattung Wien reelt er den eneste bedemandsvirksomhed i Wien. Hvis dette er rigtigt forstået, er Bestattung Wiens udførelse af bedemandsydelser i »snæver« forstand kun en mindre del af virksomheden. Dette synes dog ikke egentligt udtalt i dommen.

Hertil kommer følgende, der spillede en betydelig rolle i sagen: I henhold til den østrigske lovgivning skal myndighederne foranledige bisættelse af afdøde personer, hvis der ikke er sket bisættelse inden en bestemt tid efter dødsfaldet. I sådanne tilfælde er det i Wien øjensynlig Bestattung Wien, der sørger for dødsannoncer, iklædning, kistelægning og transport af kisten m.m., dvs. netop bedemandsydelser i »vid« forstand.

Bestattung Wien udbød et indkøb af ligkistetilbehør. Udbudet skete ikke som EU-udbud, øjensynlig fordi Bestattung Wien ikke anså sig for omfattet af udbudsdirektiverne. En tilbudsgiver, der ikke fik tildelt ordren, klagede til et østrigsk klageorgan (Vergabekontrollsenat) og gjorde gældende, at man havde været den eneste tilbudsgiver, hvis tilbud opfyldte udbudsbetingelserne.

Under sagen for klageorganet blev der øjensynlig rejst spørgsmål, om Bestattung Wien er et offentligretligt organ med udbudspligt efter Indkøbsdirektivet.

Bestattung Wien gjorde om dette spørgsmål tilsyneladende følgende gældende: Kun selskabets udførelse af bedemandsydelser i »snæver« forstand sker til opfyldelse af almenhedens behov. Udførelsen af bedemandsydelser i »vid« forstand sker derimod ikke til opfyldelse af almenhedens behov. Da den sidstnævnte virksomhed er den overvejende del af Bestattung Wiens aktiviteter (?), er Bestattung Wien herefter ikke et offentligretligt organ med EU-udbudspligt.

Bestattung Wien gjorde tilsyneladende også gældende, at selskabet ikke er et offentligretligt organ, fordi selskabet er helt uafhængigt af det offentlige, dvs. at Bestattung Wien ikke opfylder betingelsen om at være finansieret eller kontrolleret af det offentlige.

Endvidere gjorde Bestattung Wien øjensynlig gældende, at selskabet ikke er et offentligretligt organ, fordi selskabet ikke er nævnt i fortegnelsen over offentligretlige organer i bilag I til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet (som Indkøbsdirektivets artikel 1, b henviser til).

Klageorganet stillede nogle præjudicielle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen, der svarede som nedenfor angivet.

Spørgsmål 1, a): Skal definitionen af begrebet almenhedens behov i artikel 1, b i Indkøbsdirektivet udledes af medlemsstaternes nationale retsordner?

Besvaret med, at begrebet almenhedens behov er et fællesskabsretligt begreb.

Herved henvist til udbudsdirektivernes formål, der beskrives således: At fjerne hindringerne for den frie udveksling af varer og tjenesteydelser og dermed at beskytte interesserne hos forretningsdrivende i en medlemsstat, der ønsker at tilbyde varer og tjenesteydelser til ordregivende myndigheder i en anden medlemsstat. Desuden at fjerne risikoen for, at der indrømmes indenlandske bydende eller ansøgere en fortrinsstilling ved de ordregivende myndigheders indgåelse af kontrakter, og at fjerne muligheden for, at et organ, der er finansieret af staten, lokale myndigheder eller andre offentligretlige organer, lader sig lede af andre hensyn end økonomiske.

Udtalt, at under hensyn til dette dobbelte formål, der er at åbne for konkurrence og skabe gennemsigtighed, må begrebet offentligt organ forstås bredt.

Desuden udtalt, at selvom et organ ikke er medtaget på fortegnelsen over offentligretlige organer i bilag I til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, skal det undersøges konkret, om et organ opfylder almenhedens behov. Denne udtalelse betyder øjensynlig, at den omtalte fortegnelse ikke er udtømmende, og at et organ godt kan være et offentligretligt organ, selvom det ikke er medtaget i fortegnelsen.

Spørgsmål 1, b): Er en subsidiær forpligtelse hos myndighederne tilstrækkelig til at udgøre almenhedens behov?

Spørgsmålet sigtede til den omtalte pligt for Bestattung Wien til at sørge for bisættelse, hvis der ikke er sket bisættelse inden en bestemt tid efter dødsfaldet. Tankegangen bag spørgsmålet synes at være: Bedemandsydelser i »vid« forstand opfylder muligvis ikke i sig selv almenhedens behov. Men skal sådanne ydelser i hvert fald anses for at opfylde almenhedens behov, hvis der er en lovbestemt pligt til udføre dem?

Besvaret med, at bedemands- og begravelsesvirksomhed kan opfylde almenhedens behov. At myndighederne har en lovbestemt pligt til at sørge for bisættelser, hvis der ikke er sket en sådan inden en bestemt frist, er et indicium herfor.

Herved bl.a. udtalt: Det anførte gælder, selvom det antages, at bedemandsvirksomhed i »snæver« forstand kun udgør en relativt ubetydelig del af den virksomhed, der udøves af en bedemandsforretning, når denne virksomhed fortsætter med at opfylde almenhedens behov. I henhold til fast retspraksis afhænger spørgsmålet, om et alment organ er et offentligretligt organ med deraf følgende udbudspligt, ikke af omfanget af den erhvervsmæssige del af organets virksomhed. Herved henvist til nogle af de domme, der er nævnt ovenfor.

Spørgsmål 2): Er det for at karakterisere et organ som et erhvervsmæssigt alment organ a) en ufravigelig forudsætning, at der foreligger en udviklet konkurrence, eller b) afhænger forholdet af de faktiske eller retligt omstændigheder?

Spørgsmålet sigtede tilsyneladende til, at Bestattung Wien ikke har konkurrence med hensyn til udøvelse af bedemandsvirksomhed. Spørgsmålet bekræfter for så vidt antagelsen ovenfor af, at Bestattung Wien er den eneste bedemandsvirksomhed i Wien.

Besvaret således: At der foreligger en udviklet konkurrence, er ikke i sig selv i sig selv nok til at karakterisere et alment organ som et erhvervsmæssigt alment organ. Spørgsmålet måtte afgøres af den østrigske klageinstans under hensyn til samtlige relevante og faktiske omstændigheder, herunder omstændighederne ved oprettelsen af det pågældende organ og de betingelser, der regulerer dets virksomhed. Herved bl.a. henvist til, at domstolen i dom af 10. november 1998, BFI Holding (Arnhem), har udtalt, at et krav om, at der ikke findes konkurrence, for at et organ kan karakteriseres som et ikke-erhvervsmæssigt alment organ, ville tømme begrebet offentligretligt organ for indhold, men at eksistensen af konkurrence dog kan være et indicium for, at der er tale om et erhvervsmæssigt alment organ.

Spørgsmål 3): Er betingelsen i Indkøbsdirektivets artikel 1, b om, at det pågældende organ skal være undergivet offentlig kontrol, også opfyldt, når der blot er tale om en efterfølgende kontrol som en nærmere beskrevet kontrol udøvet af en østrigsk kontrolinstans?

(Den beskrevne kontrol er en kontrol som den, der omtales i EF-domstolens svar.)

Besvaret med (noget sammentrængt), at en almindelig efterfølgende kontrol ikke er tilstrækkelig, men at kriteriet er opfyldt i tilfælde, hvor det offentlige ikke kun kontrollerer organets regnskaber, men også organets drift, og hvor det offentlige har adgang til at aflægge organet kontrolbesøg og videregive resultaterne af disse kontrolbesøg til en myndighed, der ejer organet.

Kommentarer til dommen

Forståelsen af dommen kompliceres dels af, at det som ovenfor anført er vanskeligt at få hold på, hvad sagens faktum nærmere gik ud på, dels af, at de præjudicielle spørgsmål og svarene på dem i overensstemmelse med traditionen er formuleret abstrakt. Hertil kommer, at besvarelsen af spørgsmålene i et vist omfang forekommer uklar, og at besvarelsen af spørgsmål 2 kun til dels synes at være et svar på spørgsmålet, sådan som det var formuleret.

Men sammenfattende synes EF-domstolens udtalelser at betyde følgende: Bestattung Wien skal anses for et ikke-erhvervsmæssigt alment organ og er derfor et offentligretligt organ, der er omfattet af udbudsdirektivernes udbudspligt, fordi Bestattung Wiens bedemandsvirksomhed opfylder almenhedens behov, fordi Bestattung Wiens bedemandsvirksomhed ikke udelukkende udøves erhvervsmæssigt, og fordi Bestattung Wien er under det offentliges kontrol. Det er uden betydning, at Bestattung Wien ikke er medtaget på fortegnelsen over offentligretlige organer.

Dette er næppe meget andet, end hvad der fremgår af flere tidligere domme fra EF-domstolen. Af størst interesse er måske dommens angivelser om, at bedemandsvirksomhed kan opfylde almenhedens behov, og at fortegnelsen over offentligretlige organer ikke er udtømmende, samt dommens beskrivelse af udbudsdirektivernes formål.

9. april 2003, sag C-424/01, CS Austria

Ved afgørelse om opsættende virkning må der tages hensyn til en forhåndsvurdering af klagesagens udfald

For et østrigsk klageorgan (Bundesvergabeamt) verserede en klagesag vedrørende et udbud, der øjensynlig var foretaget i henhold til Indkøbsdirektivet.

Der forelå for klageorganet spørgsmål om at træffe midlertidige foranstaltninger i anledning af klagen, dvs. – med den danske terminologi – at tillægge klagen opsættende virkning. Den nævnte danske terminologi bruges i det følgende.

Sagen for EF-domstolen angik forståelsen af artikel 2, stk. 4, i første kontroldirektiv. Denne bestemmelse går (kort gengivet) ud på følgende: Medlemsstaterne kan foreskrive, at en klageinstans ved sin afgørelse af, om der skal tillægges en klage opsættende virkning, foretager en afvejning af fordele og ulemper ved opsættende virkning.

Det østrigske klageorgan var i tvivl, om man ved afgørelsen om opsættende virkning må lægge vægt på en forhåndsvurdering af klagesagens forventede udfald, dvs. om klagesagen kan ventes at ende med annullation af den påklagede beslutning.

Klageorganet spurgte derfor EF-domstolen (noget sammentrængt), om en klageinstans efter artikel 2, stk. 4, i første kontroldirektiv, er forpligtet eller berettiget til at tage hensyn til muligheden for annullation af udbyderens beslutning ved afgørelsen af, om der skal tillægges en klage opsættende virkning.

EF-domstolen svarede (stærkt sammentrængt): Artikel 2, stk. 4, i første kontroldirektiv forbyder ikke nationale regler, hvorefter en klageinstans ved afgørelsen om opsættende virkning tager højde for udsigten til, at klageren får medhold i realiteten. De nationale regler ikke må være mindre gunstige end dem, der gælder for tilsvarende søgsmål på grundlag af national ret (ækvivalensprincippet), og de må heller ikke gøre det umuligt eller uforholdsmæssigt vanskeligt at udøve rettighederne i henhold til fællesskabets retsorden i praksis (effektivitetsprincippet).

Afgørelsen blev truffet ved kendelse med henvisning til, at besvarelsen af det østrigske klageorgans spørgsmål ikke gav anledning til nogen rimelig tvivl.

10. april 2003, sager C-20/01 og C28/01, Kommissionen mod Tyskland

Tyskland havde overtrådt Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ved indgåelse af kontrakter om bortledning af spildevand og bortskaffelse af dagrenovation

Statueret, at Tyskland havde overtrådt Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet som følge af nedennævnte forhold.

1) En tysk kommune havde uden EU-udbud indgået kontrakt med en virksomhed om bortledning af spildevand.

Overtrædelsen var erkendt af Tyskland, hvis indsigelser under sagen alene var af formel karakter.

2) En anden tysk kommune havde ved udbud efter forhandling uden udbudsbekendtgørelse indgået kontrakt med en virksomhed om bortskaffelse af dagrenovation. Dagrenovationen skulle behandles »termisk«, og det var af miljømæssige hensyn et led i udbudsbetingelserne, at behandlingsanlægget skulle ligge i regionen. Som følge af denne betingelse var der efter kommunens opfattelse ikke andre virksomheder end den valgte, der kunne udføre opgaven, hvorfor man havde anset sig berettiget til at foretage udbud efter forhandling uden udbudsbekendtgørelse i medfør af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 11, stk. 3, b. Efter denne bestemmelse kan et sådant udbud foretages, hvis tjenesteydelsen af bl.a. tekniske grunde kun kan overdrages til en bestemt tjenesteyder.

Tyskland synes at have erkendt overtrædelsen og fremsatte i første række forskellige formelle indsigelser. Tyskland gjorde dog alligevel gældende som et subsidiært anbringende, at det havde været berettiget at foretage udbudet som sket.

EF-domstolen udtalte (stærkt sammentrængt), at der kan tages miljømæssige hensyn ved tildeling af en kontrakt, og domstolen henviste herved til dommen af 17. september 2002 i sagen Concordia Bus Finland. Det var imidlertid ikke bevist, at termisk affaldsbehandling skulle være en teknisk grund, der er omfattet af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 11, stk. 3, b, eller at det det af miljømæssige grunde skulle være nødvendigt, at affaldsbehandlingen foregik i nærheden.

15. maj 2003, sag C-214/00, Kommissionen mod Spanien

Spanien havde ikke gennemført første kontroldirektiv fyldestgørende

Referatet nedenfor er yderst sammentrængt og summarisk.

I dommen statuerede EF-domstolen, at Spanien ikke havde gennemført første kontroldirektiv fyldestgørende som følge af nedennævnte forhold.

1) Efter de spanske klageregler omfattede de retsmidler, der garanteres i første kontroldirektiv, ikke beslutninger truffet af offentligretlige organer, der har karakter af privatretlige selskaber. (Se om begrebet offentligretlige organer resuméet ovenfor af domstolens dom af 27. februar 2003, Adolf Truley.)

2) Efter de spanske regler forudsatte midlertidige foranstaltninger (dvs. bestemmelse om opsættende virkning) almindeligvis, at der forinden var indgivet klage over en beslutning fra den ordregivende myndighed.

Derimod fik Kommissionen ikke medhold i en påstand om, at de spanske regler ikke gav tilstrækkelig mulighed for at påklage visse beslutninger fra de ordregivende myndigheder.

22. maj 2003, sag C-18/01, Korhonen mfl.

Om begrebet almenhedens behov uden for det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område

Som ofte med hensyn til præjudicielle afgørelser er det vanskeligt at forstå, hvad sagens faktum gik ud på. Med hensyn til den resumerede dom kan forholdet hænge sammen med, at EF-domstolen ikke havde fuldstændige oplysninger om faktum, hvilket er nævnt i dommen.

Men sagens faktum synes i hovedtræk at gå ud på følgende:

En finsk kommune besluttede at etablere et såkaldt teknologisk vækstcenter, bestående af erhvervsejendomme, der skulle opføres og derefter udlejes til forskellige teknologi-virksomheder. Den nærmere gennemførelse af projektet blev i første omgang overladt til et regionalt udviklingsselskab, der for størstedelen ejes af den omtalte kommune og andre kommuner i regionen.

Projektets første fase gik ud på opførelse af nogle bygninger, som skulle udlejes til en nærmere angivet virksomhed, og det regionale udviklingsselskab indhentede tilbud på en tjenesteydelse bestående af planlægning og gennemførelse af denne fase. Derefter tilkendegav udviklingsselskabet imidlertid, at projektet skulle varetages af et særligt ejendomsselskab, og at den omtalte tjenesteydelse skulle udbydes i EU-udbud. Det nævnte ejendomsselskab benævnes i sagen Taitalo.

Der blev derefter foretaget EU-udbud af den omtalte tjenesteydelse, og der blev indgivet tilbud i henhold til dette udbud. På et tidspunkt herefter blev Taitalo stiftet. Taitalo overtog projektet og traf bestemmelse om tildeling af kontrakt i henhold til EU-udbudet.

Nogle forbigåede tilbudsgivere klagede til et klageorgan, dvs. det finske konkurrenceråd, og gjorde gældende, at den finske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter var blevet tilsidesat ved det omtalte EU-udbud.

Taitalo gjorde for klageorganet gældende, at man ikke var ordregivende myndighed i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, og klageorganet stillede i den anledning nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen.

Sagen for EF-domstolen drejede sig om, hvorvidt Taitalo skulle anses for et offentligretligt organ i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 1, b. Afgørende herfor var, om Taitalo opfyldte betingelsen i bestemmelsens første led om, at det pågældende organ skal have til opgave at imødekomme almenhedens behov, dog ikke på det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område. Det synes klart, at Taitalo opfyldte de øvrige betingelser i artikel 1, b.

Taitalos synspunkt om, at man ikke var ordregivende myndighed i henhold til direktivet, var begrundet med, at Taitalos aktiviteter falder inden for det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område, således at Taitalo ikke opfyldte første led i artikel 1, b. Som begrundelse herfor henviste Taitalo til, at projektets finansiering i det væsentlige varetages af den private sektor (præmis 46).

Om begrebet offentligretligt organ henvises i øvrigt til den udførlige redegørelse i resuméet ovenfor af EF-domstolens dom af 27. februar 2003, Adolf Truley, hvor der også nævnes nogle andre domme om emnet.

Om Taitalo var oplyst: Taitalo er et aktieselskab, der fuldstændig ejes af den omtalte kommune. Taitalos formål er (kort gengivet) at købe, sælge, udleje og administrere ejendomme. Taitalos bestyrelse består af tre medlemmer, der alle er ansat i – og utvivlsomt er udpeget af – kommunen.

EF-domstolen udtalte:

1) Taitalos aktiviteter i sagen imødekommer almenhedens behov. Herved henvist til, at aktiviteter som de omtalte er egnede til at stimulere den økonomiske og sociale udvikling og skabe arbejdspladser og højere skatteindtægter (præmis 45).

2) Spørgsmålet, om de omtalte behov hos almenheden falder uden for det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område, var vanskeligere (præmis 46).

EF-domstolen foretog i præmis 47-51 og 57-59 en gennemgang af begrebet det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område, og gav i præmis 52 en redegørelse for udbudsdirektivernes formål. De pågældende bemærkninger synes ikke at være andet, end hvad domstolen har udtalt i flere tidligere domme.

Domstolen henviste videre til en oplysning fra den finske regering om, at opnåelse af fortjeneste ikke er hovedformålet med selskaber som Taitalo, idet sådanne selskaber ifølge den finske lovgivning primært skal fremme de almene interesser for indbyggerne i lokalområdet. Domstolen henviste desuden til, at der var ydet offentlig støtte til projektet (præmis 54 og 55).

Domstolen udtalte, at det herefter var sandsynligt, at Taitalos aktiviteter med hensyn til det omtalte projekt faldt uden for det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område. Det tilkom imidlertid det nationale klageorgan, der var den eneste med tilbundsgående kendskab til sagens akter, at vurdere forholdet (præmis 55 og 56).

3) Det var uden betydning, at de lokaler, der skulle opføres, kun skulle udlejes til en enkelt virksomhed.

19. juni 2003, sag C-249/01, Hackermüller

Om klageadgang for tilbudsgivere med ukonditionsmæssige tilbud

En østrigsk ordregiver udskrev en projektkonkurrence om arkitektydelser vedrørende opførelse af en bygning. Der indkom nogle projektforslag, hvorefter udbyderen besluttede at gøre brug af et af forslagene.

En af de andre forslagsstillere (Hackermüller) klagede til det østrigske klageorgan Bundesvergabeamt. Klagen var tilsyneladende begrundet med, at udbyderens tildelingsbeslutning var sket i strid med tildelingskriteriet.

Bundesvergabeamt afviste imidlertid klagen med begrundelse, at Hackermüller ikke var klageberettiget, fordi han havde oplyst sin identitet i sit projektmateriale, hvilket som følge af udbudsbetingelserne sammenholdt med nogle østrigske regler medførte, at udbyderen ikke kunne tage hans projekt i betragtning.

Hackermüller indbragte Bundesvergabeamts afgørelse for den østrigske forfatningsdomstol, der annullerede Bundesvergabeamts afgørelse med følgende begrundelse (noget sammentrængt): Efter EF-domstolens nyere praksis er det tvivlsomt, om et klageorgan kan afskære en tilbudsgiver fra at klage med den begrundelse, at udbyderen ikke skulle have taget tilbudet i betragtning, når udbyderen faktisk har taget tilbudet i betragtning.

Sagen verserede herefter igen for Bundesvergabeamt, der stillede to spørgsmål til EF-domstolen, som efter en vis omformulering udtalte (stærkt sammentrængt og til dels omformuleret):

Ad spørgsmål 1): Artikel 1, stk. 3, i første kontroldirektiv er ikke til hinder for, at der kun er klageadgang for personer, der ønsker at få tildelt en kontrakt, hvis de har lidt eller vil kunne lide skade som følge af den påståede overtrædelse.

Ad spørgsmål 2): Artikel 1, stk. 3, i første kontroldirektiv er til hinder for, at en tilbudsgiver nægtes klageadgang med den begrundelse, at udbyderen ikke burde have taget klagerens tilbud i betragtning. Tilbudsgiveren skal i forbindelse med den klage, som han således skal have adgang til, have mulighed for at anfægte klageorganets synspunkt om, at tilbudsgiverens tilbud ikke burde være taget i betragtning.

EF-domstolens svar på spørgsmål 1) kan læses direkte ud af artikel 1, stk. 3, i første kontroldirektiv.

Rækkevidden af domstolens svar på spørgsmål 2) forekommer derimod umiddelbart usikker, idet de to led i svaret nærmest synes at stride mod hinanden. Reelt betyder svaret måske ikke andet, end at tilbudsgiveren skal have adgang til at udtale sig for klageorganet om spørgsmålet, om hans tilbud skulle have været afvist. Dette er en selvfølgelighed set fra en dansk synsvinkel.

19. juni 2003, sag C-315/01, GAT

Et klageorgan må tage et forhold op ex officio, men parterne skal have adgang til at udtale sig om forholdet, og klageorganet må ikke afvise klagen som følge af forholdet. Referencer til andre kunder og mulighed for besigtigelse inden for en vis afstand fra udbyderens etableringssted må ikke bruges som underkriterier

En østrigsk myndighed udbød som EU-udbud indkøb af en gadefejningsmaskine. Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud tilsyneladende på grundlag af følgende underkriterier, der ville blive vægtet på nærmere angiven måde: 1) Pris og 2) antal af referencer til kunder vedrørende fejemaskiner i de alpine områder.

Der indkom et antal tilbud. Udbyderen afviste tilbudet fra tilbudsgiveren med den laveste tilbudspris (GAT) med begrundelse, at dette tilbud ikke var i overensstemmelse med udbudsbetingelserne på grund af følgende: a) Den tilbudte maskine kunne ikke anvendes ved en temperatur på -5º som foreskrevet. b) GAT havde ikke opfyldt en betingelse om, at der skulle være mulighed for besigtigelse inden for 300 km fra udbyderens etableringssted. c) Der sattes spørgsmålstegn ved tilbudsprisen. d) GAT havde trods opfordring ikke redegjort tilstrækkeligt for visse tekniske forhold ved den tilbudte maskine.

Udbyderen besluttede derefter at indgå kontrakt med en af de andre tilbudsgivere. GAT klagede til et østrigsk klageorgan, Bundesvergabeamt, og gjorde gældende, at udbyderens afvisning af GAT's tilbud var uberettiget. GAT gjorde herved forskellige anbringender gældende.

Det synes at fremgå, at Bundesvergabeamt af sig selv blev opmærksom på, at underkriteriet om antal af referencer til kunder i de alpine områder kunne være i strid med EU-retten, men at GAT ikke havde gjort dette gældende. Det synes videre at fremgå, at den østrigske forfatningsdomstol i en afgørelse havde udtalt tvivl med hensyn til, om et klageorgan har mulighed for at inddrage forhold ex officio, idet artikel 2, stk. 8, i første kontroldirektiv foreskriver en kontradiktorisk klageprocedure.

I hvert fald til dels på denne baggrund forelagde Bundesvergabeamt sagen for EF-domstolen med en række spørgsmål. EF-domstolen udtalte (stærkt sammentrængt og til dels omformuleret, Klagenævnets litrering):

1) Første kontroldirektiv er ikke til hinder for, at et klageorgan af egen drift i en klagesag inddrager forhold, som klageren ikke har gjort gældende. Klageorganet skal blot respektere parternes ret til at blive hørt om forholdet (præmis 49).

2) Klageorganet må imidlertid ikke afvise klagen med den begrundelse, at klagerens eventuelle tab ville være indtrådt under alle omstændigheder, fordi udbudsproceduren under alle omstændigheder var uretmæssig som følge af det forhold, som klageorganet har taget op af egen drift.

3) Referencer til andre kunder må ikke anvendes som underkriterium til tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud, men er et egnethedskriterium. Herved bl.a. udtalt, at der som underkriterier kun kan vælges forhold, der er egnet til at identificere det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud, og at en simpel referenceliste ikke er egnet til dette (præmis 66).

4) Et kriterium om, at den tilbudte genstand skal kunne besigtiges inden for en afstand på 300 km, kan ikke anvendes som underkriterium til tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud. Herved henvist til Indkøbsdirektivets artikel 23, stk. 1, d, hvorefter de ordregivende myndigheder kan forlange nærmere angivne beviser for leverandørens tekniske formåen. Desuden henvist til, at et kriterium som omtalt ikke identificerer det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud.

5) Et erstatningsretligt spørgsmål besvaredes ikke, da Bundesvergabeamt ikke har kompetence vedrørende erstatning.

19. juni 2003, sag C-410/01, Fritsch, Chiari & Partner mfl.

Der må ikke stilles krav om inddragelse af et mæglingsorgan før en klage

En østrigsk myndighed udbød en tjenesteydelsesaftale bestående af tilsynsvirksomhed i forbindelse med udførelse af betalingsanlæg for vejafgifter. En tilbudsgiver, der ikke fik tildelt kontrakten, klagede til et østrigsk klageorgan, Bundesvergabeamt.

Udbyderen gjorde for Bundesvergabeamt gældende, at klageren ikke var klageberettiget, fordi man ikke før klagen til Bundesvergabeamt havde indbragt sagen for et særligt mæglingsorgan, Bundes-Vergabekontrollkommission.

Bundesvergabeamt stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen, der udtalte: Artikel 1, stk. 3, i første kontroldirektiv er til hinder for at anse en klager for at have tabt sin interesse i den omhandlede kontrakt, fordi klageren har undladt at inddrage et mæglingsorgan som Bundes-Vergabekontrollkommission før iværksættelsen af en klageprocedure som fastsat i direktivet. Herved henvist til første kontroldirektivs effektivitets- og hurtighedsformål.

16. oktober 2003, sag C-252/01, Kommissionen mod Belgien
Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet fandt ikke anvendelse på en tjenesteydelse, der af militære grunde skulle ledsages af særlige sikkerhedsforanstaltninger, jf. direktivets artikel 4, stk. 2

Sagen angik en kontrakt mellem den belgiske stat og en virksomhed om en tjenesteydelse bestående af overvågning af den belgiske kyst fra luften. Overvågningens formål var tilsyneladende at sikre vandtransporten.

Kontrakten blev indgået uden forudgående EU-udbud, og Kommissionen gjorde under sagen gældende, at der skulle have været foretaget EU-udbud i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet.

Belgien blev imidlertid frifundet med henvisning til, at tjenesteydelsen af nærmere angivne militære grunde skulle ledsages af særlige sikkerhedsforanstaltninger, hvorfor Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet i medfør af direktivets artikel 4, stk. 2, ikke fandt anvendelse.

16. oktober 2003, sag, C-283/00, Kommissionen mod Spanien
Et statsejet aktieselskab, der stod for fængselsbyggeri, var omfattet af udbudspligten

Sagen angik et statsejet spansk aktieselskab, der står for byggeri af fængselsbygninger. Ved dommen statueredes, at aktieselskabet er omfattet af udbudspligten i henhold Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets regel om offentligretlige organer (artikel 1, b).

Spanien havde bl.a. gjort gældende, at aktieselskabet ikke var omfattet af udbudspligten, fordi selskabet var af privatretlig karakter, og det var tilsyneladende generelt opfattelsen i Spanien, at udbudsdirektivernes udbudspligt ikke omfatter selskaber af privatretlig karakter. Denne opfattelse fremgår tilsvarende af EF-domstolens dom af 15. maj 2003 i sagen C-214/00, Kommissionen mod Spanien, til hvilken dom der også henvises i den her resumerede dom. Spanien fik ikke medhold i synspunktet.

Dommen refereres ikke nærmere, da resultatet forekommer åbenbart set fra en dansk synsvinkel.

En sondring mellem offentlig ret og privatret spiller vistnok en central rolle i visse retsordener, måske navnlig de romanske. Den spanske tankegang gik tilsyneladende ud på, at det må være denne sondring, der ligger bag udbudsdirektivernes regler om udbudspligt, således at udbudspligten omfatter organer, der hører under den offentlige ret, mens den ikke omfatter organer, der hører under privatretten, som fx et aktieselskab. Man kunne vel finde en vis bestyrkelse for en sådan tankegang i, at tre af udbudsdirektiverne i titlen taler om »offentlige« aftaler, og at udbudspligten ud over offentlige myndigheder omfatter »offentligretlige« organer, jf. fx Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 1, b.

For en nordisk jurist, der ikke er dybt indlevet i en sondring mellem offentlig ret og privatret som noget fundamentalt, må det på den anden side være umiddelbart indlysende, at udbudsdirektivernes regler om udbudspligt skal forstås ud fra reglernes eget indhold, og at et aktieselskab ikke er undtaget fra udbudspligten, blot fordi det er et aktieselskab.

16. oktober 2003, sag C-421/01, Traunfellner

Hvis udbudsbetingelserne ikke angiver mindstekrav for alternative tilbud, kan alternative tilbud ikke tages i betragtning. Henvisning til en national regel om, at alternative tilbud skal være ligeværdige, er ikke tilstrækkelig angivelse af mindstekrav

En østrigsk myndighed udbød i november 1997 et bygge- og anlægsarbejde bestående af fornyelse af en motorvejsstrækning. Tildelingskriteriet var tilsyneladende tilbudenes økonomiske og tekniske kvalitet, uden at der var angivet underkriterier (?). I udbudsbetingelserne var anført, at vejbelægningen skulle udføres af beton. Det var videre anført, at tilbudsgiverne kunne afgive alternative tilbud under forudsætning af, at de tillige afgav tilbud i overensstemmelse med udbudsbetingelserne. Der var ikke angivet mindstekrav for alternative tilbud.

Tilbudet med den laveste tilbudspris var et alternativt tilbud fra Traunfellner GmbH (Traunfellner), gående ud på udførelse af vejbelægning af asfalt i stedet for beton. Efter at have indhentet nogle tekniske oplysninger fra Traunfellner besluttede udbyderen i marts 1998 at indgå kontrakt med en anden tilbudsgiver, der havde afgivet det laveste tilbud i overensstemmelse med udbudsbetingelserne. Udbyderen angav som begrundelse for ikke at antage Traunfellners alternative tilbud, at dette tilbud ikke var ligeværdigt med kravene i udbudsbetingelserne. Dette sigtede til en regel i den østrigske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter, hvorefter et alternativt tilbud kun kan antages, hvis den tilbudte ydelse er ligeværdig med hensyn til kvaliteten.

Traunfellner klagede i april 1998 til et klageorgan, Bundesvergabeamt, der imidlertid straks afviste klagen. Bundesvergabeamt angav som begrundelse herfor, at Traunfellners alternative tilbud afveg i så betydeligt omfang fra udbudsbetingelserne, at der ikke var tale om et forskriftsmæssigt alternativt tilbud, således at det var uden betydning om tilbudet var ligeværdigt med kravene i udbudsbetingelserne. Bundesvergabeamt udtalte videre, at tilbudet under alle omstændigheder ikke var ligeværdigt.

Traunfellner indbragte sagen for den østrigske forfatningsdomstol, der i november 2000 ophævede Bundesvergabeamts afgørelse med henvisning til, at den ikke var tilstrækkeligt begrundet. Sagen verserede herefter igen for Bundesvergabeamt, der i september 2001 stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen.

EF-domstolen tog stilling til spørgsmålene som nedenfor angivet. (Af overskuelighedsgrunde er referatet af spørgsmålene og besvarelsen stærkt sammentrængt og omformuleret):

1) Er et tilbud om udførelse af vejbelægning af asfalt, når udbudsbetingelserne angår vejbelægning i beton, et alternativt tilbud i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets forstand?

Udtalt, at EF-domstolen ikke havde kompetence til at besvare spørgsmålet. Herved henvist til, at spørgsmålet sigtede til at få EF-domstolens afgørelse af, om Traunfellners tilbud var alternativt, men at EF-domstolen i præjudicielle sager alene har kompetence til at fortolke fællesskabsretten.

2) Er henvisning til en national retsregel om, at alternative tilbud skal være ligeværdige, en tilstrækkelig angivelse af de mindstekrav, som et alternativt tilbud skal opfylde, jf. Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 19, stk. 1?

Besvaret med, at en sådan henvisning ikke er en tilstrækkelig angivelse af de mindstekrav, som alternative tilbud skal opfylde.

3) Er Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 30 om tildelingskriterier sammenholdt med gennemsigtighedsprincippet og ligebehandlingsprincippet til hinder for, at alternative tilbud alene vurderes ud fra, om de er ligeværdige med kravene i udbudsbetingelserne?

Besvaret med, at Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 30 om tildelingskriterier kun finder anvendelse på alternative tilbud, som udbyderen lovligt har taget i betragtning i medfør af direktivets artikel 19. Herved henvist til, at hvis udbudsbetingelserne ikke som foreskrevet i artikel 19 angiver de mindstekrav, som alternative tilbud skal opfylde, kan alternative tilbud ikke tages i betragtning.

Nogle yderligere spørgsmål afvistes med begrundelse, at de var af hypotetisk karakter som følge af, at de angik forhold, om hvilke der ikke var tvist i sagen for Bundesvergabeamt.

16. oktober 2003, sag C-244/02, Kauppatalo Hansel

Udbudsdirektiverne regulerer ikke udbyders annullation af udbud. En sådan annullation skal overholde de grundlæggende fællesskabsretlige principper såsom ligebehandlingsprincippet. Det er ikke en betingelse, at udbyders annullation kun sker i undtagelsestilfælde eller har vægtige grunde

En finsk kommune udbød i henhold til Indkøbsdirektivet levering af elektricitet i en periode, tilsyneladende som offentligt udbud. Tildelingskriteriet var laveste pris.

Efter at have modtaget tilbudene blev udbyderen opmærksom på, at man havde overset, at et leverandørskifte ville medføre visse omkostninger i sig selv. Udbyderen annullerede derfor udbudet og iværksatte et nyt udbud, der var tilrettelagt således, at disse omkostninger ville blive opvejet.

Den tilbudsgiver, hvis tilbud havde haft den laveste pris under det første udbud, klagede til et klageorgan og gjorde gældende, at annullationen af dette udbud havde været uberettiget. Klageorganet gav ikke tilbudsgiveren medhold, hvorefter tilbudsgiveren indbragte klageorganets afgørelse for en ankeinstans.

Ankeinstansen forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen med følgende to spørgsmål (lidt sammentrængt):

1) Kan en udbyder efter Indkøbsdirektivet annullere et udbud med tildelingskriteriet laveste pris, når udbyderen efter have modtaget tilbudene har konstateret, at det ikke er muligt tildele kontrakten på en måde, der er den mest fordelagtige?

2) Har det betydning i denne forbindelse, at forholdet skyldes en forudgående fejl hos udbyderen selv?

EF-domstolen omformulerede spørgsmålene til at angå et enkelt spørgsmål af sålydende indhold (lidt sammentrængt og omformuleret):

Kan en udbyder efter Indkøbsdirektivet annullere et udbud med tildelingskriteriet laveste pris, når udbyderen efter at have modtaget tilbudene bliver opmærksom på, at udbyderen som følge af sin egen fejl ved udbudets tilrettelæggelse ikke har mulighed for at opnå det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud?

Den væsentligste realitetsforskel mellem de to spørgsmål fra den finske ankeinstans og EF-domstolens omformulerede spørgsmål synes at være anvendelsen af udtrykket »det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud« i EF-domstolens omformulering.

EF-domstolen udtalte, at besvarelsen af det omformulerede spørgsmål klart følger af domstolens praksis, hvorfor afgørelsen blev truffet ved kendelse.

EF-domstolen henviste til to tidligere afgørelser, nemlig dom af 16. september 1999, Fracasso og Leitschutz, vedrørende Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, og dom af 18. juni 2002, HI Hospital Ingenieure, vedrørende Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet.

EF-domstolen udtalte videre, at der ikke er grund til at fortolke bestemmelser under samme fællesskabsretlige område forskelligt, dvs. at EF-reglerne om udbyderes annullation af udbud er de samme, uanset hvilket udbudsdirektiv udbudet er foretaget under.

(Det fremgår, at dette i hvert fald gælder for udbud under Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, Indkøbsdirektivet og Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, og det gælder formentlig også for udbud under Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet.)

EF-domstolens beskrivelse af reglerne om udbyderes annullation af udbud er i det væsentligste indeholdt i domstolens henvisning til de to omtalte tidligere domme. Beskrivelsen kan sammenfattes således:

Udbydernes annullation af udbud er ikke reguleret i udbudsdirektiverne, men er undergivet fællesskabsrettens grundlæggende principper, dvs. principperne om etableringsfrihed, fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser, ligebehandling, gennemsigtighed og forbud mod forskelsbehandling på grundlag af nationalitet. Det er ikke en betingelse, at en annullation kun sker i undtagelsestilfælde eller har vægtige grunde.

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter det omformulerede spørgsmål med, at en udbyder kan annullere et udbud som omhandlet i spørgsmålet, forudsat at udbyderen ved sin beslutning om annullationen overholder fællesskabsrettens grundlæggende principper, såsom ligebehandlingsprincippet.

4. december 2003, sag C-448/01, EVN og Wienstrom

Levering af energi fra vedvarende energikilder kan anvendes som underkriterium og kan vægtes højt, men udbyderen skal kunne kontrollere kriteriets opfyldelse, og kriteriet skal angå kontraktens genstand. En udbyder skal annullere udbudet, hvis et klageorgan har annulleret et underkriterium som ulovligt

Sagen angik et udbud af levering af elektricitet, og det fremgår, at udbyderen ønskede, at der i videst muligt omfang skulle leveres strøm fra vedvarende energikilder, dvs. vandkraft m.m. Dommen synes ikke at indeholde en egentlig forklaring på, hvorfor dette ønske fandt udtryk på den måde, der beskrives nedenfor.

Den østrigske stat udbød som offentligt udbud i henhold til Indkøbsdirektivet en rammekontrakt vedrørende levering af elektricitet i en periode på to år til alle offentlige bygninger i et nærmere angivet område. Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud på grundlag af følgende underkriterier: Pris, der ville blive vægtet 55%, og energi fra vedvarende energikilder, der ville blive vægtet 45%.

I udbudsbetingelserne anførtes: Udbyderen var bekendt med, at en forsyningsvirksomhed af tekniske grunde ikke kan garantere, at strøm til en bestemt aftager hidrører fra vedvarende energikilder, men kun virksomheder, der i de foregående to år havde rådet, eller i de kommende to år ville råde, over energi fra vedvarende energikilder svarende til det forventede udbudte forbrug, ville komme i betragtning.

Det anførtes desuden bl.a., at der med hensyn til underkriteriet om energi fra vedvarende energikilder kun ville blive taget hensyn til den elektricitetsmængde fra sådanne kilder, som tilbudsgiveren var i stand til at levere ud over det forventede udbudte forbrug. Dette var efter det oplyste begrundet i et ønske om forsyningssikkerhed.

En tilbudsgiver, der ikke fik tildelt kontrakten, klagede til et østrigsk klageorgan (Bundesvergabeamt), som stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen.

EF-domstolen tog stilling til sagen således (Klagenævnets litrering, omformuleret og stærkt sammentrængt af overskuelighedsgrunde):

1) Kan et kriterium om energi fra vedvarende energikilder anvendes som underkriterium til tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud?

Besvaret bekræftende med formulering svarende til formuleringen vedrørende miljøkriterier i EF-domstolens dom af 17. september 2002, Concordia Bus Finland, til hvilken der også henvistes.

(Dvs. at der kan tages hensyn til miljøkriterier, der er forbundet med kontraktens genstand, som ikke tillægger udbyderen et ubetinget frit valg, som er nævnt udtrykkeligt i udbudet, og som overholder fællesskabsrettens grundlæggende principper.)

2) Er det tilladeligt at vægte et underkriterium om energi fra vedvarende energikilder så højt som 45%?

Besvaret med, at dette er tilladeligt. Herved bl.a. henvist til, at fællesskabet tillægger det stor vægt, at de vedvarende energikilders andel i elektricitetsproduktionen forøges, jf. direktiv 2001/77 om fremme af elektricitet produceret fra vedvarende energikilder.

3) Er det tilladeligt at bruge et underkriterium om energi fra vedvarende energikilder, når udbyderen ikke kan kontrollere underkriteriets opfyldelse (hvilket udbyderen i den konkrete sag som nævnt havde erklæret at være ude af stand til)?

Besvaret med, at dette ikke er tilladeligt. Herved udtalt, at en objektiv og gennemsigtig vurdering af tilbudene forudsætter, at udbyderen faktisk er i stand til at vurdere, om tilbudene opfylder underkriterierne. Et underkriterium, hvortil der ikke er knyttet krav, der gør det muligt at foretage en effektiv kontrol med nøjagtigheden af de tilbudsgivernes oplysninger, er derfor i strid med de fællesskabsretlige regler for offentlige kontrakter.

Det østrigske klageorgan havde henvist til, at udbyderen ikke havde krævet redegørelser for tilbudsgivernes leveringsforpligtelser og kontrakter om elektricitetsforsyning. Dette sigtede øjensynlig til, at udbyderen ved at kræve sådanne redegørelser kunne have opnået en vis kontrol med hensyn til tilbudsgivernes opfyldelse af kravet om rådighed over strøm fra vedvarende energikilder, og i hvilket omfang tilbudsgiverne kunne levere sådan strøm. EF-domstolen omtalte ikke emnet i sin begrundelse.

4) Var det tilladeligt, at udbyderen ikke havde fastsat et bestemt tidspunkt, på hvilket kravet om rådighed over strøm fra vedvarende energikilder skulle være opfyldt?

(Idet dette krav tilsyneladende kunne opfyldes ved en sådan rådighed på et eller andet tidspunkt i de foregående eller kommende to år)

Besvaret med, at forholdet kunne være en tilsidesættelse af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed, hvis forholdet gjorde det vanskeligt eller umuligt for tilbudsgiverne at kende den nøjagtige rækkevidde af det omhandlede krav og at fortolke det på samme måde. Det tilkom det østrigske klageorgan at vurdere spørgsmålet.

5) Var det tilladeligt, at vurderingen med hensyn til tilbudenes opfyldelse af underkriteriet om energi fra vedvarende energikilder skulle angå den elektricitetsmængde, der oversteg det forventede forbrug i henhold til udbudet, i stedet for den elektricitet, der kunne leveres i henhold til dette?

Besvaret med at dette ikke var tilladeligt. Bl.a. udtalt, at underkriteriet som følge af forholdet ikke kunne anses for at være forbundet med kontraktens genstand, og at underkriteriet derfor kunne medføre en uberettiget forskelsbehandling af tilbudsgiverne.

6) Er første kontroldirektiv til hinder for en national regel, hvorefter et klageorgans annullation af en ulovlig beslutning er betinget af, at den ulovlige beslutning har haft væsentlig betydning for udbudsprocedurens udfald?

(Spørgsmålet sigtede til, at den østrigske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter indeholder en sådan regel.)

Henvist til, at det østrigske klageorgan ikke havde givet nogen forklaring med hensyn til, om spørgsmålets besvarelse var nødvendig for afgørelsen af den foreliggende tvist. Spørgsmålet måtte derfor anses for hypotetisk, hvorfor det ikke kunne antages til realitetsbehandling,

7) Medfører EU-reglerne om offentlige kontrakter pligt for en ordregivende myndighed til at annullere et udbud, når et klageorgan har statueret, at et af de fastsatte underkriterier er ulovligt og derfor har annulleret udbyderens beslutning om at anvende underkriteriet?

Besvaret med, at EU-reglerne medfører en sådan pligt. Herved udtalt, at hvis et klageorgan annullerer en beslutning vedrørende et underkriterium, kan den ordregivende myndighed ikke fortsætte udbudsproceduren og se bort fra underkriteriet, idet dette ville være det samme som at ændre underkriterierne.

Dette spørgsmål skulle tilsyneladende ses på baggrund af, at den østrigske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter indeholder en regel, hvorefter et klageorgan ikke kan annullere udbyderens beslutninger, når kontrakten er tildelt.

Den nærmere rækkevidde af besvarelsen forekommer usikker, men det er muligt, at besvarelsen kan fortolkes således: En ordregiver har pligt til at annullere et udbud i alle tilfælde, hvor ordregiveren bliver opmærksom på en ulovlighed ved udbudet.

Retten i Første Instans' kendelse af 14. januar 2004 i sag T-202/02, Makedoniko Metro og Michaniki mod Kommissionen

Et erstatningskrav mod Kommissionen i anledning af henlæggelse af en klage afvist. Desuden afvist en påstand om pålæg til Kommissionen

Kendelsen angår samme udbud som EF-domstolens dom af 23. januar 2003 i sag C-57/01, Makedoniko Metro og Michaniki.

Der var tale om et græsk udbud vedrørende projektering og opførelse m.m. af en metro. Der indkom tilbud fra nogle konsortier, herunder fra et konsortium M. Udbyderen indledte forhandlinger med M, men afbrød senere forhandlingerne. M klagede til et græsk klageorgan, der imidlertid afviste sagen med henvisning til, at der var sket ændringer i M's sammensætning efter indgivelsen af M's tilbud.

M appellerede til en overinstans, der forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen. Ved dommen af 23. januar 2003 udtalte EF-domstolen bl.a., at det dagældende bygge- og anlægsdirektiv ikke var til hinder for nationale regler, der forbyder ændring i en tilbudsgivers sammensætning efter tilbuddets indgivelse.

Sideløbende med klagen til de græske klagemyndigheder havde M klaget til Kommissionen, der efter at have indhentet forskellige oplysninger m.m. besluttede ikke at foretage sig videre.

M anlagde derefter sag mod Kommissionen ved Retten i Første Instans, dels med påstand om erstatning som følge af Kommissionens beslutning om ikke at foretage sig videre i anledning af M's klage, dels med påstand om, at Retten skulle pålægge Kommissionen at sende en note til alle sine tjenestegrene med henblik på at genoprette M's navn og ære.

Rettens kendelse af 14. januar 2004 afviste begge M's påstande og dermed sagen i sin helhed.

Med hensyn til erstatningspåstanden henviste Retten til, at Kommissionen ikke er forpligtet til at indlede en traktatbrudsprocedure, hvorfor Fællesskabet ikke kan blive erstatningsansvarligt for Kommissionens undladelse af at indlede en sådan procedure (præmis 43). Retten henviste videre til, at Kommissionen ikke har pligt til at iværksætte den særlige procedure i § 3 i 1. kontroldirektiv (hvorefter Kommissionen kan henvende sig til en medlemsstat m.m. i anledning af overtrædelser af udbudsreglerne, præmis 50).

Med hensyn til påstanden om et pålæg til Kommissionen om at genoprette M's navn og ære henviste Retten til, at Fællesskabets Retsinstanser ikke kan påbyde en fællesskabsinstitution at træffe foranstaltninger (præmis 53).

12. februar 2004, sag C-230/02, Grossmann Air Service

Der er klageadgang for potentielle tilbudsgivere, men klager fra sådanne over diskriminerende udbudsbetingelser skal indgives straks og må ikke afvente udbudets afslutning. Der må ikke stilles krav om inddragelse af et mæglingsorgan før en klage

Det østrigske finansministerium foretog i juli 1998 et udbud af charterflyvning for regeringen og dens delegationer. Udbudet synes at være foretaget som EU-udbud, men det fremgår ikke, i henhold til hvilket direktiv udbudet skete, og om udbudet var begrænset eller offentligt.

En virksomhed, Grossmann, indhentede udbudsbetingelserne, men afgav ikke tilbud.

I begyndelsen af oktober 1998 gav udbyderen Grossmann underretning om, at man ville tildele kontrakten til en nærmere angivet tilbudsgiver, og udbyderen må i forbindelse hermed have givet den valgte tilbudsgiver underretning om tildelingen.

Nogle uger senere klagede Grossmann til et klageorgan, Bundesvergabeamt. Efter det foreliggende gjorde Grossmann over for klageorganet gældende, at udbudsbetingelserne indeholdt nogle diskriminerende krav, dvs. krav, som kun den valgte tilbudsgiver kunne opfylde.

I januar 1999 afviste Bundesvergabeamt klagen med henvisning til a) at Grossmann ikke havde retlig interesse i at klage, idet Grossmann ikke kunne levere alle de udbudte ydelser, b) at Grossmann ikke havde afgivet tilbud og c) at Bundesvergabeamt ikke havde kompetence til at annullere en indgået kontrakt. Afgørelsen blev truffet med henvisning til nogle regler i den østrigske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter.

I december 2001 ophævede den østrigske forfatningsdomstol Bundesvergabeamts afgørelse med den begrundelse, at Bundesvergabeamt ikke havde forelagt sagen for EF-domstolen til afklaring af, om Bundesvergabeamts fortolkning af en af de omtalte regler i den østrigske lovgivning var forenelig med EU-retten.

Sagen verserede herefter igen for Bundesvergabeamt, der i maj 2002 forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen med nogle spørgsmål. EF-domstolen omformulerede spørgsmålene og udtalte herefter (af forståelsesgrunde stærkt sammentrængt og til dels omformuleret):

1) Første kontroldirektiv er ikke til hinder for at afvise en klage over et udbud fra en virksomhed, der ikke har afgivet tilbud, fordi man fandt udbudsbetingelserne diskriminerende, men som ikke har klaget over udbudsbetingelserne før kontraktens tildeling.

2) Første kontroldirektiv er derimod til hinder for at afskære en klage med den begrundelse, at klageren ikke har indbragt sagen for et mæglingsorgan.

Det synes at fremgå, at udtalelsen under punkt 1) skal forstås således:

Det forhold, at en klager ikke har afgivet tilbud i henhold til det udbud, der klages over, kan ikke i sig selv begrunde afvisning af klagen. Tværtimod kan der være klageadgang for en virksomhed, der har afstået fra at afgive tilbud som følge af diskriminerende vilkår i udbudsbetingelserne. (Præmis 29.)

Derimod er det i overensstemmelse med første kontroldirektiv at afvise en klage fra en sådan virksomhed, hvis klagen først er indgivet efter meddelelsen om kontraktens tildeling, idet en sådan afvisning ikke kan skade den effektive virkning af første kontroldirektiv. Tværtimod strider det mod første kontroldirektivs formål om hurtighed og effektivitet, at en sådan virksomhed først indgiver klage efter meddelelsen om kontraktens tildeling. (Præmis 37-39.)

Udtalelsen under punkt 2) svarer ganske til den tilsvarende udtalelse i EF-domstolens dom af 19. juni 2003 i sagen Fritsch, Chiari & Partner mfl., til hvilken der også henvises i den her resumerede dom.

18. marts 2004, C-314/01, Siemens og ARGE Telekom & Partner

Ordregiver må i opfyldelsesfasen begrænse brugen af underentreprenører, hvis formåen ikke har kunnet efterprøves i udvælgelsesfasen

En østrigsk myndighed foretog i september 1999 et begrænset udbud i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet vedrørende etablering af et landsdækkende edb-system baseret på chipkort. Der er tilsyneladende tale om et system for personoplysninger i stil med fx det danske system for sygesikringskort.

I udbudsbetingelserne var angivet, at underentreprise var tilladt for indtil 30% af arbejderne under forudsætning af, at tilbudsgiveren beholdt visse centrale dele af ydelsen.

Der indkom tilbud fra fire prækvalificerede tilbudsgivere, hvorefter udbyderen i december 2000 tilkendegav, at man ville indgå kontrakt med en af tilbudsgiverne.

Der foregik herefter en klagesag for et klageorgan, Bundesvergabeamt. Klagesagen havde et kompliceret forløb.

Først klagede de tre tilbudsgivere, der ikke havde fået tildelt kontrakten, til Bundesvergabeamt med påstand om annullation af tildelingsbeslutningen, subsidiært om annullation af udbudet.

Den 19. marts 2001 afviste Bundesvergabeamt klagen med begrundelse, at klagerne som følge af forskellige forhold ikke havde retlig interesse i at klage.

Den 28. og 29. marts 2001 klagede to af de tre tilbudsgivere til Bundesvergabeamt med påstand om annullation af en beslutning fra udbyderen om ikke at tilbagekalde udbudet m.m. Bundesvergabeamt tillagde den nye klage opsættende virkning, idet Bundesvergabeamt pålagde udbyderen ikke at indgå kontrakt indtil 20. april 2001. Den 20. april 2001 annullerede Bundesvergabeamts udbyderens beslutning om ikke at tilbagekalde udbudet.

Desuagtet indgik udbyderen den 23. april 2001 kontrakt med den valgte tilbudsgiver bl.a. med henvisning til, at Bundesvergabeamts afgørelse af 20. april 2001 ikke var retligt bindende, fordi afgørelsen var vanskeligt forståelig. Udbyderen indbragte endvidere afgørelsen af 20. april 2001 for den østrigske forfatningsdomstol.

Den 30. april 2001 klagede en af tilbudsgiverne til Bundesvergabeamt over forskellige beslutninger truffet af udbyderen, og den 17. maj 2001 indgav en anden af tilbudsgiverne en lignende klage til Bundesvergabeamt.

Den 12. juni 2001 ophævede forfatningsdomstolen Bundesvergabeamts afgørelse af 19. marts 2001 om afvisning af den oprindelige klage. Forfatningsdomstolen henviste herved til, at Bundesvergabeamt burde have forelagt sagen for EF-domstolen. Den 2. marts 2002 ophævede forfatningsdomstolen Bundesvergabeamts afgørelse af 20. april 2001 med henvisning til, at afgørelsen gik ud på en logisk umulighed.

Sagen verserede herefter igen for Bundesvergabeamt, der ved kendelse af 11. juli 2001 stillede fire spørgsmål til EF-domstolen, som tog stilling til spørgsmålene ved den her resumerede dom.

EF-domstolen afviste tre af spørgsmålene som hypotetiske, men besvarede det fjerde spørgsmål. Dette spørgsmål kan meget kort gengives således:

Skal en kontrakt, der er tildelt i henhold til et EU-udbud, anses for ugyldig, hvis udbudsbetingelserne indeholdt en bestemmelse, der strider mod EU-retten, og hvis ulovlige kontrakter er ugyldige efter national ret?

Forståelsen af spørgsmålet forudsætter lidt forklaring.

a) Omtalen af en bestemmelse, der strider mod EU-retten, sigtede til udbudsbetingelsernes klausul om, at underentreprise (kun) var tilladt for 30 % af arbejderne og under forudsætning af, at tilbudsgiveren beholdt visse centrale dele af ydelsen.

Bundesvergabeamt anså øjensynlig denne klausul for at være i strid med EF-domstolens dom af 2. december 1999 i sagen Holst Italia. I henhold til denne dom kan der ved udbud i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet som dokumentation for egnethed henvises til ressourcer hos andre under forudsætning af, at der virkelig rådes over disse ressourcer. En lignende afgørelse med hensyn til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet er dom af 18. december 1997, Ballast Nedam Groep.

b) At spørgsmålet gik ud på, om en kontrakt som omhandlet skal anses for »ugyldig«, sigtede til en regel i den østrigske lovgivning, hvorefter aftaler, der strider mod lov og ærbarhed, er ugyldige.

I sammenhængen bemærkes, at Dansk ret indeholder en lignende regel, jf. herved Danske Lovs 5-1-2. Ingen har vist i Danmark har gjort gældende, at kontrakter indgået i strid med EU's udbudsregler skulle være ugyldige som følge heraf.

EF-domstolen udtalte (stærkt sammentrængt):

Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet er ikke til hinder for begrænsning i brugen af underentreprise, når den ordregivende myndighed ikke har været i stand til at efterprøve underentreprenørernes formåen i forbindelse med vurderingen af tilbudene og valget af tilbudsgiver, præmis 45 og 46. Den omhandlede klausul i udbudsbetingelserne angik imidlertid ikke udvælgelses- og vurderingsfasen. Klausulen angik derimod den fase, hvor kontrakten skulle opfyldes, og klausulen tilsigtede at undgå, at centrale dele af arbejdet blev udført af enheder, hvis formåen udbyderen ikke havde kunnet efterprøve ved udvælgelsen, præmis 47. Det tilkom Bundesvergabeamt at efterprøve, om dette forholdt sig således, samme præmis.

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter Bundesvergabeamts spørgsmål således (stærkt sammentrængt): 1. kontroldirektiv medfører pligt for medlemsstaterne til at give mulighed for, at der kan klages over udbudsbetingelser, som er i strid med EU's udbudsregler.

24. juni 2004, sag C-212/02, Kommissionen mod Østrig

Det følger af kontroldirektiverne, at alle tilbudsgivere skal have underretning om tildelingsbeslutningen, og at der derefter skal gå rimelig tid inden kontraktsindgåelsen

Sagen var anlagt af Kommissionen med påstand om, at EF-domstolen skulle konstatere, at Østrig ikke havde overholdt sine forpligtelser i henhold til kontroldirektiverne som følge af, at den østrigske lovgivning ikke i alle tilfælde åbnede mulighed for forbigåede tilbudsgivere for at få udbyderens tildelingsbeslutning annulleret.

Det fremgår, at de østrigske klageorganer ikke har kompetence til at annullere udbyderens beslutning om at indgå kontrakt med den valgte tilbudsgiver, når kontrakten først er indgået. Kommissionen henviste til, at efter østrigsk lovgivning faldt tildelingsbeslutningen endvidere sammen med kontraktsindgåelsen, ligesom almindeligvis kun den valgte tilbudsgiver fik underretning om tildelingsbeslutningen. Disse forhold førte ifølge Kommissionen til, at forbigåede tilbudsgivere i visse tilfælde var afskåret fra at opnå annullation af udbyderens tildelingsbeslutning.

Kommissionen fik medhold. EF-domstolen udtalte bl.a. (en del sammentrængt): Af kontroldirektiverne følger, at alle tilbudsgivere skal have underretning om tildelingsbeslutningen før kontraktsindgåelsen, og at der skal gå en rimelig tid mellem denne underretning og kontraktsindgåelsen (præmisserne 21 og 23).

Det synes at fremgå af dommen, at de østrigske regler er blevet ændret i overensstemmelse med Kommissionens synspunkter, men at dette er sket efter udløbet af en frist, der var fastsat af Kommissionen i dennes begrundede udtalelse, hvorfor der ikke kunne tages hensyn til det (præmis 27-28).

Retten i Første Instans' kendelse af 27. juli 2004 i sag T-148/04 R, TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium mod Kommissionen

Det er en betingelse for opsættende virkning, at der foreligger uopsættelighed. Denne betingelse forudsætter, at manglende opsættende virkning medfører et alvorligt og uopretteligt tab hos den, der har fremsat begæringen om opsættende virkning, og dette vil i princippet ikke være tilfældet, hvis der kan betales erstatning. I den foreliggende sag var betingelsen kun opfyldt, hvis manglende opsættende virkning ville true sagsøgerens eksistens, hvilket imidlertid ikke var tilfældet

Kendelsen angår spørgsmålet om opsættende virkning i den sag, der blev afgjort ved Rettens dom af 6. juli 2005 i sag T-148/04. Sagen var anlagt af en tilbudsgiver, der ikke havde fået tildelt kontrakten i henhold til et udbud. Med hensyn sagens faktum henvises til Klagenævnets resumé af dommen af 6. juli 2005.

Ved kendelsen af 27. juli 2004 bestemte Retten, at sagsanlægget ikke skulle have opsættende virkning, Retten begrundede denne afgørelse med, at det bl.a. er en betingelse for opsættende virkning, at der foreligger uopsættelighed, og at denne betingelse ikke var opfyldt.

Retten udtalte herunder om kravene til at anse betingelsen om uopsættelighed for opfyldt: Den part, der har fremsat begæring om opsættende virkning, skal udsættes for et alvorligt og uopretteligt tab, hvis der ikke gives opsættende virkning (præmis 41), og en økonomisk skade kan i princippet ikke betragtes som uoprettelig eller blot vanskeligt oprettelig, hvis der senere kan betales erstatning (præmis 43). I den foreliggende sag var begæringen om opsættende virkning kun tilstrækkeligt begrundet, hvis manglende opsættende virkning ville true sagsøgerens eksistens (præmis 46), men noget sådant var ikke oplyst (præmis 48 og følgende). En ikke-økonomisk skade vedrørende sit renommé, som sagsøgeren havde påberåbt sig, kunne heller ikke begrunde opsættende virkning (præmis 54-55).

9. september 2004, sag C-125/03, Kommissionen mod Tyskland

Tyskland havde overtrådt Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet som følge af manglende EU-udbud. EF-domstolen behandler en sag om en medlemsstats overtrædelse af fællesskabsretten, selvom medlemsstaten har erkendt overtrædelsen

Sagen drejede sig om nogle kontrakter om afhentning af affald, indgået af nogle tyske kommuner.

De pågældende kontrakter var indgået uden EU-udbud, og Tyskland erkendte, at dette var en overtrædelse af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet. Sagen drejede sig kun, om hvorvidt EF-domstolen skulle tage spørgsmålet under realitetsbehandling.

Kontrakterne havde løbet til den 31. december 2003, dvs. længe efter udløbet af den frist for at bringe overtrædelserne til ophør, som Kommissionen havde fastsat i sin begrundede udtalelse. Det synes at fremgå, at der ikke havde været hjemmel efter tysk ret til at bringe kontrakterne til ophør på et tidligere tidspunkt, således at den eneste mulige sanktion i anledning af overtrædelsen af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet var erstatningsansvar for de pågældende kommuner.

Tyskland havde over for Kommissionen erkendt, at kontrakterne var indgået i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, og Tyskland havde over for Kommissionen givet tilsagn om, at det ville blive sikret, at tilsvarende overtrædelser ikke fandt sted i fremtiden. Tyskland gjorde gældende, at disse tilkendegivelser var tilstrækkelig overholdelse af de krav, som Kommissionen havde stillet til Tyskland i sin begrundede udtalelse, således at der ikke forelå en overtrædelse, som EF-domstolen skulle tage stilling til.

EF-domstolen udtalte (temmelig sammentrængt):

Første kontroldirektiv giver medlemsstaterne mulighed for at begrænse sanktionen for overtrædelse af udbudsreglerne til erstatningsansvar, når kontrakten er indgået. Dette er imidlertid ikke ensbetydende med, at offentlige ordregivere under alle omstændigheder skal anses for at have handlet i overensstemmelse med fællesskabsretten (præmis 15). Endvidere afskar det ikke EF-domstolen fra at behandle sagen, at Tyskland havde erkendt overtrædelsen. I modsat fald kunne medlemsstaterne blot ved at erkende en overtrædelse afskære EF-domstolen fra at tage stilling til overtrædelsen og fastslå dens grundlag (præmis 16).

Tyskland fik herefter ikke medhold i sit anbringende om, at EF-domstolen ikke skulle tage sagen under realitetsbehandling, og EF-domstolen statuerede, at Tyskland havde overtrådt Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ved, at de omtalte kontrakter ikke var indgået i overensstemmelse med direktivet.

14. september 2004, sag C-385/02, Kommissionen mod Italien

Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet overtrådt som følge af manglende EU-udbud. Betingelserne for udbud efter forhandling i artikel 7, stk. 3, var ikke opfyldt. En særlig formulering i den italienske version af direktivet var uden betydning

En italiensk ordregivende myndighed indgik uden EU-udbud kontrakter om opstemning og vandstandsregulering af nogle bjergfloder. Kommissionen anlagde sag mod Italien ved EF-domstolen og gjorde gældende, at de omtalte kontrakter skulle have været udbudt i medfør af Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet.

Italien gjorde gældende, at der ikke var udbudspligt, fordi kontrakterne var omfattet af Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 7, stk. 3, hvorefter der i forskellige tilfælde kan indgås bygge- og anlægskontrakter efter forhandling uden forudgående udbudsbekendtgørelse. Der forelå under sagen spørgsmål, om kontrakterne var omfattet af følgende bestemmelser i artikel 7, stk. 3 (referatet nedenfor af EF-domstolens udtalelser er stærkt sammentrængt):

Litra b) bl.a. om arbejder, der af tekniske årsager kun kan overdrages til en bestemt entreprenør: EF-domstolen udtalte, at det var Italien, der skulle bevise, at der var tale om et sådant arbejde. Italien havde imidlertid kun påberåbt sig forholdet i generelle vendinger og var ikke fremkommet med en detaljeret redegørelse. Bestemmelsen kunne herefter ikke finde anvendelse.

Litra c) om tilfælde af tvingende nødvendighed, der under ingen omstændigheder må kunne tilskrives den ordregivende myndighed: EF-domstolen udtalte, at bestemmelsens betingelser ikke var opfyldt, og henviste desuden bl.a. til, at nogle påberåbte forhold skyldtes ordregiverens egen planlægning.

Litra e) om arbejder, der er en gentagelse af tilsvarende arbejder, dog kun på visse betingelser, herunder at bestemmelsen kun kan benyttes in-den for tre år efter indgåelsen af den oprindelige kontrakt: EF-domstolen udtalte, at bestemmelsen ikke fandt anvendelse som følge af, at treårsfristen var overskredet.

Italien gjorde på dette punkt gældende, at artikel 7, stk. 3, e) skal forstås således, at treårs-fristen løber fra færdiggørelsen af arbejdet i henhold til den oprindelige kontrakt. Italien byggede dette anbringende på den italienske version af Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet.

EF-domstolen gennemgik de danske, engelske, spanske og portugisiske versioner af direktivet og konstaterede herefter, at artikel 7, stk. 3, e) går ud på, at treårs-fristen løber fra indgåelsen af den oprindelige kontrakt. EF-domstolen henviste herved til, at der er tale om en undtagelsesbestemmelse, som skal fortolkes snævert. EF-domstolen henviste videre til, at det følger af retssikkerhedshensyn, at treårs-fristens begyndelsestidspunkt skal kunne fastlægges med sikkerhed og på objektiv måde. Det var uden betydning, om der havde været tale om en undskyldelig retsvildfarelse som følge af den italienske udformning af bestemmelsen.

14. oktober 2004 i sag C-340/02, Kommissionen mod Frankrig

Det følger af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed, at et udbud klart skal definere kontraktens art og kriterierne for tildeling af den. Der kunne ikke indgås kontrakt om projektering m.m. på grundlag af en projektkonkurrence om analyse. Bistand ved valg af tilbudsgiver er ikke omfattet af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets regler om projektkonkurrencer

En fransk ordregivende myndighed skulle ombygge et rensningsanlæg for at få det til at opfylde nogle europæiske miljønormer. Arbejdet med projektering og udførelse af ombygningen blev opdelt tre faser, nemlig:

1. fase: Analyse af, hvad der skulle gøres.

2. fase: Detailprojektering med konsekvensanalyse og bistand ved udvælgelsen af tilbudsgivere til arbejdets udførelse.

3: fase: Indhentelse af tilbud på arbejdets udførelse og udførelse af arbejdet.

Den ordregivende myndighed afholdt en projektkonkurrence vedrørende 1. fase efter EU-udbud herom, hvorefter myndigheden tildelte opgaven i henhold til 2. fase til vinderen af projektkonkurrencen. Der blev derefter foretaget et EU-udbud vedrørende 3. fase.

Under sagen gjorde Kommissionen gældende, at opgaven i henhold til 2. fase skulle have været udbudt særskilt i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet.

Frankrig gjorde heroverfor gældende (Klagenævnets litrering):

1. Udbud af opgaven i henhold til 2. fase havde ikke været nødvendig, fordi det i udbudet af projektkonkurrencen om 1. fase var anført, at vinderen af projektkonkurrencen kunne anmodes om at medvirke ved gennemførelsen af sit forslag som led i den kontrakt, der skulle indgås om opgaven i 2. fase.

2. Der kunne indgås kontrakt om 2. fase uden forudgående udbudsbekendtgørelse i medfør af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 11, stk. 3, litra c. (I henhold til denne bestemmelse kan der indgås aftale uden forudgående udbudsbekendtgørelse, når aftalen er et led i en projektkonkurrence, i hvis vilkår det er fastsat, at kontrakt skal indgås med vinderen.)

Frankrig fik ikke medhold.

Ad Frankrigs første anbringende udtalte EF-domstolen: Ligebehandlingsprincippet i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 3, stk. 2, og gennemsigtighedsprincippet kræver, at enhver kontrakts genstand og kriterierne for tildeling af den defineres klart. Dette er nødvendigt for vurderingen af, hvilken af de i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet fastsatte fremgangsmåder, der skal følges. Den blotte mulighed for tildeling af en kontrakt på grundlag af tildelingskriterier for en anden kontrakt er ikke tilstrækkelig (præmis 34-36).

Ad Frankrigs andet anbringende udtalte EF-domstolen: Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 11, stk. 3, litra c, er en undtagelse fra et grundlæggende traktatprincip og må derfor fortolkes snævert. I hvert fald den del af opgaven i henhold til 2. fase, der gik ud på bistand ved udvælgelse af tilbudsgivere, var ikke et planlægnings- eller projekteringsarbejde, der er omfattet af definitionen af projektkonkurrencer i direktivets artikel 1, litra g. Endvidere må artikel 11, stk. 3, litra c, forstås sådan, at bestemmelsen kun omhandler tilfælde, hvor der er en direkte funktionel sammenhæng mellem projektkonkurrencen og den aftale, der indgås på grundlag af den, idet aftalen i henhold til bestemmelsen skal være »et led« i projektkonkurrencen. Opgaven i henhold til 2. fase havde imidlertid ikke været et led i projektkonkurrencen, idet denne kun havde angået 1. fase. Hertil kom: Betingelsen i artikel 11, stk. 3, litra c, om at det skal være fastsat i projektkonkurrencens vilkår, at aftale skal indgås med vinderen, var ikke opfyldt, idet det i vilkårene for projektkonkurrencen kun var angivet, at vinderen kunne anmodes om at medvirke i 2. fase. Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 11, stk. 3, litra c, fandt herefter ikke anvendelse (præmis 37-43).

Klagenævnet har i flere kendelser udtalt, at et EU-udbud skal indeholde en klar og præcis angivelse af, hvad der udbydes, eller en lignende formulering. Dette er i god overensstemmelse med EF-domstolens udtalelser ad Frankrig første anbringende.

En formel indsigelse, i hvilken Frankrig ikke fik medhold, er ikke omtalt i referatet ovenfor.

14. oktober 2004, sag C-275/03, Kommissionen mod Portugal

Den portugisiske lovgivning om offentlige myndigheders erstatningsansvar var i strid med første kontroldirektiv

Denne sag var indbragt af Kommissionen, fordi Portugal efter Kommissionens opfattelse ikke havde implementeret første kontroldirektiv fyldestgørende på grund af følgende: Efter den portugisiske lovgivning om offentlige myndigheders ansvar er det en betingelse for at få en offentlig myndighed pålagt erstatningsansvar, at den erstatningssøgende beviser, at den offentlige myndighed har handlet groft uagtsomt (»fautivement«) eller forsætligt.

Kommissionen gjorde gældende, at den omtalte regel i den portugisiske lovgivning er i strid med artikel 2 c) i første kontroldirektiv, hvorefter medlemsstaterne skal påse, at der er mulighed for at tilkende skadelidte personer skadeserstatning, og at reglen desuden er i strid med artikel 1, stk. 1, hvorefter medlemsstaterne skal sikre, at der kan indgives klage effektivt og navnlig så hurtigt som muligt. Kommissionen anførte herved, at det som følge af reglen er meget vanskeligt eller umuligt at få pålagt en offentlig ordregiver erstatningsansvar, og at det kan tage lang tid.

EF-domstolen tiltrådte Kommissionens synspunkter, og Kommissionen fik således medhold.

Portugal havde fremsat forskellige anbringender, bl.a. at reglen ikke håndhæves strengt i retspraksis, og at det kun skyldtes nærmere angivne indenrigspolitiske forhold, at en planlagt indførelse af en formodning for fejl ikke var gennemført.

EF-domstolen henviste heroverfor til, at det af hensyn til retssikkerheden er nødvendigt, at retsstillingen er klar og præcis. EF-domstolen henviste videre til, at bestemmelsen om, at det påhviler skadelidte at bevise, at der er handlet groft uagtsomt eller forsætligt, ikke var ophævet ved udløbet af den frist, der var fastsat i Kommissionens begrundede udtalelse. Domstolen henviste desuden til sin praksis, hvorefter en medlemsstat ikke kan påberåbe sig forhold i sin nationale retsorden som begrundelse for tilsidesættelse af forpligtelser i henhold til et direktiv.

Retten i Første Instans' kendelse af 10. november 2004 i sag T-303/04 R, Evropaïki Dynamiki mod Kommissionen

Det er en betingelse for opsættende virkning, at der foreligger uopsættelighed. Dette forudsætter, at den begærende part ville lide et uopretteligt tab, hvis der ikke meddeles opsættende virkning, hvilket ikke er tilfældet, hvis der senere kan betales erstatning. I den foreliggende sag var betingelsen om uopsættelighed kun opfyldt, hvis manglende opsættende virkning ville true klagerens eksistens eller ændre klagerens markedsposition uopretteligt, og dette var ikke tilfældet. Der var endvidere ikke årsagsforbindelse mellem det af klageren hævdede tab og den beslutning, som klageren ønskede udsat ved begæringen om opsættende virkning

Kommissionen iværksatte i 2001 et udbud vedrørende it-ydelser. Udbuddet var opdelt i flere delaftaler, herunder delaftale 4, der angik datastyring og informationssystemer, og delaftale 5, der angik internet og intranet. På grundlag af udbuddet indgik Kommissionen kontrakt med et konsortium vedrørende delaftale 4 og kontrakt med et andet konsortium, der omfattede en virksomhed E, vedrørende delaftale 5.

Ydelserne under delaftale 4 viste sig at have et væsentligt større omfang end forudsat, hvorimod ydelserne under delaftale 5 fik et mindre omfang.

I 2003 iværksatte Kommissionen et udbud vedrørende en it-ydelse om data- og informationssystemer, tilsyneladende til afløsning af delaftale 4. Et konsortium, der havde deltagelse af E, afgav tilbud i henhold til det nye udbud, men fik ikke tildelt kontrakten.

E anlagde derefter sag mod Kommissionen ved Retten i Første Instans og begærede sagsanlægget tillagt opsættende virkning, således at Kommissionens indgåelse af kontrakt i henhold til det nye udbud blev udsat. Rettens kendelse af 10. november 2004 angår spørgsmålet om opsættende virkning.

Retten udtalte i kendelsen (sammentrængt og til dels omformuleret gengivet):

Det er bl.a. en betingelse for opsættende virkning, at der foreligger uopsættelighed (præmis 41). Uopsættelighed forudsætter, at den begærende part ville lide et alvorligt og uopretteligt tab, hvis der ikke tillægges opsættende virkning (præmis 65).

Der forelå imidlertid ikke årsagsforbindelse mellem det af E hævdede tab og de dispositioner hos Kommissionen, som E's begæring om opsættende virkning angik. Retten henviste herved til følgende: Det, som E ønskede, var, at Kommissionen i videre omfang end sket ville gøre brug af delaftale 5 i henhold til det oprindelige udbud i stedet for at indgå kontrakt på grundlag af det nye udbud. E havde derimod ikke gjort gældende, at Kommissionens gennemførelse af det nye udbud var behæftet med fejl, og Kommissionen havde tilkendegivet, at den ikke ville gøre brug af delaftale 5 i stedet for ydelserne i henhold til det nye udbud. Den opsættende virkning, som E ønskede, ville således ikke have indvirkning på Kommissionens brug af delaftale 5. (Præmis 66 og følgende).

Selvom det skulle antages, at der var årsagsforbindelse mellem det af E hævdede tab og Kommissionens indgåelse af kontrakt i henhold til det nye udbud, var betingelsen om uopsættelighed alligevel ikke opfyldt. Et tab er ikke uopretteligt eller vanskeligt opretteligt, hvis der senere kan betales erstatning, og under de foreliggende omstændigheder ville der kun foreligge uopsættelighed, hvis manglende opsættende virkning ville true E's eksistens eller ændre E's markedsposition på uoprettelig vis (præmis 71 til 73). På grundlag af en gennemgang af E's situation konstaterede Retten herefter, at der ikke var tale om noget sådant (præmis 74 og følgende). Et af E hævdet ikke-økonomisk tab vedrørende E's renommé var ikke en skade som omtalt (præmis 82).

E's begæring om opsættende virkning blev herefter ikke taget til følge.

Efter kendelsen gjorde E over for Retten gældende, at der var fejl i kendelsens gennemgang af E's situation. Dette førte til, at Retten den 22. december 2004 i sag T-303/04 R II afsagde endnu en kendelse om opsættende virkning. Ved denne kendelse blev begæringen om opsættende virkning på ny afslået.

E hævede senere sagen, hvilket bl.a. fremgår af Rettens kendelse af 4. november 2008 i sag T-304/04 DEP.

18. november 2004, sag C-126/03, Kommissionen mod Tyskland

Udbudspligt, eventuelt som hasteprocedure, for en kommunes antagelse af underleverandør til affaldsbortskaffelse, som kommunen udførte for anden myndighed som kommerciel opgave, selvom den anden myndighed havde foretaget EU-udbud. Undtagelsesbestemmelsen i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 11, stk. 3, d, skal fortolkes indskrænkende og kunne ikke anvendes. Ikke taget stilling til, hvordan medlemsstaten skulle gennemføre dommen

Et tysk regionalt aktieselskab foretog efter Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet et udbud af affaldsbortskaffelse i den pågældende region, Donauwald-regionen. En kommune, dvs. München Kommune, afgav tilbud i henhold til udbudet og fik tildelt opgaven i henhold til dette.

München Kommune indgik kontrakt med et renovationsselskab om renovationsselskabets udførelse af opgaven som underleverandør. Denne kontrakt blev indgået uden EU-udbud. Følgende synes at fremgå: Kontrakten mellem kommunen og renovationsselskabet blev indgået efter, at kommunen havde fået tildelt opgaven i henhold til regionens udbud. Renovationsselskabet havde imidlertid afgivet et tilbud til kommunen forinden, og kommunen havde ved sit tilbud til regionen oplyst, at opgaven ville blive udført af renovationsselskabet som underleverandør.

Sagen var anlagt af Kommissionen med påstand om konstatering af, at Tyskland havde overtrådt Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ved, at München Kommune ikke havde foretaget EU-udbud af sin overladelse af opgavens udførelse til et renovationsselskab. Tyskland påstod frifindelse, og det fremgår, at Tyskland til støtte herfor gjorde de anbringender gældende, der nævnes nedenfor.

EF-domstolen afgjorde sagen således:

1) Ad anbringender fra Tyskland dels om, at der ikke var tale om en offentlig aftale som omhandlet i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 1, a, dels om at München Kommune ikke skulle anses for en ordregivende myndighed i henhold til artikel 1, b.

Tyskland henviste til støtte for disse anbringender til, at der var tale om en selvstændig økonomisk virksomhed, der klart var adskilt fra kommunens almennyttige virksomhed og underlagt konkurrence.

Anbringenderne ikke taget til følge navnlig med henvisning til, at lokale myndigheder er ordregivende myndigheder i henhold til direktivets artikel 1, b, og til, at artikel 1, a ikke sondrer mellem opgaver, der tjener til at imødekomme almenhedens behov, og andre opgaver (præmis 18).

2) Ad anbringende fra Tyskland om, at udbud ikke var nødvendigt, fordi regionen havde foretaget EU-udbud af opgaven:

Anbringendet ikke taget til følge med henvisning til, at der var tale om to forskellige aftaler (præmis 19).

3) Ad anbringende fra Tyskland om, at EU-udbud ikke var nødvendigt, fordi der ikke skete anvendelse af Münchens egne midler:

Anbringendet ikke taget til følge med henvisning til, at det omtalte forhold ikke er afgørende for udbudspligten (præmis 20).

4) Ad anbringende fra Tyskland om, at Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ikke fandt anvendelse som følge af undtagelsesbestemmelsen i direktivets artikel 1, a, ii, sammenholdt med Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivets artikel 7. (Ifølge den sidstnævnte bestemmelse gælder Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet under visse betingelser ikke for kontrakter, der indgås med henblik på videresalg eller udlejning til tredjemand).

Anbringendet ikke taget til følge med henvisning til, at Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivets artikel 7 kun gælder for aftaler, der er omfattet af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet, og at den aftale, som sagen angik, ikke var omfattet af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet (præmis 21).

5) Ad anbringende fra Tyskland om, at det ikke have været praktisk muligt at foretage EU-udbud, fordi München Kommune for at bevise sin tekniske formåen skulle meddele navnet på underentreprenøren ved sin afgivelse af tilbud i henhold til regionens udbud:

Anbringendet ikke taget til følge med henvisning til, at kommunen før sin afgivelse af tilbud til regionen kunne have foretaget et hasteudbud i henhold til reglerne herom i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 20 (præmis 22).

6) Ad anbringende fra Tyskland om, at aftalen mellem kommunen og renovationsselskabet kunne være indgået ved udbud efter forhandling uden udbudsbekendtgørelse i medfør af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 11, stk. 3, d. (Efter denne bestemmelse kan der under visse betingelser ske udbud efter forhandling uden udbudsbekendtgørelse, når det ikke er muligt at overholde de almindelige tidsfrister.)

Anbringendet ikke taget til følge. Bl.a. henvist til, at artikel 11, stk. 3, d, er en undtagelsesbestemmelse og derfor må fortolkes indskrænkende, og at bevisbyrden for, at bestemmelsens betingelser er opfyldt, påhviler den, der påberåber sig bestemmelsen. Desuden bl.a. henvist til, at kommunen som nævnt kunne have foretaget et hasteudbud. (Præmis 23).

7) Ad anbringende fra Tyskland om, at der ikke var pligt til at opsige kontrakten med renovationsselskabet, selvom Kommissionen fik medhold i sagen.

EF-domstolen tog ikke stilling til dette anbringende, men henviste blot til, at domstolen ved en traktatbrudsprocedure alene skal tage stilling til, om en fællesskabsbestemmelse er tilsidesat, og at det fremgår af traktatens artikel 228, stk. 1 EF, at den pågældende medlemsstat skal gennemføre de foranstaltninger, der er nødvendige til dommens opfyldelse.

Som det fremgår, blev ingen af Tysklands anbringender taget til følge, og EF-domstolen gav derfor Kommissionen medhold. EF-domstolen konstaterede således, at Tyskland havde overtrådt Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ved, at München Kommunes aftale med renovationsselskabet var indgået uden EU-udbud.

Retten i Første Instans' kendelse af 22. december 2004 i sag T-303/04 R II, Evropaïki Dynamiki mod Kommissionen

Begæring om opsættende virkning på ny afslået

Ved denne kendelse blev en begæring fra en sagsøger om opsættende virkning afslået. Kendelsen er en fortsættelse af Rettens kendelse af 10. november i samme sag, betegnet med journalnummer T-303/04 R, der ligeledes afslog sagsøgerens begæring om opsættende virkning.

Der henvises til resuméet af kendelsen af 10. november 2004, hvor kendelsen af 22. december 2004 også er omtalt.

11. januar 2005, sag C-26/03, Stadt Halle mfl.

Der skal kunne klages over en ordregivende myndigheds beslutning om ikke at foretage EU-udbud. Der er udbudspligt ved en ordregivende myndigheds overladelse af udførelsen af en tjenesteydelse til et selskab, som den ordregivende myndighed ejer sammen med en eller flere private virksomheder

En tysk kommune, Stadt Halle, indgik uden EU-udbud kontrakt med et anpartsselskab, RPL Lochau, om bortskaffelse og behandling af affald. Anpartsselskabet ejes gennem nogle andre selskaber med ca. 75 % af kommunen og ca. 25 % af en privat virksomhed.

En virksomhed, der var interesseret i at få tildelt opgaven, klagede til en klageinstans, Vergabekammer, og nedlagde påstand om, at Stadt Halle skulle tilpligtes at foretage EU-udbud. Stadt Halle påstod klagen afvist med henvisning til den tyske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter, idet denne lovgivning efter Stadt Halles opfattelse kun giver adgang til at klage, hvis der er indledt en formel udbudsprocedure, og således ikke giver adgang til at klage over beslutninger om ikke at foretage udbud. Stadt Halle gjorde desuden gældende, at der som følge af Stadt Halles kontrol over RPL Lochau var tale om en »in house-ydelse«, som ikke er omfattet af de EU-retlige udbudsregler.

Vergabekammer tog klagerens påstand til følge, hvorefter Stadt Halle indbragte sagen for en ankeinstans, Oberlandesgericht Naumburg. Ankeinstansen stillede en række spørgsmål til EF-domstolen. Det fremgår, at baggrunden for forelæggelsen for EF-domstolen var, at det var tvivlsomt, hvorledes den tyske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter skulle forstås med hensyn til de punkter, som Stadt Halles anbringender vedrørte.

EF-domstolen omformulerede de første af spørgsmålene til at gå ud på følgende (af forståelsesgrunde stærkt sammentrængt og delvis omformuleret):

1) Fra hvilket tidspunkt i en anskaffelsesprocedure skal der være klageadgang i henhold til første kontroldirektiv, og er det en betingelse for klageadgangen, at der er iværksat en formel udbudsprocedure?

2) Er der udbudspligt, når en ordregivende myndighed ønsker at overlade en tjenesteydelse til et selskab, som den ordregivende myndighed selv ejer majoriteten af?

EF-domstolen besvarede spørgsmålene således (af forståelsesgrunde omformuleret og stærkt sammentrængt):

Ad spørgsmål 1:

Der er ikke adgang til at klage over interne overvejelser og forberedende handlinger som fx undersøgelse af markedet (præmis 35). I øvrigt må klageadgangen ikke betinges af, at kontraktsproceduren er nået til et bestemt stadium (præmis 38). Der skal således kunne klages over en ordregivende myndigheds beslutning om ikke at foretage EU-udbud, fordi dette efter myndighedens opfattelse ikke er nødvendigt (præmis 36).

Ad spørgsmål 2 (Klagenævnets litrering):

a) Der er ikke udbudspligt for opgaver, som en ordregivende myndighed udfører med sine egne ressourcer og tjenestegrene (præmis 48).

b) Derimod er der som almindelig regel udbudspligt, når en ordregivende myndighed ønsker at overlade en opgave til et selskab, der er en selvstændig juridisk person, også selvom dette selskab er en del af den ordregivende myndighed (præmis 47).

c) Hvis den ordregivende myndighed udøver samme kontrol med det pågældende selskab som med sine egne tjenestegrene, og selskabet udfører hovedparten af sin virksomhed sammen med den eller de lokale myndigheder, det ejes af, er der dog ikke udbudspligt (præmis 49 indtil sidste punktum).

d) Den ordregivende myndighed kan ikke udøve kontrol som omtalt under punkt c, hvis en del af selskabet er privatejet, også selvom den privatejede del er en minoritetsandel (præmis 49, sidste punktum). Der er derfor udbudspligt, når en ordregivende myndighed ønsker at overlade udførelsen af en tjenesteydelse til et selskab, som den ordregivende myndighed ejer sammen med en eller flere private virksomheder (præmis 52).

Om EF-domstolens udtalelser under punkt c bemærkes:

Disse udtalelser havde ikke direkte betydning for sagens afgørelse. Udtalelserne svarer til sidste punktum i præmis 50 i EF-domstolens dom af 18. november 1999 i sagen C-107/98, Teckal, der også nævnes flere steder i den her resumerede dom. I Teckal-dommen statuerede EF-domstolen, at der var udbudspligt ved en kommunes indkøb af varer fra et fælleskommunalt indkøbsselskab, som kommunen ejede sammen med nogle andre kommuner.

Nogle yderligere spørgsmål fra Oberlandesgericht Naumburg bortfaldt som følge af EF-domstolens svar på spørgsmålene 1) og 2).

13. januar 2005, sag C-84/03, Kommissionen mod Spanien

Statueret, at Spanien på nogle punkter ikke havde implementeret Indkøbsdirektivet og Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet rigtigt

Indkøbsdirektivet og Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet er implementeret i spansk ret ved en lov om offentlige myndigheders aftaler. Kommissionen havde anlagt sagen, fordi implementeringen efter Kommissionens opfattelse ikke var sket rigtigt på de nedennævnte punkter.

Kommissionen fik medhold. EF-domstolen afgjorde sagen således:

1) Udtalt, at den spanske lov var i strid med direktiverne, fordi udbudspligten i henhold til loven ikke omfattede offentligretlige organer af privatretlig karakter. (Betegnelsen offentligretlige organer sigter til sådanne organer som defineret i de to direktivers artikel 1, b.)

Afgørelsen svarer på dette punkt til de lignende afgørelser i EF-domstolens domme af 15. maj 2003 i sag C-214/00, Kommissionen mod Spanien, og 16. oktober 2003 i sag C-283/00, Kommissionen mod Spanien, til hvilke der også henvises i den her resumerede dom.

2) Udtalt, at den spanske lov var i strid med direktiverne, fordi udbudspligten i henhold til loven ikke omfattede samarbejdsaftaler mellem forskellige offentlige myndigheder.

3) Indkøbsdirektivet og Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet indeholder i henholdsvis artikel 6 og artikel 7 nogle bestemmelser om, at der under visse betingelser kan ske udbud efter forhandling, når de oprindelige udbudsbetingelser ikke ændres væsentligt.

Disse bestemmelser var implementeret ved en regel i den spanske lov. Direktivbestemmelsernes betingelse om, at de oprindelige udbudsbetingelser ikke må ændres væsentligt, var i den spanske regel blevet til, at de oprindelige udbudsbetingelser ikke må ændres, bortset fra prisen, der dog ikke må forhøjes med mere end 10 %.

Spanien gjorde gældende, at det er uklart, hvad der ligger i direktivbestemmelsernes betingelse om, at de oprindelige udbudsbetingelser ikke må ændres »væsentligt«. Spanien gjorde videre gældende, at den spanske regel havde til formål af retssikkerhedsmæssige grunde at undgå denne uklarhed.

EF-domstolen udtalte imidlertid, at den spanske regel var i strid med direktiverne. EF-domstolen henviste herved bl.a. til, at den spanske regel gik ud på at opstille en ny betingelse for anvendelsen af de omtalte bestemmelser i direktiverne, og at denne nye betingelse kunne svække både bestemmelsernes rækkevidde og karakter af undtagelser (præmis 49).

4) Ifølge den spanske lov kan der under visse betingelser ske udbud efter forhandling uden forudgående udbudsbekendtgørelse, når der er tale om ensartede varer.

Spanien gjorde på dette punkt gældende, at reelt var tale om rammeaftaler, der var dækket af en anden regel i den spanske lov.

EF-domstolen udtalte imidlertid, at den omtalte spanske regel var i strid med de to direktiver. EF-domstolen henviste herved bl.a. til, at Spanien ikke havde bevist, at reglen var en loyal gennemførelse (præmis 58).

Retten i Første Instans' kendelse af 31. januar 2005 i sag T-447/04 R, Capgemini Nederland mod Kommissionen

Et sagsanlæg ikke tillagt opsættende virkning, selvom der forelå »fumus boni juris«, da der ikke forelå uopsættelighed

Kommissionen iværksatte et udbud vedrørende udvikling og installering af nogle informationssystemer. Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud.

Efter tilbuddenes modtagelse indgik Kommissionen kontrakt med en tilbudsgiver, hvorefter en anden tilbudsgiver anlagde sag mod Kommissionen og påstod sagsanlægget tillagt opsættende virkning. Rettens kendelse af 31. januar 2005 angår spørgsmålet om opsættende virkning.

Retten udtalte bl.a.

Der forelå »fumus boni juris[2]« (præmis 88). Retten henviste på dette punkt til følgende:

Kommissionen syntes umiddelbart at have foretaget en åbenbar fejlagtig tilbudsvurdering ved at acceptere, at den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud med hensyn til visse poster ikke angav en pris eller angav en nul-pris, og det kunne ikke udelukkes, at Kommissionen som følge af forholdet skulle have afvist den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud (præmis 82). Vurderingen havde sammenhæng med, at tilbudspriserne ifølge udbudsbetingelserne ville blive sammenlignet post for post, se præmis 77 og følgende.

Det kunne ikke udelukkes, at den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud ikke opfyldte et krav i udbudsbetingelserne om nationale grænseflader (præmis 87).

Der forelå imidlertid ikke uopsættelighed (præmis 105). Fra Rettens udtalelser på dette punkt kan nævnes (noget omformuleret):

Formålet med opsættende virkning er ikke at sikre erstatning for et tab, men at undgå en alvorlig og uoprettelig skade, og Kommissionen ville efter en eventuel annullation af tildelingsbeslutningen skulle træffe de nødvendige foranstaltninger for at beskytte sagsøgerens interesser på en passende måde (præmis 89 og 96). Sagsøgerens eventuelle skade ville endvidere ikke være uoprettelig, hvis der kunne betales erstatning, og sagsøgeren havde ikke gjort gældende, at Kommissionens tildelingsbeslutning medførte en trussel mod sagsøgerens eksistens (præmis 98 og 102).

Begæringen om opsættende virkning blev herefter ikke imødekommet.

Retten synes ikke at have truffet afgørelse i selve sagen.

3. marts 2005. sager C-21/03 og C-34/03, Fabricom

Ligebehandlingsprincippet er til hinder for, at personer, der har udført forberedende arbejde vedrørende et udbud, ubetinget afskæres fra at afgive tilbud. Udbyders afvisning af et tilbud med den begrundelse, at tilbudsgiveren er »inhabil«, skal meddeles tilbudsgiveren i rimelig tid inden tildelingsbeslutningen

Nogle regler i den belgiske lovgivning gik ud på følgende:

a) Personer, der har udført nærmere angivne forberedende arbejder vedrørende bygge- og anlægsarbejder, indkøb eller tjenesteydelser, er ikke berettiget til selv at afgive tilbud vedrørende de pågældende bygge- og anlægsarbejder, indkøb eller tjenesteydelser.

b) Det samme gælder virksomheder, der har en nærmere angivet tilknytning til personer som de omtalte, medmindre virksomheden godtgør, at den ikke opnår en uberettiget fordel som følge af denne tilknytning.

Et belgisk selskab, Fabricom SA, anlagde ved en belgisk domstol sag mod den belgiske stat med påstand om annullation af de omtalte regler. Den belgiske domstol forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen, der udtalte (Klagenævnets litrering):

1) Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, Indkøbsdirektivet og Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet er til hinder for en regel, der ikke giver de under a) nævnte personer mulighed for at bevise, at den viden, de har opnået, ikke kan fordreje konkurrencen.

[2] Dvs. »en røg af god ret«, altså sandsynlighed for, at sagsanlægget var berettiget.

Herved henvist til: Det følger ikke af ligebehandlingsprincippet, at en person, der har udført forberedende arbejder, skal behandles på samme måde som enhver anden bydende. En sådan person kan have opnået en fordel, som han kan gøre brug af ved udformningen af sit tilbud, eller kan have påvirket udbudsbetingelserne til gunst for sig selv (præmis 29-31). En regel, der ikke giver en sådan person mulighed for at bevise, at disse forhold ikke gør sig gældende, rækker imidlertid videre end nødvendigt for at opnå ligebehandling og kan medføre udelukkelse af de omtalte personer fra at give tilbud, selvom der ikke ville være nogen som helst risiko for konkurrenceforvridning herved (præmis 34-35).

2) Kontroldirektiverne er til hinder for, at en ordregivende myndighed helt frem til tidspunktet for undersøgelsen af tilbudene kan afvise tilbud fra en virksomhed som omtalt under b), selvom virksomheden bekræfter (»affirme«), at den ikke har opnået en uberettiget fordel.

Herved bl.a. henvist til, at hvis den ordregivende myndighed havde en sådan adgang helt frem til et meget sent tidspunkt under udbudet, ville den ordregivende myndighed kunne fratage den pågældende virksomhed muligheden for at gøre udbudsreglerne gældende, hvilket kunne skade kontroldirektivernes effektive virkning (præmis 44 og 45).

EF-domstolens udtalelse under 2) skal tilsyneladende forstås sådan: En ordregivende myndigheds afvisning af et tilbud med den begrundelse, at tilbudsgiveren er »inhabil«, skal meddeles den pågældende tilbudsgiver i rimelig tid før tildelingsbeslutningen, således at tilbudsgiveren får mulighed for at klage til en klageinstans inden tildelingsbeslutningen.

Dette er direkte udtrykt i punkt 51-52 i Generaladvokatens forslag til afgørelse, der blev fulgt vedrørende punkt 2).

3. marts 2005, sag C-414/03, Kommissionen mod Tyskland

Tyskland havde overtrådt Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ved manglende EU-udbud. Tysklands erkendelse afskar ikke Kommissionen fra at anlægge sagen. Ikke taget stilling til, om der var pligt til at ophæve en kontrakt indgået i strid med direktivet

En tysk ordregivende myndighed indgik i 1994 en 10-årig kontrakt om affaldsbortskaffelse, og ved dommen konstateredes, at Tyskland havde overtrådt Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet som følge af, at kontrakten var indgået uden EU-udbud. Tyskland erkendte overtrædelsen.

Tyskland gjorde gældende, at Kommissionen som følge af Tysklands erkendelse ikke havde været berettiget til at anlægge sagen ved EF-domstolen, men Tyskland fik ikke medhold i dette anbringende.

Under sagen blev der procederet om, hvorvidt den ordregivende myndighed havde pligt til at ophæve kontrakten. EF-domstolen tog ikke stilling til dette spørgsmål, men henviste blot til traktatens artikel 228, stk. 1 EF, hvorefter den pågældende medlemsstat skal træffe de foranstaltninger, der er nødvendige til opfyldelse af en dom fra EF-domstolen.

Dommen svarer til tidligere afgørelser fra EF-domstolen, således dom af 9. september 2004 i sag C-125/03 og dom af 18. november 2004 i sag C-126/03, begge Kommissionen mod Tyskland.

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 17. marts 2005 i sag T-160/03, AFCon Management Consultants mfl. mod Kommissionen

Udbyderen overtrådte ligebehandlingsprincippet ved ikke at undersøge, om den valgte tilbudsgiver som følge af forbindelse til et medlem af udbyderens bedømmelsesudvalg skulle udelukkes fra at afgive tilbud. En forbigået tilbudsgiver blev ikke tillagt erstatning til dækning af positiv opfyldelsesinteresse, da det ikke med sikkerhed kunne fastslås, at den forbigåede tilbudsgiver ville have fået kontrakten, hvis den valgte tilbudsgiver var blevet udelukket, men blev tillagt erstatning til dækning af negativ kontraktinteresse, da udbyderens tilsidesættelse af fællesskabsretten havde påvirket den forbigåede tilbudsgivers muligheder for at få tildelt kontrakten

Kommissionen iværksatte et udbud vedrørende en tjenesteydelse. Tildelingskriteriet var øjensynlig det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud.

Der indkom tilbud fra et antal tilbudsgivere, herunder fra et konsortium G. Et bedømmelsesudvalg under Kommissionen vurderede G's tilbud som det økonomisk mest fordelagtige.

Bedømmelsesudvalgets formand redegjorde herefter over for Kommissionen for, at et medlem af bedømmelsesudvalget var ansat i et datterselskab til et af de selskaber, der indgik i G. Kommissionen nedsatte derefter et nyt bedømmelsesudvalg uden deltagelse af den pågældende person. Også det nye bedømmelsesudvalg vurderede G's tilbud som det økonomisk mest fordelagtige, hvorfor Kommissionen indgik kontrakt med G.

En anden tilbudsgiver, en virksomhed A, anlagde sag mod Kommissionen ved Retten i Første Instans, der tog stilling til sagen ved dommen af 17. marts 2005.

Retten udtalte, at Kommissionen burde have iværksat en undersøgelse af, om der forelå en »hemmelig forståelse« mellem G og det omtalte medlem af bedømmelsesudvalget med den konsekvens, at G skulle udelukkes fra at afgivet tilbud. Ved ikke at gøre dette havde Kommissionen overtrådt ligebehandlingsprincippet (præmis 90 og følgende).

Kommissionen var herefter erstatningsansvarlig over for A og blev dømt til at betale et beløb til A til dækning af A's udgift til udarbejdelse af tilbud. Herved henvist til, at Kommissionens tilsidesættelse af fællesskabsretten under udbuddets gennemførelse havde påvirket A's mulighed for at få tildelt kontrakten (præmis 98 og følgende).

Der var derimod ikke grundlag for at tillægge A erstatning af mistet fortjeneste, da det ikke med sikkerhed kunne fastslås, at A ville have fået kontrakten, hvis G var blevet udelukket fra at afgive tilbud (præmis 113).

Referatet ovenfor er yderst summarisk, da dommen ikke skønnes at have almen udbudsretlig interesse ud over det anførte.

2. juni 2005, sag C-15/04, Koppensteiner

Det følger af første kontroldirektiv, at et klageorgan skal undlade at anvende en national regel, der forhindrer klageorganet i at efterprøve udbyderes annullation af udbud

Et østrigsk statsligt selskab foretog et EU-udbud efter Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet 92/50 af nogle nedbrydningsarbejder m.m. Efter at have åbnet tilbudene konstaterede udbyderen, at alle tilbudspriser var væsentligt højere end forventet, og udbyderen annullerede derefter udbudet.

En tilbudsgiver klagede til et klageorgan, Bundesvergabeamt, bl.a. med påstand om annullation af annullationen af udbudet.

Efter den østrigske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter har et klageorgan ikke kompetence til at annullere en udbyders annullation af et udbud, hvis udbyderens annullation er foretaget efter tilbudenes åbning. Efter Bundesvergabeamts opfattelse var denne regel muligvis i strid med artikel 1, stk. 1, sammenholdt med § 2, stk. 1, b, i første kontroldirektiv. Ifølge disse regler skal medlemsstaterne sikre mulighed for hurtig og effektiv klage over de ordregivende myndigheders beslutninger, ligesom de nationale klageorganer skal have beføjelse til bl.a. at annullere ulovlige beslutninger.

Bundesvergabeamt stillede på denne baggrund nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen, der udtalte (af overskuelighedsgrunde noget ombrudt og til dels omformuleret):

1) § 1, stk. 1, og § 2, stk. 1, b, i første kontroldirektiv er til hinder for en national regel, hvorefter et klageorgan ikke kan efterprøve og annullere en ordregivers beslutning om annullation af et udbud, hvis ordregiverens beslutning er truffet efter tilbudenes åbning (præmis 36 og 37).

2) Reglerne i § 1, stk. 1, og § 2, stk. 1, b, i første kontroldirektiv er ubetingede og tilstrækkeligt præcise til, at borgerne kan påberåbe sig dem direkte. Et nationalt klageorgan har derfor pligt til at undlade at anvende nationale regler, der forhindrer overholdelsen af § 1, stk. 1, og § 2, stk. 1, b, i første kontroldirektiv (præmis 38 og 39).

EF-domstolen henviste til forskellige tidligere afgørelser, bl.a. dom af 18. juni 2002 i sag C92/00, HI Hospital Ingenieure Krankenhaustechnik Planungsgesmbh, i hvilken domstolen slog fast, at udbyderes annullation af udbud er omfattet af første kontroldirektiv. (Præmis 29 og 30.)

Retten i Første Instans' kendelse af 2. juni 2005 i sag T-125/05 R, Umwelt- und Ingenieurtechnik Dresden mod Kommissionen

Det er en betingelse for opsættende virkning, at den begærende part vil lide et alvorligt og uopretteligt tab, hvis der ikke meddeles opsættende virkning, og det var ikke bevist, at manglende opsættende virkning ville påføre sagsøgeren et sådant tab. Medmindre der foreligger særlige omstændigheder, kan et tab ikke betragtes som uopretteligt eller vanskeligt opretteligt, hvis der senere kan betales erstatning

Kommissionen iværksatte et udbud vedrørende forbedring af et atomkraftværk i Ukraine m.m. Der indkom tre tilbud, hvorefter Kommissionen indgik kontrakt med en af tilbudsgiverne.

En anden tilbudsgiver, hvis tilbud var blevet afvist som ukonditionsmæssigt, anlagde sag mod Kommissionen ved Retten i Første Instans og gjorde forskellige anbringender gældende. Sagsøgeren begærede sagsanlægget tillagt opsættende virkning, hvilket Retten tog stilling til i kendelsen af 2. juni 2005.

Retten henviste til, at det er en betingelse for opsættende virkning, at der foreligger uopsættelighed, hvilket forudsætter, at den begærende part vil lide et alvorligt og uopretteligt tab, hvis der ikke meddeles opsættende virkning (præmis 38). Sagsøgeren havde imidlertid ikke ført bevis for, at manglende opsættende virkning ville påføre sagsøgeren et sådant tab (præmis 41). Medmindre der foreligger særlige omstændigheder, kan et tab endvidere ikke betragtes som uopretteligt eller blot vanskeligt opretteligt, hvis der senere kan betales erstatning (præmis 42).

Betingelsen om uopsættelighed var herefter ikke opfyldt, hvorfor begæringen om opsættende virkning ikke blev taget til følge.

Sagsøgeren hævede tilsyneladende senere sagen, hvilket synes at fremgå af Rettens kendelse af 7. oktober 2005 i sag T-125/05.

16. juni 2005, sager C-462/03 og C-463/03, Strabag

Om anvendelsesområdet for Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38

Det statslige østrigske jernbaneselskab foretog et EU-udbud af udførelse af jernbaneanlæg m.m. Udbudet blev øjensynlig foretaget som udbud efter forhandling i medfør af de særlige regler herom i Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38. Efter at udbyderen havde besluttet at indgå kontrakt med en tilbudsgiver, klagede to andre tilbudsgivere til et klageorgan, Bundesvergabeamt. I sin afgørelse i klagesagen udtalte Bundesvergabeamt bl.a., at udbudet ikke var omfattet af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38, og at det derfor ikke havde været berettiget at foretage udbud efter forhandling.

Baggrunden for Bundesvergabeamts opfattelse om, at udbudet ikke var omfattet af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38, var formuleringen af direktivets artikel 2, stk. 2.

Efter litra c i denne bestemmelse omfatter direktivet »drift« af jernbanenet m.m. Vedrørende visse andre former for virksomhed omfatter direktivet efter formuleringen derimod ikke alene drift, men også »tilrådighedsstillelse«, jf. bestemmelsens litra a. Formuleringen af artikel 2, stk. 2, kan således ud fra en modsætningsslutning tyde på, at direktivet ikke gælder for »tilrådighedsstillelse« af jernbanenet, og Bundesvergabeamt forstod artikel 2, stk. 2, på denne måde. Desuden var det Bundesvergabeamts opfattelse, at de udbudte opgaver angik »tilrådighedsstillelse« af jernbanenet og ikke drift.

Af forskellige grunde kom Bundesvergabeamt senere i tvivl om rigtigheden af den omtalte forståelse af direktivet. Bundesvergabeamt tog sagen op igen og stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen. Disse spørgsmål gik (af overskuelighedsgrunde sammentrængt og forenklet) ud på følgende:

1) Skal artikel 2, stk. 2 i Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38 forstås sådan, at direktivet ikke gælder for tilrådighedsstillelse af jernbanenet?

2) Hvad sigtes der til med begreberne drift henholdsvis tilrådighedsstillelse?

3) Skulle Bundesvergabeamt se bort fra en østrigsk lovregel, der sidestiller drift og tilrådighedsstillelse af jernbanenet?

EF-domstolen udtalte (stærkt sammentrængt, Klagenævnets litrering):

a) Det afgørende for, om Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38 finder anvendelse, er den virksomhed, som ordregiveren udøver, og forbindelsen mellem denne virksomhed og kontrakten. Direktivet finder således anvendelse, hvis ordregiveren udøver en af de former for virksomhed, der er omhandlet i direktivets artikel 2, stk. 2, og hvis indgåelsen af den pågældende kontrakt er et led i denne virksomhed (præmis 37).

b) Bundesvergabeamts spørgsmål vedrørende den omtalte regel i den østrigske lovgivning byggede på den forudsætning, at de udbudte arbejder ikke var omfattet af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38, fordi de gik ud på tilrådighedsstillelse af jernbanenet. Denne forudsætning var imidlertid fejlagtig, idet det afgørende for, om direktivet finder anvendelse, som nævnt er den virksomhed, som ordregiveren udøver, og forbindelsen mellem denne virksomhed og kontrakten (præmis 41 og 42).

Forståelsen af dommen vanskeliggøres bl.a. af, at dommen ikke indeholder nærmere oplysninger om karakteren af de udbudte opgaver, og det kan således ikke ses, hvorfor Bundesvergabeamt anså opgaverne som et led i tilrådighedsstillelse.

Det er dog muligvis forsvarligt at anse dommen som udtryk for, at Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38 uanset formuleringen af direktivets artikel 2, stk. 2, omfatter tilrådighedsstillelse af jernbanenet m.m. Det bestyrker måske denne forståelse, at det nye forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektiv 04/17 udtrykkeligt omfatter tilrådighedsstillelse af jernbanenet m.m., jf. artikel 5, stk. 1, i dette direktiv.

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 6. juli 2005 i sag T-148/04, TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium mod Kommissionen

Et tilbud var ikke unormalt lavt, og reglerne om unormalt lave tilbud var irrelevante, da udbyderen ikke havde anset tilbuddet for unormalt lavt. Udbudsreglerne stiller ikke krav om, at en tilbudsgiver har det nødvendige personale på tilbuddets tidspunkt. Udbyderen kunne indgå en midlertidig kontrakt med den valgte tilbudsgiver for en kortere periode, indtil tilbudsgiveren opfyldte udbudsbetingelsernes krav

Dommens sagsfremstilling forekommer noget ufuldstændig og til dels uklar, og også præmisserne forekommer til dels uklare, men dommen kan formentlig gengives således:

En virksomhed T udførte rejsebureauvirksomhed for Kommissionen i henhold til en kontrakt, der udløb 31. marts 2004. Virksomheden blev udøvet i Kommissionens lokaler.

I juli 2003 iværksatte Kommissionen et udbud vedrørende rejsebureauvirksomhed for nogle af Fællesskabets institutioner. Virksomheden skulle udøves i institutionernes lokaler. I udbudsbetingelserne var angivet, at kontrakt skulle indgås med virkning senest fra 1. juli 2004, og at en nødvendig IATA-licens til billetudstedelse skulle foreligge inden kontraktstart. Grunden til, at der ikke var angivet et bestemt tidspunkt for kontraktstart, var, at der var forskellige opsigelsestidspunkter for de enkelte institutioners aktuelle kontrakter.

Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud på grundlag af følgende underkriterier: 1. Pris og 2. Kvalitet. Til underkriterium 2. Kvalitet var efter det foreliggende knyttet følgende delkriterier: a. personale, b. tekniske og logistiske hjælpemidler, c. administration og formidling af oplysninger og d. evnen til at forhandle sig frem til de bedste billetpriser.

Tilbudsfristen udløb tilsyneladende omkring 1. december 2003, og ved tilbudsfristens udløb var der indkommet tilbud fra flere tilbudsgivere, herunder fra T og fra en virksomhed W. Kommissionen besluttede i februar 2004 at indgå kontrakt med W.

Det udbud, som sagen angik, trådte i stedet for et tidligere udbud, der havde angået rejsebureauvirksomhed for alle Fællesskabets institutioner. Dette udbud var imidlertid blevet annulleret, fordi nogle af institutionerne ikke ønskede at deltage.

I marts 2004 blev Kommissionen opmærksom på, at det forhold, at nogle af institutionerne ikke ønskede at deltage, betød, at W først kunne opnå den krævede IATA-licens i løbet af foråret 2004. Den nærmere sammenhæng i denne forbindelse synes ikke at fremgå af dommen, og det fremgår således ikke, hvorledes forholdet kunne have betydning, selvom de pågældende institutioners manglende deltagelse var kommet på det rene allerede før udbudsbekendtgørelsen.

Kommissionen anmodede derfor i marts 2004 T om forlængelse af den eksisterende kontrakt til sidst i juni 2004. Efter at T havde afslået dette, indgik Kommissionen den 31. marts 2004 en midlertidig aftale med W om W's udførelse af rejsebureauvirksomheden fra egne lokaler (hvilket W åbenbart havde IATA-licens til). Denne midlertidige aftale løb til 19. maj 2004, da W opnåede den nødvendige IATA-licens til den udbudte virksomhed. Den blev derefter formentlig afløst af en kontrakt i henhold til udbuddet.

T anlagde sag mod Kommissionen ved Retten i Første Instans, der i dommen af 6. juli 2005 tog stilling til sagen således (sammentrængt og til dels lidt omformuleret gengivet):

1) Ad et anbringende fra T om, at W's tilbud skulle have været afvist som unormalt lavt:

Ikke taget til følge. Henvist til Gennemførelsesforordningens regler om unormalt lave tilbud (der svarer til Udbudsdirektivets 55). Udtalt, at disse regler var irrelevante, da Kommissionen ikke havde anset W's tilbud for unormalt lavt (præmis 50). Desuden foretaget en detaljeret gennemgang af W's tilbud mundende ud i, at W's tilbud på et punkt ikke var unormalt lavt (præmis 61), at T på et andet ikke punkt ikke havde bevist, at W's tilbud var unormalt lavt (præmis 63), og at Kommissionen på et tredje punkt med føje havde anset W's tilbud for pålideligt og troværdigt (præmis 69).

2) Ad et anbringende fra T om, at Kommissionen ved tilbudsvurderingen havde lagt vægt på, at W's tilbud omfattede en deling af rabatter mellem W og Kommissionen, selvom det ikke fremgik af udbudsbetingelserne, at der ville blive lagt vægt på en sådan deling:

Ikke taget til følge. Henvist til, at Kommissionen ikke havde lagt vægt på forholdet ved tilbudsvurderingen (»som et tildelingskriterium«), men alene havde taget forholdet i betragtning ved vurderingen af W's tilbuds kvalitet for at sikre, at den økonomiske del af W's tilbud i sin helhed var pålideligt og troværdigt og ikke unormalt lavt (præmis 70).

3) Ad et anbringende fra T om, at Kommissionen ved tilbudsvurderingen havde tildelt W's tilbud et for højt pointtal i relation til underkriterium 2. Kvalitet, selvom W ikke ville ansætte, hvad der efter T's opfattelse var tilstrækkeligt personale:

Ikke taget til følge med henvisning til, at W's forudsætninger om personalets størrelse kunne hænge sammen W's produktivitet og effektivitet (præmis 89). Også henvist til, at hverken Finansforordningen eller Gennemførelsesforordningen kræver, at en tilbudsgiver råder over det nødvendige personale på tilbuddets tidspunkt, og at dette personale først skal være til stede ved kontraktstart (præmis 90).

4) Ad et anbringende om, at Kommissionen ved tilbudsvurderingen havde tildelt W's tilbud et for højt pointtal i relation til underkriterium 2. Kvalitet, selvom Kommissionen vidste, at W ikke fra begyndelsen kunne udføre den udbudte opgave fra institutionernes lokaler som krævet, og at W ikke fra begyndelsen havde den IATA-licens, der var krævet i udbudsbetingelserne:

Ikke taget til følge. Henvist til, at grunden til, at W ikke havde den krævede IATA-licens fra begyndelsen, var, at nogle af institutionerne havde besluttet ikke at gøre brug af den udbudte rejsebureauvirksomhed, og at Kommissionen først i marts 2004 var blevet opmærksom på forholdet (præmis 91). Desuden henvist til, at Kommissionens indgåelse af den midlertidige kontrakt med W havde hjemmel i en bestemmelse i Gennemførelsesforordningen, hvorefter der kan gennemføres udbud med forhandling uden forudgående udbudsbekendtgørelse, når tvingende grunde gør dette strengt nødvendigt som følge af uforudseelige begivenheder, der ikke kan tilskrives den ordregivende myndighed, og som kan bringe Fællesskabets interesser i fare (præmis 95 og følgende, en noget lignende bestemmelse er indeholdt i Udbudsdirektivets artikel 11, nr. 1, litra c). Også henvist til, at W opnåede den krævede IATA-licens før det tidspunkt for kontraktstart, der i udbudsbetingelserne var angivet som seneste tidspunkt (præmis 94).

T fik således ikke medhold.

Retten havde ved en kendelse af 27. juli 2004 i sag T-184/04 R afslået en begæring fra T om opsættende virkning.

Som følge af de omtalte uklarheder i dommen er dommens rækkevidde formentlig begrænset. Dommens sagsfremstilling gør det også vanskeligt at forestille sig, hvorledes en tilsvarende sag ville være blevet afgjort af Klagenævnets for Udbud. Bl.a. forekommer det vanskeligt at vurdere berettigelsen af Kommissionens midlertidige kontrakt med W.

21. juli 2005, sag C-231/03, Coname

Koncessionskontrakter om tjenesteydelser er ikke nødvendigvis omfattet af udbudspligten. Medmindre der foreligger særlige omstændigheder, skal tildeling af sådanne kontrakter dog ske under iagttagelse af gennemsigtighed, således at virksomheder fra andre medlemsstater kan tilkendegive deres interesse i kontrakten. Det var ikke en særlig omstændighed, at ordregiveren delvis ejede den virksomhed, der fik tildelt en koncessionskontrakt, da ordregiverens ejerandel var lille, og da virksomheden var åben for privat kapital

Af overskuelighedsgrunde er referatet noget sammentrængt og forenklet.

En italiensk kommune overlod drift og vedligeholdelse m.m. af et gasforsyningsanlæg til et fælleskommunalt selskab. En virksomhed, der indtil da havde udført de pågældende ydelser, klagede til en italiensk forvaltningsdomstol og gjorde gældende, at der skulle have været foretaget EU-udbud. Forvaltningsdomstolen forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen, der udtalte:

Det forudsattes, at der var tale om en koncessionskontrakt om tjenesteydelser, således at sagen derfor hverken var omfattet af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet eller Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet (præmis 9 og 10).

Tildelingen af en sådan koncessionskontrakt til en national virksomhed kan udgøre en forskelsbehandling af virksomheder i andre medlemsstater i strid med Traktatens artikel 43 EF og 49 EF (om etableringsfrihed og fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser), hvis der ikke er gennemsigtighed. En sådan forskelsbehandling er en indirekte forskelsbehandling på grund af nationalitet, hvilket er i strid med de nævnte traktatbestemmelser. Der kan dog foreligge særlige omstændigheder, fx en meget begrænset økonomisk betydning, der bevirker, at virksomheder i andre medlemsstater ikke er interesserede i at få koncessionskontrakten. (Præmis 17-20.)

Det tilkom herefter den nationale domstol at tage stilling til, om tildelingen af koncessionskontrakten til det fælleskommunale selskab opfyldte de krav til gennemsigtighed, som – uden nødvendigvis at medføre en forpligtelse til udbud – ville gøre det muligt for en virksomhed uden for Italien at tilkendegive sin interesse i at få tildelt koncessionskontrakten (præmis 21).

Manglende opfyldelse af kravet om gennemsigtighed kunne ikke begrundes med, at kommunen var medejer af det fælleskommunale selskab. Dels udgjorde kommunens ejerandel kun 0,97 %, hvilket ikke gav kommunen mulighed for at udøve kontrol med koncessionshaveren (præmis 24), dels var det fælleskommunale selskab i hvert fald delvis åbent for privat kapital, hvorfor det ikke kunne anses for et »internt« organ (præmis 26).

8. september 2005, sag C-129/04, Espace Trianon og Sofibail.
Første kontroldirektiv er ikke til hinder for en national bestemmelse, hvorefter en klage fra et konsortium, der ikke er en juridisk person, skal indgives af samtlige medlemmer af konsortiet

En belgisk offentlig ordregiver iværksatte et udbud vedrørende et byggeri. Efter at der var indkommet tilbud fra forskellige virksomheder, besluttede udbyderen at indgå kontrakt med en af tilbudsgiverne.

En af de tilbudsgivere, der ikke fik tildelt kontrakten, var et konsortium, der bestod af to aktieselskaber, E og S. E klagede over udbyderens tildelingsbeslutning til en belgisk forvaltningsdomstol (Conseil d'État), og kort derefter klagede også S til forvaltningsdomstolen.

Forvaltningsdomstolen afviste klagen fra E, fordi denne klage ikke var indgivet af personer, der i henhold til E's vedtægter kunne tegne E. Forvaltningsdomstolen stillede herefter EF-domstolen nogle spørgsmål, der sigtede til, om første kontroldirektiv medførte pligt til at tage sagen under realitetsbehandling på grundlag af klagen fra S alene. Baggrunden var, at forvaltningsdomstolen efter belgisk ret kun havde kompetence til at behandle sagen, hvis både E og S havde indgivet klage.

EF-domstolen udtalte (af overskuelighedsgrunde lidt omformuleret og sammentrængt):

1) Første kontroldirektiv er ikke til hinder for en national bestemmelse, hvorefter en klage fra et konsortium, der ikke er en juridisk person, skal indgives af samtlige medlemmer af konsortiet.

2) Det forholder sig på samme måde, hvis alle medlemmer af et konsortium har klaget, men klagen fra et af konsortiets medlemmer afvises.

Retten i Første Instans' kendelse af 20. september 2005 i sag T-195/05 R, Deloitte mod Kommissionen
Ikke opsættende virkning, selvom der forelå »fumus boni juris«, da der ikke forelå uopsættelighed, idet en uoprettelig skade, som sagsøgeren ville lide ved manglende opsættende virkning, ikke var tilstrækkeligt alvorlig, samt da en interesseafvejning talte mod opsættende virkning. Generel beskrivelse af Rettens praksis med hensyn til opsættende virkning

Denne kendelse er Retten i Første Instans' afgørelse om opsættende virkning i en sag, der blev afgjort ved Rettens dom af 18. april 2007 i sag T-195/05 (ved hvilken Kommissionen blev frifundet). Med hensyn til sagens faktum og emne henvises til Klagenævnets resumé af dommen af 18. april 2007.

Kendelsen af 20. september 2005 er imidlertid interessant, fordi den tager stilling til alle betingelserne for, at Retten tillægger et sagsanlæg opsættende virkning.

Hjemlen for Retten til at træffe bestemmelse om opsættende virkning er Traktatens artikel 243 EF, hvorefter Domstolen i sager, der er indbragt for den, kan foreskrive de nødvendige foreløbige forholdsregler.

Efter Rettens praksis gælder følgende betingelser, der alle skal være opfyldt, for opsættende virkning:

1) Der skal foreligge »fumus boni juris«, dvs. en røg af god ret, altså sandsynlighed for, at sagsanlægget er berettiget.
2) Der skal foreligge uopsættelighed.
3) En interesseafvejning skal tale for opsættende virkning.

De to første betingelser følger af artikel 104, stk. 2, i Rettens procesreglement, hvorefter en begæring om foreløbige forholdsregler skal angive de omstændigheder, der medfører uopsættelighed, og de faktiske og retlige grunde til, at den begærede foreløbige forholdsregel umiddelbart forekommer berettiget. (Procesreglement for De Europæiske Fællesskabers Ret i Første Instans af 2. maj 1991 med senere ændringer).

Af Rettens afgørelser om opsættende virkning fremgår, at der stilles meget strenge krav for at anse betingelse 2, uopsættelighed, opfyldt. Følgende går med lidt forskellige formuleringer igen i Rettens afgørelser:

Uopsættelighedsbetingelsen er principielt ikke opfyldt, hvis sagsøgeren kan kompenseres ved erstatning, og uopsættelighed forudsætter normalt, at sagsøgeren vil lide et både alvorligt og uopretteligt (eller i hvert fald vanskeligt opretteligt) tab, hvis der ikke tillægges opsættende virkning. Det synes at fremgå af Rettens praksis, at en sagsøger principielt kun anses for at ville lide et alvorligt og uopretteligt (eller eventuelt vanskeligt opretteligt) tab, hvis manglende opsættende virkning vil true sagsøgerens eksistens. Til tider bruger Retten i øvrigt ordet »skade» i stedet for »tab«.

Betingelsen om uopsættelighed er således meget vanskelig at opfylde, og konsekvensen er, at Retten kun undtagelsesvis meddeler opsættende virkning. Et sjældent eksempel på opsættende virkning er Rettens kendelse af 20. juli 2006 i sag T-114/06 R, Globe mod Kommissionen, hvor Retten nærmest bagatelliserede betingelsen om uopsættelighed. Af kendelsen af 20. juli 2006 fremgår, at dette skyldtes, at Kommissionen i den pågældende sag tilsyneladende havde begået en grov overtrædelse af udbudsreglerne. En klar og udpræget »fumus boni juris« kan således efter omstændighederne slå igennem over for de normalt strenge krav til uopsættelighed – og kan øjensynligt også have betydning for betingelse 3, interesseafvejning, se sidste afsnit nedenfor.

Betingelse 3, interesseafvejning, belyses bl.a. i kendelsen af 20. september 2005, jf. sidste afsnit nedenfor.

Fra Rettens udtalelser i kendelsen af 20. september 2005 kan nævnes:

Ad betingelse 1, fumus boni juris: Retten foretog i præmis 82 og følgende en ret omfattende gennemgang af sagsøgerens anbringender og udtalte på flere punkter, at der var tale om forhold, som burde behandles nærmere (»grundigt«) under selve sagen. Retten konkluderede i præmis 123, at sagsøgerens anbringender ikke på det pågældende stadium af sagen kunne forkastes som helt ubegrundede, og at betingelsen om fumus boni juris herefter var opfyldt.

Ad betingelse 2, uopsættelighed: Manglende opsættende virkning ville medføre en uoprettelig skade (præmis 148), fordi sagsøgerens tab var meget vanskeligt for ikke at sige umuligt at opgøre (præmis 146-147). Skaden ville imidlertid ikke være tilstrækkeligt alvorlig (præmis 157 til 159), da sagsøgeren var en meget stor, verdensomspændende virksomhed (præmis 158). Uopsættelighedsbetingelsen var herefter ikke opfyldt.

Ad betingelse 3, interesseafvejning: Der var tale om en foranstaltning til fremme af folkesundheden, hvorfor gennemførelsen af kontrakten med den valgte tilbudsgiver var af væsentlig almen interesse (præmis 163). Der måtte desuden tages hensyn til interesserne hos den valgte tilbudsgiver (præmis 164). Den konstaterede fumus boni juris var endvidere ikke særligt udpræget og kunne ikke bevirke, at interesseafvejningen faldt ud til fordel for opsættende virkning (præmis 165). Betingelsen vedrørende interesseafvejning var herefter ikke opfyldt.

13. oktober 2005, sag C-458/03, Parking Brixen

Definition af koncessioner om tjenesteydelser. Der skal være mulighed for konkurrence med hensyn til sådanne koncessioner. Kriterierne for at anse en virksomhed som »in house«

Dommens præmisser er meget lange. Af overskuelighedsgrunde er gengivelsen af dem nedenfor meget stærkt sammentrængt og til dels omformuleret

En italiensk kommune overlod driften af to parkeringspladser til et aktieselskab, der var oprettet af kommunen. En virksomhed klagede til en forvaltningsdomstol og gjorde gældende, at der skulle have været foretaget EU-udbud. Forvaltningsdomstolen stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen, der udtalte:

1) Ad et spørgsmål fra forvaltningsdomstolen, om der var tale om koncessioner:

Der var ikke forelagt tilstrækkelige oplysninger om aftalen vedrørende den ene parkeringsplads til, at EF-domstolen kunne bistå forvaltningsdomstolen med hensyn til denne aftale (præmis 31-36).

Med hensyn til den anden parkeringsplads fremgik det, at det kommunale aktieselskab opkrævede parkeringsafgifter af brugerne og betalte en årlig godtgørelse til kommunen. Når en tjenesteyders vederlag på denne måde ikke hidrører fra den pågældende offentlige myndighed, men derimod hidrører fra tredjemænd som betaling for brugen af en parkeringsplads, påtager tjenesteyderen sig risikoen for driften af de pågældende tjenester, hvilket er kendetegnende for en koncession om tjenesteydelser. Aftalen om den pågældende parkeringsplads var derfor en koncession. Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet omfatter endvidere ikke koncessioner om tjenesteydelser. (Præmis 37-43, navnlig 40 og 42.)[3]

2) Ad et spørgsmål fra forvaltningsdomstolen, om der havde været udbudspligt:

[3] Det nugældende udbudsdirektiv 2004/18 EF omfatter heller ikke koncessioner om tjenesteydelser, jf. artikel 17 i dette direktiv. Det samme gælder som almindelig regel det nugældende Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektiv 2004/17/EF, jf. dette direktivs artikel 18.

Det følger af Traktatens artikel 43 EF og 49 EF (om fri etableringsret og fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser) samt af principperne om ligebehandling, forbud mod forskelsbehandling og gennemsigtighed, at medlemsstaterne ikke må opretholde en national lovgivning, der tillader tildeling af offentlige tjenesteydelseskoncessioner, uden at der er mulighed for konkurrence. (Præmis 44-55, navnlig 52.)[4]

3) Ad et anbringende fra Italien om, at det kommunale selskab ikke var en selvstændig enhed i forhold til kommunen:

Traktatens artikel 12 EF (om forbud mod forskelsbehandling på grund af nationalitet), artikel 43 EF og artikel 49 EF samt de almindelige principper, som disse bestemmelser er udtryk for, finder ikke anvendelse på koncessioner om tjenesteydelser, hvis ordregiveren fører samme kontrol med den virksomhed, der får koncessionen, som med sine egne tjenestegrene, og hvis denne virksomhed udfører hovedparten af sin virksomhed sammen med den myndighed, den ejes af. Disse to betingelser skal fortolkes restriktivt, og bevisbyrden påhviler den, der påberåber sig, at de er opfyldt (præmis 62 og 63).

EF-domstolen udtalte videre, at det kommunale selskab i den foreliggende sag ikke opfyldte betingelsen om være undergivet ordregiverens kontrol 100 %. EF-domstolen henviste herved bl.a. til, at selskabets bestyrelse havde vidtgående selvstændige beføjelser, at kommunen i praksis ikke udøvede driftsmæssig kontrol, og selskabet havde pligt til at give adgang for kapitaltilførsel udefra (præmis 67-70).

Domstolens afgørelse vedrørende spørgsmål 1) svarer til afgørelsen i dom af 21. juli 2005 i sagen Coname.

Afgørelsen vedrørende spørgsmål 2) og 3) svarer til den tilsvarende afgørelse i domstolens domme af 11. januar 2005, Stadt Halle, og 18. november 1999, Teckal, til hvilke domme der også henvises i den her resumerede dom.

20. oktober 2005, sag C-264/03, Kommissionen mod Frankrig

En fransk lovbestemmelse om, at offentlige bygherrer kunne antage en fransk fuldmægtig, var i strid med traktatens artikel 49 og Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet

Referatet nedenfor er meget stærkt sammentrængt.

En fransk lov om offentlige byggerier indeholdt nogle regler, hvorefter en bygherre kunne overlade det til en fuldmægtig at udføre forskellige opgaver i forbindelse med et byggeri, bl.a. underskrift på entreprisekontrakter efter bygherrens valg af entreprenør og modtagelse af arbejdet m.m. Det var anført i loven, at fuldmægtigen repræsenterede bygherren over for tredjemand.

Det fremgik af den franske lov, at det kun var nærmere angivne franske selskaber og personer, der kunne antages som fuldmægtig. Sagen var anlagt, fordi dette efter Kommissionens opfattelse var i strid med Traktatens artikel 49 EF (om fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser) og med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet.

[4] Den danske udgave af dommen bruger i den centrale præmis 52 udtrykket »offentligt udbud« og kan derfor forstås sådan, at der med hensyn til koncessionskontrakter om tjenesteydelser skal foretages et egentligt offentligt udbud med en udbudsbekendtgørelse i EF-Tidende. Dette kan dog ikke være meningen. Den franske udgave af dommen bruger udtrykket »mise en concurrence«, hvorimod offentligt udbud på fransk hedder procédure ouverte eller appel d'offres public. Den tyske udgave af dommen, der er originalversionen, bruger udtrykket »Ausschreibung«, hvorimod offentligt udbud på tysk hedder offene Verfahren.

Frankrig gjorde gældende, at der ikke var tale om tjenesteydelser, og at fuldmægtigens hverv med at repræsentere bygherren var udøvelse af offentlig virksomhed. Frankrig henviste endvidere til EF-domstolens dom af 12. juli 2001, Ordine.

EF-domstolen udtalte:

Det var uden betydning, at kravet om, at fuldmægtigen skulle være fransk, var blevet ophævet efter sagens anlæg (præmis 29).

En ordregivers antagelse af en fuldmægtig i henhold til de omtalte regler var en gensidigt bebyrdende aftale om tjenesteydelser (præmis 35-45).

Fuldmægtigens beføjelser gik ikke alene ud på repræsentation af bygherren, men gik også ud på en række andre funktioner (præmis 46). Repræsentationsfunktionerne var omfattet af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet bilag I B (præmis 55). Det synes forudsat, at de øvrige funktioner var omfattet af direktivets bilag I A (se præmis 62).

Ordine-dommen ændrede ikke i ovenstående (præmis 56).

EF-domstolen konkluderede herefter, at de omtalte regler var i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet og Traktatens artikel 49 EF. Kommissionen fik således medhold.

27. oktober 2005, sager C-187/04 og C-188/04, Kommissionen mod Italien

Italien havde overtrådt Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet ved, at nogle koncessioner om motorvejsudfletninger var meddelt uden EU-udbud

En italiensk offentlig ordregiver gav en virksomhed koncessioner vedrørende nogle udfletningsanlæg, der havde til formål at forbinde forskellige motorveje. Sagen var anlagt af Kommissionen, der gjorde gældende, at Italien havde overtrådt Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, fordi der ikke var sket forudgående EU-udbud.

Italien gjorde gældende, at der ikke var pligt til EU-udbud, fordi koncessionshaveren havde anlagt og administrerede de berørte motorveje i henhold til en tidligere koncession. Dette medførte efter Italiens opfattelse, at de nye arbejder dels var omfattet af den oprindelige koncession, dels ikke var bygge- og anlægsarbejder med selvstændig økonomisk eller teknisk funktion, jf. direktivets artikel 1, c).

EF-domstolen udtalte, at der var tale om bygge- og anlægsarbejder omfattet af Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet. EF-domstolen henviste desuden til sin praksis, hvorefter undtagelser fra de almindelige traktatrettigheder skal fortolkes snævert, og hvorefter den, der påberåber sig en sådan undtagelse, har bevisbyrden for at, betingelserne er opfyldt.

EF-domstolen konstaterede herefter, at Italien havde overtrådt Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet som følge af, at de omtalte koncessioner var meddelt uden EU-udbud.

27. oktober 2005, sag C-234/03, Contse mfl.

Tjenesteydelse omfattet af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets bilag I B. Et udvælgelseskriterium og nogle vurderingskriterier var i strid med traktatens artikel 49 om fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser. Generelt om betingelserne for nationale foranstaltninger, der kan hæmme den frie udveksling af tjenesteydelser En spansk offentlig ordregiver foretog to udbud vedrørende tjenesteydelser i forbindelse med åndedrætsterapi i hjemmet ol. De to udbud, der angik hver sin spanske provins, blev tilsyneladende gennemført som offentlige udbud i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet. Sagen angik spørgsmålet, om et enslydende udvælgelseskriterium og nogle enslydende vurderingskriterier ved begge udbud var i strid med EU-retten.

Det omtvistede udvælgelseskriterium gik ud på, at tilbudsgivere for at komme i betragtning skulle råde over mindst et forretningslokale med nærmere angivet daglig åbningstid i den pågældende provinshovedstad.

De omtvistede vurderingskriterier gik ud på, at der ved vurderingen af tilbudene ville blive tildelt nærmere angivne points a) til tilbudsgivere, der ved tilbudets afgivelse havde anlæg til iltproduktion m.m. inden for en nærmere angivet afstand fra den pågældende provins, således at der blev givet points i forhold til anlæggenes kapacitet, b) til tilbudsgivere, der ved tilbudets afgivelse havde forretningslokaler med nærmere angivet åbningstid i bestemte byer, og c) til tilbudsgivere, der allerede udførte tjenesteydelsen.

Nogle virksomheder klagede til en spansk forvaltningsdomstol over de omtalte kriterier, men fik ikke medhold. Virksomhederne indbragte sagen for en ankeinstans, der stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen.

EF-domstolens bemærkninger kan meget stærkt sammentrængt og til dels ombrudt og omformuleret gengives således:

De omhandlede tjenesteydelser var omfattet af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets bilag I B, præmis 47, og tjenesteydelserne var således ikke undergivet Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets regler om udbudspligt og tildelingskriterier, præmis 47-48. Det foreliggende spørgsmål var herefter, om de omtvistede kriterier var i strid med Traktatens artikel 49 EF om fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser, præmis 49.

De omtvistede kriterier kunne alle hæmme den frie udveksling af tjenesteydelser i henhold til Traktatens artikel 49 EF, og EF-domstolen har i sin praksis fastslået, at nationale foranstaltninger, der kan hæmme udøvelsen af grundrettighederne i traktaten, skal opfylde følgende betingelser:

1. De skal anvendes uden forskelsbehandling.
2. De skal være begrundet i tvingende almene hensyn.
3. De skal være egnede til at sikre virkeliggørelsen af deres formål.
4. De må ikke gå ud over, hvad der er nødvendigt for at opnå formålet.

(Præmis 33, jf. præmis 25.)

Det tilkom den nationale domstol at efterprøve, om disse betingelser var opfyldt, således at den nationale domstol herved skulle tage EF-domstolens bemærkninger om spørgsmålet i betragtning, præmis 34.

EF-domstolens bemærkninger om spørgsmålet gik meget stærkt sammentrængt ud på:

U*dvælgelseskriteriet:*

Ad betingelse 1.: Det tilkom den nationale domstol at tage stilling til, om udvælgelseskriteriet nemmere kunne opfyldes af spanske erhvervsdrivende end af andre, præmis 37.

Ad betingelse 2.: Betingelsen var opfyldt, præmis 40.

Ad betingelse 3. og 4.: Kravet om forretningslokale i de pågældende provinshovedstæder var åbenbart urimeligt, for så vidt som kravet gik ud på, at tilbudsgiverne skulle have sådanne forretningslokaler ved tilbudets afgivelse, præmis 43-46.

V*urderingskriterierne:*

EF-domstolens bemærkninger herom indeholdes i præmis 47-78, der ikke kan gengives kort. Nedenfor nævnes blot enkelte af de bemærkninger, der synes at være mest repræsentative.

Ad betingelse 1.: Pointtildelingen for lokale iltanlæg m.m. og pointtildelingen til tilbudsgivere, der allerede udførte tjenesteydelsen, var udtryk for forskelsbehandling, præmis 76-78.

Ad betingelse 2.: Betingelsen var opfyldt, præmis 52.

Ad betingelse 3. og betingelse 4.: Pointtildelingen for lokale iltanlæg m.m. var ikke var knyttet til kontraktens formål, præmis 62 og 70, og pointtildelingen for at have forretningslokaler i bestemte byer ved tilbudets afgivelse var åbenbart uforholdsmæssig, præmis 55.

27. oktober 2005, sag C-525/03, Kommissionen mod Italien

Sagsanlæg fra Kommissionen afvist, da den påberåbte overtrædelse var ophørt før udløbet af den frist, der var fastsat i Kommissionens begrundede udtalelse

Sagen angik en italiensk bekendtgørelse fra 2002, der gav den italienske statsskovstyrelse og det italienske civilforsvar bemyndigelse til ved underhåndsaftaler at anskaffe forskelligt udstyr og få udført forskellige tjenesteydelser til bekæmpelse af skovbrande. Sagen var anlagt af Kommissionen, der gjorde gældende, at bekendtgørelsen var i strid med Indkøbsdirektivet og Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet samt med Traktatens bestemmelser om fri etableringsret og fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser.

EF-domstolen afviste sagen med henvisning til, at den italienske bekendtgørelse var ophørt med at gælde før udløbet af den frist, der var fastsat i Kommissionens begrundede udtalelse.

10. november 2005, sag C-29/04, Kommissionen mod Østrig

Overtrædelse af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ved indgåelse af kontrakt uden EU-udbud med et selskab, som ordregiveren ejede, men som kort derefter delvis blev overdraget til en privat virksomhed

En østrigsk kommune stiftede den 16. juni 1999 et aktieselskab til at foretage affaldsbehandling. Den 25. juni 1999 besluttede kommunen at give aktieselskabet eneret på affaldsbortskaffelse m.m. i kommunens område, og kontrakt herom mellem kommunen og aktieselskabet blev indgået den 15. september 1999.

Den 1. oktober 1999 besluttede kommunen at overdrage 49 % af aktierne i aktieselskabet til en privat virksomhed, hvilket blev gennemført den 13. oktober 1999. Kommunen ejede herefter 51 % af aktierne. I forbindelse med overdragelsen blev det vedtaget, at hver af de to aktionærer skulle udpege en administrator, således at aktieselskabet skulle ledes af de to administratorer, der tegnede selskabet i forening.

Den 1. december 1999 begyndte aktieselskabet sin virksomhed.

Kommissionen gjorde under sagen gældende, at det var en overtrædelse af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, at kommunens kontrakt med aktieselskabet om affaldsbortskaffelse m.m. var indgået uden overholdelse af fremgangsmåden i henhold til direktivet.

EF-domstolen udtalte (gengivet sammentrængt, noget ombrudt og omformuleret):

Det relevante tidspunkt var ikke tidspunktet for indgåelsen af kontrakten mellem kommunen og aktieselskabet. De efterfølgende begivenheder måtte tages i betragtning, og tildelingen af kontrakten skulle vurderes i lyset af dem. Der var tale om en kunstig konstruktion, og det ville stride mod Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets effektive virkning, hvis de ordregivende myndigheder kunne gennemføre foranstaltninger til sløring af tildelingen af tjenesteydelseskontrakter. (Præmis 37-42.)

En ordregivende myndighed kan ikke uden at følge fremgangsmåden i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet indgå aftale om udførelse af tjenesteydelser med et selskab, som ordregiveren ejer sammen med en eller flere private virksomheder (præmis 49).

EF-domstolen konstaterede herefter, at Østrig havde overtrådt Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ved, at den omhandlede kontrakt var indgået uden overholdelse af fremgangsmåden i henhold til direktivet.

Afgørelsen er i overensstemmelse med EF-domstolens dom af 11. januar 2005, Stadt Halle, til hvilken der også henvises i præmisserne.

En lignende afgørelse med hensyn til Indkøbsdirektivet er EF-domstolens dom af 18. november 1999, Teckal, til hvilken Kommissionen også henviste i sin procedure.

24. november 2005, sag C-331/04, ATI EAC mfl.

Om under hvilke betingelser en udbyder kan undlade på forhånd at oplyse den indbyrdes vægtning af underkriterier til et underkriterium. Artikel 36 i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet og artikel 34 i Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38 skal fortolkes på samme måde

En italiensk ordregivende myndighed udbød driften af buskørsel i et område. Det fremgår ikke, hvilket udbudsdirektiv udbudet blev foretaget efter. Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud på grundlag af fire underkriterier, herunder et underkriterium om »organisation og støtteforanstaltninger«. Ifølge udbudsbetingelserne ville underkriterierne blive vægtet med tilsammen 100 points, heraf 25 points til underkriteriet om organisation og støtteforanstaltninger.

Det fremgik af udbudsbetingelserne, at underkriteriet om organisation og støtteforanstaltninger angik a) antallet af garager og parkeringspladser, b) kontrolforanstaltninger m.m., c) antal chauffører m.m., d) antal forretningssteder og e) antal medarbejdere beskæftiget med tilrettelæggelse af skiftehold. Det var ikke angivet i i udbudsbekendtgørelsen eller udbudsbetingelserne, hvorledes tilbudene ville blive bedømt på disse punkter.

Efter at have modtaget tilbudene besluttede udbyderen at fordele de 25 points for underkriteriet om organisation og støtteforanstaltninger mellem punkterne a)-e) med et nærmere angivet antal points til hvert af disse punkter (henholdsvis 8, 7 og 6 points til de tre første punkter og 2 points til hvert af de to øvrige). Udbyderen besluttede derefter at indgå kontrakt med en af tilbudsgiverne.

Flere andre tilbudsgivere klagede til et klageorgan med henvisning til, at udbyderens vurdering af tilbudene med hensyn til punkterne a)-e) havde været afgørende for tildelingsbeslutningen. Klagerne gjorde gældende, at dette var en overtrædelse af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 36, stk. 2, hvorefter underkriterierne til tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud så vidt muligt skal angives i prioriteret rækkefølge. Klageorganet tog ikke klagen til følge.

Klagerne indbragte sagen for en forvaltningsdomstol, der stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen. Disse spørgsmål gik i deres kerne ud på, om det var tilladeligt, at udbyderen ikke på forhånd havde oplyst den indbyrdes vægtning af punkterne a)-e).

EF-domstolen udtalte (noget sammentrængt og til dels omformuleret, Klagenævnets litrering):

A. Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 36 og artikel 34 i Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet 93/38 skal fortolkes på samme måde. Det var derfor ikke nødvendigt at tage stilling til, hvilket af de to direktiver, der fandt anvendelse (præmis 20).

B. Principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed kræver, at potentielle tilbudsgivere på forhånd har kendskab til alle forhold, som ordregiveren tager i betragtning ved udvælgelsen af det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud og om muligt disse forholds relative betydning (præmis 24).

C. Fællesskabsretten er ikke til hinder for, at ordregiveren fordeler den oplyste vægt for et underkriterium mellem under-underkriterier til dette underkriterium under forudsætning af,

1) at der ikke herved sker ændring af de underkriterier, der er oplyst i udbudsbekendtgørelsen eller udbudsbetingelserne, og
2) at der ikke herved sker ændringer i forhold, som kunne have påvirket tilbudenes udformning, hvis de havde været kendt på forhånd, og
3) at der ikke herved sker diskrimination af tilbudsgivere.

Det tilkom den nationale domstol at tage stilling til, om betingelserne under 1)-3) var opfyldt.

Klagenævnet for Udbud

RESUMÉER AF AFGØRELSER FRA EF-DOMSTOLEN OG RETTEN I FØRSTE INSTANS JULI 1997–2002

NB! Resuméernes henvisninger til retsregler m.m. vil/kan efterhånden blive forældede, da resuméerne principielt er udarbejdet kort efter afgørelserne

Dette hæfte indeholder resuméer af afgørelser inden for udbudsområdet truffet af EF-domstolen og Retten i Første Instans juli 1997-2002, og som er optaget på EF-domstolens websted http://curia.eu.int/.

Resuméerne er udarbejdet af Klagenævnet for Udbud, der har ansvar for dem alene.

Den dato, der angives ved begyndelsen af hvert resumé, er datoen for den pågældende afgørelse. Den betegnelse for sagen, der angives ved hvert resumé, er EF-domstolens officielle betegnelse, sådan som den er angivet på Internettet.

Særligt om afgørelserne fra Retten i Første Instans bemærkes:

Afgørelserne om udbud fra Retten i Første Instans angår udbud foretaget af EU-organerne, dvs. Kommissionen, Rådet og Parlamentet mfl., idet Retten i Første Instans er klageorgan vedrørende sådanne udbud.

For EU-organernes udbud gælder nogle regler, der er indeholdt i to forordninger, dels »Finansforordningen«, dvs. nu Rådets forordning nr. 1605/2002 med senere ændringer, dels »Gennemførelsesforordningen«, dvs. nu Kommissionens forordning nr. 2342/2002 med senere ændringer.

De pågældende regler svarer i det væsentlige til de udbudsregler, der gælder for de ordregivende myndigheder i medlemsstaterne. Afgørelserne om udbud fra Retten i Første Instans kan derfor have en vis almen interesse, for så vidt som de (reelt) kan bidrage til fortolkningen af de udbudsregler, der gælder for de ordregivende myndigheder i medlemsstaterne, dvs. Udbudsdirektivet og Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet m.m.

I resuméerne af afgørelser fra Retten i Første Instans er som almindelig regel kun medtaget de dele af afgørelserne, der belyser forståelsen af almindelige udbudsretlige principper. Resuméerne omfatter således principielt ikke dele af afgørelserne, der angår specifikke reguleringer af EU-organernes optræden eller formelle spørgsmål om Rettens kompetence.

NB! Resuméernes henvisninger til retsregler m.m. vil/kan efterhånden blive forældede, da resuméerne principielt er udarbejdet kort efter afgørelserne.

Trods grove overtrædelser af udbudsreglerne skulle udbyderen ikke erstatte en forbigået tilbudsgivers positive opfyldelsesinteresse, da tilbudsgiverens tilbud var ukonditionsmæssigt, selvom det var indgået i tilbudsvurderingen, hvorfor der ikke var årsagsforbindelse mellem overtrædelserne og tilbudsgiverens hævdede

tab. Krav, der er fastsat som mindstekrav, skal overholdes også ved udbud med forhandling 49

Et organs faktiske virksomhed er afgørende for, om organet skal anses for at imødekomme almenhedens behov. Første kontroldirektiv er ikke til hinder for klagefrister, og frister på 14 dage var rimelige. Hvis ordregiver på forhånd har fastlagt kriterierne for udvælgelse af virksomheder til at give tilbud, skal disse kriterier oplyses 50

Om Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets anvendelse i Tyskland, selvom det ikke var gennemført der Sagen angik en tvist om et tysk udbud af tjenesteydelser på arkitektområdet og det bygningstekniske område. Den tyske instans, som sagen verserede for (Vergabeüberwachungsausschuß des Bundes), stillede et spørgsmål til EF-domstolen om anvendelsen af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet. Spørgsmålet havde reference til det tyske organs kompetence i forbindelse med, at Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ikke var gennemført i Tyskland. EF-domstolens besvarelse af spørgsmålet kan have interesse i en generel EU-retlig sammenhæng (om borgerne kan påberåbe sig ikke implementerede direktivbestemmelser for nationale domstole mv.), men skønnes uden interesse set fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel.

Dommen indeholder endvidere en afgørelse om, at det tyske organ kunne stille præjudicielle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen. Også denne del af dommen skønnes uden interesse set fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel.

EF-domstolens dom af 16. oktober 1997, sag C-304/96, Hera

Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 30, stk. 4, om unormalt lave bud skal forstås efter ordlyden

En italiensk sundhedsmyndighed udbød arbejdet med ombygning m.m. af en bygning. I udbudsbekendtgørelsen var angivet, at kontrakten ville blive tildelt den tilbudsgiver, hvis bud medførte det højeste nedslag i forhold til en nærmere angivet grundpris. Det laveste tilbud lå ca. 17 % under grundprisen. Udbyderen afviste dette tilbud med den begrundelse, at det var unormalt lavt, hvorefter udbyderen tildelte en anden tilbudsgiver kontrakten. Dette var i overensstemmelse med en italiensk lov, hvorefter tilbud på offentlige bygge- og anlægskontrakter indtil 1. januar 1997 skulle udelukkes, hvis tilbudsprisen lå under en vis grænse i forhold til de øvrige tilbudspriser.

Den tilbudsgiver, der havde afgivet det laveste bud, indbragte sagen for en italiensk forvaltningsdomstol og gjorde gældende, at udbyderen havde overtrådt Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 30, stk. 4. Denne bestemmelse foreskriver en bestemt procedure med hensyn til tilbud, der forekommer unormalt lave. Bestemmelsen indeholder en særlig undtagelse om, at udbyderen indtil udgangen af 1992 under visse betingelser ikke behøver følge proceduren.

Den italienske forvaltningsdomstol spurgte EF-domstolen, om medlemsstaterne kan indføre midlertidige undtagelser med hensyn til et direktivs ikrafttræden i tilfælde, hvor der allerede i direktivet er fastsat en frist til dette formål. EF-domstolen omformulerede spørgsmålet til at gå ud på, om Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 30, stk. 4, skal fortolkes således, at det efter udgangen af 1992 er tilladt en ordregivende myndighed at afvise bud, der er unormalt lave, uden at følge den procedure, der er foreskrevet i bestemmelsen.

Den italienske regering udtalte i et procesindlæg, at det var unødvendigt at besvare forvaltningsdomstolens spørgsmål som følge af, at den italienske minister for offentlige arbejder i et cirkulære havde opfordret de berørte myndigheder til at fortolke den omtalte lov i overensstemmelse med Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet.

EF-domstolen antog imidlertid sagen til realitetsbehandling med henvisning til (noget sammentrængt), at det efter domstolens faste praksis udelukkende tilkommer de nationale retsinstanser, for hvem en tvist er indbragt, at vurdere, om en præjudiciel afgørelse fra domstolen er nødvendig, og hvorefter en afvisning af et spørgsmål fra en national retsinstans kun er mulig, hvis den ønskede fortolkning af fællesskabsretten savner enhver forbindelse med hovedsagen.

EF-domstolen henviste til en dom fra 1995 om den bestemmelse i det tidligere bygge- og anlægsdirektiv, der svarer til det nugældende direktivs artikel 30, stk. 4. Domstolen henviste videre til, at den i den pågældende dom har udtalt, at den omtalte undtagelse i bestemmelsen kun kan anvendes i tilfælde, hvor den endelige ordretildeling finder sted inden udgangen af 1992, og at der er tale om en midlertidig undtagelsesordning af exceptionel karakter, som må fortolkes snævert.

EF-domstolen konkluderede herefter, at det efter udgangen af 1992 ikke er tilladt for en ordregivende myndighed at afvise unormalt lave bud uden at følge den procedure, der foreskrives i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 30, stk. 4.

EF-domstolens dom af 18. december 1997, sag C-5/97, Ballast Nedam Groep

Som dokumentation for egnethed kan der henvises til kvalifikationer hos datterselskaber under forudsætning af bevis for, at der reelt rådes over kvalifikationerne

For at komme i betragtning ved udbud af offentlige belgiske bygge- og anlægsarbejder skulle en tilbudsgiver være forhåndsgodkendt af den belgiske minister for offentlige arbejder. På et tidspunkt traf ministeren afgørelse om ikke at forny forhåndsgodkendelsen af en hollandsk entreprenør. Afgørelsen blev begrundet med, at den hollandske entreprenør var et holdingselskab, der ikke selv udførte entreprenørarbejder, og som til dokumentation for sine kvalifikationer henviste til arbejder udført af datterselskaber. Den hollandske entreprenør indbragte sagen for en belgisk forvaltningsdomstol, der forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen.

Ved dom i sagen af 14. april 1994, sag C-389/92 (ligeledes benævnt Ballast Nedam Groep), udtalte EF-domstolen bl.a. (lidt sammentrængt), at det tidligere bygge- og anlægsdirektiv skulle fortolkes således, at direktivet tillader, at der ved bedømmelsen af en godkendelsesansøgning fra den dominerende juridiske person i en koncern tages hensyn til kvalifikationerne hos de selskaber, der hører til koncernen, når den dominerende juridiske person godtgør, at den reelt disponerer over de nødvendige kvalifikationer hos de pågældende selskaber. Domstolen bemærkede, at det tilkommer den nationale ret at tage stilling til, om det tilstrækkelige bevis i denne henseende er ført.

Den belgiske forvaltningsdomstol stillede senere EF-domstolen et spørgsmål, om hvorvidt ordene i domstolens dom af 14. april 1994 »tillader, at…der tages hensyn til« kvalifikationerne hos de øvrige selskaber i koncernen, skal forstås således, at udbyderen er forpligtet til at tage hensyn til disse kvalifikationer.

Ved den her resumerede dom besvarede EF-domstolen dette spørgsmål bekræftende.

Domstolens dom af 2. december 1999 i sagen Holst Italia, se resuméet nedenfor, går ud på en lignende afgørelse med hensyn til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet.

EF-domstolens dom af 15. januar 1998, sag C-44/96, Mannesmann Anlagenbau (Strohal)

Om erhvervsdrivende aktieselskaber som ordregivere. EU-støtte medfører ikke udbudspligt i sig selv

Den her refererede dom og EF-domstolens dom af 10. november 1998 i sagen BFI Holding (Arnhem) angik i væsentlig grad det samme spørgsmål, dvs. om der er udbudspligt for et offentligt ejet aktieselskab, der både udfører offentlige serviceydelser og driver egentlig erhvervsmæssig virksomhed. I begge sager besvarede domstolen spørgsmålet bekræftende.

En lignende afgørelse er EF-domstolens dom af 27. februar 2003, Adolf Truley. I resuméet af denne dom er medtaget et indledende afsnit om begrebet »offentligretligt organ« med et forsøg på en terminologisk forenkling.

Se også EF-domstolens dom af 10. maj 2001 i sagen Agorà og resuméet af denne dom nedenfor.

Den her resumerede dom drejede sig om følgende:

Det østrigske statstrykkeri er oprettet i henhold til lov og har til hovedformål at udføre statslige trykningsopgaver som trykning af en lovtidende, pas, kørekort etc. Statstrykkeriet kan dog også udøve anden trykkerivirksomhed og kan deltage i virksomheder. Statstrykkeriet er efter det foreliggende et aktieselskab.

På et tidspunkt erhvervede statstrykkeriet et andet aktieselskab. Dette selskab stiftede endnu et aktieselskab, Strohal Rotationsdruck GesmbH (Strohal Rotationsdruck), i hvilket det af statstrykkeriet ejede aktieselskab har så godt som hele aktiekapitalen. Statstrykkeriet ejer således reelt Strohal Rotationsdruck, der har til formål at fremstille tryksager ved rotationstryk.

Der blev øjensynligt herefter taget skridt til et byggeri, der skulle rumme Strohal Rotationsdruck's trykningsanlæg. Det synes at fremgå, at byggeriet blev finansieret af statstrykkeriet, og at det skete med EU-støtte.

I forbindelse med byggeriet foretog statstrykkeriet et udbud af nogle installationsarbejder. Senere tilkendegav statstrykkeriet, at Strohal Rotationsdruck selv var ansvarlig for det pågældende udbud og aftaleindgåelsen i henhold til det. Udbudet blev ikke foretaget som EU-udbud.

En østrigsk virksomhed indklagede Strohal Rotationsdruck for et klageorgan og gjorde øjensynligt gældende, at Strohal Rotationsdruck skulle anses som ordregiver i henhold til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, således at det omtalte udbud skulle have været gennemført som EU-udbud.

Klageorganet (Bundesvergabeamt) stillede EF-domstolen en række spørgsmål, der navnlig sigtede til, om statstrykkeriet og Strohal Rotationsdruck skulle anses for ordregivende myndigheder i henhold til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet.

EF-domstolen udtalte (Klagenævnets litrering):

1) Ad statstrykkeriet: Afgørende for, om statstrykkeriet skulle anses for en ordregivende myndighed i henhold til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, var om statstrykkeriet er et offentligretligt organ i medfør af direktivets artikel 1, b. Statstrykkeriet opfyldt endvidere de tre betingelser, der stilles i denne bestemmelse, og som skal være opfyldt samtidig. Statstrykkeriet var således oprettet til at imødekomme almenhedens behov, dog ikke af industriel og kommerciel karakter (første betingelse). Det var uden betydning, at statstrykkeriet desuden kunne udøve andre former for virksomhed, og at imødekommelsen af almenhedens behov udgjorde en relativt ubetydelig del af statstrykkeriets virksomhed. Statstrykkeriet var desuden en juridisk person (anden betingelse). Endvidere var statstrykkeriet undergivet statens kontrol, ligesom staten havde aktiemajoriteten i statstrykkeriet, og statstrykkeriet opfyldt således bestemmelsens tredje betingelse om, at organet skal være undergivet kontrol eller for mere end halvdelens vedkommende være finansieret af bl.a. staten m.m. Statstrykkeriet var herefter en ordregivende myndighed i henhold til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet.

2) Ad Strohal Rotationsdruck: Et selskab, der driver forretningsvirksomhed, og i hvilket en ordregivende myndighed ejer en majoritetsandel af kapitalen, skal ikke anses for et offentligretligt organ i henhold til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 1, b, alene fordi selskabet er oprettet af den ordregivende myndighed, eller fordi denne ordregivende myndighed til selskabet overfører midler fra aktiviteter, den udøver med henblik på at imødekomme almenhedens behov, der ikke er af industriel eller kommerciel karakter. Denne udtalelse må skulle forstås således: Strohal Rotationsdruck skulle ikke selv anses for en ordregivende myndighed i henhold til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, fordi Strohal Rotationsdruck's formål ikke var at imødekomme almenhedens behov, men alene gik ud på at udføre trykkeriopgaver generelt. Det var uden betydning, at statstrykkeriet reelt ejede Strohal, og at statstrykkeriet finansierede Strohal Rotationsdruck's byggeri.

3) Ad statstrykkeriets overførelse af det omhandlede udbud til Strohal Rotationsdruck: En bygge- og anlægskontrakt, der er omfattet af Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, er fortsat omfattet af direktivet, selvom den ordregivende myndighed overdrager sine rettigheder og forpligtelser i henhold til kontrakten til en ikke ordregivende myndighed. Domstolen henviste herved til en formålsfortolkning af direktivet. Domstolen udtalte videre, at der kun kan gøres undtagelse fra det anførte, hvis det godtgøres, at kontrakten fra begyndelsen er omfattet af den ikke ordregivende myndigheds formål, og at det tilkom det østrigske klageorgan at tage stilling til, om dette var godtgjort i sagen.

4) Ad den eventuelle betydning af, at byggeriet skete med EU-støtte: Artikel 7, stk. 1 i forordning 2081/93 (hvorefter de støttede foranstaltninger skal være i overensstemmelse med traktaten, fællesskabets politikker og reglerne for indgåelse for offentlige kontrakter m.m.) betyder ikke, at modtagerne af støtte skal underkaste sig klageprocedurerne i henhold til første kontroldirektiv, når de ikke selv er ordregivende myndigheder. Denne besvarelse kan vel sammenfattes således, at det var uden betydning for sagen, at byggeriet skete med EU-støtte.

Retten i Første instans' kendelse af 26. maj 1998, sag T-60/98 R, Ecord Consortium mod Kommissionen

Tilbud modtaget efter tilbudsfristens udløb som følge af tilbuddets adressering. Ikke opsættende virkning for et sagsanlæg med hensyn til, om tilbuddet var indgivet rettidigt, da udbyderen klart havde angivet, hvem tilbuddet skulle sendes til, hvorfor der ikke forelå »fumus boni juris«

Kommissionen iværksatte et begrænset udbud vedrørende en tjenesteydelse. I opfordringen til de prækvalificerede virksomheder om at afgive tilbud angav Kommissionen, at tilbud skulle sendes til en konsulentvirksomhed på en nærmere angivet adresse, og at Kommissionen ikke måtte nævnes som adressat, idet dette kunne medføre, at tilbuddet først blev modtaget efter tilbudsfristens udløb.

Et konsortium, der afgav tilbud, sendte sit tilbud med angivelse af den omtalte konsulentvirksomhed som adressat, men nævnede også Kommissionen i adressatangivelsen. Som følge af Kommissionens procedurer for postmodtagelse medførte dette, at tilbuddet først blev modtaget af konsulentvirksomheden efter tilbudsfristens udløb. Kommissionen afviste derfor tilbuddet som for sent indgivet.

Konsortiet anlagde derefter sag mod Kommissionen ved Retten i Første Instans og påstod principalt Kommissionen tilpligtet at tage konsortiets tilbud i betragtning. Konsortiet begærede endvidere sagsanlægget tillagt opsættende virkning, og kendelsen af 26. maj 1998 er Rettens afgørelse af spørgsmålet om opsættende virkning.

Retten tog ikke begæringen om opsættende virkning til følge med henvisning til, at der ikke forelå »fumus boni juris«[1], idet konsortiet ikke havde fulgt angivelsen af, at Kommissionen ikke måtte nævnes som adressat.

EF-domstolens dom af 17. september 1998, sag C-323/96, Kommissionen mod Belgien

Det flamske parlament skulle overholde Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet

Sagen angik det særlige flamske parlaments opførelse af en parlamentsbygning i Bruxelles.

Opførelsen skete uden EU-udbud og uden overholdelse af reglerne for tildeling af kontrakter i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet og det tidligere bygge- og anlægsdirektiv 71/305 som ændret ved direktiv 89/440. Endvidere blev et enkelt arbejde tildelt ved udbud efter forhandling. Kommissionens påstand gik ud på, at EF-domstolen skulle fastslå, at disse forhold var i strid med de nævnte direktiver.

Belgien gjorde gældende, at overholdelse af direktiverne ikke havde været nødvendig og henviste til støtte herfor til to anbringender: Dels at byggeriet var omfattet af undtagelsesreglerne i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 4 om beskyttelse af medlemsstaternes væsentlige interesser m.m., dels (kort gengivet) at den belgiske forfatning ikke gav mulighed for at pålægge det flamske parlament at følge EU's udbudsregler.

[1] Dvs. en røg af god ret, altså sandsynlighed for, at sagsanlægget var berettiget.

Med hensyn til det første af de nævnte anbringender udtalte EF-domstolen, at der intet var fremkommet til støtte for det, og at anbringendet herefter ikke kunne tages til følge. Med hensyn til det andet anbringende henviste domstolen til sin faste praksis, hvorefter en medlemsstat ikke kan påberåbe sig forhold i sin nationale retsorden til støtte for manglende overholdelse af et direktiv. Dette anbringende kunne derfor heller ikke tages til følge.

EF-domstolen dømte herefter Belgien i overensstemmelse med Kommissionens påstand.

EF-domstolens dom af 24. september 1998, sag C-76/97, Tögel

Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets henvisning til CPC-nomenklaturen er bindende. Udrykningskørsel m.m. er omfattet af både bilag I A og bilag I B til direktivet og dermed af direktivets artikel 10. Skønnes i øvrigt uden interesse set fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel

Sagen angik en klage fra en østrigsk vognmand over, at en socialforsikringsinstitution ikke havde foretaget EU-udbud af sygetransport. Det østrigske klageorgan (Bundesvergabeamt), der behandlede sagen, stillede en række spørgsmål til EF-domstolen.

Nogle af spørgsmålene havde reference til det østrigske klageorgans kompetence i forbindelse med, at Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ikke var gennemført rettidigt i Østrig. EF-domstolens besvarelse af de pågældende spørgsmål kan have interesse i en generel EU-retlig sammenhæng (om borgerne kan påberåbe sig ikke implementerede direktivbestemmelser for nationale domstole mv.), men skønnes uden interesse set fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel.

Det østrigske klageorgan spurgte endvidere, om udrykningskørsel og sygetransport ledsaget af en redder hører under Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets bilag I A, kategori 2 (Landtransport, CPC-referencenummer 712) eller bilag I B, kategori 25 (Sundheds- og socialvæsen, CPC-referencenummer 93). Den omtalte kategorisering er afgørende for, om der er udbudspligt, jf. direktivets afsnit II.

EF-domstolen henviste til, at det af præamblen til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet fremgår, at henvisningen til CPC-nomenklaturen i direktivets bilag I A og I B er bindende. Domstolen henviste videre til, at CPC-referencenummer 93 klart udelukkende vedrører de lægelige aspekter af sundhedsvæsnet, og at dette referencenummer ikke omfatter landtransport i forbindelse hermed, hvilket er omfattet af CPC-referencenummer 712.

Domstolen konkluderede herefter, at udrykningskørsel og sygetransport ledsaget af en redder hører under begge kategorier, dvs. både under bilag I A, kategori 2, og bilag I B, kategori 25, således at en aftale om sådanne tjenesteydelser er omfattet af direktivets artikel 10 (hvorefter den indbyrdes værdirelation er afgørende ved aftaler om tjenesteydelser, der omfatter begge bilag).

Om et østrigsk klageorgans kompetence. Er uden interesse set fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel Sagen angik en klage over et østrigsk trafikselskabs administration af et udbud om indkøb af busser. Det østrigske klageorgan (Bundesvergabeamt), der behandlede sagen, stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen.

Spørgsmålene havde udelukkende reference til det østrigske klageorgans kompetence i forbindelse med, at andet kontroldirektiv, direktiv 92/13, ikke var gennemført rettidigt i Østrig. EF-domstolens besvarelse af spørgsmålene kan have interesse i en generel EU-retlig sammenhæng (om borgerne kan påberåbe sig ikke implementerede direktivbestemmelser for nationale domstole mv.), men skønnes uden interesse set fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel.

EF-domstolens dom af 10. november 1998, sag C-360/96, BFI Holding (ofte kaldet Arnhem el. lign.)

Et erhvervsdrivende organ kan opfylde kriteriet om »almenhedens behov«. Koncerndeltageres status som offentligretlige organer skal vurderes særskilt. En slags obiter dictum om koncessionsbegrebet

Den her refererede dom og EF-domstolens dom af 15. januar 1998 i sagen Mannesmann Anlagenbau (Strohal) angik i væsentlig grad det samme spørgsmål, dvs. om der er udbudspligt for et offentligt ejet aktieselskab, der både udfører offentlige serviceydelser og driver egentlig erhvervsmæssig virksomhed. I begge sager besvarede domstolen spørgsmålet bekræftende.

En lignende afgørelse er EF-domstolens dom af 27. februar 2003, Adolf Truley. I resuméet af denne dom er medtaget et indledende afsnit om begrebet »offentligretligt organ« med et forsøg på en terminologisk forenkling.

Se også EF-domstolens dom af 10. maj 2001 i sagen Agorà og resuméet af denne dom nedenfor.

Den her resumerede dom er yderst udførlig, og nedenstående resumé har nødvendigvis måttet udformes som en særdeles sammentrængt gengivelse. Realiteten synes dog relativt enkel, se slutningen af resuméet.

To hollandske kommuner stiftede et aktieselskab, der fik til formål at udføre affaldsindsamling og renholdelse af veje m.m. til imødekommelse af almenhedens behov. Samtidig indgik de to kommuner aftaler med aktieselskabet om udførelsen af affaldsindsamlingen m.m. i kommunerne, således at kommunerne betalte aktieselskabet vederlag herfor. De to kommuners overdragelse af de pågældende opgaver til aktieselskabet medførte en eneret for dette til at udføre opgaverne i kommunerne og blev i aftalerne benævnt koncessioner.

Ifølge vedtægterne kunne aktieselskabets aktionærer kun være offentligretlige juridiske personer o.l., og de to kommuner skulle have flertal i bestyrelsen. Det synes imidlertid at fremgå, at aktieselskabet skulle drive egentlig erhvervsvirksomhed inden for sit formål. Aktieselskabet blev senere organiseret som del af en koncern med et holdingselskab og to aktieselskaber.

En virksomhed, der udfører indsamling af affald, anlagde sag mod de to kommuner ved en hollandsk domstol og gjorde gældende, at kommunernes overdragelse af indsamling af affald m.m. til aktieselskabet skulle have været i EU-udbud i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet. Den hollandske domstol forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen.

Sagens centrale spørgsmål var, om aktieselskabet skulle anses for en ordregivende myndighed i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet artikel 1, b, idet det i så fald ville følge af direktivets artikel 6, at kommunernes overdragelse af opgaverne til aktieselskabet ikke krævede EU-udbud. Efter artikel 6 kræver indgåelse af aftaler om tjenesteydelser med en ordregivende myndighed nemlig ikke EU-udbud, hvis overdragelsen sker på grundlag af en eneret og i overensstemmelse med love eller administrative bestemmelser, der er forenelige med traktaten. Sagens problem var for så vidt det omvendte af, hvad der er sædvanligt i tvister om udbudspligt efter EU's udbudsdirektiver. Hvis aktieselskabet var en ordregivende myndighed, krævede overdragelsen af de omhandlede opgaver til selskabet ikke forudgående EU-udbud. (Derimod var aktieselskabet i så fald naturligvis selv omfattet af udbudspligten i henhold til udbudsdirektiverne.)

Afgørende for, om aktieselskabet var en ordregivende myndighed efter artikel 1, b, var om aktieselskabet skulle anses for et offentligretligt organ i henhold til bestemmelsens andet led. Afgørende i denne henseende var endvidere, om aktieselskabet opfyldt kriteriet om, at opgaven skal være at imødekomme almenhedens behov, idet de øvrige kriterier var opfyldt. Det, der gav den hollandske domstol anledning til tvivl, var ordene »dog ikke på det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område« i den pågældende sætning i artikel 1, b, øjensynligt fordi aktieselskabet havde til formål at drive erhvervsmæssig virksomhed. Den hollandske domstol stillede derfor EF-domstolen en længere række spørgsmål, der alle havde reference til de nævnte ord i artikel 1, b.

EF-domstolen udtalte (Klagenævnets litrering):

1) I anledning af, at Frankrig under sagen havde gjort gældende, at der ikke var udbudspligt, fordi de to kommuners overdragelse af opgaver til aktieselskabet var koncessioner: Domstolen beskæftigede sig ikke nærmere med spørgsmålet, da aktieselskabets vederlag for udførelse af opgaverne bestod alene i en pris og ikke i retten til at udføre tjenesteydelsen. Den pågældende udtalelse i dommen forekommer uklar, men skal tilsyneladende forstås som en slags »allerede fordi«-afgørelse af indhold nogenlunde således: Det var åbenbart, at der ikke var tale om koncessioner, og domstolen havde herefter ikke anledning til at tage stilling til det nøjagtige indhold af koncessionsbegrebet eller til, om Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet kan omfatte koncessioner.

2) Den omtalte sætning i direktivets artikel 1, b skal fortolkes sådan, at fællesskabslovgiver har sondret mellem almenhedens behov, dog ikke på det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område, på den ene side, og almenhedens behov på det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område på den anden side. Dette må efter sammenhængen skulle forstås således: Kriteriet om, at opgaven skal være at imødekomme almenhedens behov, kan opfyldes af et organ, der driver erhvervsmæssig virksomhed. Et sådant organ kan altså godt være et offentligretligt organ og dermed ordregiver i henhold til artikel 1, b.

3) Begrebet almenhedens behov, dog ikke på det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område, udelukker ikke behov, som imødekommes eller kan imødekommes af private virksomheder. Dette må efter sammenhæn-gen skulle forstås således: Et organ, der driver erhvervsmæssig virksomhed, kan godt være et offentligretligt organ og dermed ordregiver i henhold til direktivets artikel 1, b, selvom der optræder private aktører inden for samme erhvervsmæssige område.

4) Det er ikke afgørende for, om et organ er et offentligretligt organ i henhold til den omhandlede regel i artikel 1, b, hvilket omfang imødekommelsen af almenhedens behov, dog ikke på det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område, har inden for organets virksomhed. Dette må efter sammenhængen skulle forstås således: Et organ, der driver erhvervsmæssig virksomhed, kan opfylde kriteriet om at imødekomme almenhedens behov, blot det pågældende organ ikke udelukkende optræder erhvervsmæssigt.

5) Det er ligeledes uden betydning, om den erhvervsmæssige virksomhed udøves af en særskilt juridisk person, der tilhører samme gruppe eller »koncern« som organet. Det spørgsmål, som denne udtalelse var svar på, sigtede tilsyneladende til organiseringen af det omtalte aktieselskab som en del af en koncern med et holdingselskab. Udtalelsen må skulle forstås således: Et organ, der er et offentligretligt organ i henhold til artikel 1, b, er stadig et offentligretligt organ, selvom et selskab inden for samme koncern udøver erhvervsmæssig virksomhed. Domstolen tilføjede, at det forhold, at et selskab i en koncern er et offentligretligt organ, omvendt ikke i sig selv medfører, at de øvrige deltagere i koncernen også skal anses for offentligretlige organer, og domstolen henviste herved til dommen af 15. januar 1998, Mannesmann Anlagenbau (Strohal), se resuméet af denne dom ovenfor. Domstolen understregede således, at koncerndeltageres eventuelle status som offentligretlige organer skal vurderes særskilt for hver koncerndeltager.

6) Spørgsmålet, om der er tale om almenhedens behov, dog ikke på det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område, skal vurderes objektivt, således at den retlige form er uden betydning. Det spørgsmål, som denne udtalelse var svar på, sigtede tilsyneladende til, at kommunernes overdragelse af opgaver til aktieselskabet ikke havde udtrykkelig hjemmel i den hollandske lovgivning.

Dommen virker umiddelbart særdeles indviklet og vanskeligt forståelig og er navnlig kompliceret af, at den hollandske domstols spørgsmål og EF-domstolens svar i overensstemmelse med praksis er formuleret abstrakt.

Afgørelsens hovedlinjer synes dog enkle nok: Det omtalte aktieselskab var et offentligretligt organ og dermed en ordregivende myndighed, fordi det havde til opgave at imødekomme almenhedens behov, og fordi det ikke udelukkende drev erhvervsmæssig virksomhed.

Det fremgår, at EF-domstolen ved sin vurdering af sagen anlagde en formålsfortolkning i relation til udbudsreglernes formål, således som det er domstolens praksis.

EF-domstolens dom af 17. december 1998, sag C-306/97, Connemara Machine Turf

Et aktieselskab oprettet af staten og under væsentlig kontrol af staten var en ordregivende myndighed

Et irsk aktieselskab, der i sagen benævnes Skovkontoret, udbød i 1994 indkøb af gødningsstoffer uden udbudsbekendtgørelse i EF-Tidende. En forbigået tilbudsgiver anlagde sag mod Skovkontoret ved en irsk domstol og gjorde gældende, at indkøbet skulle have været udbudt efter det tidligere indkøbsdirektiv, direktiv 77/62 med senere ændringer. Det afgørende for sagen var, om Skovkontoret skulle anses for en ordregivende myndighed.

Skovkontoret er oprettet af den irske stat og har til formål at drive skovbrug og opretholde og vedligeholde en skovbrugsindustri m.m. Skovkontoret driver endvidere et antal nationalparker. Skovkontorets ledelse udnævnes af staten, og statens regler om aflønning og arbejdsbetingelser gælder for Skovkontorets medarbejdere. Staten har instruktionsbeføjelser over for Skovkontoret i nærmere bestemt omfang, og visse af Skovkontorets dispositioner skal godkendes af staten.

Den irske domstol spurgte EF-domstolen, om Skovkontoret skal anses for en ordregivende myndighed i henhold til det tidligere indkøbsdirektiv og i henhold til det gældende indkøbsdirektiv.

Med hensyn til det tidligere indkøbsdirektiv var det afgørende, om Skovkontoret skulle anses for at »svare til« en offentligretlig juridisk person i medfør af dette direktivs artikel 1, b. I et bilag til direktivet var for Irlands vedkommende angivet, at bestemmelsen omfattede »andre offentlige myndigheder, hvis offentlige indkøbsaftaler er undergivet statens kontrol«.

EF-domstolen udtalte:

Sagen kunne kun høre under det tidligere indkøbsdirektiv, da udbudet var foretaget og kontrakten var tildelt før fristen for gennemførelse af det nugældende indkøbsdirektiv. Domstolen skulle derfor kun svare på, om Skovkontoret var en ordregivende myndighed i henhold til det tidligere indkøbsdirektiv.

Samordningen på fælleskabsniveau af fremgangsmåderne ved offentlige indkøb har til formål at fjerne hindringerne for varernes frie bevægelighed, og for at give dette princip fuld virkning skal begrebet ordregivende myndighed fortolkes formålsbestemt. Den irske stat har som følge af sine beføjelser over for Skovkontoret mulighed for at kontrollere Skovkontorets økonomiske aktivitet. Selvom ingen bestemmelser udtrykkeligt fastsætter, at den statslige kontrol specifikt omfatter indkøb, kan staten i det mindste indirekte udøve en sådan kontrol.

Skovkontoret skulle herefter anses for at være en offentlig myndighed, hvis offentlige indkøbsaftaler er undergivet statens kontrol, jf. den ovenfor nævnte angivelse for Irlands vedkommende i et bilag til direktivet, og Skovkontoret var derfor en ordregivende myndighed i henhold til det tidligere indkøbsdirektiv.

Selvom domstolen ikke tog stilling til, om Skovkontoret er en ordregivende myndighed efter det nugældende indkøbsdirektiv, synes det åbenbart, at Skovkontoret er en ordregivende myndighed i henhold til dette direktivs artikel 1, b.

Ved dom afsagt samme dag i sagen C-353/96, Kommissionen mod Irland, blev Irland dømt i sagens anledning for ikke at have overholdt det tidligere indkøbsdirektiv, se resuméet straks nedenfor.

Forskellige spørgsmål vedrørende Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet. Uden interesse set fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel

Sagen angik en klage over et udbud af tjenesteydelser vedrørende teknisk rådgivning m.m. ved opførelsen af et børnehospital i Østrig. Den østrigske forvaltningsdomstol, der behandlede klagesagen, stillede forskellige spørgsmål til EF-domstolen.

Spørgsmålene havde navnlig reference til den østrigske lovgivning om offentlige udbud i forbindelse med, at Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ikke var gennemført rettidigt i Østrig. EF-domstolens besvarelse af de pågældende spørgsmål kan have interesse i en generel EU-retlig sammenhæng (om borgerne kan påberåbe sig ikke implementerede direktivbestemmelser for nationale domstole mv.), men skønnes uden interesse set fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel.

Et spørgsmål, om de omhandlede tjenesteydelser var omfattet af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, blev besvaret med, at det var åbenbart, at de var det. Heller ikke på dette punkt har dommen interesse set fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel, da forholdet også i Danmark ville blive anset for åbenbart.

EF-domstolens dom af 19. maj 1999, sag C-225/97, Kommissionen mod Frankrig

Statueret, at Frankrig på nogle punkter ikke havde gennemført andet kontroldirektiv behørigt

Statueret, at Frankrig ikke havde gennemført andet kontroldirektiv, direktiv 92/13, behørigt på nogle punkter. Det drejede sig om den attestationsordning, der er foreskrevet i direktivets kapitel 2, og om den forligsprocedure, der er omtalt i direktivets kapitel 4.

Efter direktivets artikel 2, stk. 1, kan medlemslandene ved direktivets gennemførelse vælge mellem forskellige foranstaltninger. Frankrig har valgt at indføre de foranstaltninger, der er nævnt i bestemmelsens litra c, dvs. bl.a. at det pålægges udbyderen at betale erstatning i stedet for at an-nullation af udbyderens beslutninger.[2] Kommissionen gjorde gældende, at den franske gennemførelse af direktivet var utilstrækkelig på dette punkt, men fik ikke medhold.

EF-domstolens dom af 16. september 1999, sag C-27/98, Metalmeccanica Fracasso og Leitschutz Handel und Montage

Udbyder var ikke forpligtet til at tildele den eneste tilbudsgiver kontrakten

En østrigsk ordregivende myndighed udbød efter Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet opsætning af et autoværn på en motorvej. Der indkom fire tilbud. Udbyderen forkastede tre af tilbudene af forskellige grunde og annullerede derefter udbudet, fordi man havde bestemt sig til en ændret udførelse af autoværnet. Under en klagesag for klageorganet Bundesvergabeamt bestred den tilbudsgiver, hvis tilbud ikke var blevet forkastet, dvs. den eneste resterende tilbudsgiver, berettigelsen af annullationen af udbudet.

Efter en bestemmelse i den østrigske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter kan et udbud tilbagekaldes, når der efter forkastelse af tilbud kun resterer én tilbudsgiver, og udbyderens annullation af udbudet havde efter det foreliggende hjemmel i denne bestemmelse. Bundesvergabeamt stillede imidlertid EF-domstolen et spørgsmål, der sigtede til, om den pågældende bestemmelse er i overensstemmelse med Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 18, stk. 1 (om tildeling af ordrer efter udelukkelse af tilbudsgivere, der ikke opfylder betingelserne med hensyn til økonomisk, finansiel og teknisk formåen).

EF-domstolen udtalte (Klagenævnets litrering, noget sammentrængt):

1) Der kan ikke af Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet udledes nogen forpligtelse til at indgå kontrakten i tilfælde, hvor der kun er én egnet tilbudsgiver. En ordregivende myndigheds beføjelse til at undlade at tildele en udbudt kontrakt eller til at gøre udbudsproceduren om er endvidere ikke efter direktivet er betinget af, at der foreligger vægtige grunde eller undtagelsestilfælde. Direktivets formål går ud på at udvikle en effektiv konkurrence og at sætte de ordregivende myndigheder i stand til at sammenligne forskellige bud og acceptere det mest fordelagtige bud, og når der kun er ét bud tilbage, er den ordregivende myndighed ikke i stand til at sammenligne priser m.m. Domstolen konkluderede, at en ordregivende myndighed ikke er forpligtet til at tildele ordren til den eneste bydende, der er blevet anset for egnet.

2) Direktivets artikel 18, stk. 1, kan påberåbes af borgerne for de nationale domstole. Denne udtalelse kan have interesse i en generel EU-retlig sammenhæng, men er en selvfølgelighed set fra en dansk udbudsretlig. synsvinkel.

Efter Klagenævnet for Udbuds praksis kan et EU-udbud kun annulleres, hvis der foreligger en saglig grund. Den under punkt 1) refererede udtalelse fra domstolen om, at en ordregivers undladelse af at indgå kontrakt m.m. ikke er betinget af vægtige grunde o.l., kunne efter formuleringen ses som udtryk for, at denne praksis er af tvivlsom holdbarhed. Udtalelsen skal dog utvivlsomt forstås på baggrund af omstændighederne i den konkrete sag og synes reelt at være i god overensstemmelse med den omtalte praksis hos Klagenævnet. Domstolens udtalelser under punkt 1) går i virkeligheden på, at udbyderens annullation af udbudet og iværksættelse af nyt udbud var sagligt begrundet i de bærende hensyn bag EU's udbudsregler.

EF-domstolens dom af 28. oktober 1999, sag C-81/98, Alcatel Austria mfl.

I henhold til første kontroldirektiv skal der være mulighed for at få tildelingsbeslutningen annulleret

Sagen angik en klage over et udbud efter Indkøbsdirektivet af et edb-system ved det østrigske motorvejsnet. Klagesagen verserede for det østrigske klageorgan Bundesvergabeamt.

Bundesvergabeamt stillede tre spørgsmål til EF-domstolen om anvendelsen af første kontroldirektiv, direktiv 89/665. Disse spørgsmål havde reference til Bundesvergabeamt's kompetence i henhold den østrigske lovgivning og første kontroldirektiv. Sagens hovedproblem kan tilsyneladende sammenfattes således:

Efter den østrigske lovgivning kunne Bundesvergabeamt kun annullere[3] afgørelser fra en ordregivende myndighed, indtil denne havde meddelt et såkaldt tilslag (»Zuschlag«). Ved begrebet tilslag forstås tilsyneladende en skriftlig og offentliggjort (?) meddelelse om, hvilken tilbudsgiver, der vil få tildelt kontrakten. Tilslag blev i praksis meddelt i forbindelse med kontraktsindgåelsen og kom derfor først til de andre tilbudsgiveres kundskab efter denne, hvilket øjensynlig havde til konsekvens, at Bundesvergabeamt typisk var afskåret fra at annullere selve beslutningen om tilslag.

EF-domstolen udtalte:

Ad spørgsmål 1 (lidt sammentrængt): Artikel 2, stk. 1, a og b, sammenholdt med artikel 2, stk. 6, i første kontroldirektiv skal forstås således, at medlemsstaterne er forpligtet til at indføre en klageprocedure, hvorefter klageren kan få ordregiverens beslutning om, med hvem der skal indgås kontrakt, kendt ugyldig.

Ad spørgsmål 2 og 3: Refereres ikke, da disse spørgsmål og besvarelsen udelukkende ses at have reference til Bundesvergabeamt's kompetence.

EF-domstolens dom af 28. oktober 1999, sag C-328/96, Kommissionen mod Østrig

Statueret, at Østrig havde overtrådt Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, første kontroldirektiv og traktatens artikel 30 (nu 28) ved et offentligt byggeri

Statueret, at Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, første kontroldirektiv 89/665 samt traktatens artikel 30 (nu artikel 28 EF, om forbud mod kvantitative indførselsrestriktioner m.m.) var overtrådt i forbindelse med et stort offentligt østrigsk byggeri.

Sagen angik først og fremmest en række formelle spørgsmål, der skønnes uden interesse for forståelsen af EU's udbudsregler.

EF-domstolens dom af 18. november 1999, sag C-107/98, Teckal
Indkøbsaftale med en fælleskommunal sammenslutning skulle udbydes efter Indkøbsdirektivet

I henhold til en italiensk lovgivning om offentlige virksomheder havde et antal kommuner oprettet et konsortium, hvis formål var at stå for produktion og forvaltning af varmeforsyning m.m. Konsortiet var en selvstændig juridisk person. Dets øverste organ var et repræsentantskab bestående af repræsentanter for kommunerne, men bestyrelsen og direktøren var ikke ansvarlige over direkte over for kommunerne. Konsortiet skulle have balance på budgettet og drive økonomisk forsvarlig virksomhed og skulle forrente den kapital, som kommunerne havde indskudt i det. Et eventuelt overskud skulle fordeles mellem kommunerne eller indgå i et reservefond eller geninvesteres.

En af de deltagende kommuner indgik uden udbud aftale med konsortiet om drift og vedligeholdelse af varmeanlæg og levering af brændsel til forskellige kommunale bygninger. Et italiensk firma, der driver virksomhed med vedligeholdelse af varmeanlæg og levering af fyringsolie, anlagde sag mod kommunen ved en italiensk forvaltningsdomstol og gjorde gældende, at den omtalte aftale skulle have været udbudt i henhold til EU´s udbudsdirektiver.

Den italienske forvaltningsdomstol forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen. Forvaltningsdomstolen bemærkede herved, at den fandt det vanskeligt at afgøre, om sagen hørte under Indkøbsdirektivet eller Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, men at den ikke kunne udelukke, at Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 6 fandt anvendelse. (Efter denne bestemmelse finder udbudspligten under visse forudsætninger ikke anvendelse på tjenesteydelsesaftaler, der tildeles et organ, som selv er ordregivende myndighed). Forvaltningsdomstolen bad derfor EF-domstolen fortolke Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 6.

EF-domstolen omformulerede spørgsmålet til at gå ud på (kort gengivet), om EU's udbudsregler finder anvendelse, når en ordregiver under de foreliggende omstændigheder overdrager en opgave til en sammenslutning, som ordregiveren selv deltager i.

EF-domstolen udtalte (Klagenævnets litrering):

1) Det relevante direktiv var Indkøbsdirektivet, da værdien af det, der skulle leveres, var større end tjenesteydelserne

2) Indkøbsdirektivet indeholder ikke en regel svarende til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 6, og Indkøbsdirektivet finder anvendelse, når en ordregivende myndighed vil indgå en gensidigt bebyrdende skriftlig aftale med en institution, der formelt er forskellig fra den, om levering af varer. Det er uden betydning, om den pågældende institution selv er en ordregivende myndighed.

3) Også den pågældende institution skal foretage EU-udbud, hvis den selv er en ordregivende myndighed (præmis 45).

EF-domstolens dom af 18. november 1999, sag C-275/98, Unitron Scandinavia og 3-S

Det danske Klagenævn for Udbud kan stille præjudicielle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen. Om forståelsen af indkøbsdirektivets artikel 2, stk. 2. Traktatens forbud mod forskelsbehandling på grundlag af nationalitet medfører en gennemsigtighedsforpligtelse

Sagen angik Indkøbsdirektivets artikel 2, stk. 2. Denne bestemmelse går (lidt sammentrængt) ud på: En ordregivende myndighed, der giver en ikke ordregivende myndighed ret eller eneret til at udføre tjenesteydelser, skal foreskrive, at det pågældende organ ved indgåelse af indkøbsaftaler respekterer princippet om forbud mod forskelsbehandling på grundlag af nationalitet.

Det danske Klagenævn for Udbud stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen om den nævnte bestemmelse, og EF-domstolen udtalte (Klagenævnet litrering):

1) Det danske Klagenævn for Udbud er en ret i henseende til traktatens artikel 177 (nu artikel 234 EF), dvs. at Klagenævnet for Udbud kan stille præjudicielle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen.

2) Indkøbsdirektivets artikel 2, stk. 2, har selvstændig betydning i forhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet.

3) Den ordregivende myndighed kan ikke kræve, at organet med ret/eneret til at udføre tjenesteydelser følger Indkøbsdirektivets udbudsprocedurer ved indkøb af varer. Den ordregivende myndighed skal derimod kræve, at organet respekterer princippet om forbud mod forskelsbehandling på grundlag af nationalitet.

4) Det nævnte princip må ikke fortolkes indskrænkende. Dette indebærer navnlig en gennemsigtighedsforpligtelse med henblik på, at den ordregivende myndighed kan konstatere, at princippet overholdes.

De sidste bemærkninger synes at være udtryk for en generel holdning i retning af øget anvendelse af traktatens grundlæggende principper på udbud, der ikke er omfattet af udbudspligten i henhold til udbudsdirektiverne, herunder en holdning om, at traktatens grundlæggende principper kan medføre en form for udbudspligt i sig selv. Holdningen uddybedes i EF-domstolens dom af 7. december 2000, Teleaustria og Telefonadress, i hvilken der også henvises til den her refererede dom.

EF-domstolens dom af 2. december 1999, sag C-176/98, Holst Italia

Som dokumentation for egnethed kan der henvises til ressourcer hos andre under forudsætning af bevis for, at der virkelig rådes over disse ressourcer

En italiensk kommune udbød i henhold til Tjenestydelsesdirektivet driften af rensningsanlæg og kloakrensning. Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud. I udbudsbekendtgørelsen var anført, at interesserede virksomheder skulle fremlægge dokumentation bl.a. for at have drevet et rensningsanlæg inden for de sidste tre år.

En af tilbudsgiverne var et tysk aktieselskab, der var stiftet af nogle tyske selskaber m.m. med henblik på at sætte disse i stand til at indgå kontrakter om indsamling og behandling af vand i udlandet. Det tyske aktieselskab havde ikke drevet et rensningsanlæg inden for de sidste tre år og fremlagde i stedet som dokumentation for sin egnethed forskellige oplysninger om en af stifterne, en tysk offentlig sammenslutning.

Udbyderen indgik kontrakt med det tyske aktieselskab, og en forbigået tilbudsgiver anlagde sag mod kommunen ved en italiensk forvaltnings-domstol med påstand om annullation af tildelingsbeslutningen. Den forbigåede tilbudsgiver støttede påstanden på, at det tyske aktieselskab ikke havde fremlagt den krævede dokumentation. Forvaltningsdomstolen forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen.

EF-domstolen henviste til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 31, stk. 3, og artikel 32, stk. 2, c (henholdsvis om, at en tjenesteyders økonomiske og finansielle formåen kan godtgøres ved ethvert dokument, som udbyderen finder egnet, og om at den tekniske formåen bl.a. kan godtgøres ved oplysning om de involverede teknikere m.m., uanset om de hører til tjenesteyderens virksomhed).

EF-domstolen udtalte videre: Det følger af de nævnte bestemmelsers formål og ordlyd, at ingen kan udelukkes fra deltagelse i en udbudsprocedure alene med den begrundelse, at han agter at benytte ressourcer, som tilhører en eller flere andre juridiske personer. En tjenesteyder, der ikke selv opfylder mindstekravene for deltagelse i et udbud, kan derfor henvise til kvalifikationerne hos tredjemænd, som agtes benyttet.

EF-domstolen udtalte desuden (noget sammentrængt): Et selskab, der henviser til kapaciteten i sammenslutninger eller virksomheder, som det er knyttet til, må imidlertid godtgøre, at det virkelig disponerer over disse sammenslutninger eller virksomheders ressourcer i nødvendigt omfang. Det tilkommer den nationale ret at afgøre, om et sådant bevis er ført. Ved denne bevisvurdering må der hverken på forhånd udelukkes visse former for bevis eller opstilles en formodning for, at tjenesteyderen råder over ressourcer, alene fordi disse tilhører samme koncern eller sammenslutning.

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 6. juli 2000, sag T-139/99, Alsace International Car Services mod Parlamentet

Udbyderen havde ikke pligt til at kontrollere, at den valgte tilbudsgiver opfyldte et krav i udbudsbetingelserne om, at den udbudte tjenesteydelse skulle udføres i overensstemmelse med national lovgivning. En tilbudsgiver, hvis tilbud var ukonditionsmæssigt, havde retlig interesse i at anlægge sag med påstand om annullation for at få mulighed for at afgive tilbud under et eventuelt nyt udbud

Parlamentet iværksatte et udbud vedrørende kørsler med chauffør, tilsyneladende i Strasbourg-området. I udbudsbetingelserne var angivet, at kørslerne skulle udføres med »anonyme« køretøjer. Det var desuden angivet, at nationale (dvs. franske) regler for kørslerne skulle overholdes. Efter at der var indkommet tilbud, besluttede Parlamentet at indgå kontrakt med en tilbudsgiver, der bestod af en sammenslutning af taxivognmænd i Strasbourg. En anden tilbudsgiver, en virksomhed, der ligeledes var beliggende i Strasbourg, anlagde sag mod Parlamentet ved Retten i Første Instans med påstand om annullation af Parlamentets beslutning om at indgå kontrakt med den valgte tilbudsgiver. Retten tog stilling til sagen således (Klagenævnets litrering):

Anbringende 1): Den valgte tilbudsgivers køretøjer opfyldte ikke kravet i udbudsbetingelserne om, at kørslerne skulle ske i anonyme køretøjer.

Dette anbringende sigtede til følgende: Efter sagsøgerens opfattelse kunne kørsel med anonyme køretøjer efter fransk lovgivning ikke ske ved brug af taxier. Den valgte tilbudsgiver benyttede imidlertid taxier til de udbudte kørsler, og Parlamentet havde derfor handlet i strid med udbudsreglerne ved at indgå kontrakt med den valgte tilbudsgiver.

Parlamentet bestred, at fransk lovgivning skulle forstås som hævdet af sagsøgeren, og gjorde gældende, at fransk lovgivning skulle forstås på en nærmere angiven anden måde, som den valgte tilbudsgiver opfyldte. Parlamentet anførte desuden, at Parlamentet ville have pligt til at opsige kontrakten med den valgte tilbudsgiver, hvis Parlamentets forståelse af fransk lovgivning viste sig at være forkert.

Retten tog ikke anbringendet til følge. Retten henviste til, at sagsøgeren ikke havde ført bevis for, at Parlamentet fortolkede den franske lovgivning klart forkert (præmis 43). Retten henviste desuden til, at Parlamentet ikke havde pligt til at kontrollere, at den valgte tilbudsgiver udførte kørslerne i overensstemmelse med fransk lovgivning, og at det var den valgte tilbudsgivers forpligtelse at sørge for dette (præmis 44). Retten henviste videre til den nævnte tilkendegivelse fra Parlamentet om eventuel opsigelse af kontrakten (præmis 45).

Anbringende 2): Parlamentet havde udsat tilbudsgivere med limousinekøretøjer for forskelsbehandling.

Det forekommer lidt uklart, hvad dette anbringende sigtede til, men det var tilsyneladende følgende: Efter sagsøgerens opfattelse gik den franske lovgivning ud på, at anonym kørsel kun kan udføres med »limousiner«, og bl.a. sagsøgerens tilbud var derfor gået ud på kørsel med limousiner. I Frankrig beskattes limousiner imidlertid højere end taxier, og der var derfor efter sagsøgerens opfattelse sket en forskelsbehandling til skade for bl.a. sagsøgeren. Anbringendet var for så vidt en slags uddybning af anbringende 1.

Retten tog ikke anbringendet til følge med begrundelse reelt svarende til begrundelsen ad anbringende 1 (præmis 52-54).

Anbringende 3): Den valgte tilbudsgiver opfyldte ikke et kvalifikationskrav i udbudsbetingelserne:

Afvist, da anbringendet for fremsat for sent (præmis 67).

Parlamentet havde gjort gældende, at sagsøgeren ikke havde retlig interesse i sagsanlægget, da sagsøgeren ikke kunne få tildelt kontrakten som følge af, at sagsøgerens tilbud ikke opfyldte nogle nærmere angivne krav til den udbudte kørsels omfang.

Parlamentet fik imidlertid ikke medhold på dette punkt. Retten henviste til, at sagsøgeren havde retlig interesse i at anlægge sagen for at få mulighed for at afgive tilbud under et nyt udbud, hvis sagsøgeren fik medhold i sin påstand om annullation af tildelingsbeslutningen (præmis 33).

Som det fremgår, fik sagsøgeren ikke medhold i sagens realitet. Rettens afgørelse herom blev imidlertid reelt ændret ved Rettens dom af 11. juni 2002 i sag T-365/00, efter at det som følge af en fransk dom var konstateret, at det var sagsøgerens forståelse af fransk lovgivning, der var den rigtige, og at Parlamentets forståelse var forkert.

Retten i Første Instans' kendelse af 20. juli 2000, sag T-169/00 R, Esedra mod Kommissionen

Ikke opsættende virkning, da betingelsen om uopsættelighed ikke var opfyldt

Denne kendelse er Rettens afgørelse om opsættende virkning i den sag, der blev afgjort ved Rettens dom af 26. februar 2002 med sagsnummer T-169/00.

Sagen angik et udbud iværksat af Kommissionen vedrørende drift af en børneinstitution. Sagen var anlagt af en tilbudsgiver, der ikke havde fået tildelt kontrakten. Sagsøgeren gjorde gældende, at Kommissionen havde overtrådt udbudsreglerne på forskellige punkter.

Ved kendelsen af 20. juli 2000 afslog Retten en begæring fra sagsøgeren om opsættende virkning. Rettens afgørelse herom blev begrundet med, at betingelsen om uopsættelighed ikke var opfyldt, idet det ikke var bevist, at sagsøgeren ville lide et alvorligt og uopretteligt tab, hvis der ikke blev givet opsættende virkning (præmis 53).

Refereres i øvrigt ikke, da afgørelsen indgår som et led i Rettens faste praksis med hensyn til opsættende virkning. Der henvises om denne praksis til Klagenævnets resumé af Rettens kendelse af 20. september 2005 i sag T-195/05 R, Deloitte mod Kommissionen (se Klagenævnets samling af resuméer af afgørelser om udbud fra EF-domstolen og Retten i Første Instans 2003-2005).

EF-domstolens dom af 26. september 2000, sag C-225/98, Kommissionen mod Frankrig

Forudgående vejledende bekendtgørelse er ikke obligatorisk efter Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet. Tildelingskriterium om lokal beskæftigelse var lovligt. Der skal ved begrænset udbud prækvalificeres mindst fem ansøgere. Forskellige overtrædelser

Sagen angik et stort antal skolebyggerier gennem en årrække i den franske region Nord-Pas de Calais. Kommissionen gjorde gældende, at Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet (til dels det tidligere bygge- og anlægsdirektiv 71/305 med senere ændringer) var overtrådt på et antal punkter. EF-domstolen tog stilling til sagen således (Klagenævnets litrering):

1) Påstand om, at Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet var overtrådt som følge af, at der ikke var udsendt forudgående vejledende bekendtgørelser i medfør af direktivets artikel 11, stk. 1: Ikke taget til følge med henvisning til, at det af direktivets artikel 12, stk. 2, og artikel 13, stk. 4, fremgår, at en sådan vejledende bekendtgørelse ikke er obligatorisk. Også henvist til forarbejderne til det tidligere bygge- og anlægsdirektiv, herunder at et forslag fra Kommissionen om, at den vejledende bekendtgørelse skulle være obligatorisk, ikke blev fulgt af Rådet.

2) Påstand om, at Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 30, stk. 1, (om tildelingskriterier) var overtrådt som følge af, at der ved nogle af de omhandlede udbud var anvendt et tildelingskriterium om benyttelse af lokal arbejdskraft: Ikke taget til følge. Udtalt, at artikel 30, stk. 1, ikke udelukker enhver mulighed for, at de ordregivende myndigheder kan benytte en betingelse om bekæmpelse af arbejdsløshed som et kriterium, under forudsætning af, at betingelsen er i overensstemmelse med alle de grundlæggende principper i fællesskabsretten, herunder navnlig princippet om forbud mod forskelsbehandling, som dette følger af traktatens bestemmelser om etableringsretten og den frie udveksling af tjenesteydelser. Udtalt, at kriteriet skal være udtrykkeligt nævnt i udbudsbekendtgørelsen. Endvidere henvist til, at Kommissionen ikke havde gjort gældende, at kriteriet var uforeneligt med fællesskabsrettens grundlæggende principper, eller at det ikke havde været offentliggjort i udbudsbekendtgørelsen.

Dommen indeholder vedrørende dette punkt også nogle bemærkninger om forståelsen af Beentjes-dommens afgørelse med hensyn til en betingelse om beskæftigelse af langtidsledige (dom af 29. september 1988 i sag C-31/87). Herunder udtalt, at den pågældende betingelse i Beentjessagen var et tildelingskriterium.[4]

3) Påstand om, at direktivets artikel 22 (om antallet af prækvalificerede) var overtrådt som følge af, at det i nogle af udbudsbekendtgørelserne var angivet, at højst fem ansøgere ville blive opfordret til at afgive bud: Taget til følge med henvisning til, at det antal virksomheder, som en ordregivende myndighed opfordrer til at afgive bud ved et begrænset udbud, under ingen omstændigheder kan være mindre end fem.

4) Påstand om, at direktivets artikel 30, stk. 2 og det tidligere direktivs artikel 29, stk. 2, (om tildelingskriterier) var overtrådt som følge af, at angivelsen af tildelingskriteriet i de fleste af udbudsbekendtgørelserne blot var gået ud på en henvisning til en fransk lovgivning om tildeling af offentlige kontrakter: Taget til følge bl.a. med henvisning til, at Frankrig ikke havde bevist rigtigheden af et anbringende om, at tildelingskriterierne var udtrykkeligt nævnt i udbudsbetingelserne.

5) Påstand om, at traktatens artikel 59 om fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser (nu artikel 49 EF) var overtrådt som følge af, at et stort antal af udbudsbekendtgørelserne havde angivet arbejder, der skulle udføres, ved henvisninger til franske erhvervsvirksomheders klassifikationer af forskellige arbejder: Taget til følge. Udtalt, at der var tale om en indirekte forskelsbehandling og dermed en restriktion for den frie udveksling af tjenesteydelser. Herved henvist til, at det i princippet kun var franske ansøgere, der umiddelbart kunne gennemskue klassifikationernes betydning, og at det var vanskeligere for bydende fra andre medlemsstater at afgive bud inden for fristen, når de først skulle indhente oplysninger om referencernes genstand og indhold.

6) Påstand om, at traktatens artikel 59 (nu artikel 49 EF) og artikel 26 i det tidligere bygge- og anlægsdirektiv var overtrådt som følge af, at det i nogle af udbudsbekendtgørelserne var krævet, at arkitekten skulle være medlem af den franske arkitektsammenslutning, og at der i en enkelt udbudsbekendtgørelse var stillet krav om en nærmere angivet erhvervskvalifikation: Erkendt af Frankrig og taget til følge.

7) Påstand om, at direktiverne var overtrådt som følge af, at regionen ikke havde givet Kommissionen meddelelse om indgåede kontrakter m.m.: Erkendt af Frankrig og taget til følge.

[4] Dommen synes at medføre uklarhed med hensyn til, hvorledes vilkår om beskæftigelse af lokal arbejdskraft ol. forholder sig til udbudsreglernes system. Et sådant vilkår er traditionelt blevet opfattet som en »supplerende betingelse«, der skal nævnes i udbudsbekendtgørelsen, og ikke som et tildelingskriterium. Den her resumerede dom ser derimod tilsyneladende et sådant vilkår som et særligt tildelingskriterium, der kan anvendes ved siden af udbudsdirektivernes sædvanlige tildelingskriterier eller som underkriterium til tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud, men som dog skal nævnes udtrykkeligt i udbudsbekendtgørelsen. Konsekvensen synes at være, at en tilbudsgivers opfyldelse af vilkår som de omhandlede kan indgå i udbyderens tildelingsbeslutning

EF-domstolens dom af 3. oktober 2000, sag C-380/98, University of Cambridge

Om forståelsen af kriteriet om, at driften for mere end halvdelens vedkommende skal være finansieret af det offentlige. Generelle bemærkninger om udbudsdirektivernes formål

Sagen angik en tvist mellem universitetet i Cambridge og det britiske finansministerium, om hvorvidt universitetet skulle anses for et offentligretligt organ i henhold til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 1, b og Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 1, b.

Følgende synes at fremgå: I hvert fald i alt væsentligt drejede tvisten sig om, hvorvidt universitetet opfylder betingelsen i bestemmelsen om, at driften for mere end halvdelens vedkommende skal være finansieret af ordregivende myndigheder (staten m.m.). Universitetet gjorde gældende, at det ikke opfylder denne betingelse som følge af, at dets indtægter hidrører fra forskellige kilder, hvorimod finansministeriet mente, at universitetet opfylder betingelsen.

Den engelske domstol, der behandlede sagen, stillede fire spørgsmål til EF-domstolen, og EF-domstolens besvarelse kan gengives således:

Ad spørgsmål 1: Formålet med udbudsdirektiverne er at fjerne hindringerne for den frie udveksling af goder og tjenesteydelser og følgelig at beskytte interesserne hos de erhvervsdrivende, der er etableret i en medlemsstat, og som ønsker at tilbyde goder eller tjenesteydelser til ordregivende myndigheder i en anden medlemsstat. Formålet med direktiverne er således at fjerne risikoen for, at der indrømmes indenlandske bydende eller ansøgere en fortrinsstilling ved de ordregivende myndigheders indgåelse af kontrakter.

Stipendier og tilskud, der betales til støtte for forskningsarbejde, skal betragtes som finansiering, der ydes af en ordregivende myndighed, hvilket også gælder, selvom modtageren er en person, der som tjenesteyder er en del af universitetet. Støtte til studerende fra lokale uddannelsesmyndigheder, svarende til undervisningsgebyret, skal ligeledes betragtes således.

Derimod skal betalingen fra ordregivende myndigheder som modydelser for kontraktsbestemt forskning eller for rådgivning eller tilrettelæggelse af konferencer ikke betragtes som finansiering ydet af en ordregivende myndighed.

Ad spørgsmål 2 og 3: Udtrykket »mere end halvdelen« i den omhandlede bestemmelse skal forstås bogstaveligt, og der skal ved beregningen tages hensyn til samtlige indtægter, herunder indtægt ved forretningsmæssig aktivitet.

Ad spørgsmål 4 (stærkt sammentrængt): Beregningen af, om et organ som et universitet for mere end halvdelen finansieres af ordregivende myndigheder, skal foretages årligt på grundlag af de – eventuelt forventede – tal, der er tilgængelige ved begyndelsen af regnskabsåret.

EF-domstolens dom af 5. oktober 2000, sag C-16/98, Kommissionen mod Frankrig

Om opdeling af kontrakter under Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet. Forbudet mod forskelsbehandling beskytter også potentielle tilbudsgivere

Dommens præmisser er særdeles udførlige, og gengivelsen af dem nedenfor er stærkt sammentrængt og til dels angivet i en anden rækkefølge end i dommen.

Et fransk regionalt foretagende på departementsplan (departementet Vendée), der består af forskellige fælleskommunale sammenslutninger med ansvar for elforsyning, udbød 37 kontrakter om udførelse af elforsynings- og vejbelysningsarbejder i regionen. Der var tale om en række enkeltstående vedligeholdelses- og udvidelsesarbejder på de eksisterende el- og vejbelysningsnet i departementet. Det regionale foretagende var tilsyneladende koordinator og administrator af udbudene, og de enkelte kontrakter skulle indgås særskilt med vedkommende fælleskommunale sammenslutning.

Alle kontrakterne blev udbudt samtidig i en fransk publikation. Der sendtes, ligeledes samtidig, udbudsbekendtgørelser til EF-Tidende med hensyn til seks af kontrakterne. Øjensynlig skulle det efter udbyderens opfattelse vurderes særskilt for hver af kontrakterne, om den pågældende kontrakts værdi nåede op på Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivets tærskelværdi, og dette var efter det foreliggende kun tilfældet for de seks kontrakter, for hvis vedkommende der blev sendt udbudsbekendtgørelser til EF-Tidende.

Kommissionen gjorde under sagen navnlig gældende, at de 37 kontrakter angik ét enkelt arbejde, og at der derfor var sket overtrædelse af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivets artikel 14, stk. 13, hvorefter ordregiverne ikke må omgå direktivet ved at opdele kontrakterne.

EF-domstolen afgjorde sagen således:

Bedømmelsen af, om der var tale om et enkelt arbejde, skulle ske under hensyn til den økonomiske og tekniske funktion af de omhandlede el- og vejbelysningsnet. Et elforsyningsnet og et vejbelysningsnet har ikke samme økonomiske og tekniske funktion, og vurderingen skulle derfor foretages særskilt for elforsyningsnettene og vejbelysningsnettene.

Med hensyn til vejbelysningsnettene påhvilede det Kommissionen at godtgøre, at disse net teknisk og økonomisk kunne betegnes som en enhed på departementsniveau. Kommissionen havde imidlertid ikke anført sådanne forhold, og selvom hvert offentligt vejbelysningsnets økonomiske og tekniske funktion i departementet var den samme, kunne alle de omhandlede vejbelysningsnet ikke betragtes som en helhed, der har samme økonomiske og tekniske funktion på departementsplan. Kommissionens synspunkt om, at der var sket omgåelse i form af opdeling, blev derfor ikke taget til følge med hensyn til vejbelysningsnettene.

Med hensyn til elforsyningsnettene henviste EF-domstolen til direktivets formål, som er at sikre virksomheder fra andre medlemsstater mulighed for at byde på kontrakter eller grupper af kontrakter, som kan være af interesse for dem. Domstolen udtalte, at flere arbejder kan udgøre ét arbejde i direktivets forstand, hvis dette formål skal nås. Domstolen henviste desuden til, at elforsyningsnettene kunne forbindes indbyrdes, og at de som helhed opfyldt samme økonomiske og tekniske funktion, dvs. at sælge elektricitet til forbrugerne i departementet. Der var endvidere væsentlige forhold i sagen, der talte for, at kontrakterne om elnettene skulle opfattes under ét på departementsniveau, fx det samtidige udbud, ligheder mellem udbudsbekendtgørelserne, den fælles geografiske ramme, og at det udbydende regionale foretagende havde det overordnede ansvar for koordinationen. Kontrakterne om elforsyning skulle derfor ses som dele af ét enkelt arbejde, der var blevet kunstigt opdelt.

Kommissionen fik således medhold med hensyn til elforsyningsnettene.

Det var endvidere en overtrædelse af direktivets artikel 4, stk. 2, om forbud mod forskelsbehandling, at alle kontrakterne om elforsyning var udbudt i en fransk publikation, medens kun nogle af dem var udbudt i EF-Tidende. Domstolen henviste herved til, at artikel 4, stk. 2, omfatter potentielle tilbudsgivere, og at bestemmelsen derfor også beskytter dem, der er blevet afholdt fra at byde, fordi de er blevet stillet ringere som følge af den af ordregiveren fulgte procedure.

Sagen omfattede forskellige andre spørgsmål, der skønnes mindre væsentlige.

EF-domstolens dom af 5. oktober 2000, sag C-337/98, Kommissionen mod Frankrig

Beslutning om ikke at foretage udbud var truffet før direktivets ikrafttræden og var dermed lovlig. Nogle senere forhandlinger efter direktivets ikrafttræden angik ikke grundlæggende kontraktbestemmelser

Dommen er særdeles udførlig, og nedenstående resumé er et yderst sammentrængt referat.

Sagen angik et anlæg af en bybane i Rennes. Anlægsarbejdet tildeltes en entreprenør efter forhandling uden forudgående udbud, og Kommissionen gjorde under sagen gældende, at der skulle være sket udbud i henhold til Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet.

Frankrig blev imidlertid frifundet med henvisning til, at beslutningen om at gennemføre en procedure med forhandling uden forudgående udbud blev truffet længe før Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivets ikrafttræden. Nogle efterfølgende forhandlinger efter direktivets ikrafttræden gjorde ingen forskel, da Kommissionen ikke havde godtgjort, at disse forhandlinger var udtryk for vilje hos parterne til at genforhandle grundlæggende kontraktbestemmelser.

EF-domstolens dom af 7. december 2000, sag C-324/98, Teleaustria og Telefonadress

Koncession om udgivelse af telefonbøger var omfattet af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet. Der er ikke udbudspligt for koncession om tjenesteydelser efter dette direktiv, men bl.a. principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed skal overholdes

En østrigsk statsvirksomhed, der har til opgave at sørge for, at der udfærdiges telefonbøger, ønskede at udlicitere opgaven hermed i form af en offentlig tjenestydelseskoncession. De ydelser, der skulle udføres af tjenesteyderen, skulle gå ud på indsamling og bearbejdelse af abonnentdata, trykning af telefonbøger, og udførelse af reklamevirksomhed. Tjenesteyderens vederlag herfor skulle tilsyneladende bestå af, at tjenesteyderen oppebar indtægten ved salg af telefonbøger og reklameindtægter.

Efter at den østrigske statsvirksomhed havde annonceret om tjenesteydelsen i en avis, klagede to virksomheder til et østrigsk klageorgan (Bundesvergabekontrollkommission). Klagerne gjorde gældende, at der skulle ske udbud af tjenesteydelsen i medfør af EU's udbudsregler.

Det østrigske klageorgan stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen. Disse spørgsmål gik kort gengivet ud på 1) om tjenesteydelsen var omfattet af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet eller Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, og 2) om tjenesteydelsen skulle egentligt udbydes i henhold til vedkommende direktiv.

EF-domstolen besvarede spørgsmålene således:

Ad 1) Da der var tale om ydelser direkte forbundet med en virksomhed vedrørende ydelser af offentlige teletjenester, var aftalen om tjenesteydelsen omfattet af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet.

Ad 2) På grundlag af en gennemgang af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivets forhistorie og forarbejder konstaterede EF-domstolen, at koncessionskontrakter om tjenesteydelser ikke er omfattet af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet, idet fællesskabslovgiver har besluttet, at de ikke skal være omfattet af dette direktiv.

EF-domstolen understregede imidlertid, at de ordregivende myndigheder er forpligtet til at overholde traktatens grundlæggende regler i almindelighed og princippet om forbud mod forskelsbehandling på grundlag af nationalitet i særdeleshed. Domstolen udtalte videre, at dette navnlig indebærer en gennemsigtighedsforpligtelse, der består i at sikre en passende grad af offentlighed til fordel for enhver potentiel tilbudsgiver, der gør det muligt at åbne markedet for tjenesteyderne for konkurrence og at kontrollere, at udbudsprocedurerne er upartiske.

EF-domstolens dom af 7. december 2000, sag C-94/99, ARGE Gewässerschütz

Tilbudsgivere, der modtog statsstøtte, kunne komme i betragtning

Det østrigske Land- og Skovbrugsministerium iværksatte et udbud i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet af prøveudtagninger og analyser af vand fra en række søer og floder. Der indkom forskellige tilbud, herunder fra to østrigske forsknings- og forsøgscentre, der begge modtager statstilskud.

En virksomhed, der efter det foreliggende var en af de øvrige tilbudsgivere, klagede til et østrigsk klageorgan (Bundesvergabekontrollkommission) og gjorde gældende, at de to forsknings- og forsøgscentre som følge af deres statstilskud ikke kunne komme i betragtning ved tildelingen af opgaven. Det østrigske klageorgan gav ikke klageren medhold, hvorefter klageren indbragte sagen for ankeinstansen (Bundesvergabeamt).

Ankeinstansen stillede en række spørgsmål til EF-domstolen, og domstolen besvarede spørgsmålene således:

Det er ikke en tilsidesættelse af EU's ligebehandlingsprincip i sig selv, at organer, som modtager offentlig støtte, får adgang til at deltage i en udbudsprocedure vedrørende en offentlig kontrakt. I modsat fald ville fællesskabslovgiver have fastsat udtrykkelige bestemmelser herom. Domstolen henviste herved bl.a. til, at begrebet tjenesteydere i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 1, c bl.a. omfatter offentlige organer, der tilbyder tjenesteydelser.

At en ordregivende myndighed tager tilbud i betragtning fra organer, som modtager offentligt tilskud fra ordregiveren selv eller andre ordregivende myndigheder, og som følge deraf kan afgive væsentligt lavere bud end andre bydende, udgør ikke skjult forskelsbehandling og er ikke i strid med traktatens artikel 59 (om fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser, nu artikel 49 EF). Statsstøtte ydes ganske vist almindeligvis til virksomheder i den stat, der yder støtten, men den heraf følgende ulige behandling af virksomheder fra andre medlemsstater ligger i selve begrebet statsstøtte.

EF-domstolen udtalte dog videre: Det kan ikke udelukkes, at de ordregivende myndigheder under visse særlige omstændigheder skal eller kan tage hensyn til, at der er tale om tilskud, og navnlig om støtte, der ikke er i overensstemmelse med traktaten, og i givet fald udelukke de bydende, der modtager en sådan støtte eller et sådant tilskud.[5]

EF-domstolens dom af 1. februar 2001, sag C-237/99, Kommissionen mod Frankrig

Almene boligselskaber var ordregivere omfattet af Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet. Generelle bemærkninger om udbudsdirektiverne formål

Ved dommen fastsloges, at franske almene boligselskaber m.m. er offentligretlige organer i henhold til artikel 1, b i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet.

EF-domstolen fremhævede, at begrebet ordregiver i direktivets artikel 1 skal fortolkes formålsbestemt i lyset af udbudsdirektivernes formål, som domstolen beskrev således, øjensynlig til dels med reference til den konkrete sag:

At fjerne hindringerne for den frie udveksling af tjenesteydelser og varer og følgelig at beskytte interesserne for de erhvervsdrivende, der er etableret i en medlemsstat, og som ønsker at tilbyde goder eller tjenesteydelser til ordregivende myndigheder i en anden medlemsstat.

At fjerne risikoen for, at der indrømmes indenlandske bydende eller ansøgere en fortrinsstilling ved de ordregivende myndigheders indgåelse af kontrakter, og at fjerne muligheden for, at et organ, der er finansieret af staten, lokale myndigheder eller andre offentligretlige organer, lader sig lede af andre hensyn end økonomiske.

Bortset fra de nævnte formålsangivelser har dommen næppe særlig interesse set fra en dansk synsvinkel, idet almene boligselskaber i Danmark anses for ordregivere i henhold til udbudsdirektiverne, og idet det formentlig er oplagt, at almene boligselskaber m.m. som de franske i Danmark ville være blevet anset således.

EF-domstolens dom af 8. marts 2001, sag C-97/00, Kommissionen mod Frankrig

Statueret, at Frankrig ikke havde gennemført direktiv 97/92 rettidigt

Statueret, at Frankrig har tilsidesat sine forpligtelser i henhold til direktiv 97/92 om ændring af Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, Indkøbsdirektivet og Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, idet Frankrig ikke inden den fastsatte frist har vedtaget de love og administrative bestemmelser, der er nødvendige for at efterkomme direktivet.

Frankrig havde ikke bestridt, at direktiv 97/52 ikke var gennemført rettidigt, men havde anmodet domstolen om at fastslå, at proceduren til direktivets gennemførelse var ved at blive afsluttet. Domstolen nævnede imidlertid ikke dette i domskonklusionen og pålagde Frankrig at betale sagsomkostninger.

[5] Statsstøtte er principielt forbudt i henhold til artikel 87 EF, men der gælder forskellige undtagelser herfra, således som det også er nævnt i bestemmelsen.

EF-domstolens dom af 10. maj 2001, sager C-223/99 og C-260/99, Agorà

Et organ, der udelukkende drev erhvervsmæssig virksomhed, var ikke et offentligretligt organ

Afgørelsen angik en italiensk virksomhed, der i det følgende benævnes Ente, og som arrangerer messer, udstillinger og kongresser ol. Ente er en privatretlig juridisk person, der ikke virker med fortjeneste for øje, og som udøver sin virksomhed i det offentliges interesse med det formål at fremme handelen. Ente skal basere driften på overskud, effektivitet og rentabilitet. Ente kan optage lån og kan deltage i andre selskaber med lignende formål.

Der verserede for en italiensk forvaltningsdomstol to sager, i hvilke det øjensynlig var afgørende, om Ente skal anses for et offentligretligt organ i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 1, b og dermed en ordregivende myndighed.

Den ene sag var anlagt af en virksomhed benævnt Agorà og drejede sig om aktindsigt vedrørende et udbud foretaget af Ente. Efter den italienske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter afhang Agorà's ret til aktindsigt tilsyneladende af, om Agorà skulle anses for en ordregivende myndighed. Den anden sag angik en klage fra et rengøringsfirma over Ente's manglende udbud af en rengøringsopgave.

Den italienske forvaltningsdomstol forelagde de to sager for EF-domstolen og stillede i begge sager EF-domstolen et spørgsmål, om Ente skal anses for et offentligretligt organ i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 1, b. EF-domstolen behandlede sagerne sammen og besvarede spørgsmålene under ét ved samme dom.

Det, der voldte den italienske forvaltningsdomstol tvivl, var betingelsen i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 1, b om, at organets opgave skal være at imødekomme almenhedens behov, dog ikke på det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område, idet bestemmelsens betingelser i øvrigt var opfyldt.

EF-domstolen udtalte:

I anledning af et anbringende fra Ente om, at det i henhold til den italienske lovgivning var uden betydning for sagen anlagt af Agorà, om Agorà var en ordregivende myndighed: Udtalt (sammentrængt og til dels ombrudt), at det efter EF-domstolens faste praksis udelukkende tilkommer den nationale retsinstans at vurdere relevansen af de spørgsmål, den stiller EF-domstolen, og at EF-domstolen kun kan afvise at besvare et præjudicielt spørgsmål fra en national retsinstans, bl.a. når spørgsmålet savner enhver forbindelse med hovedsagen. Da den italienske forvaltningsdomstol klart havde angivet, at besvarelsen af det stillede spørgsmål var nødvendig for forvaltningsdomstolens afgørelse, antog EF-domstolen sagen mod Agorà til realitetsbehandling.

EF-domstolen fremhævede, at de tre betingelser i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 1, b skal være opfyldt samtidig.

EF-domstolen omformulerede den italienske forvaltningsdomstols spørgsmål til (lidt sammentrængt) at gå ud på, om et organ, der har til formål at organisere messer ol., og som ikke virker med fortjeneste for øje, men hvis drift er baseret på kriterier om overskud, effektivitet og ren-tabilitet, imødekommer almenhedens behov, dog ikke på det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område.

EF-domstolen henviste videre til følgende (noget sammentrængt, Klagenævnets litrering):

1) Organisering af messer etc. imødekommer almenhedens behov. 2) Opregningen af offentligretlige organer i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets bilag I, som Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 1, b henviser til, viser, at offentligretlige organer i almindelighed varetager behov, som opfyldes på anden måde end gennem markedet, og som staten af hensyn til almenvellet vælger selv at imødekomme, eller med hensyn til hvilke den ønsker en afgørende indflydelse. 3) Et organ som beskrevet i det omformulerede spørgsmål bærer selv den økonomiske risiko. 4) Der er konkurrence inden for området, hvilket kan være et indicium for, at der er tale om opfyldelse af behov inden for det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område. 5) En fortolkende meddelelse fra Kommissionen (EFT 1998, C 143, s. 2) om anvendelse af reglerne om det indre marked på messe- og udstillingsområdet giver støtte for, at afholdelse af messer og udstillinger har erhvervs- eller forretningsmæssig karakter, og det fremgår, at der ikke er tale om behov, som almindeligvis varetages af offentligretlige organer, jf. ovenfor. 6) Det forhold, at et organ som Ente handler internationalt, nationalt og lokalt på et konkurrencepræget område, synes at bekræfte, at et sådant organ opfylder almenhedens behov inden for det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område.

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter det omformulerede spørgsmål således (noget sammentrængt og sprogligt forenklet): Et organ som beskrevet i det omformulerede spørgsmål handler inden for det erhvervs- og forretningsmæssige område og er derfor ikke et offentligretligt organ som omhandlet i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 1, b.

Forståelsen af EF-domstolens afgørelse kompliceres af omformuleringen af den italienske forvaltningsdomstols spørgsmål til at gå ud på et abstrakt spørgsmål. Forståelsen kompliceres også bl.a. af, at dommen kun indeholder sporadiske oplysninger om Ente, hvorfor det kan være lidt svært at få hold på, hvilke karakteristika ved Ente afgørelsen reelt lægger vægt på.

Afgørelsen skal sammenholdes med domstolens domme af 15. januar 1998 i sagen Mannesmann Anlagenbau (Strohal) og af 10. november 1998 i sagen BFI Holding (Arnhem), til hvilke afgørelser der også henvises i dommen. De to afgørelser er begge resumeret ovenfor.

Se også EF-domstolens dom af 27. februar 2003, Adolf Truley. I resuméet af denne dom er medtaget et indledende afsnit om begrebet »offentligretligt organ« med et forsøg på en terminologisk forenkling.

Den her resumerede afgørelse må skulle forstås således: Ente var ikke et offentligretligt organ i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 1, b, fordi Ente udelukkende drev erhvervsmæssig virksomhed.

EF-domstolens dom af 21. juni 2001, sag C-439/00, Kommissionen mod Frankrig

Frankrig havde ikke rettidigt gennemført en ændring af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet

Statueret, at Frankrig ikke rettidigt havde gennemført direktiv 98/4 om ændring af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet.

Forholdet var erkendt af Frankrig, der imidlertid havde henvist til, at gennemførelsen var i gang.

EF-domstolens dom af 12. juli 2001, sag C-399/98, Ordine degli Architetti delle Province di Milano et Lodi

Ved en offentlig myndigheds overladelse af et infrastrukturarbejde til en grundejer skal grundejeren forpligtes til at følge Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet. Om forståelsen af begrebet »entreprenør« i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 1, a Dommens sagsfremstilling og præmisser er særdeles udførlige, og nedenstående er et yderst sammentrængt referat.

Sagen angik et omfattende kommunalt bygge- og anlægsprojekt i Milano, benævnt »Scala 2001«. Projektet bestod af restaurering og ombygning af Scala-teatret, ombygning af et kommunalt ejendomskompleks og opførelse af et nyt meget stort teater, Bicocca-teatret. Dette teater skulle placeres i Bicocca-området, et tidligere industriområde. Projektet var knyttet til et privat projekt om byplanmæssig ændring af Bicocca-området (tilsyneladende til beboelsesområde) og en række ombygninger i området i forbindelse hermed.

Efter den nationale og regionale italienske lovgivning skulle der for at opnå byggetilladelse betales et beløb til kommunen til dennes udgift til infra- og servicestruktur (veje, kloakker, belysning, skoler, kirker, sportsanlæg, kulturelle indretninger etc.). Der var dog også mulighed for, at bygherren mod reduktion i beløbet udførte infra- og servicestrukturarbejder selv og stillede dem vederlagsfrit til rådighed for kommunen.

Med hjemmel i denne lovgivning indgik Milano Kommune en aftale med bygherrerne for projektet i Bicocca-området om, at disse bygherrer skulle opføre Bicocca-teatrets »ydre skal« og sørge for tilslutning til installationer som et infra- og servicestrukturarbejde samt vederlagsfrit overdrage teatret til kommunen. Arbejderne under tag på Bicocca-teatret skulle derimod varetages af kommunen, der ville foretage offentligt udbud af disse arbejder.

Nogle arkitektsammenslutninger mfl. anlagde sag mod kommunen ved en italiensk forvaltningsdomstol med påstand om annullation af kommunens beslutninger med hensyn til opførelsen af Bicocca-teatrets ydre skal. Sagsøgerne gjorde bl.a. gældende, at der skulle have været foretaget EU-udbud af dette arbejde. Bygherrerne for Bicocca-området mfl. procestilvarsledes under sagen.

Forvaltningsdomstolen forelagde sagen for EF-domstolen med spørgsmål, om de relevante italienske lovbestemmelser var stridende mod Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet.

EF-domstolen udtalte (Klagenævnets litrering):

1) Ad et anbringende fra kommunen og de procestilvarslede om, at der ikke var forbindelse mellem sagen og forvaltningsdomstolens spørgsmål, fordi sagen drejede sig om sagsøgernes interesse i udbud af tjenesteydelser (arkitektopgaver) i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, hvorimod forvaltningsdomstolens spørgsmål angik Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet: Bl.a. udtalt, at det efter domstolens faste praksis tilkommer den nationale ret at vurdere nødvendigheden af en præjudiciel afgørelse og relevansen af de stillede spørgsmål. (Der er her tale om en standardformulering, der er brugt nogenlunde enslydende i flere domme fra domstolen, således fx også i dommen af 10. maj 2001, Agorà). Endvidere henvist til, at et EUudbud for opførelsen af Bicocca-teatret også ville kunne omfatte projekteringsarbejdet, hvilket i øvrigt fremgår af Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 1, a. Forvaltningsdomstolens spørgsmål skulle derfor besvares.

2) Under en sag i henhold til traktatens artikel 177 (nu artikel 234 EF) er domstolen ikke kompetent til at træffe afgørelse om nationale reglers forenelighed med fællesskabsretten. Domstolen omformulerede derfor forvaltningsdomstolens spørgsmål til at gå ud på, om Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet er til hinder for en national lovgivning på området for byplanlægning, når denne lovgivning tillader, at indehaveren af en byggetilladelse og en godkendt udstykningsplan direkte gennemfører et infra- og servicestrukturarbejde, som helt eller delvis fradrages i det beløb, der skal betales for tilladelsens udstedelse, og som overstiger direktivets tærskelværdi.

Det fremgår, at der med ordene »direkte gennemfører« sigtes til den omtalte mulighed efter den italienske lovgivning for, at en bygherre selv udfører infra- og servicestrukturarbejder og stiller dem vederlagsfrit til rådighed for kommunen mod reduktion i det beløb, der skal betales for byggetilladelsen.

3) På grundlag af en yderst detaljeret gennemgang af Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 1, a statuerede domstolen, at den »direkte gennemførelse« (se ovenfor) af et infra- og servicestrukturarbejde som opførelse af Bicocca-teatrets ydre skal er et offentligt bygge- og anlægsarbejde i henhold til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet. EF-domstolen henviste herved til direktivets formål og til, at fortolkningen af direktivet må foretages på en måde, der sikrer, at direktivets effektive virkning ikke tilsidesættes i situationer, der er særegne som følge af bestemmelser i national ret (præmis 55). Af dommens præmis 88-96 fremgår endvidere, at ordet »entreprenør« i direktivets artikel 1, a ikke nødvendigvis sigter til den, der skal udføre det byggearbejde, der er tale om, og at det er tilstrækkeligt for karakteriseringen som entreprenør, at den pågældende kan få byggearbejdet udført af andre.

4) Domstolen udtalte videre, at direktivets effektive virkning tilgodeses, hvis en national lovgivning om »direkte gennemførelse« af et infra- og servicestrukturarbejde gør det muligt at forpligte den pågældende grundejer til at følge fremgangsmåderne i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet, således at grundejeren anses som indehaver af en fuldmagt fra kommunen. Herved henvist til, at noget sådant i øvrigt er udtrykkelig fastsat i direktivets artikel 3, stk. 4, med hensyn til koncessioner (præmis 100).

5) Domstolene besvarede herefter det omformulerede spørgsmål (punkt 2 ovenfor) bekræftende.

6) Forvaltningsdomstolen havde stillet endnu et spørgsmål. EF-domstolen afviste imidlertid dette spørgsmål med henvisning til, at forvaltningsdomstolen i forbindelse med spørgsmålet hverken havde præciseret, hvilke bestemmelser i fællesskabsretten, den ønskede fortolket, eller havde givet en præcis angivelse af de berørte aspekter i den italienske lovgivning. Det var derfor ikke muligt at afgrænse det konkrete problem med hensyn til fortolkningen af de relevante bestemmelser i fællesskabsretten.

EF-domstolens dom af 18. oktober 2001, sag C-19/00, SIAC Construction

Generelle bemærkninger om tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud. Der må kun anvendes underkriterier, der har til formål at identificere det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud, og udbyder ikke må have frit valg ved tildelingen. Udbyder skal fastholde den samme fortolkning af underkriterierne gennem hele udbudet. Forsyningssikkerhed kan indgå som underkriterium

Et irsk amt udbød et kloakeringsarbejde m.m. som offentligt udbud i henhold til det tidligere bygge- og anlægsdirektiv (direktiv 71/305 med senere ændringer). Tildelingskriteriet var det mest fordelagtige tilbud på grundlag af pris, omkostninger og teknisk værdi.

Arbejdets omfang kunne tilsyneladende ikke fastlægges på forhånd. I hvert fald skulle prisangivelserne i tilbudene ske ved angivelse af enhedspriser for en række enkeltarbejder, hvis omfang var anslået i udbudsbetingelserne. Desuden skulle der i tilbudene foretages en beregning af den samlede tilbudspris på grundlag af enhedspriserne i det pågældende tilbud og det anslåede omfang af enkeltarbejderne. Det synes dog at fremgå, at tilbudene ikke nødvendigvis skulle angive enhedspriser for samtlige enkeltarbejder (?). I udbudsbetingelserne var endvidere anslået et foreløbigt basisbeløb på 90.000 irske pund (IEP) for materialer, og det var angivet, at tilbudsgiverne skulle forhøje dette beløb med en procentsats til faste omkostninger og fortjeneste m.m.

En kontrakt udformet efter de beskrevne principper karakteriseres i dommen som en kontrakt af typen »measure and value«. Det fremgår ikke, om der er tale om et særligt irsk begreb.

Der indkom et antal tilbud. Tilbudet med den laveste tilbudspris, knap 5,4 mio. IEP, blev indgivet af virksomheden SIAC Construction Ltd (SIAC). Udbyderens rådgivende ingeniør foretog herefter en vurdering af de tre tilbud, der havde de laveste tilbudspriser, og indstillede, at tilbudet med den næstlaveste tilbudspris, ca. 5,5 mio. IEP, blev antaget.

Som begrundelse herfor angav ingeniøren: De tre laveste tilbud havde samme tekniske værdi. SIAC, der havde afgivet det laveste tilbud, havde imidlertid undladt at foretage prisangivelser med hensyn til en væsentlig del af enkeltarbejderne, ligesom SIAC ikke havde medtaget beløbet til materialer. Endvidere havde SIAC ikke angivet et færdiggørelsestidspunkt. På denne baggrund fandt ingeniøren, at en hensigtsmæssig styring af arbejdet på grundlag af SIACs tilbud ville blive yderst vanskelig eller umulig. Ingeniøren henviste videre til, at tilbudet med den næstlaveste tilbudspris var mere velafbalanceret, og at dette tilbud kunne vise sig at blive mindre bekosteligt.

Udbyderen indgik derefter kontrakt med den tilbudsgiver, hvis tilbud havde den næstlaveste tilbudspris, hvorefter SIAC anlagde sag mod udbyderen ved High Court øjensynlig med påstand om, at udbyderens tildelingsbeslutning var i strid med reglen om tildelingskriterier i artikel 29 i det tidligere bygge- og anlægsdirektiv (det nuværende bygge- og anlægsdirektivs artikel 30). Efter at High Court havde frifundet udbyderen, ankede SIAC til Supreme Court, der stillede EF-domstolen et præjudicielt spørgsmål, om hvorvidt en udbyder i en situation som den foreliggende har pligt til at tildele kontrakten til tilbudet med den laveste tilbudspris.

I referatet af EF-domstolens udtalelser nedenfor anvendes begrebet »underkriterier« i det omfang, hvor domstolens udtalelser tydeligvis sigter til dette begreb, uanset at den danske udgave af dommen ikke anvender ordet underkriterier.

EF-domstolen udtalte:

Angivelsen i det tidligere bygge- og anlægsdirektivs artikel 29 af underkriterier til tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud er ikke udtømmende. De ordregivende myndigheder kan imidlertid kun vælge underkriterier, der har til formål at identificere det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud, og et tildelingskriterium, der giver den ordregivende myndighed frit valg ved tildelingen, vil være i strid med artikel 29. Forsyningssikkerhed kan i princippet indgå som underkriterium, hvilket i så fald skal være nævnt i udbudsbetingelserne eller udbudsbekendtgørelsen.

Ligebehandlingsprincippet medfører en forpligtelse til gennemsigtighed, hvilket betyder, at underkriterierne skal være angivet i udbudsbekendtgørelsen eller udbudsbetingelserne på en sådan måde, at alle rimeligt oplyste og normalt påpasselige bydende kan fortolke dem på samme måde.

Gennemsigtighedsforpligtelsen medfører også, at udbyderen skal fastholde den samme fortolkning af underkriterierne gennem hele udbudet.

Endelig skal underkriterierne anvendes på en objektiv måde og skal anvendes ens i forhold til alle bydende. Udbyderens anvendelse af en sagkyndig vurdering af forhold, der først bliver kendt med sikkerhed i fremtiden, er som udgangspunkt egnet til at sikre overholdelse af dette princip.

EF-domstolen besvarede herefter det stillede spørgsmål således (lidt opbrudt af overskuelighedsgrunde):

Det tidligere bygge- og anlægsdirektivs artikel 29 tillader, at udbyderen, når tildelingskriteriet er det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud, tildeler kontrakten til den tilbudsgiver, der ifølge en sagkyndig vurdering sandsynligvis har afgivet det laveste tilbud.

Det er en betingelse, at de bydende er blevet behandlet lige. Dette forudsætter, at der er blevet sikret gennemsigtighed og objektivitet. Det er navnlig en forudsætning, at underkriterierne er klart nævnt i udbudsbekendtgørelsen eller udbudsbetingelserne, og at den sagkyndige vurdering på alle væsentlige punkter er i overensstemmelse med almindelige faglige standarder (»…bygger på objektive faktorer, der i overensstemmelse med sagkyndige regler betragtes som relevante og hensigtsmæssige…«).

EF-domstolens svar på det stillede spørgsmål har reference til de faktiske omstændigheder, der set ud fra en dansk synsvinkel forekommer noget særegne. Forståelsen af sagen kompliceres endvidere af, at dommens sagsfremstilling virker meget kortfattet. Der var uenighed mellem SIAC og udbyderen om, hvorledes udbudsbetingelserne skulle forstås, men som følge af den kortfattede sagsfremstilling er det vanskeligt at forstå, hvad denne uenighed nærmere drejede sig om. Det kunne virke, som om udbudet var uklart og for så vidt var i strid med gennemsigtighedsprincippet, men Supreme Court's spørgsmål til EF-domstolen kom ikke ind på dette forhold.

Dommens generelle udtalelser om principperne for anvendelse af tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud forekommer imidlertid interessante. Selvom disse udtalelser direkte kun refererer til det tidligere bygge- og anlægsdirektiv, kan de utvivlsomt anvendes på EU's udbudsregler generelt.

EF-domstolens dom af 27. november 2001, sager C-285/99 og C-286/99, Impresa Lombardini

Italiensk lovgivning om vurdering af tilbud som unormalt lave var i strid med Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 30, stk. 4. Uden egentlig interesse set fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel

For en overordnet italiensk forvaltningsdomstol, Consiglio di Stato, verserede to sager om hver sit udbud af arbejde ved vejanlæg. I begge udbud synes tildelingskriteriet at have været laveste pris. Sagerne var indbragt af to tilbudsgivere, hvis tilbud var blevet afvist med den begrundelse, at de var unormalt lave, og de to tilbudsgivere gjorde gældende, at afvisningen var i strid med Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 30, stk. 4, om udbyderens fremgangsmåde med hensyn til tilbud, der forekommer unormalt lave.

Afvisningen af de to tilbud var sket i henhold til en italiensk lovgivning om offentlige bygge- og anlægsarbejder. Af dommen synes at fremgå, at der efter denne lovgivning og den dertil knyttede administrative praksis gælder følgende for udbud, for hvis vedkommende tildelingskriteriet er laveste pris:

a) Der skal i udbudet angives en udbudssum, dvs. en slags foreløbig angivelse af prisen for arbejdet, og tilbud, hvis pris er en bestemt procentsats lavere end udbudssummen, skal vurderes som muligvis unormalt lave. Den nævnte procentsats beregnes for hvert udbud på grundlag af de fremkomne tilbudspriser og ud fra nogle komplicerede regler, der ikke kan gengives kort.

b) Tilbudsgiverne skal i forbindelse med tilbudet på nogle særlige skemaer give begrundelse for poster i tilbudsprisen, der tilsammen udgør mindst 75 % af denne. For et tilbud, der er vurderet som muligvis unormalt lavt i henhold til beregningen under a), foretager udbyderen en vurdering af den nævnte begrundelse og tager på grundlag af denne vurdering stilling til, om det pågældende tilbud endeligt skal anses for unormalt lavt og derfor skal afvises. Der indhentes ikke yderligere oplysninger fra tilbudsgiveren, og denne får ikke lejlighed til at udtale sig.

c) Ved den vurdering af tilbudsgiverens begrundelse for tilbudsprisen, der er nævnt under b), må udbyderen kun tage hensyn til besparelser, tekniske forhold og særligt gunstige betingelser for tilbudsgiveren. Udbyderen må derimod ikke tage hensyn til forhold, for hvilke der gælder en mindsteværdi. (Det fremgår ikke, hvad dette sigter til).

Dommen indeholder ikke oplysninger om den nærmere baggrund for de beskrevne regler eller for deres formål.

Consiglio di Stato stillede EF-domstolen nogle spørgsmål, der sigtede til, om de beskrevne regler er i overensstemmelse med fællesskabsretten.

EF-domstolen bemærkede, at den under en sag om præjudiciel forelæggelse i henhold til artikel 234 EF ikke har kompetence til at afgøre, om nationale regler er forenelige med fællesskabsretten, men at EF-domstolen dog er beføjet til at forsyne den nationale ret med fortolkningsbidrag, der gør det muligt for den nationale ret at vurdere spørgsmålet. (Domstolen har fremsat en tilsvarende udtalelse i adskillige andre domme, bl.a. i dommen af 12. juli 2001, Ordine…, der er resumeret ovenfor.)

EF-domstolen omformulerede herefter spørgsmålene fra Consiglio di Stato til (af forståelsesgrunde yderst sammentrængt) at gå ud på, om Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 30, stk. 4, er til hinder for nationale bestemmelser og praksis, hvorefter

1) udbyder kan afvise et tilbud som unormalt lavt ud fra en beregning på grundlag af alle tilbudspriser og derefter udelukkende ud fra en vurdering af en obligatorisk begrundelse ved tilbuddets indgivelse for 75 % af tilbudsprisen, og hvorefter

2) udbyder ved vurderingen af en tilbudsgivers begrundelse for tilbudsprisen kun må tage hensyn til besparelser, tekniske løsninger og den bydendes særligt gunstige betingelser, men derimod ikke må tage hensyn til fastsatte mindsteværdier.

EF-domstolen fremkom med nogle yderst udførlige præmisser, i hvilke der bl.a. henvistes til direktivets formål og principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed, og EF-domstolen besvarede herefter de omformulerede spørgsmål bekræftende, dvs. at Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 30, stk. 4, er til hinder for nationale bestemmelser som beskrevet i spørgsmålene.

EF-domstolen bemærkede yderligere (ligeledes stærkt sammentrængt), at direktivets artikel 30, stk. 4, ikke i princippet er til hinder for et krav om, at der sammen med et tilbud skal gives begrundelse for tilbudsprisen, men at udbyderen skal kunne foretage en fornyet vurdering af, om tilbudet er unormalt lavt.

Sagen synes uden egentlig interesse set fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel, da en lovgivning som den omhandlede ikke findes i Danmark.

EF-domstolens kendelse af 3. december 2001, sag C-59/00, Vestergaard

Traktatens grundlæggende bestemmelser skulle anvendes på udbud under tærskelværdien

Et dansk boligselskab, der er en ordregivende myndighed i henseende til EU's udbudsdirektiver, holdt en licitation vedrørende opførelse af et antal boliger. Byggeriet nåede ikke op på Bygge- og Anlægsdirektivets tærskelværdi, og der blev ikke foretaget EU-udbud.

I licitationsbetingelserne var angivet, at der skulle anvendes udvendige døre og vinduer af et bestemt fabrikat. En tømrermester klagede til Klagenævnet og gjorde gældende, at denne klausul var i strid med traktatens artikel 6 (nu artikel 12 EF) om forbud mod forskelsbehandling på grund af nationalitet og artikel 30 (nu artikel 28 EF) om varernes frie bevægelighed.

Ved kendelse af 11. november 1998 statuerede Klagenævnet, at klausulen ikke var en overtrædelse af de nævnte bestemmelser.

Tømrermesteren indbragte sagen for Vestre Landsret, der stillede EF-domstolen nogle præjudicielle spørgsmål, og ved den her resumerede kendelse udtalte EF-domstolen:

Traktatens artikel 30 (nu artikel 28 EF) er til hinder for, at en ordregivende myndighed vedrørende et byggeri, der ikke overskrider Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets tærskelværdi, indsætter en bestemmelse om, at der skal anvendes et bestemt fabrikat, såfremt denne bestemmelse ikke ledsages af bemærkningen »eller dermed ligestillet«.

EF-domstolen henviste herved til, at resultatet klart fremgår af retspraksis, og at lovligheden af et udbud af en bygge- og anlægskontrakt foretaget af en ordregivende myndighed skal vurderes i relation til trakta-tens grundlæggende bestemmelser, herunder princippet om varers frie bevægelighed.

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 26. februar 2002, sag T-169/00, Esedra mod Kommissionen

Udbyderen overtrådte ikke forhandlingsforbuddet ved at indhente en lang række oplysninger fra en tilbudsgiver om tilbuddets indhold. Udbyderen overtrådte heller ikke ligebehandlingsprincippet ved fra tilbudsgiveren at indhente regnskaber, der skulle have været vedlagt ansøgningen om prækvalifikation. Udbyderen var berettiget til ved vurderingen af tilbudspriserne for en tjenesteydelse at tage hensyn til tjenesteydelsens forventede omfang. Diverse klagepunkter ikke taget til følge

Kommissionen iværksatte et begrænset udbud vedrørende en tjenesteydelse bestående af drift af en børneinstitution i Bruxelles til brug for ansatte ved Fællesskabets institutioner. Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud på grundlag af underkriterierne 1. Pris og 2. Kvalitet. Til underkriterium 2. Kvalitet var knyttet forskellige delkriterier vedrørende pædagogisk arbejdsplan og foranstaltninger med hensyn til vikariering for fraværende personale m.m.

Der indkom tilbud fra nogle virksomheder, herunder fra en virksomhed E, der hidtil havde udført den udbudte tjenesteydelse. Efter at Kommissionen havde besluttet at indgå kontrakt med en anden tilbudsgiver, anlagde E sagen ved Retten i Første Instans.

E's anbringender og Rettens stillingtagen til dem kan gengives således (Klagenævnets litrering):

Anbringende 1): Kommissionen havde overtrådt ligebehandlingsprincippet ved at give E en kortere tilbudsfrist end de andre tilbudsgivere.

Dette anbringende sigtede til følgende: I udbudsbetingelserne, der blev sendt til de prækvalificerede i oktober i vedkommende år, var fristen for at afgive tilbud fastsat til den 6. januar i det følgende år. På et tidspunkt meddelte Kommissionen de prækvalificerede, at fristen var udsat til den 7. februar, men som følge af en fejl blev den nye frist i meddelelsen til E angivet som 7. januar. E afleverede sit tilbud på denne dag og blev da gjort bekendt med, at fristen rettelig udløb 7. februar. E tog derfor sit tilbud tilbage og afleverede det senere på ny, tilsyneladende efter at have omarbejdet det. Ifølge E medførte de nævnte forhold, at E fik mindre tid end de øvrige tilbudsgivere til at tilrettelægge udarbejdelsen af sit tilbud, bl.a. fordi en del af E's medarbejdere havde ferie i en periode i januar.

Retten tog ikke anbringendet til følge navnlig med henvisning til, at de forhold, som E havde påberåbt sig, måtte tilskrives E selv (præmis 43).

Anbringende 2): Kommissionen havde overtrådt forhandlingsforbuddet[6] ved at indhente oplysninger fra den valgte tilbudsgiver om uddannelsesplan for personalet:

[6] Det forhandlingsforbud, der var tale om, var indeholdt i Gennemførelsesforordningens artikel 99, hvorefter enhver kontakt mellem udbyderen og tilbudsgiverne efter tilbuddenes åbning var forbudt bortset fra i tilfælde, hvor et tilbud nødvendiggjorde, at der indhentedes yderligere oplysninger, eller med henblik på at korrigere åbenlyse materielle fejl i et tilbud. Reglen er senere afløst af en lignende regel i artikel 148 i Gennemførelsesforordningen. Denne regel bruger vendingen »skrivefejl«, hvor den gamle regel talte om »materielle« fejl. Det forekommer umiddelbart lidt vanskeligt at vurdere, om der med formuleringen af den nye regel er tilsigtet en begrænsning i udbydernes adgang til at indhente oplysninger fra tilbudsgiverne.

Ikke taget til følge, da de indhentede oplysninger alene gik ud på oplysninger om indholdet af den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud uden at ændre dette (præmis 54).

Anbringende 3): Kommissionen havde overtrådt forhandlingsforbuddet ved at indhente oplysninger fra den valgte tilbudsgiver om diverse planlagte tests med henblik på at begrænse fravær hos medarbejderne:

Ikke taget til følge med begrundelse svarende til begrundelsen ad anbringende 2 (præmis 56).

Anbringende 4): Kommissionen havde overtrådt forhandlingsforbuddet ved at indhente bekræftelse fra den valgte tilbudsgiver på, at tilbudsgiveren selv ville afholde udgiften til museumsbesøg og udflugter:

Ikke taget til følge, da det var et krav i udbudsbetingelserne, at tilbudsgiverne selv skulle afholde de pågældende udgifter, uden at det var fastsat, at dette skulle angives udtrykkeligt i tilbuddene. Den valgte tilbudsgivers bekræftelse af, at tilbudsgiveren ville afholde udgifterne, ændrede derfor ikke tilbuddet (præmis 58).

Anbringende 5): Kommissionen havde overtrådt forhandlingsforbuddet ved at indhente detaljerede oplysninger fra den valgte tilbudsgiver om, hvorledes arbejdet i børneinstitutionen ville blive organiseret og fordelt på deltidsansatte medarbejdere:

Ikke taget til følge med begrundelse svarende til begrundelsen ad anbringende 2 (præmis 60).

Anbringende 6): Kommissionen havde overtrådt forhandlingsforbuddet ved at indhente ret omfattende oplysninger fra den valgte tilbudsgiver om påtænkte hygiejne- og rengøringsforanstaltninger:

Ikke taget til følge med begrundelse svarende til begrundelsen ad anbringende 2 (præmis 62).

Anbringende 7): Kommissionen havde overtrådt ligebehandlingsprincippet ved at foretage tilbudsvurderingen på en partisk måde, bl.a. som følge af, at der i tilbudsvurderingen havde deltaget personer, der var fjendtligt stemt over for E, herunder en forældrerepræsentant, der havde klaget over E's drift af børneinstitutionen (klagen gik tilsyneladende ud på, at der var blevet udøvet pædofili):

Ikke taget til følge, da tilbudsvurderingen ikke havde været partisk (præmis 80).

Anbringende 8): Kommissionen havde været uberettiget til at tage den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud i betragtning, idet den valgte tilbudsgiver ikke havde vedlagt ansøgningen om prækvalifikation regnskaber som krævet i udbudsbekendtgørelsen.

Dette anbringende sigtede i det væsentligste til følgende: Den valgte tilbudsgiver, der bestod af en sammenslutning af 7 virksomheder, havde alene vedlagt ansøgningen regnskaber for 4 af de 7 virksomheder, medens regnskaberne for de 3 øvrige virksomheder først var blevet indsendt senere efter anmodning fra Kommissionen.

Anbringendet blev ikke taget til følge, da forholdet var omfattet af Kommissionens skønsmargin (præmis 98). Også bl.a. henvist til, at Kommissionen havde kontrolleret den valgte tilbudsgivers økonomiske formåen efter bedømmelseskomitéens indstilling om at indgå kontrakt med den valgte tilbudsgiver (præmis 105).

Anbringende 9): Kommissionen havde været uberettiget til at tage den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud i betragtning, idet den valgte tilbudsgiver klart ikke havde den nødvendige tekniske formåen:

Ikke taget til følge, da der ikke var grundlag herfor (præmis 125).

Anbringende 10): Kommissionen havde overtrådt ligebehandlingsprincippet ved at give den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud en højere karakter end E's tilbud i relation til underkriterium 1. Pris.

Dette anbringende sigtede til, at Kommissionen beregnet tilbudspriserne på grundlag af tilbuddenes enhedspriser pr. barn og den forventede belægning i børneinstitutionen. Efter E's opfattelse havde Kommissionen været uberettiget til at tage hensyn til den forventede belægning.

Retten foretog i præmis 136-141 en detaljeret gennemgang af prisoplysningerne i de to tilbud og udtalte derefter bl.a., at E's synspunkt savnede enhver logik (præmis 144). Retten konkluderede, at Kommissionen ikke havde begået en åbenbar fejl ved bedømmelsen af de to tilbud i relation til underkriterium 1. Pris (præmis 146). Anbringendet blev således ikke taget til følge.

Anbringende 11): Kommissionen havde overtrådt ligebehandlingsprincippet ved at give den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud en højere karakter end E's tilbud i relation til underkriterium 2. Kvalitet:

Retten foretog i præmis 155 og følgende en detaljeret gennemgang af Kommissionens vurdering af de to tilbud i relation til det nævnte underkriterium. Retten konkluderede, at Kommissionen ikke havde udøvet et alvorligt og åbenbart fejlskøn ved at anse den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud for bedre end E's tilbud i relation til underkriterium 2. Kvalitet (præmis 181). Anbringendet blev således ikke taget til følge.

Anbringende 12): Kommissionen havde ikke givet E en tilstrækkelig begrundelse for tildelingsbeslutningen:

Ikke taget til følge, idet Kommissionen efter E's anmodning om begrundelse havde redegjort for de points, der var blevet tildelt E's tilbud og den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud (præmis 192).

Anbringende 13): Kommissionen havde udøvet magtfordrejning som følge af, at den reelle begrundelse for ikke at tildele E kontrakten var anklager fra forældre om, at der var begået pædofili i E's lokaler:

Ikke taget til følge, da der ikke var grundlag for at fastslå, at Kommissionen ved tilbudsvurderingen havde forfulgt et andet formål end hensynet til at finde det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud (præmis 199).

E fik således ikke medhold i nogen af sine anbringender, og Kommissionen blev derfor frifundet for en erstatningspåstand fra E.

Retten havde ved en kendelse af 20. juli 2000 afslået en begæring fra E om opsættende virkning.

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 11. juni 2002, sag T-365/00, Alsace International Car Services mod Parlamentet

Udbyderen af en tjenesteydelse havde pligt til at opsige den kontrakt, der var indgået på grundlag af udbuddet, efter at det var konstateret, at den valgte tilbudsgiver udførte tjenesteydelsen ulovligt

Denne dom er en fortsættelse af Rettens dom af 6. juli 2000 i sag T-139/00 mellem de samme parter.

Sagen angik et udbud, der var iværksat af Parlamentet, vedrørende kørsler med chauffør tilsyneladende i Strasbourg-området. I udbudsbetingelserne var angivet, at kørslerne skulle udføres i overensstemmelse med national (dvs. fransk) lovgivning. Sagsøgeren var en tilbudsgiver A, der ikke havde fået kontrakten.

A anlagde sag mod Parlamentet ved Retten i Første Instans og gjorde gældende, at Parlamentet havde handlet i strid med udbudsreglerne ved at antage tilbuddet fra den valgte tilbudsgiver, selvom den valgte tilbudsgiver udførte kørslerne i strid med fransk lovgivning. Parlamentet gjorde heroverfor bl.a. gældende, at den valgte tilbudsgivers udførelse af kørslerne skete i overensstemmelse med fransk lovgivning. Ved Rettens dom af 6. juli 2000 blev Parlamentet frifundet bl.a. med begrundelse, at A ikke havde bevist, at Parlamentets fortolkning af fransk lovgivning var klart forkert.

For udbuddet var kørslerne blevet udført af nogle vognmænd, og ved en endelig dom af 7. april 2000 havde en fransk domstol idømt vognmændene straf for at have udført kørslerne på den måde, som den valgte tilbudsgiver i henhold til udbuddet udførte kørslerne på.

Den franske dom indgik ikke i grundlaget for Retten i Første Instans' dom af 6. juli 2000. Efter afsigelsen af Rettens dom af 6. juli 2000 sendte A imidlertid den franske dom til Parlamentet som dokumentation for, at den valgte tilbudsgiver udførte kørslerne i strid med fransk lovgivning. Sagsøgeren anmodede samtidig Parlamentet om at tildele A kontrakten om kørslerne eller iværksætte et nyt udbud. Parlamentet afslog A's anmodning med henvisning til, at den valgte tilbudsgivers udførelse af kørslerne efter Parlamentets opfattelse af nærmere angivne grunde ikke var i strid med fransk lovgivning. A anlagde derefter på ny sag mod Parlamentet ved Retten i Første Instans, nu med påstand om annullation af Parlamentets beslutning om at afslå den nævnte anmodning fra A.

Retten afgjorde den nye sag ved dommen af 11. juni 2002. I denne dom lagde Retten som følge af den franske dom til grund, at den valgte tilbudsgiver udførte kørslerne i strid med fransk lovgivning (præmis 70), og Retten udtalte, at Parlamentet havde udøvet et åbenbart urigtigt skøn ved at afslå den nævnte anmodning fra A (præmis 71). Retten annullerede Parlamentets beslutning om at afslå A's anmodning, og A fik for så vidt medhold.

Retten frifandt imidlertid Parlamentet for en erstatningspåstand fra A. Retten henviste herved til, at det tab, som A hævdede at have lidt som følge af Parlamentets afslag på A's anmodning, bestod i chancen for at få tildelt kontrakten i det tilfælde, at Parlamentet havde imødekommet anmodningen. Der var imidlertid ikke grundlag for at antage, at Parlamentet, hvis det havde imødekommet A's anmodning, ville have tildelt A kontrakten eller ville have iværksat et udbud, som A ville have været i stand til at deltage i. (Præmis 79-80).

EF-domstolens dom af 18. juni 2002, sag C-92/00, HI Hospital Ingenieure Krankenhaustechnik PlanungsgesmbH

Udbyders annullation af udbud er ikke reguleret i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, men er underkastet fællesskabsrettens grundlæggende principper og er derfor omfattet af første kontroldirektiv. Også taget stilling til nogle andre spørgsmål, der er mindre interessante fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel. Et østrigsk klageorgan kunne stille præjudicielle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen

Wiens kommune udbød efter Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet projektledelsen for tilrettelæggelse af madforsyningen til Wiens sygehusvæsen. Efter tilbudenes indgivelse annullerede udbyderen udbudet. På forespørgsel fra en af tilbudsgiverne angav udbyderen som begrundelse for annullationen, at man havde besluttet sig til at decentralisere madforsyningen, hvorfor det ikke længere var nødvendigt at udpege en ekstern projektleder.

Den pågældende tilbudsgiver, en tysk virksomhed, klagede til et østrigsk klageorgan (Vergabekontrollsenat) med påstand om ophævelse af annullationen af udbudet. Klageren gjorde navnlig gældende, at annullationen var et udslag af national diskrimination, idet annullationen efter klagerens opfattelse havde til formål at favorisere en østrigsk virksomhed, som udbyderen havde samarbejde med i forvejen, og som også havde indgivet tilbud.

Det østrigske klageorgan stillede nogle præjudicielle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen, der først konstaterede, at klageorganet er en ret ifølge traktatens artikel 234 EF, således at klageorganet kan stille præjudicielle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen.

EF-domstolen besvarede derefter de stillede spørgsmål således, til dels efter en vis omformulering:

1) Om udbyders beslutning om annullation af et udbud af en tjenesteydelse hører under de »beslutninger«, der er omhandlet i artikel 1, stk. 1, i første kontroldirektiv.

(Efter den nævnte bestemmelse skal medlemsstaterne indføre procedurer for klager over, at beslutninger fra ordregivende myndigheder er i strid med fællesskabsretten om offentlige kontrakter.)

EF-domstolen besvarede spørgsmålet bekræftende. Domstolen henviste til, at Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ikke indeholder bestemmelser om, under hvilke betingelser en udbyder kan annullere udbudet, men at udbyderes beslutninger om annullation af et udbud er underkastet fællesskabsrettens grundlæggende principper. EF-domstolen henviste herved til en række af disse principper, dvs. principperne om etableringsfrihed og fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser samt ligebehandlingsprincippet og gennemsigtighedsprincippet. Også bl.a. henvist til, at enhver anden fortolkning ville skade den effektive virkning af første kontroldirektiv.

2) Om en national ordning kan begrænse prøvelsen af en udbyders annullation af et udbud af en tjenesteydelse til, om annullationen er sket »vilkårligt«.

(Spørgsmålet refererede øjensynlig til den østrigske lovgivning om offentlige udbud. Det fremgår ikke, hvad der sigtes til med begrebet vilkårligt.)

EF-domstolen besvarede spørgsmålet benægtende. Domstolen henviste til, at omfanget af den kontrol, der er foreskrevet i første kontroldirektiv, skal bedømmes efter direktivets formål under hensyntagen til, at direktivets effektivitet ikke bringes i fare. Også henvist til, at der ikke kan foretages en indskrænkende fortolkning af direktivets angivelse af kontrollens omfang.

3) Om hvilket tidspunkt, der er afgørende for bedømmelsen af lovligheden af en ordregivende myndigheds beslutning om at annullere et udbud.

(Spørgsmålet sigtede øjensynlig til den østrigske lovgivning om offentlige udbud, efter hvilken der er forskel på kontrolmyndighedernes kompetence alt efter, om udbyderen har meddelt »tilslag« eller ikke.)

EF-domstolen svarede, at forholdet ikke er reguleret af første kontroldirektiv og derfor skal afgøres efter national ret. Domstolen udtalte videre, at de nationale forskrifter ikke må være mindre gunstige end dem, der gælder for tilsvarende søgsmål i national ret (ækvivalensprincippet), og at de nationale forskrifter ikke må gøre det umuligt eller uforholdsmæssigt vanskeligt at udøve rettighederne efter fællesskabets retsorden (effektivitetsprincippet).

Spørgsmålene 2) og 3) havde som nævnt reference til den østrigske lovgivning om offentlige udbud og synes uden den store interesse set fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel.

Som det fremgår, gik besvarelsen af spørgsmål 1) efter sit indhold ud på, at udbyderes annullation af udbud er omfattet af første kontroldirektiv og dermed af medlemsstaternes pligt til at indføre klageprocedurer. Selvom om besvarelsen umiddelbart kun angår udbud i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, kan der ikke være tvivl om, at den dækker udbud efter alle udbudsdirektiverne.

For at nå frem til besvarelsen af spørgsmål 1) måtte EF-domstolen reelt foretage en slags præjudiciel fastlæggelse af begrebet »fællesskabsretten om offentlige kontrakter« i artikel 1, stk. 1, i første kontroldirektiv med henblik på at fastslå, hvilket materielle regler, der regulerer udbyderes annullation af udbud. Den nævnte fastlæggelse gik som refereret ud på, at Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ikke indeholder sådanne materielle regler, men at udbyderes annullation af udbud reguleres af fællesskabsrettens grundlæggende principper. Vurderingen ville tydeligvis have været den samme, selvom der havde været tale om et af de andre udbudsdirektiver.

Klagenævnet for Udbud har gentagne gange statueret, at udbyderen af et EU-udbud kun kan annullere udbudet, hvis der er saglig grund hertil, hvilket også er forudsat i Østre Landsrets dom af 16. august 2000 i sagen 5. afd. B 1654-97, Handelshøjskolen i København og Forskningsministeriet mod Højgaard & Schultz A/S. Reelt synes der at være god overensstemmelse mellem denne praksis og EF-domstolens besvarelse af spørgsmål 1).

EF-domstolens dom af 17. september 2002, sag C-513/99, Concordia Bus Finland

Der må under visse forudsætninger anvendes underkriterier om miljøforhold. Det er uden betydning, om sådanne kriterier kun kan opfyldes af et mindre antal virksomheder Helsingfors Kommune udbød driften af bybuskørslen på nærmere angivne ruter. Udbudet skete tilsyneladende som offentligt udbud i henhold til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet. Tildelingskriteriet var det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud på grundlag af følgende underkriterier: a) pris, b) ma-teriellets kvalitet og c) drift inden for området kvalitet og miljø. Tildelingen skete ved brug af følgende evalueringsmodel:

Ad a) pris: Tilbudet med den laveste tilbudspris fik 86 points og de øvrige tilbud fik points efter følgende formel: (Laveste tilbudspris/tilbudspris) x 86.

Ad b) materiellets kvalitet: Der blev bl.a. givet points for busser med kvælstofudledning og støjniveau under nærmere angivne grænser. Det synes at fremgå, at kun naturgasdrevne busser kunne komme under disse grænser og dermed opnå points på dette punkt.

Ad c) drift inden for området kvalitet og miljø: Der blev givet points for »en helhed af kvalitative kriterier« og for en miljøcertificering.

Sagen angik en enkelt af ruterne. Den tilbudsgiver, der fik flest points med hensyn til denne rute og derfor fik tildelt driften af den, var kommunens eget busselskab, der havde afgivet tilbud på lige fod med de andre tilbudsgivere. Den tilbudsgiver, der havde opnået næstflest points med hensyn til den pågældende rute (Concordia), klagede uden resultat til de finske konkurrencemyndigheder og anlagde derefter sag ved en finsk domstol med påstand om annullation.

Concordia gjorde gældende, at tildelingskriterierne ved offentligt udbud altid skal være af økonomisk karakter, og at der derfor ikke måtte tages hensyn til bussernes kvælstofudledning og støjniveau, fordi disse forhold ikke var af økonomisk karakter. Concordia gjorde desuden gældende, at tildelingen af points med hensyn til kvælstofudledning og støjniveau favoriserede den valgte tilbudsgiver, fordi denne var den eneste, der havde mulighed for at anvende materiel, der kunne opnå points på dette punkt, dvs. naturgasdrevne busser. Concordia henviste herved til, at der kun var optankningsmuligheder i Finland for 15 naturgasdrevne busser, og at den valgte tilbudsgiver havde bestilt 11 sådanne busser.

Den finske domstol stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen, der besvarede spørgsmålene således (gengivet stærkt sammentrængt og til dels ombrudt):

1) Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet kræver ikke, at alle underkriterier til tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud nødvendigvis skal være af rent økonomisk karakter, jf. bl.a. at direktivets artikel 36 nævner æstetiske forhold som et muligt underkriterium. Endvidere udelukker direktivet ikke, at en ordregivende myndighed anvender kriterier om bevarelse af miljøet ved vurderingen af, hvilket tilbud der er det økonomisk mest fordelagtige. Det er dog en forudsætning, at underkriterierne er forbundet med kontraktens genstand, at underkriterierne ikke tillægger den ordregivende myndighed et ubetinget frit valg, at underkriterierne er udtrykkeligt nævnt i udbudsbekendtgørelsen eller udbudsbetingelserne, samt at underkriterierne overholder fællesskabsrettens grundlæggende principper, navnlig ligebehandlingsprincippet.

Denne forudsætning var opfyldt, idet følgende var tilfældet med hensyn til kriterierne om kvælstofudledning og støjniveau: Disse kriterier var forbundet med kontraktens genstand, dvs. transport med bybus, kriterierne overlod ikke den ordregivende myndighed et ubetinget frit skøn, idet de angik objektivt målelige krav, kriterierne var nævnt i udbudsbekendtgørelsen, og kriterierne stred ikke mod ligebehandlingsprincippet, jf. om det sidste punkt 2) nedenfor.

2) Ligebehandlingsprincippet er ikke i sig selv til hinder for, at der tages hensyn til kriterier om beskyttelse af miljøet, selvom sådanne kriterier kun kan opfyldes af et mindre antal virksomheder, herunder den ordregivende myndigheds egen transportvirksomhed.

Domstolen henviste herved til, at de anvendte tildelingskriterier var objektive og anvendtes på alle tilbud uden forskel, at der kunne tildeles points for andre forhold vedrørende materiellet end kvælstofudledning og støj, og at Concordia havde fået tildelt ordren vedrørende en anden rute, uanset at der ved dette udbud direkte var krævet benyttelse af natur(?)gasdrevne busser. Henvisningen til disse forhold må efter sammenhængen forstås som en angivelse om, at der ikke havde været hensigt til favorisering af den valgte tilbudsgiver.

3) Det ville ikke gøre nogen forskel, hvis sagen hørte under Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet. EF-domstolen henviste herved til, at reglerne om tildelingskriterier i det væsentlige er ens i alle udbudsdirektiverne.

Baggrunden for den finske domstols spørgsmål på dette punkt var tilsyneladende tvivl med hensyn til, om sagen hørte under Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet eller Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet. EF-domstolen tog imidlertid ikke stilling til, hvilket af de to direktiver om sagen hørte under, da den finske domstol ikke havde spurgt udtrykkeligt om dette (og efter det foreliggende også fordi spørgsmålet, som det fremgår, var uden betydning for sagens realitet).

EF-domstolen har med denne dom taget stilling til et spørgsmål, der længe er blevet oplevet som både brændende og usikkert, dvs. i hvilket omfang der må tages hensyn til miljøforhold ved vurderingen af, hvilket tilbud der er det økonomisk mest fordelagtige. Det centrale i afgørelsen synes at være angivelserne om, at underkriterierne til tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud skal have forbindelse med kontraktens genstand, men at de ikke nødvendigvis alle skal være af rent økonomisk karakter.

EF-domstolens udtalelse om, at underkriterierne ikke må overlade den ordregivende myndighed et ubetinget frit valg, skal vel ses i relation til sagens omstændigheder og kan ikke være en tilkendegivelse om, at der så vidt muligt skal anvendes en evalueringsmodel med pointgivning ved bedømmelsen af det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud.

EF-domstolens dom af 14. november 2002, sag C-411/00, Felix Swoboda

Om tjenesteydelser, der såvel omfatter enkeltydelser under Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets bilag I A som enkeltydelser under direktivets bilag I B. Direktivets artikel 10 skal følges, og der skal ikke lægges vægt på den samlede tjenesteydelses primære formål. Der må ikke ske kunstig sammenlægning for at øge andelen af enkeltydelser under bilag I B. Kategori 20 i bilag I B omfatter ikke selve transporten. Udbudsdirektivernes formål. Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet skal overholdes, selvom der ikke foreligger et grænseoverskridende element

Den østrigske nationalbank udbød en tjenesteydelse bestående af flytning af nationalbanken til nye lokaler. En virksomhed klagede over tildelingsbeslutningen til et klageorgan (Bundesvergabeamt).

Nationalbanken gjorde for klageorganet bl.a. gældende, at langt den overvejende del af tjenesteydelsen bestod af koordination og logistik og derfor var omfattet af CPC-nomenklaturens gruppe 74 (støtte- og hjælpetransport) og dermed af kategori 20 i bilag I B til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, således at udbudet i henhold til direktivets artikler 9-10 ikke var undergivet direktivets udbudsregler.

Det østrigske klageorgan stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen.

Kommissionen og den østrigske nationalbank påstod sagen for EF-domstolen afvist med forskellige begrundelser. Bl.a. gjorde nationalbanken gældende, at der ikke var noget grænseoverskridende element i sagen.

EF-domstolen antog imidlertid sagen til realitetsbehandling. Domstolen udtalte på dette punkt bl.a., at det forhold, at der eventuelt ikke var noget grænseoverskridende element i sagen, ikke fritog ordregiveren for at overholde Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet. Domstolen henviste herved til direktivets præambel, hvorefter direktivet bl.a. tilsigter at afskaffe enhver praksis, der er konkurrencebegrænsende i almindelighed.

Om sagens realitet udtalte EF-domstolen (stærkt sammentrængt og til dels ombrudt, Klagenævnets litrering):

1) Ad aftaler, der såvel omfatter tjenesteydelser, der hører under Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets bilag I A, som tjenesteydelser, der hører under direktivets bilag I B:

a) Afgørelsen af, hvilke bestemmelser i direktivet, der finder anvendelse, skal træffes i overensstemmelse med det klare kriterium i direktivets artikel 10 (hvorefter den indbyrdes værdi er afgørende). Derimod skal der ikke - som hævdet af den østrigske regering - lægges vægt på aftalens primære formål. EF-domstolen henviste herved til udbudsdirektivernes formål, som går ud på at fjerne risikoen for, at der indrømmes indenlandske bydende en fortrinsstilling, og at udelukke muligheden for, at ordregiverne lader sig lede af andre hensyn end økonomiske. Domstolen henviste videre til præamblen til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, hvorefter visse tjenesteydelser i en overgangsperiode alene skal være omfattet af en overvågningsmekanisme.

b) Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet foreskriver på ingen måde, at der skal foretages en særskilt tildeling vedrørende tjenesteydelserne under bilag I B. Tværtimod ville direktivets artikel 10 blive indholdsløs, hvis der blev stillet krav om en sådan adskillelse.

Noget andet kan alene antages, hvis den ordregivende myndighed kunstigt lader tjenesteydelser af forskellig art være omfattet af samme aftale alene for at forøge aftalens andel af tjenesteydelser omfattet af bilag I B, og uden at der er en eller anden form for tilknytning mellem tjenesteydelserne som følge af et fælles formål m.m.

2) Det tilkom det østrigske klageorgan at tage stilling til, hvilket af bilagene til Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet og hvilke CPC-referencenumre de i sagen omhandlede enkelte tjenesteydelser hørte under. EF-domstolen bemærkede dog, at de omhandlede tjenesteydelser ikke alle var støtte- og hjælpetransportydelser i henhold til kategori 20 i bilag I B (CPC-gruppe 74), således som det var hævdet af Kommissionen, idet kategori 20 i bilag I B ikke omfatter selve transporten.

I overensstemmelse med traditionen er dommens sagsfremstilling ganske kortfattet, og det er vanskeligt at få hold på, hvad sagens problem egentlig drejede sig om, og hvorfor sagen blev forelagt for EF-domstolen. Noget kunne måske tyde på, at sagens problem gik ud på følgende: På baggrund af den østrigske lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter (?) mente den østrigske regering og den østrigske nationalbank, at den samlede tjenesteydelse ikke var undergivet Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets udbudsregler, fordi tjenesteydelsens primære formål var omfattet af Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets bilag I B. Som det fremgår, afviste EF-domstolen et sådant synspunkt og henviste i stedet til (en bogstavelig) anvendelse af reglen i direktivets artikel 10. Konsekvensen heraf fremgår ikke af dommens sagsfremstilling.

Retten i Første Instans' dom af 28. november 2002, sag T-40/01, Scan Office Design mod Kommissionen

Trods grove overtrædelser af udbudsreglerne skulle udbyderen ikke erstatte en forbigået tilbudsgivers positive opfyldelsesinteresse, da tilbudsgiverens tilbud var ukonditionsmæssigt, selvom det var indgået i tilbudsvurderingen, hvorfor der ikke var årsagsforbindelse mellem overtrædelserne og tilbudsgiverens hævdede tab. Krav, der er fastsat som mindstekrav, skal overholdes også ved udbud med forhandling

Kommissionen iværksatte et udbud vedrørende indkøb af kontormøbler. Udbuddet angik flere kategorier af møbler. Med hensyn til en af kategorierne anså Kommissionen alle tilbud for uantagelige, hvorfor Kommissionen iværksatte et nyt udbud efter forhandling vedrørende den pågældende kategori. Sagen angår dette udbud.[7]

Tildelingskriteriet vat øjensynlig det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud. Der indkom et antal tilbud. Kommissionen udelukkede nogle tilbud, der klart ikke opfyldte udbudsbetingelsernes krav. Kommissionen foretog derefter en tilbudsvurdering af de øvrige tilbud og besluttede på grundlag af vurderingen at indgå kontrakt med en af de pågældende tilbudsgivere. En anden af de tilbudsgivere, hvis tilbud var indgået i tilbudsvurderingen, anlagde derefter sagen ved Retten i Første Instans med påstand om erstatning af sit tab ved ikke at have fået tildelt kontrakten (positiv opfyldelsesinteresse).

Retten konstaterede, at Kommissionen havde begået følgende overtrædelser (Klagenævnets litrering):

1) Kommissionen havde givet sagsøgeren nærmere angivne urigtige oplysninger, efter at sagsøgeren havde anmodet om aktindsigt (præmis 27).

2) Kommissionen havde uberettiget givet den valgte tilbudsgiver forlængelse af fristen for at afgive tilbud. (Præmis 33. Forlængelsen skyldtes, at Kommissionen havde angivet en forkert adresse, da den sendte udbudsbetingelserne til den valgte tilbudsgiver).

3) Kommissionen havde uberettiget taget hensyn til bedømmelser af de tilbudte møbler foretaget af visse medarbejdere, selvom der var nærmere angivne fejl i disse bedømmelser (præmis 50, 63 og 68).

4) Kommissionen havde uberettiget taget den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud i betragtning, selvom visse af de møbler, som den valgte tilbudsgiver havde tilbudt, ikke opfyldte nogle krav, der i udbudsbetingelserne var angivet som ufravigelige (præmis 94). Herved bl.a. udtalt, at selvom den ordregivende myndighed har en vis forhandlingsbeføjelse ved udbud efter forhandling, skal krav, som den ordregivende myndighed selv har fastsat som ufravigelige, respekteres (præmis 76).

[7]Udbuddet efter forhandling (i den nutidige terminologi »med« forhandling) blev iværksat efter artikel 6, stk. 3, litra a i det dagældende indkøbsdirektiv, der fandt anvendelse i henhold til de regler, der da var gældende for Kommissionens udbud. Bestemmelsen gik ud på, at der under visse forudsætninger kunne iværksættes udbud efter forhandling, når der ved et forudgående udbud ikke var indkommet egnede tilbud m.m. (En lignende regel er indeholdt i Udbudsdirektivets artikel 30, stk. 1, litra a).

Retten karakteriserede Kommissionens overtrædelser som grove (præmis 121). Retten frifandt imidlertid Kommissionen for sagsøgerens erstatningskrav med den begrundelse, at der ikke var årsagssammenhæng mellem Kommissionens overtrædelser og sagsøgerens hævdede tab, idet sagsøgerens tilbud på visse punkter ikke opfyldte ufravigelige krav i udbudsbetingelserne, hvorfor det ikke var bevist, at Kommissionen burde have tildelt sagsøgeren kontrakten (præmis 121).

EF-domstolens dom af 12. december 2002, sag C-470/99, Universale-Bau

Et organs faktiske virksomhed er afgørende for, om organet skal anses for at imødekomme almenhedens behov. Første kontroldirektiv er ikke til hinder for klagefrister, og frister på 14 dage var rimelige. Hvis ordregiver på forhånd har fastlagt kriterierne for udvælgelse af virksomheder til at give tilbud, skal disse kriterier oplyses

En østrigsk renovationsvirksomhed, der i dommen benævnes EBS, udbød som begrænset udbud et bygge- og anlægsarbejde vedrørende udbygning af Wiens hovedrensningsanlæg. I udbudsbekendtgørelsen var angivet: Ved udvælgelsen af de virksomheder, der ville blive opfordret til at afgive tilbud, ville der blive lagt vægt på forskellige referencer, og oplysningerne herom fra de virksomheder, der havde anmodet om at komme i betragtning, ville blive evalueret efter et pointsystem, der var deponeret hos en notar. De fem virksomheder, der derved blev placeret bedst, ville blive opfordret til at afgive tilbud.

To østrigske virksomheder, der havde anmodet om at komme i betragtning, fik ved brev af 7. juli 1999 fra EBS meddelelse om, at de ikke var blandt de bedst placerede, og at de derfor ikke ville blive opfordret til at afgive tilbud. De to virksomheder indgav den 3. august 1999 klage til et klageorgan (Vergabekontrollsenat). Det synes at fremgå, at EBS for klageorganet gjorde gældende, at de to virksomheders klage var indgivet for sent, dvs. efter udløbet af en klagefrist på 14 dage, der er fastsat i Land Wiens lovgivning om offentlige kontrakter.

Der forelå for klageorganet spørgsmål, om EBS skulle anses for ordregiver i henhold til Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet. Afgørende herfor var, om EBS kunne anses for et »offentligretligt organ«, jf. direktivets artikel 1, b, stk. 2.

Om EBS var oplyst: EBS er en juridisk person, og EBS er for mere end halvdelens vedkommende kontrolleret af Wiens Kommune. EBS opfylder således klart de to sidste led i definitionen af begrebet »offentligretligt organ« i den nævnte bestemmelse. Klageorganet var imidlertid i tvivl med hensyn til, om EBS opfylder definitionens første led, dvs. at organet skal være oprettet specielt med henblik på at imødekomme almenhedens behov, dog ikke behov af industriel og kommerciel karakter. Klageorganet lagde ganske vist til grund, at EBS opfylder denne betingelse i dag som følge af, at EBS fra 1985 har haft til opgave at drive det omhandlede rensningsanlæg. Det, som voldte klageorganet problemer, var at EBS ved sin stiftelse i 1976 var blevet oprettet som en rent kommerciel virksomhed, og at EBS' senere overtagelse af opgaver til imødekommelse af almenhedens behov var sket uden vedtægtsændringer.

Klageorganet stillede nogle spørgsmål til EF-domstolen, der udtalte (stærkt sammentrængt og til dels ombrudt, Klagenævnets litrering):

I resuméet under punkt 1) straks nedenfor er af sproglige nemhedsgrunde anvendt formuleringen »almenhedens behov« som sigtende til ordene »almenhedens behov, dog ikke behov af industriel eller kommerciel karakter« i første led i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 1, b, stk. 2.

1) Ad et spørgsmål, der sigtede til, om EBS skal anses for at være oprettet specielt med henblik på at imødekomme almenhedens behov, jf. første led i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 1, b, stk. 2: Der skal tages hensyn til den faktiske virksomhed, som en enhed udøver. Spørgsmålet, om der er tale om almenhedens behov, skal vurderes objektivt, og den retlige form er uden betydning. EF-domstolen henviste herved til sin tilsvarende udtalelse i dommen af 10. november 1998, BFI Holding (Arnhem), med hensyn til den lignende bestemmelse i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet. EF-domstolen henviste videre til, at selvom det ikke formelt er fastsat i EBS' vedtægter, at virksomheden har til opgave at imødekomme almenhedens behov, kan det dog konstateres objektivt, at EBS har en sådan opgave. EF-domstolen henviste desuden til udbudsdirektivernes formål og anførte, at hensynet til at sikre den effektive virkning af reglen om begrebet »offentligretligt organ« er til hinder for at anlægge en forskellig vurdering alt efter, om en enheds vedtægter er blevet tilpasset den faktiske virkelighed eller ikke. Domstolen besvarede herefter det stillede spørgsmål med, at en enhed, som ikke er oprettet specielt med henblik på at imødekomme almenhedens behov, men som senere har fået overdraget varetagelsen af dette behov, opfylder betingelsen i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivets artikel 1, b, stk. 2, første led.

2) Ad et spørgsmål, om første kontroldirektiv er til hinder for klagefrister: Opfyldelsen af første kontroldirektivs formål vil blive bragt i fare, hvis klagere på ethvert tidspunkt i en udbudsprocedure kunne påberåbe sig overtrædelse af bestemmelserne om indgåelse af offentlige kontrakter og dermed forpligte ordregiverne til at omgøre en udbudsprocedure for at afhjælpe overtrædelserne. Rimelige søgsmålsfrister opfylder det effektivitetskrav, der følger af første kontroldirektiv, for så vidt som dette krav er udtryk for anvendelse af det grundlæggende retssikkerhedsprincip. Endvidere var de frister, der var tale om i sagen (14 dage), rimelige. EF-domstolen besvarede herefter spørgsmålet med, at første kontroldirektiv ikke er til hinder for nationale bestemmelser om, at klager skal være indgivet inden for en bestemt frist, såfremt den pågældende frist er rimelig.

3) Ad et spørgsmål, om Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet er til hinder for, at de virksomheder, som opfordres til at afgive tilbud, udvælges i henhold til udvælgelseskriterier, som ikke er oplyst på forhånd: Domstolen henviste til, at EBS fra begyndelsen havde fastlagt udvælgelseskriteriernes vægt, men at man ikke havde angivet noget herom i udbudsbekendtgørelsen. Det, som klageorganet ønskede oplyst, var herefter alene, om udvælgelseskriterierne ved et begrænset udbud skal oplyses i tilfælde, hvor ordregiveren har fastlagt dem på forhånd. Domstolen udtalte videre, at Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet ikke indeholder særlige[8] bestemmelser om forudgå-

[8] Den rigtige danske oversættelse havde formentlig været »generelle« eller »specifikke« i stedet for »særlige«. Det er i hvert fald det, der synes at være meningen. I de tyske, engelske og franske udgaver af dommen bruges ordene »besondere«, »specific«, og »spécifique«.

ende offentliggørelse af udvælgelseskriterier, men at ligebehandlingsprincippet, som ligger til grund for udbudsdirektiverne, medfører en forpligtelse til gennemsigtighed. EF-domstolen henviste desuden til forskellige regler i Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet og Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet. Domstolen konkluderede, at Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet skal fortolkes sådan, at en ordregiver, der ved et begrænset udbud på forhånd har fastsat regler for afvejning af kriterierne for udvælgelse af interesserede virksomheder til at afgive tilbud, er forpligtet til at angive disse regler i udbudsbekendtgørelsen eller udbudsbetingelserne (udbudsmaterialet).[9]

[9] Angivelsen af, at oplysning om de omhandlede regler kan være indeholdt i udbuds*betingelserne* (udbudsmaterialet) er ikke ganske forståelig, da udbudsbetingelserne vel typisk kun sendes til de virksomheder, der er udvalgt til at give tilbud. Formuleringen refererer dog formentlig blot til formuleringen af spørgsmålet fra den østrigske klageinstans.

Dette emneregister omfatter henvisninger til følgende afgørelser:

1) Klagenævnet for Udbuds kendelser
2) De danske retsafgørelser om udbudsret, som Klagenævnet for Udbud har kendskab til
3) De afgørelser om udbudsret, som EF-domstolen har truffet fra juli 1997 og fremefter, og som har interesse set fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel. (Henvisninger til enkelte tidligere afgørelser fra EF-domstolen er medtaget)
4) Nyere afgørelser om udbudsret fra Retten i Første Instans

Af praktiske grunde, herunder overskuelighedsgrunde, er emneregistret opdelt i to dele. Opdelingen er foretaget i forbindelse med en ajourføring af emneregistret pr. 30. september 2009.

Denne del 2 af emneregistret omfatter afgørelser afsagt fra og med 2009. Emneregistrets del 1 omfatter afgørelser til og med 2008 (men omfatter også henvisninger til enkelte senere danske domme, der har relation til kendelser fra Klagenævnet fra før 2009).

Klagenævnets kendelser er alle indeholdt i Klagenævnets websted, www.klfu.dk, sammen med resuméer af kendelserne. Der er i Klagenævnets websted desuden medtaget resuméer af de danske retsafgørelser og af afgørelserne fra EF- domstolen og Retten i Første Instans.

Hvis andet ikke fremgår, angår henvisningerne i emneregistret kendelser fra Klagenævnet for Udbud.

Danske domme fra de overordnede retter er angivet med følgende forkortelser:

HR: Højesteretsdom

VL: Vestre Landsrets dom

ØL: Østre Landsrets dom.

Domme trykt i Ugeskrift for Retsvæsen angives på traditionel måde med betegnelsen UfR efterfulgt af årgang og sidetal samt et bogstav (H for højesteretsdom, V for Vestre landsretsdom og Ø for Østre landsretsdom).

Domme fra Retten i Første Instans er angivet med betegnelsen Retten.

Emneregistret er uoverskueligt på skærmen, og overskuelighed opnår man kun ved at udskrive emneregistret på papir. Udskrivning bør helst ske i duplex, dvs. udskrift på begge sider af papiret. Alle moderne printere har en funktion til udskrivning i duplex.

Men man kan søge i den elektroniske version af emneregistret. (Fremgangsmåden ved søgning afhænger af browser og browserversion m.m. og kan derfor ikke angives generelt).

Emneregistret er resultatet af et uhyre omfattende arbejde, der er udført løbende gennem mange år, og mangelfuldheder og fejl har utvivlsomt ikke kunnet undgås. Klagenævnet for Udbud modtager meget gerne oplysning om mangelfuldheder og fejl, der er opdaget af brugere.

Emneregistrets del 2 ajourføres løbende. Den her foreliggende version af del 2 er ajourført til og med 31. marts 2010. Ajourføringerne i forhold til den seneste ajourføring af emneregistret pr. 31. december 2009 er markeret med fed skrift.

Omvendt licitation (dvs. udbud eller licitation vedrørende et byggeri, der ikke må koste over et bestemt beløb)	10/7-09 (NCC mod Billund Kommune, overtrædelse af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed ved underkriteriernes udformning og ved tilbudsvurderingen), 4/3-10 (Dansk Flygtningehjælp mod Hvidovre Kommune, angår tilbudsindhentning efter Tilbudslovens afsnit II)
Oplysninger fra udbyder, herunder besvarelse af spørgsmål	7/1-09 (MFI mod Udenrigsministeriet, et tilbud måtte ikke tages i betragtning, da det ikke var i overensstemmelse med forskellige krav i udbudsbetingelserne, herunder et krav, der var ændret uden oplysning til tilbudsgiveren), 17/2-09 (CLS mod Miljøministeriet, overtrædelse ved besvarelse af spørgsmål fra potentielle tilbudsgivere uden orientering til de øvrige potentielle tilbudsgivere, ved telefonisk besvarelse af spørgsmål fra potentielle tilbudsgivere og ved manglende besvarelse af et spørgsmål fra en potentiel tilbudsgiver; der skal orienteres om alle spørgsmål og svar), 24/3-09 (FMT mod Vestforbrænding, udbyderen var berettiget til ikke at tage et tilbud i betragtning, fordi tilbudsgiveren ikke havde overholdt en forskrift om fremgangsmåden ved henvendelser fra tilbudsgiverne, men udbyderen var ikke forpligtet til ikke at tage tilbuddet i betragtning, da tilbudsgiveren ikke havde opnået en fordel ved den henvendelse, der var tale om), VL 15/5-09 (det var ikke i strid med gennemsigtighedsprincippet, at udbyderen ikke på forhånd havde oplyst om et forhold, som udbyderen lagde afgørende vægt på, da gennemsigtighedsprincippet har til formål at sikre ligebehandlingsprin-cippets overholdelse, og da den manglende oplysning ikke havde ført til ulige behandling af tilbudsgiverne), 26/5-09 (Oberthur mod Region Nordjylland, udbyderen havde ikke pligt til på forhånd at oplyse om den anvendte vurderingsmodel, allerede fordi modellen ikke var fastlagt før tilbuddenes modtagelse), 4/6-09 (Eurest mod CBS, begrænset udbud af Bilag II-tjenesteydelse, overtrædelse af principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed ved uklare oplysninger og ved, at væsentlige oplysninger først blev givet kort før tilbudsfristens udløb), Retten 9/9-09 (Brink's Security, udbyderen havde pligt til efter anmodning at oplyse, hvem der havde foretaget tilbudsvurderingen), 16/6-09 (Tødin mod Tønder Kommune, en udbyder har ikke pligt til på forhånd at oplyse om omfanget af tidligere indkøb af produkter som de udbudte), 14/7-09 (Updata mod Lyngby-Taarbæk Kommune, overtrædelse ved fastsættelse af fristen for spørgsmål fra tilbudsgivere), 4/8-09 (Mölnlycke mod Region Hovedstaden, udbyder har ikke pligt til på forhånd at oplyse om en evalueringsmodel)

Opsigelse eller ophævelse af kontrakt	ØL 30/3-09 (udbyderens fejlagtige tilbudsvurdering var ikke så kvalificeret, at den kunne begrunde et pålæg om opsigelse af kontrakten med den valgte tilbudsgiver), Retten i Herning 5/11-09 (Kommuner mod AV Form, udbyderen pålagt at søge kontrakten med den valgte tilbudsgiver bragt til ophør, bl.a. henvist til, at kontrakten indeholdt forbehold om Klagenævnets afgørelse vedrørende opsættende virkning)
Opsættende virkning Rubrikken angår sager navnlig for Klagenævnet, hvor der har været spørgsmål om opsættende virkning. Hvis andet ikke er angivet, har Klagenævnet ikke truffet bestemmelse om opsættende virkning	15/1-09 (Ortos mod Odense Kommune), 20/1-09 (Neupart mod Økonomistyrelsen), 2/2-09 (Damm mod Forsvarets Materieltjeneste), 10/2-09 (Gustav H. Hans), 10/7-09 (NCC mod Billund Kommune, opsættende virkning), 14/7-09 (Updata mod Lyngby-Taarbæk Kommune, ikke opsættende virkning, da dette ikke kunne ventes at føre til et uopretteligt tab for klageren), 4/8-09 (Mölnlycke mod Region Hovedstaden), 5/8-09 (Poul Hartmann mod Region Hovedstaden), 12/8-09 (Novalis mod Personalestyrelsen), 13/8-09 (SundVikar mod Hillerød Kommune), 26/8-09 (Barslund mod Københavns Kommune), 11/9-09 (Mecanoo mod Århus Kommune), 14/9-09 (Vision Area mod Københavns Bymuseum), 29/9-09 (Lekolar mod Sydjysk Kommuneindkøb, ikke opsættende virkning med henvisning til, at klageren ikke havde afgivet tilbud, hvorfor opsættende virkning ikke var nødvendig for at afværge et uopretteligt tab hos klageren), 30/9-09 (Dansk Erhverv mod Region Nordjylland), 1/10-09 (Cimber Air mod Forsvarskommandoen), 14/10-09 (Frederik Petersen mod Viborg Kommune), 19/10-09 (DSV mod Vestforbrænding), 6/11-09 (Hettich mod Region Sjælland), 11/11-09 (Yding mod Viborg Kommune), 1/12-09, Løgten Murerforretning mod Norddjurs Kommune), 2/12-09 (Løgten Murerforretning mod Norddjurs Kommune), 3/12-09 (Bent Klausen mod Norddjurs Kommune), 10/12-09 (DCP mod Universitets- og Byggestyrelsen), 21/12-09 (Ergolet mod Københavns Kommune), 4/2-10 (Brøste mod Aabenraa Kommune, ikke taget stilling til en begæring om opsættende virkning, da ordregiveren havde annulleret tilbudsindhentningen), 5/2-10 (Klaus Kristoffer Larsen mod Hedensted Kommune), 11/2-10 (Einar J. Optioner	5/10-09 (Akso Nobel mod Tønder Kommune, en option skulle medregnes i udbyderens forhåndsskøn med hensyn til, om anskaffelsens værdi nåede op på Udbudsdirektivets tærskelværdi)
Ordregivende myndighed
Partnering	21/4-09 (Hoffmann mod Hørsholm Karlebo, udbud af partneringaftale om et byggearbejde, forhandlingsforbuddet gælder i partneringfasen), 11/12-09 (Tabulex mod Tønder Kommune, overtrædelse ved at indgå en partnerskabsaftale vedrørende en ityddelse uden udbud)
Passivitet	1/10-09 (Cimber Air mod Forsvarskommandoen, klageren var ikke ved passivitet afskåret fra at fremsætte et klagepunkt, selvom klageren havde haft anledning til at gøre forholdet gældende over for udbyderen tidligere), 16/10-09 (Konkurrencestyrelsen mod Region Sjælland og Region Hovedstaden, klageren kunne nedlægge påstand om annullation af udbyderens beslutninger om forlængelse af en rammeaftale, selvom rammeaftalen var udløbet og klagen først var indgivet 15 måneder efter udløbet)

Postbefordring
Pris	17/2-09 (CLS mod Miljøministeriet, forhandlingsforbuddet overtrådt ved forhandling om et forbehold om tilbudsgiverens erstatningsansvar, da forbeholdet reelt angik tilbudsprisen), 6/4-09 (Danacare mod Brøndby Kommune mfl., udbyderen kunne give tilbuddene samme karakter vedrørende et underkriterium om pris, selvom der var små prisforskelle mellem dem), 23/4-09 (Saver mod Region Midtjylland, overtrædelse ved at lægge nogle beløb til tilbudspriserne på baggrund af uklare angivelser i udbudsbetingelserne af, hvordan den udbudte kørsel ville blive honoreret), 19/5-09 (Anker Hansen mod Rudersdal Kommune, en pointmodel var uegnet i relation til et underkriterium om tilbudspris, da modellen medførte, at prisforskelle ikke kom tilstrækkeligt til udtryk, hvorfor modellen var uegnet til at adskille tilbuddene fra hinanden), Retten 20/5-09 (VIP Car, tilbudsprisen var blandt det valgte tilbuds karakteristika og relative fordele), 25/5-09 (NCC mod Vejdirektoratet, udbyderen var berettiget til at lægge et beløb til tilbudspriserne i nogle alternative tilbud for at kunne sammenligne dem med tilbudspriserne i hovedtilbuddene), 16/6-09 (Tødin mod Tønder Kommune, udbyderen var berettiget til at beregne tilbudspriserne på grundlag af en del af de tilbudte produkter), 1/10-09 (Cimber Air mod Forsvarskommandoen, udbyderen måtte ikke indhente prisoplysninger fra en tilbudsgiver), 21/12-09 (Ergolet mod Københavns Kommune, en formel for tildeling af points i relation til et underkriterium om pris var i strid med gennemsigtighedsprincippet, da formlen bevirkede, at underkriteriet ikke blev vægtet som angivet i udbudsbetingelserne), 12/2-10 (Nøhr & Sigsgaard mod Kriminalforsorgen, udbyderens tilbudsvurdering i relation til underkriteriet pris efter en skala fra 2 til 5 afspejlede ikke prisforskellene mellem tilbuddene)
Prissætning	23/4-09 (Saver mod Region Midtjylland, uberettiget prissætning på baggrund af uklare angivelser i udbudsbetingelserne af, hvordan den udbudte kørsel ville blive honoreret), 25/5-09 (NCC mod Vejdirektoratet, udbyderen var berettiget til at lægge et beløb til tilbudspriserne i nogle alternative tilbud for at kunne sammenligne dem med tilbudspriserne i hovedtilbuddene), 26/5-09 (Oberthur mod Region Nordjylland, overtrædelse ved at tage et tilbud i betragtning, selvom tilbuddet indeholdt et forbehold, der ikke kunne prissættes), 14/7-09 (Updata mod Lyngby-Taarbæk Kommune, tilbuddenes manglende opfyldelse af et underkriterium, der reelt var et mindstekrav, ville skulle prissættes, hvilket ville påvirke tilbudsvurderingen i relation til nogle andre underkriterier), 26/8-09 (Barslund mod Københavns Kommune, et forbehold om vinterforanstaltninger kunne prissættes; prissætning skal foretages sådan, at der skabes fuld sikkerhed for, at tilbudsgiveren ikke opnår en økonomisk fordel, og en prissætning på grundlag af en sandsynlighedsberegning opfyldte ikke dette krav)
Private, overladelse af opgaver til	EF-domstolen 15/10-09 (Acoset, nogle ordregivende myndigheder kunne uden forudgående offentliggørelse give et selskab koncession på udførelse af en tjenesteydelse, selvom selskabet havde privat deltagelse, da den private deltager var fundet gennem et EU-udbud)
Projektkonkurrencer, sager om	11/9-09 (Mecanoo mod Århus Kommune, udbud med forhandling på grundlag af projektkonkurrence)
Proportionalitetsprincippet	EF-domstolen 19/5-09 (Assitur, proportionalitetsprincippet skal overholdes ved fastsættelsen af nationale udelukkelsesgrunde), EF-domstolen 23/12-09 (Serrantoni, traktatens grundlæggende principper, navnlig ligebehandlingsprincippet, gælder ved anskaffelser under tærskelværdien under forudsætning af, at der foreligger en grænseoverskridende interesse; medlemsstaterne har en vis skønsmargin, men proportionalitetsprincippet skal overholdes; en italiensk regel om, at et konsortium og et medlem af konsortiet ikke kan afgive tilbud under samme udbud, var i strid med proportionalitetsprincippet)
Præjudicielle spørgsmål
Prækvalifikation	20/1-09 (Neupart mod Økonomistyrelsen, overtrædelse ved at afvise to anmodninger fra samme virksomhed om prækvalifikation, dissens), 10/3-09 (Munkebjerg mod Økonomistyrelsen, udbyderen kunne kræve, at anmodninger om prækvalifikation blev indgivet gennem Internettet ved brug af en særlig software; udbyderen var forpligtet til at afvise en anmodning om prækvalifikation, da anmodningen ikke som krævet indeholdt oplysning om gæld til det offentlige), 14/9-09 (Vision Area mod Københavns Bymuseum, det var ikke i strid med ligebehandlingsprincippet at prækvalificere et konsortium, der som underleverandør anvendte en virksomhed, som havde udført et begrænset arbejde for udbyderen i forbindelse med udarbejdelsen af udbudsbetingelserne), 24/2-10 (Atea mod Økonomistyrelsen, udbyderens afvisning af en ansøgning om prækvalifikation som følge af manglende opfyldelse af et krav var uberettiget, da udbudsbekendtgørelsen var uklar på det pågældende punkt, og da ansøgningen måtte fortolkes som opfyldende kravet; Klagenævnet havde ikke grundlag for at tage stilling til, om ansøgeren skulle have været prækvalificeret), 10/3-10 (Mantova mod Undervisningsministeriet, ordregiveren måtte ikke tage nogle ansøgninger om prækvalifikation i betragtning, da nogle krævede regnskabsoplysninger først blev indsendt senere på ordregiverens anmodning)

Prøvetid
Pålæg til udbyder	4/3-09 (Berendsen mod Frederikssund Kommune, anmodning om betinget pålæg om udbud afvist, da et sådant påbud ikke ville medføre ændring af retsstillingen), 13/5-09 (Billetlugen mod Det Kgl. Teater, påstand om pålæg af lovliggørelse af udbuddet afvist, da udbuddet var afsluttet), 19/5-09 (Anker Hansen mod Rudersdal Kommune, ikke pålæg om at indgå kontrakt med klageren, allerede fordi udbuddet som følge af udbyderens overtrædelser ikke kunne danne grundlag for en lovlig tildelingsbeslutning), Retten i Herning 5/11-09 (Kommuner mod AV Form, udbyderen pålagt at søge kontrakten med den valgte tilbudsgiver bragt til ophør, bl.a. henvist til, at kontrakten indeholdt forbehold om Klagenævnets afgørelse vedrørende opsættende virkning), 11/12-09 (Tabulex mod Tønder Kommune, Klagenævnet havde ikke hjemmel til at pålægge ordregiveren at bringe en ulovligt indgået aftale til ophør; en påstand om lovliggørelse afvist, da det ikke ville medføre ændring i ordregiverens retsstilling at tage påstanden til følge), 25/3-0 (Visma mod Hillerød Kommune, påstande om pålæg om lovliggørelse af et afsluttet udbud afvist, ligeledes afvist en påstand om pålæg til udbyderen om at ophæve den indgåede kontrakt eller om konstatering af, at udbyderen efter EU-retten havde pligt hertil)
Rammeaftaler	16/10-09 (Konkurrencestyrelsen mod Region Sjælland og Region Hovedstaden, forlængelse af en rammeaftale var i strid med Udbudsdirektivet, da ordregiveren skulle have iværksat et nyt EU-udbud så betids, at der kunne indgås ny aftale ved rammeaftalens udløb; ændring af begyndelsestidspunktet med mere end et år for 2-årige rammeaftaler indgået på grundlag af et EU-udbud var i strid med Udbudsdirektivet, det var uden betydning, at tilbudsvurderingen var trukket ud), 21/12-09 (Ergolet mod Københavns Kommune, overtrædelse af gennemsigtighedsprincippet bl.a. ved manglende angivelse af de forventede anskaffelser under en rammeaftale)
Referenceprodukter	12/3-09 (Lyreco mod Varde Kommune, overtrædelse af Udbudsdirektivets artikel 23, stk. 8, ved angivelse af bestemte fabrikater og produkter), 19/5-09 (Anker Hansen mod Rudersdal Kommune, tilsvarende), 14/10-09 (Frederik Petersen mod Viborg Kommune, tilsvarende, henvist til, at kontraktens genstand kunne beskrives uden henvisning til referenceprodukter)
Retsvirkning af Klagenævnets afgørelser
Sagsomkostninger	13/5-09 (Billetlugen mod Det Kgl. Teater, udbyderen ikke pålagt sagsomkostninger, selvom overtrædelse var konstateret), 29/6-09 (Master Data mod Københavns Kommune, udbyderen pålagt at betale sagsomkostninger til en klager, selvom klagen var tilbagekaldt som følge af et forlig mellem klageren og udbyderen; det strider mod Klagenævnets faste praksis, at Klagenævnet anså sig for kompetent til at træffe afgørelsen, og afgørelsen kan næppe tages som udtryk for en praksisændring på dette punkt)
Sale and lease back
Samarbejde mellem ordregivende myndigheder (herunder indkøbscentraler, in house og sammenslutninger af ordregivende myndigheder)	EF-domstolen 9/6-09 (Kommissionen mod Tyskland, nogle offentlige myndigheder kunne uden udbud indgå i et samarbejde om forbrænding af renovation), EF-domstolen 10/9-09 (Sea, kontrolkriteriet for in house er opfyldt, når selskabets aktiviteter er begrænset til at angå de ejende ordregivende myndigheders område, og når de ejende ordregivende myndigheder udøver en bestemmende indflydelse på selskabets strategi og vigtige beslutninger; den blotte mulighed for privat deltagelse i selskabet er ikke til hinder for at anse det for in house), EF-domstolen 15/10-09 (Acoset, nogle ordregivende myndigheder kunne uden forudgående offentliggørelse give et selskab koncession på udførelse af en tjenesteydelse, selvom selskabet havde privat deltagelse og derfor ikke kunne være in house, da den private deltager var fundet gennem et EU-udbud)
Selskaber	EF-domstolen 23/12-09 (Serrantoni, en italiensk regel om, at et konsortium og et medlem af konsortiet ikke kan afgive tilbud under samme udbud, var i strid med proportionalitetsprincippet)
Sideordnede udbud/licitationer
Sociale hensyn
Spørgsmål til tilbudsgivere	12/8-09 (Novalis mod Personalestyrelsen, udbyderen havde ikke pligt til at spørge en tilbudsgiver om, hvorledes nogle forudsætninger i tilbuddet skulle forstås), 1/10-09 (Cimber Air mod Forsvarskommandoen, udbyderen måtte ikke indhente prisoplysninger fra en tilbudsgiver), Retten 10/12-09 (Antwerpse, udbyderen kunne indhente supplerende oplysninger fra nogle tilbudsgivere om deres tilbuds prismæssige sammensætning)

Spørgsmålsfrist (dvs. frist for spørgsmål fra tilbudsgivere)	14/7-09 (Updata mod Lyngby-Taarbæk Kommune, overtrædelse af Udbudsdirektivets artikel 39 ved at fastsætte en spørgsmålsfrist, der udløb godt en måned før tilbudsfristen), 11/11-09 (Yding mod Viborg Kommune, en spørgsmålsfrist, der udløb 19 dage før tilbudsfristen, var i strid med Udbudsdirektivets artikel 39, stk. 2)
Standarder
Standardforbehold	26/8-09 (Barslund mod Københavns Kommune, standardforbehold om vinterforanstaltninger angik i det konkrete tilfælde ikke et grundlæggende element og kunne prissættes, men prissætningen måtte ikke ske ved en sandsynlighedsberegning), 12/1-10 (Børge Jakobsen mod Sorø Kommune, udbyderen var forpligtet til at afvise tilbud, der indeholdt Dansk Byggeris standardforbehold, da udbudsbetingelserne klart og ubetinget angav, at disse standardforbehold ikke ville blive accepteret)
Standstill	6/4-09 (Danacare mod Brøndby Kommune mfl., et brev er ikke hurtigst mulige kommunikationsmiddel), EF-domstolen 11/6-09 (Kommissionen mod Frankrig, en national regel om, at en stand-still periode kunne forkortes i visse tilfælde, var ikke i strid med kontroldirektiverne; en regel om, at der først kunne klages en vis tid efter forhåndsorientering til udbyderen, var derimod i strid med direktiverne), 14/7-09 (Updata mod Lyngby-Taarbæk Kommune, stand-still fristen løb ikke fra udbyderens første underretning, der ikke opfyldte kravene til underretning, men fra udbyderens senere behørige underretning), Retten i Herning 5/11-09 (Kommuner mod AV Form, når en klage til Klagenævnet er begæret opsættende virkning i standstill-perioden, og klageren eller Klagenævnet har underrettet udbyderen herom, må udbyderen ikke indgå kontrakt, før Klagenævnet har truffet afgørelse vedrørende opsættende virkning), Retten 10/12-09 (Antwerpse, udbyderen kunne indhente supplerende oplysninger fra nogle tilbudsgivere, efter at en tilbudsgiver i standstill-perioden havde protesteret mod tildelingsbeslutningen, idet standstill-reglerne ellers ville være uden indhold), 17/2-10 (Excellent Match mod DONG, standstill-reglerne angår ikke Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet)
Statsstøtte	EF-domstolen 23/12-09 (CoNISma, at et organ modtager offentlig finansiering eller statsstøtte, er ikke i sig selv til hinder for, at organet afgiver tilbud under et EU-udbud)

Tegningsberettigelse
Tekniske specifikationer	14/10-09 (Frederik Petersen mod Viborg Kommune, overtrædelse af Udbudsdirektivets artikel 23, stk. 8, ved henvisning til referenceprodukter, også selvom det skete med tilføjelsen »som« eller tilføjelsen »eller tilsvarende«
Tilbagekaldelse
Tilbudsfrist	14/7-09 (Updata mod Lyngby-Taarbæk Kommune, overtrædelse ved efter tilbudsfristens udløb at indhente årsrapporter for tilbudsgiverne)
Tilbudslovens afsnit I	17/4-09 (Lambæk mod Ældre Sagen mfl., Tilbudsloven gælder kun for udbydere og gælder ikke for udbydernes tekniske rådgivere), 11/2-10 (Einar J. Jensen mod Guldborgsund Kommune, ordregiveren havde ikke pligt til at opfordre de samme virksomheder, der havde afgivet tilbud under en annulleret licitation, til at afgive tilbud under en ny licitation, der trådte i stedet for den annullerede), 5/3-10, (Gorm Hansen og Søn mod Greve Kommune mfl., overtrædelse ved at tage et tilbud i betragtning, selvom tilbuddet ikke opfyldte nogle mindstekrav i licitationsbetingelserne), 26/3-10 (Einar Kornerup mod Parkvænget, overtrædelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet og Tilbudslovens § 11, stk. 2, ved at tage reviderede tilbud i betragtning, selvom udbyderen ikke havde tilkendegivet en procedure for forhandlinger med tilbudsgiverne, desuden overtrædelse af Tilbudslovens § 8 ved ikke at indgå kontrakt med den tilbudsgiver, hvis oprindelige tilbud udbyderen havde anset for det økonomisk mest fordelagtige)
Tilbudslovens afsnit II	4/3-09 (Berendsen mod Frederikssund Kommune, overtrædelse af Udbudsdirektivet og Tilbudslovens afsnit II ved anskaffelse af en bilag II B-ydelse om tøjvask), 10/3-09 (Munkebjerg mod Økonomistyrelsen, begrænset udbud vedrørende hotelophold omfattet af Bilag II B og Tilbudslovens afsnit II), 11/3-09 (Danske Kroer og Hoteller mod Økonomistyrelsen, tilsvarende), 13/8-09 (SundVikar mod Hillerød Kommune, diverse klagepunkter, en evalueringsmodel, hvorefter tilbuddene blev vurderet i forhold til hinanden i relation til et underkriterium om pris, var ikke en overtrædelse af udbudsreglerne), 15/9-09 (Almenbo mod Nygårdsparken, overtrædelse ved indgåelse af aftale om Bilag II A-tjenesteydelse under tærskelværdien uden forudgående annoncering, undtagelsesbestemmelserne i Tilbudslovens § 15 c fandt ikke anvendelse), 30/9-09 (Dansk Erhverv mod Region Nordjylland), 5/10-09 (Akso Nobel mod Tønder Kommune, en option skulle medregnes i ordregiverens forhåndsskøn med hensyn til, om anskaffelsens værdi nåede op på Udbudsdirektivets tærskelværdi, og der skulle derfor have været iværksat et EU-udbud i stedet for en tilbudsindhentning efter Tilbudslovens afsnit II), 2/2-10 (VKAREN mod Odense Kommune, det var ikke i strid med forbuddet mod forskelsbehandling i Tilbudslovens § 15 d, stk. 1, at en ordregiver ved en fejl undlod at underrette en virksomhed om en tilbudsindhentning efter Tilbndslovens afsnit II, selvom ordregiveren tidligere havde lovet virksomheden at give en sådan underretning), 4/2-10 (Brøste mod Aabenraa Kommune, overtrædelse af Tilbudslovens § 15 d, stk. 1, ved at tage et tilbud i betragtning, selvom tilbuddet ikke opfyldte et krav i betingelserne for tilbudsindhentningen), 4/3-10 (Dansk Flygtningehjælp mod Hvidovre Kommune, diverse overtrædelser), 10/3-10 (Mantova mod Undervisningsministeriet, konstateret en overtrædelse, desuden forskellige udtalelser om tilbudsvurdering) Tildeling, herunder tilbudsvurdering	15/1-09 (Ortos mod Odense Kommune, overtrædelse ved, at nogle delkriterier var udvælgelseskriterier, der ikke kunne anvendes ved tilbudsvurderingen; en udbyder kan indgå kontrakt med en tilbudsgiver, selvom fristen for vedståelse af tilbuddet er udløbet), Retten 28/1-09 (Centro Studio Manieri, udbyderen har en vid skønsmargen), 12/2-09 (NCC mod Vejdirektoratet, udbyderen var af nærmere angivne grunde berettiget til at tildele tilbuddene fra en tilbudsgiver vedrørende delentrepriser forskellige points i relation til et fælles underkriterium; Klagenævnet efterprøver ikke en udbyders skøn med hensyn til den relative vurdering af tilbuddene, af nærmere angivne grunde taget stilling til udbyderens pointtildeling vedrørende et underkriterium), ØL 5/3-09 (udbyderen ikke havde foretaget en professionel og forsvarlig tilbudsvurdering), 12/3-09 (Lyreco mod Varde Kommune, overtrædelse ved at lægge vægt på de samme forhold i relation til flere underkriterier og ved at vurdere tilbud i relation til et underkriterium om kvalitet på grundlag af en lille del af de tilbudte produkter), 6/4-09 (Danacare mod Brøndby Kommune mfl., udbyderen kunne give tilbuddene samme karakter vedrørende et underkriterium om pris, selvom der var små prisforskelle mellem dem), 21/4-09 (Hoffmann mod Hørsholm Karlebo, overtrædelse ved at tage et tilbud i betragtning, selvom det ikke indeholdt nogle krævede angivelser om delpriser, og ved at lægge vægt på et delkriterium, der ikke fremgik af udbudsbetingelserne), 13/5-09 (Billetlugen mod Det Kgl. Ungdomsboliger, støttede private	27/3-09 (Ungdomsboliger i Aalborg mod Velfærdsministeriet, ansøgning om støtte afslået med rette, da ansøgningen ikke opfyldte normkravene; det var uden betydning, at ansøgeren var villig til at ændre sit projekt)

Del 1: Afgørelser til og med 2008

februar 2010

(enkelte senere tilføjelser kan have fundet sted)

Dette emneregister omfatter henvisninger til følgende afgørelser:

1) Klagenævnet for Udbuds kendelser
2) De danske retsafgørelser om udbudsret, som Klagenævnet for Udbud har kendskab til
3) De afgørelser om udbudsret, som EF-domstolen og Retten i Første Instans har truffet fra juli 1997 og fremefter, og som har interesse set fra en dansk udbudsretlig synsvinkel. Henvisninger til enkelte tidligere afgørelser fra EF-domstolen er dog medtaget.

Af praktiske grunde, herunder overskuelighedsgrunde, er emneregistret opdelt i to dele. Opdelingen er foretaget i forbindelse med en ajourføring af emneregistret pr. 30. september 2009.

Denne del 1 af emneregistret omfatter afgørelser afsagt til og med 2008 (men omfatter også henvisninger til enkelte senere danske domme, der har relation til kendelser fra Klagenævnet fra før 2009). Emneregistrets del 2 omfatter afgørelser fra og med 2009.

Klagenævnets kendelser er alle indeholdt i Klagenævnets websted, www.klfu.dk, sammen med resuméer af kendelserne. Der er i Klagenævnets websted desuden medtaget resuméer af de danske retsafgørelser og af afgørelserne fra EF- domstolen og Retten i Første Instans.

Hvis andet ikke fremgår, angår henvisningerne i emneregistret kendelser fra Klagenævnet for Udbud.

Danske domme fra de overordnede retter er angivet med følgende forkortelser:

HR: Højesteretsdom

VL: Vestre Landsrets dom

ØL: Østre Landsrets dom.

Domme trykt i Ugeskrift for Retsvæsen angives på traditionel måde med betegnelsen UfR efterfulgt af årgang og sidetal samt et bogstav (H for højesteretsdom, V for Vestre landsretsdom og Ø for Østre landsretsdom).

Domme fra Retten i Første Instans er angivet med betegnelsen Retten.

Emneregister er uoverskueligt på skærmen, og overskuelighed opnår man kun ved at udskrive emneregistret på papir. Udskrivning bør helst ske i duplex, dvs. udskrift på begge sider af papiret. Alle moderne printere har en funktion til udskrivning i duplex.

Men man kan søge i den elektroniske version af emneregistret. Fremgangsmåden ved søgning afhænger af browser og browserversion m.m. og kan derfor ikke angives generelt.

Emneregistret er resultatet af et uhyre omfattende arbejde, der er udført løbende gennem mange år, og mangelfuldheder og fejl har utvivlsomt ikke kunnet undgås. Klagenævnet for Udbud modtager meget gerne oplysning om mangelfuldheder og fejl, der er opdaget af brugere.

Emneregistrets del 1 er endeligt udformet i februar 2010 og ajourføres kun, hvis der senere afsiges en retsafgørelse med relation til en kendelse fra Klagenævnet fra før 2009.

Emneregistrets del 2 ajourføres derimod løbende.

Aktindsigt	21/9-95 (Semco mod Brønderslev Kommune, aktindsigt for klager skulle afgøres efter Forvaltningsloven ud fra en afvejning efter dennes § 15, stk. 1; Klagenævnet har truffet lignende afgørelser adskillige gange senere, dog ikke i kendelsesform), 27/8-97 (DAF mod Haderslev Kommune, ikke aktindsigt for brancheorganisation), 17/10-97 Tårnby Kommune, delvis aktindsigt for brancheorganisation i henhold til Offentlighedsloven), 23/9-05 (Sjælsø Entreprise mod Statsbiblioteket, klager tillagt aktindsigt i de andre tilbudsgiveres tilbud med visse undtagelser; Forvaltningslovens § 15, stk. 1, afskærer ikke automatisk en klager fra aktindsigt i de andre tilbudsgiveres tilbud), 11/12-05 (Jan Houlberg mod Skatteministeriet, klager afskåret fra aktindsigt i det vindende tilbud i medfør af Forvaltningslovens § 15, men tillagt aktindsigt forskellige andre bilag, udgangspunktet er nærmest, at der er fuld aktindsigt i alle bilag), 28/2-06 (S-Card mod Rigspolitiet, klagers aktindsigt omfattede ikke de andre tilbudsgiveres forretningshemmeligheder; udbyderens rapport om udbuddet var ikke et internt arbejdsdokument, men nogle interne arbejdsdokumenter var stadig interne, selvom udbyderen havde sendt dem til Klagenævnet; ved EU-udbud skal udbyderen udfærdige et dokument som grundlag for tildelingsbeslutningen, og dette dokument er ikke et internt arbejdsdokument i relation til reglerne om aktindsigt), 13/2-07 (Plantware mod Amagerforbrændingen, nogle betingelser i kontrakten med den valgte tilbudsgiver var uden betydning for omfanget af klagerens aktindsigt, da spørgsmålet skulle afgøres efter Forvaltningslovens § 15, stk. 1)
Alternative tilbud	18/11-96 (European Metro Group mod Ørestadsselskabet, mindstekrav for alternative tilbud var ikke angivet tilstrækkeligt præcist, for så vidt stadfæstet ved ØL 16/9-02, ikke taget stilling til spørgsmålet i Højesterets senere dom af 31/3-05 i UfR 2005 s. 1799 H), 31/8-98 (Miri mod Ringsted Kommune, bestemmelser i udbudsbetingelserne måtte forstås som mindstekrav, alternativt tilbud kan tages i betragtning, selvom hovedtilbuddet ikke er konditionsmæssigt), 14/9-98 (Handelskammeret mod Danmarks Statistik, mindstekrav var ikke angivet tilstrækkeligt præcist), 22/10-98 (Mangor og Nagel mod Middelfart Kommune, udbudsbetingelserne gav ikke mulighed for alternative tilbud), 14/10-03 (KK Ventilation mod Vejle Amt, et tilbud var ikke alternativt, selvom det blev betegnet sådan), EF-domstolen 16/10-03 (Traunfellner, hvis udbudsbetingelserne ikke angiver mindstekrav for alternative tilbud, må alternative tilbud ikke tages i betragtning, henvisning til en national regel om, at alternative tilbud skal være ligeværdige, er ikke tilstrækkeligt), 9/6-04 (Per Aarsleff mod Fyns Amt mfl., overtrædelse af Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet ved angivelse, der kunne forstås sådan, at tilbudsgivere ved at afgive alternative tilbud kunne ændre tildelingskriteriet), 21/6-04 (Banverket mod Nordjyske Jernbaner, udbud efter forhandling efter Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet, mindstekrav for alternative tilbud var ikke angivet tilstrækkeligt klart), 16/12-04 (Brunata mod diverse boligselskaber, hvis mindstekrav for alternative tilbud ikke er angivet, må alternative tilbud ikke tages i betragtning), 15/12-05 (Air Liquide mod Roskilde Amt mfl., overtrædelse ved manglende angivelse af mindstekrav for alternative tilbud), 5/9-06 (Joca mod Reno Syd, en angivelse i udbudsbetingelserne var et sideordnet udbud og angik ikke alternative tilbud), 10/11-06 (Svend Andresen mod Århus Amt, angivelse i udbudsbetingelserne af, at der kunne gives alternative tilbud, var ukorrekt, da der var tale om sideordnede licitationer), 14/12-06 (Baxter mod Roskilde Amt, utilstrækkelig angivelse af de mindstekrav, som alternative tilbud skulle opfylde), 8/1-08 (WAP mod Ørestadsparkering, der kan gives mulighed for alternative tilbud ved konkurrencepræget dialog), 28/10-08 (Bjarne Larsen mod Morsø Kommune, udbyderen kunne ved tilbudsindhentning efter Tilbudslovens afsnit II indgå kontrakt på grundlag af et alternativt tilbud, da betingelserne ikke indeholdt forbud mod alternative tilbud), 5/11-08 (Brøndum mod Ringgården, overtrædelse ved manglende angivelse af mindstekrav for alternative tilbud), 26/11-08 (NCC mod Vejdirektoratet, udbudsbetingelsernes beskrivelse af mindstekravene til alternative tilbud var tilstrækkelig præcis, men overtrædelse ved at tage et alternativt tilbud i betragtning, selvom tilbuddet ikke opfyldte udbudsbetingelsernes krav til alternative tilbud; endvidere var det ikke godtgjort. at udbyderens prissætning af det alternative tilbud ikke havde givet tilbudsgiveren en konkurrencemæssig fordel; desuden overtrædelse ved en angivelse i udbudsbetingelserne af, at det stod udbyderen frit for, om et uopfordret alternativt tilbud ville komme i betragtning)
Annullation, Klagenævnets, af udbyders beslutninger Hvis andet ikke er angivet, har Klagenævnet truf-	3/11-94 (Kenn Sonne), 22/6-95 (Kommunernes gensidige Forsikringsselskab mod Vibo mfl., ikke annullation), 25/10-95 (Siemens mod Esbjerg Kommune), 23/1-96 (PAR mod Glostrup Kommune, ikke annullation), 26/4-96 (Pihl & Søn mod Avedøre Kloakværk), 7/6-96 (Handelskammeret mod Horsens Kommune, ikke annullation), 13/9-96 (Tårnby Kommune, Klagenævnet kan annullere udbyders annullation af udbud, dog ikke annullation), 16/10-96 (Danske Vognmænd mod Stevns Kommune, ikke an-

Thomsen mod Blåvandshuk Kommune, et tildelingskriterium hørte hjemme under prækvalifikationen og var derfor i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, med hensyn til nogle andre tildelingskriterier kunne det ikke udelukkes, at de var egnede til at identificere det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud), 9/10-00 (Dapa mod Kolding Kommune, afvisning af anmodning om prækvalifikation var berettiget, men begrundelsen var forkert), 6/8-01 (Oxford Research mod Faaborg Kommune, det var i strid med direktivet, at udbyder havde prækvalificeret flere tilbudsgivere end det angivne maksimale antal), 26/10-01 (Eterra mod Esbjerg Kommune, tilsvarende), Retten 26/2-02 (Esedra mod Kommissionen, udbyderen kunne fra en tilbudsgiver indhente regnskaber, der skulle have været vedlagt ansøgningen om prækvalifikation), 10/5-02 (Ementor mod Århus Amt, udbyder måtte ikke indgå kontrakt med en underleverandør til en prækvalificeret tilbudsgiver), EF-domstolen 12/12-02 (Universale-Bau, hvis udbyder på forhånd har fastlagt kriterierne for udvælgelse af tilbudsgivere, skal disse kriterier oplyses), EF-domstolen 18/3-04 (Telekom & Partner, udbyder må i opfyldelsesfasen begrænse brugen af underentreprenører, hvis formåen ikke har kunnet efterprøves i udvælgelsesfasen), 23/3-04 (Tolkeservice mod Viborg Amt, udbyders beslutning om ikke at prækvalificere en ansøger som følge af dårlige erfaringer mod denne var saglig), 15/12-05 (Air Liquide mod Roskilde amt mfl., overtrædelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet ved angivelse af, at virksomheder, der var udbyder bekendt, ikke skulle medsende dokumentation for formåen), 8/12-06 (Nethleas mod Økonomistyrelsen, ikke pligt for udbyder til at kræve dokumentation for visse oplysninger ved anmodning om prækvalifikation), EF-domstolen 18/7-07 (Kommissionen mod Grækenland, antagelse af tilbud i strid med udvælgelseskriterier angår ligebehandlingsprincippet, ikke gennemsigtighedsprincippet), 19/7-07 (ISS mod Skejby Sygehus, overtrædelse af Udbudsdirektivet ved tildelingsbeslutning i strid med prækvalifikationen), 24/8-07 (LSI Metro Gruppen mod Ørestadsselskabet, udbyderen kunne ikke undlade at prækvalificere en virksomhed med den begrundelse, at virksomheden havde erfaringer fra et tidligere lignende projekt, og udbyderen kunne prækvalificere virksomheder, der havde stillet medarbejdere til rådighed for det udbudte projekt; en udbyder må ikke undlade at prækvalificere en virksomhed med den begrundelse, at en ansat hos udbyderen har tætte forbindelser til virksomheden), 3/9-07 (SP Medical mod Skat, åbenbar skrivefejl i anmodning om prækvalifikation kunne berigtiges; en virksomhed kunne prækvalifi-ceres, selvom den ikke havde fremsendt regnskabsmateriale, da kravet herom var uklart, hvorfor fejlen var beskeden, og da der ikke var tale om forskelsbehandling, et krav om medarbejdere tæt på udbyderen var opfyldt af medarbejdere i Tyskland, opretholdt af Retten i Horsens 20/5-09), 19/9-07 (Råstof og Genanvendelse mod Århus Kommune, udbyderen var forpligtet til ikke at prækvalificere en virksomhed, hvis ansøgning om prækvalifikation var modtaget efter ansøgningsfristens udløb; det var uden betydning, om der forinden havde været kontakt mellem virksomheden og udbyderen, og hvad denne kontakt havde drejet sig om), 19/12-07 (HIQ Wise mod Danske Spil, udbyderen var berettiget til at afvise en anmodning om prækvalifikation fra en virksomhed, der ikke havde vedlagt den krævede dokumentation med hensyn til udelukkelsesgrundene i Udbudsdirektivets artikel 45), 15/1-08 (C.F. Møller mod Universitets- og Byggestyrelsen, angivelse i udbudsbekendtgørelsen af, at der ville blive indgået kontrakt med en gruppe af rådgivere med solidarisk ansvar, var ikke i strid med Udbudsdirektivets artikel 4, stk. 2, og udbyderen havde med rette undladt at prækvalificere en ansøger, der ikke bestod af en gruppe af rådgivere), 12/2-08 (Rengøringsgrossisten mod Skive Kommune, udbyder var berettiget til at beslutte, at en virksomhed ikke skulle prækvalificeres, og havde pligt til ikke at prækvalificere virksomheden, da den ikke rettidigt havde indsendt en krævet dokumentation for erhvervsansvarsforsikring; udbyderen overtrådte ligebehandlingsprincippet ved at prækvalificere en anden virksomhed, der ikke havde indsendt serviceattest rettidigt), 14/4-08 (Damm mod Økonomistyrelsen, udbyder har ikke pligt til at kræve dokumentation for ønskede oplysninger), 14/5-08 (Trans-Lift mod DSB, overtrædelse af Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivets artikel 52 ved krav om bankgaranti fra en enkelt af ansøgerne), 11/9-08 (Pro-Safe mod Farvandsvæsnet, udbyderen kunne prækvalificere en virksomhed, der ikke som krævet i udbudsbekendtgørelsen havde vedlagt ansøgningen en årsrapport for 2006/2007, da fristen for indlevering af en sådan årsrapport til Erhvervs- og Selskabsstyrelsen ikke var udløbet, og da forskelligt regnskabsmateriale, som virksomheden havde vedlagt, var tilstrækkeligt), 5/11-08 (Brøndum mod Ringgården, overtrædelse ved prækvalifikation af 6 virksomheder, selvom der efter udbudsbekendtgørelsen ville blive prækvalificeret 5 virksomheder), Retten 10/9-08 (Evr. Dynamiki mod EF-domstolen, annullation af beslutning om ikke at prækvalificere en virksomhed, da udbyderen havde givet en urigtig og vildledende begrundelse for beslutningen)

Prøvetid	21/3-02 (Holsted Minibus mod Næstved Kommune, om lovligheden af kontraktsbestemmelser om gensidig prøvetid)
Pålæg til udbyder	25/10-95 (Siemens mod Esbjerg Kommune, pålæg om gennemførelse af udbud), 12/12-96 (Entreprenørforeningen mod Sønderborg Kraftvarmeværk, pålæg om EU-udbud), 21/10-98 (R98, pålæg om at foretage udbud m.m.), 10/6-99 (Højgaard & Schultz mod Odder Kommune, udbyder pålagt at se bort fra et ukonditionsmæssigt tilbud), 14/12-00 (Renoflex mod Vestforbrænding, pålæg om at lovliggøre udbuddet ved at foretage en objektivt uangribelig evaluering af tilbuddene), 2/5-01 (Magnus mod Told og Skat, betinget pålæg om nyt udbud med klar angivelse af det udbudte), 24/10-01 (Eiland mod Vestsjællands Amt, pålæg om at foretage nyt udbud), 16/12-03 (Bilhuset Randers mod Sønderhald Kommune, betinget pålæg om nyt udbud), 14/10-04 (SK Tolkeservice mod Københavns Amt, ikke annullation eller pålæg om nyt udbud, da udbyderen kunne indgå ny kontrakt uden EU-udbud), 15/12-05 (Air Liquide mod Roskilde Amt mfl., påstand om pålæg om nyt udbud afvist, bl.a. fordi udbudspligt ved indgåelse af ny kontrakt fulgte af Udbudsdirektivet), 31/3-08 (Cowi mod Kort og Matrikelstyrelsen, ikke påbud om lovliggørelse, da der ikke var konstateret overtrædelser), Retten 14/2-04 (Makedoniko mod Kommissionen, påstand om pålæg til Kommissionen afvist)
Rammeaftaler	2/7-98 (FRI mod Københavns Lufthavne, afvigelser mellem udbudt rammeaftale og indgåede kontrakter var ulovlige, generelle bemærkninger om rammeaftaler), 29/11-03 (Unicomputer mod Greve Kommune, om forholdet mellem EU's udbudsregler og SKI-rammeaftaler), 27/4-06 (Unicomputer mod SKI, det var ikke i strid med Indkøbsdirektivet, at leverandører i henhold nogle rammeaftaler løbende kunne ændre priser og sortiment, og at rammeaftalerne var indgået med 10 leverandører, selvom der er en øvre grænse for antallet af leverandører, der kan indgås rammeaftaler med, men det var i strid med direktivet, at rammeaftalerne var uden tidsbegrænsning, på det sidstnævnte punkt ændret ved ØL 11/10-07), 18/2-08 (Willis mod Lejerbo, en kontrakt med mulighed for en varighed på 8 år var ikke i strid med udbudsreglerne, da ordregiveren til enhver tid kunne opsige kontrakten), 19/12-08 (UAB mod Ringsted Kommune, overtrædelse af Udbudsdirektivets regler om rammeaftaler ved kontraktsbestemmelse om option på forlængelse af kontrakten efter dens udløb efter 3 år, selv-om optionen ifølge udbudsbetingelserne skulle udnyttes inden et år fra tildelingsbeslutningen)

Referenceprodukter	18/1-94 (Paranova mod Amgros, anvendelse af referenceprodukt ikke i strid med Indkøbsdirektivet), EF-domstolen 24/1-95 (sag C-359/93, Kommissionen mod Holland, Unix-sagen, udbudsbetingelsernes angivelse af, at et styresystem skulle være af mærket Unix, var i strid med bestemmelsen om referenceprodukter i det dagældende bygge- og anlægsdirektiv, fordi der ikke var tilføjet betegnelsen »eller dermed ligestillet«), 23/8-95 (B4 mod Holbæk Kommune, overtrædelse), 16/10-96 (Danske Vognmænd mod Stevns Kommune, overtrædelse), 11/11-98 (Mousten Vestergaard mod Spøttrup Boligselskab, brug af referenceprodukt var ikke i strid med traktaten ved udbud af byggeri under tærskelværdien, ændret ved EF-domstolen 3/12-01, Vestergaard, og UfR. 2002 s. 1297 V), 1/3-99 (Enemærke & Petersen mod Fællesorganisationens Boligforening, brug af referenceprodukt var uberettiget trods henvisning til »eller dermed ligestillet«), 11/8-00 (Kirkebjerg mod Ribe Amt, tilsvarende), 3/6-03 (Haderslev Tæppelager mod Støtteforeningen, antagelse af tilbud med andet fabrikat end det foreskrevne var i strid med Tilbudsloven), 5/8-03 (Georg Berg mod Køge Kommune, Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet overtrådt ved henvisning til et referenceprodukt), 15/8-03 (Bravida mod Statens Forskn., om forståelsen af henvisninger til referenceprodukter), 29/10-04 (Flemming Damgaard mod Helle Kommune, traktatens artikel 28 overtrådt ved angivelse af produkt uden tilføjelsen »eller dermed ligestillet« eller en tilsvarende bemærkning, formuleringen »eller et tilsvarende produkt« var tilstrækkelig), 12/4-05 (Mariendal mod Nordjyllands Amt, henvisning til referenceprodukter var uberettiget og gav ikke udbyder mulighed for efter eget skøn at afvise tilbud som ukonditionsmæssige), 13/3-06 (Kirudan mod Kolding Kommune, uberettiget brug af referenceprodukter), 16/4-07 (STB Byg mod Hedensted Kommune, krav om anvendelse af bestemte produkter og om, at glas skulle leveres fra fabrikker tilsluttet en bestemt organisation, var i strid med traktatens artikel 28 og ligebehandlingsprincippet), 5/11-08 (Brøndum mod Ringgården, henvisning til bestemte varemærker m.m. var berettiget som følge af den udbudte ydelses karakter)
Retsvirkning af Klagenævnets afgørelser	1/10-08 (MT Højgaard mod Slots- og Ejendomsstyrelsen mfl., EU-udbudsreglerne regulerede ikke, hvordan udbyderne skulle forholde sig efter Klagenævnets afgørelse i kendelse af 10/4-08 i samme sag), UfR 2008 s. 1331 Ø (en ordregivers iværksættelse af udbud vedrørende en tjenesteydelse ca. 4½ år efter, at Klagenævnet havde truffet afgørelse om, at tjenesteydelsen var udbudspligtig, var en efterlevelse af Klagenævnets afgørelse og havde af forskellige grunde fundet sted inden for rimelig tid)
Sagsomkostninger	26/10-01 (Eterra mod Esbjerg Kommune, klager fik ikke medhold i klagen, men Klagenævnet tog en række forhold op ex officio og annullerede en beslutning fra udbyder, klager ikke tillagt sagsomkostninger), 6/4-05 (SK mod Københavns Amt, erstatning af negativ kontraktsinteresse skulle ikke dække advokatomkostninger og andre udgifter for Klagenævnet, da sådanne udgifter er omfattet af sagsomkostningerne), 7/7-05 (Brunata mod diverse boligselskabsafdelinger, efter erstatningsafgørelsens udfald i forhold til påstanden ikke sagsomkostninger), 25/10-05 (Hoffmann mod Skjern Kommune, sagsomkostninger 400.000 kr.), 6/9-06 (Sahva mod Københavns Kommune, sagsomkostningerne fastsat under hensyn til, at klager ikke havde fået medhold i en lang række af sine påstande), 12/7-07 (Dansk Høreteknik mod Københavns Kommune, angik erstatning; som følge af sagens udfald i forhold til påstanden skulle udbyderen ikke betale yderligere sagsomkostninger), 19/7-07 (ISS mod Skejby Sygehus, ved fastsættelsen af sagsomkostningerne taget hensyn til et unødvendigt arbejde, som udbyderen havde påført klageren ved fremsendelsen af et forkert dokument samt til, at klageren kun havde fået medhold i begrænset omfang)
Sale and lease back	29/1-02 (Økonomi- og Erhvervsmst. mod Farum Kommune, anvendelse af finansieringsformen sale and lease back fritog ikke for udbudspligten)
Samarbejde mellem ordregivende myndigheder (herunder indkøbscentraler, in house og sammenslutninger af ordregivende myndigheder)	11/10-96 (Luis Madsen mod Odense Kommune, udbyders overførelse af en opgave til eget aktieselskab var en divisionering, der ikke krævede udbud), EF-domstolen 18/11-99 (Teckal, opstiller de to in house-kriterier, dvs. kontrolkriteriet og virksomhedskriteriet), EF-domstolen 11/1-05 (Stadt Halle mfl.), EF-domstolen 21/7-05 (Coname), 7/9-05 (Dansk Byggeri mod Vejle Kommune. en ordregiver kan kun overlade en udbudspligtig ydelse til et selskab uden EU-udbud, hvis ordregiveren ejer og kontrollerer selskabet 100 %; denne udtalelse er for kategorisk set i lyset af EF-domstolens senere praksis), EF-domstolen 13/10-05 (Parking Brixen), EF-domstolen 10/11-05 (Kommissionen mod Østrig), 10/3-06 (FFF og LO mod Viborg Amts trafikselskab, et fælleskommunalt trafikselskab kunne uden EU-udbud indtræde i et samarbejde med nogle andre trafikselskaber, da de af EF-domstolen opstillede betingelser for at anse en virksomhed som in house var opfyldt), EF-domstolen 11/5-06 (Cabotermo og Consorzio

	Alizei, indeholder en uddybning af betingelserne for at anse en virksomhed som in house), EF-domstolen 18/1-07 (Auroux mfl., en virksomhed var ikke in house, da den var et halvoffentligt selskab med private kapitalinteresser), EF-domstolen 19/4-07 (Asemfo, eller Tragsa, et aktieselskab, der ejedes af staten med 99 % og nogle regioner med 1 %, var tilsyneladende in house i forhold til de ejende regioner, også selvom op mod 10 % af selskabets virksomhed blev udøvet over for andre end ejerne), EF-domstolen 18/12-07 (Asociación, et statsligt postvæsen var ikke in house i forhold til staten, da virksomhedskriteriet ikke var opfyldt), EF-domstolen 8/4-08 (Kommissionen mod Italien, en virksomhed, der er delvis privatejet, er aldrig in house til forhold til en offentlig ordregiver, heller ikke selvom den private ejerandel er en minoritetsandel), EF-domstolen 13/11-08 (Coditel Brabrant, et fælleskommunalt andelsselskab var in house i forhold til en af de deltagende kommuner; synes reelt at være et brud med EF-domstolens hidtidige praksis om in house-spørgsmålet)
Selskaber	23/2-01 (Kæmpe mod Søndersø Kommune, der måtte lægges vægt på dårlige erfaringer med en tilbudsgivers anpartsselskab, men ikke på dettes nuværende økonomi), 3/1-02 (AC-Trafik mod Frederiksborg Amt, et aktieselskab under stiftelse kunne afgive tilbud, men udbyder måtte ikke lægge vægt på stifternes økonomi), EF-domstolen 16/10-03 (Kommissionen mod Spanien, et statsejet aktieselskab, der stod for fængselsbyggeri, var omfattet af udbudspligten efter Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet)
Sideordnede udbud/licitationer	3/6-03 (Haderslev Tæppelager mod Støtteforeningen, sideordnede licitationer om forskellig udførelse af samme projekt var ikke i strid med Tilbudsloven), 30/11-04 (Finn Hansen mod Vendersbo, det var ikke en sideordnet licitation, at der kunne gives tilbud på hver fagentreprise og på alle entrepriser under ét, men udbyder skulle angive nøjagtigt, hvordan tilbudspriserne ville blive sammenlignet), 5/9-06 (Joca mod Reno Syd, en angivelse i udbudsbetingelserne var et sideordnet udbud og angik ikke alternative tilbud), 10/11-06 (Svend Andresen mod Århus Amt, angivelse i udbudsbetingelserne af, at der kunne gives alternative tilbud, var ukorrekt, da der var tale om sideordnede licitationer; ved tildelingskriteriet laveste pris medfører sideordnede licitationer risiko for manglende gennemsigtighed eller for, at tildelingskriteriet ikke kan fungere; udbyder havde ikke haft saglig grund til at iværksætte en sideordnet licitation vedrørende en simpel og teknisk betydningsløs detalje), 21/7-08 (Palle W. Hansen mod Hasseris Boligselskab, det fremgik klart af udbudsbetingelserne, at der under et sideordnet udbud af 10 entrepriser kunne bydes på en eller flere eller alle entrepriser)
Sociale hensyn	EF-domstolen 3/4-08 (Rüffert, lovkrav om mindstelønsklausul i kontrakter var i strid med EU-retten)
Spørgsmål til tilbudsgivere	(31/1-96, Jørgensen og Meklenborg mod Skov- og Naturstyrelsen, præcisering af tilbud efter udbyders forespørgsel var berettiget), 19/8-97 (Poul Hansen mod Vejdirektoratet, udbyder måtte ikke spørge tilbudsgiver om forståelsen af et forbehold, ændret ved VL 28/9-01), 8/10-97 (PAR mod Københavns Pædagogseminarium, udbyderen var uberettiget til at stille spørgsmål til tilbudsgiverne), 8/3-99 (FRI mod Nykøbing F. Kommune, udbyders forespørgsel til tilbudsgiver, der havde givet et yderst lavt tilbud, var i overensstemmelse med Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet), 24/10-01 (Eiland mod Vestsjællands Amt, henvendelse til tilbudsgivere var i strid med ligebehandlingsprincippet og forhandlingsforbuddet), Retten 26/2-02 (Esedra mod Kommissionen, udbyderen kunne uden at overtræde forhandlingsforbuddet stille en lang række spørgsmål til en tilbudsgiver om tilbuddets indhold), 16/12-04 (Brunata mod diverse boligselskabsafdelinger, som følge af uklarhed i udbudsbetingelserne havde udbyder pligt til at søge teknisk afklaring hos visse tilbudsgivere), 13/11-06 (Cowi mod Sønderjyllands Amt, udbyder kunne uden at overtræde forhandlingsforbuddet have stillet spørgsmål til en tilbudsgiver om, hvilke geotekniske undersøgelser tilbudsgiveren kunne have regnet med), Retten 18/4-07 (Deloitte mod Kommissionen, en udbyder, der anså en tilbudsgiver for at befinde sig i en interessekonflikt, havde ikke pligt til at indhente supplerende oplysninger fra tilbudsgiveren om spørgsmålet)
Spørgsmålsfrist (dvs. frist for spørgsmål fra tilbudsgivere)	18/9-98 (FRI mod Frederiksberg Kommune (reglen i Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet om, at der skulle kunne stilles spørgsmål indtil 6 dage før tilbudsfristens udløb, måtte forstås som sigtende til kalenderdage, af forskellige grunde ikke overtrædelse i det konkrete tilfælde)
Standarder	4/11-98 (Humus mod Herning Kommune, CEN-norm burde have været anvendt ved udbuddet), 2/4-02 (ISS mod Rigshospitalet, en europæisk standard skulle ikke anvendes, allerede fordi den ikke var offentliggjort før udbuddet)
Standardforbehold	7/12-00 (FRI mod Kulturministeriet, vedlæggelse af standardforbehold var et forbehold om grundlæggende elementer, synes reelt ændret på dette punkt ved ØL 7/10-02), 9/6-04 (Per Aarsleff mod Fyns Amt mfl., en mulig dansk praksis om, at der tages standardforbehold, som derefter frafaldes ved kontraktsindgåelsen, er uden betydning ved fortolkningen af EU's udbudsregler, udbyder skulle have prissat to forbehold indeholdt i standardforbehold; forbehold i standardforbehold om vinterforanstaltninger angik ikke et grundlæggende element), 26/8-04 (Per Aarsleff mod Amager Strandpark, som følge af sagens omstændigheder gjorde klausul i standardforbehold om vinterforanstaltninger tilbuddet ukonditionsmæssigt, hvilket derimod ikke var tilfældet med hensyn til klausul i standardforbeholdene om prisregulering, ændret ved ØL 5/2-08 med hensyn til forbeholdet om vinterforanstaltninger), 26/11-04 (Pihl & Søn mod Kriminalforsorgen, et standardforbehold om garanti kunne ikke prissættes, standardforbehold om vinterforanstaltninger angik efter sagens omstændigheder ikke et grundlæggende element)

Stand-still	EF-domstolen 28/10-99 (Alcatel Austria mfl., medlemsstaterne skal indføre en klageprocedure, hvorefter en klager kan få en tildelingsbeslutning kendt ugyldig), EF-domstolen 24/6-04 (Kommissionen mod Østrig, alle tilbudsgivere skal have underretning om tildelingsbeslutningen, og der skal derefter gå en rimelig tid inden kontraktsindgåelsen), 13/3-06 (Kirudan mod Kolding Kommune, samtidig fremsendelse af kontrakt til den valgte tilbudsgiver og underretning til tilbudsgiverne om tildelingsbeslutningen var i strid med principperne om ligebehandling og effektivitet), 5/9-06 (Joca mod Reno Syd, indgåelse af kontrakt på dagen for tilbudsfristens udløb var i strid med principperne om ligebehandling og effektivitet), 21/8-07 (Centralforeningen mod Midttrafik, standstill-ordningen gælder kun for udbud efter Udbudsdirektivet og ikke for udbud efter Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet), 27/3-08 (AV Form mod Esbjerg Kommune mfl., ved klage i stand-still perioden må udbyderen ikke indgå kontrakt, før Klagenævnet har truffet bestemmelse om opsættende virkning, hvilket ikke afhænger af Klagenævnets underretning herom, opretholdt ved Retten i Herning 5/11-09), 19/12-08 (UAB mod Ringsted Kommune, overtrædelse af stand-still reglerne ved, at underretningen om tildelingsbeslutningen blev givet ved almindeligt brev)
Statsstøtte	EF-domstolen 7/12-00 (ARGE, det er ikke i strid med ligebehandlingsprincippet, at tilbudsgivere, der modtager statsstøtte, kommer i betragtning ved et EU-udbud, dog et vist forbehold navnlig med hensyn til ulovlig statsstøtte)
Stillingsfuldmagt	8/5-06 (Pankas mod Korsør Kommune, et krav i udbudsbetingelserne om, at kontrakten skulle underskrives af en tegningsberettiget, var ikke til hinder for, at tilbud blev underskrevet i henhold til stillingsfuldmagt)
Supplerende kontraktsbetingelser	16/10-96 (Danske Vognmænd mod Stevns Kommune, krav til tjenesteydelsen begrundet i arbejdsmiljømæssige hensyn var lovlige), EF-domstolen 26/9-00 (Kommissionen mod Frankrig, der kan eventuelt anvendes et tildelingskriterium om beskæftigelse af lokal arbejdskraft, hvilket i så fald skal være nævnt i udbudsbekendtgørelsen), 27/9-00 (Svend B. Thomsen mod Blåvandshuk Kommune, det kunne ikke udelukkes, at bl.a. et tildelingskriterium om arbejdsmiljø var egnet til at identificere det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud), EF-domstolen 3/4-08, Rüffert, bl.a. traktatens artikel 49 er til hinder for en national lovbestemmelse om, at offentlige byggekontrakter kun må indgås på vilkår om betaling af overenskomstmæssig mindsteløn), 4/4-08 (Damm mod Økonomistyrelsen, en angivelse i udbudsbekendtgørelsen var en betingelse for kontraktsindgåelse, ikke et udvælgelseskriterium)
Tavshedspligt	25/10-95 (Siemens mod Esbjerg Kommune, ikke medhold i klage over manglende fortrolighed ved udbyders behandling af oplysninger, da en påberåbt bestemmelse i Forsyningsvirksomhedsdirektivet ikke indeholdt specielle EU-regler om fortrolig behandling af oplysninger, og da danske regler om fortrolighed lå uden for Klagenævnets kompetence)
Tegningsberettigelse	8/5-06 (Pankas mod Korsør Kommune, et krav i udbudsbetingelserne om, at kontrakten skulle underskrives af en tegningsberettiget, var ikke til hinder for, at tilbud blev underskrevet i henhold til stillingsfuldmagt)
Tekniske specifikationer	4/11-98 (Humus mod Herning Kommune, CEN-norm burde have været anvendt ved udbuddet), 14/12-07 (Thomas Borgå mod Skive Kommune, Udbudsdirektivets artikel 23 overtrådt ved indgåelse af kontrakt om bilag II B-tjenesteydelser)

	tragtning), 6/7-06 (Logstor mod Viborg Fjernvarme, tilbudsfristen i udbudsbetingelserne vedrørte de tilbud, som tilbudsgiverne skulle indlevere for at deltage i udbuddet, og vedrørte ikke senere supplerende tilbud), 15/8-07 (Stürup mod Billund Kommune, overtrædelse ved udsættelse af tilbudsfristen uden saglig grund; det var uden betydning, at nogle tilbudsgivere havde accepteret udsættelsen), Tilbudslovens afsnit I	11/8-03 (Kruse & Mørk mod Jetsmark, et kraftvarmeværk var ikke et offentligretligt organ efter Bygge- og anlægsdirektivet og var dermed ikke omfattet af Tilbudslovens § 1, stk. 2; en tilkendegivelse om, at Tilbudsloven finder anvendelse, skal være udtrykkelig og utvetydig), 30/6-03 Skanska mod Løgstør Kommune, tilbud taget i betragtning i strid med »inhabilitetsreglen« i Tilbudslovens § 5; Tilbudslovens § 7 medfører kun pligt til ved tilbudsåbning at give oplysning om udtrykkelige forbehold og forhold, der ved en hurtig gennemgang må vurderes som forbehold), 17/11-03 (Helsingør Kommune mod Stengade 56, tildeling til virksomhed, der havde ejersammenfald med udbyder, var ikke i strid med Tilbudslovens inhabilitetsregler, men derimod med lovens ligebehandlingsprincip), 20/12-05 (Adelholm mod Faber Invest, hvis udbyder ikke kan blive enig med lavestbydende under forhandlinger i medfør af Tilbudslovens § 10, må udbyder ikke af denne grund tildele ordren til næstlavestbydende eller indlede forhandlinger med denne), 3/2-06 (J. Tildeling, herunder tilbudsvurdering	18/11-94 (Danmarks Optikerforening mod Aalborg Kommune, ikke grundlag for at tilsidesætte udbyders vurdering af det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud), 7/7-95 (Valles Trans-Media mod Københavns Kommune, lignende), 12/1-96 (H.C. Svendsen mod Birkerød Kommune, lignende, Klagenævnet efterprøver ikke udbyders skøn i alle enkeltheder), 23/1-96 (PAR mod Glostrup Kommune, uberettiget anvendelse af tildelingskriterium, der ikke fremgik af udbuddet), EF-domstolen 25/4-96 (sag C-87/94, Kommissionen mod Belgien, sagen om de wallonske busser, det var i strid med principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed, at udbyderen ved tildelingsbeslutningen tog hensyn til angivelser i det valgte tilbud uden reference til underkriterierne), 18/11-96 (European Metro Group mod Ørestadsselskabet, ikke noget der tydede på, at udbyder ikke havde bedømt tilbuddene sagligt og objektivt, for så vidt stadfæstet ved HR 31/3-05 i UfR 2005 s. 1799 H), 10/2-97 (Dafeta mod Lynettefællesskabet, uberettiget anvendelse af vægtningsmodel, der ikke var bekendtgjort), 28/2-97 (Kiras mod Kolding Kommune, tildelingen var foregået inden for rammerne af udbyders skøn), 1/3-99 (Enemærke & Petersen mod Fællesorganisationens Boligforening, ikke grundlag for at antage, at udbyderens vurdering af det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud var usaglig), 11/6-99 (Hoffmann & Sønner mod Aalborg Lufthavn, principielle bemærkninger om betydningen af underkriteriet »pris«), 16/7-99 (Holst Sørensen mod Vendsyssel Øst, offentligt udbud, ikke grundlag for at antage, at udbyderen havde tilsidesat Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet ved sin vurdering af det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud, selvom udbyderen alene havde lagt vægt på tilbudsprisen), 9/11-99 (More Group mod Århus Kommune, ikke grundlag for kritik af udbyders tildelingsbeslutning), 15/12-99 (Lifeline mod Dansk Hunderegister, bestemmelse, der var medtaget i udbudsbetingelserne, og som kunne føre til, at tildelingen ikke skete på grundlag af tildelingskriteriet, var i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet), 17/12-99 (Renoflex mod Søllerød Kommune, udbyders tildeling af ordren var uberettiget, da den valgte tilbudsgiver ikke havde givet tilstrækkelige oplysninger til brug for vurderingen i henhold til tildelingskriterierne), 28/12-99 (Skjortegrossisten mod Post Danmark, det var i strid med Indkøbsdirektivet, at udbyder havde anvendt tildelingskriterier og et pointsystem, der ikke fremgik af udbudsbetingelserne), 27/6-00 (Dapa mod Vestforbrænding, Klagenævnet ønskede ikke at beskæftige sig med en klage over udbyders vægtningsmodel og vurdering af tilbuddene, da udbyders evaluering af tilbuddene syntes at være sket sagligt, og da klageren fik medhold på nogle andre centrale punkter), 27/9-00 (Svend B. Thomsen mod Blåvandshuk Kommune, tildeling på grundlag af et ikke bekendtgjort tildelingskriterium var i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 3, stk. 2), 14/12-00 (Renoflex mod Vestforbrænding, ikke grundlag for at fastslå, at den valgte tilbudsgiver ikke havde givet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud, men udbyders evalueringsmodel indebar uigennemsigtighed med risiko for forskelsbehandling og var konkret anvendt forkert), 30/1-01 (DTL mod Haderslev Kommune, tilbud var ikke unormalt lavt, tilbud fra et interessentskab, som udbyder var interessent i, kunne tages i betragtning; der kunne lægges vægt på fordelen ved kun at have en entreprenør), 22/6-01 (Kommune og Amts Revision mod Ikast Kommune, udbyder havde anvendt underkriterierne prioriteret, uagtet de i udbudsbetingelserne var angivet som uprioriterede), Retten 26/2-02 (Esedra mod Kommissionen, udbyderen kunne ved vurderingen af tilbudspriserne tage hensyn til tjenesteydelsens forventede omfang), 10/5-02 (Ementor mod Århus Amt, udbyder måtte ikke indgå kontrakt med en underleverandør til en tilbudsgiver), 27/11-02 (Aon mod Odense Kommune, udbyder havde lagt vægt på nogle forhold, der ikke fremgik af udbuddet, herunder et forhold i strid med ligebehandlingsprincippet), 6/2-03 (Hedeselskabet mod Løkken-Vraa Kommune, valg af tilbudsgiver i strid med Tilbudslovens § 6), EF-domstolen 10/4-03 (Kommissionen mod Tyskland, der kan tages miljømæssige hensyn ved tildelingen af en kontrakt), 3/6-03 (Haderslev Tæppelager mod Støtteforeningen, antagelse af tilbud med et andet fabrikat end det foreskrevne var i strid med Tilbudsloven), 20/2-04 (Miri mod Esbjerg Kommune, udbyder måtte ikke lade medarbejdere fra en tilbudsgivers underleverandør deltage i evalueringen, opretholdt ved VL 31/3-06), 6/5-04 (Sereno mod Vejle Amt, klage over, at udbyder ikke havde taget hensyn til klagerens tilsagn om støtte til en klinik, ikke taget til følge, da udbudsbetingelserne ikke omfattede mulighed for at give et sådant tilsagn, og da det ville have været en overtrædelse af forhandlingsforbuddet at tage hensyn til det), 30/9-04 (Colas mod Videbæk Kommune, tilbuddene skulle vurderes ud fra den naturlige forståelse af licitationsbetingelserne, og udbyderens vurdering var til dels usaglig; det var en overtrædelse af Tilbudslovens ligebehandlingsprincip, at udbyderen betragtede et tilsagn fra en tilbudsgiver om en merydelse som en reduktion i tilbudsprisen), 2/3-05 (Pumpex mod Hedensted Kommune, en anvendt vurderingsmodel var i strid med Tilbudsloven, da tilbudsgiverne ikke kunne påregne vurdering efter en sådan model), 7/6-05 (Bladt mod Storebælt, når udbyder har prissat et forbehold, skal udbyder ved vurderingen af tilbuddet anse tilbuddet for at opfylde det krav, som forbeholdet angår), 25/10-05 (Hoffmann mod Skjern Kommune, overtrædelse af Tilbudsloven ved anvendelse af en anden pointskala end oplyst i licitationsbetingelserne), 11/11-05 (Blue Line mod Storstrøms Trafikselskab, tildeling til en primær leverandør og en subsidiær leverandør var i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, bl.a. fordi det ikke var angivet i udbudsbetingelserne, at tildeling ville ske således), 28/2-06 (S-Card mod Rigspolitiet, ved EU-udbud skal udbyderen udfærdige et dokument som grundlag for tildelingsbeslutningen, og dette dokument er ikke et internt arbejdsdokument i relation til reglerne om aktindsigt), 13/3-06 (Kirudan mod Kolding Kommune, udbyder havde ikke godtgjort, at tilbudsvurderingen var saglig), 6/7-06 (Logstor mod Viborg Fjernvarme, urigtig vurdering af den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud i relation til underkriteriet pris), 6/9-06 (Sahva mod Københavns Kommune, ved vurderingen af et tilbuds opfyldelse af et underkriterium om kvalitet kunne der lægges vægt på, om tilbuddet opfyldte internationale kvalitetsnormer; udbyders vurdering af tilbudspris skal i videst muligt omfang foretages ved en eksakt beregning og må ikke ske ved et rent skøn), 26/10-06 (Novartis mod HS, tilbudsvurderingen blev ikke foretaget i overensstemmelse med underkriterierne og den angivne vægtning af dem), 14/12-06 (Baxter mod Roskilde Amt mfl., ved udbud omfattende flere delaftaler skal hver delaftale vurderes for sig), 12/2-07 (Dansk Høreteknik mod Københavns Kommune, tilbuddene skal vurderes i forhold til underkriterierne og ikke i forhold til hinanden, overtrædelse ved at lægge vægt på et forhold, som udbyderen havde tilkendegivet, at der ikke ville blive lagt vægt på; tilbudsgiverne må kunne forvente, at det er oplyst på forhånd, hvis udbyderen vil lægge afgørende vægt på, at de tilbudte produkter har nogle bestemte egenskaber; overtrædelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet ved et skøn over, hvad tilbudspriserne lød på, i stedet for en beregning og ved tildeling af points vedrørende underkriteriet pris efter et skøn; overtrædelse af gennemsigtighedsprincippet ved ikke at have udformet en skriftlig tilbudsvurdering senest samtidig med tildelingsbeslutningen), 19/7-07 (ISS mod Skejby Sygehus, overtrædelse af Udbudsdirektivet ved anvendelse af et delkriterium, der ikke var angivet i udbudsbetingelserne, og ved tildelingsbeslutning i strid med prækvalifikationen), 10/8-07, MT Højgaard mod Lejerbo, overtrædelse ved prissammenligning af usammenlignelige forhold og ved at lægge vægt på et forhold, der udgjorde et udvælgelseskriterium, opretholdt ved Århus Ret 6/5-09), 29/8-07 (Sectra mod Region Syddanmark, egenskaber ved det tilbudte kunne indgå i tilbudsvurderingen vedrørende de ikke-økonomiske underkriterier, ikke taget stilling til klage over pointtildeling), 3/9-07 (SP Medical mod Skat, udbyderens skøn ved tilbudsvurderingen ikke tilsidesat, men overtrædelse ved at lægge vægt på forhold, der ikke var omfattet af underkriterierne, opretholdt af Retten i Horsens 20/5-09), 17/10-07 (Triolab mod RH, overtrædelse af gennemsigtighedsprincippet ved ikke at have udformet en skriftlig tilbudsvurdering), 22/10-07 (Grønbech mod Albertslund Boligselskab, overtrædelse ved vægtning i strid med udbudsbetingelserne), 14/2-08 (Jysk Erhvervsbeklædning mod Hjørring Kommune, overtrædelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet ved at vurdere tilbuddene i forhold til hinanden i stedet for i forhold til underkriterierne), 27/3-08 (AV Form mod Esbjerg Kommune, krav om, at tilbuddene skulle omfatte mindst 4.000 varenumre, og tilbudsevaluering på grundlag af prisen for nogle få af varerne var i strid med principperne om ligebehandling og gennemsigtighed, opretholdt ved Retten i Herning 5/11-09), 10/4-08 (MT Højgaard mod Slots- og Ejendomsstyrelsen m.m., overtrædelse ved vurdering af tilbuddene på en anden måde end angivet i udbudsbetingelserne), 16/4-08 (Boligkontoret mod Lægeforeningens boliger, overtrædelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet ved at lægge vægt på et forhold, der ikke var angivet i udbudsbetingelserne), 30/4-08 (SCA mod Sorø Kommune, udbyderens pointtildeling ikke tilsidesat), 14/5-08 (Trans-Lift mod DSB, udbyderen havde ikke løftet sin bevisbyrde for, at tilbuddene var vurderet efter de fastsatte underkriterier og kun dem), 30/5-08 (Serviceselskabet mod Region Midtjylland, Klagenævnet havde ikke anledning til at tilsidesætte udbyderens tilbudsvurdering i relation til underkriterierne), 26/6-08 (UAB mod Furesø Kommune mfl., Klagenævnet havde ikke grundlag for at fastslå, at udbyderne ikke havde vurderet klagerens tilbud i overensstemmelse med udbudsbetingelserne eller havde overtrådt Udbudsdirektivet i øvrigt), 27/6-08 (DA mod Handels- og Søfartsmuseet, overtrædelse ved at udpege et ukonditionsmæssigt projektforslag som vinder af en projektkonkurrence), 12/9-08 (Master Data mod Københavns Kommune, overtrædelse af ligebehandlingsprincippet ved fejlvurdering af en tilbudsgivers tilbudspris som følge af forkert forudsætning om kontraktsperiodens længde; udbyderen havde vurderet tilbuddene i forhold til underkriterierne og ikke i forhold til hinanden; den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud opfyldte et krav i udbudsbetingelserne om, at et tilbudt it-system skulle være et standardsystem, og der kunne ikke i udbudsbetingelserne indfortolkes et krav om, at systemet skull være implementeret hos andre; nogle notater var en tilstrækkelig skriftlig tilbudsvurdering), 2/10-08 (C.C. Brun mod Storebælt, ikke taget stilling til, om udbyderen havde vurderet tilbuddene rigtigt i relation til nogle af underkriterierne, da Klagenævnet ikke tager stilling til, hvilken pointtildeling en tilbudsvurdering skal give sig udslag i, udbyderens afvisningspåstand ikke fulgt), 3/10-08 (Creative mod Århus Kommune, Udbudsdirektivet indeholder ikke regler om, hvornår udbyderen skal fastsætte den endelige vægtning af underkriterierne i tilfælde, hvor udbyderen har fastsat en relativ vægtning; en udbyder har ikke pligt til at anvende et pointsystem ved tilbudsvurderingen; klage over udbyderens tildeling af points til klagerens tilbud og den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud ikke taget til følge, da det var godtgjort, at den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbud bedre end klagerens opfyldte udbudsbetingelsernes krav på det pågældende punkt; det var ikke i strid med ligebehandlingsprincippet, at udbyderen i henhold til udbudsbetingelserne kun foretog en kvalitetsvurdering af en mindre del af de ønskede produkter; udbyderen har ikke pligt til at anonymisere vareprøver ved kvalitetsvurdering), 16/10-08 (Grønbech mod Albertslund Boligselskab, det kunne efter sagens oplysninger ikke lægges til grund, at den valgte tilbudsgivers tilbudspriser vedrørende nogle andre entrepriser var gjort afhængige af, at tilbudsgiveren fik tildelt den entreprise, som sagen drejede sig om), 20/10-08 (TagVision mod Egedal Kommune, udbyderen havde saglig grund til at annullere udbuddet, fordi nogle forhold, som udbyderen lagde vægt på, ikke fremgik af udbudsbetingelserne, herefter ikke anledning til at tage stilling til, om udbyderen også kunne annullere udbuddet, fordi der var blevet tildelt tilbuddene points vedrørende et underkriterium om økonomi ved et skøn i stedet for ved en beregning), 5/11-08 (Brøndum mod Ringgården, hvis tildelingskriteriet er det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud og de kvalitative underkriterier er uegnede, har udbyderen saglig grund til at annullere udbuddet og må ikke anvende tildelingskriteriet laveste pris, dette er udtryk for en bevidst ændring af Klagenævnet praksis), 10/12-08 (Nordjysk Kloak mod Aalborg Kommune, klage over udbyderens pointtildeling ikke taget til følge, da Klagenævnet ikke havde grundlag for at tilsidesætte udbyderens skøn), 17/12-08 (Bandagist-Centret mod Århus Kommune, ikke taget stilling til, om udbyderen kunne tilbagekalde tildelingsbeslutningen og i stedet skulle have annulleret udbuddet) var lovlige), 19/6-97 (Højgaard & Schultz mod Hundested Boligselskab, ukorrekt tildelingskriterium), 8/10-97 (PAR mod Københavns Pædagogseminarium, udbyder havde haft saglig grund til ikke at prioritere underkriterierne), 29/10-97 (Esbjerg Renovationsselskab mod Rødding Kommune, vægtningsmodel var i strid med ligebehandlingsprincippet), 26/1-98 (Albertsen & Holm mod Københavns Belysningsvæsen, tildelingskriterierne var uegnede til at identificere det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud), 3/7-98 (Nybus mfl. mod Storstrøms Trafikselskab, opdeling af udbud i pakker var ikke til hinder for at finde det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud), 14/9-98 (Handelskammeret mod Danmarks Statistik, tildelingskriterierne var ikke egnet til at identificere det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud), 1/3-99 (Enemærke & Petersen mod Fællesorganisationens Boligforening, referencer og kapacitet skal vurderes ved prækvalifikationen og må ikke indgå i tildelingskriteriet), 8/3-99 (FRI mod Nykøbing F. Kommune, underkriteriet »tilbudspris« kunne anvendes, selvom opgavens omfang ikke var endeligt fastlagt), 16/7-99 (Holst Sørensen mod Vendsyssel Øst, offentligt udbud, nogle underkriterier refererede til tilbudsgiverens generelle egnethed og ikke det konkrete tilbud, hvorved der var sket en sammenblanding af kvalifikationskriterier og tildelingskriterier, det var ulovligt, at udbyder havde forbeholdt sig ret til frit at vælge mellem tilbuddene), 27/10-99 (Humus mod Affaldsselskabet Bobøl, det var ulovligt, at udbyder havde forbeholdt sig ret til frit at vælge mellem tilbuddene, stadfæstet ved VL 7/5-01), 15/12-99 (Lifeline mod Dansk Hunderegister, ukorrekt tildelingskriterium, det var i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, at det ikke var nævnt i udbuddet, at underkriterierne var angivet uprioriteret), 17/12-99 (Renoflex mod Søllerød Kommune, do.), 28/12-99 (Skjortegrossisten mod Post Danmark, sammenblanding af kvalifikations- og tildelingskriterier), 9/2-00 (PAR mod Udenrigsministeriet, lignende, tildelingskriteriet var ikke egnet til at identificere det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud), 2/5-00 (Uniqsoft mod Odense Kommune, principielle bemærkninger om forholdet mellem kvalifikationskriterier og tildelingskriterier, herunder, at et forhold efter omstændighederne kan være begge dele, konkret uretmæssig anvendelse af kvalifikationskriterier som tildelingskriterier; anvendelse af et ikke bekendtgjort tildelingskriterium og angivelse af, at udbyder ved tildelingen »især« ville lægge vægt på visse forhold, stred mod Indkøbsdirektivet), 16/5-00 (DTL mod Reno Syd, ukorrekt tildelingskriterium, kvalifikationskriterier anvendt som tildelingskriterier; hvis tildelingskriterierne er angivet i udbudsbekendtgørelsen, må de principielt ikke angives anderledes i udbudsbetingelserne), 27/6-00 (Dapa mod Vestforbrænding, Klagenævnet ønskede ikke at beskæftige sig med en klage over udbyders vægtningsmodel og vurdering af tilbuddene, da udbyders evaluering af tilbuddene syntes at være sket sagligt, og da klageren fik medhold på nogle andre centrale punkter), 11/8-00 (Kirkebjerg mod Ribe Amt, det var i strid med udbudsreglerne, at udbyder havde forbeholdt sig ret til frit at vælge mellem tilbuddene), EF-domstolen 26/9-00 (Kommissionen mod Frankrig, henvisning til fransk lovgivning om tildeling af offentlige kontrakter var ikke en tilstrækkelig angivelse af tildelingskriteriet; der kan eventuelt anvendes et tildelingskriterium om beskæftigelse af lokal arbejdskraft, hvilket i så fald skal være nævnt i udbudsbekendtgørelsen), 27/9-00 (Svend B. Thomsen mod Blåvandshuk Kommune, et tildelingskriterium hørte hjemme under prækvalifikationen og var derfor i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, med hensyn til nogle andre tildelingskriterier kunne det ikke udelukkes, at de var egnede til at identificere det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud, anvendelse af et ikke bekendtgjort tildelingskriterium var i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivets artikel 3, stk. 2, underkriterierne skulle angives prioriteret, da der ikke var saglig grund til andet), 14/12-00 (Renoflex mod Vestforbrænding, ikke grundlag for at fastslå, at den valgte tilbudsgiver ikke havde givet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige tilbud, men udbyders evalueringsmodel indebar uigennemsigtighed med risiko for forskelsbehandling og var konkret anvendt forkert), 23/2-01 (Kæmpe mod Søndersø Kommune, om forholdet mellem udvælgelseskriterier og tildelingskriterier), 27/4-01 (DTL mod Nyk. F. Kommune, klage over, at et underkriterium var beskrevet forskelligt i udbudsbekendtgørelsen og udbudsbetingelserne, ikke taget til følge, da forholdet ikke havde medført uklarhed), 2/5-01 (Magnus mod Told og Skat, ikke anledning til at tage stilling til klage over, at underkriterierne ikke var angivet prioriteret), EF-domstolen 18/10-01 (Siac, forskellige bemærkninger om tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud), 24/10-01 (Eiland mod Vestsjællands Amt, et underkriterium var uden mening og var uegnet til at identificere det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud), 3/1-02 (AC-Trafik mod Frederiksborg Amt, en udbyder, der havde angivet underkriterierne prioriteret, havde ikke pligt til at oplyse om en vægtningsmodel og en pointskala, der ville blive anvendt ved vurderingen af tilbuddene, et underkriterium kunne anvendes både som udvælgelseskriterium og tildelingskriterium, men var uklart, et andet underkriterium var egnet til at identificere det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud), 27/2-02 (Vindtek mod Holstebro Kommune, nogle underkriterier var uegnet til at identificere det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud), 21/3-02 (Holsted Minibus mod Næstved Kommune, ulovligt tildelingskriterium), 2/4-02 (ISS mod Rigshospitalet, prioritering af underkriterierne skal oplyses straks), 10/5-02 (Ementor mod Århus Amt, forskellig angivelse af underkriterierne i udbudsbekendtgørelsen og udbudsbetingelserne), 9/8-02 (Kommunernes Revision mod Arbejdsmarkedsstyrelsen, det var i strid med Tjenesteydelsesdirektivet, at underkriterierne ikke var prioriteret), EF-domstolen 17/9-02 (Concordia, der må under visse forudsætninger anvendes kriterier om miljøforhold; det er uden betydning, om sådanne kriterier kun kan opfyldes af et mindre antal virksomheder), 27/11-02 (Aon mod Odense Kommune, underkriterierne skulle ikke angives prioriteret), 3/6-03 (Haderslev Tæppelager mod Støtteforeningen, forbehold om frit valg mellem tilbuddene var i strid med Tilbudsloven), EF-domstolen 10/4-03 (Kommissionen mod Tyskland, der kan tages miljømæssige hensyn ved tildelingen af en kontrakt), EF-domstolen 19/6-03 (GAT, referencer til andre kunder og mulighed for besigtigelse inden en vis adgang fra udbyderens forretningssted må ikke bruges som underkriterier), 4/11-03 (Bombardier mod Lokalbanen, et stort antal underkriterier burde have været prioriteret i et vist omfang), EF-domstolen 4/12-03 (EVN og Wienstrom, levering af energi fra vedvarende energikilder kan anvendes som underkriterium og kan prioriteres højt), 10/3-04 (Brd. Thybo mod AA 1938 (Tilbudsloven overtrådt ved, at der ikke var fastsat underkriterier til tildelingskriteriet det økonomisk mest fordelagtige bud, udbyderen skulle have annulleret licitationen eller gennemført den efter tildelingskriteriet laveste pris, på det sidstnævnte punkt »overruled« ved 5/11-08, Brøndum mod Ringgården), 22/3-04 (J. A.
