30. Third, it must be determined whether the jury adopted the decision to apply weighting on the basis of matters likely to give rise to discrimination against one of the tenderers.

31. If it did the decision would be contrary to Community law

32. Accordingly, the answer to the questions referred must be that Article 36 of Directive 92/50 and Article 34 of Directive 93/38 must be interpreted as meaning that Community law does not preclude a jury from attaching specific weight to the subheadings of an award criterion which are defined in advance, by dividing among those headings the points awarded for that criterion by the contracting authority when the contract documents or the contract notice were prepared, provided that that decision:

- does not alter the criteria for the award of the contract set out in the contract documents or the contract notice;

- does not contain elements which, if they had been known at the time the tenders were prepared, could have affected that preparation;

- was not adopted on the basis of matters likely to give rise to discrimination against one of the tenderers.

Costs

33. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer delivered on 8 September 2005. ATI EAC Srl e Viaggi di Maio Snc, EAC Srl and Viaggi di Maio Snc v ACTV Venezia SpA, Provincia di Venezia and Comune di Venezia. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Consiglio di Stato - Italy. Public service contracts - Directives 92/50/EEC and 93/38/EEC - Award criteria - The economically most advantageous tender - Observance of award criteria set out in the contract documents or the contract notice - Establishment of subheadings for one of the award criteria in the contract documents or the contract notice - Decision to apply weighting - Principles of equal treatment of tenderers and transparency. Case C-331/04.

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 36(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC and Article 34(2) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC, which harmonise the methods of awarding public service contracts (2) and those concluded in certain sectors. (3)

2. The reference from the Consiglio di Stato relates to the award of a contract to the economically most advantageous offer and the guidelines for making the decision, and raises the question of the powers of the contracting authority and of the jury, so as to establish whether the former may simply set out the parameters in the tender notice or the contract documents and leave it to the latter to specify and supplement them.

3. In order to give a reply to that court, it is necessary to observe mandatory principles governing public procurement, which seek to introduce objective rules of participation and allocation, with transparent procedures in which discriminatory measures and clauses are prohibited.

I - The provisions requiring interpretation

4. Both directives, which focus on the equal treatment of bidders (Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 4(2) of Directive 93/38), provide neutral methods of granting contracts, either based on the lowest price or on the most advantageous tender from an economic point of view (Articles 36(1) and 34(1) respectively).

5. As regards the latter, Article 36(2) of Directive 92/50 provides that the contracting authority shall state in the contract documents or in the tender notice the award criteria... in descending order of importance'. Article 34(2) of Directive 93/38 is expressed in almost identical terms.

II - The facts in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

6. The temporary association of undertakings constituted by EAC Srl and Viaggi di Maio' Snc (EAC') took part in a negotiated procedure arranged by the Azienda del Consorcio Trasporti Veneciano (ACTV'), using the second of the methods stated, pursuant to Article 24(1)(b) of Legislative Decree No 158/1995, (4) for the subcontracting of public passenger transport services. (5)

7. The contract documents contained the instructions for identifying the best tender: the third instruction related to the organisational procedures and support structures for implementing the service, which the jury could assess with a maximum of 25 points. (6) It was necessary to state: (a) the depots and/or areas where buses could be parked, (b) the procedures for supervising the service and the number of employees supervising the service, (c) the number of regular drivers and the type of licence which authorises them to drive coaches, (d) the company's premises in the province of Venice and (e) the staff engaged in organising drivers' shifts.

8. After the envelopes had been submitted and before they had been opened but, in any event, knowing who the candidates were, the jury allocated the points between the five aforementioned headings, giving 8 to the first, 7 to the second, 6 to the third and 2 to each of the other two.

9. The service was awarded to the temporary association of undertakings La Línea', which received 86.53 points; EAC received only 83.50 points and therefore challenged the result before the Tribunale

Amministrativo Regionale del Veneto (Regional Administrative Court, Veneto) alleging that its opponent won as a result of the distribution ex post facto of points relating to the organisational procedures and support structures, and relying on Article 36 of Directive 92/50 and Article 24(1)(b) of Legislative Decree 158/1995.

10. The Tribunale dismissed the action by judgment of 15 April 2003, against which the EAC brought an appeal before the Consiglio di Stato, whose case-law approves the practice of giving award juries some freedom of action to introduce factors, to add specific detail to the general guidelines set out in the tender notice and to provide for subheadings in the main categories already defined.

11. In order to establish whether Article 36 of Directive 92/50 and Article 34 of Directive 93/38 permit that interpretation, the Consiglio di Stato refers the following questions to the Court of Justice:

(1) Is it lawful to interpret those provisions as flexible rules allowing the contracting authority, where the award is to be made on the basis of the economically most advantageous tender, to fix the criteria in a general way in the tender notice or the contract documents, leaving it to the jury to specify or supplement those criteria, if need be, provided always that such specifying or supplementing is carried out before the packets containing the tenders have been opened, and does not alter those criteria or, on the contrary, must those provisions be interpreted as a rigid rule requiring the contracting authority to determine, analytically, the criteria for the award of the contract in the tender notice or the contract documents, and in any case before the prequalification stage or the invitation to tender, and as meaning that the jury may not subsequently do anything to specify or supplement those criteria or to create subheadings or sub-marking since for reasons of transparency every piece of information concerning the criteria for the award must appear in the notice or contract documents?

In short, is the traditional line of interpretation followed in the past in the Consiglio di Stato's case-law, which permits the jury to supplement the award criteria before the envelopes are opened, lawful in the light of Community law?

(2) Is it lawful, in the light of those provisions loosely interpreted having regard to the adverbial phrase where possible, for the contracting authority to adopt conditions for participation that provide, with regard to one of the criteria for the award (in this instance, the organisational and support procedures), with reference to a complex series of parameters for which the tender notice does not allocate individual points, so that they were in that sense in part indeterminate, that the points should be allocated at the absolute discretion of the contracting authority, or do not those provisions in any case require that the criteria should as a general rule be formulated absolutely definitively, which is not compatible with the fact that those criteria were not allocated separate points in the notice; if it is lawful, because the provisions are considered to be flexible and because it is not essential to give points to every item, is it permissible, where the tender notice does not give express power to the jury, for the latter to specify or supplement the criteria (simply by allocating individual importance and relative weight to every single item that the notice intended to be assessed by the overall allocation of a maximum of 25 points), or is it not on the contrary necessary to apply the conditions of the tender literally, allocating the points on an overall assessment of the various and complex matters taken into consideration by the lex specialis ?

(3) Is it lawful, in the light of [those provisions] to give the jury which is to assess the tenders, regardless of the manner in which criteria have been formulated in the tender notice, in a procedure for an award on the basis of the economically most advantageous tender, the power, in respect of the complexity of the matters to be assessed, to restrict its own actions, by specifying the parameters for the application of the criteria previously determined in the tender notice, and may such power be exercised by creating subheadings, sub-points, or simply by setting more specific criteria than those laid down in the tender notice or the contract documents, before the envelopes have been opened?'

III - Procedure before the Court of Justice

12. Written observations were submitted, within the time-limit laid down in Article 20 of the EC Statute of the Court of Justice, by the Commission, the Austrian and Netherlands Governments, EAC and ACTV, who presented oral argument at the hearing held on 7 July 2005.

IV - Admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

13. The Austrian Government and ACTV contend that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible, for different reasons and to different extents.

14. The former complains that the order for reference is vague as to the provisions of which it requires an interpretation, and infers from page 10 of the order that Article 34 of Directive 93/38 is unconnected with the main action. Neither of these criticisms is persuasive, since the Consiglio di Stato raises its doubts with regard to the rule laid down in Article 34 of Directive 93/38 and, in particular, to the similar rule in Article 36 of Directive 92/50', indicating that the appeal refers to the wording of Article 36 of Directive 92/50, which is similar to that of Article 34 of Directive 93/38, applicable to the present case, even if it is not expressly quoted by the appellant'.

15. In a way, the Austrian Government is not seeking the rejection in limine of the proceedings, but wants the analysis to be limited to the second of the provisions cited, which has the same meaning as Article 34 of Directive 93/38. In the circumstances, that claim of admissibility may only be described as superfluous because whatever interpretation is suggested will suit both provisions, and it will be up to the national court to choose between them; the Court of Justice must not intervene in that task, unless the facts are incompatible with Community law or the doubt raised with regard to interpretation is based on mere hypothesis, unconnected with the true circumstances of the case.

16. ACTV's claim of inadmissibility falls within the latter category, as it only gives the appearance of having more weight. ACTV claims that the Italian court's interest in knowing whether the jury may supplement' or specify' the award criteria laid down in the tender notice or the contract documents is irrelevant because, in this case, the jury did not carry out such operations; according to the order for reference, it merely created subcriteria of calculation which define the terms of that document but do not add to it (final paragraph in Point 5).

17. Irrespective of the problem of deciding whether the question referred for a preliminary ruling is hypothetical, (7) this argument is contradictory because it accepts that the approved guidelines were defined more closely and then, immediately afterwards, explains that the Consiglio di Stato does not need to establish whether Article 36 of Directive 92/50 and Article 34 of Directive 93/38 authorise that subsequent operation. Moreover, the questions are formulated in such a way as to highlight the legality of the Italian legislation applicable to the case, which accords the jury powers to make additions before the envelopes are opened. The reference for a preliminary ruling is therefore appropriate.

V - The rules governing public procurement

18. The Consiglio di Stato wishes to know whether, in a procedure for an award on the basis of the economically most advantageous tender, the provisions to which it refers allow the contracting authority to fix the criteria for assessing the tenders in a general way in the tender notice or contract documents, leaving it to the jury to specify or supplement them (question 1).

19. It also seeks to clarify whether, in the light of that broad interpretation and having regard to the words where possible' used in the two articles at issue, the Authority may allocate points to one of the criteria for assessment, to be divided between complex parameters, which are stated but without indication of their relative weight, so that their order of priority is determined later by the jury, which may restrict its own actions by specifying the rules previously determined in the tender notice, in particular by creating subheadings or subpoints (questions 2 and 3).

20. To dispel those doubts, it is necessary to follow the advice given in the opinion in Lombardini and Mantovani (8) to recall the principles underlying selection of a contractor, in order better to understand Article 36 of Directive 92/50 and Article 34 of Directive 93/38.

21. The Directives on public contracts, each one concerned with a specific field, aim to promote the development of open competition by realising the four fundamental freedoms of European integration (free movement of goods, persons, services and capital). (9) Those directives aim to give effect to the requirements set out by the Community legislature in Articles 9, 52, 59 and 73B of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Articles 23 EC, 43 EC, 49 EC and 56 EC).

22. Giving effect to those requirements and the pursuit of that objective can only be achieved if those who wish to be awarded public contracts can apply on an equal basis, without any hint of unjustified bias. To this end, a system based on objectivity, in terms of both substance and form, is indispensable. Such a system must be established, as regards substance, by setting objective criteria for participation in the tender and award of contracts, (10) and as regards form, by making provision for transparent procedures in which publication is the norm.

23. The criteria for selection of candidates refer to the professional, economic and technical suitability of applicants. To rule out any discriminatory effect, it is necessary in each case to predetermine the rules governing the selection procedure, as well as the levels of skill and experience required. (11)

24. Once the tenderers qualifying for award of the contract have been selected, that award is subject to objective parameters of assessment, whether the lowest bid or the economically most advantageous tender. If the second criterion is applied, the contracting authority sets out the award criteria in the contract documents or tender notice, (12) stating their respective importance, in accordance with the provisions with which this reference for a preliminary ruling is concerned.

25. Consequently, the system leaves nothing to chance or subject to any arbitrary decision on the part of the body which makes the final decision. Equality of treatment for tenderers requires that any person who wishes to be awarded a contract must know beforehand what he must do to be awarded it, so that the awarding body is confined, given the discretion involved in the technical evaluation, to applying parameters set out in the lex contractus , both those rules governing public contracts in a general sense, and those which involve in particular a specific contract.

26. To ensure that such a system is effective and that there is no discrimination, it is not sufficient to set objective criteria for the procedures, but application of the criteria must be based on transparency. This must apply from the time of the tender notice, in the contract documents and, finally, in the selection stage itself, (13) both in the open procedures and the restricted procedures.

VI - The reply to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

27. Some of the claims made at the hearing have taken the Court of Justice far from Luxembourg, to an Italian court where the main action is to be decided, but it must be made clear that it is not for this European Court, but for the Consiglio di Stato, to determine whether the transport services contract in question was awarded in accordance with the law.

28. This Court has a different, more complex and more important task: to determine whether the articles for which an interpretation is sought permit, in the light of the aforementioned principles, situations in which the jury does not merely assess - although, inevitably, with some latitude - the tenders received in accordance with the rules set out in the tender notice or the contract documents, because it has been given the additional role of specifying, adding to and supplementing them. In short, it is necessary to ascertain whether that body, whose function is to implement, can acquire quasi-legislative' responsibilities, by defining the content of the lex contractus in some way.

A - The first question referred for a preliminary ruling

29. Article 36 of Directive 92/50 and Article 34 of Directive 93/38 are rules for awarding contracts, which lay down for that purpose two basic criteria which have already been mentioned: the lowest price and the economically most advantageous tender. The former, because it is fixed, leaves no room for assessment by the awarding body. The latter, however, constitutes an undefined legal concept, which the contracting authority must specify in each case, to which end Articles 36(1)(a) and 34(1)(a) provide a non-exhaustive list of various points which must be included in the contract documents or the tender notice in descending order of importance, as required under Articles 36(2) and 34(2).

30. It may therefore be inferred that the criteria which the jury must take into consideration when selecting the most advantageous tender must be laid down by the contracting authority in the tender notice or the contract documents, and they cannot be fixed by reference, nor can that task be deferred until a later time.

31. This, for Community case-law, is an inescapable corollary of the principles of transparency, publicity and non-discrimination. The assessment criteria must be appropriate for identifying the economically most advantageous tender, so they must necessarily be linked to the subject-matter of the contract (14) and be included in the aforementioned documents, (15) in such a way as to allow all reasonably wellinformed and normally diligent tenderers to interpret them in the same way; (16) their order of importance should also be stated. (17)

32. Thus, the contracting authority does not have complete freedom of action: it does not have a discretionary power to establish formulae for assessing the tenders; nor does it have the capacity to choose when to publicise them, or to change them during the selection procedure, which also prevents it from altering their meaning. (18)

33. In the light of all those considerations, the jury must not be permitted to initiate any changes and its participation must be limited to applying the criteria prepared beforehand by the contracting authority, of which all the tenderers are duly aware, because they have been subject to transparency and have been publicised. Consequently, the specification and supplementation activities to which the Consiglio di Stato refers in its first question, to the extent that they involve creating new schemes, not merely implementing those already established, infringe the spirit of Directives 92/50 and 93/38, because they fail to have regard to the grounds on which they are based.

34. It is irrelevant that that task is carried out before the envelopes are opened, because equal treatment is required not only in the decision but also in the participation, so that the lack of complete information regarding the conditions of the selection procedure means less publicity, which is likely to leave out of the running possible competitors who, if they had had access to all the requirements, might have decided to compete. (19) Furthermore, as the Commission and the Austrian Government suggest, that possibility would give the body responsible for identifying the most acceptable offer the ability to influence the end result, thus jeopardising impartiality, because, when it comes to calculating the final totals, although it may not know the content of the envelopes, it does know who the candidates are, and might tip the scales in favour of one of them.

35. In short, under Article 36(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 34(2) of Directive 93/38, the contracting authority must state the award criteria, in detail, in the tender notice or contract documents; the jury is not authorised to do anything other than to apply them and is precluded from making any alterations, even if this is done before the envelopes are opened.

B - The second and third questions

36. All the weighting factors must therefore be announced in advance, in decreasing order of importance.

37. Consequently, the criteria for awarding the contract must always appear in the tender notice or the contract documents, and the jury may not eliminate any of them, add others or subdivide those initially laid down. As I have already pointed out, it does not have competence to introduce new criteria or to alter or supplement those already existing.

38. If it is impossible to weight the various award criteria in the tender notice or contract documents, it might be thought that this was a task for the jury, but the wording of Article 36(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 34(2) of Directive 93/38 does not permit it. This accords with the general principles of public procurement, because it might change the parameters and influence the outcome of the selection procedure. In that event, it is more in keeping with the spirit of directives to entrust that task to an expert, who is not involved in the final decision. (20)

39. Directives 2004/18 and 2004/17/EC, (21) both currently in force, confirm these views, requiring the contracting authorities, in Articles 53 and 55 respectively, to state each of the criteria selected for identifying the most advantageous offer, using a range of points with an appropriate maximum spread. Where this is not possible for demonstrable reasons, the contracting authority is required to indicate the criteria in descending order of importance. Thus, no competence is conferred on the jury to intervene in this matter.

40. There is all the more reason for rejecting a modus operandi such as the one adopted in the main proceedings, in which the contracting authority has laid down a criterion to be assessed on the basis of various factors to which it allocates an overall number of points but no order of priority, leaving it to the jury not only to distribute those points but also to grade them.

41. I therefore consider that, where it is impossible to state the award criteria in order of importance in the tender notice or contract documents, Article 36(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 34(2) of Directive 93/38 do not allow the jury to do so subsequently, even if it does so before the envelopes are opened; accordingly, the jury may not assume rules to govern that intervention, nor may it distribute the points initially set out in those documents between the various parameters, by arranging these in order of importance.

VII - Conclusion

42. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court of Justice give the following reply to the questions referred by the Consiglio di Stato:

(1) Article 36(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts and Article 34(2) of Council Directive 93/38/EC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors require the contracting authority to set out the award criteria, in detail, in the tender notice or contract documents; the jury is not authorised to do anything other than to apply them and is precluded from making any alterations, even if this is done before the envelopes containing the offers are opened.

(2) Where it is impossible to state the award criteria in order of importance in the tender notice or contract documents, those provisions do not allow the jury to do so subsequently, even if it does so before the envelopes are opened; accordingly, the jury may not assume rules to govern that intervention, nor may it distribute the points initially allocated between the various parameters, by arranging these according to their relative importance.

(9) - In particular, the second recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 and the first of the preamble to Directive 93/38. The same notion is found in the second recital in the preamble to Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) which will replace inter alia Directive 92/50 when the time-limit for its transposition expires in 2006.

(10) - The distinction between the two kinds of criteria, which was drawn by Advocate General Darmon in his Opinion in Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, is also contained in Directive 2004/18 (recitals 39 and 46).

(11) - Articles 29 to 35 of Directive 92/50 and Articles 30 to 33 of Directive 93/38 refer to this aspect.

(12) - The contractor is to be selected according to circumstances connected with the subject-matter of the contract, which may relate to quality, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical assistance and service, delivery date, delivery period or period of completion, cost-effectiveness, price or running costs (Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 and Article 34(1)(a) of Directive 93/38).

(13) - Article 15 and corroborating articles of Directive 92/50, and also Article 21 et seq. of Directive 93/38.

, paragraph 43, and EVN and Wienstrom , paragraph 92.

(19) - The judgments in Case C87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I2043, paragraph 88, and in Universale-Bau , paragraph 98, give as grounds for the obligation imposed on the contracting authorities the expediency of enabling potential tenderers to be aware, before preparing their tenders, of the criteria to be taken into account in selecting the best offer and the relative importance of those criteria. Moreover, that requirement ensures the observance of the principles of equal treatment and of transparency.

(20) - This was implicitly acknowledged by the judgment in SIAC Construction , to which I have already referred, which stated that the opinion of an expert on a factual matter that will be known precisely only in the future guarantees that the criteria are applied objectively and uniformly to all tenderers (paragraph 44).

(21) - Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1) which, when the time-limit for its transposition expires, will replace Directive 93/38.

Notice for the OJ

Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Consiglio di Stato, in sede giurisdizionale (Sesta Sezione), by order of that court of 6 April 2004 in the case of A.T.I. E.A.C. srl and VIAGGI DI MAIO SNC against A.C.T.V. Venezia spa

(Case C-331/04)

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Consiglio di Stato, in sede giurisdizionale, Sesta Sezione (Council of State, Judicial Division, Sixth Chamber), of 6 April 2004, received at the Court Registry on 29 August 2004, for a preliminary ruling in the case of A.T.I. E.A.C. srl and VIAGGI DI MAIO SNC against A.C.T.V. Venezia spa on the following questions:

'1. Is it lawful to interpret those provisions as flexible rules allowing the contracting authority, where the award is to be made on the basis of the economically most advantageous tender, to fix the criteria in a general way in the tender notice or the contract documents, leaving it to the jury to specify or supplement those criteria, if need be, provided always that such specifying or supplementing is carried out before the packets containing the tenders have been opened and that such action introduces nothing new in relation to the criteria fixed in the tender notice or, on the contrary, must that provision be interpreted as a rigid rule requiring the contracting authority to determine, analytically, the criteria for the award of the contract in the tender notice or the contract documents, and in any case before the prequalification stage or the invitation to tender, and as meaning that the jury may not subsequently in any way do anything to specify or supplement those criteria or to creating subheadings or sub-marking, since for reasons of transparency every piece of information concerning the criteria for the award must appear in the notice or contract documents.

In short, is the traditional line of interpretation followed in the past in the Consiglio di Stato's case-law, which permits the jury to take action to supplement the criteria, lawful in the light of Community law?

2. Is it lawful, in the light of that provision loosely interpreted having regard to the adverbial phrase "where possible", for the contracting authority to adopt conditions for participation that provide, with regard to one of the criteria for the award (in this instance, the organisational and support procedures), with reference to a complex series of criteria for which the tender notice did not allocate individual points, so that they were in that sense in part indeterminate, that the points should be allocated at the absolute discretion of the contracting authority, or does not that provision in any case require that the criteria should as a general rule be formulated absolutely definitively, which is not compatible with the fact that those criteria were not allocated separate points in the notice; if it is lawful, because the provision is considered to be flexible and because it is not essential to give points to every item, is it permissible, where the tender notice does not give express power to the jury, for the latter to specify or supplement the criteria (simply by allocating individual importance and relative weight to every single item that the notice intended to be assessed by the overall allocation of a maximum of 25 points), or is it not on the contrary necessary to apply the conditions of the tender literally, allocating the points on an overall assessment of the various and complex matters taken into consideration by the lex specialis?

3. In any case, is it lawful, in the light of that provision, to give the jury which is to assess the tenders, regardless of the manner in which criteria have been formulated in the tender notice, in a procedure for an award on the basis of the economically most advantageous tender, the power, but only in respect of the complexity of the matters to be assessed, to restrict its own actions in a general way, by specifying the parameters for the application of the criteria previously determined in the tender notice, and may such power held by the jury be exercised by creating subheadings, sub-points, or simply by setting more specific criteria for the application of the criteria laid down generally in the notice or the contract documents, before of course the envelopes have been opened?'

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber), composed of K. Lenaerts, President of Chamber, E. Juhasz, R. Silva de Lapuerta, G. Arestis (Rapporteur) and J. Malenovsku, Judges, Advocate General: E. Sharpston,

Registrar: R. Grass, having regard to the written procedure,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 29 March 2007

gives the following

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, by renewing 329 licences for horse-race betting operations without inviting any competing bids, the Italian Republic failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 43 and 49 EC and, in particular, infringed the general principle of transparency and the obligation to ensure a sufficient degree of advertising.

2. Orders the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

1. By its application, the Commission of the European Communities seeks a declaration by the Court that, by renewing 329 licences for horse-race betting operations without inviting any competing bids, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the EC Treaty and has,

in particular, infringed the general principle of transparency and the publication requirement resulting from Articles 43 and 49 EC.

Legal context

National legislation

2. In Italy, horse-race betting and gaming operations were originally run exclusively by the Unione Nazionale per l'Incremento delle Razze Equine (National Union for the Improvement of Horse Breeding, 'UNIRE'), which had the option of operating the services of collecting and taking bets directly or delegating them to third parties. The UNIRE entrusted the operation of those services to bookmakers.

3. Law No 662 of 23 December 1996 (ordinary supplement to the GURI No 303, of 28 December 1996) subsequently assigned responsibility for the organisation and management of horse-race betting and gaming to the Ministry of Finance and the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Forestry Resources, which were authorised either to operate the activity directly or through public bodies, companies or bookmakers appointed by them. Paragraph 78 of Article 3 of Law No 662 states that there is to be a reorganisation, by way of regulation, of the organisational, functional, fiscal and penal aspects of horse-race betting and gaming, as well as the sharing out of revenue from such betting.

4. In implementation of Article 3 of Law No 662, the Italian Government adopted Presidential Decree No 169 of 8 April 1998 (GURI No 125 of 1 June 1998, 'Decree No 169/1998'), which provided in Article 2 that the Ministry of Finance, in agreement with the Ministry of Agricultural and Forestry Policy, was to award licences for horse-race betting operations to natural persons or companies fulfilling the relevant conditions by means of calls for tender organised in accordance with Community rules. As a transitional measure, Article 25 of Decree No 169/1998 provided for an extension of the period of validity of the licences granted by UNIRE until 31 December 1998, or, if it proved impossible to organise calls for tender by that date, the end of 1999.

5. A Ministerial Decree of 7 April 1999 (GURI No 86 of 14 April 1999) subsequently approved the plan to reinforce the network of outlets collecting and taking bets on horse-races with a view to increasing the number of betting shops across the whole of Italy from 329 to 1 000. Whereas 671 new licences were put out to tender, the directive of the Ministry of Finance of 9 December 1999 provided for the renewal of UNIRE's 329 'old licences'. In implementation of that directive, the decision of the Ministry of Finance of 21 December 1999 (GURI No 300 of 23 December 1999, 'the contested decision') renewed the said licences for a period of six years starting 1 January 2000.

6. Decree-Law No 452 of 28 December 2001 (GURI No 301 of 29 December 2001), converted after amendment into Law No 16 of 27 February 2002 (GURI No 49 of 27 February 2002), subsequently provided that the 'old licences' were to be reallocated in accordance with Decree No 169/1998, that is, by way of a Community call for tenders, and that they would remain valid until that reallocation had been finalised.

7. Finally, Decree-Law No 147 of 24 June 2003 extending time-limits and emergency provisions in budgetary matters (GURI No 145 of 25 June 2003), now Law No 200 of 1 August 2003 (GURI No 178 of 2 August 2003, 'Law No 200/2003'), provides in Article 8(1) that the financial status of each licence holder has to be assessed in order to resolve the problem of the guaranteed minimum', a levy which every licence holder had to pay to UNIRE irrespective of the actual amount of revenue generated during the year, which had proven to be excessive and had led to an economic crisis in the horse-race betting sector. In implementation of that law, the special commissioner appointed by UNIRE adopted decision No 107/2003 of 14 October 2003, which extended the period of validity of the licences that had already been granted until the deadline for the last payment, set for 30 October 2011, and, in any event, until the date on which the new licences are allocated by means of a call for tenders, in order to take the necessary steps to calculate the amounts to be paid by the licence holders.

Facts and the pre-litigation procedure

8. Following a complaint lodged by a private operator in the horse-race betting sector, on 24 July 2001 the Commission sent the Italian authorities a letter of formal notice pursuant to Article 226 EC, drawing their attention to the incompatibility of the Italian system of granting licences for horse-race betting operations, and, in particular, the renewal by the contested decision of the 329 old licences granted by UNIRE without a competitive tendering procedure, with the general principle of transparency and the requirement of publication resulting from Articles 43 and 49 EC. In response, the Italian Government announced, by letters dated 30 November 2001 and 15 January 2002, respectively, the bill for and the adoption of Law No 16 of 27 February 2002

9. Since the Commission was not satisfied with the implementation of the provisions of that law, it issued a reasoned opinion on 16 October 2002 in which it asked the Italian Republic to adopt the necessary measures to comply with the reasoned opinion within two months of its receipt. By letter of 10 December 2002, the Italian Government responded that it had to conduct a detailed assessment of the financial status of existing licence holders before issuing calls for tenders.

10. Since it received no further information concerning the completion of that assessment and the launching of a call for tenders for the purposes of reallocating the licences at issue, the Commission decided to bring the present action.

11. The Kingdom of Denmark and the Kingdom of Spain intervened in support of the Italian Republic.

The action

12. The Commission puts forward a single ground in support of its action. It submits that, by renewing UNIRE's 329 old licences for horse-race betting operations without inviting any competing bids, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty and has, in particular, infringed the general principle of transparency and the publication requirement resulting from Articles 43 and 49 EC.

13. The Commission states in its application that, under Community law, the award of licences for horse-race betting operations in Italy must be considered to be a public service concession. As such, it does not fall within the scope of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1). However, it is clear from the case-law of the Court, and particularly the judgment in Telaustria and Telefonadress (Case C324/98 [2000] ECR I10745), that national authorities which award such licences must observe the principles of non-discrimination and transparency in order to ensure a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the services market to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed.

14. The Commission points out in this respect that the Italian Government failed to comply with those principles when it renewed UNIRE's 329 existing licences without inviting competing bids. In the Commission's opinion, only the circumstances and reasons provided for in Articles 45 and 46 EC permit derogations from these principles. The justifications cited by the Italian Government are not among those expressly covered by Articles 45 and 46 EC and, in any event, the Italian Government has not shown the need for, and the proportionality of, the derogations in the light of the objectives pleaded.

15. In its defence, the Italian Government submits that Law No 200/2003 and Decision No 107/2003 are in conformity with the requirements of Community law concerning public service concessions. According to the Italian Government, the extension of UNIRE's old licences was justified by the need to ensure continuity, financial stability and a proper return on past investments for licence holders as well as the need to discourage recourse to clandestine activities, until the existing licences could be reallocated on the basis of tendering procedures. Such justifications constitute overriding requirements relating to the public interest which may justify derogations from the principles of the Treaty, including the obligation to open up the services market to competition.

16. The Danish Government takes issue with the Commission's interpretation of the Court's judgment in Teleaustria and Telefonadress , cited above, as regards the scope of the requirement of transparency in circumstances such as those of the present case. The Spanish Government puts forward considerations relating to the specific features of the authorisation and organisation of gambling activities which, it asserts, the Commission has failed to take into account.

17. It should be noted at the outset that the Italian Government does not deny that Law No 200/2003 and Decision No 107/2003 took effect after expiry of the time-limit laid down in the reasoned opinion.

18. In that regard it must be remembered that, according to settled case-law, the question whether a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations must be determined by reference to the situation prevailing in the Member State at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion and that the Court cannot take account of any subsequent changes (see, in particular, Case C-282/02 Commission v Ireland [2005] ECR I4653, paragraph 40, and Case C-514/03 Commission v Spain [2006] ECR I963, paragraph 44).

19. Therefore, the provisions of Law No 200/2003 and Decision No 107/2003 cannot be of relevance for the purposes of determining whether the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations. It follows that the present action is concerned solely with a review of the contested decision.

20. As the Commission rightly observed, the Italian Government has not denied, either during the pre-litigation procedure or in the course of these proceedings, that the award of licences for horse-race betting operations in Italy constitutes a public service concession. That classification was accepted by the Court in Placanica and Others (C338/04, C359/04 and C360/04 [2007] ECR I-0000), in which it interprets Articles 43 and 49 EC in relation to the same national legislation.

21. It is common ground that public service concessions are excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50 (see Case C-458/03 Parking Brixen [2005] ECR I-8585, paragraph 42).

22. The Court has held that, notwithstanding the fact that public service concession contracts are, as Community law stands at present, excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50, the public authorities concluding them are, none the less, bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the EC Treaty, in general, and the principle of non-discrimination on the grounds of nationality, in particular (see, to that effect, Telaustria and Telefonadress , cited above, paragraph 60; Case C231/03 Coname [2005] ECR I-7287, paragraph 16; and Parking Brixen , cited above, paragraph 46).

23. The Court then stated that the provisions of the Treaty applying to public service concessions, in particular Articles 43 and 49 EC, and the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality are specific expressions of the principle of equal treatment (see, to that effect, Parking Brixen , cited above, paragraph 48).

24. In that regard, the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality imply, in particular, a duty of transparency which enables the concession-granting public authority to ensure that those principles are complied with. That obligation of transparency which is imposed on the public authority consists in ensuring, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the service concession to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed (see, to that effect, Telaustria and Telefonadress , paragraphs 61 and 62, as well as Parking Brixen , paragraph 49, both cited above).

25. In the present case, it must be observed that the complete failure to invite competing bids for the purposes of granting licences for horse-race betting operations does not accord with Articles 43 and 49 EC, and, in particular, infringes the general principle of transparency and the obligation to ensure a sufficient degree of advertising. The renewal of the 329 old licences without a call for tenders precludes the opening up to competition of the licences and review of the impartiality of the procurement procedures.

26. In those circumstances, it is necessary to consider whether the renewal may be recognised as an exceptional measure, as expressly provided for in Articles 45 EC and 46 EC, or justified, in accordance with the case-law of the Court, for reasons of overriding general interest (see, to that effect, Case C-243/01 Gambelli and Others [2003] ECR I-13031, paragraph 60, and Placanica and Others , cited above, paragraph 45).

27. On that point, a certain number of reasons of overriding general interest have been recognised by the case-law, such as the objectives of consumer protection and the prevention of both fraud and incitement to squander on gaming, as well as the general need to preserve public order (Placanica and Others , cited above, paragraph 46).

28. Although the Member States are free to set the objectives of their policy on betting and gaming and, where appropriate, to define in detail the level of protection sought, the restrictive measures that they impose must nevertheless satisfy the conditions laid down in the case-law of the Court as regards their proportionality (Placanica and Others , cited above, paragraph 48).

29. It should therefore be examined whether the renewal of the licences without inviting any competing bids is suitable for achieving the objective pursued by the Italian Republic and does not go beyond what is necessary in order to achieve that objective. In any case, the renewal must be applied without discrimination (see, to that effect, Gambelli and Others , paragraphs 64 and 65, and Placanica and Others , paragraphs 49).

30. It is common ground that the Italian Government approved the plan to reinforce the network of outlets collecting and taking bets on horse-races with a view to increasing the number of betting shops across the whole of Italy from 329 to 1 000. To carry out that plan, 671 new licences were awarded on completion of a tendering procedure, but the 329 existing old licences were renewed without competing bids having being invited.

31. In that connection, the Italian Government has not relied on any derogation, such as the ones expressly provided in Article 45 and 46 EC. By contrast, the Italian Government justifies its renewal of the licences without a tendering procedure by the need, in particular, to discourage the development of clandestine activities for collecting and allocating bets.

32. However, the Italian Government has not explained in its defence the basis on which it was necessary not to invite competing bids and has not submitted arguments to dispute the infringement alleged by the Commission. In particular, the Italian Government has not explained how the renewal of the existing licences without inviting any competing bids could prevent the development of clandestine activities in the horse-race betting sector, and has simply submitted that Law No 200/2003 and Decision No 107/2003 are in conformity with the requirements of Community law concerning public service concessions.

33. In that regard it is for the competent national authorities to show, first, that their legislation addresses an essential interest within the meaning of Articles 45 and 46 EC or an overriding requirement relating to the general interest as laid down in the case-law and, second, that that legislation conforms to the principle of proportionality (see, to that effect, Case C41/02 Commission v Netherlands [2004] ECR I11375, paragraph 47; Case C38/03 Commission v Belgium [2005], not published in the ECR, paragraph 20, and Case C255/04 Commission v France [2006] ECR I5251, paragraph 29).

34. Accordingly, it must be stated that the renewal of UNIRE's old licences without putting them out to tender was not an appropriate means of attaining the objective pursued by the Italian Republic, going beyond what was necessary in order to preclude operators in the horse-race betting sector from engaging in criminal or fraudulent activities.

35. In addition, as regards the grounds of an economic nature put forward by the Italian Government, such as the need to ensure continuity, financial stability and a proper return on past investments for licence holders, suffice it to point out that those cannot be accepted as overriding reasons in the general interest justifying a restriction of a fundamental freedom guaranteed by the Treaty (see, to that effect, Case C35/98 Verkooijen [2000] ECR I4071, paragraph 48, and Case C388/01 Commission v Italie [2003] ECR I721, paragraph 22).

36. It follows that none of the overriding reasons in the general interest pleaded by the Italian Government to justify the renewal of the 329 old licences without any competing bids being invited can be accepted.

37. Therefore, the Commission's application is well founded.

38. It follows from the above that, by renewing 329 licences for horse-race betting operations without inviting any competing bids, the Italian Republic failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 43 and 49 EC and, in particular, infringed the general principle of transparency and the obligation to ensure a sufficient degree of advertising.

Costs

39. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission applied for costs and the Italian Republic has been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

Opinion of Advocate General Sharpston delivered on 29 March 2007. Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic. Failure to fulfil obligations - Freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services - Public service concessions - Renewal services - Public service concessions - Renewalservices - Public service concessions - Renewalbetting licences without inviting competing bids - Requirements of publication and transparency. Case C-260/04.

1. In 1999, the Italian authorities renewed 329 horse-race betting licences without a prior tendering procedure. The Commission seeks a declaration that Italy thereby infringed the requirements of transparency and publicity which flow from the Treaty provisions on freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services. Italy denies the infringement, and is supported by Denmark and Spain, although Italy and the interveners each put forward different arguments for dismissing the Commission's action.

Community law

2. Article 43 EC prohibits restrictions on the freedom of establishment of nationals of a Member State in the territory of another Member State.

3. Article 49 EC prohibits restrictions on freedom to provide services within the Community in respect of nationals of Member States who are established in a State of the Community other than that of the person for whom the services are intended.

4. Pursuant to Articles 45 and 46 EC (read, in so far as Article 49 is concerned, in conjunction with Article 55 EC), those prohibitions do not apply to activities which in a Member State are connected, even occasionally, with the exercise of official authority, and do not prejudice the applicability of national provisions entailing special treatment for foreign nationals on grounds of public policy, public security or public health.

5. In addition, the Court has repeatedly held that restrictions on freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services may be justified by overriding reasons in the public interest which do not go beyond what is necessary to achieve their aim and which are applied irrespective of nationality. (2)

6. At the material time, the award of public service contracts in general was regulated at Community level by Council Directive 92/50/EEC. (3) For contracts over a certain value, specific obligations are laid down, including in particular an obligation to advertise the procedure at Community level other than in certain strictly defined circumstances. However, the eighth recital in the preamble to the directive states that it covers the provision of services only in so far as it is based on contracts, and that the provision of services on other bases is not covered. The Commission had proposed that public service concessions be included in the scope of the directive but the Council decided to exclude them, in particular because of differences between Member States' systems. (4)

7. The Court has however held that, although public service concessions are excluded from the scope of the public procurement directives, public authorities awarding them must comply with the fundamental rules of the EC Treaty, in particular the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality. (5) Articles 43 and 49 EC are specifically applicable to public service concessions, (6) and the principle of equal treatment of tenderers applies even in the absence of discrimination on grounds of nationality. (7) Those principles impose a duty of transparency on the public authority, which must ensure a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the service concession to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed. (8)

8. In 2000, the Commission published an interpretative communication on concessions under Community law, (9) in which it sets out its understanding of the ways in which Community law impinges on the award of concessions. (10)

Facts

9. Until 1996, the organisation of horse-race betting in Italy was the responsibility of UNIRE, the national union for the improvement of horse breeding, which awarded a number of concessions for that purpose. Since that year, (11) betting has been under the aegis of the Finance and Agriculture Ministries. According to a 1998 presidential decree, (12) those ministries are to award concessions on the basis of tendering procedures conducted in accordance with Community law. As a transitional measure, concessions awarded under the previous regime (which did not involve public tendering) were extended until the end of 1998 or, if tendering procedures could not be organised by then, the end of 1999.

10. In 1999, it was decided by ministerial decree (13) to increase the number of betting centres in Italy from 329 to 1 000. 671 new concessions were put out to tender and awarded. The 329 existing concessions were simply renewed for six years from 1 January 2000. (14) A law was subsequently enacted providing that the 329 concessions were to be reawarded in accordance with the 1998 presidential decree, but would remain valid until that time. (15)

Procedure

11. On 24 July 2001 the Commission sent the Italian Republic a formal letter pursuant to Article 226 EC, concerning a number of matters related to betting, including the renewal of the 329 concessions in issue. It considered the circumstances of the renewal to be incompatible with the requirements of transparency and publicity flowing from Articles 43 and 49 EC.

12. In reply, the Italian authorities referred to the adoption of the abovementioned law. (16)

13. Considering that law to have remained a dead letter in practice, the Commission sent a reasoned opinion to Italy on 18 October 2002, inviting it to comply within two months.

14. On 10 December 2002, the Italian authorities invoked the need to certify the financial status of the holders of the concessions still in force, pending organisation of the tendering procedures.

15. On 17 June 2004, having received no information as to the completion of the certification process and the opening of the new tendering procedures, the Commission brought the present action, asking the Court to:

- declare that, the Ministry of Finance having renewed 329 licences for the taking of bets on horse races without a prior competitive tendering procedure, the Italian Republic has infringed the general principle of transparency and the obligation to advertise which follow from the provisions of the EC Treaty on the freedom of establishment in Article 43 et seq. and the freedom to provide services in Article 49 et seq., and

- order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

16. Italy asks the Court to dismiss the action and order the Commission to pay the costs.

17. Denmark and Spain have been granted leave to intervene in support of Italy, and have submitted statements in intervention. Finland and the Netherlands were also granted leave to intervene, but Finland later withdrew from the proceedings and the Netherlands has made no submission.

18. No hearing has been requested, and none has been held.

Assessment

19. The Commission's argument may be summarised as follows. Betting concessions of the kind in issue are public service concessions for the purposes of Community law. As such, they do not fall within the scope of Directive 92/50 but are subject to the general requirements of non-discrimination, transparency and publicity which flow from Articles 43 and 49 EC. The simple renewal of 329 existing concessions without any tendering procedure is not compatible with those requirements. Only the grounds set out in Articles 45 and 46 EC can justify a derogation, and none of those grounds is present. As regards those 329 concessions, the Italian authorities had not brought their practice into compliance with Community law within the two-month period laid down in the reasoned opinion sent on 18 October 2002, or indeed by the time the application was lodged some 18 months later.

20. In the light of the facts as set out in points 9 and 10 above, which do not appear to be in dispute, and of the case-law summarised in point 7, it seems to me that the Commission has established a prima facie case for the declaration which it seeks.

21. Italy relies in its defence on a number of measures adopted in 2003 and the public-interest requirements underlying them.

22. Spain puts forward considerations relating to the specific features of the authorisation and organisation of gambling activities which, it asserts, the Commission has failed to take into account.

23. Denmark takes issue with the Commission's interpretation of the Court's judgment in Telaustria as to what the requirement of transparency means in circumstances such as those of the present case.

24. Having regard to the differences between the three sets of arguments put forward by the three Member States, I shall deal with them separately.

Italy

25. Italy submits that the measures which it has taken are legitimate. It refers in particular to a decree-law of 2003 and a decision adopted thereunder. (17) The decree-law provided for verification of the financial status of all concession-holders, following difficulties which had arisen as to their ability to pay what turned out to be excessively high levies required of them. Further measures sought to alleviate those difficulties by various means, and the decision maintained existing concessions in force until that aim was attained, but not beyond 31 December 2011. All those measures were justified by the need to ensure continuity, financial stability and a proper return on investment for concession-holders, thereby discouraging recourse to clandestine betting activities, until the current concessions could be reawarded on the basis of tender procedures.

26. The Commission points out that measures taken in 2003 can have no bearing on the infringement. The question whether a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations must be determined by reference to the situation prevailing in that Member State at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion. (18)

27. I agree.

28. The Commission none the less goes on to consider whether the reasons given for adopting the 2003 measures could have justified the situation in 2002, and concludes that they could not.

29. I find nothing to support the Commission's statement that only justifications set out expressly in Articles 45 or 46 EC could be available, to the exclusion of other overriding reasons in the public interest. The Court has repeatedly accepted that such reasons may justify limitations on freedom of establishment or freedom to provide services. (19)

30. However, as the Commission rightly points out, to benefit from any justification - whether on the basis of a Treaty provision or on that of an overriding reason in the public interest - the measures in question must be suitable for achieving the objective sought and must not go beyond what is necessary to attain it. (20)

31. In addition, considerations of a purely economic or administrative nature cannot justify restricting the freedoms laid down by the Treaty. (21)

32. Of the objectives put forward by Italy, none seems to fall within the categories provided for in Articles 45 or 46 EC. As regards other (non-economic) overriding reasons, only that of preventing clandestine betting may be said, at least in principle, to be in the public interest.

33. However, according to the undisputed facts of the case, it was decided in 1999 to increase the number of betting concessions in Italy from 329 to 1 000. That target was duly achieved by awarding 671 new concessions after a tendering procedure and simply renewing the 329 old concessions. In those circumstances it is difficult to imagine - and Italy's defence does not explain - how the renewal or maintenance of the 329 old concessions without a tendering procedure could serve to prevent clandestine betting, or how the absence of transparency could be necessary for that purpose.

34. I therefore find that Italy has put forward no argument capable of rebutting the Commission's case.

Spain

35. Spain submits that the Commission's application is inadequately grounded because it fails to take account of a number of essential considerations. First, as recognised by the Court, (22) moral, religious and cultural factors, and the morally and financially harmful consequences for the individual and society associated with gaming and betting, may imply a margin of appreciation for national authorities in regulating those activities in the interests of consumer protection and public order. Second, a transitional period is required when replacing one concession regime by another and can justify extending certain aspects of the previous regime. In both those regards, the Italian authorities show a clear intention to achieve full compliance with Community requirements. Third, complex social interests are involved, in particular the use of betting revenue as the sole source of financing the improvement of horse breeding. Fourth, there are current serious financial difficulties in the Italian horse-race betting sector, whose origins date from earlier than the 2003 measures cited by Italy in its defence.

36. However, none of those considerations seems capable of justifying the situation of which the Commission complains, namely the renewal and subsequent maintenance, without transparency or publicity, of 329 old concessions concurrently with the award of 671 new concessions by means of a tendering procedure.

37. The particular nature of betting and gambling has indeed been recognised by the Court, but not as being capable of justifying restrictions on Treaty freedoms which do not meet imperative requirements in the general interest, which are not suitable for achieving the objective which they pursue or which go beyond what is necessary in order to attain it. (23) Social and financial considerations of the kinds cited by Spain in its third and fourth considerations, or practical difficulties involved in changing from one regime to another, do not constitute such requirements. And the expressed intention of the Italian authorities is not relevant to an assessment of the factual situation at the end of the period specified in the Commission's reasoned opinion.

Denmark

38. Denmark raises a number of related issues concerned essentially with the extent of the obligations which flow from the Treaty with regard to public contracts or concessions not subject to the procurement directives. In particular it contends that a tendering procedure is not necessarily obligatory, and that the use of the word advertising' in the English version of the Telaustria judgment wrongly suggests a more demanding requirement than the equivalent of publicity' in other language versions. It asks the Court to specify whether the requirement implies a need for the awarding authority to seek future contractors or concession-holders openly, for potential tenderers to have access to tender documents, or for the awarding authority simply to publicise the fact that it intends to award a contract or concession.

39. Denmark's submissions in that regard are very similar to those which it made in another case currently pending before the Court, Commission v Finland. (24) The questions which it raises are important, and I would agree that some clarification of the law may be desirable. (25) However, the general clarification which Denmark seeks seems aimed primarily at answering certain questions of general interest to the Member States, rather than at determining the outcome of the present infringement action.

40. In the present case, it is not contested that the 329 concessions in question were quite simply and automatically renewed. Even if it might be argued that the Italian authorities publicised to some extent the fact that the procedure was to take place, it is quite obvious that the degree of publicity vis-à-vis those concessions (as opposed to the 671 new concessions awarded after a tendering procedure) was not, on any view, sufficient to enable the service concession to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed'. (26)

41. I do not consider, therefore, that Denmark's submissions can affect the outcome of the present case.

Concluding remarks

42. I thus take the view that, regard being had to the Court's case-law and to the undisputed facts of the case, the Commission has sufficiently established the infringement which it seeks to have declared, and that none of the submissions by the Member States adequately rebuts the Commission's arguments in the circumstances.

43. I should make it clear that, in so doing, I express no opinion as to other circumstances in which renewal of horse-race betting concessions without a tendering procedure might be justified by public-interest requirements. Nor do I consider it necessary to specify the precise kind or degree of publicity required where a tendering procedure is conducted. Suffice it to recall that, in the present case, 671 concessions were awarded after a tendering procedure which, in the Commission's view, complied with Community law, while 329 were at the same time renewed without the slightest degree of transparency or publicity which could have afforded interested parties access to the award procedure.

Costs

44. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings and, under Article 69(4), Member States which intervene in the proceedings are to bear their own costs. The Commission has applied for costs against Italy.

Conclusion

45. I am therefore of the opinion that the Court should

- declare that, the Ministry of Finance having renewed 329 licences for the taking of bets on horse races without a prior competitive tendering procedure, the Italian Republic has infringed the general principle of transparency and the obligation to advertise which follow from the provisions of the EC Treaty on the freedom of establishment in Article 43 et seq. and the freedom to provide services in Article 49 et seq., and

- order the Italian Republic to pay the costs, except for those of the intervening Member States, which should bear their own costs.

Judgment of the Court (Second Chamber)
of 18 July 2007
Commission of the European Communities v Federal Republic of Germany. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Judgment of the Court establishing the failure to fulfil obligations - Non-implementation - Article 228 EC - Measures necessary to comply with the judgment of the Court - Rescission of a contract. Case C-503/04.

In Case C503/04,

ACTION under Article 228 EC for failure to fulfil obligations, brought on 7 December 2004,

Commission of the European Communities, represented by B. Schima, acting as Agent, with an address for service in Luxembourg, applicant,

Federal Republic of Germany, represented by W.-D. Plessing and C. Schulze-Bahr, acting as Agents, and H.-J. Prieß, Rechtsanwalt,

THE COURT (Second Chamber), composed of C.W.A. Timmermans (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, P. Kris, K. Schiemann, J. Makarczyk and J.C. Bonichot, Judges, Advocate General: V. Trstenjak,

Registrar: H. von Holstein, Deputy Registrar, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 7 December 2006, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 28 March 2007,

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, by having failed, at the date on which the period laid down in the reasoned opinion issued by the Commission of the European Communities pursuant to Article 228 EC, to adopt all the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of 10 April 2003 in Joined Cases C20/01 and C28/01 Commission v Germany regarding the conclusion of a contract for waste disposal by the City of Brunswick (Germany), the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under that article;

2. Orders the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs;

3. Orders the French Republic, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Finland to bear their own costs.

1. By its application, the Commission of the European Communities requests the Court to declare that, by failing to adopt all the necessary measures to comply with the judgment in Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 Commission v Germany [2003] ECR I-3609 regarding the conclusion of a contract for the collection of waste water by the municipality of Bockhorn (Germany) and of a contract for waste disposal by the City of Brunswick (Germany), the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228(1) EC, and to order that Member State to pay to the Commission's own resources account of the European Community a penalty payment of EUR 31 680 for each day of delay in implementing the measures necessary to comply with that judgment in respect of the contract relating to the municipality of Bockhorn and of EUR 126 720 for each day of delay in implementing the measures necessary to comply with the abovementioned judgment in respect of the contract relating to the City of Brunswick, in each case from the date of delivery of that judgment until the measures are implemented.

2. By order of the President of the Court of 6 June 2005, the French Republic, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Finland were granted leave to intervene in support of the forms of order sought by the Federal Republic of Germany.

Legal context

3. Article 2(6) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33) provides:

The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.'

4. Article 3(1) of Directive 89/665 states:

The Commission may invoke the procedure for which this Article provides when, prior to a contract being concluded, it considers that a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement has been committed during a contract award procedure falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC and 77/62/EEC.'

The judgment in Commission v Germany

5. In paragraphs 1 and 2 of the operative part of the judgment in Commission v Germany , the Court:

1. Declare[d] that since the Municipality of Bockhorn (Germany) failed to invite tenders for the award of the contract for the collection of its waste water and failed to publish notice of the results of the procedure for the award of the contract in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities , the Federal Republic of Germany, at the time of the award of that public service contract, failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8 in conjunction with Article 15(2) and Article 16(1) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1);

2. Declare[d] that since the City of Braunschweig (Germany) awarded a contract for waste disposal by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, although the criteria laid down in Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50 for an award by privately negotiated procedure without a Community-wide invitation to tender had not been met, the Federal Republic of Germany, at the time of the award of that public service contract, failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8 and Article 11(3)(b) of that directive.'

Pre-litigation procedure

6. By letter of 27 June 2003, the Commission requested the German Government to notify it of the measures taken to comply with the judgment in Commission v Germany.

7. Since it was not satisfied by the German Government's response of 7 August 2003, on 17 October 2003 the Commission requested the German authorities to submit their observations within two months.

8. In its letter of 23 December 2003, the German Government referred to a letter sent in early December 2003 to the government of the Land of Lower Saxony asking it to ensure compliance with the public procurement legislation in force and to notify it of the measures intended to prevent similar infringements in future. In addition, the German Government referred to Paragraph 13 of the German Vergabeverordnung (Public Procurement Regulation) which entered into force on 1 February 2001 and which provides that a contract concluded by a contracting authority is invalid if unsuccessful tenderers have not been informed of the conclusion of that contract at least 14 days before its award. That government also submitted that Community law did not require the rescission of the two contracts at issue in the case which gave rise to the judgment in Commission v Germany.

9. On 1 April 2004, the Commission sent a reasoned opinion to the Federal Republic of Germany, to which the latter responded on 7 June 2004.

10. Since the Commission considered that the Federal Republic of Germany had failed to comply with the judgment in Commission v Germany , it decided to bring the present action.

The subject-matter of the action

11. Since the Federal Republic of Germany stated in its defence that on 28 February 2005 the contract for the collection of waste water concluded by the municipality of Bockhorn was to be annulled, the Commission stated in its reply that it was not pursuing either its action or its claim for imposition of a periodic penalty payment in so far as they related to that contract.

12. As the Commission has partly discontinued its action, it is necessary to examine it only in so far as it relates to the contract concluded by the City of Brunswick for waste disposal.

Admissibility

13. The Federal Republic of Germany alleges, firstly, that the Commission has no interest in bringing proceedings because of its failure to submit an application for interpretation within the meaning of Article 102 of the Rules of Procedure. According to that Member State, the dispute relating to the consequences which follow from the judgment in Commission v Germany could and should have been resolved by way of an application for interpretation of that judgement and not by way of an action based on Article 228 EC.

14. However, that argument cannot be accepted.

15. In proceedings for failure to fulfil obligations under Article 226 EC, the Court is required to find only that a provision of Community law has been infringed. Pursuant to Article 228(1) EC, the Member State concerned is required to take the measures necessary to comply with the judgment of the Court (see, to that effect, Case C-126/03 Commission v Germany [2004] ECR I-11197, paragraph 26). Since a question concerning the measures required for the implementation of a judgment establishing a failure to fulfil obligations under Article 226 EC does not form part of the subject-matter of such a judgment, such a question cannot form the subject-matter of an application for interpretation of a judgment (see also, to that effect, order in Joined Cases 146/85 INT and 431/85 INT Maindiaux and Others v ESC and Others [1988] ECR 2003, paragraph 6).

16. Furthermore, it is precisely at the stage of an action under Article 228(2) EC that it is for the Member State, whose responsibility it is to draw the conclusions to which the judgment establishing the failure to fulfil obligations appears to it to give rise, to justify the validity of those conclusions, should they be criticised by the Commission.

17. Secondly, in its rejoinder, the Federal Republic of Germany, supported by the Kingdom of the Netherlands, requests the Court to close the procedure by application of Article 92(2) of the Rules of Procedure, as the action has become devoid of purpose since, with effect from 10 July 2005, the contract concluded by the City of Brunswick concerning waste disposal has also been rescinded.

18. The Commission responds, in its observations relating to the statements in intervention of the French Republic, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and of the Republic of Finland, that it retains an interest in obtaining from the Court a ruling on whether, on expiry of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion issued under Article 228 EC, the Federal Republic of Germany had already complied with the judgment of 10 April 2003 in Joined Cases C20/01 and C28/01 Commission v Germany . The Commission states, however, that an order for payment of a periodic penalty payment is no longer necessary.

19. In that regard, it should be recalled that, according to settled case-law, the reference date for assessing whether there has been a failure to fulfil obligations under Article 228 EC is the date of expiry of the period prescribed in the reasoned opinion issued under that provision (see Case C119/04 Commission v Italy [2006] ECR I6885, paragraph 27, and case-law cited).

20. In the present case, the period referred to in the reasoned opinion which, as is apparent from the receipt stamp, was received by the German authorities on 1 April 2004, was one of two months. The reference date for assessing whether there has been a failure to fulfil obligations under Article 228 EC is therefore 1 June 2004. At that date, the contract concluded by the City of Brunswick for waste disposal had not yet been terminated.

21. Nor, moreover, is the action inadmissible contrary to the Federal Republic of Germany's submissions at the hearing, on the ground that the Commission is no longer requesting the imposition of a periodic penalty payment.

22. Since the Court has jurisdiction to impose a financial penalty not suggested by the Commission (see, to that effect, Case C-304/02 Commission v France [2005] ECR I-6263, paragraph 90), the action is not inadmissible simply because the Commission takes the view, at a certain stage of the procedure before the Court, that a penalty is no longer necessary.

23. With regard, thirdly, to the plea of inadmissibility based on Article 3 of Directive 89/665, to which the Advocate General refers in point 44 of her Opinion, it is appropriate to note that the particular procedure laid down in that provision constitutes a preventive measure which can neither derogate from nor replace the powers of the Commission under Articles 226 EC and 228 EC (see, to that effect, Case C-394/02 Commission v Greece [2005] ECR I4713, paragraph 27, and case-law cited).

24. It follows from all the foregoing that the action is admissible.

Substance

25. The Commission takes the view that the Federal Republic of Germany has not adopted measures sufficient to comply with the judgment in Joined Cases C20/01 and C28/01 Commission v Germany

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

, since that Member State did not, before the date of expiry of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion, rescind the contract concluded by the City of Brunswick for waste disposal.

26. The Federal Republic of Germany reiterates the position expressed in the letter from the German Government of 23 December 2003 that rescission of the contracts affected by that judgment was not required and submits that the steps set out in that communication constituted measures sufficient to comply with that judgment.

27. In that regard, it should be recalled that, as is apparent from paragraph 12 of the judgment in Joined Cases C20/01 and C28/01 Commission v Germany , the City of Brunswick and Braunschweigsche Kohlebergwerke (BKB') concluded a contract under which BKB was made responsible for residual waste disposal by thermal processing for a period of 30 years from June/July 1999.

28. As the Advocate General observes in point 72 of her Opinion, the measures mentioned by the German Government in its letter of 23 December 2003 were intended exclusively to prevent the conclusion of new contracts which would constitute failures to fulfil obligations similar to those found in that judgment. However, they did not prevent the contract concluded by the City of Brunswick from continuing to have full effect on 1 June 2004.

29. Accordingly, since that contract had not been terminated on 1 June 2004, the failure to fulfil obligations continued on that date. The adverse effect on the freedom to provide services arising from the disregard of the provisions of Directive 92/50 subsists throughout the entire performance of the contracts concluded in breach thereof (Joined Cases C20/01 and C28/01 Commission v Germany , paragraph 36). Furthermore, at that date, the failure to fulfil obligations was to continue for decades, given the long period for which the contract in question had been concluded.

30. Having regard to all those facts, the view cannot be taken, in a situation such as that of the present case, that, with regard to the contract concluded by the City of Brunswick, the Federal Republic of Germany had adopted, as at 1 June 2004, measures implementing the judgment in Joined Cases C20/01 and C28/01 Commission v Germany.

31. However, the Federal Republic of Germany, supported by the French Republic, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Finland, submits that the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665, which allows Member States to provide in their legislation that, after the conclusion of a contract following the award of a public contract, the bringing of an action can give rise only to an award of damages and, thus, to exclude any possibility of rescission of that contract, precludes a finding of failure to fulfil obligations within the meaning of Article 226 EC with regard to such a contract entailing the obligation to rescind it. According to those Member States, the principles of legal certainty and of the protection of legitimate expectations, the principle pacta sunt servanda , the fundamental right to property, Article 295 EC and the case-law of the Court regarding the limitation in time of the effects of a judgment also preclude such a result.

32. However, such arguments cannot be upheld.

33. With regard, firstly, to the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665, the Court has already held that, although that provision permits the Member States to preserve the effects of contracts concluded in breach of directives relating to the award of public contracts and thus protects the legitimate expectations of the parties thereto, its effect cannot be, unless the scope of the EC Treaty provisions establishing the internal market is to be reduced, that the contracting authority's conduct vis-à-vis third parties is to be regarded as in conformity with Community law following the conclusion of such contracts (Joined Cases C20/01 and C28/01 Commission v Germany , paragraph 39).

34. If the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 does not affect the application of Article 226 EC, nor can it affect the application of Article 228 EC, without, in a situation such as that in the present case, reducing the scope of the Treaty provisions establishing the internal market.

35. Furthermore, the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665, which has the objective of guaranteeing the existence, in all Member States, of effective remedies for infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or of the national rules implementing that law, so as to ensure the effective application of the directives on the coordination of public procurement procedures (Case C470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I11617, paragraph 71), relates, as is apparent from its wording, to the compensation which a person harmed by an infringement committed by a contracting authority may obtain from it. That provision, because of its specific nature, cannot be regarded also as regulating the relations between a Member State and the Community in the context of Articles 226 EC and 228 EC.

36. With regard, secondly, even if it were to be accepted that the principles of legal certainty and of the protection of legitimate expectations, the principle pacta sunt servanda and the right to property could be used against the contracting authority by the other party to the contract in the event of rescission, Member States cannot rely thereon to justify the non-implementation of a judgment establishing a failure to fulfil obligations under Article 226 EC and thereby evade their own liability under Community law (see, by analogy, Case C470/03 AGM.-COS.MET [2007] ECR I-0000, paragraph 72).

37. With regard, thirdly, to Article 295 EC, according to which this Treaty shall in no way prejudice the rules in Member States governing the system of property ownership', it should be recalled that that article does not have the effect of exempting the Member States' systems of property ownership from the fundamental rules of the Treaty (see Case C463/00 Commission v Spain [2003] ECR I4581, paragraph 67, and case-law cited). The particular features of the system of property ownership in a Member State cannot therefore justify the continuation of a failure to fulfil obligations which consists of an obstacle to the freedom to provide services in disregard of the provisions of Directive 92/50.

38. Moreover, it should be recalled that a Member State cannot plead provisions, practices or situations prevailing in its domestic legal order to justify the failure to observe obligations arising under Community law (see Commission v Italy , paragraph 25, and case-law cited).

39. Fourthly, with regard to the Court's case-law on the limitation in time of the effects of a judgment, it is sufficient to state that, in any event, that case-law does not justify the non-implementation of a judgment establishing a failure to fulfil obligations under Article 226 EC.

40. Although, with regard to the contract concluded by the City of Brunswick, it must therefore be held that the Federal Republic of Germany had not, as at 1 June 2004, adopted the measures to implement the judgment in Joined Cases C20/01 and C28/01 Commission v Germany , the same is not, however, true at the date of examination of the facts by the Court. It follows that the imposition of the periodic penalty payment, which the Commission is in fact no longer requesting, is not justified.

41. In the same way, the facts of the present case are such that it does not appear necessary to order payment of a lump sum.

42. Accordingly, it must be held that, by having failed, at the date on which the period laid down in the reasoned opinion issued by the Commission pursuant to Article 228 EC, to adopt all the necessary measures to comply with the judgment in Joined Cases C20/01 and C28/01 Commission v Germany regarding the conclusion of a contract for waste disposal by the City of Brunswick, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under that article.

Costs

43. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. As the Commission has asked that costs be awarded against the Federal Republic of Germany and the latter has been unsuccessful, the Federal Republic of Germany must be ordered to pay the costs. The intervening Member States, the French Republic, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Finland, must be ordered to bear their own costs in accordance with Article 69(4) of the Rules of Procedure.

Commission of the European Communities

Federal Republic of Germany

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations – Judgment of the Court establishing the failure to fulfil obligations – Non-implementation – Article 228 EC – Measures necessary to comply with the judgment of the Court – Rescission of a contract)

Summary of the Judgment

1. Actions for failure to fulfil obligations – Judgment of the Court finding a failure to fulfil obligations – Breach of the obligation to comply with the judgment – Financial penalties

   (Art. 228(2) EC)

2. Approximation of laws – Review procedures in respect of the award of public supply and public works contracts – Directive 89/665

   (Arts 226 EC and 228 EC; Council Directive 89/665, Art. 3)

3. Approximation of laws – Review procedures in respect of the award of public supply and public works contracts – Directive 89/665

   (Arts 226 EC and 228 EC; Council Directive 89/665, Art. 2(6), second subpara.)

4. Approximation of laws – Review procedures concerning the award of public service contracts – Directive 92/50

   (Art. 226 EC; Council Directive 92/50)

5. Member States – Obligations – Failure to fulfil obligations – National system pleaded as justification – Not permissible

   (Art. 226 EC)

1. In proceedings under Article 228(2) EC, an action does not become inadmissible on the ground that the Commission is no longer requesting the imposition of a periodic penalty payment. Since the Court has jurisdiction to impose a financial penalty not suggested by the Commission, the action is not inadmissible simply because the Commission takes the view, at a certain stage of the procedure before the Court, that a periodic penalty is no longer necessary.

   (see paras 21-22)

2. The special procedure under Article 3 of Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, whereby the Commission may intervene with a Member State if it considers that a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement has been committed, constitutes a preventive measure which can neither derogate from nor replace the powers of the Commission under Articles 226 EC and 228 EC.

3. Although the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts permits the Member States to preserve the effects of contracts concluded in breach of directives relating to the award of public contracts and thus protects the legitimate expectations of the parties thereto, its effect cannot be, unless the scope of the EC Treaty provisions establishing the internal market is to be reduced, that the contracting authority's conduct vis-à-vis third parties is to be regarded as in conformity with Community law following the conclusion of such contracts.

If the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 does not affect the application of Article 226 EC, nor can it affect the application of Article 228 EC, without reducing the scope of the Treaty provisions establishing the internal market. Furthermore, that provision relates, as is apparent from its wording, to the compensation which a person harmed by an infringement committed by a contracting authority may obtain from it. That provision, because of its specific nature, cannot be regarded also as regulating the relations between a Member State and the Community in the context of Articles 226 EC and 228 EC.

(see paras 33-35)

4. Even if it the principles of legal certainty and of the protection of legitimate expectations, the principle pacta sunt servanda and the right to property could be used against the contracting authority by the other party to the contract in the event of rescission of a contract concluded in breach of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, a Member State cannot in any event rely on those principles or that right in order to justify the non-implementation of a judgment establishing a failure to fulfil obligations under Article 226 EC and thereby evade its own liability under Community law.

(see para. 36)

5. A Member State cannot plead provisions, practices or situations prevailing in its domestic legal order to justify the failure to observe obligations arising under Community law.

(see para. 38)

Opinion of Advocate General Trstenjak delivered on 28 March 2007. Commission of the European Communities v Federal Republic of Germany. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Judgment of the Court establishing the failure to fulfil obligations - Non-implementation - Article 228 EC - Measures necessary to comply with the judgment of the Court - Rescission of a contract. Case C-503/04.

I - Introduction

1. The basis for the present case is an action brought by the Commission pursuant to the second paragraph of Article 228(2) EC against the Federal Republic of Germany for its failure to fulfil obligations. By its action the Commission is seeking a declaration from the Court of Justice of the European Communities that the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228(1) EC, inasmuch as it has not taken the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of the Court of 10 April 2003 in Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 Commission v Germany regarding the award of a contract for the collection of waste water by the municipality of Bockhorn and of a contract for waste disposal by the City of Brunswick. (2)

2. In that judgment, the Court of Justice declared that the Federal Republic of Germany had disregarded the Community provisions concerning the award of public contracts. It considered it to be established, first, that the municipality of Bockhorn had failed to invite tenders for the award of the contract for the collection of its waste water and had failed to publish notice of the results of the procedure for the award of the contract in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities , as prescribed by Article 8 in conjunction with Articles 15(2) and 16(1) of Directive 92/50/EEC. (3) The Court further declared that the City of Brunswick had awarded a contract for waste disposal by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, although the criteria laid down in Article 11(3) of that directive for an award by privately negotiated procedure without a Community-wide invitation to tender had not been met.

3. The dispute currently pending before the Court focuses on the conclusions that the Federal Republic of Germany should have drawn from the judgment of 10 April 2003 in order to fulfil its obligation to ensure that compliance with Community law was restored. While the Commission takes the view that the contracts under private law initially concluded for a minimum term of 30 years should have been rescinded, the Federal Republic denies that it is under such a legal obligation, essentially citing Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665/EEC, (4) under which Member States are entitled to limit the powers of the body responsible for review procedures to the award of damages.

II - Legal background

4. Article 228 EC provides:

1. If the Court of Justice finds that a Member State has failed to fulfil an obligation under this Treaty, the State shall be required to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of the Court of Justice.

2. If the Commission considers that the Member State concerned has not taken such measures it shall, after giving that State the opportunity to submit its observations, issue a reasoned opinion specifying the points on which the Member State concerned has not complied with the judgment of the Court of Justice.

If the Member State concerned fails to take the necessary measures to comply with the Court's judgment within the time-limit laid down by the Commission, the latter may bring the case before the Court of Justice. In so doing it shall specify the amount of the lump sum or penalty payment to be paid by the Member State concerned which it considers appropriate in the circumstances.

If the Court of Justice finds that the Member State concerned has not complied with its judgment it may impose a lump sum or penalty payment on it.

5. Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665/EEC provides:

The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.'

III - Background

A - The judgment in Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01

6. At points 1 and 2 of the operative part of its judgment of 10 April 2003 in Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 Commission v Germany the Court:

1. Declare[d] that since the municipality of Bockhorn (Germany) failed to invite tenders for the award of the contract for the collection of its waste water and failed to publish notice of the results of the procedure for the award of the contract in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities , the Federal Republic of Germany, at the time of the award of that public service contract, failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8 in conjunction with Article 15(2) and Article 16(1) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts;

2. Declare[d] that since the City of Braunschweig (Germany) awarded a contract for waste disposal by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, although the criteria laid down in Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50 for an award by privately negotiated procedure without a Community-wide invitation to tender had not been met, the Federal Republic of Germany, at the time of the award of that public service contract, failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8 and Article 11(3)(b) of that directive;'.

7. For a detailed presentation of the facts and procedure, I refer to the judgment mentioned above. (5)

B - The pre-litigation procedure in Case C-503/04

8. By letter of 27 June 2003, the Commission requested the German Government to notify to it the measures taken to comply with the judgment in Commission v Germany. In its letter of 7 August 2003, the German Government replied that the Federal Republic of Germany had always acknowledged the infringements and had taken all measures necessary to prevent the reoccurrence of such infringements in future. It maintained, however, that the Federal Republic of Germany was not obliged to terminate the two contracts at issue in the case.

9. By letter of 17 October 2003, the Commission called on the German authorities to submit their observations within two months.

10. In its letter of 23 December 2003, the German Government reiterated that the Federal Republic of Germany had always acknowledged and regretted the infringements and had taken all measures necessary to prevent a re-occurrence of such infringements in future. In early December 2003, it had also urgently requested the Land Government of Lower Saxony by letter to comply with the public procurement legislation in force and had called on it to give an account of the measures intended to help prevent similar infringements in future. The German Government referred in addition to Paragraph 13 of the Vergabeverordnung (Public Procurement Regulations), which had entered into force on 1 February 2001, under which a contract concluded by a contracting authority is invalid if the unsuccessful tenderers have not been informed of the conclusion of that contract 14 days at the latest prior to its award. It also reiterated its view that Community law did not require the two contracts to be terminated, as had been stated in Commission v Germany.

11. By letter of 1 April 2004, the Commission sent a reasoned opinion to the Federal Republic of Germany. In it, the Commission expressed its conviction that it was not sufficient to prevent infringements of that kind in future procurement procedures as the contracts complained of would continue to produce effects for decades. It was essential to introduce measures to end the Treaty infringement in the cases involving procurement law dealt with in the judgment of 10 April 2003 in order to comply with that judgment. It laid down a period for compliance of two months from receipt of that letter. The Federal Republic of Germany replied by letter of 7 June 2004, reaffirming the view it had previously expressed.

12. Since it took the view that the Federal Republic of Germany had failed to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment in Commission v Germany , the Commission brought the present action on 7 December 2004.

IV - Proceedings before the Court of Justice

13. According to its original wording, the Commission's application was aimed, first, at obtaining a declaration that the Federal Republic of Germany had failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228(1) EC, inasmuch as it had not taken the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of 10 April 2003 in Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 Commission v Germany regarding the award of a contract for the collection of waste water by the municipality of Bockhorn and of a contract for waste disposal by the City of Brunswick. The application was aimed, secondly, at obtaining an order that the Federal Republic of Germany pay into the Commission's own resources account of the European Community' a penalty of EUR 31 680 for each day of delay in implementing the measures necessary to comply with the judgment in respect of the award of a contract for the collection of waste water by the municipality of Bockhorn, and of EUR 126 720 for each day of delay in implementing the measures necessary to comply with the judgment in respect of the award of a contract for waste disposal by the City of Brunswick. The Commission further claimed that the Federal Republic of Germany should be ordered to pay the costs of the proceedings.

14. In the course of the written procedure in the case, the disputed contracts were rescinded. In its defence of 14 February 2005, registered at the Court on 15 February 2005, the Federal Republic of Germany stated that a contract rescinding the contract for the collection of waste water had been concluded on 3 January 2005 between the municipality of Bockhorn and the relevant undertaking. In its defence it also claimed that the action should be dismissed, or, in the alternative, that the effect of a judgment upholding the application should be limited to the future and that the Commission should be ordered to pay the costs of the proceedings.

15. In its reply of 26 April 2005, the Commission stated that it no longer sought to pursue the action as a whole or the specific claim for the imposition of a penalty payment in respect of that part of the action.

16. In its rejoinder of 28 July 2005, the Federal Republic of Germany advised that a contract cancelling the previous contract had also been concluded in the meantime (on 4 and 5 July 2005) by the City of Brunswick, and claimed that the proceedings should be discontinued in their entirety in accordance with Article 92(2), in conjunction with Article 91(3) and (4), of the Rules of Procedure of the Court and that an order should be issued for the case to be removed from the register, or, in the alternative, that the action as a whole should be dismissed as inadmissible. The Federal Republic of Germany argued, for the sake of completeness, that an order to pay a lump sum was no longer possible on procedural and substantive grounds.

17. As a result of that information supplied by the Federal Republic of Germany, the Commission declared in its observations of 6 December 2005 that it would henceforth pursue its original action only for the purposes of obtaining a declaration that the Federal Republic of Germany had failed to comply by the relevant date with the judgment of the Court regarding the contract concluded by the City of Brunswick. Furthermore, in the light of the subsequent rescission of that second contract, it no longer considered it necessary to seek the imposition of a periodic penalty payment. In those observations, the Commission pointed out that although it was still possible to impose a lump sum penalty, it did not consider a claim to that end to be appropriate in the circumstances.

18. By order of the President of the Court of Justice of 6 June 2005, the Kingdom of the Netherlands, the French Republic and the Republic of Finland were granted leave to intervene under Article 93(1) of the Rules of Procedure in support of the form of order sought by the Federal Republic of Germany.

19. The Commission, the Federal Republic of Germany and the French Republic took part in the hearing held on 7 December 2006.

V - Pleas in law and main arguments

20. The Federal Republic of Germany raises a number of pleas of inadmissibility and considers the action also to be unfounded on substantive grounds.

A - Whether the action is admissible

1. Whether the procedure is lawful

21. The German Government first claims that the Commission does not have an interest in bringing the proceedings as it failed to apply for interpretation of the judgment pursuant to Article 102 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice. The dispute over the consequences ensuing from the judgment in Commission v Germany should have been resolved by making such an application rather than by bringing an action under Article 228 EC. It also claims, that by bringing an action immediately for the imposition of a periodic penalty payment without first making an application for interpretation, the Commission is offending against the principle of proportionality.

22. In support of its action, the Commission maintains that the Federal Republic of Germany did not take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of 10 April 2003, although it was obliged to do so under Article 228(1) EC. In that judgment, the Court had acknowledged the Commission's authority to obtain declarations, by means of infringement proceedings, that Member States have failed to fulfil their obligations under Community law - for instance, by concluding long-term service contracts in disregard of public procurement law - for the purpose of bringing such infringements to an end.

23. The Commission objects to the view that the dispute could have been resolved by an application for interpretation of the judgment under Article 102 of the Rules of Procedure. In the proceedings under Article 226 EC which led to the judgment of 10 April 2003, the Court had established a failure to fulfil obligations. A judgment upholding the application could have done no more than that, given that it does not fall to the Court to rule in such judgments on the measures which a Member State has to take to comply with that judgment.

2. Disappearance of the subject-matter of the proceedings

24. The Germa n Government proposes that the proceedings should be discontinued pursuant to Article 92(2) of the Rules of Procedure, since it considers the conditions of that provision to be met.

The contract awarded by the municipality of Bockhorn for the collection of waste water and the contract awarded by the City of Brunswick for waste disposal, the continued existence of which had prompted the Commission to bring the proceedings, have both been rescinded. As a result, the action has now become devoid of purpose and there is no need to adjudicate on it.

25. The German Government contends in the alternative that the action must be dismissed as inadmissible on the ground that there is no interest in bringing the proceedings because, the contracts at issue having been rescinded, there is no longer any cause to implement the Court's judgment in Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01. In assessing whether there continues to be an interest in bringing proceedings, the crucial factor to be borne in mind in the context of an action under Article 228(2) EC is the date of the last hearing and not, for instance, the expiry of the period prescribed in the reasoned opinion.

26. The Netherlands Government concurs with the observations made by the German Government and proposes that the Court should dismiss the action as inadmissible on the ground that there is no interest in bringing proceedings, because they have become devoid of purpose on account of the fact that the waste disposal contract concluded by the City of Brunswick has in the meantime been cancelled.

27. The Commission takes the view that, in proceedings under Article 228(2) EC, just as in proceedings under Article 226 EC, a failure to fulfil obligations must have occurred by the date of expiry of the period imposed on the Member State in the reasoned opinion for the action to be admissible. If the Member State has not taken the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of the Court within that period, the Commission may bring an action before the Court. Once an action is admissible, it argues, it cannot become inadmissible as a result of subsequent events.

28. The Commission maintains that it has an interest in clarifying whether the Federal Republic of Germany had already complied with the judgment in Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 by the relevant date, when the contract concluded by the City of Brunswick still existed. It had not done so, in its view, because an obligation to rescind that contract arose out of that judgment. Thus, the action must be upheld.

B - The merits

29. In its reasoning on the merits of the action the Commission refers essentially to its observations on admissibility. It takes the view that the Federal Republic of Germany did not take sufficient measures to comply with the judgment mentioned above, since it did not cancel the waste disposal contract concluded by the City of Brunswick before expiry of the period prescribed in the reasoned opinion. A Member State's obligation to bring an end to the infringement established by the Court and the Commission's powers to ensure that that obligation is performed are laid down in Article 228 EC, that is to say, in primary Community law. As a provision of secondary Community legislation, Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 cannot in any way alter the implications of that obligation. Moreover, the review procedure provided for in Directive 89/665 pursues a more specific purpose than infringement proceedings.

30. The German Government, on the other hand, considers the action to be unfounded, as it regards the measures mentioned in its letter of 23 December 2003 as sufficient to comply with the judgment in question. The necessary and, in its view, sufficient measures had consisted in express instructions at national and Land level to comply strictly with the provisions of public procurement law.

31. It further takes the view, supported by the Netherlands, French and Finnish Governments, that a declaration of a failure to fulfil obligations under Article 226 EC cannot give rise to an obligation to rescind a contract resulting from an award procedure. Such an interpretation is, above all, contrary to Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665, which permits the Member States, after the conclusion of a contract, to limit the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures to awarding damages to any person harmed by the improper conduct of the contracting authorities. Under that provision, the contracts concluded by the contracting authorities can thus continue to be effective. Since the Federal Republic of Germany has availed itself of that possibility, Community law does not mean that the contractual obligations undertaken are unlawful. Furthermore, an obligation to rescind the contracts would be contrary to the principles of legal certainty and of the protection of legitimate expectations, the principle pacta sunt servanda , Article 295 EC, the fundamental right to property and the case-law of the Court on the temporal limitation of the effects of a judgment in damages.

32. The German Government further points out that, under German law and on the basis of the relevant provisions of the contracts at issue in this case, the contracts could not be rescinded or could be rescinded but only at the expense of incurring a disproportionately high risk of being found liable in damages.

VI - Legal assessment

33. As mentioned at the start of this Opinion, the central issue in the present dispute is the conclusions that the Federal Republic of Germany should have drawn from the judgment of 10 April 2003 in order to fulfil its obligation to ensure that compliance with Community law was restored.

34. However, that unduly straightforward presentation of the subject-matter of the dispute belies its complexity from a legal point of view, especially as it raises points of law directly concerning both the admissibility and the merits of the action.

A - Whether the action is admissible

1. Whether the procedure is lawful

35. The first point concerns the complaint made by the German Government regarding the admissibility of infringement proceedings brought by the Commission pursuant to the second subparagraph of Article 228(2) EC. In its view, the Commission should have first made an application for interpretation of the judgment in Joined Cases C20/01 and C-28/01 in accordance with Article 102 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court. In addition, the fact that the action for the imposition of a periodic penalty payment was brought immediately without a prior application for interpretation offends against the principle of proportionality.

36. In my view, no legal basis for that view of the law can be found in the Treaties, nor is it compatible with Community procedural law. On the contrary, that view seems to be based on a false understanding of the nature of infringement proceedings under the second subparagraph of Article 228(2) EC, and it is consequently essential that the matter be clarified.

37. It must first be noted in this regard that the procedural law of the Community does not accord any precedence to the application for interpretation of a judgment over proceedings brought under the second subparagraph of Article 228(2) EC. By the same token, procedural law does not require the Commission to make such an application before it may bring an action. The separate procedures before the Court differ in their criteria and objectives; thus they must be regarded in principle as independent of one another and can take priority over other types of procedure only where regard is had to their specific purpose in a particular case.

38. In accordance with Article 102 of the Rules of Procedure, for an application for interpretation of a judgment to be admissible, it must concern the operative part of the judgment in question, and the essential grounds thereof, and seek to resolve an obscurity or ambiguity that may affect the meaning or scope of that judgment, in so far as that judgment was intended to resolve the particular case before the Court. According to the case-law of the Court, an application for interpretation of a judgment is therefore inadmissible where it relates to matters not decided upon by the judgment concerned or seeks to obtain from the Court in question an opinion on the application, implementation or consequences of its judgment. (6)

39. In these proceedings the Commission and the German Government are in dispute as to whether a legal obligation on the part of the Federal Republic of Germany to terminate the contracts for the provision of services can be inferred from the judgment of 10 April 2003. In such a case, the Commission's application can be construed only as a claim seeking a declaration from the Court, binding on both parties, regarding the application and implementation or, as the case may be, the consequences of the judgment delivered. The subject-matter of the proceedings is, after all, the practical implementation of a judicial decision by the Federal Republic of Germany and not, for instance, an obscurity or ambiguity involving that decision. On the basis of the criteria developed by the case-law, any application under Article 102 of the Rules of Procedure would therefore have to be regarded as inadmissible in the absence of any decision which might properly be the subject of interpretation.

40. I should like in addition to refer to Advocate General Geelhoed's remarks in Commission v France , that any obligation to comply with a ruling of the Court may involve questions as to the precise content of that ruling. Where necessary, they must be resolved by having recourse to the procedure laid down under Article 228 EC. (7) That comment by the Advocate General can be adopted without any difficulty in my view, especially as the infringement procedure is a procedure the exclusive aim of which, restricted by its declaratory nature, is to secure a declaration from the Court of a failure to fulfil obligations. (8)

41. Because the Court is restricted to declaring a failure to fulfil obligations, it can be difficult in some cases for the Member States concerned to determine which particular measures they must take in order to put an end to the infringement complained of. In such cases, the Court endeavours to lay down a framework in the grounds of the judgment within which the contested measure may continue to be regarded as consistent with the Treaty. (9) The Court can also provide assistance as to interpretation in the operative part of the judgment by defining the failure to fulfil obligations which has been established either broadly or narrowly. (10) Thus, while the powers of the Court in infringement proceedings are limited, that does not mean in any way is that it is prevented in general from referring in the judgment itself to the manner and extent of the possibilities available for rectifying the infringement in the circumstances of the case. The wording of Article 228 EC, which expressly refers to the Member State concerned being required to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment, confirms that of such a course of action is permissible. (11)

42. Accordingly, the scope of the obligation on the Member State concerned to take steps to apply the judgment can be determined by the parties to the proceedings in an individual case simply by interpreting the judgment establishing the failure to fulfil obligations, without there being any need for an application for interpretation pursuant to Article 102 of the Rules of Procedure.

43. It is apparent from all the foregoing that infringement proceedings under Article 228 EC are indeed the correct procedure for clarifying any issues concerning the obligation of a Member State to implement a judgment of the Court. (12) Their specific nature means that those proceedings override all other types of procedure, including applications for interpretation of a judgment, and consequently a discussion on the proportionality of such an action is superfluous.

2. The relationship of the proceedings under Article 228(2) EC to the correction procedure laid down under Article 3 of Directive 89/665

44. In so far as the German Government objects to the Commission taking action against the presumed continuation of an infringement of Community law in the form of an action under Article 228(2) EC, and relies on its national review measures and penalties and on the correction procedure available to the Commission under Article 3 of Directive 89/665/EEC, that submission is to be interpreted primarily as a plea of inadmissibility as regards the action.

45. The answer to that plea must be that measures taken by the Commission pursuant to Article 226 EC remain unaffected by the approximation of the respective laws of the Member States to the provisions of Directive 89/665. (13) Where it believes that a contracting authority has infringed Community law, the Commission may, of its own motion, bring infringement proceedings under Article 226 EC against the Member State concerned, irrespective of the national measures taken to transpose Directive 89/665. (14) Not only the precedence of primary law over the provisions of secondary legislation contained in Directive 89/665/EEC, but also the differing function of the review mechanisms laid down therein mean that infringement proceedings cannot be excluded as a relevant cause of action. (15)

46. It is true that Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665/EEC empowers the Member States to limit national legal protection, after the conclusion of a contract, to the awarding of damages to the persons harmed by such an infringement. However, that does not mean that the conduct of a contracting authority is to be regarded in every case as being in compliance with Community law. (16) On the contrary, it is for the Court alone to establish in infringement proceedings whether the alleged infringement has arisen. (17)

47. In addition, the Court held in its judgment in Commission v Ireland that the procedure set out in Article 3 of Directive 89/665/EEC, under which the Commission can take action against a Member State if it considers that a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions on the award of public contracts has been committed, is a preventive measure, which can neither derogate from nor replace the powers of the Commission under Article 226 EC. (18)

48. The correction procedure under Article 3 of Directive 89/665/EEC serves to afford the Member States an opportunity to prevent foreseeable infringements of public procurement law and in so doing to clarify in advance situations that are straightforward from a legal viewpoint, also saving the Commission work. As a result, lengthy and burdensome infringement proceedings are avoided in unambiguous cases. (19)

49. In view of the special function they have in the system for reviewing the legality of procurement procedures, the two sets of proceedings again differ in the criteria essential for their institution: unlike the correction procedure, infringement proceedings do not presuppose the existence of a clear and manifest infringement; (20) they merely require that there be a failure to fulfil an obligation under Community law. (21) For that reason, the individual stages of the procedures are also not interchangeable, although they have a parallel structure: the reasoned opinion under Article 226 EC and the Member State's observations on it cannot be replaced by measures under Article 3 of Directive 89/665; instead they must be effected separately as a preliminary stage to bringing proceedings before the Court of Justice. Conversely, a correction procedure under Article 3 of the directive does not detract from the Commission's powers under Article 226. (22)

50. It should also be borne in mind that the correction procedure is not an instrument which enables proceedings to be brought before the Court of Justice. Since, however, the safeguarding of Community law requires in every case that review procedures before the Court of Justice be available, it cannot have been the aim of the Community legislature to exclude such review by eliminating recourse to infringement proceedings.

51. As regards the powers of the Commission, it should be recalled that, by virtue of its role as guardian of the Treaty, the Commission is not obliged to have recourse primarily to the correction procedure. On the contrary, it is free to bring proceedings before the Court if it considers that a Member State has failed to fulfil an obligation under the Treaty and has not complied with its reasoned opinion. (23)

52. The same conclusions can be drawn, in my view, in relation to the procedure under Article 228(2) EC. That procedure, absorbed into the primary law of the Community by virtue of the Maastricht Treaty, is, from a procedural viewpoint, modelled on the procedure under Article 226 EC. It now affords the Court the option of no longer only making a finding of failure to comply with the first judgment, but also of imposing on the Member State concerned payment of a lump sum or periodic penalty payment. The procedure under Article 228(2) EC is therefore a procedure the purpose of which is to encourage the recalcitrant Member State, by means of financial penalties, to comply with a judgment establishing a breach of obligations. (24) By contrast, the review measures which the Commission may take pursuant to Directive 89/665 have the function of preventing infringements of Community law at the earliest possible stage. The mechanisms of primary and secondary law therefore are not mutually exclusive; instead they complement each other with a view to everything that the Member States conduct themselves in a manner which is lawful. (25)

53. Thus, the German Government cannot raise a plea of inadmissibility on the basis of the review and penalty mechanisms set out in Directive 89/665.

3. Absence of an interest in bringing proceedings and disappearance of the subject-matter of the proceedings

54. In its rejoinder the German Government claims that, there is no longer an interest in bringing proceedings as regards the part of the subject-matter of the dispute that is left outstanding by the Commission's reply of 26 April 2005, because the Federal Republic of Germany, as the Member State concerned, no longer needs to be prompted through the imposition of a periodic penalty payment or a lump sum to alter its conduct, since the waste disposal contract between the City of Brunswick and the Braunschweigische Kohlebergwerke (BKB') has in the meantime been rescinded. It contends that the proceedings should be discontinued, or, in the alternative, the action dismissed as inadmissible, since now that the contracts at issue have been rescinded, no further encouragement to enforce the Court's ruling in Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 is necessary. In support of the form of order sought, it maintains that, in assessing whether there is still an interest in bringing proceedings, the crucial factor in an action under Article 228(2) EC is the date of the last hearing.

55. Those arguments cannot be accepted. It is settled case-law that, when exercising its powers under Article 226 EC, the Commission does not have to show that there is a specific interest in bringing an action. The Commission's function is to ensure, of its own motion and in the general interest, that the Member States give effect to Community law and to obtain a declaration as regards any failure to fulfil the obligations deriving therefrom with a view to bringing it to an end. (26)

56. Furthermore, it is for the Commission to determine whether it is expedient to take action against a Member State, what provisions the Member State has infringed, and to choose the time at which it will bring an infringement proceedings; the considerations which determine that choice cannot affect the admissibility of the action. (27)

57. Lastly, while the bringing and continuation of infringement proceedings is a matter for the Commission in its entire discretion, it is for the Court to consider whether there has been a failure to fulfil obligations as alleged, without its being part of its role to take a view on the Commission's exercise of its discretion. (28)

58. In the light of all the foregoing, the plea of inadmissibility based on the Commission's lack of interest in bringing proceedings must be dismissed.

59. Under Article 92(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the Court may of its own motion declare that the substance of the action has become devoid of purpose if it comes to the conclusion that there is no longer any need to adjudicate on the action. It may also be invited to do so by the parties. (29) However, an invitation of that kind is not essential: the Court may bring an end to the proceedings even without an application to that effect, by way of a judgment discontinuing the action. I shall consider below whether an event justifying a decision not to give a ruling has occurred.

60. First, it should be noted that, inasmuch as the contract between the City of Brunswick and the BKB rescinding the previous contract was concluded on 7 July 2005, the Federal Republic of Germany has met the requirement to withdraw the contract for services complained of, as originally imposed by the Commission in its reasoned opinion of 30 March 2004. (30) The infringement complained of was therefore corrected after the twomonth period prescribed in the reasoned opinion had expired, but at a time at which the written procedure before the Court was not yet completed.

61. Seen from a procedural point of view, the fact that, under the settled case-law of the Court, the question whether a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations must be determined by reference to the situation prevailing in the Member State at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion means that it cannot be held that there is no need to adjudicate. Consequently, the Court will not take account of any subsequent correction of the infringement and such a correction has no impact on the question whether the action is admissible. (31)

62. This is apparent not only indirectly from the wording of Article 226 EC but also from the purpose of that stage in the pre-litigation procedure, which is to afford the infringing Member State a final opportunity to rectify the infringement before any action is brought. However, it is uncertain whether those principles also apply to the procedure under Article 228(2) EC. The German Government's position that the date of the last hearing should be the basis for assessing whether or not there is a need to adjudicate on the action seems in essence to correspond with the view adopted by Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer in Commission v Greece. In his Opinion, the Advocate General stated that the purpose of the procedure under Article 228(2) EC was not to obtain a further declaration of failure to fulfil obligations but to encourage the recalcitrant Member State to comply with a judgment establishing a breach of obligations. Since the hearing or, failing that, the end of the written procedure is the last opportunity for the defendant State to submit observations as to the level of compliance it has achieved, and for the Commission to make submissions regarding the amount and form of the financial penalty which it is appropriate to impose, it is that date which should to be taken as the basis for assessment. (32)

63. I concur with that view of the law, but only inasmuch as it concerns the assessment of the need to impose a penalty payment on an infringing Member State in the case in point. However, as regards the application for a declaration of non-compliance with a judgment establishing an infringement, the essential reference point should still be the date of expiry of the period prescribed in the reasoned opinion. It is clear that the Court proceeded on the same assumption in its recent judgment in Case C-119/04 Commission v Italy , when it assessed the two claims independently of one another and in so doing took as the basis of assessment the date relevant in each separate case. (33)

64. Accordingly, the rescission of the waste disposal contract at issue subsequent to its conclusion cannot be regarded as an event rendering the action devoid of purpose for the purposes of Article 92(2) of the Rules of Procedure. On that basis, this plea of inadmissibility must also be dismissed.

B - The merits of the action

1. The continuing effects of the infringement of public procurement law

65. An action under Article 228(2) EC is well founded if the Member State found by a judgment of the Court to be in breach of an obligation under the Treaty has failed to take the necessary measures to comply with that judgment. Under Article 228(1) EC, it is required to bring the infringement of Community law to an end. That obligation to act also applies to the organs of all local and regional authorities of the State against which the judgment was given. (34)

66. As regards the procedural allocation of the duty to adduce evidence and the burden of proof, it must first be pointed out that, according to settled case-law, it is for the Commission to provide the Court, in the course of the proceedings, with the information necessary to determine the extent to which a Member State has complied with a judgment declaring it to be in breach of its obligations. (35) Moreover, where the Commission has adduced sufficient evidence to show that the breach of obligations has persisted, it is for the Member State concerned to challenge in substance and in detail the information produced and its consequences. (36)

67. The Commission takes the view that the Federal Republic of Germany has not complied with its obligation to end the Treaty infringements established in the judgment of 10 April 2003. It considers the express instructions of the German Government, at federal and Land level alike, that public procurement law should be strictly complied with to be insufficient. It adopts the position that the breach of obligations has persisted by means of the continued existence of the waste disposal contract between the City of Brunswick and the BKB. It bases its reasoning essentially on the Court's observations at paragraphs 36 and 37 of its judgment. It therefore considers the rescission of that contract to be the only measure capable of eliminating the consequences of the infringement of public procurement law.

68. As far as the interpretation of those two paragraphs of that judgment is concerned, I must concur with the Commission. In its observations the Court, in my view, admits of no doubt that the effects of an infringement of Community law persist as long as a contract concluded in breach of public procurement law is being performed. (37)

69. That interpretation is also consistent with the prevailing case-law of the Court according to which, in the award of public contracts, the infringement of a directive ceases to exist only if, on the date of expiry of the period laid down by the Commission in its reasoned opinion, all effects of the contract notice at issue are exhausted. (38) Those effects cannot be considered to be exhausted while the contracts concluded in breach of Community law continue to produce effects, in other words, while those contracts continue to be performed. (39)

70. Since the waste disposal contract concluded for a term of 30 years was still valid until the date relevant for legal assessment in these proceedings, it can be concluded that the infringements held to exist in the original judgment continued to produce effects. (40) The German Government does not, in the final analysis, actually dispute that the privatelaw contract at issue has continued to produce legal effects after the judgment given on 10 April 2003. However, it rejects any obligation to rescind the contract, referring to the authority provided for in Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 to limit the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures, once a contract has been concluded, to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement. (41)

2. The maintenance of rights acquired under the contract in breach of public procurement law

71. It is necessary to examine below whether the Federal Republic of Germany was obliged by law to terminate the contract concerned or whether it should instead have resorted to other measures in order to fulfil its obligations under Article 228(1) EC.

72. It should be made clear first of all that the measures cited by the German Government, namely the express instructions, at federal and Land level alike, that the provisions of public procurement law should be strictly complied with and the request to notify the measures introduced and implemented by its authorities, have the sole aim of preventing future infringements and are therefore incapable of putting an end to a continuing infringement of Community law that has already begun and continues, as in this case. Since the German Government has not informed the Court of any further measures, it now remains only to determine whether an obligation to terminate exists.

73. In my view, it is necessary to note at the outset that a Member State is required to take all necessary measures to remedy its default and may not impose any obstacle of any kind this being achieved. According to the well-established case-law of the Court, a Member State may not, in particular, plead national problems in the exercise or transposition of a Community rule. Nor may it do so in respect of any provisions, practices or circumstances existing in its legal system. (42) The Federal Republic of Germany may not therefore plead that public procurement in its legal system, unlike in other Member States, has civil-law features and, therefore, that the contracting authority is bound, as a party having a status equivalent to that of the contractor, by a contract under private law. (43) Recognising certain Member States' special status on account of special features of national law would be contrary to the need for a uniform application of Community law across the Member States of the European Union.

74. Inasmuch as the German Government argues that terminating the contract would be unreasonable because of the legitimate expectations of the parties to the contract, it must be countered that it relies on legal rights of third parties which were created unlawfully by the contracting authority. As explained by Advocate General Alber in his Opinion in Case C-328/96 Commission v Austria , as far as a Member State's fundamental obligations towards the Community are concerned, that State may not successfully rely on the consequences of its illegal conduct in order to call into question the legal obligation as such. (44) The pacta sunt servanda principle can therefore be replied on only if Community law expressly accepts that rights acquired under contracts concluded in breach of public procurement law are to be protected.

75. Thus far the Court has not expressly addressed the question whether there is an obligation to bring such contracts to an end. However, if the judgment of 10 April 2003 is considered in the light of the Court's case-law mentioned above, under which all effects of contract awards contrary to Community law must be exhausted, everything suggests that the Court would uphold the principle of the existence of an obligation to bring the contract to an end. (45)

76. No other conclusion can be drawn from the notion of effet utile in the sense of the broadest possible effectiveness of the procurement directives. Effectiveness is a central principle of Community law, the special relevance of which in public procurement law becomes clear only on closer consideration of the legislative purpose of the procurement directives. (46) The Court of Justice does not merely recognise in the procurement directives formal arrangements laying down the basis on which contracts are to be awarded; it also highlights their purpose of putting into effect the free movement of services and goods. (47) Therefore, an infringement of the directives is not exhausted upon conclusion of the contract; on the contrary, it persists until the contract has been performed completely or ends in some other way. If this case-law is not to deprived of all practical effect, an infringement established in an action for failure to fulfil obligations must consequently be corrected by bringing the contract to an end. (48)

77. An obligation to bring to an end contracts that are contrary to public procurement law is also necessary from the point of view of deterrence, in order to guarantee careful compliance with the procurement directives with a view to ensuring the effective implementation of Community law. Member States which circumvent the provisions of public procurement law might be inclined in certain circumstances, in the absence of an appropriate penalty, to adopt a policy of fait accompli. (49) That would, as a result, perpetuate the infringement of Community law.

78. That measure is also proportionate in the case in point if account is taken of the 30-year term originally envisaged for the waste disposal contract. Because of the length of that period, such a contractual relationship was capable of creating a fait accompli. Thus, only by rescinding the contract was it possible to counter a situation where the breach of Community law would be perpetuated.

79. Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665/EEC does not preclude such an obligation to bring the contract to an end. First, as an item of secondary legislation, that directive cannot restrict the fundamental freedoms. Secondly, on no account can it be inferred from the protection of other tenderers afforded by Article 2(6) of the directive to contracts which infringe Community law that Community law does not in general exclude any obligation to put an end to contracts that are contrary to public procurement law. Rather, that provision means that a tenderer who brings proceedings before the review body cannot rely on Article 228(1) EC to support a claim that the tenderer a Member State is under an obligation to bring to an end contracts in breach of public procurement law. (50) Thus, that provision is only relevant as regards the arrangements for individual legal protection against unlawful procurement decisions in the Member States. (51) It makes no reference to protection of the Community interest, which must be clearly distinguished from the individual interest of unsuccessful tenderers. (52) The position could not be otherwise, as primary law, which ranks ahead of it, already lays down exhaustive rules in that regard. That Community system of legal protection against unlawful procurement decisions by national authorities has been carefully thought through and differentiated in order to take account of the various interests involved. On the one side, there is the review procedure, which seeks to protect individual interests, and on the other, the procedure, for failure to fulfil obligations and the objection procedure, which are designed to serve the Community interest in creating or restoring a lawful situation. As already stated at the outset, because of their specific purpose, infringement proceedings override the correction procedure. Since, by bringing an action under Article 226 EC, the Commission is defending the public interest exclusively, the provisions on the review procedure, including Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665, must be regarded as irrelevant to this case.

80. Irrespective of that point, rescinding a contract and subsequently launching a new invitation to tender with a view to implementing procurement law as effectively as possible should generally prove to be the best solution for taking account of the individual interests of unsuccessful tenderers. First, it is often more advantageous for a tenderer to have a contract concluded and the primary claim under civil law satisfied than to file a claim for damages against the contracting authority. (53) Secondly, in bringing an action before the national courts for enforcement of a claim for damages a tenderer will find itself facing difficulties, because it will have to prove not only that it has suffered harm but also that it had submitted the best tender. To that falls to be added the fact that it is frequently difficult to assess the damage caused. (54)

81. Furthermore, it is not apparent why a contract concluded in breach of public procurement law, which of its nature will give rise to a continuing infringement of the fundamental freedoms, should be exempted a priori from the measures necessary to comply with a judgment establishing a failure to fulfil obligations. (55)

82. Consequently, that submission by the German Government must also be rejected. It must therefore be concluded that the possibilities available under national law for ending the contract must be utilised and exhausted in compliance with the principle of the effectiveness and equivalence of the remedies available to enforce Community law. (56) The fact that both the City of Brunswick and the municipality of Bockhorn managed during the proceedings before the Court of Justice to free themselves from their contractual obligations belies, moreover, the view adopted by the German Government that the contractual obligations cannot be terminated, or can be terminated but only at the risk of incurring a disproportionately high exposure to damages.

83. Since the Federal Republic of Germany did not terminate the criticised contract by the relevant date, it has not taken the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of the Court of Justice of 10 April 2003 in Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 Commission v Germany concerning the award of a contract for waste disposal by the City of Brunswick.

C - The lack of any need for penalties

84. Following the view of the law expressed here, it must be assumed that the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228(1) EC, thus affording the Court of Justice the possibility of imposing coercive measures.

85. Even though the Commission withdrew in its entirety its original claim for a periodic penalty payment to be imposed and made no claim for the imposition of a lump sum, the Court still retains the right to adopt a final decision in that regard, since it is not bound by the Commission's proposals as regards the financial consequences of the finding that a Member State has failed to comply with an earlier judgment of the Court. Those proposals merely constitute a useful point of reference for the Court in exercising its discretion under Article 228(2) EC. (57) In other words, the application of that provision falls within the full jurisdiction of the Court. (58)

86. The procedure under Article 228(2) EC is intended to induce a defaulting Member State to comply with a judgment establishing an infringement and thus to ensure that Community law is applied effectively. The measures provided for by that provision, namely the periodic penalty payment and the lump sum, both serve that purpose.

87. As the Court made clear in Case C-304/02 Commission v France , whether one or the other of those two measures should be applied depends on whether it is capable of meeting the objective pursued according to the circumstances of the specific case. Whilst the imposition of a periodic penalty payment seems particularly suited to inducing a Member State to put an end as soon as possible to a breach of obligations that, in the absence of such a measure, would otherwise tend to persist, the imposition of a lump sum is based more on assessment of the effects on private and public interests of the relevant Member State's failure to comply with its obligations, in particular where the breach has persisted for a long period since the judgment which initially established it. (59)

88. In view of the persuasive function, described above, of the periodic penalty payment, it is appropriate, in assessing whether the Member State against which the judgment has been given still has not complied with its obligations and whether, therefore, the criteria for imposing such a penalty continue to be met, to take the date of the hearing, as discussed earlier, as the relevant point of reference. In this case those criteria ceased to apply upon cancellation of the waste disposal contract while the written procedure was still ongoing, and thus the imposition of a periodic penalty payment no longer appears to be appropriate.

89. By contrast, as a one-off financial penalty of a punitive nature, the lump sum is suited to penalising unlawful conduct which, although belonging to the past, meaning that elimination of the established infringement retains only minor interest for the Community, none the less makes the imposition of a penalty imperative as a deterrent. (60) Recourse should be had to the threat of a lump sum in particular if the Member State concerned has complied with the judgment only because it fears that a second set of proceedings may be brought against it (61) the breach is particularly serious (62) or there is a tangible risk of its reoccurrence. (63)

90. In the present case, there are no indications to suggest a risk of reoccurrence, nor can the breach be defined as particularly serious. In view of the purely local relevance of the waste disposal contract concluded by the City of Brunswick in breach of public procurement law, the resulting damage to the efficient operation of the internal market can still be regarded as minor.

91. It is true that, any disregard of a judgment of the Court of Justice must be regarded as serious, and thus the infringement at issue could be penalised in principle by way of a lump sum as a symbolic penalty (64) in respect of the period from the date of the judgment, that is to say, 10 April 2003, in Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 Commission v Germany until the conclusion of the contract cancelling the previous contract; however, it should be borne in mind, allowing for extenuating circumstances, that the Federal Republic of Germany fulfilled its obligation under that first judgment while the written procedure was still ongoing.

92. In the circumstances of the present case, I consider it appropriate to refrain from imposing a financial penalty.

VII - Costs

93. Pursuant to Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission made an application to that effect and the Federal Republic of Germany has been unsuccessful in its submissions, it should be ordered to pay the costs.

94. Under Article 69(4) of the Rules of Procedure, Member States which intervene in the proceedings are to bear their own costs. Accordingly, the French Republic, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Finland must bear their own costs.

VIII - Conclusion

95. In the light of the foregoing considerations and the fact that the Commission has not maintained the action in respect of the municipality of Bockhorn, I suggest that the Court should

- declare that, by failing to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of 10 April 2003 in Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 Commission v Germany regarding the award of a contract for waste disposal by the City of Brunswick the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to comply with the obligations under Article 228(1)EC;

- order the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs;

- declare that the French Republic, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Finland must bear their own costs.

As a result of the finding that a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations, that State is obliged under Article 228(1) EC to bring an end to that infringement. However, the Court may not itself set aside the measure which gave rise to the infringement or order the defaulting Member State to correct the infringement.

That is apparent from the eighth recital in the preamble to Directive 89/665, according to which the Commission, when it considers that a clear and manifest infringement has been committed during a contract award procedure, should be able to bring it to the attention of the competent authorities of the Member State and of the contracting authority concerned so that appropriate steps are taken for the rapid correction of any alleged infringement.

(41) - The Federal Republic of Germany availed itself of that authority by adopting the first sentence of Paragraph 114(2) of the Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen (Law against restrictions on competition), in the version published on 15 July 2005 (BGBl. I, p. 2114), as most recently amended by Paragraph 132 of the Regulation of 31 October 2006 (BGBl. I p. 2407). Under that provision, a contract which has already been awarded may not be cancelled. An undertaking harmed by an infringement of a provision of public procurement law that affords protection is entitled under Paragraph 126 of that Law to compensation for the damage caused by the infringement of the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations.

(43) - In Member States with a Romanlaw tradition, procurement in its entirety is subject to public law. Thus, in France, Spain and Portugal award procedures and contracts between contracting authorities and contractors are subject to public law. Only the administrative courts or the Council of State of the relevant country can, on that basis, settle disputes arising out of award procedures and contracts. The award is therefore an administrative act. Conversely, the award under German procurement law is the civil-law acceptance of an offer. The award is made mostly in the form of a notice of award or confirmation letter (Seidel, I., in, Dauses (Ed.), Handbuch des EUWirtschaftsrechts , Book IV, paragraphs 8 and 9).

(45) - In his comments on the judgment of the Court of 10 April 2003 in Joined Cases C20/01 and C28/01 Kalbe, P., Kommentar zum Urteil des Gerichtshofs vom 10. April 2003 in den verbundenen Rechtssachen C20/01 und C28/01', Europäisches Wirtschafts- und Steuerrecht , 2003, p. 567, takes the view that, in the infringement proceedings under Article 226 EC, the fate of the contested contracts was not the decisive factor in declaring and describing the Treaty infringement. Accordingly, no express position was adopted in the judgment as regards the fate of the contracts. The judgment nevertheless clearly explains that the infringement at issue can be rectified only by rescinding the contracts and issuing a new invitation to tender; see also Gjørtler, P., Varemærker og udbud', Lov & ret , June 2003, p. 33, which infers a corresponding obligation to terminate from the principle of Community loyalty laid down in Article 10 EC.

(47) - According to the second recital in the preamble to Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), the aim of the secondary legislation on public procurement is to ensure effective implementation of the fundamental freedoms of undertakings. The same can be inferred from the recitals in the preamble to Directives 92/50 and 89/665 applicable in this case. The procurement directives are therefore to be construed as giving expression to the fundamental freedoms. They were adopted to guarantee the effectiveness of the fundamental freedoms and the opening-up of public procurement to competition across the Community. The Court of Justice also made it clear at an early stage that the aim of the procurement directives - and therefore of procurement law per se - is to ensure actual implementation of the fundamental freedoms. See Case 199/85 Commission v Italy , cited in footnote 34, at paragraph 12; Case 76/81 Commission v Luxembourg [1982] ECR 417, paragraph 7; Case C-380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I-8035, paragraph 16; and Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 32.

Griller, S., Qualifizierte Verstöße gegen das Vergaberecht - Der Fall St. Pölten', ecolex , 2000, p. 8, takes the view that a corresponding obligation to rescind contracts that are contrary to public procurement law can arise in certain circumstances, but only where the contractual relations with the successful tenderer allow such termination in that way.

of the obligation to notify, in order to discourage tenderers and to restrict their legal remedies.

That provision must therefore be regarded as an exception. Moreover, as a mere instrument of secondary legislation, the directive is not capable of restricting the fundamental obligation of Member States to create a situation which complies with Community law.

In their view, the principle whereby restitutio in integrum takes precedence over the award of pecuniary damages can be applied as a general principle of law.

(54) - Leffler, H., Damages liability for breach of EC procurement law: governing principles and practical solutions', Public Procurement Law Review , No 4, 2003, p. 160, refers to the slim chance a tenderer has of winning in an action for damages for the loss of a public contract; Fernandez Martín, J. M., The EC Public Procurement Rules: A Critical Analysis , Clarendon Press, Oxford, 1996, p. 214, refers to the fact that in most Member States evidence must be adduced to show that the applicant would have been awarded the contract or that it at least had a serious chance of being awarded it. Where that evidence is not furnished, the courts refuse to award damages. In the author's view, it is unlikely that an applicant will be able to overcome that obstacle.

(55) - Arrowsmith, S., Enforcing the Public Procurement Rules: Legal Remedies in the Court of Justice and the National Courts', Remedies for enforcing the public procurement rules , 1993, p. 8, considers it possible for a Member State to be required by the Court in infringement proceedings to rescind a contract that is contrary to public procurement law.

(56) - In its judgment of 20 December 2005 (Ref. 33 O 16465/05) the Landgericht München I (Regional Court Munich I) regarded as permissible the extraordinary termination by the City of Munich of a transport contract not put out to tender, citing Paragraph 313(3) of the Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch (German Civil Code, hereinafter:BGB') and a contractual loyalty clause', since under a previous judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Com munities in the infringement proceedings relating to that case (judgment in Case C126/03 Commission v Germany , cited in footnote 8), the City could no longer reasonably be expected to maintain the contract. Prieß, G. concurred in Beendigung des Dogmas durch Kündigung: Keine Bestandsgarantie für vergaberechtswidrige Verträge', Neue Zeitschrift für Baurecht und Vergaberecht , 2006, Book 4, p. 221. For continuous contractual obligations, termination on just and proper grounds is possible under Paragraph 314 of the BGB.

- the Commission of the European Communities, by X. Lewis and D. Recchia, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 12 January 2006,

gives the following

1. This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC.

2. The request was made in the course of proceedings between, on the one hand, the Associazione Nazionale Autotrasporto Viaggiatori (ANAV') and, on the other hand, the Comune di Bari (Municipality of Bari) and AMTAB Servizio SpA (AMTAB Servizio') concerning the award to that latter company of the public transport service within the municipality in question.

Legal context

Community legislation

3. Article 43 EC provides:

Within the framework of the provisions set out below, restrictions on the freedom of establishment of nationals of a Member State in the territory of another Member State shall be prohibited....

Freedom of establishment shall include the right to take up and pursue activities as self-employed persons and to set up and manage undertakings, in particular companies or firms within the meaning of the second paragraph of Article 48, under the conditions laid down for its own nationals by the law of the country where such establishment is effected, subject to the provisions of the Chapter relating to capital.'

4. Article 46 EC specifies:

1. The provisions of this Chapter and measures taken in pursuance thereof shall not prejudice the applicability of provisions laid down by law, regulation or administrative action providing for special treatment for foreign nationals on grounds of public policy, public security or public health.

2. The Council shall, acting in accordance with the procedure referred to in Article 251, issue directives for the coordination of the abovementioned provisions.'

5. The first paragraph of Article 49 EC provides:

Within the framework of the provisions set out below, restrictions on freedom to provide services within the Community shall be prohibited in respect of nationals of Member States who are established in a State of the Community other than that of the person for whom the services are intended.'

6. Article 86(1) EC is worded as follows:

In the case of public undertakings and undertakings to which Member States grant special or exclusive rights, Member States shall neither enact nor maintain in force any measure contrary to the rules contained in this Treaty, in particular to those rules provided for in Article 12 and Articles 81 to 89.'

National legislation

7. As regards the Italian legislation, Article 14 of Decree Law No 269 laying down urgent measures to promote development and correct the operation of public finances of 30 September 2003 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 229 of 2 October 2003; Decree Law No 269/2003') amended Article 113 of Legislative Decree No 267 laying down the consolidated text of the laws on the organisation of local bodies of 18 August 2000 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 227 of 28 September 2000; Legislative Decree No 267/2000'). The new version of paragraph 5 of Article 113 of the latter decree provides:

The service contract is awarded in accordance with the rules of the sector and the legislation of the European Union, with entitlement to provide the service being granted to:

(a) joint stock companies selected by means of public and open tendering procedures;

(b) companies with mixed public and private ownership in which the private partner is selected by means of public and open tendering procedures that have ensured compliance with domestic and Community legislation on competition in accordance with guidelines issued by the competent authorities in specific regulations or circulars;

(c) companies belonging entirely to the public sector on condition that the public authority or authorities holding the share capital exercise over the company control comparable to that exercised over their own departments and that the company carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority or authorities'.

The main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

8. According to the order for reference, AMTAB Servizio is a joint stock company, the share capital of which is wholly owned by the Municipality of Bari and the sole activity of which is the provision of public transport services in that municipality. That company is wholly controlled by the Municipality of Bari.

9. The same decision shows that, under its statutes, ANAV represents undertakings providing national and international passenger transport services and services associated with transport activities and in that capacity safeguards, inter alia, the efficient running of the urban and out-of-town public transport service in the interest of the companies entrusted with operating such a service.

10. By decision of 17 July 2003, the Municipality of Bari initiated a public call for tenders for the award of the service contract for public transport in that municipality.

11. Following the amendment of paragraph 5 of Article 113 of Legislative Decree No 267/2000 by Article 14 of Decree Law No 269/2003, the Municipality of Bari abandoned that tendering procedure by decision of 9 October 2003.

12. By decision of 18 December 2003, that municipality awarded the service contract in question directly to AMTAB Servizio for the period from 1 January 2004 to 31 December 2012.

13. By application notified on 1 March 2004 and lodged on 9 March 2004 before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Puglia (Regional Administrative Court for Apulia), ANAV applied to that court for annulment of that decision and any connected or consequential acts on the ground that they constituted an infringement of Community law and, in particular, of Articles 3 EC, 16 EC, 43 EC, 49 EC, 50 EC, 51 EC, 70 EC to 72 EC, 81 EC, 82 EC, 86 EC and 87 EC.

14. In the light of those arguments, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Puglia decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

Is the part of paragraph 5 of Article 113 of Legislative Decree No 267/2000, as amended by Article 14 of Decree Law No 269/2003, that sets no limit on the freedom of a public authority to choose between the different methods of awarding a contract for the provision of a public service and, in particular, between an award as a result of a public and open tendering procedure and direct award to a company wholly controlled by the authority, compatible with Community law and, in particular, with the obligations to ensure transparency and freedom of competition pursuant to Articles [43 EC], 49 EC and 86 EC?'

On the question referred for a preliminary ruling

15. By its question, the national court is essentially asking whether Community law, in particular the obligations to ensure transparency and freedom of competition referred to in Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC, precludes national legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings which sets no limit on the freedom of a public authority to choose between the various methods of awarding a contract for the provision of a public service, in particular between an award as a result of a public tendering procedure and direct award to a company of which that authority wholly owns the share capital.

16. It is apparent from the documents relating to the case in the main proceedings that the public transport service in the Municipality of Bari is remunerated, at least in part, through the purchase of tickets by those using it. That method of remuneration characterises a public service concession (Case C458/03 Parking Brixen [2005] ECR I-0000, paragraph 40).

17. It is common ground that public service concessions are excluded from the scope of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) (Parking Brixen , paragraph 42). That directive was replaced by Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), Article 17 of which expressly provides that it is inapplicable to service concessions.

18. Notwithstanding the fact that public service concession contracts are excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50, replaced by Directive 2004/18, the public authorities concluding them are, none the less, bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the EC Treaty, in general, and the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality, in particular (see, to that effect, Case C324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I-10745, paragraph 60; Case C231/03 Coname [2005] ECR I-0000, paragraph 16, and Parking Brixen , paragraph 46).

19. The provisions of the Treaty which are specifically applicable to public service concessions include, in particular, Article 43 EC and Article 49 EC (Parking Brixen , paragraph 47).

20. Besides the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality, the principle of equal treatment of tenderers is also to be applied to public service concessions even in the absence of discrimination on grounds of nationality (Parking Brixen , paragraph 48).

21. The principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality imply, in particular, a duty of transparency which enables the concession-granting public authority to ensure that those principles are complied with. That obligation of transparency which is imposed on the public authority consists in ensuring, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the service concession to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed (see, to that effect, Telaustria and Telefonadress , paragraphs 61 and 62, and Parking Brixen , paragraph 49).

22. Theoretically, a complete lack of any call for competition in the case of the award of a public service concession such as that at issue in the main proceedings does not comply with the requirements of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC any more than with the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency (Parking Brixen , paragraph 50).

23. Furthermore, it follows from Article 86(1) EC that the Member States must not maintain in force national legislation which permits the award of public service concessions without their being put out to competition since such an award infringes Article 43 EC or 49 EC or the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency (Parking Brixen , paragraph 52).

24. However, in the field of public service concessions, the application of the rules set out in Articles 12 EC, 43 EC and 49 EC, as well as the general principles of which they are the specific expression, is precluded if the control exercised over the concessionaire by the concession-granting public authority is similar to that which the authority exercises over its own departments and if, at the same time, that entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority (Parking Brixen , paragraph 62).

25. National legislation which reproduces literally the wording of the conditions specified in the preceding paragraph, as does Article 113(5) of Legislative Decree No 267/2000 as amended by Article 14 of Decree Law No 269/2003, theoretically complies with Community law, with the proviso that the interpretation of that legislation must also comply with the requirements of Community

26. It should be made clear that, since it is a matter of a derogation from the general rules of Community law, the two conditions stated in paragraph 24 of this judgment must be interpreted strictly and the burden of proving the existence of exceptional circumstances justifying the derogation to those rules lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances (see Case C-26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I-1, paragraph 46, and Parking Brixen , paragraph 63).

27. According to the written observations submitted to the Court by AMTAB Servizio, the Municipality of Bari decided, on 27 December 2002, to transfer 80% of the shares it owned in the capital of that company and, on 21 May 2004, it decided to initiate for that purpose the call for tenders in order to select the majority private partner. That information was confirmed by ANAV at the hearing before the Court.

28. However, at the same hearing, the Municipality of Bari stated that it had altered its intention to transfer part of its shareholding in the capital of AMTAB Servizio. On 13 January 2005, it decided not to act on its previous decision and not to privatise that company. That decision was not put in evidence in the file before the national court since it was taken after the decision to refer.

29. It is a matter for that court, and not for the Court of Justice, to determine whether the Municipality of Bari intends to open the capital of AMTAB Servizio to private shareholders. However, in order to provide that court with the guidance it needs for the purpose of ruling on the proceedings before it, it is useful to provide the following clarification.

30. If, for the duration of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, the capital of AMTAB Servizio is open to private shareholders, the effect of such a situation would be the award of a public services concession to a semi-public company without any call for competition, which would interfere with the objectives pursued by Community law (see, to that effect, Case C29/04 Commission v Austria [2005] ECR I-0000, paragraph 48).

31. In fact, the participation, even as a minority, of a private undertaking in the capital of a company in which the concession-granting public authority is also a participant excludes in any event the possibility of that public authority exercising over such a company a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments (see, to that effect, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau , paragraph 49).

32. Therefore, in so far as the concessionaire is a company which is open, even in part, to private capital, that fact precludes it from being regarded as a structure for the in-house' management of a public service on behalf of the controlling local authority (see, to that effect, Coname , paragraph 26).

33. In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred must be that Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC, and the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and transparency do not preclude national legislation which allows a public authority to award a contract for the provision of a public service directly to a company of which it wholly owns the share capital, provided that the public authority exercises over that company control comparable to that exercised over its own departments and that that company carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority.

Costs

34. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby rules:

Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC, and the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and transparency do not preclude national legislation which allows a public authority to award a contract for the provision of a public service directly to a company of which it wholly owns the share capital, provided that the public authority exercises over that company control comparable to that exercised over its own departments and that that company carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Geelhoed delivered on 12 January 2006. Associazione Nazionale Autotrasporto Viaggiatori (ANAV) v Comune di Bari and AMTAB Servizio SpA. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Puglia - Italy. Freedom to provide services - Local public transport service - Award with no call for tenders - Award by a public authority to an undertaking of which it owns the share capital. Case C-410/04.

I - Introduction

1. In this reference for a preliminary ruling, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Puglia (Regional Administrative Court for Apulia) (Italy) seeks a ruling from the Court on whether national legislation permitting a contract for the provision of a local public transport service to be awarded directly to an undertaking owned and controlled by the public award body is compatible with Community law. This is another case in which the Court is requested to clarify the scope of its judgment in Teckal. (2)

2. The Court held, at paragraph 49 of that judgment, that the existence of a public supply contract within the meaning of Council Directive 93/36/EEC (3) requires inter alia an agreement between two distinct persons.

3. In this connection, the Court noted in paragraph 50 of the judgment that:

... it is, in principle, sufficient if the contract was concluded between, on the one hand, a local authority and, on the other, a person legally distinct from that local authority. The position can be otherwise only in the case where the local authority exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling local authority or authorities.'

II - Law

4. In Italian law, Article 113 of Legislative Decree No 267/00 was amended by Article 14 of Decree Law No 269/03. The resulting new version of paragraph V of Article 113 provides:

The service contract is awarded in accordance with the rules of the sector and the legislation of the European Union, with entitlement to provide the service being granted to:

a) joint stock companies selected by means of public and open tendering procedures;

b) companies with mixed public and private ownership in which the private partner is selected by means of public and open tendering procedures that have ensured compliance with domestic and Community legislation on competition in accordance with guidelines issued by the competent authorities in specific regulations or circulars;

c) companies belonging entirely to the public sector on condition that the public authority or authorities holding the share capital exercise over the company control comparable to that exercised over their own departments and that the company carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority or authorities.'

III - The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

5. By decision of 17 July 2003, the Municipality of Bari launched the procedure for a public tender for the award of the contract for local transport services in the territory of the Municipality of Bari. By decision of 18 December 2003, it then decided not to go through with the tendering procedure and awarded the contract in question to AMTAB Servizio SpA by direct agreement.

6. It is apparent from the referring decision that the Municipality of Bari adopted its new decision following the entry into force of Article 14 of Decree Law No 269/03, amending paragraph V of Article 113 of Legislative Decree No 267/00.

7. In particular, the new paragraph V(c) of Article 113 - describing the internal' management of a public service in accordance with the definition provided by the Court at paragraph 50 of its judgment in Teckal , and from which it follows that the internal' management of a public service does not fall within the scope of Community law on calls for tender - is what led the municipal authority of Bari not to go through with the procedure for a public tender.

8. According to the order for reference, the concessionaire AMTAB Servizio SpA is a company the share capital of which is wholly owned by the Municipality of Bari and whose sole activity is the provision of a local transport service in the city of Bari. This company is wholly controlled by the municipal authority of Bari under the service contract binding these two entities.

9. The applicant in the main proceedings, the Associazione nazionale autotrasporto viaggiatori, lodged an appeal before the national court seeking annulment of the decision of the Municipality of Bari of 18 December 2003 to award the service contract in question to AMTAB Servizio SpA on the ground that the Municipality was in breach of Community law, and in particular Articles 3 EC, 16 EC, 43 EC, 49 EC, 50 EC, 51 EC, 70 EC, 71 EC, 81 EC, 82 EC, 86 EC and 87 EC.

10. In the light of these arguments, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale di Puglia stayed proceedings and referred the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

Is the part of paragraph V of Article 113 of Legislative Decree No 267/00, as amended by Article 14 of Decree Law No 269/03, that sets no limit on the freedom of a public authority to choose between the different methods of awarding a contract for the provision of a public service, and, in particular, between an award as a result of a public and open tendering procedure and direct award to a company wholly controlled by the authority, compatible with Community law, and, in particular, with the obligations to ensure transparency and freedom of competition pursuant to Articles [43] EC, 49 EC and 86 EC?'

IV - Assessment

11. Do Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC preclude national legislation, such as that set out in the question for a preliminary ruling, from giving local authorities the freedom to choose either to entrust with the management of a service, such as public transport, a company attached to the local authority in question or to initiate a procedure for a public tender to award the contract for this service to a private party?

12. That is the tenor of the question raised by the national court, the resolution of which, in the light of recent and indeed very recent case-law of the Court, does not pose particular difficulties. (4)

13. According to the documents relating to the case in the main proceedings, lodged with the Court Registry, the service in question is remunerated, at least in part, through the purchase of tickets by users, so that the relevant service concession falls not within the ambit of the Community directives on public contracts, but directly within the provisions of primary law, more particularly the fundamental freedoms laid down in the Treaty. (5) The national court appears to have made the same finding, since its question for a preliminary ruling refers only to Articles 43, (6) 49 and 86 EC, and not to Directive 92/50/EEC. (7)

14. The most important elements of the reply are to be found in paragraph 50 of Teckal and paragraph 49 of Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau . According to those judgments, a call for tenders is not mandatory, even though the other contracting party is an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority, where the public authority which is a contracting authority exercises over the separate entity concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and that entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority or authorities. (8)

15. It is evident from a comparison of the wording of the new version of paragraph V(c) of Article 113 of Legislative Decree No 267/00 (companies belonging entirely to the public sector on condition that the public authority or authorities holding the share capital exercise over the company control comparable to that exercised over their own departments and that the company carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority or authorities') with the passages of the Court's case-law cited in the paragraph above that the Italian legislature has clearly followed this case-law.

16. This has been confirmed by the Commission of the European Communities, which points out, in its written observations, that the current drafting of paragraph V(c) of Article 113 is the result of infringement proceedings brought by the Commission against the Italian Republic.

17. Given that the national legislation is consistent with the Court's case-law, any decision taken by a local authority which in turn is in line with that legislation must also be considered to be consistent with Community law.

18. In that connection, it should however be noted that the criteria for defining a situation as internal' are to be strictly applied. It follows inter alia from the judgments cited above in Parking Brixen and Commission v Austria that, first, the control exercised by the contracting authority should not be diluted by the participation, even as a minority', of a private undertaking in the capital of the company to which management of the relevant service has been entrusted, and secondly, that company must carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority or authorities.

19. The facts underlying the main proceedings seem to me to satisfy these two criteria so that I would be in a position to conclude my analysis with this finding were it not for a third criterion deriving from the judgment in Commission v Austria , (9) namely the requirement that the first two criteria be met on a continuous basis.

20. Where, having met the first two criteria at the time of awarding the management of the relevant service, the competent authority transfers even a minority share of the company concerned to a private company, this would result - by means of an artificial construction comprising several distinct phases, namely the establishment of the company, the award to that company of the management of the public transport service and the transfer of part of its shares to a private company - in a public service concession being awarded to a semi-public company without a prior call for competition.

21. The same reasoning applies to a situation in which the original concessionaire is awarded contracts for other public services, without a prior call for competition, by public authorities other than that which controls it.

22. In the two situations described above, the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency, as recalled by the Court in its judgments in Coname and Parking Brixen , would not be observed.

V - Conclusion

23. In the light of the observations above, I propose that the Court answers the question referred by the Tribunale amministativo regionale per la Puglia as follows:

Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC are to be interpreted as not precluding the application of a provision such as paragraph V of Article 113 of the Italian Legislative Decree No 267/00 in its current wording, provided that the two criteria it lays down, namely that the concessionaire must be subject to a control similar to that which the authority exercises over its own departments and that it must carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority, continue to be fulfilled on a lasting basis after the concessionaire has been awarded the contract for the management of a public service.

(6) - In the question for a preliminary ruling the national court cites Article 46 EC, and not Article 43 EC. It may be concluded, from reading the referring decision as a whole, that this is a material error.

Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Il Tribunale Amminstrativo Regionale della Liguria (Second Chamber) by order of that court of 22 April 2004, in case of Acquedotto De Ferrari Galliera s.p.a. against Province of Genoa

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Il Tribunale Amminstrativo Regionale della Liguria, (Second Chamber) Italy of 22 April 2004 received at the Court Registry on 8 June 2004, for a preliminary ruling in the case of Acquedotto De Ferrari Galliera s.p.a against Province of Genoa and Others on the following questions:

Is the interpretation of Articles 12 EC, 28 EC, 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC adopted by the Court of Justice in Case C-324/98 Teleaustria to be regarded as valid and binding on the national court even where there is no actual or potential risk of discrimination on the ground of nationality?

May Community law and in particular Articles 12 EC, 28 EC, 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC be interpreted in such a way as to permit Member States, when prescribing rules governing the award of concession contracts in accordance with the aforesaid provisions (as interpreted by the Court of Justice in Case C-324/98 Teleaustria), to introduce transitional rules preserving concessions already awarded without competitive tendering and, if so, for what duration?

May Article 86(2) be interpreted as permitting a derogation from Articles 12 EC, 28 EC, 43 EC and 49 EC (as interpreted by the Court of Justice in Case C-324/98 in relation to the requirement of competitive tendering for public service concessions), in the limited circumstances of a service concession being awarded for a transitional period of specified duration which is within reasonable limits, where the specific nature of the situation before the national court is such that the holding of a competitive tendering process for the concession of a public service of general economic interest, such as the integrated water service, could be detrimental to the timely implementation, activation and operation of the service in question?

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby rules:

Subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts do not preclude a national law or administrative practice according to which a service provider, who has not fulfilled obligations relating to social security contributions and taxes by having paid in full when the period prescribed for submitting the request to participate in the contract expires, may subsequently regularise his position

- pursuant to a tax amnesty or leniency measures adopted by the State, or
- pursuant to an administrative arrangement of payment in instalments or debt relief, or
- by bringing administrative or legal proceedings,

provided that, within the period prescribed by national law or administrative practice, he provides evidence that he has benefited from such measures or arrangement or that he has brought such proceedings within that period.

1. These references for a preliminary ruling concern the interpretation of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) (the Directive').

2. The references were made in proceedings between La Cascina Soc. coop. arl (La Cascina') and Zilch Srl (Zilch'), and the Consorzio G.f.M. (G.f.M.'), on the one hand, and the Italian Ministry of Defence and Ministry of Economy and Finance, on the other, in their capacity as contracting authorities, as regards (i) the exclusion of those undertakings from participation in a procurement procedure for public service contracts and (ii) the compatibility with Article 29 of the Directive of the corresponding provision of Italian legislation which transposes that directive into national law.

Legal background

Community law

3. It is clear from the second and third recitals in the preamble to the Directive that it was adopted in the context of measures aimed at progressively establishing the internal market' and that for that purpose it aims to achieve the coordination of the procurement procedures for the award of public service contracts'.

4. The 20th recital in the preamble to the Directive states that ... to eliminate practices that restrict competition in general and participation in contracts by other Member States' nationals in particular, it is necessary to improve the access of service providers to procedures for the award of contracts'.

5. In order to open public contracts to the widest possible competition, Article 13(5) of the Directive provides, in relation to the organisation of design contests, that, [i]n any event, the number of candidates invited to participate shall be sufficient to ensure genuine competition'. Similarly, in respect of restricted procedures, Article 27(2), second subparagraph, of that directive states that [i]n any event, the number of candidates invited to tender shall be sufficient to ensure genuine competition'.

6. As part of Chapter 2 of Title VI of the Directive, entitled Criteria for qualitative selection', Article 29 provides:

Any service provider may be excluded from participation in a contract who:

(a) is bankrupt or is being wound up, whose affairs are being administered by the court, who has entered into an arrangement with creditors, who has suspended business activities or who is in any analogous situation arising from a similar procedure under national laws and regulations;

(b) is the subject of proceedings for a declaration of bankruptcy, for an order for compulsory winding-up or administration by the court or for an arrangement with creditors or of any other similar proceedings under national laws or regulations;

(c) has been convicted of an offence concerning his professional conduct by a judgment which has the force of res judicata;

(d) has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authorities can justify;

(e) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority;

(f) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of taxes in accordance with the legal provisions of the country of the contracting authority;

(g) is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying or failing to supply the information that may be required under this Chapter.

Where the contracting authority requires of the service provider proof that none of the cases quoted in (a), (b), (c), (e), or (f) applies to him, it shall accept as sufficient evidence:

- ...

- for (e) or (f), a certificate issued by the competent authority in the Member State concerned.

Member States shall, within the time limit referred to in Article 44, designate the authorities and bodies competent to issue such documents or certificates and shall forthwith inform the other Member States and the Commission thereof.'

National law

7. The Directive was transposed into Italian law by Legislative Decree No 157 of 17 March 1995 (GURI No 104 of 6 May 1995) (Decree No 157/1995').

8. Article 12(d) and (e) of that decree, as replaced by Article 10 of Legislative Decree No 65 of 25 February 2000 (GURI No 70 of 24 March 2000) (Article 12 of Decree No 157/1995'), which transposes Article 29 of the Directive into national law, provides:

candidates shall be excluded from participation in contracts who:

are not in compliance in respect of obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions for employees, in accordance with Italian legislation or the legislation of the State in which they are established; are not in compliance in respect of obligations relating to the payment of taxes, in accordance with Italian legislation or the legislation of the State in which they are established.'

The disputes in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

9. In December 2002 the Italian Ministry of Defence, together with the Ministry of Economy and Finance, published in the Gazzetta ufficiale della Repubblica italiana and the Official Journal of the European Communities a restricted and accelerated call for tenders for the award of the contract to supply catering services to Ministry of Defence bodies and departments stationed in national territory. The final date for receipt of requests to participate was set at 15 January 2003 and the final date for receipt of tenders at 3 March 2003.

10. That call for tenders was divided into 16 lots. For each lot there was provision for a different annual value, a specific area to be covered and a range of specific services to be provided.

11. La Cascina and Zilch, as part of a temporary joint venture, were among those who responded to that call for tenders, in respect of the majority of the 16 lots, and G.f.M. responded in respect of Lot No 7.

12. On 4 December 2003 the contracting authority decided to exclude La Cascina and G.f.M. from the procedure on the ground that they were not in compliance with their obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions for employees, and Zilch on the ground that it was not in compliance with its obligations relating to the payment of taxes.

13. The three bodies in question requested the annulment of that decision before the referring court. In particular, La Cascina and G.f.M. argued that the failure to pay social security contributions had subsequently been regularised. For its part, Zilch stated that one part of the taxes claimed had been the subject of tax relief and that the other part had benefited from a tax amnesty' under a regularisation measure adopted by the national legislature in 2002, on the basis of which it had been authorised to make payment in instalments.

14. The contracting authority argued, on the other hand, that the subsequent regularisation did not mean that the applicant undertakings were in compliance with their obligations at the time the period prescribed for submitting requests to participate in the tendering procedure expired on 15 January 2003.

15. The referring court notes a difference in the wording of Article 29 of the Directive and Article 12 of Decree No 157/1995. Whereas the Community provision provides for the power to exclude from participation in a contract a service provider who has not fulfilled' obligations, the national provision excludes a person who is not in compliance' with his obligations.

16. The national court wishes to know therefore whether the national provision at issue in the main proceedings is more permissive and allows more freedom to the national authorities and it refers, in that regard, to the various interpretations in decisions given on that subject by the Italian courts. Some of those courts accept subsequent regularisation, that is after expiry of the period prescribed for submitting requests to participate in the contract, in two types of situation:

- where the parties concerned have contested the validity of their obligations before the competent national administrative authorities or courts,

- where the parties concerned, who have in fact failed to fulfil their obligations, have however benefited either from leniency measures on the part of the State which has given them the opportunity subsequently to regularise their position relating to tax and social security, or from a tax amnesty.

17. Taking the view that such an interpretation might lead to unequal treatment of service providers and obstruct the procedure for the award of a contract, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale del Lazio decided to stay its proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Must the Directive in question, as regards only the abovementioned provisions, be interpreted as meaning that, where the Community legislature employs the expression has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority or has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of taxes in accordance with the legal provisions of the country of the contracting authority, the legislature intended to refer - solely and exclusively - to a situation in which the person concerned has - when the period prescribed for submitting requests to participate in a public tendering procedure expires (or in any event before the award of the contract) - fulfilled those obligations by paying in full and in time?

2) Consequently, must the Italian national implementing measure [Article 12(d) and (e) of Legislative Decree No 157 of 17 March 1995] - in so far as, unlike the Community provision cited above, it allows the exclusion from tendering procedures of persons who are not in compliance in respect of obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions for employees, in accordance with Italian legislation or the legislation of the State in which they are established or who are not in compliance in respect of obligations relating to the payment of taxes, in accordance with Italian legislation or the legislation of the State in which they are established - be interpreted with reference solely to the failure - verifiable at the date mentioned above (the expiry of the period prescribed for submitting requests to participate or immediately before the award, even provisional, of the contract) - to fulfil those obligations, without any importance being attached to subsequent regularisation of their position?

3) Or, conversely (if, in the light of the indications set out in question 2 above, the national measure is held not to be in harmony with the rationale and function of the Community provision), may the national legislature be regarded, in the light of the limitations to which it is subject for the purpose of giving effect to the Community rules contained in the Directive at issue, as being entitled to introduce the option of allowing the admission to a tendering procedure of persons who, although not in compliance when the period prescribed for participation in the procedure expires, nevertheless show that they can regularise their position (and have taken positive steps to do so) before the award of the contract?

4) And, if the interpretation referred to in question 3 above is held to be workable - thus permitting the introduction of more flexible rules than would be allowed on a stricter interpretation of the fulfilment of obligations referred to by the Community legislature - do such rules conflict with fundamental Community principles, such as the principle of equal treatment for all citizens of the Union, or - with regard only to public tendering procedures - that of equal conditions for all persons who have applied for admission to such procedures?'

On the questions

18. It must be observed as a preliminary point that, in accordance with the provisions of Title II of the Directive, the application of its provisions varies according to the categorisation of the services in question. However, since that categorisation requires an assessment of the facts, it falls within the jurisdiction of the national court, and the Court will therefore interpret the provisions of the Directive to which the reference for a preliminary ruling refers. Furthermore, it is clear from that reference that it concerns a restricted procedure within the meaning of the Directive.

19. By its questions, the national court wishes in substance to know, firstly, whether subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 must be interpreted as precluding a national provision which refers to the position of service providers who are not in compliance' with social security or tax obligations. Secondly, it wishes to know the time at which the service provider must provide evidence that he has complied with those obligations. Thirdly, it is unsure whether a service provider who is late with payment of its social security contributions or taxes, has been authorised by the competent authorities to make payment of those contributions or taxes in instalments, or has brought administrative or judicial proceedings to contest the existence or amount of its social security or tax obligations must be regarded as not having fulfilled his social security or tax obligations for the purposes of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of the Directive.

20. In order to provide a useful reply to those questions, it must be observed as a preliminary point that the Community directives on public contracts aim to coordinate national procedures in that field. As regards, more particularly, public service contracts, the third recital in the preamble to the Directive states that the objectives set out in the first and second recitals... require the coordination of the procurement procedures for the award of public service contracts'.

21. As regards that coordination, Article 29 of the Directive lays down seven grounds for excluding candidates from participation in a contract, which relate to their professional honesty, solvency and reliability. That provision leaves the application of all those cases of exclusion to the assessment of the Member States, as evidenced by the phrase may be excluded from participation in a contract', which appears at the beginning of that provision and makes express reference, in subparagraphs (e) and (f), to the provisions of national law.

22. Thus, as the Commission of the European Communities rightly pointed out, Article 29 itself lays down the only limits to the power of the Member States in the sense that they cannot provide for grounds of exclusion other than those mentioned therein. That power of the Member States is also limited by the general principles of transparency and equal treatment (see, inter alia, Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraphs 91 and 92, and Case C-421/01 Traunfellner [2003] ECR I-11941, paragraph 29).

23. Accordingly, Article 29 of the Directive does not provide in this field for uniform application of the grounds of exclusion mentioned therein at Community level, since the Member States may choose not to apply those grounds of exclusion at all and opt for the widest possible participation in procedures for the award of public contracts or to incorporate them into national law with varying degrees of rigour according to legal, economic or social considerations prevailing at national level. In that context the Member States have the power to make the criteria laid down in Article 29 of the Directive less onerous or more flexible.

24. As regards, first, the question whether subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of the Directive must be interpreted as precluding a provision of national law which refers to the position of service providers who are not in compliance' with social security or tax obligations, that provision enables Member States to exclude any candidate who has not fulfilled obligations' relating to the payment of social security contributions and taxes in accordance with [national] legal provisions'.

25. That provision does not contain a definition of has not fulfilled obligations'. In the light of the considerations set out in paragraph 23 of this judgment, the authors of the Directive did not intend to give that concept an autonomous Community definition, but referred to national rules for that purpose. It is therefore for national rules to specify the content and scope of the obligations at issue and the conditions for their fulfilment.

26. The Italian legislature has made use of the power given to it under subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of the Directive, by inserting the two grounds of exclusion in question into Article 12(d) and (e) of Legislative Decree No 157/1995. However, the national court asks, first of all, whether, by using the terms who are not in compliance in respect of obligations...', that provision is more permissive and whether it gives more latitude to the national authorities compared with the wording in subparagraphs (e) and (f) of Article 29 of the Directive.

27. As the parties concerned who submitted observations to the Court have rightly observed, the words non abbia adempiuto' its obligations or non sia in regola con' its obligations (both expressions being rendered as has not fulfilled obligations' in English) are both used indiscriminately in the various Community directives on public procurement. For example, Article 24(e) and (f) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), Article 20(1)(e) and (f) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and, finally, Article 45(2)(e) and (f) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), which entered into force on 31 January 2006. There is not, therefore, any difference in content between the two expressions at issue.

28. On the basis of those considerations it is appropriate to consider the various situations to which the national court refers.

29. The national court asks, secondly, whether, in order to have fulfilled his obligations relating to social security contributions and taxes, the service provider must, when the period prescribed for submitting requests to participate in a public tendering procedure expires or in any event before the award of the contract', have made the relevant payment in full and in time'.

30. In order to establish the time at which to determine whether the candidate has fulfilled his obligations it should be observed that subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of the Directive refer to the legal provisions of the Member States in order to determine the meaning of the expression fulfilled obligations', and that the Community legislature did not wish to make the application of that article uniform at Community level; it is logical to find that in order to establish the relevant time reference should also be made to national provisions.

31. It is, therefore, for national rules to determine the date by which or the period within which the persons concerned must have made the payments corresponding to their obligations or, as regards the other situations contemplated by the national court which are dealt with in paragraphs 34 to 39 of this judgment, must have proved that the conditions for subsequent regularisation have been fulfilled. That period may be, inter alia, the final date for lodging the request to participate in the contract, the date on which the invitation to tender was sent, the final date on which the candidates' tenders are to be lodged, the date on which tenders are considered by the contracting authority or even immediately prior to the award of the contract.

32. It should be stated, however, that the principles of transparency and equal treatment which govern all procedures for the award of public contracts, according to which the substantive and procedural conditions concerning participation in a contract must be clearly defined in advance, require that the period be determined with absolute certainty and made public in order that the persons concerned may know exactly the procedural requirements and be sure that the same requirements apply to all candidates. That period may be fixed by national legislation or the latter may confer that responsibility on the contracting authorities.

33. Therefore, a candidate is regarded as having fulfilled its obligations if, within the period referred to in paragraph 31 above, he has made all the payments relating to his social security or tax debts, subject to the cases of subsequent regularisation or bringing of administrative or legal proceedings, which are dealt with in paragraphs 34 to 39 of this judgment. Merely commencing payment at the relevant time, proof of intention to pay or proof of financial capacity to regularise the position after that time are not sufficient, in order to avoid infringing the principle of equal treatment of candidates.

34. Thirdly, the national court's reference is essentially concerned with whether it is compatible with subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of the Directive for a national rule or administrative practice which enables service providers, for the purpose of being admitted to a procedure for the award of a public contract, subsequently to regularise their position as regards tax and social security pursuant to leniency measures or a tax amnesty adopted by the Member State at issue or pursuant to an administrative arrangement of payment by instalment or debt relief.

35. It must be observed in that regard that, as the Advocate General rightly stated in point 29 of his Opinion, the amount and the date on which tax and social security obligations are due are defined by national law. Similarly, it was stated in paragraph 25 above that it is also for national law to determine the content and scope of has fulfilled obligations'. Moreover, the relevant period in that regard is that fixed by national law, as stated in paragraph 31 of this judgment.

36. Accordingly, a national law or administrative practice according to which, in the event of leniency measures or a tax amnesty or as a result of an administrative arrangement, the candidates concerned are regarded as being in compliance with their obligations for the purpose of being admitted to a procedure for the award of a contract is not incompatible with subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29, provided that in the period referred to in paragraph 31 of this judgment they can provide evidence that they have benefited from leniency measures, a tax amnesty or an administrative arrangement in respect of their debts.

37. The national court's reference concerns lastly the effects to be attributed to a candidate's bringing administrative or legal proceedings against the findings of the competent tax or social security authorities in order to establish whether the candidate is in compliance with his obligations with a view to his admission to a procedure for the award of a public contract.

38. It must be held that the reference to national law under subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of the Directive is also applicable in respect of that question. Nevertheless, the effects of bringing administrative or legal proceedings are closely linked to the exercise and safeguard of fundamental rights in relation to judicial protection, respect for which is also guaranteed by the Community legal order. National legislation which paid no heed to the effects of bringing administrative or legal proceedings on the opportunity to participate in a procedure for the award of a contract would risk infringing the fundamental rights of the parties concerned.

39. Taking account of that limitation, it is therefore for national law to determine whether bringing administrative or legal proceedings has effects which require the contracting authority to take the view that the candidate concerned is in compliance with his obligations, pending a final decision, for the purpose of his admission to the procedure for the award of a contract, provided that such proceedings are brought within the period referred to in paragraph 31 of this judgment.

40. Therefore, the answer to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling must be that subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of the Directive do not preclude a national law or administrative practice according to which a service provider, who has not fulfilled obligations relating to social security contributions and taxes by having paid in full when the period prescribed for submitting the request to participate in the contract expires, may subsequently regularise his position

- pursuant to a tax amnesty or leniency measures adopted by the State, or
- pursuant to an administrative arrangement of payment in instalments or debt relief, or

- by bringing administrative or legal proceedings, provided that, within the period prescribed by national law or administrative practice, he provides evidence that he has benefited from such measures or arrangement or that he has brought such proceedings within that period.

Costs

41. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale del Lazio)

(Public service contracts – Directive 92/50/EEC – Article 29, first paragraph, subparagraphs (e) and (f) – Obligations of service providers – Payment of social security contributions and taxes)

Summary of the Judgment

Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public service contracts – Directive 92/50 – Award of contracts
(Council Directive 92/50, Art. 29, first para., subparas (e) and (f))

Article 29 of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts enables Member States to exclude any candidate who 'has not fulfilled obligations' relating to the payment of social security contributions and taxes in accordance with national legal provisions.

That provision does not preclude a national law or administrative practice according to which a service provider, who has not fulfilled obligations relating to social security contributions and taxes by having paid in full when the period prescribed for submitting the request to participate in the contract expires, may subsequently regularise his position

– pursuant to a tax amnesty or leniency measures adopted by the State, or

– pursuant to an administrative arrangement of payment in instalments or debt relief, or

– by bringing administrative or legal proceedings,

provided that, within the period prescribed by national law or administrative practice, he provides evidence that he has benefited from such measures or arrangement or that he has brought such proceedings within that period.

Article 29 of the Directive does not provide in this field for uniform application of the grounds of exclusion mentioned therein at Community level, since the Member States may choose not to apply those grounds of exclusion at all or to incorporate them into national law with varying degrees of rigour. In that context the Member States have the power to make the criteria laid down in Article 29 of the Directive less onerous or more flexible.

It is therefore for national rules to specify the content and scope of the obligations at issue and the conditions for their fulfilment. It is also for national rules to determine the date by which or the period within which the persons concerned must have made the payments corresponding to their obligations or must have proved that the conditions for subsequent regularisation have been fulfilled. However, the principles of transparency and equal treatment require that the period be determined with absolute certainty and made public, in order that the persons concerned may know exactly the procedural requirements and be sure that the same requirements apply to all candidates. Furthermore, merely commencing payment at the relevant time, proof of intention to pay or proof of financial capacity to regularise the position after that time are not sufficient.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT

of 25 October 2005

in Case C-229/04: Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen: Crailsheimer Volksbank eG v Klaus Conrads, Frank Schulzke and Petra Schulzke-Lösche, Joachim Nitschke [1]

(Language of the case: German)

In Case C-229/04: reference for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC from the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen (Germany), made by decision of 27 May 2004, received at the Court on 2 June 2004, in the proceedings between Crailsheimer Volksbank eG and Klaus Conrads, Frank Schulzke and Petra Schulzke-Lösche, Joachim Nitschke, the Court (Second Chamber), composed of C.W.A. Timmermans, President of the Chamber, J. Makarczyk, C. Gulmann (Rapporteur), R. Silva de Lapuerta and P. Kuris, Judges; P. Léger, Advocate General; M. Ferreira, Principal Administrator, gave a judgment on 25 October 2005, in which it ruled:

1. Articles 1 and 2 of Council Directive 85/577/EEC of 20 December 1985 to protect the consumer in respect of contracts negotiated away from business premises must be interpreted as meaning that when a third party intervenes in the name of or on behalf of a trader in the negotiation or conclusion of a contract, the application of the Directive cannot be made subject to the condition that the trader was or should have been aware that the contract was concluded in a doorstep-selling situation as referred to in Article 1 of the Directive.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Poiares Maduro delivered on 8 September 2005. La Cascina Soc. coop. arl and Zilch Srl v Ministero della Difesa and Others (C-226/04) and Consorzio G. f. M. v Ministero della Difesa and La Cascina Soc. coop. arl (C-228/04). Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunale amministrativo regionale del Lazio - Italy. Public service contracts - Directive 92/50/EEC - Article 29, first paragraph, subparagraphs (e) and (f) - Obligations of service providers - Payment of social security contributions and taxes. Joined cases C-226/04 and C-228/04.

1. By two orders of 22 April 2004, the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale del Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio) (Italy) referred to the Court of Justice two questions concerning the interpretation of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), under which service providers which have failed to fulfil their obligations in relation to the payment of social security contributions and taxes may be excluded from an invitation to tender. Since the questions submitted in the two orders for reference were identical, they were joined by order of the President of the Court of 30 June 2004.

I - Facts, legislative framework and the questions referred

2. La Cascina Soc. Coop. arl. (hereinafter La Cascina') and Zilch Srl (hereinafter Zilch'), which had set up a temporary joint venture, and Consorzio G.f.M. (hereinafter G.f.M.'), all of them companies established in Italy, took part in an accelerated restricted tendering procedure for contracts to supply restaurant services to bodies and departments of the Italian Ministry of Defence stationed in the national territory, organised by that Ministry in conjunction with the Ministry of Economy and Finance. The invitation to tender was divided into 16 lots and published in December 2002. The deadline for the receipt of requests to participate was 15 January 2003, and the deadline for the receipt of tenders 3 March 2003.

3. By a decision of 4 December 2003, the contracting authority excluded La Cascina, Zilch and G.f.M. from taking part in the tendering procedure. In Case C226/04, La Cascina, the principal in the temporary joint venture, was not in compliance with its obligations to pay social security contributions for its employees for the period 1 January 2001 to 31 December 2002. Another company in the joint venture, Zilch, was excluded by the same decision, since it had failed to pay its taxes for different periods between 1997 and 2001. In Case C-228/04, there were alleged to have been irregularities on the part of G.f.M. regarding its obligations towards the Istituto nazionale per l'assicurazione contro gli infortuni sul lavoro (National Institute for insurance against accidents at work - hereinafter INAIL').

4. The decision to exclude the companies was taken in accordance with Article 12(d) and (e) of Legislative Decree No 157 of 17 March 1995, as replaced by Legislative Decree No 65 of 25 February 2000, (2) which provides that: competitors who are not in compliance in respect of obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions for employees, in accordance with Italian legislation or the legislation of the State in which they are established, shall be excluded from participating in competitions'.

5. Both La Cascina and Zilch and G.f.M. applied to the Tribunale amministrativo regionale del Lazio, seeking to have the decision of 4 December 2003 excluding them annulled. La Cascina and G.f.M. claimed, among other things, that there had simply been a delay in making the payments at issue, which had been settled subsequently. Zilch challenged the communication sent to the contract-awarding authority by the Ufficio centrale fiscale (Central Tax Authority) and produced a certificate issued by the Ufficio periferico di Messina (Messina branch office) showing that, on 1 January 2003, Zilch had paid the taxes it owed. Zilch also pointed out that it had requested the application of a law providing for the regularisation of tax debts and had been allowed to pay in instalments.

6. Before the national court, the contracting authority pointed out, however, that the fact that the applicant companies had met their obligations a posteriori did not mean that they had settled those obligations by the time the deadline for submitting their requests to participate in the invitation to tender had expired, that is to say 15 January 2003.

7. The national court seised of the dispute noted that Article 12(d) and (e) of Legislative Decree No 157/1995 transposes into Italian law subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50. According to the latter provision: Any service provider may be excluded from participation in a contract who:... (e) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority; (f) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of taxes in accordance with the legal provisions of the country of the contracting authority;... Where the contracting authority requires of the service provider proof that none of the cases quoted in (a), (b), (c), (e) or (f) applies to him, it shall accept as sufficient evidence:... for (e) or (f), a certificate issued by the competent authority in the Member State concerned.'

8. Taking the view that such an interpretation might lead to unequal treatment of service providers and obstruct the procedure for the award of a contract, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale del Lazio decided to stay its proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Must the Directive in question, as regards only the abovementioned provisions, be interpreted as meaning that, where the Community legislature employs the expression has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority or has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of taxes in accordance with the legal provisions of the country of the contracting authority, the legislature intended to refer - solely and exclusively - to a situation in which the person concerned has - when the period prescribed for submitting requests to participate in a public tendering procedure expires (or in any event before the award of the contract) - fulfilled those obligations by paying in full and in time?

2) Consequently, must the Italian national implementing measure [Article 12(d) and (e) of Legislative Decree No 157 of 17 March 1995] - in so far as, unlike the Community provision cited above, it allows the exclusion from tendering procedures of persons who are not in compliance in respect of obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions for employees, in accordance with Italian legislation or the legislation of the State in which they are established or who are not in compliance in respect of obligations relating to the payment of taxes, in accordance with Italian legislation or the legislation of the State in which they are established - be interpreted with reference solely to the failure - verifiable at the date mentioned above (the expiry of the period prescribed for submitting requests to participate or immediately before the award, even provisional, of the contract) - to fulfil those obligations, without any importance being attached to subsequent regularisation of their position?

3) Or, conversely (if, in the light of the indications set out in question 2 above, the national measure is held not to be in harmony with the rationale and function of the Community provision), may the national legislature be regarded, in the light of the limitations to which it is subject for the purpose of giving effect to the Community rules contained in the Directive at issue, as being entitled to introduce the option of allowing the admission to a tendering procedure of persons who, although not in compliance when the period prescribed for participation in the procedure expires, nevertheless show that they can regularise their position (and have taken positive steps to do so) before the award of the contract?

4) And, if the interpretation referred to in question 3 above is held to be workable - thus permitting the introduction of more flexible rules than would be allowed on a stricter interpretation of the fulfilment of obligations referred to by the Community legislature - do such rules conflict with fundamental Community principles, such as the principle of equal treatment for all citizens of the Union, or - with regard only to public tendering procedures - that of equal conditions for all persons who have applied for admission to such procedures?'

9. La Cascina and Zilch, the Austrian and Italian Governments and the Commission of the European Communities submitted written statements in intervention to the Court. A hearing took place on 30 June 2005 during which La Cascina and Zilch, G.f.M., Pedus Service, the Italian Government and the Commission set out their positions.

10. It should first be pointed out that in the context of Article 234 EC, the Court has no jurisdiction to rule on the interpretation of provisions of national laws or regulations or their conformity with Community law. (3) The questions referred by the national court must, therefore, be reformulated. The answers given will enable the national court to interpret the national transposing provision in a manner compatible with subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50. In point of fact, [t]he requirement for national law to be interpreted in conformity with Community law is inherent in the system of the [EC] Treaty, since it permits the national court, for the matters within its jurisdiction, to ensure the full effectiveness of Community law when it determines the dispute before it'. (4) That means that, in this case, although the specific procedures for excluding potential candidates have to be determined by the national law, (5) as the Commission points out in its written observations, it is nonetheless appropriate to provide the national court with an interpretation of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50.

11. It would appear that the first and fourth questions concern the margin of discretion available to the national legislature when transposing Directive 92/50. More specifically, the first question raises two separate points of interpretation. The national court questions the effect of the difference in wording it has identified between the text of the directive and the way in which it has been transposed into the national law. It also raises the question whether the directive requires that the obligations cited in subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 must be paid in full and in time. The principles of Community law the national court cites in its fourth question will be helpful in answering those two points. By its second and third questions, the referring court is seeking to establish the deadline by which a company taking part in an invitation to tender must prove that it has met its obligations in relation to tax and the payment of social security contributions. I shall begin by considering the significance of the difference in wording the national court has identified; then consider the interpretation to be given to the concept of having fulfilled obligations'; and, finally, consider the timelimit a company should be allowed in which to prove that it has met those obligations.

II - Analysis

A - The significance of the difference in wording between subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50 and the Italian implementing legislation

12. The national court has identified a difference in wording between the text of Directive 92/50, which refers to any company which has not fulfilled obligations' in relation to taxation and the payment of social security contributions, and the expression used in the national legislation, which refers to companies which are not in compliance with' those same obligations. The national court takes the view that the obligation to be in compliance is broader than the obligation to fulfil obligations. In particular, the national court cites the possibility that a company may benefit from regularisation on the part of the tax authorities, which could have retroactive effect.

13. I should first point out that Article 29 of Directive 92/50 gives Member States the option of providing for the grounds of exclusion listed therein. But the Member States are not bound to adopt those qualitative selection criteria. (6) The Italian Republic availed itself of that possibility by providing in its national legislation that companies which are not in compliance' with their obligations in relation to tax and the payment of social security contributions should be excluded.

14. Secondly, although the national court centres its argument on the difference in wording it has identified between the national provision and the Community directive, that difference does not seem to be significant. In point of fact, a directive, by its very definition, determines the result to be achieved, whilst leaving it to the Member States to choose the method best suited to achieving that objective, as provided for by Article 249 EC. Furthermore, there is no difference in meaning between the expressions to be in compliance with' and to have fulfilled' statutory requirements, which, as the Italian Government correctly points out in its written observations, are used without distinction in the Community directives on public contracts, be it in the Italian or other language versions. (7)

15. Consequently, the answer to the first question, as reformulated, must be that the expression to have fulfilled obligations' which appears in the text of Directive 92/50 may be construed as meaning to be in compliance with its obligations', as stated in the Italian transposing legislation, since both expressions mean the same.

B - The concept of having fulfilled obligations' within the meaning of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50

16. The national court raises three questions of interpretation which are linked: firstly, the effect of a delay in payment; secondly, the consequences of the authorities permitting payment in instalments; and, thirdly, the effect of lodging an administrative or judicial appeal challenging the existence of an obligation to make a payment or the amount of that payment.

1. The effect of a delay in making payment

17. The national court first raises the question whether subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as requiring the payment of the obligations to which it refers in full and in time'.

18. In that connection, La Cascina claims that a mere delay in payment cannot result in exclusion. It advances two arguments on that point. On the one hand, it considers that the obligation to make payment referred to in Article 29 of Directive 92/50 is not directed towards the payment itself but towards all the activities preparatory to fulfilling the obligation to pay. An interpretation which is so clearly incompatible with the letter and spirit of the provision to be interpreted must be dismissed.

19. La Cascina's second argument merits more serious scrutiny. It contends that, in terms of the system, that is to say comparing the different grounds for exclusion listed in Directive 92/50, it is absurd to permit a company that is heavily indebted to take part in a tender, provided that it is not bankrupt, being wound up, having its affairs administered by the court or has not entered into an arrangement with creditors (Article 29(a) and (b) of the directive), while banning a company which is slightly indebted from taking part in that same tender, on the pretext that it has failed promptly to fulfil its obligations in relation to tax and social security contributions. La Cascina infers from this that a delay in making payment, which is not the same as non-payment, cannot result in exclusion under subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50.

20. First of all, while it is true that a systematic interpretation frequently enables the Court to clarify the meaning of a provision, I would point out that the interpretation La Cascina proposes is incompatible with the wording of the article in question.

21. Secondly, La Cascina's view that debts to the State or other public bodies by way of taxes or social security contributions and debts to other creditors have to be taken into account globally in determining whether a tenderer is solvent is incorrect, since it assumes that these two categories of debt are the same, and that is not the case.

22. Finally, La Cascina's argument cannot be endorsed since it is founded on an incorrect assessment of the objectives pursued by the qualitative selection criteria within the system of Directive 92/50. In that connection, the Court has already ruled in its judgment in Holst Italia (8) that the criteria for qualitative selection laid down in Chapter 2 of Title VI of Directive 92/50 are designed solely to define the rules governing objective assessment of the standing of tenderers'. The fact is that the standing of tenderers does not depend exclusively on whether they are solvent. Indeed, the criteria applicable in relation to qualitative selection include criteria concerning the tenderer's personal situation, its financial and economic standing and even its skills, its efficiency, its experience and its reliability. As the Italian Government rightly points out, the objective pursued by Article 29 of Directive 92/50 is precisely to guarantee the reliability of tenderers. (9)

23. More specifically, subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 encourage companies to pay their taxes and social security contributions. At the same time, that provision enables the contracting authority to award lucrative public contracts only to companies that have already paid these various taxes in order to protect the State's interest as the collector of taxes.

24. It is quite clear that the grounds for exclusion listed in Article 29 of Directive 92/50 are not solely designed to guarantee that the service provider in question is solvent, which is the aim of Article 31 of that directive, but actually to prevent that person from benefiting from an unfair advantage in relation to his competitors for a contract by failing to pay taxes or social security contributions. The exclusion of companies which have not fulfilled their obligations in relation to the payment of social security contributions or taxes is therefore justified because of the risk that competitors would cease to have an equal opportunity were companies that were not in compliance with those statutory obligations able to participate in an invitation to tender.

25. The principle that competitors must enjoy equal treatment underpins the law on public contracts, (10) making it possible to ensure that all potential competitors in a tender have the same opportunity when drawing up their applications to take part or their actual tenders. (11) The principle is specifically enshrined in Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50 which provides that [c]ontracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers'.

26. Consequently, Article 29 of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as setting out a list of grounds resulting in the exclusion of competitors from taking part in a tender to safeguard the principle of equal treatment. That exclusion necessarily implies that a limit is placed on the parallel objective Directive 92/50 pursues, namely that of encouraging competition. (12) That limit is, however, inherent in the system of the directive which seeks to encourage competition between service providers only provided that competition takes place in compliance with the principle of equal treatment for candidates. (13)

27. Since a competitor which has failed to fulfil its obligations in relation to tax or the payment of social security contributions is excluded to ensure that all tenderers are treated equally, there is no reason to make a distinction between non-payment and a delay in paying. In fact, if a company were able to rely on a delay in payment to avoid being excluded from taking part in a tender under subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50, the application of that provision would be substantially curtailed. The evidence required under that provision is not that the company concerned intends to meet its statutory obligations at some later date - which would, moreover, be extremely difficult to prove - but that the obligations which have become due have actually been paid. (14) The non-discriminatory nature of the process of selecting service providers can be assured only by means of an objectively defined criterion. Consequently, the application of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 makes it necessary objectively to ascertain that the obligations to which it refers have actually been paid by the company in question.

2. The consequences of debt payment by instalment

28. Secondly, where it is established that a company has failed to fulfil its obligations within the meaning of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50, the national court questions what the effect will be if the authorities permit that company to pay by instalments. In that connection, the national court refers to judgment No 1114 of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Puglia of 12 February 2004 which interpreted Article 12 of Legislative Decree No 157/1995 as applicable not only to companies which had evaded payment but also to companies which had simply not paid their contributions. However, companies benefiting from regularisation procedures allowing them extra time to pay or to pay by instalments and companies which had lodged administrative or judicial appeals and have yet to receive a final judgment could not be excluded under that article.

29. It should first be pointed out that it is, in any event, the national law which determines the amount and deadline for payment of obligations relating to the payment of tax as well as social security contributions. However, and subject to the interpretation of its national law by the referring court, it would appear that once the tax authority or competent authority has agreed that the social security contributions a company owes can be paid in instalments, that company can no longer be deemed to be late in making payment.

30. Furthermore, in the context of the application of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50, the burden of proof lies, as the Commission reminds us in its written observations, with the company wishing to take part in the tender. A company that has obtained permission from the authorities to pay the tax it owes in instalments, or - to use the expression the national court employs - which has regularised its situation vis-à-vis the tax authority, will receive a certificate from that authority stating that it has fulfilled its obligations within the meaning of Article 29 of Directive 92/50. (15)

3. The effects of lodging an administrative or judicial appeal

31. The last point raised by the referring court on the interpretation of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50 concerns circumstances in which a company has lodged an administrative or judicial appeal against a decision of the authority, contesting the amount of the social security contributions or the taxes which it owes. In this case, the file shows that La Cascina lodged administrative appeals by two letters dated 6 February 2002 and addressed to INAIL. The referring court cites on that point judgment No 890 of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per l'Umbria of 30 November 2002 which found that since the company concerned had lodged an appeal against its tax assessment before the tax courts, it could not be excluded from taking part in the tender on the ground that it was not in compliance with its obligations relating to the payment of taxes. According to the referring court, the Consiglio di Stato has adopted that same stance. (16)

32. In its written observations, the Italian Government was of the view that not even the lodging of a judicial appeal disputing the amount of the taxes or social security contributions due should preclude a finding that the company in question has not fulfilled its obligations within the meaning of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50. However, at the hearing, that government conceded that if the appeal had been lodged before the application to take part in the tender was made, the effect could be to prevent the company from being excluded, provided that the contracting authority was informed of the existence of that appeal.

33. The Commission also adopted a qualified position at the hearing, suggesting that a distinction be made between cases in which the applicant cites an administrative error on its part and those in which the taxpayer is simply asking the authority to exercise leniency. Permission to take part in the tender would be accorded in the first case only.

34. La Cascina and Zilch, however, claim that respect for the right of defence, protected by Article 24 of the Italian Constitution, means that a company which has lodged a judicial or administrative appeal cannot be held not to be in compliance with its fiscal or social obligations.

35. Community law, in this instance subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50, merely provides for the exclusion of a company which has not fulfilled the obligations to which that article refers. It is, however, for the national legislation to determine the amount a company owes by way of taxes or social security contributions as well as the consequences, so far as its position vis-à-vis the authorities is concerned, of lodging an administrative or judicial appeal.

36. It is undeniable that an appeal against a decision of the tax authority may have different effects in law depending on the national law in question. Whether or not the appeal has suspensory effect, for example, and the conditions determining whether the court allows it, vary from one legal system to another. (17) Consequently, the effect of the diversity of national legislations could be that some companies which have lodged an appeal will be allowed to take part in a tender, whereas others, taxed in a different Member State, will be excluded from that same tender because they are not considered to be in compliance with their fiscal and social obligations.

37. However, since the lodging of an appeal corresponds to the exercise of a right, the automatic consequence should not be to exclude the applicant from all tenders, particularly since that action is not, in itself, likely to affect a company's reliability, that being what subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50 are seeking to ascertain. To exclude a company because it has lodged an appeal would be all the more inconvenient because if, on completion of the appeal proceedings, its appeal was allowed, its exclusion could be contested and result in the need for compensation. In some circumstances, annulling the decision to exclude could result in annulment of the award of the contract.

38. But, if the automatic effect of simply lodging an appeal were that the appellant would have to be allowed to take part in the tender, the risk would be that companies would be encouraged to lodge appeals inappropriately or in order to delay matters. Furthermore, if, after it had won the contract, a company failed in its appeal, its competitors would have been disadvantaged but could not challenge the award procedure.

39. Community law does not prescribe either one of those alternatives. In point of fact, Directive 92/50 accords the States a margin of discretion to assess whether or not companies which have lodged an appeal are in compliance with their tax obligations. That matter of fact is determined by the national legal system of origin of the companies wishing to tender, whereas the consequences for admission to the tender are established in accordance with the law of the contracting authority, provided that the right of defence and the principle of equal treatment between companies are observed. In that way, all of the potential participants in a tender are subject to uniform rules.

40. The guarantees required for the exercise of the right of defence, as regards the lodging of an appeal, are a matter for the national law and the procedures it lays down, as applied by the national courts (as, for example, in this case, by the Consiglio di Stato), subject to the observance of Community law and in particular its fundamental principles. (18)

41. The obligation to afford candidates equal treatment requires that the tax position of companies, determined by their national law of origin, must be recognised in exactly the same way in terms of the consequences for their admission to the tender. Consequently, the Italian legal system, which stipulates, in accordance with constitutional principles in particular, that companies which have lodged an appeal against a tax debt may not, on that ground, be prevented from taking part in a public tender, is compatible with the requirements of Community law, provided that the same rule applies to all participants in the tender that have lodged a similar appeal in another Member State.

42. Consequently, subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50 do not preclude a national rule or an interpretation of the national rules, according to which a company which has lodged an administrative or judicial appeal is deemed to have fulfi lled its obligations until final judgment is handed down.

43. In the light of the above considerations, the answer to the second question, as reformulated, should be that the concept of having fulfilled obligations' within the meaning of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as requiring actual payment of the obligations at issue, in the amount of and by the deadline as determined by the national law, and does not preclude a national rule or an interpretation of the national rules according to which a company which has lodged an administrative or judicial appeal is deemed to have fulfilled its obligations until final judgment is handed down.

C - The timelimit for furnishing evidence that the qualitative selection criteria have been respected 44. The third question submitted to the Court concerns the timelimit within which companies must furnish evidence that they meet the qualitative selection criteria set out in subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50. Let me make the preliminary point here that, as the Austrian Government states in its written observations, that assessment must take place on a single date. Three possible dates could, therefore, a priori be selected: the expiry of the timelimit for the request to participate; the expiry of the deadline to submit tenders or the point at which the contract is awarded.

45. The Commission contends that the material date must be the timelimit for applying to take part in the tender. As far as the Austrian Government is concerned, the service provider may furnish evidence that he has fulfilled his obligations in regard to tax and the payment of social security contributions until the deadline for the submission of tenders expires. However, La Cascina and Zilch claim that a company should be free to prove that it meets the qualitative selection criteria so long as the contract has yet to be provisionally awarded.

46. It is settled case-law that the system for awarding public service contracts set in place by Directive 92/50 is structured around two phases: the first involves selecting the candidates who will be allowed to take part on the basis of their technical and financial standing and other qualitative criteria, and the second, evaluating the tenders submitted in accordance with the award criteria. (19) All of the directives relating to public contracts separate the award procedure into two phases in this way. (20)

47. More often than not, the conceptual division of the procedure into two separate phases coincides with a time lapse between them. Initially, for example, the contracting authority will invite economic operators to register their interest in a tender within a specific timelimit and to furnish the evidence that they meet the qualitative selection criteria that apply to the particular contract.

When that initial phase is completed, those selected to tender will be set another deadline within which to submit a full tender. Finally, the contract will be definitively awarded in accordance with the previously established criteria for its award.

48. Dividing the award procedure into two separate phases benefits both the contracting authority, which will consider only tenders from companies of proven standing, and the tenderers who will make the necessary effort to put together a tender only if their standing meets the requirements of the contracting authority.

49. If the tender is organised in this way, companies can be allowed to furnish evidence that they meet the qualitative selection criteria only until the deadline for applying to take part in the tender expires. Indeed, extending the deadline beyond that date would have the practical effect of preventing the contracting authority from evaluating the capacity of companies to take part in the tender before it embarked on detailed examination of the tenders. (21)

50. However, the award procedure may consist in just one phase without being in breach of Directive 92/50. In fact, the distinction between the selection criteria for economic operators and the contract award criteria does not require that those criteria should always be assessed at separate junctures. On the contrary, it is established in the abovementioned Beentjes and GAT judgments that [e]ven though the directive does not rule out the possibility that examination of the tenderer's suitability and the award of the contract may take place simultaneously, the two procedures are governed by different rules'. (22) It is clear from that case-law, which can be transposed to the interpretation of Directive 92/50, that the contracting authority is free to examine simultaneously whether candidates meet the qualitative selection criteria, giving them the right to tender, and the tenders themselves in the light of the contract award criteria.

51. In that context, the evidence that the qualitative selection criteria are met could be furnished until the deadline for the submission of tenders expires. Indeed, if the contracting authority is to assess compliance with the selection criteria and the tenders submitted at one and the same time, there is no point in setting two different timelimits for the submission of information concerning compliance with the selection criteria, on the one hand, and details of the tender submitted, on the other. However, evidence that the qualitative selection criteria are met will not be able to be furnished subsequently, since any further amendment to a company's file after that deadline had expired would mean that candidates were no longer being treated equally. (23)

52. Furthermore, were a company able to be permitted to prove that it met the qualitative selection criteria after the contract had been awarded, the two phases in the award procedure would cease to be distinct. As the Italian Government points out in that connection, there is also the risk that companies would not fulfil their tax obligations until they had learnt that the outcome of an award procedure was in their favour. But it would not be acceptable for companies to include their tax obligations in a cost-benefit analysis in that way and unduly delay settling their debts to the State.

53. It follows from the foregoing that the answer to the third question, as reformulated, must be that a company may be allowed to furnish evidence that it has fulfilled the qualitative selection criteria applicable to a contract until the deadline for applying to take part in the tender expires, unless the contracting authority is examining compliance with the selection criteria and the candidates' tenders simultaneously, in which case the material deadline will be the timelimit set for the submission of tenders.

III - Conclusion

54. In the light of these considerations, I propose that the Court answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Tribunale amministrativo regionale del Lazio as follows:

1) The expression to have fulfilled obligations' which appears in the text of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts may be construed as meaning to be in compliance with its obligations', as stated in the Italian transposing legislation, since both expressions mean the same.

2) The concept of having fulfilled obligations' within the meaning of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as requiring actual payment of the obligations at issue, the amount of and deadline for which is determined by the national law, and does not preclude a national rule or an interpretation of the national rules according to which a company which has lodged an administrative or judicial appeal is deemed to have fulfilled its obligations until final judgment is handed down.

3) A company may be allowed to furnish evidence that it has fulfilled the qualitative selection criteria applicable to a contract, in accordance with subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50 until the deadline for applying to take part in the tender expires, unless the contracting authority is examining compliance with the selection criteria and the candidates' tenders simultaneously, in which case the material deadline will be the timelimit set for the submission of tenders.

The need for a compatible interpretation was originally based in part on Article 10 EC: Case 14/83 Von Colson and Kamann [1984] ECR 1891, paragraph 26: However, the Member States' obligation arising from a directive to achieve the result envisaged by the directive and their duty under Article [10] of the Treaty to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure the fulfilment of that obligation, is binding on all the authorities of a Member State including, for matters within their jurisdiction, the courts'; Case C-106/89 Marleasing [1990] ECR I-4135, paragraph 8. See, on this subject, S. Prechal, Directives in EC Law , 2 nd edition, Oxford, 2005.

(5) - As regards Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001 (OJ 2001 L 285, p. 1, hereinafter Directive 93/37'), see Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraph 88: '[t]he title of Directive 93/37 and the second recital in its preamble show that its aim is simply to coordinate national procedures for the award of public works contracts, although it does not lay down a complete system of Community rules on the matter (Joined Cases C-285/99 and C286/99 Lombardini and Mantovani [2001] ECR I-9233, paragraph 33)'.

(6) - Article 29 of Directive 92/50 in fact provides that:... may be excluded ...' (my italics).

(7) - As far as public works contracts are concerned, the equivalent of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50 is Article 24(e) and (f) of Directive 93/37 The Italian version of the latter employs the expression che non sia in regola'; the French qui n'est pas en règle'; the Spanish que no esté al corriente'; the Portuguese nao tenham cumprido'; the English has not fulfilled' and the German nicht erfüllt haben'. Article 20(1)(e) and (f) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), last amended by Directive 2001/78 also employs the expression qui n'est pas en règle' in the French version, while the Italian opts for the expression non abbia adempiuto' and the Portuguese nao tenham cumprido'. Article 45(2)(e) and (f) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public work contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) is significant, since its purpose is to consolidate the provisions in force in the raft of directives, including Directives 92/50 and 93/37. The French version employs the expression qui n'est pas en règle', the Italian che non sia in regola', the Spanish que no esté al corriente', the Portuguese nao tenham cumprido', the English has not fulfilled' and the German version nicht erfüllt haben'.

(8) - Case C-176/98 [1999] ECR I-8607, paragraph 25.

(9) - In that connection, see point 26 of the Opinion of Advocate General Léger in Holst Italia , cited in footnote 8 above, according to which the aim of the qualitative selection criteria is also to protect the interests of the contracting authority.

(10) - Case C-275/98 Unitron Scandinavia and 3-S [1999] ECR, paragraph 31; Case C-94/99 ARGE [2000] ECR I-11037, paragraph 24; Case C-324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I-10745, paragraph 61; Case C-92/00 HI [2002] ECR I-5553, paragraph 45, and Case C-315/01 GAT [2003] ECR I-6351, paragraph 73. For a résumé of earlier and settled case-law on this issue, see points 20 and 21 of the Opinion of Advocate General Tizzano in the abovementioned HI. See also recital (2) of the preamble to Directive 2004/18, according to which [t]he award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency'.

(12) - That aim is laid down in the 20th recital of the preamble of Directive 92/50, according to which to eliminate practices that restrict competition in general and participation by other Member States' nationals in particular, it is necessary to improve the access of service providers to procedures for the award of contracts'. That aim is also set out in Article 13(5) of that directive, according to which [i]n any event, the number of candidates invited to participate shall be sufficient to ensure genuine competition', and in the second subparagraph of Article 27(2), according to which [i]n any event, the number of candidates invited to tender shall be sufficient to ensure genuine competition'. As regards Directive 93/37, see also Case C-247/02 Sintesi [2004] ECR I0000, paragraph 35.

(14) - Moreover, because the payment of social security obligations and taxes is periodic in nature, approved service providers on official lists cannot benefit from a presumption that they meet the qualitative selection criteria listed in subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29, as is clear from the first and second subparagraphs of Article 35(3).

(15) - If the request to pay the tax or social security contributions owed in instalments has yet to be approved by the authority at the material time when the company is required to prove that it has fulfilled those obligations, it will not logically be able to be considered to be in compliance with Article 29 of Directive 92/50.

(16) - Decision No 7836 of the Vth Chamber of 1 December 2003. Attached at annex 3 of La Cascina's written observations to the Court.

(17) - If the national law confers suspensory effect on the lodging of an appeal, the company which has lodged that appeal will have to be deemed to have fulfilled its obligations, within the meaning of subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29 of Directive 92/50 until a judgment with the force of res judicata has been delivered in regard to its claim. However, if the obligation to make payment is not suspended under the national law, the applicant will still be required to meet its obligations to make payment to comply with subparagraphs (e) and (f) of the first paragraph of Article 29, subject to the possibility of a subsequent refund. There are, of course, other possibilities - the obligation to make payment may, for example, be suspended, provided the company provides a guarantee.

(18) - Case C-60/92 Otto [1993] ECR I-5683, paragraph 14.

(19) - Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, paragraph 15, according to which the examination of the suitability of contractors to carry out the contracts to be awarded and the awarding of the contract are two different operations in the procedure for the award of a public works contract'. See also the Opinion of Advocate General Darmon in that same case, at point 36, in which he states that [t]he directive thus draws a clear distinction between the criteria for checking the suitability of a contractor, which concern the qualities of the contractor as such, and those for awarding the contract, which relate to the qualities of the service which he offers, of the work which he proposes to carry out'. See also GAT cited in footnote 10 above, paragraph 59.

(20) - System common to all the directives on public contracts and retained in Directive 2004/18. Aricle 45 of that directive lists again the qualitative criteria to which economic operators tendering for a contract may be subject.

(21) - However, it is open to the contracting authority to establish that a company fails to meet the qualitative selection criteria until the point at which the contract is awarded.

(22) - Beentjes , cited in footnote 19 above, paragraph 16, and GAT , cited in footnote 10 above, paragraph 60.

(23) - See, by analogy, Makedoniko Metro and Mikhaniki , cited above, in which Directive 93/37 is interpreted as not precluding the prohibition, under the national legislation, of changes to the composition of a joint venture participating in a tender for a public contract after the tenders have been submitted.

Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale del Lazio, Division Ia, by order of that court of 22 April 2004 in the case of 'La Cascina' s.c.r.l. and Zilch s.r.l. v Ministry of Defence, Ministry of Economy and Finance, and Pedus Service P. Dussmann s.r.l. and Others

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of Division Ia of the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale del Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio) of 22 April 2004, received at the Court Registry on 2 June 2004, for a preliminary ruling in the case of 'La Cascina' s.c.r.l. and Zilch s.r.l. v Ministry of Defence, Ministry of Economy and Finance and Pedus Service P. Dussmann s.r.l. and Others, on the following questions:

1) Must subparagraphs (e) and (f) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC1 of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as regards only the abovementioned provisions, be interpreted as meaning that, where the Community legislature employs the expression 'has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority' or 'has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of taxes in accordance with the legal provisions of the country of the contracting authority', the legislature intended to refer - solely and exclusively - to a situation in which the person concerned has - when the period prescribed for submitting applications to participate in a public tendering procedure expires (or in any event before the award of the contract, as indicated under point III.4 above) - fulfilled those obligations by paying in full and in time?

2) Consequently, must the Italian national implementing measure (Article 12 (d) and (e) of Legislative Decree No 157 of 17 March 1995) - in so far as, unlike the Community provision cited above, it allows the exclusion from tendering procedures of persons who 'are not in compliance in respect of obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions for employees, in accordance with Italian legislation or the legislation of the State in which they are established' or who 'are not in compliance in respect of obligations relating to the payment of taxes, in accordance with Italian legislation or the legislation of the State in which they are established' - be interpreted with reference solely to the failure - verifiable at the date mentioned above (the expiry of the period prescribed for submitting applications to participate or immediately before the award, even provisional, of the contract) - to fulfil those obligations, without any importance being attached to subsequent 'regularisation' of their position?

3) Or, conversely (if, in the light of the indications set out in question 2 above, the national measure is held not to be in harmony with the rationale and function of the Community provision), may the national legislature be regarded, in the light of the limitations to which it is subject for the purpose of giving effect to the Community rules contained in the Directive at issue, as being entitled to introduce the option of allowing the admission to a tendering procedure of persons who, although not 'in compliance' when the period prescribed for participation in the procedure expires, nevertheless show that they can regularise their position (and have taken positive steps to do so) before the award of the contract?

4) And, if the interpretation referred to in question 3 above is held to be workable - thus permitting the introduction of more flexible rules than would be allowed on a stricter interpretation of the 'fulfilment' of obligations referred to by the Community legislature - do such rules conflict with fundamental Community principles, such as the principle of equal treatment for all citizens of the Union, or - with regard only to public tendering procedures - that of equal conditions for all persons who have applied for admission to such procedures?

Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Consiglio di Stato in sede guirisdizionale, Sezione Quinta, by order of that court of 27 January 2004 in the case of SABA Italia SpA against the Comune di Bolzano and SEAB SpA

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Consiglio di Stato in sede guirisdizionale (Council of State sitting as a court) of 27 January 2004, received at the Court Registry on 24 May 2004, for a preliminary ruling in the case of SABA Italia SpA against the Comune di Bolzano and SEAB SpA on the following question:

'Is the direct award, that is to say, in derogation from the procedures for the selection of contractors laid down in Directive 92/50/EEC [1], of the management of public pay car parks to a public limited company the entire capital of which is publicly owned within the meaning of paragraph 6(b) of Article 44 of Law No 1 of the Region of Trentino-Alto Adige of 4 January 1993, as amended by Article 10 of Regional Law No 10 of 23 January 1998, compatible with Community law, in particular with the freedom to provide services, the prohibition of discrimination and the obligation to guarantee equal treatment, transparency and free competition referred to in Articles 12, 45, 46, 49 and 86 of the EC Treaty?'

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 8 June 2006,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 18 January 2007,

Judgment

1. By its application, the Commission of the European Communities seeks a declaration from the Court that the Republic of Finland has failed to comply with its obligations under Article 28 EC by allowing Senaatti-kiinteistöt (formerly Valtion kiinteistölaitos), the authority responsible for the management of Finnish government buildings, in the context of a contract for catering equipment, to infringe fundamental rules of the EC Treaty, and in particular the principle of non-discrimination, which implies an obligation of transparency.

Facts of the dispute and the pre-litigation procedure

2. In March 1998, as part of a restricted procedure, Senaatti-kiinteistöt published in the Official

Journal of the European Communities and in the Suomen säädöskokoelma (Official Journal of the Republic of Finland) a call for tenders concerning a public works contract for the renovation and alteration of the premises of the regional administration of Turku (the initial call for tenders').

3. That contract was divided into lots, the individual value of which ranged from FIM 1 000 000 to FIM 22 000 000. Tenders could be made for one, several or all of the lots. One of those lots concerned the supply and installation of catering equipment for the kitchen of the administration's restaurant.

4. The parties are at odds over the question whether, at that stage of the tendering procedure, a tender was submitted to the contracting authority in respect of that lot. According to the Republic of Finland, just one tender was submitted - by the company Kopal Markkinointi Oy - whereas, according to the Commission, this was not the case.

5. In early 2000, the contracting authority wrote directly to four undertakings, inviting them to tender for the supply and installation of catering equipment.

6. By letter of 14 February 2000, the contracting authority informed the addressees of the earlier letter that it had decided to reject all tenders received because they were too expensive. The Republic of Finland and the Commission disagree as to whether that letter was sent to all those undertakings which, in response to the initial call for tenders, had submitted a bid for the supply and installation of catering equipment.

7. In the letter of 14 February 2000, the contracting authority also states that it has entrusted the company Amica Ravintolat Oy - to which the restaurant of the Turku regional administration was leased - with the purchase of the catering equipment on its behalf up to a maximum amount of FIM 1 050 000 and invites the addressees of the letter to submit their tenders directly to that company.

8. Amica Ravintolat Oy finally bought the equipment in question from Hackman-Metos Oy.

9. Having received a complaint querying the regularity of the procedure followed by Senaatti-kiinteistöt, the Commission gave the Republic of Finland formal notice by letter of 17 July 2002 to submit its observations within two months of receipt of that letter.

10. The Finnish authorities replied to the letter of formal notice by letter of 3 September 2002.

11. On the view that the Republic of Finland had failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 28 EC, the Commission issued a reasoned opinion on 19 December 2002 calling on the Republic of Finland to take the measures necessary to comply with that opinion within two months of its notification.

12. By letter of 12 February 2003, the Finnish authorities disputed the infringement alleged by the Commission, arguing that, in the present case, Article 28 EC had been complied with, as had the principle of non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency, which derive from that provision.

13. Since it was not convinced by the explanations provided by the Finnish Authorities, the Commission decided to bring the present action.

14. By order of the President of the Court of 14 October 2004, the Kingdom of Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Kingdom of the Netherlands were granted leave to intervene in support of the form of order sought by the Republic of Finland.

15. The Republic of Finland contends that the Commission's application is inadmissible.

16. According to that Member State, the reasoned opinion does not refer to the same objections as those contained in the application. Thus, in the reasoned opinion, the Commission stated that the contracting authority ought to have ensured a sufficient degree of advertising and that the infringement complained of arose from the fact that it was the tenant of the Turku regional administration's restaurant who had concluded the contract for the supply of catering equipment, acting as the authority's agent; in its application, on the other hand, the Commission states that the contracting authority ought to have organised an invitation to tender and that the infringement arises from the fact that the invitation to tender was not successful and that, therefore, the contract in question had not been the subject of a published call for tenders.

17. In that way, the Commission has widened the subject-matter of the action as delimited in the pre-litigation procedure.

18. In this regard, although it is true that the subject-matter of proceedings brought under Article 226 EC is circumscribed by the pre-litigation procedure provided for in that provision and that, consequently, the Commission's reasoned opinion and the application must be based on the same objections, that requirement cannot go so far as to mean that in every case exactly the same wording must be used in both, where the subject-matter of the proceedings has not been extended or altered but simply narrowed (see, in particular, Case C229/00 Commission v Finland [2003] ECR I-5727, paragraphs 44 and 46, Case C-433/03 Commission v Germany [2005] ECR I-6985, paragraph 28, and Case C-150/04 Commission v Denmark [2007] ECR I-0000, paragraph 67). Accordingly, in its application the Commission may clarify its initial grounds of objection provided, however, that it does not alter the subject-matter of the dispute (Case C-67/99 Commission v Ireland [2001] ECR I-5757, paragraph 23, judgment of 12 October 2004 in Case C-328/02 Commission v Greece , not published in the ECR, paragraph 32, and Case C-494/01 Commission v Ireland [2005] ECR I-3331, paragraph 38).

19. It should be pointed out, however, that in the present case the Commission has neither extended nor altered nor even narrowed the subject-matter of the action, as delimited in the reasoned opinion of 19 December 2002.

20. In fact, not only is it clear from the wording of the heads of claim of the reasoned opinion and of the Commission's application, which are framed in almost exactly the same terms, that those documents are based on the same objections, but it is also apparent that, by asserting in its application that the contracting authority should have organised an invitation for tender, the Commission merely clarified the objection alleged initially in its reasoned opinion, that is to say, that the contract for the supply of catering equipment for the regional administration of Turku should have been sufficiently advertised.

21. However, the Court may of its own motion examine whether the conditions laid down in Article 226 EC for bringing an action for failure to fulfil obligations are satisfied (Case C-362/90 Commission v Italy [1992] ECR I-2353, paragraph 8, Case C-439/99 Commission v Italy [2002] ECR I-305, paragraph 8, and Case C98/04 Commission v United Kingdom [2006] ECR I-4003, paragraph 16).

22. It is clear from Article 38(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, and from the case-law relating to that provision, that an application must state the subject-matter of the proceedings and a summary of the pleas in law on which the application is based, and that that statement must be sufficiently clear and precise to enable the defendant to prepare its defence and the Court to rule on the application. It is therefore necessary for the essential points of law and of fact on which a case is based to be indicated coherently and intelligibly in the application itself (Case C178/00 Italy v Commission [2003] ECR I-303, paragraph 6, judgment of 14 October 2004 in Case C55/03 Commission v Spain , not published in the ECR, paragraph 23, and Case C199/03 Ireland v Commission [2005] ECR I8027, paragraph 50) and for the heads of claim to be set out unambiguously so that the Court does not rule ultra petita or indeed fail to rule on an objection (Case C296/01 Commission v France [2003] ECR I13909, paragraph 121, and Case C255/04 Commission v France [2006] ECR I5251, paragraph 24).

23. In the present case, however, the Commission's application does not fulfil those requirements.

24. By its action, the Commission seeks a declaration that the Republic of Finland failed to comply with its obligations under Article 28 EC on the ground that, in the context of a contract for catering equipment, Senaatti-kiinteistöt infringed fundamental Treaty rules and in particular the principle of non-discrimination, which implies an obligation of transparency.

25. As the Advocate General points out in point 45 of her Opinion, the heads of claim as formulated in the application are ambiguous and do not enable the Court to identify clearly and precisely the misconduct which the Commission imputes to the Republic of Finland, since it brackets together Article 28 EC, fundamental Treaty provisions, the principle of non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency.

26. In addition, even if the Commission's action were intended to obtain a declaration of infringement of Article 28 EC, neither the heads of claim of the application nor the submissions made in the body of the application identify with clarity and precision which measure is alleged in the present case to constitute a quantitative restriction on imports or a measure having equivalent effect within the meaning of that article.

27. In fact, the Commission merely calls into question the contracting authority's conduct in the context of a contract for catering equipment'.

28. Furthermore, at no point in the proceedings was the Commission able to state coherently and precisely the facts which provide the basis for the objections on which it relies in support of its application.

29. Thus, in its application the Commission does not furnish any precise evidence in relation to the first call for tenders, but merely states that it was unsuccessful in relation to the acquisition of catering equipment'.

30. In that respect, neither the submissions made in the body of the application nor the Commission's replies to the Court's questions at the hearing enable the Court to establish with certainty whether a tender for the supply and installation of catering equipment was submitted to the contracting authority in the context of the call for tenders.

31. By the same token, in its reply the Commission asserts - without, however, demonstrating the truth of that assertion - that at least one of the undertakings which submitted such a tender was not one of the four undertakings contacted by the contracting authority in 2000, and that the lot relating to the supply and installation of catering equipment which was part of the contract announced in the initial call for tenders did not have the same subject-matter as the contract which gave rise to the contacts made during the same year.

32. In those circumstances, the Court does not have sufficient evidence to enable it to appreciate exactly the scope of the infringement of Community law imputed to the Republic of Finland and thus to determine whether there is a breach of obligations as alleged by the Commission (see, to that effect, Commission v United Kingdom , cited above, paragraph 18).

33. Consequently, the action must be dismissed as inadmissible.

Costs

34. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Republic of Finland has applied for costs and the Commission's action is inadmissible, the Commission must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby:

1. Dismisses the action as inadmissible;

2. Orders the Commission of the European Communities to pay the costs.

Opinion of Advocate General Sharpston delivered on 18 January 2007 Commission of the European Communities v Republic of Finland. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Public supply contract for catering equipment - Article 28 EC - Quantitative restrictions on imports - Measures having equivalent effect - Principle of non-discrimination - Obligation of transparency. Case C-195/04.

1. This action raises before the Court the question of the extent of the transparency obligation imposed on a contracting authority awarding a contract whose value falls below the threshold specified in the relevant Community public procurement directive. Although a contract whose value is below the relevant threshold may still be significant in economic terms, I shall for convenience refer to such a contract in this Opinion as a low value contract'.

2. The Commission seeks a declaration under Article 226 EC that Finland has failed to comply with its obligations under Article 28 EC, since [the authority responsible in Finland for the management of government buildings] in procuring catering equipment infringed fundamental rules of the EC Treaty and, in particular, the principle of non-discrimination which implies an obligation of transparency'.

Relevant Community law

3. Council Directive 93/36/EEC (2) coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts lays down requirements for the award of such contracts.

4. In so far as relevant the preamble provides:

[10] ... supply contracts of less than [EUR 214 326 (3)] may be exempted from competition as provided under this Directive and it is appropriate to provide for their exemption from coordination measures;

[14] ... to ensure development of effective competition in the field of public contracts, it is necessary that contract notices drawn up by the contracting authorities of Member States be advertised throughout the Community; ... the information contained in these notices must enable suppliers established in the Community to determine whether the proposed contracts are of interest to them; ... for this purpose, it is appropriate to give them adequate information about the goods to be supplied and the conditions attached to their supply; ... more particularly, in restricted procedures advertisement is intended to enable suppliers of Member States to express their interest in contracts by seeking from the contracting authorities invitations to tender under the required conditions'.

5. Under Article 1(a), public supply contracts include contracts for the purchase of products between a supplier and a contracting authority. Contracting authorities are defined in Article 1(b) as the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

6. In accordance with Article 5(1)(a)(i), the substantive harmonising provisions of the directive (Articles 6 to 27) - which include the common advertising rules set out in Articles 9 to 14 - are applicable only to public supply contracts awarded by contracting authorities referred to in Article 1(b) where the estimated value net of value added tax (VAT) is not less than [EUR 214 326 (4)]'. Thus, low value contracts are not caught by the common advertising rules; and Member States are under no obligation to apply the rules in the directive to those contracts, although they may of course choose to do so as a matter of national law.

7. Contracts falling within the scope of the public procurement directives must be awarded using an open, a restricted or a negotiated procedure. Under a restricted procedure a contract notice is advertised inviting undertakings to express an interest in tendering for the contract and the contracting authority subsequently invites tenders from a limited number of undertakings. Under a negotiated procedure the contracting authority may select undertakings with whom to negotiate the contract without advertising the contract and without holding a competition. (5)

8. According to Article 6(3)(a), contracting authorities may award their supply contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice in the absence of tenders or appropriate tenders in response to an open or restricted procedure insofar as the original terms of the contract are not substantially altered and provided that a report is communicated to the Commission'.

Background to the infringement proceedings

9. The Commission and Finland rely on partially differing accounts of the facts giving rise to the present action, which have been hotly contested throughout the proceedings. I will therefore set out the relevant background in some detail, noting and evaluating the points of disagreement.

The first stage: March 1998

10. In March 1998, under a restricted procedure, the contracting authority (6) published in the Official Journals of both the Community and of Finland (7) a notice inviting expressions of interest in a public works contract for renovation of, and alteration works to, the premises of the regional administration of Turku. Finland refers to this as the first stage'. (8)

11. The contract was subdivided into lots. These included, inter alia, the installation of catering equipment. In accordance with Annex IV to Council Directive 93/37/EEC (9) it was specified that tenders could be made for one, several or all of the lots. Individual lots varied in value between FIM 1 million and 22 million (between EUR 168 000 and EUR 3.7 million approximately), and the aggregate value of the lots was above the threshold from which the Works Directive applied. (10) The works were to be carried out in two tranches.

12. The kitchen in which the equipment was to be installed is part of the restaurant located within the Turku regional administration's premises.

13. The parties are at odds over whether any tender to supply catering equipment was received in the first stage.

14. In reply to a question from the Court at the hearing, Finland stated that just one tender to supply the catering equipment was received in the first stage, from Kopal Markkinointi Oy (Kopal'). Finland was unable to provide further details of that tender. It stated that, since no other tenders had been received, there was no means of comparing tenders. Therefore, Kopal's tender had been rejected.

15. The Commission said that, so far as it was aware, Kopal did not submit a tender in 1998.

16. No further evidence relating to the first stage has been placed before the Court. In any event, the parties agree that no tender was accepted at this point for the supply of catering equipment.

The second stage: early 2000

17. In early 2000 (11) the contracting authority wrote directly to four undertakings, inviting them to tender for the supply and installation of catering equipment. On the basis of the follow-up letter of 9 April 2001 (12) it may be deduced that those four undertakings were Dieta Oy (Dieta'), Electrolux Professional Oy (Electrolux'), Kopal, and the eventual supplier Hackman-Metos Oy (Hackman-Metos'). Thus it was the contracting authority who first approached Hackman-Metos. Finland claims that, those undertakings included a representative in Finland of a catering equipment supplier located in another Member State (presumably Electrolux). The Commission has not challenged that statement.

18. By this point, the restaurant in which the catering equipment was to be installed had been leased by the contracting authority to Amica Ravintolat Oy (Amica' or the tenant'). The contracting authority agreed with Amica that that company would purchase the catering equipment on the contracting authority's behalf. The contracting authority agreed to pay FIM 1 050 000 (about EUR 177 000) towards the purchase of the catering equipment. That amount is less than the threshold above which Directive 93/36 applied. (13)

The third stage: later in 2000

19. In February 2000 the contracting authority issued a notice which informed its addressees that all tenders received had been rejected because of their high cost. Addressees were however invited to approach the tenant, whose contact details were provided, with new offers. Finland refers to this invitation and what followed as the third stage'.

20. The parties disagree as to whether that notice was addressed to all undertakings who had tendered in 2000 to supply catering equipment.

21. Finland claims that the notice was sent to all four undertakings. In its reply, the Commission alleges that not all undertakings which previously tendered were informed of the rejection of all tenders and subsequently invited to tender under the third stage'. According to the Commission, at least one undertaking, Rakentajamestarit Oy (Rakentajamestarit'), which had previously tendered to supply the catering equipment was not informed of the rejection of tenders and was not invited to tender under the third stage. It refers to a tender (annexed to the reply) which was submitted by Rakentajamestarit.

22. Finland correctly objects that in submitting evidence of Rakentajamestarit's tender only in its reply without explanation the Commission has not complied with Article 42(1) of the Rules of Procedure, which requires that a party offering further evidence in reply or rejoinder must give reasons for the delay in offering it. (14) Finland also points out that Rakentajamestarit's tender related to the main works (which included installing kitchen furniture), not to the supply of catering equipment.

23. I therefore consider that the evidence of Rakentajamestarit's tender is inadmissible; and that, in any event, it also appears to be irrelevant. (15)

24. The tenant concluded the contract with Hackman-Metos. (16) The parties have not been able to inform the Court when that happened. At the hearing the Commission indicated that two years had elapsed between the notice in the Official Journal and the purchase of the catering equipment. I therefore assume that the contract was probably concluded during the first part of 2000. (17)

25. By letter of 9 April 2001, the contracting authority provided the addressees of the notice issued in February 2000 with a form for appealing against the decision to reject the tenders made under the second stage.

26. Pausing here to recapitulate: in the first stage, under a restricted procedure, a contract notice was published in the Official Journals of the EU and of Finland inviting applications to tender for a contract of which the installation of catering equipment was a separate lot. It seems that one undertaking, Kopal, may have offered to supply catering equipment in the first stage (that is, in the course of the restricted procedure) but that even if it did so its tender was rejected. In the second stage, the contracting authority approached Kopal and three other potential suppliers - Dieta, Electrolux and Hackman-Metos - and invited them to tender, but then rejected all four tenders on the ground that they were too expensive. In the third stage, the contracting authority gave the incoming tenant, Amica, power to negotiate as its agent with such of those four undertakings (Kopal, Dieta, Electrolux and Hackman-Metos) as chose to approach it, having been invited to do so by the contracting authority. Amica concluded the contract for catering equipment with Hackman-Metos.

27. A complaint regarding the contested award was lodged with the Commission, which sent Finland a letter of formal notice on 18 July 2002. The Commission took the view that the contracting authority had not ensured that the contract had been awarded with a sufficient degree of advertising and that Finland was therefore in breach of its obligations under Article 28 EC (sic). The Commission added that, according to the information it had received, Amica (acting as agent for the contracting authority) had concluded the contract with an undertaking with which it shared close links and employees, but the Commission does not appear to have pursued this allegation beyond the pre-litigation procedure.

28. Finland replied by letter dated 3 September 2002. It accepted that public procurement procedures were subject to advertising and transparency requirements, but denied that it had infringed Article 28 EC or any other rule of Community law.

29. Not satisfied by Finland's reply, the Commission sent Finland a reasoned opinion on 19 December 2002. It relied expressly on the Court's judgment in Telaustria and Telefonadress (Telaustria ') (18) and repeated that, in its view, the contracting authority had failed to guarantee a sufficient degree of advertising (19) for the procurement contract.

30. Not satisfied by Finland's reply of 12 February 2003 (which merely reiterated its position), the Commission lodged the present infringement action. (20)

31. Following initiation of the present infringement proceedings by the Commission, Finland informed the Commission on 1 December 2003 that it intended to reinforce the obligation of transparency in Finland. (21)

32. Denmark, Germany and the Netherlands have made submissions as intervening parties. At the hearing on 8 June 2006 the Commission, Finland, Germany and the Netherlands made oral submissions.

Finland's objection of inadmissibility

33. Finland argues that the action is inadmissible. According to the case-law of the Court, the subject-matter of the action is delimited by the pre-litigation procedure and the application cannot be founded on any objections other than those raised in the pre-litigation procedure. Finland considers that the Commission has expanded the subject-matter of the action beyond the scope outlined in the reasoned opinion in two respects.

34. First, the Commission states for the first time in the application that the contracting authority ought to have organised an invitation to tender'. The reasoned opinion merely mentioned the obligation to ensure a sufficient degree of advertising. (22)

35. Second, the application states that the initial invitation to tender was unsuccessful and that the contract for catering equipment was not advertised subsequently in the form of an invitation to tender. In the reasoned opinion, however, the infringement was said to arise from the fact that the tenant, acting as the contracting authority's procurement agent, concluded the contract.

36. The Commission replies that the subject-matter of the action is set out in a precise manner on the cover page and at paragraph 23 of the application (the declaration sought). Both there and in the reasoned opinion, the essential allegation is that Finland infringed its obligations under Article 28 EC because the contracting authority breached fundamental rules of the Treaty in procuring catering equipment.

Assessment

37. Despite the loose way in which the declaration sought is framed, which I deal with below, I do not think that Finland's objection of inadmissibility is founded. The reasoned opinion concludes by alleging that in procuring catering equipment, the contracting authority was in breach of fundamental Treaty rules, and in particular the principle of non-discrimination, which implies an obligation of transparency; in consequence (it is said) Finland infringed its obligations under Article 28 EC. The application asks for a declaration that Finland has infringed its obligations under Article 28 EC because, in procuring catering equipment, the contracting authority infringed fundamental rules of the Treaty and, in particular, the principle of non-discrimination which implies an obligation of transparency. I cannot see how the way in which the Commission puts its case in those two statements can be distinguished in any meaningful way.

38. It is true that the Commission argued expressly for the first time in its application that an invitation to tender' should have been issued; and that the initial invitation to tender was unsuccessful and subsequently the contract for catering equipment was not advertised in the form of an invitation to tender. (23) However, an action is not inadmissible where the application merely expands on a charge made in the reasoned opinion and does not formulate a new charge. (24) It seems to me that the two detailed arguments set out in the application merely expand on the charge advanced in the reasoned opinion that the contract concerned was not sufficiently advertised (25) and that the obligation of transparency was therefore breached. They do not alter the subject-matter of the Commission's complaint.

39. Finland seeks to rely on Commission v Netherlands (26) and Commission v Italy. (27) In the former, the Court declared inadmissible part of the Commission's action, which concerned water pollution, that varied in geographical scope from that identified by the Commission in the pre-litigation procedure. (28) In the latter, the Commission's action was inadmissible in so far as it was based on (a) national provisions which had been referred to in the pre-litigation procedure erroneously and (b) national provisions which differed from those referred to in the pre-litigation procedure. (29) The geographical scope and the basis in national law of an infringement action clearly go to the core of the subject-matter of that action. The precise detail of the arguments advanced in the application in support of the Commission's main objection does not. Those cases may therefore be distinguished.

40. It follows that Finland's objection cannot be upheld.

The declaration sought

41. However I have serious doubts about the admissibility and merits of the Commission's action on other grounds.

42. The Court has stated that the Commission must, in the heads of claim in an application made under Article 226 EC, indicate the specific complaints on which the Court is asked to rule and that those heads of claim must be set out unambiguously so that the Court does not rule ultra petita or indeed fail to rule on a complaint. (30)

43. The Commission asks the Court to declare that Finland has failed to comply with its obligations under Article 28 EC, since [the authority responsible in Finland for the management of government buildings] in procuring catering equipment infringed fundamental rules of the EC Treaty and, in particular, the principle of non-discrimination which implies an obligation of transparency'.

44. Those terms are far from precise.

45. First, it is not clear from the text as formulated whether the Commission is asking for a declaration that (i) Article 28 EC, (ii) the non-discrimination principle which it contains, (iii) other fundamental rules of the Treaty, or (probably) (iv) a combination of the above have been infringed.

46. Second, the Commission does not explicitly state why Article 28 EC is relevant to its action.

47. Article 28 EC states that quantitative restrictions on imports and all measures having equivalent effect shall be prohibited between Member States. That prohibition covers all national measures. (31)

48. However, the Commission's application fails to identify with precision which act constitutes the measure, act or procedure which is alleged to have breached Article 28 EC. The Commission merely complains, in a general way, of the contracting authority's conduct in procuring' catering equipment.

49. I therefore consider that the heads of claim fail to indicate the specific complaints on which the Court is asked to rule and that the action should be declared inadmissible.

50. In the event that the Court does not share that view, I turn to the substance of the case.

Substance

Preliminary points

51. The Commission has failed to explain how, by not advertising the contested contract or initiating a new contract award procedure, both of which imply positive obligations, the contracting authority has infringed the negative obligation contained in Article 28 EC.

52. I should make it clear that I am not denying that Article 28 EC may create an obligation of transparency. My point is that, if so, the Commission has failed to explain that that is its case. In my view the action is therefore unfounded in so far as it fails to set out clearly how the alleged breach of the transparency obligation infringes Article 28 EC.

53. Again, in the event that the Court does not share my view, I turn to examine the Commission's complaint in detail.

54. It is common ground that the contested contract was a low value contract, and that it therefore falls outside the scope of the Directive 93/36.

55. It is moreover settled case-law that, although certain contracts are excluded from the scope of the Community directives in the field of public procurement, the contracting authorities concluding such contracts are nevertheless bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty. (32) In particular, contracting authorities are bound by the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality, which in turn implies an obligation of transparency in order to enable the contracting authorities to satisfy themselves that the principle of non-discrimination has been complied with. (33)

56. The outcome of the Commission's application thus depends on whether the measures adopted by the contracting authority in the course of procuring the catering equipment were sufficient to comply with the transparency obligation as established by the case-law. The answer to that depends on answering two further questions.

57. Did the contract notice which the contracting authority published in March 1998 under the restricted procedure in accordance with the Works Directive publicise substantially the same supply contract as was finally awarded in early 2000 and therefore ensure the necessary degree of transparency?

58. Alternatively, if it did not, did the contracting authority comply with the transparency obligation in 2000 (at stages two and three) when it twice issued invitations to tender directly to four potential tenderers?

59. In approaching these questions, I emphasise that the steps taken in 1998 (the first stage) and 2000 (the second and third stages) represent very different degrees of publicity. There can be no doubt that the transparency obligation is satisfied by publishing a contract notice in the Official Journal of the EU for a contract to be awarded under a restricted procedure (irrespective of the fact that that initial publication took place in accordance with the requirements of the Works Directive rather than Directive 93/36). It is more open to debate whether the transparency obligation is likewise fulfilled by contacting four undertakings directly.

Did the 1998 contract notice cover the supply contract awarded in early 2000 and thereby satisfy the transparency obligation?

60. Finland maintains that there was only one award procedure' for the purposes of assessing compliance with Article 28 EC. The contract for supplying catering equipment was first publicised as an independent lot within the overall public works contract for the Turku premises. That contract was advertised to all potential suppliers in the contract notice published in the Official Journal of the EU in 1998. The three stages represent three parts of the same procedure.

61. Finland considers that, in respect of a low value contract, the transparency oblig ation does not necessarily require a particular form of publication or the issue of a formal invitation to tender. The application of the transparency obligation depends on the circumstances and is primarily governed by national law. Finland is supported in this view by Denmark, Germany and the Netherlands.

62. The Commission seeks to draw a procedural distinction between each of the three stages identified above. The contracting authority failed to publish a fresh invitation to tender (34) before purchasing the catering equipment. That complaint relates to the second and third stages. Therefore, according to the Commission, there was an insufficient degree of advertising in procuring the catering equipment and the contracting authority thereby failed to comply with the transparency obligation.

63. I disagree with Finland that, formally speaking, the three stages formed a single award procedure. The first stage consisted of a restricted procedure which was unsuccessful as regards the lot concerning the supply of catering equipment. Under the second stage, the contracting authority contacted four undertakings directly, at least three of which had submitted no tender under the restricted procedure. Thus the second stage launched a separate, negotiated procedure. After the tenders received under that procedure were rejected, a further negotiated procedure was launched in the third stage.

64. That being said, it is necessary to examine whether, on the facts, the second and third stages can be regarded as a direct consequence of the unsuccessful first stage so that transparency requirements with respect to the second and third stages were already satisfied by the contract notice published in the Official Journal of the EU in 1998.

65. In order to answer that question, one has to establish, first, whether the 1998 notice published under the restricted procedure should properly be read as inviting applications to tender for the supply of the catering equipment as a separate lot and, second, whether the terms of the supply contract advertised under the restricted procedure were substantially the same as those of the contract at issue in the second and third stages.

66. First, the public works contract advertised in the Official Journal in 1998 bears the heading Building works (rebuilding, extensions, alteration and repair works)' (my translation). The detailed description of the work (35) reads: Municipal building, extensive renovation and modification work, building, plumbing and ventilation work, work on monitoring, cooling, safety and electrical equipment and installation of catering equipment' (my translation). The contract notice also made it clear (36) that candidates could apply to tender for one, several or all of the lots and invited potential tenderers to contact the contracting authority (37) (in Finnish) for supplementary information on technical and administrative aspects of the contract. (38)

67. The Commission does not seek to argue that the contract notice was insufficiently clear. It seems to acknowledge that the contract notice did in fact call for applications to tender for catering equipment. (39) Its case appears to be limited to saying that what took place in 2000 cannot be said to be merely the continuation of what happened in 1998.

68. In my view the 1998 contract notice, whilst not perhaps a model of clarity, could prima facie have been read as inviting expressions of interest in tendering for the installation of catering equipment; and the Commission has not contested that. Therefore I agree with Finland that would-be tenderers reading the contract notice published in March 1998 in the Official Journal would have understood that they could enquire about, and apply to tender for, the supply of catering equipment as an independent lot. (40)

69. Second, the Commission argues that the contractual terms altered between the various stages. It points out that the contract notice published in 1998 makes no mention of the tenancy agreement with Amica and its involvement in the awarding of the contract. (41) At the hearing the Commission, relying on a letter (annexed to its reply) from the contracting authority to Finland's Ministry of Commerce and Industry, also alluded to a modification of the plan for the restaurant, a change in the amount attributed to the contract and a change to the financing of the purchase (now to be shared between the contracting authority and Amica).

70. Finland replies that the essential clauses of the contract were not changed in the course of the procedure. The contracting authority was responsible for the award throughout. The only changes were that under the third stage Amica concluded the contract in its capacity as agent and that the contracting authority fixed in advance the sum that it would pay towards the purchase.

71. I do not think that the Commission has succeeded in demonstrating that the terms of the contract changed sufficiently over the course of the three stages described to break the link of continuity between those stages. Although in the third stage the contracting authority used Amica as agent to make the purchase and shared the cost with it, the invitations to tender in the third stage were issued in its, not Amica's, name. Moreover the sum which the contracting authority fixed as its contribution towards the purchase lies within the range of values specified for the separate lots published under the works contract in 1998. Nor do I read the invitations to tender issued in the third stage as supporting the Commission's contention that the tenancy agreement between the contracting authority and Amica altered the terms of the contract. They merely make clear Amica's role as procurement agent.

72. Contrary to Article 42(1) of the Court's Rules of Procedure, the Commission has not explained why the letter from the contracting authority to Finland's Ministry of Commerce and Industry was submitted as evidence only as an annex to its reply. Consequently that letter constitutes fresh evidence submitted out of time within the meaning of Article 42(1) of the Rules of Procedure and may not be taken into consideration. (42) The Commission has not submitted any further evidence establishing that there was substantial change in the nature or quantity of the catering equipment to be supplied as publicised in the three different stages.

73. For those reasons, I take the view that substantially the same contract for supply of catering equipment was publicised in 1998 under a restricted procedure as was awarded in 2000 under a negotiated procedure.

74. If that is so, and the restricted procedure failed because no acceptable tender was received, the next question is whether the contracting authority infringed the transparency obligation by subsequently resorting to the negotiated procedure to buy the catering equipment, without further advertising.

75. Under Article 6(3)(a) of Directive 93/36, a contracting authority is entitled to award a supply contract falling within the scope of the directive by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice where no appropriate tender was received under a restricted procedure, provided that the terms of the contract are not substantially altered and provided that a report is communicated to the Commission.

76. It has recently been emphasised (43) that where a derogation from the public procurement directives is expressly allowed, a negotiated procedure without prior publication of an invitation to tender is justified and there can be no requirement for advertising. The principles which flow from the Treaty cannot impose a requirement of publicity which has to be satisfied even when the directives expressly provide for a derogation. If they did, the derogation would be nugatory.

77. In my view the same reasoning applies to a contract not falling within the scope of Directive 93/36 by virtue of its low value. (44) Article 6(3)(a) expressly allows for recourse to a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in respect of contracts falling within the directive. It follows that that procedure may similarly be used in respect of a low value contract.

78. I therefore conclude that where, after carrying out a restricted procedure with publication of a notice which fails due to the absence of any appropriate tenders, the contracting authority resorts to a negotiated procedure without advertising the supply contract, and where the terms of the contract under both procedures are substantially the same, the contracting authority does not infringe the transparency obligation under Community law.

Were the invitations to tender issued in 2000 in themselves sufficient to comply with the transparency obligation?

79. In case the Court reaches the conclusion that, contrary to my view, the second and third stages were unrelated to the first stage and cannot be considered to be covered by the 1998 contract notice, I must consider whether the invitations to tender issued directly to the four undertakings in 2000 complied with the transparency obligation.

80. The thrust of the Commission's allegation is that the contested contract should have been awarded in accordance with the condition laid down in Telaustria (45) for ensuring compliance with the transparency obligation. There, the Court stated that the transparency obligation imposed on the contracting authority consists in ensuring, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the [market concerned] to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed'.

81. Finland, Germany and the Netherlands all submit that, whilst a contracting authority awarding a contract which falls outside the scope of the directives must respect the obligation of transparency, the issue remains as to what constitutes sufficient' advertising in the context of a particular award procedure to satisfy that obligation. (46) In principle, it is for the contracting authority to evaluate whether the detailed arrangements of the call for tenders are appropriate for the contract in question, subject to review by the competent courts. (47)

82. As Denmark and the Netherlands have pointed out, the use of the word advertising' in the English version of the judgment is problematic. On the one hand, advertising implies an obligation to publish. On the other hand, the words used in other language versions (Offentlichkeit' in the official language of the case, German; publicité' in the French; pubblicità' in the Italian; publicidad' in the Spanish) are more akin to publicity' in English. In my view, publicity' does not necessarily imply an obligation to publish. It does, however, imply an obligation to do more than simply contacting a single potential tenderer and awarding the contract to that undertaking. In his Opinion in Telaustria , (48) Advocate General Fennelly noted that the Commission had argued in that case that the transparency obligation did not require publication, and he shared the Commission's view. (49)

83. It seems to me that, where a contract falls outside the scope of the directives, the appropriate degree of publicity is to be determined by reference to the potential market for that contract. The contracting authority must ensure a degree of publicity sufficient to open up that market to competition and to permit the impartiality of the procurement procedure to be reviewed. (50) Therefore, there must in principle be some degree of publicity for the procurement contract. Absent such publicity, it is difficult to see how there can be said to be either equal treatment or transparency.

84. Are the publicity requirements for such contracts to be set by Community law, or left to national law?

85. It seems to me that there is a fundamental difference between the potential market for a contract whose value is above the threshold but which, for whatever reason, is excluded from the scope of the relevant directive; and the potential market for a low value contract. The former may nevertheless be of very significant economic importance. One can readily see why the non-discrimination obligation, with its concomitant transparency obligation, should lead to a requirement under Community law to ensure adequate trans-national publicity for such a contract. The latter by definition falls below the threshold from which the relevant directive applies. That threshold marks the point at which the legislator deliberately chose not to apply detailed publicity requirements. It seems to me that, in so doing, he also implicitly defined which public contracts merit, because of their economic importance, being subject to detailed publicity requirements imposed by Community law. (51) I consider that Community law requires that, in principle, there must still be some degree of publicity for such a contract; but leaves it to national law to determine in detail what that publicity should be.

86. That logic is confirmed by the Court's statement in Coname (52) that special circumstances, such as the fact that the economic interest at stake was very modest, might mean that an undertaking located in a different Member State would have no appreciable interest in the contract in question. In such cases, the effects on the fundamental freedoms should be regarded as too uncertain and indirect to warrant the conclusion that they may have been infringed by differences in treatment arising from the absence of any transparency. (53) The special circumstances' there described represent the exception to the general rule that there should be some publicity. However, I do not read that statement as transposing the full panoply of the public procurement directives' publicity requirements to a context (low value contracts) from which the Community legislator deliberately excluded them.

87. In consequence, I do not accept the Commission's argument that, as a matter of Community law, contracting authorities are required to apply detailed Community law requirements for publicising low value contracts. Two principal arguments support that conclusion.

88. First, the principle of subsidiarity enshrined in Article 5 EC dictates that Community law should only impinge on national law to the extent justified by an assessment of costs and benefits. (54) Imposing a detailed duty under Community law to publicise low value contracts throughout the Community means disregarding part of the legislative intention behind Directive 93/36. The thresholds in the various public procurement directives mark the boundary between what the Member States have agreed should be harmonised at Community level and what remains within the competence of Member States. It follows, in my view, that setting detailed publicity requirements at Community level for low value contracts is incompatible with the principle of subsidiarity.

89. Second, imposing under Community law a detailed obligation to publicise in relation to the potential market - an obligation whose actual details are nevertheless not to be found in any legislative text promulgated at Community level - would create significant legal uncertainty for contracting authorities and potential tenderers wanting to conclude low value contracts. When, where and in what form such contracts should be publicised cannot readily be deduced from the case-law; and, as I have indicated, those matters are not covered by secondary legislation.

90. The legal uncertainty that would be created by imposing such an obligation is illustrated by the Commission's own doubts. In response to direct questioning from the Court it could only suggest in vague terms what form of publicity would have been required to satisfy the transparency obligation in the present case. The Commission has recently argued, in the context of awarding contracts for emergency ambulance services which were not covered by the public procurement directives, that a national or international call to tender was not required to achieve sufficient' publicity - correspondence addressed to particular undertakings could suffice. (55) That submission directly contradicts the position that the Commission has adopted in the present case.

91. Shortly after the hearing in the present case, the Commission published a communication setting out in considerable detail its views as to when, where and in what form contracts which are not subject to the public procurement directives should be advertised'. (56) In the course of arguing the present case the Commission has not explained how the breach of Treaty obligations that it alleges against Finland relates to the requirements which it proposes in that communication. Furthermore, the introduction to the communication itself states that the communication does not create any new rules and that, in any event, interpretation of Community law is ultimately a matter for the Court. (57)

92. I do not consider that the conclusion I have reached contradicts the Telaustria case-law, in which the Court has required contracting authorities to ensure a degree of advertising' sufficient to enable a contract falling outside the scope of the public procurement directives to be opened up to competition throughout the Community and the impartiality of the procurement procedure to be reviewed. (58) On closer inspection, it becomes clear that those cases concerned public service concessions which are excluded, irrespective of their economic value, from the scope of public procurement directives. The values of the concessions at issue in those cases were on a par with contracts covered by the publicity requirements laid down in the public procurement directives. (59)

93. There is therefore no contradiction between the fact that the Court has decided that the award of such contracts ought to be subject to a degree of advertising' sufficient to ensure they are opened up to competition throughout the Community and the approach that I suggest should be taken in respect of low value contracts. The interest from tenderers throughout the Community which such high-value concessions generate may reasonably be regarded as equivalent to the interest which the public procurement directives aim to protect in respect of contracts falling within their scope. (60) It is therefore reasonable to apply a Treaty-based obligation of transparency in respect of such concession contracts and to state that publicity for such contracts falls to be assessed by reference to Community law.

94. It may be objected that, economically, a contract whose value falls marginally below the threshold in the relevant public procurement directive might be valuable enough to be of interest to undertakings located in neighbouring Member States. In the present case, the value of the contract awarded (approximately EUR 177 000) was some EUR 47 000 below the threshold from which Directive 93/36 applied. (61) It was thus significantly lower than the value of contracts which the legislator considered to be of interest to suppliers located throughout the Community. (62) The potential profit to a supplier located in, for example, Spain from winning a contract worth EUR 177 000 would, it seems to me, be reduced significantly by transportation costs and other possible costs, such as modifying equipment and providing operating instructions in a form comprehensible to Finnish speakers. (63) Perhaps it might be otherwise for a potential supplier located in (say) Sweden or Denmark. However, the Commission has not suggested that price differences between catering equipment in different Member States are very pronounced. Still less has it submitted any evidence to that effect. It therefore seems to me that the Court would find it difficult, on the material before it, to be able to state with confidence that it would be beneficial to the contracting authority and to potentially interested suppliers in other (neighbouring) Member States to impose a requirement, derived from Community law, to publicise the contract in certain other Member States.

95. More generally, are contracting authorities required by the transparency obligation to assess market interest in individual neighbouring Member States and then to determine, using that assessment, in which States and in what form the contract ought to have been publicised? (64) Put another way: might there be compelling reasons for holding that a contracting authority should carry out a detailed market assessment, and in consequence sometimes ensure a higher degree of publicity than that required under national law?

96. I do not think that the transparency obligation under Community law should be construed as imposing such a requirement for contracts below the threshold. Contracting authorities would be required, for each low value contract of potential' significance (however that is to be defined) to assess market interest in an unspecified (and unspecifiable) selection of Member States at the risk of being penalised (65) if they fail to do so correctly. Such a situation is the antithesis of legal certainty. It seems to me that such a requirement is, moreover, likely to hit small contracting authorities (such as local authorities), who would tend to have lower value contracts to place, more often than large contracting authorities. If I am right, it would impose on them a disproportionate and unrealistic burden.

97. In my view, the benefit of avoiding legal uncertainty which follows from the approach I have suggested outweighs the marginal benefit to the integration of public procurement markets which detailed Community law requirements for publicising low value contracts could perhaps bring.

98. I therefore consider that what constitutes a sufficient degree of publicity for low value contracts is a matter for national law. (66) If, upon analysis, the Commission takes the view that applicable national rules on public procurement in a particular Member State fail to provide for sufficient transparency and thus jeopardise the application of the principle of equal treatment, it will no doubt bring infringement proceedings against the Member State in question. In that way, the Commission's and the Court's resources might also perhaps be more effectively employed than by scrutinising infringements allegedly committed in awarding individual low value contracts.

99. I therefore conclude that the Commission's application should be dismissed.

Costs

100. In its pleadings, Finland has asked for costs. Although the way in which the proceedings have been defended by Finland has not been entirely informative, I see no reason for the Court to depart from the normal practice. Therefore pursuant to Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure the Commission as the unsuccessful party should be ordered to bear the costs. The intervening Member States must be ordered to bear their own costs in accordance with Article 69(4) of the Rules of Procedure.

Conclusion

101. I therefore propose that the Court should:

- declare the action inadmissible;

- in the alternative, dismiss the application;

- order the Commission to bear its own and Finland's costs;

- order the intervening Member States to bear their own costs.

(2) - Of 14 June 1993 (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), as amended in particular by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1). After the material time, further amendments were made by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001 (OJ 2001 L 285, p. 1). With effect from 31 January 2006, Directive 93/36 was repealed and replaced by European Parliament and Council Directive 2004/18/EC of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

(3) - See the values of thresholds set pursuant to Directive 93/36 in OJ 1999 C 379, p. 20, which came into force on 1 January 2000. Neither party has informed the Court of the precise date on which the contested contract was concluded. For reasons which I set out below at point 24, I assume that that occurred in the first part of 2000. At the material time the threshold from which Directive 93/36 applied was subject to change on a biennial basis. With effect from 1 January 2002, that threshold was increased to EUR 249 681 (see the values of thresholds set pursuant to Directive 93/36 in OJ 2001 C 332, p. 21).

(4) - See footnote 3 above.

(5) - Under a second type of negotiated procedure, the contracting authority advertises the contract and invites tenders from a limited number of undertakings but may also negotiate the terms of the contract to some extent.

(6) - Valtion kiinteistölaitos is the former name of the authority responsible for management of governmental buildings in Finland. It was renamed Senaatti-kiinteistöt in 2001.

(7) - Supplement to the Official Journal S48 of 10 March 1998 and the Official Journal of Finland, public procurement series, No 11, of 12 March 1998.

(8) - In following Finland's nomenclature for the three stages, I am using those terms for identification purposes. The question of whether the three stages form part of the same procedure, or should be considered to be separate procedures, is discussed below at points 60 to 63.

(9) - Of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) (the Works Directive'). The Works Directive (rather than Directive 93/36) governed the contract notice (and subsequent procedure) for the renovation and alteration works, which constituted the majority of the lots.

(10) - See Article 6(3) of Directive 93/37. The value of thresholds set pursuant to the Works Directive in OJ 1998 C 22, p. 2 (which was applicable during the period 1 January 1998 to 31 December 1999) was SDR 5 000 000, equivalent to FIM 29 908 547. The contract notice indicated that the estimated total value of the contract was FIM 38 million.

(11) - The Commission says these invitations to tender were issued in 2000, but neither the Commission nor Finland has identified the exact date. Given that the ensuing tenders were rejected in February 2000, it appears that the invitations must have been issued in either January or February 2000.

(14) - See Case C-308/87 Grifoni v EAEC [1994] ECR I-341, paragraph 7.

(15) - The text of the tender does in fact make clear that it was made in the context of the second tranche of renovation and alteration works referred to in the contract notice published in March 1998. It seems that Rakentajamestarit had also offered to supply certain kitchen furniture (storage cupboards and the like); but Finland stressed that Rakentajamestarit was not a manufacturer or supplier of catering equipment (in the sense of kitchen appliances) and that it had never offered to supply such equipment.

(16) - This information emerged only at the hearing.

(17) - Since the third stage began in February 2000, the contract was obviously concluded after that point. Whilst the date at which the contract was concluded is material to determining whether the threshold from which the Directive became applicable was EUR 214 326 or EUR 249 681 (see footnote 3 above), self-evidently the value of the contract (approximately EUR 177 000) is below either threshold.

(18) - Case C-324/98 [2000] ECR I-10745.

(19) - See paragraph 62 of the judgment.

(20) - Finland notes that the award was contested at national level by Finland's Ministry of Finance and the Ministry of Commerce and Industry but was not challenged before its national consumer protection tribunal.

(21) - In October 2004, a working group was due to make a legislative proposal for introducing an obligation to publicise on an electronic database contracts whose value exceeded prescribed national thresholds.

(22) - Thus the English version of the reasoned opinion. The French translation has un degré de publicité adéquat'. See point 82 below for an analysis of the difference in meaning.

(23) - Presumably, the Commission's real point is that, after the failure of the restricted procedure, a new procurement procedure - which could have been a negotiated procedure - should have been organised.

The tenor of that case-law has since been affirmed in the second recital of the preamble to Directive 2004/18, cited in footnote 2, which states that [t]he award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency'.

(34) - I deduce that the real complaint is that the contracting authority failed to initiate a new procurement procedure: see footnote 23 above.

(35) - Point 3.b) in the original Finnish version of the contract notice. Although it does not alter the fact that the contracting authority itself took the measures necessary to seek interest throughout the Community in installing catering equipment, it may be noted that other language versions of the contract notice (which in fact summarise the original version) failed to mention that particular lot.

(40) - In support of that view, Finland points out that one potential supplier (Kopal) does appear to have read the announcement in that way and to have applied to tender specifically for catering equipment.

(51) - Similarly, Advocate General Stix-Hackl observed in her Opinion in Case C-507/03 Commission v Ireland , at point 62, that the Community legislature consciously chose to fix limited transparency obligations for the award of contracts for non-priority services - obligations which are not as extensive as those imposed more generally by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 coordinating procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

(56) - Commission Interpretative Communication on the Community law applicable to contract awards not or not fully subject to the provisions of the Public Procurement Directives (OJ 2006 C 179, p. 2): see in particular section 2.1. The linguistic variations identified at point 82 above persist. Thus, for exemple, the English version of the Communication uses advertising'. The German version oscillates between Bekanntmachung' and Offentlichkeit'. The French, Italian and Spanish versions all use variants on publicity (publicité', pubblicità' and publicidad' respectively). All the illustrations given are, however, types of publication. The communication suggests that contracting authorities are responsible for deciding the most appropriate medium for advertising but that their choice should be guided by an assessment of the relevance of the contract to the internal market. The greater the potential interest in other Member States, the wider the coverage should be. The communication then lists a number of means of publication that may, in particular circumstances, be deemed adequate', such as the internet, including the contracting authority's website and portal websites, the Official Journals of the EU and of Member States, national journals specialising in public procurement announcements, national or regional newspapers, specialist publications, local means of publication such as newspapers, municipal journals and notice boards. I cannot see how that communication deals with the problem of legal certainty which I identify above.

(57) - In Case C-146/91 KYDEP v Council and Commission [1994] ECR I-4199, the Court emphasised the non-binding nature of an interpretation given by the Commission of a Community law measure.

(58) - The Court has also imposed that requirement in relation to the need to advertise criteria for selecting candidates who will be invited to tender under a restricted procedure for a contract falling within the scope of Council Directive 93/37 (cited in footnote 9) where that directive contains no specific provision on requirements for such advertising (see Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraphs 87, 92 and 93 and the analysis which follows).

(59) - In Telaustria , the value of the advertising space related to the directories which were the subject of the concession was Ecu 35 million, according to Telaustria's submissions. In Parking Brixen , cited in footnote 47, the value of the concession is not apparent from the report in the ECR. However, the fact that the provider who was awarded the concession paid to the contracting authority an annual fee of EUR 151 700 which was indexed to the parking charges (see paragraph 26 of the judgment) suggests that the revenue from those charges must have been substantial. The Court found that it was possible that undertakings established in other Member States might have been interested in the contract (paragraph 55). Accordingly, the transparency of the award was assessed in the light of the Telaustria requirement to ensure a sufficient degree of advertising' (see paragraph 49 and the following analysis). In ANAV (Case C-410/04 [2006] ECR I-3303) the service concession was for the provision of transport services in the municipality of Bari for which the provider was remunerated, at least in part, by ticket sales to transport users. Again, the exact value of the concession is not stated in the report in the ECR. However, given that the sole and exclusive activity of the undertaking which had won the concession was providing the service of local urban public transport in the town of Bari (submissions of Comune di Bari, paragraph 5) it seems very probable that the value of the concession exceeded the threshold specified for non-concession contracts in the directive concerned.

(61) - See point 6 above.

(62) - As is clear from reading Article 5(1)(a) in conjunction with recital 14. In any event, setting a numerical threshold for the application of a rule necessarily implies that there will (sooner or later) be individual cases that fall just below the threshold and which, accordingly, are not covered by the rule in question.

(63) - I acknowledge that the contracting authority invited a representative of a supplier located in another Member State to make an offer in 2000. However, there is nothing to suggest that the representative itself was not located in Finland. If that was the case, the supplier and its representative were in a different position from catering equipment suppliers in the Community without representatives in Finland.

(64) - This is the position expressly adopted by the Commission in its communication: see points 1.3 and 2.1.2.

(65) - The Commission offers reassurance in its communication (at point 1.3) that [w]hen [it] becomes aware of a potential violation... it will assess the Internal Market relevance of the contract in question ... Infringement proceedings... will be opened only in cases where this appears appropriate in view of the gravity of the infringement and its impact on the Internal Market'. Leaving to one side the question of whether the present infringement proceedings objectively satisfy that test, it is clear that a disappointed competitor would be at perfect liberty to bring proceedings before the national courts and seek a reference under Article 234 EC.

(66) - It is to be noted that Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer in point 62 of his Opinion in Case C-412/04 Commission v Italy , delivered on 8 November 2006, has similarly taken the view that the setting of precise rules regarding disclosure of tenders in order to satisfy the transparency obligation is a matter for each Member State, subject to certain limits.

Arrêt

1 Par ses requêtes, la Commission des Communautés européennes demande à la Cour de constater que, dans la mesure où l'établissement public ANAS SpA (ci-après l'«ANAS») a confié la construction et la gestion des autoroutes de la Valtrompia, d'une part, et de la Pedemontana Veneta Ovest, d'autre part, à la Società per l'autostrada Brescia-Verona-Vincenza-Padova pA (ci-après la «société concessionnaire») dans le cadre de concessions directes mises en œuvre par le biais d'une convention conclue le 7 décembre 1999 sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché, alors même que les conditions nécessaires à cet égard n'étaient pas réunies, la République italienne a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de la directive 93/37/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux (JO L 199, p. 54), et notamment des articles 3, paragraphe 1, et 11, paragraphes 3, 6 et 7 de celle-ci.

2 L'article 1er de la directive 93/37 prévoit:

«Aux fins de la présente directive:

a) les 'marchés publics de travaux' sont des contrats à titre onéreux, conclus par écrit entre, d'une part, un entrepreneur et, d'autre part, un pouvoir adjudicateur défini au point b) et ayant pour objet soit l'exécution, soit conjointement l'exécution et la conception des travaux relatifs à une des activités visées à l'annexe II ou d'un ouvrage défini au point c), soit la réalisation, par quelque moyen que ce soit, d'un ouvrage répondant aux besoins précisés par le pouvoir adjudicateur;

c) on entend par 'ouvrage' le résultat d'un ensemble de travaux de bâtiment ou de génie civil destiné à remplir par lui-même une fonction économique ou technique;

d) la 'concession de travaux publics' est un contrat présentant les mêmes caractères que ceux visés au point a), à l'exception du fait que la contrepartie des travaux consiste soit uniquement dans le droit d'exploiter l'ouvrage, soit dans ce droit assorti d'un prix;

3 L'article 3, paragraphe 1, de cette directive est libellé comme suit:

«Dans le cas où les pouvoirs adjudicateurs concluent un contrat de concession de travaux publics, les règles de publicité définies à l'article 11 paragraphes 3, 6, 7 et 9 à 13 et à l'article 15 sont applicables à ce contrat lorsque sa valeur égale ou dépasse 5 000 000 d'écus.»

4 L'article 7, paragraphe 3, de la même directive est ainsi rédigé:

«Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent passer leurs marchés de travaux en recourant à la procédure négociée, sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché, dans les cas suivants:

a) lorsqu'aucune offre ou aucune offre appropriée n'a été déposée en réponse à une procédure ouverte ou restreinte, pour autant que les conditions initiales du marché ne soient pas substantiellement modifiées. Un rapport doit être communiqué à la Commission à sa demande;

b) pour les travaux dont l'exécution, pour des raisons techniques, artistiques ou tenant à la protection des droits d'exclusivité, ne peut être confiée qu'à un entrepreneur déterminé;

c) dans la mesure strictement nécessaire, lorsque l'urgence impérieuse, résultant d'événements imprévisibles pour les pouvoirs adjudicateurs en question, n'est pas compatible avec les délais exigés par les procédures ouvertes, restreintes ou négociées visées au paragraphe 2. Les circonstances invoquées pour justifier l'urgence impérieuse ne doivent en aucun cas être imputables aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs;

d) pour les travaux complémentaires qui ne figurent pas dans le projet initialement adjugé ni dans le premier contrat conclu et qui sont devenus nécessaires, à la suite d'une circonstance imprévue, à l'exécution de l'ouvrage tel qu'il y est décrit, à condition que l'attribution soit faite à l'entrepreneur qui exécute cet ouvrage:

– lorsque ces travaux ne peuvent être techniquement ou économiquement séparés du marché principal sans inconvénient majeur pour les pouvoirs adjudicateurs

– lorsque ces travaux, quoiqu'ils soient séparables de l'exécution du marché initial, sont strictement nécessaires à son perfectionnement.

Toutefois, le montant cumulé des marchés passés pour les travaux complémentaires ne doit pas dépasser 50 % du montant du marché principal.

5 L'article 11 de la directive 93/37 dispose:

«[...]

3. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs désireux d'avoir recours à la concession de travaux publics font connaître leur intention au moyen d'un avis.

6. Les avis prévus aux paragraphes 1 à 5 sont établis conformément aux modèles qui figurent aux annexes IV, V et VI et donnent les renseignements qui y sont demandés.

Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs ne peuvent exiger des conditions autres que celles prévues aux articles 26 et 27 lorsqu'ils demandent des renseignements concernant les conditions de caractère économique et technique qu'ils exigent des entrepreneurs pour leur sélection (annexe IV partie B point 11, annexe IV partie C point 10 et annexe IV partie D point 9).

L'avis prévu au paragraphe 1 est envoyé le plus rapidement possible après la prise de décision autorisant le programme dans lequel s'inscrivent les marchés de travaux que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs entendent passer.

L'avis prévu au paragraphe 5 est envoyé au plus tard quarante-huit jours après la passation du marché en question.»

Les faits à l'origine des litiges et la procédure précontentieuse

6 La construction et la gestion des autoroutes de la Valtrompia et de la Pedemontana Veneta Ovest ont été confiées par l'ANAS à la société concessionnaire dans le cadre de deux concessions, attribuées sur la base d'une convention conclue le 7 décembre 1999 – portant révision d'une convention précédente conclue le 21 décembre 1972 et d'actes additionnels ultérieurs – et approuvée par décret interministériel du 21 décembre 1999, enregistré par la Cour des comptes italienne le 11 avril 2000.

7 Les concessions en cause, attribuées sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché au sens de la directive 93/37, prévoyaient une série de travaux visant à compléter et développer le réseau autoroutier, à savoir la construction de deux raccordements: le premier, entre l'autoroute A/4 Brescia-Padova et la Valtrompia, constitué de deux branches subséquentes, le second, entre l'autoroute A/4 (comune di Montebello-Vicentino) et l'autoroute A/31 (comune di Thiene).

8 Considérant que la République italienne avait manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de la directive 93/37, la Commission a engagé à l'encontre de cet État membre la procédure en manquement prévue à l'article 226 CE.

10 Par ordonnance du président de la Cour du 19 octobre 2004, les affaires C-187/04 et C-188/04 ont été jointes aux fins d'une éventuelle procédure orale et de l'arrêt.

Sur les recours

11 À l'appui de ses recours, la Commission fait valoir que les concessions visant la construction et la gestion des autoroutes de la Valtrompia et de la Pedemontana Veneta Ovest confiées à la société concessionnaire relèvent de l'article 1er, sous d), de la directive 93/37. Elle soutient, également, que les autoroutes faisant l'objet des travaux en cause constituent des ouvrages au sens de l'article 1er, sous c), de ladite directive.

12 Ayant rappelé que le coût des contrats de construction et d'exploitation des autoroutes de la Valtrompia et de la Pedemontana Veneta Ovest dépasse largement le seuil établi par la directive 93/37, la Commission fait valoir que lesdits contrats auraient dû faire l'objet d'une publication au Journal officiel des Communautés européennes, conformément aux articles 3, paragraphe 1, et 11, paragraphe 3, 6 et 7, de la directive 93/37.

14 En deuxième lieu, il fait valoir que ce n'est qu'en rationalisant et en absorbant une partie des coûts par la société concessionnaire, dont l'actionnariat est constitué majoritairement de collectivités locales, qu'il a été possible de procéder à l'investissement nécessaire à la réalisation des bretelles autoroutières en cause.

17 S'agissant de l'argument du gouvernement italien selon lequel la réalisation des raccords autoroutiers relèverait de la mission des concessions initiales, la Commission fait valoir que, dans la mesure où, en l'espèce, le pouvoir adjudicateur a renégocié la concession initiale en approuvant également un nouveau plan financier, on ne peut qualifier les travaux en cause de simples interventions relevant des concessions initiales, car ces dernières ont été remplacées par de nouvelles concessions.

18 En ce qui concerne la notion d'«ouvrage» au sens de l'article 1er, sous c), de la directive 93/37, et plus particulièrement la fonction technique ou économique autonome que cet ouvrage est censé remplir par lui-même, la Commission précise, d'une part, que la fonction technique autonome n'implique pas nécessairement que l'ouvrage soit dépourvu de liens avec d'autres ouvrages et, d'autre part, que la fonction économique doive se référer à l'ouvrage lui-même et non à sa gestion. Dès lors, le caractère non rémunérateur de la concession, résultant de la décision du pouvoir adjudicateur d'imposer des tarifs qui permettent seulement de supporter le coût de l'entretien dudit ouvrage, ne pourrait pas justifier le non-respect des règles de publicité.

19 Il ressort de l'article 3, paragraphe 1, de la directive 93/37 que les règles de publicité relatives aux marchés de travaux s'appliquent également dans le cas où les pouvoirs adjudicateurs concluent un contrat de concession de travaux publics.

23 En troisième lieu, s'agissant des arguments du gouvernement italien selon lesquels, d'une part, en vertu des dispositions nationales pertinentes, les travaux en cause seraient des ouvrages relevant des interventions comprises dans la mission normale de la concession initiale, auxquels la directive 93/37 ne s'appliquerait pas, et, d'autre part, un éventuel appel d'offres pour l'attribution de la concession autonome se serait traduit par une absence de concurrents, il convient de rappeler qu'il ne peut être recouru à la procédure négociée sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché que dans les cas limitativement énumérés à l'article 7, paragraphe 3, de cette directive.

24 À cet égard, il y a lieu de relever que, selon une jurisprudence constante, les dispositions d'une directive qui autorisent des dérogations aux règles visant à garantir l'effectivité des droits reconnus par le traité CE dans le secteur des marchés publics de travaux doivent faire l'objet d'une interprétation stricte et que c'est à celui qui entend s'en prévaloir qu'incombe la charge de la preuve que les circonstances exceptionnelles justifiant la dérogation existent effectivement (arrêts du 18 mai 1995, Commission/Italie, C-57/94, Rec. p. I-1249, point 23; du 28 mars 1996, Commission/Allemagne, C-318/94, Rec. p. I-1949, point 13, et du 13 janvier 2005, Commission/Espagne, C-84/03, Rec. p. I-139, point 48).

25 Or, le gouvernement italien n'a pas démontré l'existence d'une situation justifiant l'application de l'une des exceptions prévues par la directive 93/37 en particulier, celles figurant à l'article 7, paragraphe 3, sous a) et d), de celle-ci.

27 Or, comme le relève le gouvernement italien, la construction et la gestion de deux nouveaux raccordements autoroutiers sont, d'un point de vue technique, destinées à relier les zones choisies afin de résoudre les graves problèmes de voirie que connaissent les communes concernées. Le résultat de l'ensemble des travaux de génie civil en cause remplit donc par lui-même la fonction technique.

28 Quant à la fonction économique visée par la directive 93/37, il convient de constater qu'un concessionnaire d'autoroute, en tant qu'il met à la disposition des usagers contre rémunération une infrastructure autoroutière, accomplit une activité économique (voir en ce sens, arrêt du 12 septembre 2000, Commission/France, C-276/97, Rec. p. I-6251, point 32). L'absence d'une rentabilité autonome des concessions en cause n'est pas de nature à enlever à l'ensemble des travaux concernés son caractère d'ouvrage au sens de la directive 93/37.

29 En tout état de cause, pour que le résultat des travaux puisse être qualifié d'ouvrage au sens de l'article 1er, sous c), de la directive 93/37, il suffit que soit remplie l'une de deux fonctions susmentionnées.

30 Il résulte de ce qui précède que les griefs de la Commission sont fondés.

31 Dans ces conditions, il convient de constater que, dans la mesure où l'ANAS a confié la construction et la gestion des autoroutes de la Valtrompia et de la Pedemontana Veneta Ovest à la société concessionnaire dans le cadre de concessions directes sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché, alors même que les conditions nécessaires à cet égard n'étaient pas réunies, la République italienne a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de la directive 93/37, et plus particulièrement des articles 3, paragraphe 1, et 11, paragraphes 3, 6 et 7 de celle-ci.

32 Aux termes de l'article 69, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens. La Commission ayant conclu à la condamnation de la République italienne et cette dernière ayant succombé en ses moyens, il y a lieu de la condamner aux dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (deuxième chambre) déclare et arrête:

1) Dans la mesure où l'établissement public ANAS SpA a confié la construction et la gestion des autoroutes de la Valtrompia et de la Pedemontana Veneta Ovest à la Società per l'autostrada Brescia-Verona-Vincenza-Padova pA dans le cadre de concessions directes sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché, alors même que les conditions nécessaires à cet égard n'étaient pas réunies, la République italienne a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de la directive 93/37/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, et plus particulièrement des articles 3, paragraphe 1, et 11, paragraphes 3, 6 et 7 de celle-ci.

2) La République italienne est condamnée aux dépens.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT

of 27 October 2005

in Joined Cases C-187/04 and C-188/04: Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic[1]

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Directive 93/37/EEC - Public works contracts - Public works concessions - Rules on advertising)

(Language of the case: Italian)

In Joined Cases C-187/04 and C-188/04 Commission of the European Communities (Agent: K. Wiedner, Lawyer: G. Bambara) v Italian Republic (Agent: I.M. Braguglia, Lawyer: M. Makarczyk (Rapporteur), R. Silva de Lapuerta, P. Kūris and J. Klučka, Judges; D. Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer, Advocate General; R. Grass, Registrar, gave a judgment on 27 October 2005, in which it:

1. Declares that, since the public invitation ANAS S.p.A. awarded the contract for the construction and management of the Valtrompia and Pedemontana Veneta Ovest motorways to the Società per l'autostrada Brescia-Verona-Vicenza-Padova p.a. by direct concession without prior publication of a contract notice, where the requirements for such a concession were not met, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procedures for the award of public works contracts and in particular Articles 3(1) and 11(3), (6) and (7) thereof;

2. Orders the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Action brought on 22 April 2004 by the Commission of the European Communities against the Italian Republic

(Case C-187/04)

An action against the Italian Republic was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 22 April 2004 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by K. Wiedner and G. Bambara, acting as Agents.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

- Declare that, since ANAS S.p.A. awarded the concession for the construction and management of the Valtrompia motorway to the Società per l'autostrada Brescia-Verona-Vicenza-Padova p.a., by direct concession by means of a contract signed on 7 December 1999 without prior publication of a contract notice, and where the requirements for such a concession were not met, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/37/EEC[1] of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procedures for the award of public works contracts and in particular Articles 3(1) and 11(3), (6) and (7) thereof;

- Order the Italian Republic to pay to the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments:

According to the Commission, ANAS's concession relating to the construction and management of the Valtrompia motorway without prior publication of a contract notice does not comply with Directive 93/37/EEC and in particular with Articles 3(1) and 11(3), (6) and (7) thereof.

Article 3 of the Directive provides for the application of certain advertising rules at Community level where the contracting authorities conclude a public works concession contract if the value of that contract exceeds EUR 5 million. In particular, under Article 11(3) of the directive, contracting authorities wishing to award a works concession contract must make known that intention by means of a contract notice to be sent, pursuant to Article 11(7) of the directive, to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities.

Since the contract for the construction and management of the Valtrompia motorway is worth approximately EUR 640 million, it clearly should have been the subject of publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

Public procurement - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures concerning the award of public contracts - Persons to whom review procedures must be available - Tender by a consortium - Prohibition against members of a consortium bringing an action individually - Meaning of "interest in obtaining a public contract". Case C-129/04.

Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, is to be interpreted as not precluding national law from providing that only the members of a consortium without legal personality which has participated, as such, in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded that contract, acting together, may bring an action against the decision awarding the contract and not just one of its members individually.

The same is true if all the members of such a consortium act together but the application of one of its members is held inadmissible.

In both cases, the national rules require only that applicants comply with the conditions relating to representation in legal proceedings in accordance with the legal form which the members have themselves chosen. Such requirements are general in application and do not limit the efficacy and availability of review procedures to tenderers in a manner contrary to Directive 89/665.

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

- Espace Trianon SA and Société wallonne de location-financement SA (Sofibail), by P. Coenraets and C. Lépinois, avocats,

- the Office communautaire et régional de la formation professionnelle et de l'emploi (FOREM), by M. Uyttendaele, M. Mareschal and D. Gerard, avocats,

- the Austrian Government, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent,

- the Commission of the European Communities, by K. Wiedner and B. Stromsky, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 15 March 2005,

Judgment

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), (hereinafter Directive 89/665').

2. The reference has been made in the course of proceedings between Espace Trianon SA (hereinafter Espace Trianon') and Société wallonne de location-financement SA (hereinafter Sofibail'), which are members of the consortium Espace Trianon-Sofibail', and the Office communautaire et régional de la formation professionnelle et de l'emploi (hereinafter FOREM') regarding a procedure for the award of a public contract.

Law

3. Article 1 of Directive 89/665 provides:

1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC..., decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement....'

4. Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 provides:

The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

5. Article 21 of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) provides:

Tenders may be submitted by groups of contractors. These groups may not be required to assume a specific legal form in order to submit the tender; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract.'

National legislation

6. Under Article 14(1) of the Consolidated Laws of 12 January 1973 on the Conseil d'Etat (Council of State) (Moniteur belge of 21 March 1973, p. 3461), the Conseil d'Etat has jurisdiction over actions for annulment of decisions awarding public contracts.

7. The first paragraph of Article 19 of those Consolidated Laws, which regulates, inter alia, standing to bring actions for annulment, provides:

... actions for annulment... may be brought before the Administrative Section by any party who establishes harm or an interest and are to be submitted in writing to the section in accordance with the formal requirements and time-limits specified by the King.'

8. As regards the decision to bring an action, Article 522(2) of the Companies Code provides that for public limited companies:

The Board of Directors shall represent the company as regards third parties and in legal proceedings, whether the company is bringing or defending an action. However, the articles of association may confer standing to represent the company, either solely or jointly, on one or more administrative officers. This clause shall be valid vis-à-vis third parties...'

9. That Code governs the status of consortia (sociétés momentanées'), formerly called associations momentanées'. A consortium is defined in Article 47 of this Code as being a company without legal personality and without a business name formed for specific commercial operations'.

The disputes in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

10. On 30 September 1997, FOREM, as contracting authority, had a contract notice published in the Official Journal of the European Communities concerning the design, construction and financing of a building of approximately 6 500 m2' for the use of its Liège district headquarters.

11. On 20 February 1998 the opening of tenders took place. Five tenders had been submitted, one of which came from the consortium Espace Trianon-Sofibail.

12. On 22 December 1998 the contract was awarded by the Management Committee of FOREM to another consortium, CIDP-BPC. On 8 January 1999, that Management Committee confirmed its decision of 22 December 1998. On 25 January 1999, the award decision was notified to Espace Trianon and Sofibail.

13. On 19 February and 8 March 1999 respectively, those two companies lodged applications seeking the annulment of the decisions of FOREM's Management Committee of 22 December 1998 and 8 January 1999.

14. The Conseil d'Etat observes, in its decision to make a reference to the Court, that Espace Trianon's decisions to bring legal proceedings were taken by two of its administrative officers and not by its Board of Directors in accordance with its articles of association. Therefore, those decisions are irregular. The Conseil d'Etat observes that, by contrast, Sofibail's decisions to bring legal proceedings are not open to challenge.

15. Given that those companies submitted their tender in the name of the consortium Espace Trianon-Sofibail and that Espace Trianon's decisions to bring legal proceedings are irregular, the Conseil d'Etat decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling, with the aim of ascertaining whether the applications brought by Sofibail are admissible, since it is now alone in disputing the decisions of FOREM's Management Committee of 22 December 1998 and 8 January 1999:

(1) Does Article 1 of Directive 89/665... preclude a provision of national law, such as the first paragraph of Article 19 of the Laws on the Conseil d'Etat, consolidated on 12 January 1973, which is interpreted as requiring the members of a consortium without legal personality, which, as such, has participated in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded that contract, to act together, in their capacity as associates or in their own names, in order to bring an action against the decision awarding the contract?

(2) Would the answer to Question 1 be different where the members of the consortium brought an action together, but the application of one of its members is inadmissible?

(3) Does Article 1 of Directive 89/665... preclude a provision of national law, such as the first paragraph of Article 19 of the Laws on the Conseil d'Etat, consolidated on 12 January 1973, which is interpreted as prohibiting a member of such a consortium from bringing an action individually, either in its capacity as an associate or in its own name, against the decision awarding the contract?'

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

16. The first and third questions, which it is appropriate to consider together, seek to ascertain whether Article 1 of Directive 89/665 precludes a national rule under which, when a consortium without legal personality has participated as such in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded that contract, an action may be brought against the decision awarding the contract only by all the members of that consortium acting together. With the second question, the referring court is essentially asking whether the answer to the first and third questions would be different if the members of the consortium acted together but the application of one of them is held inadmissible.

17. It must be borne in mind that, according to Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, decisions taken by the contracting authorities must be capable of being reviewed effectively and that, in accordance with paragraph 3 of that article, the review procedures must be available at least to all persons having an interest in obtaining a public contract.

18. Espace Trianon, Sofibail and the Commission of the European Communities submit that, in circumstances such as those of the main proceedings, a national procedural rule which requires members of a consortium to bring legal proceedings together, and therefore that they unanimously agree to bring an action against a decision awarding a public contract, does not comply with the requirement regarding the availability of review procedures referred to in Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665. In their view, effective judicial protection must allow the members of such an association to have an individual right of action available to them.

19. In this respect it must be noted that Article 1(3), in referring to any person having an interest in obtaining a public contract, alludes, in a situation such as that in the main proceedings, to a person who, in tendering for the public contract at issue, has demonstrated his interest in obtaining it.

20. In this situation, it is the consortium as such which tendered and not its individual members. In the same way, all the members of the consortium, had the contract at issue been awarded to them, would have been obliged to sign the contract and carry out the work.

21. In contrast to other cases submitted to the Court (see, in particular, Case C-230/02 Grossmann Air Service [2004] ECR I-1829, paragraph 28, and Case C-26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I-0000, paragraph 41), nothing in the case in the main proceedings prevented the members of the consortium from together bringing, in their capacity as associates or in their own names, an action for annulment of the decisions of 22 December 1998 and 8 January 1999.

22. Therefore, a national procedural rule which requires an action for annulment of a contracting authority's decision awarding a public contract to be brought by all the members of a tendering consortium does not limit the availability of such an action in a way contrary to Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665.

23. That is particularly so in this case because, as is apparent from the documents before the Court, under Belgian law the members of such a consortium may at any time, before bringing an action, settle the issue of the consortium's capacity to bring legal proceedings by internal agreement, without any other formality.

24. Furthermore, the Commission's argument that a rule such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which implies that groups of contractors are required to assume a specific legal form in order to submit a tender, is contrary to Article 21 of Directive 93/37 cannot be accepted. The national rule at issue in the main proceedings only requires a consortium to ensure, for the purpose of bringing legal proceedings, that it is represented in accordance with the rules applying to the legal form which its members have themselves assumed in order to be able to tender.

25. Moreover, it must be pointed out that the procedural rule referred to in this case applies in the same way to all actions brought by members of consortia in relation to the operations they carry out in the course of their activities, there being no need to know whether the claims are founded on a breach of Community law or of national law or whether they relate to public works contracts or to other operations.

26. Having regard to the above, it cannot be considered either that a rule such as that at issue in the main proceedings could undermine the requirement for effective review laid down in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665. That principle does not require that an action be held admissible when the provisions relating to representation in legal proceedings, which stem from the legal form assumed, have not been adhered to as far as concerns the person who brings the proceedings.

27. Finally, as regards the second question, there is nothing to indicate that a case in which the action has, from the outset, been brought by only some of the members of the consortium and a case in which the action was initially brought by all those members, but where the application of one of them has, subsequently, been considered inadmissible, must be treated differently.

28. In both cases, the action is inadmissible pursuant to national rules which require only that applicants comply with the conditions relating to representation in legal proceedings in accordance with the legal form which the members have themselves chosen. Such requirements are general in application and do not limit the efficacy and availability of review procedures to tenderers in a manner contrary to Directive 89/665. Furthermore, the inadmissibility of the application of one of the members of a consortium may be justified by circumstances which show that no intention on the part of the member at issue to bring legal proceedings has been validly established.

29. In the light of the abovementioned the answers to the questions referred to the Court must be that:

- Article 1 of Directive 89/665 is to be interpreted as not precluding national law from providing that only the members of a consortium without legal personality which has participated, as such,

in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded that contract, acting together, may bring an action against the decision awarding the contract and not just one of its members individually;

- the same is true if all the members of such a consortium bring an action together but the application of one of its members is held inadmissible.

Costs

30. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. The costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts is to be interpreted as not precluding national law from providing that only the members of a consortium without legal personality which has participated, as such, in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded that contract, acting together, may bring an action against the decision awarding the contract and not just one of its members individually.

In Case C-129/04: reference for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC from the Conseil d'État (Belgium), made by decision of 25 February 2004, received at the Court on 9 March 2004, in the proceedings between Espace Trianon SA, Société wallonne de location-financement SA (Sofibail) and Office communautaire et régional de la formation professionnelle et de l'emploi (FOREM) - the Court (Second Chamber), composed of C.W.A. Timmermans, President of the Chamber, C. Gulmann (Rapporteur), R. Schintgen, G. Arestis and J. Klučka, Judges; C. Stix-Hackl, Advocate General; K. Sztranc, Administrator, for the Registrar, gave a judgment on 8 September 2005, the operative part of which is as follows:

Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts is to be interpreted as not precluding national law from providing that only the members of a consortium without legal personality which has participated, as such, in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded that contract, acting together, may bring an action against the decision awarding the contract and not just one of its members individually.

[1] - OJ C 106 of 30. 04. 2005.

Opinion of Advocate General Stix-Hackl delivered on 15 March 2005. Espace Trianon SA and Société wallonne de location-financement SA (Sofibail) v Office communautaire et régional de la formation professionnelle et de l'emploi (FOREM). Reference for a preliminary ruling: Conseil d'Etat - Belgium. Public procurement - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures concerning the award of public contracts - Persons to whom review procedures must be available - Tender by a consortium - Prohibition against members of a consortium bringing an action individually - Meaning of "interest in obtaining a public contract". Case C-129/04.

I - Introductory remarks

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the review of decisions taken by contracting authorities in the award of contracts and in particular it relates to the capacity to bring legal proceedings enjoyed by individual members of a consortium entered into under Belgian law which, for the purposes of Community public procurement law, must be regarded as a group of contractors (or in the terminology of the new public procurement directives (2) as a group of economic operators').

II - Legal framework

A - Community law

2. Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (3) (hereinafter: the Directive') inter alia provides:

(1) The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC, and 92/50/EEC... decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

(3) The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

3. Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 inter alia provides:

The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

...'

4. Article 21 of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (4) provides:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Tenders may be submitted by groups of contractors. These groups may not be required to assume a specific legal form in order to submit the tender; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract.'

B - National law

5. The relevant provisions are those of Article 19(1) of the Laws on the Conseil d'Etat (Council of State), consolidated on 12 January 1973, which govern inter alia legal capacity to bring review proceedings.

6. Article 53 of the Code des sociétés (Company Law Code) governs fundamental aspects of the relations of a consortium (association momentanée') with third parties.

7. Article 522(2) of the Code des sociétés provides that a société anonyme' is to be represented by its Board of Directors inter alia before a court. The same provision permits the company's articles of association to provide for such representation by one or more administrative officers.

III - Facts, preliminary procedure and questions referred

8. On 30 September 1997, a contract notice was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities for the Office communautaire et régional de la formation professionnelle et de l'emploi (hereinafter: FOREM), setting out the subjectmatter as follows: the design, construction and financing of a building of approximately 6 500 m2 (clear) above ground level, for the use of the administrative staff of the Office regional de l'emploi (Liège District Headquarters)', and stating that alternative plans were authorised. Four amendment notices were subsequently published.

9. On 20 February 1998, the tenders were opened. Five tenders had been submitted, including those submitted by the groups of contractors (associations momentanées; consortia) Espace TrianonSofibail and CIDP-BPC. The Espace Trianon-Sofibail consortium consists of Espace Trianon SA (hereinafter: Espace') and the Société Wallone de Location-Financement SA (Sofibail).

10. On 22 December 1998, the management committee of FOREM awarded a contract for the design, construction and financing of a building of approximately 6 500 m2 (clear) above ground level, for the use of the FOREM administrative staff, Liège District Headquarters, to the CIDP-BPC consortium.

11. On 8 January 1999, the management committee of FOREM approved the reasoned decision as adopted at its meeting of 22 December 1998'.

12. On 25 January 1999, the decision awarding the contract was notified to Espace and Sofibail.

13. On 19 February 1999, Espace and Sofibail applied to the Conseil d'Etat to have the decision to award the contract set aside.

14. On 8 March 1999, Espace and Sofibail applied to the Conseil d'Etat to have the approval decision of 8 January 1999 set aside.

15. When it examined the admissibility of the applications, the Conseil d'Etat concluded that the decisions taken in the name of Espace to institute legal proceedings were irregular since, contrary to the company's Articles of Association, the decisions were not taken by the management committee. In contrast, the decisions of Sofibail were correctly taken.

16. Since the tender had been made in the name of the Espace-Sofibail consortium but the decision of one of its members was irregular, the Conseil d'Etat considered the consequences for the admissibility of the proceedings.

17. By way of judgment dated 25 February 2004, the Conseil d'Etat decided to refer to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling the following questions:

(1) Does Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts preclude a provision of national law, such as the first paragraph of Article 19 of the Laws on the Conseil d'Etat, consolidated on 12 January 1973, which is interpreted as requiring the members of a consortium without legal personality, which, as such, has participated in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded that contract, to act together, in their capacity as associates or in their own names, in order to bring an action against the decision awarding that contract?

(2) Would the answer to Question 1 be different where the members of the consortium brought an action together, but the application of one of its members is inadmissible?

(3) Does Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts preclude a provision of national law, such as the first paragraph of Article 19 of the Laws on the Conseil d'Etat, consolidated on 12 January 1973, which is interpreted as prohibiting a member of such a consortium from bringing an action individually, either in its capacity as an associate, or in its own name, against the decision awarding the contract?'

IV - Appraisal

A - General remarks

18. All three questions essentially concern the Community law requirements regarding the admissibility of review proceedings brought by members of a group of contractors, and in particular in this case by members of a consortium under Belgian law.

19. In the light of the wording of the questions referred it must be recalled that the compatibility of national law with Community law cannot be the subject-matter of a reference for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC. Therefore the questions posed in this case must also be understood as concerning the interpretation of Community law.

20. Whilst the first and third questions concern the very principle of the capacity of individual members of a consortium to bring proceedings, the second question relates only to a specific factual situation, namely that in which, whilst all the members of a consortium have acted together in bringing proceedings, the application of one of its members is inadmissible.

21. The legal issues which are thereby raised must be distinguished, however, from the question - not at issue in the present case - whether and under which conditions a consortium must as a matter of Community law be allowed to invoke the review procedure provided for by the Directive.

22. From another additional point of view, however, the following appraisal must be restricted for procedural reasons to the specific facts of the case referred.

23. The main proceedings, that is to say the review procedure before the national court, are in fact concerned with the review of a decision taken by the contracting authority to award the contract, and therefore the successful tender. The answers given in respect of this reference for a preliminary ruling cannot without qualification be applied, however, to review procedures concerning other decisions of the contracting authority, such as for example the non-selection of operators to be tenderers, that is to say the failure to invite them to submit a tender, or the exclusion of tenders. It must also be recalled that the main proceedings concern the setting aside of a decision.

24. The answers proposed to the questions referred therefore have to be restricted to a set of circumstances such as those in the main proceedings. This means that it is perfectly conceivable that as regards a simple declaration of illegality and the availability of damages there might be other obligations under Community law.

25. In addition, the consortium which is at issue in the main proceedings is a creation of contract and - at least according to the case-file - does not possess as a matter of national law legal personality.

26. In that respect it may be noted, however, that the directives concerning the substantive rules on public procurement, old and new, explicitly provide for tenders to be submitted by groups of contractors' or groups of economic operators'. Thus Community law grants such candidates and tenderers certain rights, in particular the right to participate in a tendering procedure. From those Community law provisions it thus follows that consortia enjoy partial legal capacity.

27. Furthermore, within the scope of this preliminary reference the only question which must be examined is that concerning the unanimity rule, or in the alternative the denial to individual members of a consortium of capacity to bring proceedings. It is not necessary, however, to examine the question of compatibility of other existing or conceivable national provisions governing the use of review procedures by members of a consortium.

28. Finally, it must be observed that, should Community law require the Member States to allow a consortium to bring proceedings in its own right, then for the purposes of ensuring effective judicial protection it is no longer necessary for its members to have standing to bring proceedings. In those circumstances the legal issue raised by the present case is reduced to the question of who can act on behalf of a consortium which has standing to bring proceedings.

B - The first and third questions

29. Both the first and the third question take as their starting point the provision of national law applicable in the main proceedings according to which only all the members of a consortium may apply to have a decision of the contracting authority to award the contract reviewed, that is to say may bring legal proceedings contesting the decision, but no member of the consortium may act individually. It is appropriate, therefore, to consider the first and third questions together.

1. Starting point: interest' within the meaning of the Directive

30. The conditions set out in Article 1(3) of the Directive governing access to review procedures constitute a starting point. Under that provision, the Member States are to ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement'.

31. The Court, in its case-law on capacity to bring proceedings, has repeatedly emphasised the importance, as a matter of Community law, of satisfying those conditions. (5)

32. The judgment in Makedoniko furnishes valuable assistance as regards this reference for a preliminary ruling concerning a consortium. In that case the Court held that it was in the light of the conditions laid down in Article 1(3) of the Directive that it [was] necessary to consider whether,... the review procedures provided for by Directive 89/665 must be available to a consortium'. (6)

33. According to the Court, the decisive point is therefore whether the consortium can be regarded as having or having had an interest in obtaining the contract at issue in the main proceedings and as having been or at risk of being harmed by the contracting authority's decision for the purposes of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665. (7)

34. This can be applied to the question at issue in the present proceedings, which do not concern the capacity to bring proceedings of the consortium as such but that of its members.

35. Under the Directive, standing must be afforded, therefore, to a person who has an interest in obtaining the contract which is to constitute the subject-matter of a review procedure. As regards standing and the interest which is necessary in that connection, it must be added that not every interest is sufficient to render an application for review admissible.

36. This point must also be emphasised with regard to consortia. It is necessary to make this clarification since there can be a difference between the interests of the consortium and those of its members and between the interests of the individual members themselves, as moreover the Commission also emphasises.

37. It is true that the members of a consortium have an interest in the economic success of the consortium to which they belong. Nevertheless a member of a consortium is merely interested in the consortium being awarded the contract, not however in obtaining the contract itself.

38. The question of whether an interest within the meaning of Article 1(3) of the Directive exists must be evaluated according to those activities of the consortium which are relevant for the purposes of public procurement law.

39. Contrary to the Commission's argument, Member States are obliged as a matter of principle to grant standing to challenge a contract award procedure only to undertakings that have actually participated in that procedure. (8)

40. It is true that there are exceptions to this rule, however those only apply in particular cases: thus participation in a contract award procedure cannot be imposed as a requirement if the contracting authority has not even conducted a formal contract award procedure. (9) Equally, an undertaking has access to the remedies provided for by the Directive where the only reason for its non-participation was that the terms of the invitation to tender appeared to render its participation pointless. (10)

41. According to the Court's case-law, the requirement of participation in the contract award procedure should be departed from therefore only in those cases in which participation was impossible or at the very least pointless. The decisive element is therefore that the cause of the impossibility of successful participation in a contract award procedure lies in the conduct of the contracting authority. Cases of impossibility must be distinguished, however, from those in which an undertaking does not even desire to participate in a contract award procedure. This also applies to the individual members of a consortium which do not desire to participate individually in a contract award procedure.

42. As regards those undertakings which combine to form a consortium since they cannot participate successfully on an individual basis it must be observed that the reason why they cannot do so does not lie in the conduct of the contracting authority.

43. The set of circumstances which forms the basis for the main proceedings can be distinguished, therefore, from cases of impossibility in which participation cannot be required in thus one further respect: there was participation and a bid was even tendered. It does not matter that this was the act of the consortium and not that of its members, since in the review procedure the members are not acting as undertakings unconnected to the bidder, that is to say unconnected to the consortium, but as its members. Therefore, since the individual undertakings rely upon the fact of their consortium membership, it must also be possible to attribute to them or to hold against them the consortium's conduct.

2. Substantive law considerations regarding capacity to bring proceedings

44. The procedural right to apply for review is derived, thus, from substantive participation in a contract award procedure, for example as a candidate, or as in the main proceedings as a tenderer.

45. Such parallelism is also apparent in Makedoniko , according to which in so far as a decision of a contracting authority adversely affects the rights conferred on a consortium by Community law in the context of a procedure for the award of a public contract, the consortium must be able to avail itself of the review procedures provided for by Directive 89/665'. (11)

46. According to Community law, standing to bring proceedings must be accorded therefore to a person who also enjoys substantive rights. In the case of consortia, however, the rights conferred by the directives concerning the substantive law of public procurement are to be enjoyed by the consortia themselves. It is precisely the consortium which participates in the contract award procedure and appears as such in relation to third parties. Similarly, only it can constitute the addressee of a possible decision to award the contract.

47. Equally, the fact that national law also imposes upon the members of a consortium certain duties - possibly even towards third parties - may, as a matter of national procedural law, be decisive. Thus the principle that substantive rights and duties run parallel to remedies may acquire significance also under national law.

48. From the Community law perspective, the questions referred must be answered therefore in such a manner as to ensure that the Directive's aim of enforcing the rights which can be derived from the directives concerning the substantive law of public procurement is taken into account.

49. If that principle is applied to the main proceedings it leads then to the conclusion that the Directive provides remedies only for tenderers , in this case, therefore, the consortium. The main proceedings illustrate the typical situation concerning consortia, that is to say, that on account of their specialisation their members would be wholly unable to carry out the complete contract. It must be emphasised that they furthermore did not intend to do so.

50. The principle according to which rights run parallel to remedies would therefore tend to preclude the conclusion that under the Directive individual members as well should also be accorded standing.

51. It is possible to deduce from the Directive therefore only that the consortium as such has standing. From this it in turn follows that, as a matter of Community law, individual members of a consortium acting on their own behalf do not enjoy the right to seek review of the decision to award a contract.

52. It therefore remains to be clarified whether individual members of a consortium are at least permitted to seek review in the name of the consortium.

53. In that respect, as is true with regard to all national procedural rules, it is necessary to recall the principles of equivalence and effectiveness.

54. In respect of remedies provided for in the field of public procurement, those principles of Community law have even been expressly established in Article 1 of the Directive. As regards the principle of effectiveness, the Member States are required by Article 1(1) of the Directive to ensure that decisions taken by contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible. The standard resulting from the principle of effectiveness applicable here is, however, not an absolute one.

55. Thus the Court emphasised in a case concerning remedies in the field of public procurement that:... for the purpose of applying the principle of effectiveness, each case which raises the question whether a national procedural provision renders application of Community law impossible or excessively difficult must be analysed by reference, in particular, to the role of that provision in the procedure, its progress and its special features, viewed as a whole'. (12)

56. A further principle was emphasised by the Court in Fritsch :

It should be added that the fact that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 expressly allows Member States to determine the detailed rules according to which they must make the review procedures available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement none the less does not authorise them to give the term interest in obtaining a public contract an interpretation which may limit

the effectiveness of that directive.' (13)

57. In Grossmann the Court even acknowledged the lawfulness in principle of national rules which define more narrowly the concept of interest' thus restricting the ability to bring proceedings:

In those circumstances, a refusal to acknowledge the interest in obtaining the contract in question and, therefore, the right of access to the review procedures provided for by Directive 89/665 of a person who has not participated in the contract award procedure, or sought review of the decision of the contracting authority laying down the specifications of the invitation to tender, does not impair the effectiveness of that directive.' (14)

58. From that case-law it can therefore be deduced that only the consortium enjoys the necessary standing to bring proceedings but not an individual member.

3. Assessment of the effects of the unanimity rule

59. The effects of the unanimity rule must also be assessed in the light of those principles of equivalence and effectiveness.

60. That applies first of all to the effect advanced by the Commission according to which the unanimity rule reduces the possibilities of applying for a review procedure, that restriction being all the more serious since remedies in the field of public procurement need to be granted rapidly.

61. Tenderers other than consortia are also required to fulfil comparable procedural conditions and, in particular, to ensure that they are represented in a manner which is appropriate to their legal form. On closer examination, therefore, at issue is only the question of the internal decision-making process in respect of consortia, as is also required of other tenderers.

62. Moreover, the mere fact that the unanimity rule can result in the ability of the consortium to defend its interests being dependent on an individual member does not of itself constitute an infringement of the abovementioned principles. The fact that the individual members of a consortium must act together does not constitute a special feature of procedural law; that is a requirement even before they participate in a contract award procedure and particularly so well before they submit a tender, especially when, for example, they form a consortium.

63. The fact that the interests of the individual members may diverge can, when the unanimity rule is applied, it is true, make the lodging of a review application more difficult. It should not be overlooked however that the majority of the members may have different interests to those of individual members, including as far as the question of review is concerned.

64. In the Commission's view, the unanimity rule forces groups of contractors to adopt a particular legal form. On that point it must be observed that such rule is more likely to result in the avoidance of a particular legal form.

65. Moreover, every group of contractors has to conclude a framework for their cooperation, usually in the form of an association agreement. Contrary to the Commission's view, that cannot be regarded as constituting an infringement of Article 21 of Directive 93/37. It does not in fact require the adoption of any particular legal form. The decision to form a consortium is deliberate and is also taken in the knowledge of the resulting advantages and disadvantages.

66. Such an agreement may also govern the exercise of the right to seek review. The advantages which result to the individual members of the consortium from such an agreement cannot, however, be regarded as a requirement to adopt a particular legal form.

67. The Commission's final argument, that the unanimity rule already has a dissuasive effect even at the stage of forming a consortium overlooks, however, the fact that, given such knowledge of possible difficulties in obtaining remedies, precautionary measures may be adopted in the association agreement. Such measures may provide, for example, for representation by an individual member or for the adoption of a particular majority rule.

68. Likewise the unanimity rule cannot be regarded as discriminating against other legal forms of undertaking. Even tenderers who do not assume the form of a consortium must observe the rules of law relating to undertakings and procedure which are applicable to their case. For example, that includes observing the rules according to which companies may only be represented by those bodies authorised to do so. The features of a consortium merely demonstrate the fact that every form of legal organisation is characterised by particular attributes.

69. The disabling effect of the unanimity rule to which the Commission has referred in several respects can be avoided by the national legislature, as I have already explained, by rendering the unanimity rule as merely a default provision. In such cases alternative solutions could be reached by inserting appropriate provisions into the association agreement or, where appropriate, by a resolution of the members taken directly on the basis of the relevant provisions of national company law.

70. In the present case it has been pointed out on several occasions that it is possible to agree to a majority rule or to provide for representation by one member, for example, according to the national law applicable in the main proceedings in the form of a mandat'.

71. It would nevertheless constitute an impairment of the easier access to effective legal protection which the Community legislature sought to achieve if, for example, national law contained provisions on representation as a result of which consortia from other Member States were disadvantaged or which are in practice impossible to fulfil.

72. The fact that in certain Member States individual members of a consortium are also permitted to seek review does not alter the fact that this is not required by the Directive. Admittedly, Member States are permitted as a matter of principle to go beyond the minimum requirements of the Directive. (15) However the question would then arise whether such a rule of national law which, on first impression, appears generous, since it is favourable to tenderers, was compatible with Community law. That question is not however the subject-matter of the present reference for a preliminary ruling.

73. Finally, the fact that the other members of a consortium must also be protected tends, as a matter of Community law, to preclude an obligation on Member States to accord individual members standing to bring proceedings.

74. To accord individual members standing to bring proceedings could, for example, result in a situation in which even a majority of the members are, contrary to their wishes, compelled to enter into a review procedure and on being successful are forced into a new or continued contract award procedure in which they are possibly no longer interested since, for example, they have in the intervening period already concluded other contracts.

75. The point does not have to be examined here whether, on the other hand, Community law prevents an individual member from being accorded standing to bring proceedings. In the present case it was merely necessary to examine whether Community law precludes a specific national prohibition or, putting it another way, whether it permits standing to be restricted to the members of consortium acting together.

76. Community law does not therefore in principle require Member States to accord individual members of a consortium standing to bring review proceedings in their own names. Nor does Community law require individual members to be permitted to bring review proceedings in the name of the consortium. In any event there is no such requirement in respect of those Member States whose national law on this point is not mandatory, to the extent that it permits consortia, that is to say through their members, to derogate from the rule, for example, already by virtue of the association agreement or - later - by resolution.

77. The reply to the first and third questions must therefore be that Article 1 of Directive 89/665 is to be interpreted as not precluding a provision of national law according to which the members of a consortium without legal personality, which, as such has participated in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded the contract, may only acting together - in their capacity as associates or in their own names - bring proceedings against the decision awarding that contract, and according to which an individual member of such a consortium may not, in its capacity as associate or its own name, seek review of the decision to award the contract. This is subject to the condition that the provision of national law does not render the application of Community law impossible or excessively difficult. That is the case if national law permits the members of the consortium to reach alternative solutions.

C - The second question

78. The second question concerns standing to bring proceedings in a particular set of circumstances, that is to say where, although the members of a consortium have acted together in bringing proceedings, the application of one of its members is, however, inadmissible.

79. The legal question is thereby raised whether in respect of the national unanimity rule it is necessary as a matter of Community law to differentiate according to the reason for the lack of unanimity.

80. According to the Commission and to FOREM, albeit for different reasons, the answer should be in the negative.

81. As Austria correctly emphasises, the second question must be answered in the light of the principles of equivalence and effectiveness or, as set out above, according to the principle of rapid and effective remedies expressly laid down in Article 1 of the Directive.

82. Those principles could be infringed in the context of particular factual situations or in respect of particular national provisions. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the limits imposed by both those principles on the effects of the application of the unanimity rule in a set of circumstances such as that in the case in the main proceedings.

83. When assessing the lawfulness of a national procedural rule in the light of both principles, as the judgment in Santex (16) clearly demonstrates and in contrast to Universale Bau , (17) the factual circumstances of the specific case must also be taken into consideration. Thus, as a matter of Community law, the unlawfulness of a provision which on first inspection appears to comply with Community law may only emerge in particular sets of circumstances.

84. In a reference for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC the Court must restrict itself, however, to answering the questions referred rather than delivering a general legal opinion. It is therefore unnecessary to examine and assess in the light of Community law such situations which differ from those of the main proceedings.

85. The national rule at issue, which requires compliance with the provisions concerning internal decision-making processes in circumstances such as those prevailing in the main proceedings, does not in any event infringe the requirement for rapid and effective remedies.

86. The reply to the second question must therefore be that the answer to the first question does not differ where, although the members of the consortium acted together in bringing proceedings, the application of one of its members is, however, inadmissible.

V - Conclusion

87. In the light of the foregoing I propose that the Court should answer the questions as follows:

(1) Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts is to be interpreted as not precluding a rule of national law according to which:

- the members of a consortium without legal personality, which, as such has participated in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded the contract may only acting together - in their capacity as associates or in their own names - bring proceedings against the decision awarding that contract;

- an individual member of such a consortium may not, in its capacity as associate or in its own name, seek review of the decision to award the contract.

This is subject to the condition that the provision of national law does not render the application of Community law impossible or excessively difficult. Those principles are in any event complied with if national law permits the members of the consortium to reach alternative solutions.

(2) The answer to the question does not differ where, although the members of the consortium acted together in bringing proceedings, the application of one of its members is, however, inadmissible under national law.

SEQ CHAPTER \h \r 1Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Conseil d'Etat (Belgium) Administrative Division, by judgment of that court of 25 February 2004 in the case Espace Trianon SA and Société wallonne de location-financement SA (SOFIBAIL) against the Office communautaire et régional de la formation professionelle et de l'emploi (FOREM)

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by the Conseil d'Etat (Belgium), Administrative Division, of the 25 February 2004, which was received at the Court Registry on 9 March 2004, for a preliminary ruling in the case of Espace Trianon SA and Société wallonne de location-financement SA (SOFIBAIL) against the Office communautaire et régional de la formation professionelle et de l'emploi (FOREM).

The Conseil d'Etat (Belgium), Administrative Division, asks the Court of Justice to give a preliminary ruling on the following questions:

Does Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC on the Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts preclude a provision of national law, such as the first paragraph of Article 19 of the Laws of the Conseil d'Etat, consolidated on 12 January 1973, which is interpreted as requiring the members of a consortium without legal personality, which, as such, has participated in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded that contract, to act together, in their capacity as associates or in their own names, in order to bring an action against the decision awarding the contract?

Would the answer to Question 1 be different if the members of the consortium acted all together, but the action of one of its members is inadmissible?

Does Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC on the Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts preclude a provision of national law, such as the first paragraph of Article 19 of the Laws of the Conseil d'Etat, consolidated on 12 January 1973, which is interpreted as prohibiting a member of such a consortium from bringing an action individually, either in its capacity as an associate, or in its own name, against the decision awarding the contract?

Judgment of the Court (First Chamber) of 10 November 2005

Commission of the European Communities v Republic of Austria. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Articles 8, 11(1) and 15(2) of Directive 92/50/EEC - Procedure for the award of public service contracts - Contract relating to waste disposal - Absence of call for tenders. Case C-29/04.

Approximation of laws - Procedure for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Scope - Contracting authority with a holding, together with one or more private undertakings, in the capital of a company legally distinct from it - Contract concluded by the contracting authority with the company - Included - Specific circumstances - Failure to fulfil obligations

A Member State which permits the award by a municipality of a public service contract for waste disposal to a company which is legally distinct from that municipality and 49% owned by a private undertaking without complying with the procedural and advertising rules laid down by Article 8, in conjunction with Articles 11(1) and 15(2), of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive.

Where a contracting authority intends to conclude a contract for pecuniary interest relating to services within the material scope of Directive 92/50 with a company legally distinct from it, in whose capital it has a holding together with one or more private undertakings, the public award procedures laid down by that directive must always be applied.

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, in that the contract for the disposal of the town of Mödling's waste was entered into without complying with the procedural and advertising rules laid down by Article 8, in conjunction with Articles 11(1) and 15(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive;

2. Orders the Republic of Austria to pay the costs.

1. By its application, the Commission of the European Communities requests the Court to declare that, in that the contract for the disposal of the town of Mödling's waste was entered into without complying with the procedural and advertising rules laid down by Article 8, in conjuction with Articles 11(1) and 15(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive.

2. Article 1 of Directive 92/50 states:

(a) public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority,...

(b) contracting authorities shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

(c) service provider shall mean any natural or legal person, including a public body, which offers services....

(d) open procedures shall mean those national procedures whereby all interested service providers may submit a tender;

(e) restricted procedures shall mean those national procedures whereby only those service providers invited by the authority may submit a tender;

(f) negotiated procedures shall mean those national procedures whereby authorities consult service providers of their choice and negotiate the terms of the contract with one or more of them;

3. Article 8 of that directive provides:

Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI.'

4. Article 11(1) of the directive provides:

In awarding public service contracts, contracting authorities shall apply the procedures defined in Article 1(d), (e) and (f), adapted for the purposes of this directive.'

5. According to Article 15(2) of Directive 92/50:

Contracting authorities who wish to award a public service contract by open, restricted or, under the conditions laid down in Article 11, negotiated procedure, shall make known their intention by means of a notice.'

Facts and pre-litigation procedure

6. On 21 May 1999 at a meeting of its municipal council, the town of Mödling decided to create a legally independent body to carry out its obligations under the Law of the Land of Lower Austria on Waste Management (Niederösterreichisches Abfallwirtschaftsgesetz) of 1992 (LGB1. 8240) with a view, in particular, to supplying services in the ecological waste management sector and to engaging in related commercial transactions, primarily in the waste disposal sector.

7. Consequently, on 16 June 1999, an instrument of incorporation was drawn up relating to the creation of the company Stadtgemeinde Mödling AbfallwirtschaftsgmbH (hereinafter AbfallgmbH'), the share capital of which was held in its entirety by the town of Mödling. On 25 June 1999, the Mödling municipal council decided to make AbfallgmbH exclusively responsible for waste management in the municipality.

8. On 15 September 1999, by means of a contract which was concluded for an unlimited period and came into force with retrospective effect from 1 July 1999, the town of Mödling transferred exclusive responsibility for the collection and treatment of its waste to AbfallgmbH. That contract stipulated the amount of the remuneration, namely a fixed sum per dustbin or container, which the town of Mödling was to pay to AbfallgmbH.

9. At its meeting on 1 October 1999, the Mödling municipal council decided to transfer 49% of the shares in AbfallgmbH to the company Saubermacher Dienstleistungs-Aktiengesellschaft (hereinafter Saubermacher AG'). According to the minutes of that meeting, following the decision taken on 25 June 1999, numerous meetings had taken place with representatives of companies interested in setting up a partnership in AbfallgmbH's field of business, in particular with Saubermacher AG.

10. On 6 October 1999, AbfallgmbH's instrument of incorporation was amended in order to allow the general assembly to adopt the majority of decisions by a simple majority and in order to set the quorum at 51% of the share capital. It was also decided that that company would be represented, in respect of its internal and external dealings, by two managing directors, each appointed by a partner, who would have joint authority to sign.

11. The abovementioned share transfer in fact took place on 13 October 1999. AbfallgmbH, however, began its operational activities only on 1 December 1999, that is to say at a time at which Saubermacher AG already held some of the shares in that company.

12. From 1 December 1999 to 31 March 2000, AbfallgmbH carried out its activities exclusively on behalf of the town of Mödling. Subsequently, after a waste transfer centre was put into operation, it also provided services to third parties, mainly to other municipalities in the district.

13. After giving the Republic of Austria formal notice to submit its observations, the Commission delivered a reasoned opinion on 2 April 2003 in which it set out the infringement of the provisions of Directive 92/50, stemming from the fact that the town of Mödling had not arranged a call for tenders for the purpose of awarding the waste disposal contract in question although that contract was to be regarded as a public service contract within the meaning of that directive.

14. In reply to that reasoned opinion, the Republic of Austria maintained that the conclusion of that contract with AbfallgmbH did not come within the scope of the directives on public contracts on the ground that it involved an in-house' transaction between the municipality of Mödling and AbfallgmbH.

15. As it was not satisfied with that reply, the Commission decided to bring this action.

Arguments of the parties

16. The Commission submits that, as the conditions for application of Directive 92/50 have been satisfied, the procedural rules set out in Article 11(1) of that directive and the advertising rules in Article 15(2) thereof are applicable in full.

17. According to the Commission, contrary to the claim of the Austrian Government in the pre-litigation procedure, there is no evidence to establish the existence of an internal relationship between the municipality of Mödling and AbfallgmbH. In that regard, the Commission refers to Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I-8121, paragraph 50, in which the Court held that a call for tenders is not mandatory in a case where the public authority, which is a contracting authority, exercises over the distinct body concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and that body carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority or authorities.

18. The Commission submits that even though that judgment was given in relation to Article 1(a) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), the Court's finding can be applied to all the Community directives on public contracts. The Commission relies on Teckal in order to substantiate its argument that it is only where the contracting authority exercises unlimited control over the contractor that the directives on public contracts do not apply. If a private undertaking holds shares in the contracting company it must, according to the Commission, be assumed that the contracting authority is not able to exercise over that company a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments' within the meaning of that judgment. A minority holding by a private undertaking is thus sufficient to preclude the existence of an in-house' transaction.

19. Furthermore, the Commission observes that, in this case, Saubermacher AG's minority holding implies the existence, to that company's advantage, of rights of veto and of the power to appoint one of the two managing directors having identical rights, which precludes the town of Mödling from exercising over AbfallgmbH a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.

20. In its defence the Austrian Government disputes, first, the admissibility of the Commission's action.

21. It maintains that the establishment of AbfallgmbH, the conclusion of the waste disposal contract and the share transfer constitute three separate transactions which should not have been examined in the light of the provisions of Directive 92/50 but directly in the light of the provisions of the EC Treaty. An infringement of that directive is thus conceivable only if those transactions were decided on in order to circumvent the application of Directive 92/50 or if the share transfer at issue may give rise to a transaction falling within the scope of the provisions on the award of public contracts.

22. In the course of the infringement proceedings, the Commission made no observation on those possibilities. It did not, in either the pre-litigation procedure or the application, define the subject-matter of the proceedings and nor did it establish that the contract at issue was entered into in breach of Directive 92/50 or state the reasons why it considers that the existence of an in-house' transaction is essential in this case.

23. Secondly, as to the substance, the Austrian Government alleges that the Commission overlooked the fact that, at the time the waste disposal contract was entered into with AbfallgmbH, the shares in that company were held 100% by the town of Mödling. Thus, faced with an in-house' transaction, a call for tenders was not required.

24. Furthermore, that government considers that the concept of control similar to that exercised over its own departments' within the meaning of Teckal means comparable control and not identical control. The town of Mödling retained such control even after the transfer of 49% of the shares in AbfallgmbH.

Findings of the Court

- Admissibility

25. It is settled case-law that the purpose of the pre-litigation procedure is to give the Member State concerned an opportunity, on the one hand, to comply with its obligations under Community law and, on the other, to avail itself of its right to defend itself against the objections formulated by the Commission (see, inter alia, Case C-152/98 Commission v Netherlands [2001] ECR I-3463, paragraph 23, and Case C-439/99 Commission v Italy [2002] ECR I-305, paragraph 10).

26. It follows that, first, the subject-matter of proceedings under Article 226 EC is delimited by the pre-litigation procedure governed by that provision and that consequently the reasoned opinion and the application must be founded on identical charges. If a charge was not included in the reasoned opinion, it is inadmissible at the stage of proceedings before the Court (see, inter alia, Commission v Italy , cited above, paragraph 11).

27. Second, the reasoned opinion must contain a cogent and detailed exposition of the reasons which led the Commission to the conclusion that the Member State concerned had failed to fulfil one of its obligations under the Treaty (see, inter alia, Case C-207/96 Commission v Italy [1997] ECR I-6869, paragraph 18, and Case C-439/99 Commission v Italy , cited above, paragraph 12).

28. In the present case, in point 16 of its reasoned opinion and point 13 of its letter of formal notice, the Commission claimed that the sequence of events, from the Mödling municipal council's decision to make AbfallgmbH exclusively responsible for management of that municipality's waste up to the transfer of 49% of the shares in that company to Saubermacher AG, showed that the period during which the town of Mödling held 100% of the shares in AbfallgmbH constituted in reality only a transitional stage leading to the acquisition by a private undertaking of a holding in that company. The Commission thus clearly stated in the course of the pre-litigation procedure that it disputed the town of Mödling's argument based on the existence of three separate transactions.

29. The Commission thus gave a cogent and detailed exposition of the reasons why, taking the view that the provisions of Directive 92/50 were applicable, the conclusion of the contract transferring exclusive responsibility to AbfallgmbH for the collection and treatment of the town of Mödling's waste could not be regarded as an in-house' transaction and should have been the subject of a public tendering procedure.

30. In those circumstances, the inevitable conclusion is that the subject-matter of the action was clearly defined and that the plea of inadmissibility raised by the Austrian Government must be rejected.

- Substance

31. In this case, the Commission is essentially alleging that the Austrian authorities permitted the award by a municipality of a public service contract to a company which is legally distinct from that municipality and 49% owned by a private undertaking without the public tendering procedure provided for in Directive 92/50 being implemented.

32. It must be stated at the outset that the conditions for application of that directive were fulfilled in the present case. The town of Mödling is regarded, qua local authority, as a contracting authority', within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, which entered into a contract for pecuniary interest with AbfallgmbH, which is a service provider' within the meaning of Article 1(c) of that directive. Services for the collection and treatment of waste constitute services within the meaning of Article 8 of that directive and Annex I A thereto. Furthermore, according to the findings of the Commission, which have not been disputed by the Austrian Government, the threshold laid down in Article 7(1) of Directive 92/50, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) was exceeded in the present case.

33. Consequently, the award of a contract in respect of those services could, under Article 8 of Directive 92/50, occur only in compliance with the rules laid down in Titles III to VI of that directive, in particular in Articles 11 and 15(2) thereof. Under the latter provision it was for the contracting authority concerned to publish a contract notice.

34. However, according to the Court's case-law, a call for tenders is not mandatory, even though the other contracting party is an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority, where the public authority which is a contracting authority exercises over the separate entity concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and that entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority or authorities (Teckal , paragraph 50, and Case C-26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I-1, paragraph 49).

35. The Austrian Government maintains that that was the case in this instance so that there was no need to apply the procedures for the award of public service contracts provided for in Directive 92/50.

36. First, that government contends that the conclusion of the waste disposal contract with AbfallgmbH, which occurred while the shares in that company were still entirely held by the town of Mödling, was not intended to establish a relationship between independent legal persons given that that local authority was able to exercise over AbfallgmbH a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments. Consequently, that contract does not come within the scope of Directive 92/50 and there is no obligation on the town of Mödling to arrange a public call for tenders.

37. That argument cannot be upheld.

38. In the present case, the relevant date in order to determine whether the provisions of Directive 92/50 should have been applied is not the actual date on which the public contract at issue was awarded, and it is not necessary to resolve the issue of whether the municipality of Mödling's holding of the whole of the capital in AbfallgmbH on the date on which the public service contract was awarded was sufficient to establish that that local authority exercised over AbfallgmbH a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments. Even though it is true that for reasons of legal certainty it is, in general, appropriate to consider the contracting authority's possible obligation to arrange a public call for tenders in the light of the circumstances prevailing on the date on which the public contract at issue is awarded, the particular circumstances of this case require the events which took place subsequently to be taken into account.

39. It must be borne in mind that the transfer of 49% of the shares in AbfallgmbH took place shortly after that company was made responsible, exclusively and for an unlimited period, for the collection and treatment of the town of Mödling's waste. Furthermore, AbfallgmbH became operational only after Saubermacher AG took over some of its shares.

40. Thus, it is not disputed that, by means of an artificial construction comprising several distinct stages, namely the establishment of AbfallgmbH, the conclusion of the waste disposal contract with that company and the transfer of 49% of its shares to Saubermacher AG, a public service contract was awarded to a semi-public company 49% of the shares in which were held by a private undertaking.

41. Accordingly, the award of that contract must be examined taking into account all those stages as well as their purpose and not on the basis of their strictly chronological order as suggested by the Austrian Government.

42. To examine, as the Austrian Government suggests, the award of the public contract at issue only from the standpoint of the date on which it took place, without taking account of the effects of the transfer within a very short period of 49% of the shares in AbfallgmbH to Saubermacher AG, would prejudice the effectiveness of Directive 92/50. The achievement of the objective of that directive, namely the free movement of services and the opening-up to undistorted competition in all the Member States, would be jeopardised if it were permissible for contracting authorities to resort to devices designed to conceal the award of public service contracts to semi-public companies.

43. Secondly, the Austrian Government submits that, even after having transferred 49% of the shares in AbfallgmbH to Saubermacher AG, the town of Mödling retained a control identical to that exercised over its own departments. In view of the judgment in Teckal , that factor exempted it from arranging a public call for tenders on the ground that the conclusion of the waste disposal contract constituted an in-house' transaction.

44. In this respect, it must be noted that, in the present case, the contract at issue, relating to services within the material scope of Directive 92/50, was concluded for pecuniary interest between a contracting authority and a company governed by private law, which is legally distinct from the authority and in the capital of which that contracting authority has a majority holding.

45. In Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau , the Court has already considered the question of whether, in such circumstances, the contracting authority is obliged to apply the public tendering procedures laid down by Directive 92/50 merely because a private company has a holding, albeit a minority one, in the capital of the company with which it concludes the contract.

46. It held that the participation, even as a minority, of a private undertaking in the capital of a company in which the contracting authority concerned is also a participant excludes in any event the possibility of that contracting authority exercising over that company a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments (Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau , paragraph 49).

47. The relationship between a public authority which is a contracting authority and its own departments is governed by considerations and requirements proper to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest. Any private capital investment in an undertaking, on the other hand, follows considerations proper to private interests and pursues objectives of a different kind (Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau , paragraph 50).

48. The award of a public contract to a semi-public company without calling for tenders would interfere with the objective of free and undistorted competition and the principle of equal treatment of the persons concerned, referred to in Directive 92/50, in that such a procedure would offer a private undertaking with a capital presence in that undertaking an advantage over its competitors (Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau , paragraph 51).

49. The Court held that, where a contracting authority intends to conclude a contract for pecuniary interest relating to services within the material scope of Directive 92/50 with a company legally distinct from it, in whose capital it has a holding together with one or more private undertakings, the public award procedures laid down by that directive must always be applied (Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau , paragraph 52).

50. Thus, having regard to the foregoing, it must be found that, in that the contract for the disposal of the town of Mödling's waste was entered into without complying with the procedural and advertising rules laid down by Article 8, in conjunction with Articles 11(1) and 15(2) of Directive 92/50, the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive.

Costs

51. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission has applied for costs and the Republic of Austria has been unsuccessful, the Republic of Austria must be ordered to pay the costs.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT

of 10 November 2005

in Case C-29/04: Commission of the European Communities v Republic of Austria [1]

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Articles 8, 11(1) and 15(2) of Directive 92/50/EEC - Procedure for the award of public service contracts - Contract relating to waste disposal - Absence of call for tenders)

In Case C-29/04: Commission of the European Communities (Agent: K. Wiedner) v Republic of Austria (Agent: M. Fruhmann) - action under Article 226 EC for failure to fulfil obligations, brought on 28 January 2004 - the Court (First Chamber), composed of P. Jann, President of the Chamber, K. Schiemann (Rapporteur), J.N. Cunha Rodrigues, K. Lenaerts and M. Ilešič, Judges; L.A. Geelhoed, Advocate General; R. Grass, Registrar, gave a judgment on 10 November 2005, in which it:

Declares that, in that the contract for the disposal of the town of Mödling's waste was entered into without complying with the procedural and advertising rules laid down by Article 8, in conjunction with Articles 11 (1) and 15(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive;

Orders the Republic of Austria to pay the costs.

[1] - OJ C 71 of 20.3.2004.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Geelhoed delivered on 21 April 2005. Commission of the European Communities v Republic of Austria. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Articles 8, 11(1) and 15(2) of Directive 92/50/EEC - Procedure for the award of public service contracts - Contract relating to waste disposal - Absence of call for tenders. Case C-29/04.

I - Introduction

1. In this case the Commission claims that the Court should declare that the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, (2) in that the award of a waste disposal contract entered into by the town of Mödling failed to comply with the procedural and advertising rules laid down in Article 8, in conjunction with Article 11(1) and Article 15(2), of that directive.

II - Legal background

A - Relevant provisions of the directive

2. The Commission alleges failure to fulfil obligations under Article 8, in conjunction with Article 11(1) and Article 15(2) of the directive. The definitions contained in Article 1(a), (b) and (c) are also relevant here.

3. Under Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50, public service contracts' are to mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority....' Under Article 1(b) of that directive, contracting authorities' are to mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law...'. Finally, Article 1(c) defines service provider' as any natural or legal person, including a public body, which offers services....'

4. Article 8 of Directive 92/50 provides: Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI.' These provisions essentially contain the rules on calls for competition and advertising. Under Article 11(1) of Directive 92/50, [i]n awarding public service contracts, contracting authorities shall apply the procedures defined in Article 1(d), (e) and (f), adapted for the purposes of this directive.' The procedures referred to in these provisions are open procedures', restricted procedures' and negotiated procedures'. Article 15(2) of Directive 92/50 provides that [c]ontracting authorities who wish to award a public service contract by open, restricted or, under the conditions laid down in Article 11, negotiated procedure, shall make known their intention by means of a notice.'

5. Category 16 of Annex I A to the directive covers [s]ewage and waste disposal services; sanitation and similar services.'

B - National provisions

6. Paragraph 9(3) of the Law on Waste Management of Lower Austria (the regional law on waste') provides that the municipalities of Lower Austria must ensure that waste is collected and treated and must set up or make available facilities, having regard to the provisions of this law. Under Paragraph 11 of this law, each municipality must ensure that a waste service is provided and functions properly.

III - Facts

7. On 21 May 1999 the municipality of Mödling decided to use an independent body to carry out its statutory duties relating to waste management. A company, AbfallwirtschaftsGmbH (AbfallGmbH'), was incorporated for this purpose. The minutes of the municipal council meeting state that all the shares in the undertaking are in principle to be held by the municipality of Mödling. The object of AbfallGmbH is to supply services relating to ecological waste management and to engage in related commercial transactions, primarily relating to waste disposal, which include the drafting and development of a waste management plan, primarily for the municipality of Mödling.

8. On 16 June 1999 the instrument of incorporation was drawn up. The whole of the company's share capital was held by one member, namely the municipality of Mödling.

9. On 25 June 1999, the municipality of Mödling decided to transfer to AbfallGmbH responsibility for waste management in the municipality in accordance with the regional law on waste, the federal law on waste management, and the municipal regulations on waste management. The municipality of Mödling also gave it an option to take over contracts relating to waste treatment which had not yet expired at that time. A lease concluded between the municipality of Mödling and AbfallGmbH provided for the equipment and personnel necessary for the treatment of waste.

10. The waste disposal contract, under which the municipality of Mödling transferred exclusive responsibility for the collection and treatment of waste to AbfallGmbH, was entered into on 15 September 1999. The contract was entered into for an unlimited period and came into force with retrospective effect from 1 July 1999. The contract stipulates that the municipality of Mödling is to pay to AbfallGmbH remuneration which consists of a fixed amount per dustbin or container by way of payment for collecting and treating waste, large objects, refuse, biologically degradable waste and hazardous substances. Furthermore, AbfallGmbH entered into no contracts with other municipalities or associations of municipalities. However, the waste transfer centre of the municipality of Mödling does carry out work for other private-law waste disposal companies relating to the transportation and compacting of household waste.

11. On 15 September 1999 the lease relating to the equipment and personnel necessary for the treatment of waste also entered into force for an unlimited period and with retrospective effect from 1 July 1999. AbfallGmbH is required to employ the personnel appointed by the municipality in accordance with the conditions applicable to seconded personnel. The contract states that the municipality of Mödling has transferred to AbfallGmbH the right to issue instructions to the personnel.

12. On 1 October 1999 the municipal council of Mödling decided that the municipality, as sole member of AbfallGmbH, should transfer 49% of its shares in the company to a private undertaking, namely Saubermacher Dienstleistungs Aktiengesellschaft (Saubermacher AG'). The minutes of the meeting of 1 October 1999 stated that following the decision of the municipal council on 25 June 1999 a series of talks were held with undertakings, primarily Saubermacher AG, which were interested in acquiring a holding. The companies' proposals were finally submitted to KPMG which identified the Saubermacher AG proposal as the one which guaranteed best operation.

13. On 6 October 1999 the instrument of incorporation was amended so that the vast majority of decisions could be adopted by a simple majority. In addition, the quorum for the general assembly was set at 51% of the share capital. The undertaking is represented in respect of internal and external relations by at least two managing directors who are jointly authorised to sign.

14. On 13 October 1999 the municipality of Mödling transferred 49% of its shares to Saubermacher AG by means of a transfer agreement.

15. AbfallGmbH became operational as from 1 December 1999, that is to say after Saubermacher AG had acquired its shares in this undertaking.

16. From 1 December 1999 to 31 March 2000 AbfallGmbH worked exclusively for the municipality of Mödling. After the waste transfer centre had been commissioned, it also worked for third parties. In the first financial year beginning 1 April 2000 AbfallGmbH's work for the municipality of Mödling accounted for 70 to 80% of its turnover.

IV - Pre-litigation procedure

17. On 20 March 2002 the Commission sent a letter of formal notice to the Republic of Austria contending that the municipality of Mödling had not arranged a call for tenders for the waste collection and treatment contract despite the fact that it was a public service contract which came within the scope of Directive 92/50. By letter of 23 June 2002 the Republic of Austria disputed this contention. It takes the view that the award of the waste collection and treatment contract to AbfallGmbH does not come under the directives on public contracts because in legal terms it involves a so-called in-house' transaction.

18. Since it deemed this reply unsatisfactory, the Commission sent the Republic of Austria a reasoned opinion on 3 April 2003. Since in its reply to the reasoned opinion the Republic of Austria merely reiterated the arguments which it put forward in its reply to the letter of formal notice, the Commission brought the present action on 28 January 2004.

19. The Commission claims that the Court should:

- declare that the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, in that award of the waste disposal contract entered into by the town of Mödling failed to comply with the procedural and advertising rules laid down in Article 8, in conjunction with Article 11(1) and Article 15(2), of that directive;

- order the Republic of Austria to pay the costs.

20. The Republic of Austria contends that the action should be dismissed as inadmissible and, in the alternative, as unfounded.

V - Arguments of the parties and appraisal

A - Admissibility

1. Views of the parties

21. In its defence the Republic of Austria disputes the admissibility of the action. It claims that the Commission firstly failed to set out clearly why it regards the conclusion of the waste disposal contract as an infringement of Directive 92/50. Consequently, it failed to observe the principle that the subject-matter of an action must be set out clearly. Thus, the Commission failed to appreciate the purpose of the pre-litigation procedure, namely to give the Member State concerned an opportunity to defend itself. Secondly, the Commission infringed the basic rule that evidence of failure to fulfil obligations must be furnished. Thirdly, the action brought by the Commission rested on an incorrect legal basis.

22. In the view of the Austrian Government, the events which led to the award of the contract to AbfallGmbH must be assessed independently of one another. If such an assessment is made, it leads to the conclusion that Directive 92/50 is not applicable. The first stage - the incorporation of AbfallGmbH, which is 100%owned by the municipality of Mödling - is not an act which comes within the scope of the provisions on the award of public contracts. The second stage too - the conclusion of the waste disposal contract between the municipality of Mödling and AbfallGmbH - does not constitute an infringement of Directive 92/50 since it involves a so-called in-house' transaction. The third stage - the sale of 49% of the shares in AbfallGmbH by the municipality of Mödling to a private company - likewise does not come within the scope of provisions on the award of public contracts. Therefore, in the present case there is no infringement of Directive 92/50 and the award of the contract to AbfallGmbH should have been examined directly in the light of the provisions of the EC Treaty (the provisions on aid).

23. The Commission could have demonstrated an infringement of Directive 92/50 only if it had taken as a basis one of the following two premisses, namely either that the various stages which led to the incorporation of AbfallGmbH and subsequently to the acquisition by a private party of a holding in AbfallGmbH had de facto been chosen so as to circumvent application of Directive 92/50, or that the share sale conceals the award to a private party of a contract which should be classified as a public contract. However, the Commission has at no point made any statement regarding these premisses.

24. Furthermore, at no point in the pre-litigation procedure did the Commission state that it considered that the award of the waste disposal contract, on the one hand, and the transfer of 49% of the shares and the amendment to the statutes, on the other, constituted the same act. Moreover, the Commission furnished no evidence in support of its pleas and in particular did not demonstrate that the municipality of Mödling sought to circumvent the law. Finally, it raised this complaint for the first time in its reply.

25. The Commission disputes the view of the Austrian Government. It considers that the award of the waste disposal contract to AbfallGmbH with the acquisition of a holding by Saubermacher AG cannot be divided artificially into three stages. In this respect it recalls that in its letter of formal notice (point 13) it stated that the award of the contract to AbfallGmbH, which was initially 100%owned by the municipality of Mödling, was merely a transitional stage in creating a semi-public undertaking following the transfer of 49% of the shares to a private undertaking. This is clear from the fact that following the municipal council meeting on 25 June 1999 talks were held with undertakings interested in acquiring a holding. The brief period between the conclusion of the contract with AbfallGmbH and the decision to transfer the shares - two weeks - showed that the intention of the municipality of Mödling was from the outset to entrust the service to an undertaking in which a private undertaking held a large number of shares. Therefore, the Austrian Government cannot claim that it was unaware of the subject-matter of the action.

2. Appraisal

26. According to the Court's settled case-law, the Commission must indicate, in any application made under Article 226 EC, the specific complaints on which the Court is asked to rule and, at the very least in summary form, the legal and factual particulars on which those complaints are based.

27. Like the formal notice addressed by the Commission to the Member State, and like the reasoned opinion issued by the Commission, which defines the subject-matter of the dispute, the application must enable the Member State concerned to put forward its defence and to contest all of the complaints raised against it by the Commission.

28. That case-law precludes infringement proceedings from being initiated by an application that prejudices the rights of the defence, because the complaints raised are insufficiently precise, or for lack of legal or factual reasons. (3)

29. In this case the Commission set out clearly in the pre-litigation procedure why it considers that the Austrian Government failed to comply with the procedural rules laid down in Directive 92/50 in concluding the waste disposal contract. It examined in great depth the factual circumstances which led to the award of the waste disposal contract and the legal grounds on which it based the infringement.

30. In particular the Commission deduced from the facts relating to the conclusion of the contract and the circumstances under which Saubermacher AG acquired a holding in AbfallGmbH that in this case there was a contract to which Directive 92/50 applied. Therefore, the subject-matter of the action was adequately defined.

31. Consequently, the Austrian Government's complaint that the Commission failed to define the subject-matter of the action is unfounded.

32. The Austrian Government's other complaints regarding admissibility are of a substantive nature. I will examine them in my appraisal of the substance of the action below.

33. It follows from the foregoing that the Austrian Government's objection of inadmissibility must be dismissed.

B - Substance

1. Views of the parties

34. In its application the Commission observes that the municipality of Mödling must, in its capacity as a local authority, be regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50. Waste disposal is a service which comes within Category 16 of Annex I A to the directive. Therefore, the contract to supply this service must be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI. In addition, the waste disposal contract exceeds the threshold of 200 000 special drawing rights (SDRs), as provided in Article 7(1)(a)(ii) of Directive 92/50, as amended by Article 1(1) of European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively. (4) Consequently, the rules on procedure laid down in Article 11(1) and the rules on advertising laid down in Article 15(2) of Directive 92/50 are applicable in their entirety.

35. In the present case the Commission takes the view that there is no internal relationship between the municipality of Mödling and AbfallGmbH. In support of this view it refers to the judgment in Teckal . (5) In that judgment the Court held that the directives on the award of public contracts do not apply in the case where the local authority exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.' Where a contracting authority did not intend to entrust the tasks assigned to it to a third party but merely to redistribute those tasks internally, the directives on the award of public service are not applicable. However, as soon as a private undertaking holds shares in the contractor, the contracting authority is no longer able to exercise a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments. A minority holding of a private undertaking is sufficient to rule out the existence of an internal relationship.

36. The Commission contends, furthermore, that Saubermacher AG's minority holding means that this undertaking has acquired considerable rights of veto and the power to appoint one of the two managing directors having identical rights:

- Saubermacher AG enjoys a right of veto over important decisions concerning AbfallGmbH, such as increasing or reducing the share capital, amending its object as defined in its statutes, merging or selling shares, or splitting shares in the company;

- by appointing one of the two managing directors, Saubermacher AG exercises influence over AbfallGmbH since the two managing directors jointly manage and represent the undertaking in its internal and external relations and are jointly authorised to sign. Furthermore, the operational activities of the managing directors do not require prior decisions of the general assembly.

37. The Austrian Government takes the view that the conclusion of the waste disposal contract with AbfallGmbH does not fall within the scope of Directive 92/50/EEC because it involves a so-called in-house' transaction. In its view, the holding of a private person in an undertaking does not mean that there can be no internal relationship. The decisive element is the degree of autonomy' of the contractual partner, that is to say AbfallGmbH, and not the possible influence of a private partner within that undertaking. In the present case AbfallGmbH did not and does not have autonomous decision-making powers, either at the time the contract was entered into or at present.

38. In the view of the Austrian Government, the contract concluded between the contracting authority and the service provider is not really a contract at all for the purposes of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 since the contracting authority is able to influence the way in which the service provider operates and the latter consequently lacks autonomy. (6)

39. Moreover, the requirement laid down in Teckal , (7) namely exercising a control which is similar to that which a local authority exercises over its own departments', requires comparable and not identical control. A global assessment of the legal and factual circumstances is necessary to ascertain whether or not there is comparable control. When all the relevant factors are taken into account, it is clear that the municipality of Mödling is able to exercise such comparable' control even after the transfer of 49% of the shares. In this respect the following factors are relevant:

- because it has the majority of votes in the general assembly the municipality of Mödling is able at any time to rescind the waste disposal contract with AbfallGmbH or to dissolve AbfallGmbH itself;

- the operations of AbfallGmbH can be determined in any respect by the municipality of Mödling alone since the two managing directors are subject to the limits laid down by the general assembly;

- under the agreement determining the legal relationship between the parties, all decisions on the operations of AbfallGmbH can be taken by a simple majority (that is to say by the municipality of Mödling alone);

- by virtue of the simple majority of shares and voting rights which it possesses the municipality of Mödling can at any time and without giving reasons remove the managing director of AbfallGmbH from his post and also remove the managing director proposed by the private undertaking from his post. In addition, it can also decide at the general assembly to reduce the remuneration of the managing directors.

40. In the reply the Commission dismisses the Austrian Government's view that it is necessary to ascertain whether or not there is an internal control relationship on a case-by-case basis and having regard to all the circumstances. Such an examination would lead to legal uncertainty as regards the applicability of Community directives relating to public contracts. On the other hand, the scope of Directive 92/50 can be defined simply and predictably by the criterion applied by the Commission, that is to say the influence of a third party on the contractor.

2. Appraisal

41. In order to determine whether the present action brought by the Commission is well founded, the following two questions must be examined:

(a) must AbfallGmbH, in which Saubermacher holds 49% of the shares, be regarded as a legal entity which, although it has, in legal terms, been hived off as a separate legal person, remains an integral part of the organisation which the municipality of Mödling has to perform its public duties, including the disposal of waste? If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, the waste disposal contract given to AbfallGmbH by the municipality of Mödling must be regarded as a contract awarded within the organisation of the municipality. In that case there is no contract to which the rules on the award of contracts laid down in Directive 92/50 would apply;

(b) and, if it is assumed that AbfallGmbH in its present legal form, that is to say with the acquisition of a holding by Saubermacher AG and the provisions of the statutes and the law applicable thereto, must be regarded as an entity outside the organisation of the municipality of Mödling, is there proper compliance with the relevant provisions of Directive 92/50?

42. As I have explained above, the action brought by the Commission raises the question of what is to be understood by a contract which is not awarded within a local authority's power structure. According to settled case-law, Directive 92/50 is applicable where a contracting authority, such as a local authority, plans to conclude in writing, with an entity which is formally distinct from it and independent of it in regard to decision-making, a contract for pecuniary interest. (8) It therefore follows that a contractor is not regarded as coming under the same power structure as the contracting authority where it is legally distinct from it. However, even where the contractor is an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority, there may be other circumstances in which a call for tenders is not mandatory. (9) In this respect Teckal provides two cumulative criteria which are used to ascertain whether or not there is an internal power structure. This is the case where the criterion is satisfied that the local authority exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling local authority or authorities'. (10)

43. In the abovementioned Teckal judgment the distinct body was fully owned by a public corporation. The judgment in Stadt Halle , (11) which was given after the written procedure in the present case had ended, related to whether a contracting authority could exercise over a so-called semi-public company', that is to say a company in which private companies also have a holding, a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments. The Court ruled that the participation, even as a minority, of a private undertaking in the capital of a company in which the contracting authority in question is also a participant excludes in any event the possibility of that contracting authority exercising over that company a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.'

44. In that case one of the factors on the basis of which the Court reached its judgment was the fact that the award of a public contract to a semi-public company without calling for tenders would interfere with the objective of free and undistorted competition and the principle of equal treatment of the persons concerned, referred to in Directive 92/50, in particular in that such a procedure would offer a private undertaking with a capital presence in that undertaking an advantage over its competitors. (12)

45. In brief, a legal entity which has been hived off, in legal terms, as a separate legal person cannot be regarded as forming part of a contracting authority where a private undertaking also has a capital presence in that undertaking.

46. The following is clear from the facts set out in points 7 to 16 above and the information taken from the statutes which was cited by the Commission and has gone unchallenged, as reproduced in point 36 above:

- Saubermacher AG has a share holding of 49% in AbfallGmbH;

- attached to this holding is the right to appoint one of the managing directors;

- these directors are responsible for the business operations of AbfallGmbH;

- a qualified majority of the general assembly of shareholders is necessary for important decisions concerning the structure and organisation of the undertaking.

47. On the basis of these facts it is justified to conclude that the relationship between the municipality of Mödling and AbfallGmbH is not an internal relationship in which the municipality of Mödling can exercise control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments. This finding is not altered by the fact that the municipality can decide to end its cooperative link with Saubermacher AG. However, in this respect it is bound by the general and specific rules of national law on natural and legal persons which govern relations between parties working together in a company, which means that it must in any event take account of the legitimate interests of Saubermacher AG. It seems unlikely that Saubermacher AG would have been prepared, by taking a - considerable - interest in AbfallGmbH, to establish a cooperative link with the municipality of Mödling, as another major shareholder, if the continuity of that cooperative link were entirely at the discretion of the municipality.

48. In the present case the conversion of an internal department of the municipality of Mödling into a private undertaking cannot be regarded as an in-house' transaction in view of the hiving-off process and the activity of AbfallGmbH itself.

49. Immediately after AbfallGmbH had been incorporated by the municipality of Mödling on 16 June 1999, it started, following the decision of the municipal council of 25 June, to look for a private partner for the undertaking that had been set up. With Saubermacher AG's involvement the municipality of Mödling acquired the expertise necessary for the commercial operation of AbfallGmbH.

50. This interpretation of the facts is further confirmed by the following facts:

- a start was made on implementing the waste disposal contract between the municipality of Mödling and AbfallGmbH only after Saubermacher AG had acquired a holding in AbfallGmbH;

- third parties account for 20 to 30% of AbfallGmbH's operations (see point 16 above).

51. Since AbfallGmbH, in its present legal form, that is to say with the acquisition of a holding by Saubermacher AG and the provisions of the statutes and the law applicable thereto, must be regarded as an entity outside the organisation of the municipality of Mödling, it is necessary to examine whether the waste disposal contract, by which the municipality of Mödling transferred responsibility for the collection and treatment of waste exclusively to AbfallGmbH, comes within the scope of Directive 92/50 and whether there has been proper compliance with the relevant provisions.

52. I would observe first of all that the municipality of Mödling is a local authority. Moreover, this fact is not contested by the Austrian Government. Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 provides that contracting authorities are to mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law. As a local authority, the municipality of Mödling is, therefore, a contracting authority and comes within the scope ratione personae of the directive.

53. Secondly, the services which form the subject-matter of the relationship at issue come within the scope of the directive. Annex I A to the directive lists among the categories of services referred to therein Category 16 relating to [s]ewage and waste disposal services; sanitation and similar services'. As regards the specific content of the services, Annex I A refers to the CPC reference number (Central Product Classification of the United Nations) which is indicated alongside the category in question. The core operations of AbfallGmbH comprise the collection and treatment of waste, large objects, refuse, biologically degradable waste and hazardous substances. Therefore, it follows that AbfallGmbH's core operations are among the services listed in Annex I A to the directive and that the provisions of the directive are applicable thereto.

54. The next aspect which must be examined is the nature of the relationship between the municipality of Mödling and AbfallGmbH. The eighth recital in the preamble states the provision of services is covered by this directive only in so far as it is based on contracts; ... the provision of services on other bases, such as law or regulations, or employment contracts, is not covered.' Article 1(a) provides a definition of the term public services contract' for the purposes of the directive, namely contracts for pecuniary interest co ncluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority.'

55. In order to be able to describe the relationship as a public contract, it is necessary to examine whether the contract was concluded in the form of a contract and whether a monetary consideration was agreed. This is so in the present case. It is an undisputed fact that the waste disposal contract, by which the municipality of Mödling transferred responsibility for waste collection and treatment exclusively to AbfallGmbH, provides that the municipality of Mödling is to pay remuneration to AbfallGmbH which consists of a fixed amount per dustbin or container by way of payment for collecting and treating waste.

56. In addition, the two legal persons which have entered into the contract must be legally distinct from one another, otherwise there is an in-house' service. I stated earlier in points 46 to 50, that AbfallGmbH must not be regarded as an internal department of the municipality of Mödling either in law or in fact.

57. The fact that the decision to enter into a contract between the municipality of Mödling and AbfallGmbH was adopted while AbfallGmbH was still fully owned by the municipality of Mödling does not alter the finding that the public contract concerned should, under Article 8, in conjunction with Article 11(1) and Article 15(2) of the directive, have been awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI thereof. The certainty that AbfallGmbH would gain the contract from the municipality of Mödling made the acquisition of a holding in that undertaking attractive to a private tenderer. However, such forms of external hiving-off in which the hived-off entity is made appealing to private tenderers by means of a contract for an unlimited period acquired in advance by way of a dowry' may not undermine the effectiveness of Directive 92/50. The directive is also applicable to such arrangements.

58. In the light of the foregoing I conclude that the Commission has demonstrated an infringement of Article 8 of the directive, in conjunction with Article 11(1) and Article 15(2) thereof.

VI - Conclusion

59. On the basis of the foregoing I propose that the Court should:

- declare that, by virtue of the fact that the award of the waste disposal contract entered into by the town of Mödling failed to comply with the procedural and advertising rules laid down in Article 8, in conjunction with Article 11(1) and Article 15(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive;

- order the Republic of Austria to pay the costs.

Action brought on 28 January 2004 by the Commission of the European Communities against the Republic of Austria

(Case C-29/04)

An action against the Republic of Austria was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 28 January 2004 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by Klaus Wiedner, acting as Agent, with an address for service in Luxembourg.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

declare that the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts,[1] in that award of the refuse disposal contract entered into by the town of Mödling failed to comply with the procedures and advertising rules laid down in Article 8, in conjunction with Article 11(1) and Article 15(2), of that directive;

order the Republic of Austria to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments:

On 21 May 1999, the municipality of Mödling decided to use its own vehicle to carry out its statutory duties relating to refuse disposal. A company, AbfallGmbH, was incorporated for this purpose. The whole of the company's share capital was held by one member, namely the municipality of Mödling. The contract for disposal, under which the municipality of Mödling transferred exclusive responsibility for the collection and treatment of waste to AbfallGmbH, was entered into on 15 September 1999. The contract was entered into for an unlimited period and came into force with retrospective effect on 1 July 1999. Two weeks after the conclusion of the contract for refuse disposal, the town council of the municipality of Mödling decided that the municipality of Mödling, as sole member of AbfallGmbH, should transfer 49% of its shares to a private undertaking.

The Republic of Austria is of the opinion that the provisions of Directive 92/50/EEC do not apply to the award of the waste disposal contract to AbfallGmbH, as it involved a so-called "in-house" transaction.

The Commission claims that the agreement of 15 September 1999 to transfer the responsibility for the collection and treatment of waste from the municipality of Mödling to AbfallGmbH does not fall to be classified as an "internal transfer" within the administration of the municipality of Mödling, as the municipality of Mödling ceased to exercise the control over AbfallGmbH that it would have over its own departments. The transfer of responsibility for the carrying out of public services accordingly involves a public service contract which was subject to the compulsory tender procedure.

Koppensteiner GmbH v Bundesimmobiliengesellschaft mbH. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria. Public procurement - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures concerning the award of public procurement contracts - Decision to withdraw an invitation to tender after the opening of tenders - Judicial review -Scope - Principle of effectiveness. Case C-15/04.

Approximation of laws - Review procedures relating to the award of public supply and public works contracts - Directive 89/665 - Withdrawal of an invitation to tender - Member States under an obligation to provide for review procedures - Absence of such a procedure in national law - Not permissible - Direct effect of Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(b) of the directive - Obligations of the national courts

Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 relating to the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts require the decision of the contracting authority to withdraw the invitation to tender for a public procurement contract to be open to a review procedure, and to be capable of being set aside where appropriate on the ground that it has infringed Community law on public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

Consequently, where national law, even when it is interpreted in accordance with the requirements of Community law, does not make it possible for a tenderer to challenge a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender inasmuch as that decision infringes Community law and on that ground to apply for it to be set aside, that national law does not fulfil the requirements of Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665.

In those circumstances, the court or tribunal having jurisdiction is required to disapply national rules which prevent compliance with the obligation arising from those provisions.

Those provisions are unconditional and sufficiently clear to create rights for individuals on which they may rely, where necessary, against contracting authorities.

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby rules:

The court or tribunal having jurisdiction is required to disapply national rules which prevent compliance with the obligation arising from Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

1. The reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 1 and 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) (Directive 89/665').

2. That reference was made in proceedings between Koppensteiner GmbH (Koppensteiner') and Bundesimmobiliengesellschaft mbH (BIG') regarding the decision taken by the latter to withdraw an invitation to tender for a public service contract after the expiry of the time-limit for the submission of tenders.

Relevant provisions

3. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 provides:

The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.'

4. Under Article 2(1) and (6) of Directive 89/665:

1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

6. The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.'

National legislation

5. The Federal Law of 2002 concerning the award of public procurement contracts (Bundesvergabegesetz 2002, BGBl. I, 99/2002) (the BVergG') provides inter alia for a distinction between decisions which may be challenged separately and those which may not.

6. Under Paragraph 20(13)(a)(aa) of the BVergG, the decisions which may be challenged separately in an open contract award procedure are the invitation to tender, various determinations made during the period for the submission of tenders and the award decision.

7. Paragraph 20(13)(b) of the BVergG provides:

The decisions which may not be challenged separately are all the other decisions which precede the decisions which may be challenged separately. The decisions which may not be challenged separately may be challenged only in conjunction with later decisions which may be challenged separately.'

8. Under Paragraph 166(2)(1) of the BVergG, an application for review is inadmissible where it is not directed against a decision which may be challenged separately.

9. According to Paragraph 162(5) of the BVergG, after the withdrawal of an invitation to tender the Bundesvergabeamt has jurisdiction solely to determine whether that withdrawal was lawful.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

10. BIG, a company responsible for the management of the buildings and property of the Austrian Federal Government, which owns 100% of its shares, is the contracting authority in the case in the main proceedings. On 26 September 2003 it initiated an open contract award procedure for the demolition work' lot in connection with the construction of a primary school and three sports halls. The value of the entire project was estimated at EUR 8 600 000. The demolition work at issue in the main proceedings was estimated at EUR 95 000.

11. Koppensteiner tendered for that lot in that contract award procedure.

12. By letter of 29 October 2003, BIG informed Koppensteiner that pursuant to Paragraph 105 of the BVergG the invitation to tender had been withdrawn on serious grounds after the expiry of the time-limit for the submission of tenders.

13. On 6 November 2003 BIG invited Koppensteiner to participate in a negotiated procedure, without prior publication of a contract notice, for the demolition work which essentially covered the same services as under the first procedure. In the second procedure, the estimated contract value of that lot was now EUR 90 000.

14. Koppensteiner also tendered in that second procedure.

15. On 13 November 2003 Koppensteiner applied to the Bundesvergabeamt for the withdrawal of the invitation to tender in respect of the first contract award procedure to be set aside and for the issue of an invitation to tender in another contract award procedure to be prohibited and, in the alternative, for a declaration that the withdrawal was unlawful. At the same time it applied for the second contract award procedure to be terminated.

16. By decision of the Bundesvergabeamt of 20 November 2003, BIG was ordered to refrain from calling for tenders in the second contract award procedure for the duration of the review procedure or until 13 January 2004 at the latest.

17. On 28 January 2004 BIG awarded the contract in the second contract award procedure to another undertaking, and the demolition works have since been carried out by that undertaking.

18. BIG submitted before the Bundesvergabeamt that the reason for the withdrawal was the fact that all the tenders were much higher than the estimated contract value. Thus the estimated contract value of the demolition work' lot was EUR 95 000 in the first contract award procedure, but the lowest tender was EUR 304 150, which seemed much too high.

19. Koppensteiner argued inter alia that, in accordance with the judgment in Case C92/00 HI [2002] ECR I-5553, a decision of the contracting authority to withdraw an invitation to tender must also be open to a review procedure, and be capable of being set aside where appropriate on the ground that it has infringed Community law on public procurement.

20. In the decision making the reference, the Bundesvergabeamt notes that the system laid down by the BVergG does not permit the examination and, where appropriate, the setting aside in review proceedings of the withdrawal of an invitation to tender after the opening of tenders in an open contract award procedure. After the withdrawal of an invitation to tender, that body has jurisdiction solely to determine whether that withdrawal was unlawful on the grounds of infringement of the BVergG, the declaration of unlawfulness providing a means for the unsuccessful tenderers to bring an action for damages against the contracting authority.

21. However, in the view of the Bundesvergabeamt, Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 require, in accordance with the Court's interpretation in HI , cited above, that the domestic legal system provide for the possibility of setting aside a withdrawal occurring after the opening of tenders in a contract award procedure. The power of the review body to declare a withdrawal unlawful, with then the possibility of seeking damages, is therefore not sufficient.

22. In those circumstances, the Bundesvergabeamt decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Are the combined provisions of Article 1 and Article 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665... so unconditional and sufficiently precise that, in the event of withdrawal of the invitation to tender after the opening of tenders, an individual is entitled to rely on those provisions directly before the national courts and to seek a review of the withdrawal?

(2) If Question 1 must be answered in the negative, is Article 1 in conjunction with Article 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665... to be interpreted as meaning that Member States are obliged to make a contracting authority's decision, prior to withdrawal of the invitation to tender, that it will withdraw the invitation to tender (withdrawal decision analogous to the award decision) amenable to review in any case, whereby the applicant may have that decision set aside if the relevant conditions are met, notwithstanding the possibility, once withdrawal has taken place, of obtaining an award of damages?'

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

Admissibility

23. The Austrian Government submits inter alia that as the contract in the case in the main proceedings was awarded, after the second contract award procedure, to an undertaking other than Koppensteiner and the demolition works have already been completed, the answer to the questions is no longer of any interest since Koppensteiner can now only obtain damages, which are in any event provided for by the BVergG. Moreover, the national court does not have jurisdiction to set aside the withdrawal decision and the answer to the questions will not assist it in resolving the dispute in the main proceedings.

24. BIG takes the view that the second question is merely hypothetical and therefore inadmissible. Given that the contract has been awarded, the question has no relevance to the outcome of the main case since it is impossible for the contracting authority to take a decision to withdraw that invitation to tender after the event.

25. The Court observes that it is solely for the national courts before which actions are brought, and which must bear the responsibility for the subsequent judicial decisions, to determine in the light of the special features of each case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable them to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which they submit to the Court. Consequently, since the questions referred involve the interpretation of Community law, the Court is, in principle, obliged to give a ruling (see, inter alia, Case C-373/00 Adolf Truley [2003] ECR I-1931, paragraph 21).

26. Although the Austrian Government and BIG have rightly noted that the Court must decline to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose or where the problem is hypothetical (see, inter alia, Adolf Truley , cited above, paragraph 22), it is not obvious that the questions asked in this case have such characteristics.

27. In this case, the national court stated in its decision that the questions are asked in order to enable it to decide whether the application to have the withdrawal of the first invitation to tender set aside is inadmissible and if so on what grounds.

28. It follows that the reference for a preliminary ruling is admissible.

Substance

29. Before examining the questions, which should be dealt with together, the Court refers to the judgment in HI , cited above, in which it stated that:

- the decision to withdraw an invitation to tender for a public procurement contract is one of those decisions in relation to which Member States are required under Directive 89/665 to establish review procedures for annulment, for the purposes of ensuring compliance with the rules of Community law on public procurement contracts and national rules implementing that law (paragraph 54);

- the full attainment of the objective pursued by Directive 89/665 would be compromised if it were lawful for contracting authorities to withdraw an invitation to tender for a public service contract without being subject to the judicial review procedures designed to ensure that the directives laying down substantive rules concerning public procurement and the principles underlying those directives are genuinely complied with (paragraph 53).

30. Accordingly, in the same judgment the Court ruled that Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 require the decision of the contracting authority to withdraw the invitation to tender for a public procurement contract to be open to a review procedure, and to be capable of being set aside where appropriate on the ground that it has infringed Community law on public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

31. It follows that, where national law, even when it is interpreted in accordance with the requirements of Community law, does not make it possible for a tenderer to challenge a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender inasmuch as that decision infringes Community law and on that ground to apply for it to be set aside, that national law does not fulfil the requirements of Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665.

32. A national court before which a tenderer applies for a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender to be set aside inasmuch as that decision infringes Community law, and which cannot rule on the application under national law, is therefore faced with the question whether, and if so, under what circumstances, it is required under Community law to declare that such an application for annulment is admissible.

33. The Member States' obligation under a directive to achieve the result prescribed by the directive and their duty under Article 10 EC to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure fulfilment of that obligation is binding on all the authorities of Member States, including, for matters within their jurisdiction, the courts (see, inter alia, Case C-258/97 HI [1999] ECR I-1405, paragraph 25).

34. Although it is for the legal order of each Member State to designate the review bodies in relation to the award of public procurement contracts competent to decide disputes which affect rights of individuals derived from Community law (see, inter alia, Case C-76/97 Tögel [1998] ECR I-5357, paragraph 28, and Case C-81/98 Alcatel Austria and Others [1999] ECR I-7671, paragraph 49), such a question of jurisdiction does not arise in the case in the main proceedings.

35. In this case it is not disputed that under the applicable national law the Bundesvergabeamt has jurisdiction to hear applications for review relating to decisions' within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 taken by contracting authorities in procedures for the award of public service contracts.

36. In addition, the national court stated (see paragraph 20 of this judgment) that the applicable national legislation precludes the examination and, where appropriate, the setting aside in review proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt of decisions which withdraw an invitation to tender after the opening of tenders in an open contract award procedure.

37. As stated in paragraph 30 of this judgment, the Court has already held that precluding that possibility is contrary to Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665.

38. Those provisions of Directive 89/665 are unconditional and sufficiently clear to create rights for individuals on which they may rely, where necessary, against contracting authorities such as BIG.

39. In those circumstances, the court or tribunal having jurisdiction is required to disapply national rules which prevent compliance with the obligation arising from Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665.

Costs

40. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

Notice for the OJ

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT

of 2 June 2005

in Case C-15/04:Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Bundesvergabeamt Koppensteiner GmbH v Bundesimmobiliengesellschaft mbH [1]

(Public procurement - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures concerning the award of public procurement contracts - Decision to withdraw an invitation to tender after the opening of tenders - Judicial review - Scope - Principle of effectiveness)

In Case C-15/04: reference for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC from the Bundesvergabeamt (Austria), made by decision of 12 January 2004, received at the Court on 19 January 2004, in the proceedings between Koppensteiner GmbH and Bundesimmobiliengesellschaft mbH - the Court (Second Chamber), composed of C.W.A. Timmermans, President of the Chamber, R. Silva de Lapuerta, C. Gulmann (Rapporteur), P. Kūris and G. Arestis, Judges; C. Stix-Hackl, Advocate General; R. Grass, Registrar, gave a judgment on 2 June 2005, in which it ruled:

The court or tribunal having jurisdiction is required to disapply national rules which prevent compliance with the obligation arising from Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

[1] - OJ C 85 of 03.04.2004.

Opinion of Advocate General Stix-Hackl delivered on 16 December 2004. Koppensteiner GmbH v Bundesimmobiliengesellschaft mbH. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria. Public procurement - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures concerning the award of public procurement contracts - Decision to withdraw an invitation to tender after the opening of tenders - Judicial review -Scope - Principle of effectiveness. Case C-15/04.

I - Introduction

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the legal question of whether a withdrawal of a contract award procedure is amenable to review. In particular, the question arises as to whether Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (2) (hereinafter the Directive') obliges the Member States to make it possible to have set aside a withdrawal of an invitation to tender, or at least a contracting authority's decision to withdraw an invitation to tender.

II - Legal framework

2. Article 1(1) provides:

The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC and 77/62/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.'

3. Article 2(1), which sets out the means of review the Member States are to provide for, states inter alia:

The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

B - National law

4. The review procedure system under the Bundesvergabegesetz 2002 (3) (Federal Procurement Law, hereinafter BVergG') is based on a distinction between decisions which may be challenged separately and those which may not. A decision which is not separately open to challenge may be challenged only in conjunction with the next decision that follows which is separately open to challenge.

5. Under Paragraph 20(13)(a)(aa) of the BVergG, the following decisions may be challenged separately in an open award procedure: the invitation to tender, other determinations during the period for the submission of tenders and the award decision. Withdrawal of the invitation to tender after the opening of tenders is not therefore a decision separately open to challenge.

6. Paragraph 105 makes provision in respect of withdrawal after the expiry of the period for the submission of tenders. Subparagraph 2 thereof permits the contracting authority to withdraw the invitation to tender on serious grounds which objectively justify withdrawal. Withdrawal for the sole purpose of enabling a new invitation to tender to be issued in order to reduce the price of the tender is not objectively justified.

7. Under Paragraph 162(2)(2) of the BVergG, the Bundesvergabeamt has jurisdiction, until the contract is awarded, for the purpose of correcting infringements of the BVergG and the regulations adopted under it, to annul decisions taken unlawfully by the contracting authority within the limits of the points of complaint relied on by the applicant.

8. Under Paragraph 166(2)(1) of the BVergG, an application for review is inadmissible where it is not directed against a decision that may be challenged separately.

9. The national court is of the view that under the system of the BVergG, any unlawfulness vitiating the withdrawal of the invitation to tender cannot be pleaded in a review procedure in connection with a subsequent decision open to separate challenge since withdrawal terminates the contract award procedure and therefore no further decisions are taken by the contracting authority during that contract award procedure.

10. The national court is further of the view that under the system of the BVergG, it is therefore not possible, in an open award procedure, for any withdrawal of the invitation to tender after the opening of tenders to be re-examined in a review procedure and, where appropriate, set aside. Under the system of the BVergG, the Bundesvergabeamt has jurisdiction, after withdrawal of an invitation to tender, (merely) to establish whether the withdrawal was unlawful on account of an infringement of the BVergG. Such a declaratory decision by the Bundesvergabeamt constitutes the prerequisite for the claiming of damages by contractors against the contracting authority on account of unlawfulness of the withdrawal.

III - The facts, the main proceedings and the questions referred 11. By notice of 26 September 2003, the Bundesimmobiliengesellschaft mbH (BIG') published an invitation to tender for the demolition work lot in the contract award procedure 14 Angerzellgasse, 6020 Innsbruck, Academic Grammar School, new primary school building and three sports halls' by an open award procedure (the first contract award procedure').

12. BIG, 100% of the shares in which are owned by the Federal Government, was formed to bring the Federal Government's building and property management into line. The objects of the business include: the making or holding available of premises for purposes of the Federal Government exclusively or jointly with third parties and, to that end, having specific regard to the needs of the Federal Government, in particular the acquisition, use, management, letting and disposal of real property and premises, the construction and maintenance of buildings, the provision of central building management services and the performance of other ancillary and secondary transactions connected with the objects of the business, the latter transactions excluding, however, all those governed by the provisions of the Kreditwesengesetz (Law on banking and credit business).

13. The first contract award procedure related to a building contract with an estimated contract value of EUR 8 600 000. The estimated contract value of the demolition work lot covered by the procedure is EUR 95 000.

14. By letter from BIG of 29 October 2003, Koppensteiner GmbH (Koppensteiner') and others were informed that, pursuant to Paragraph 105 of the BVergG, the invitation to tender was being withdrawn on serious grounds after the expiry of the timelimit for the submission of tenders.

15. On 6 November 2003 Koppensteiner was invited by telephone by BIG to participate in a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice for the demolition work (sports hall, Angerzellgasse) as part of the building project for the construction of a primary school with an after-school facility and three underground sports halls (the second contract award procedure'). Koppensteiner also submitted a tender in the second contract award procedure. The same work was put out to tender in both contract award procedures, although in the second contract award procedure the invitation to tender contained the additional stipulation that rough separation of the various demolition waste will be possible on the site'. In the case of the second contract award procedure, the estimated contract value was now EUR 90 000.

16. On 13 November 2003 Koppensteiner applied for the withdrawal of the invitation to tender in the first contract award procedure to be set aside and for an injunction against the issue of an invitation to tender in further contract award procedure; in the alternative, it sought a declaration that the withdrawal was unlawful. With respect to the second contract award procedure, Koppensteiner applied inter alia for it to be set aside.

17. By decision of the Bundesvergabeamt of 20 November 2003, BIG was ordered to refrain from opening the tenders in the second contract award procedure for the duration of the review procedure or until 13 January 2004 at the latest.

18. It appears from the file that on 28 January 2004 BIG awarded the contract in the second contract award procedure to another undertaking. This undertaking has already carried out the demolition works.

19. Before the Bundesvergabeamt, BIG argued in essence that the reason for the withdrawal was the fact that, despite careful estimation of the contract value, all the prices of the tenders were considerably in excess of the estimated contract value. The estimated contract value of the demolition work lot was EUR 95 000 in the first contract award procedure and EUR 90 000 in the second contract award procedure. The lowest tender in the first contract award procedure was approximately EUR 304 150 and thus considerably too high.

20. On the basis of the Court's judgment in Hospital IngenieureKrankenhaustechnik , Koppensteiner argued inter alia that a decision of the contracting authority to withdraw the invitation to tender [must] be open to a review procedure, and... be capable of being annulled where appropriate, on the ground that it has infringed Community law on public contracts...'. (4)

21. Koppensteiner further argued that by application mutatis mutandis of Paragraph 100(2) of the BVergG and of the standstill period laid down as a rule in that provision, the withdrawal decision must be open to challenge by the tenderers by application mutatis mutandis of the provisions governing the award decision'. The withdrawal decision was to be regarded as analogous to an award decision since it was a decision by the contracting authority not to award the contract to any tenderer.

22. On 12 January the Bundesvergabeamt referred the following questions to the Court for preliminary ruling:

(1) Are the provisions of Article 1 in conjunction with Article 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 so unconditional and sufficiently precise that, in the event of withdrawal of the invitation to tender after the opening of tenders, an individual is entitled to rely on those provisions directly before the national courts and to seek a review of the withdrawal?

(2) If Question 1 must be answered in the negative, is Article 1 in conjunction with Article 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 to be interpreted as meaning that Member States are obliged to make a contracting authority's decision, prior to withdrawal of the invitation to tender, that it will withdraw the invitation to tender (withdrawal decision analogous to the award decision) amenable to review in any case, and the applicant is entitled to have that decision set aside if the relevant conditions are met, notwithstanding the possibility, once withdrawal has taken place, of obtaining an award of damages?'

IV - Admissibility

23. BIG and the Austrian Government have raised doubts as to the admissibility of, respectively, the second question and both questions. The Austrian Government submitted that it was not possible to annul the withdrawal, since it was legally and factually impossible to make a further award in the contract award procedure in question. After the contract had been awarded, the Bundesvergabeamt had no jurisdiction to set aside the withdrawal, but only to declare the withdrawal unlawful. BIG submitted that the second question, relating to a decision to withdraw the invitation to tender, was inadmissible because such a decision was no longer possible in the main proceedings.

24. The Court has consistently held that it may refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it. (5)

25. On the one hand, it is to be observed that the national court has furnished the Court with all the material necessary to enable it to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it.

26. On the other hand it must be considered whether the questions referred by the national court has referred remain material to the decision to be reached in the main proceedings, given the termination of the second contract award procedure by the award of the contract.

27. The question arises as to whether this has changed the actual facts of the main action, and whether the questions referred, which relate to the withdrawal and not to the other applications in the main proceedings, have thus become inadmissible.

28. As follows from the judgment in Siemens , (6) which also concerned a reference by the Bundesvergabeamt, in assessing the admissibility of questions referred for preliminary ruling the Court takes into account developments after the order making the reference.

29. That case concerned the effects of a decision by the Bundesvergabeamt which the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court) set aside while the reference for a preliminary ruling was pending. The Court concluded that when the decision was set aside, the questions relating to its effects became purely hypothetical. However, the Court held the question concerning the possible invalidity of unlawful contract awards to be admissible.

30. Siemens was therefore a case in which the withdrawal challenged in the main proceedings had been set aside in the meantime. However, it is common ground that that is not the case here.

31. By contrast with Siemens , in the present proceedings the question as to the legal effect of the subsequent invitation to tender or of the contract concluded in the second contract award procedure has not been expressly raised.

32. The questions referred relate to whether the withdrawal is amenable to review, and thus to the first contract award procedure. For that reason, it cannot be assumed that the interpretation of Community law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose or is hypothetical, since the decision as to the legality of the withdrawal challenged in the main proceedings concerns the first contract award procedure and not the second. To be precise, only the latter is affected by the award of the contract. This formal approach, that is to say, considering the two contract award procedures separately, is to be preferred, at least in the context of assessing admissibility.

33. In any event, it may be that the contract concluded at the end of the second contract award procedure is invalid on account of unlawful acts the contracting authority may have committed.

34. Accordingly, the questions referred still relate to the actual facts of the main action despite the change in the underlying facts.

35. In addition, it may equally be that the answer to the questions referred is important in relation to the lawfulness of the second contract award procedure. Even if this were not so under national law, the necessary relevance might arise under Community law. Thus, should the Directive require the withdrawal to be set aside, that might have consequences beyond the mere declaration that the withdrawal was unlawful. However, this need not be considered further at this point.

36. For the sake of completeness it is to be observed that the question as to whether the withdrawal is amenable to review arises regardless of what the contracting authority may or must do after the withdrawal has been annulled (set aside etc.). The latter issue would arise, for example, if the question were whether in particular cases, possibly that of an ostensible setting-aside, there was none the less an obligation to terminate a contract award procedure by awarding the contract.

37. Finally, the questions would be inadmissible if they related to a part of a contract award procedure that was not the subject of the dispute before the national court, (7) or concerned another contract award procedure altogether. However, that is likewise not the case here.

38. The national court has explained the reasons that led it to conclude that an answer to the questions referred is necessary in order to enable it to decide the dispute pending before it.

39. Accordingly, there are sufficient grounds to indicate that an answer to the questions is necessary to enable a decision to be reached in the dispute in the main proceedings.

40. The questions referred should accordingly be regarded as admissible.

V - The substance of the questions referred

A - Preliminary remarks

41. Both questions concern the withdrawal of the invitation to tender by the contracting authority and related aspects of the legal protection afforded by national review bodies. In essence, the question raised is whether the Directive obliges the Member States to provide for the possibility of having a withdrawal annulled.

42. Whereas the first question relates to the direct applicability of Article 1 in conjunction with Article 2(1)(b) of the Directive, the subject of the second question is the interpretation of those provisions.

43. As the Commission rightly submitted, in principle a question as to how a provision should be interpreted in the light of a Directive so as to comply with Community law must be considered before the question as to the Directive's direct applicability. The second question relates to whether a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender can be set aside. The wording of the question pre-supposes that there is such a decision in national law, but it appears from the order of the national court that the question seeks to ascertain whether the Directive obliges the Member States at least to provide for such a decision and the possibility of having it set aside where national law does not permit the withdrawal itself to be set aside.

44. However, a closer analysis of the questions in the light of the explanation given in the order for reference shows that the first question concerns the possibility of setting aside the withdrawal itself, whereas the second question concerns - alternative - possible approaches of national law.

45. Against this background, the questions referred should be considered separately under the following headings: whether the withdrawal itself may be set aside; if the withdrawal cannot be set aside, the obligation to provide for a decision to withdraw the invitation to tender; and interpretation in conformity with Community law and the direct applicability of the relevant provisions of the

B - The content of Article 2(1) of the Directive

46. Accordingly, the first question is as to whether the Directive obliges the Member States to provide for the possibility of having withdrawal of an invitation to tender annulled, that is to say, that it can be set aside by national review bodies.

47. In answering this question, one must start from the general principle in the case-law that the Directive is aimed at reinforcing existing arrangements... for ensuring effective application of Community directives on the award of public contracts, in particular at the stage where infringements can still be rectified'. (8)

48. As regards whether withdrawal can be set aside, one must start in particular with the Court's judgment in Hospital Ingenieure. (9) This judgment has been interpreted in different ways. Although the Court expressly held a withdrawal decision to be a decision subject to the Directive, this has sometimes been understood as meaning that although provision must be made for such a decision to be amenable to review, a declaration of its unlawfulness is sufficient and it is unnecessary to provide also for its being set aside. The justification for this restrictive interpretation is given as being that the Court's decision has to be considered in the light of the national legal situation in that case. National law conferred on the review bodies neither power to make a declaration of unlawfulness nor power to annul a withdrawal.

49. However, as the relevant passages in the judgment show, in particular paragraphs 48 to 54, by contrast with other judgments the Court did not justify its conclusion by reference to the specific national legal situation. (10)

50. Instead, the Court formulated its judgment in Hospital Ingenieure in the abstract and generally. Thus, the statements it made there may be generalised in so far as generally applicable principles may be taken from them.

51. Therefore, this reference for a preliminary ruling it must now be clarified whether the Directive lays down not only an obligation to make a declaration of unlawfulness, which also exists in national law, but an obligation as well to allow for a withdrawal to be set aside, that is to say, that the Member States are required to provide for the possibility of the withdrawal being annulled.

52. The answer to this question depends on the provisions of the Directive to be interpreted and applied. Whereas Article 1(1) lays down its substantive scope of application as regards which of a contracting authority's decisions are covered by the Directive, Article 2(1) sets out the legal protection the Member States must provide for.

53. Both provisions assume there to be decisions'. Article 2 must be regarded as a specific example of the far more general provision in Article 1. Since Article 2 is linked to Article 1, both provisions must cover the same decisions' by a contracting authority. Accordingly, even if the Court had interpreted the word decisions' for the purposes of Article 1(1) only, this would have to be carried through to Article 2(1).

54. As appears clearly from paragraph 49 of Hospital Ingenieure , the Court also expressly considered Article 2(1)(b) of the Directive and held that Article 1(1) of that directive does not lay down any restriction with regard to the nature and content of the decisions referred to therein. Nor can such a restriction be inferred from the wording of Article 2(1)(b) of that directive'.

55. Moreover, in paragraph 55 of that judgment the Court expressly considered whether a withdrawal should be amenable to review. That the Court inserted the phrase where appropriate' in referring to the possibility of review merely corresponds to the Directive's requirements and is not to be misunderstood as a restriction. For it is not every time a contracting authority's decision is reviewed that it requires to be set aside, but only where the requirements for doing so are satisfied. However, provision must be made generally for the possibility of annulment.

56. Furthermore, it is apparent from the Court's judgment in GAT (11) that the procedures listed in Article 2(1) come within the category of the review procedures which the Directive requires the Member States to provide for.

57. Accordingly, one must proceed on the basis of a broad interpretation of decisions' in Article 1(1) and of decisions' in Article 2(1)(b) of the Directive.

58. Thus, a withdrawal is one of the decisions generally subject to the Directive and also one of the decisions in respect of which the Member States have to make provisions for annulment (setting aside).

59. At this point consideration should be given to the question whether the Directive permits Member States to exempt certain decisions from the possibility of being set aside (annulled). At first glance, a judgment of the Court in infringement proceedings against the Kingdom of Spain (12) supports this proposition, the Court in that case having declared lawful a specific form of restricting liability to review to certain decisions in the contract award procedure.

60. However, from that judgment a general principle can also be drawn that the review procedures referred to in Article 1 of the Directive must be conducted effectively and as rapidly as possible and must be available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement'. (13)

61. The principle inherent in the Directive of protecting undertakings which have a particular interest (14) also supports an interpretation favourable to legal protection. Indeed, the facts of the dispute underlying the present proceedings demonstrate this.

62. As regards the case concerning the Spanish system of legal protection, it is first to be observed that the Court dismissed the Commission's complaint principally because the Commission had not adduced the evidence required in direct actions. (15)

63. It should also be emphasised that what the Court regarded as decisive in that case was that the Spanish legislation enables interested parties to bring actions against not only definitive acts but also procedural acts, if they decide, directly or indirectly, the substance of the case, make it impossible to continue the procedure or to put up a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests.' (16)

64. This is precisely what the national law applicable in the main proceedings does not allow.

65. However, the Court's judgment in Hospital Ingenieure has sometimes been interpreted narrowly in another regard. The Court's point that the absence of the possibility of annulment deprives tenderers of the possibility of bringing actions for damages has been relied on for the conclusion that it is sufficient to permit the award of damages, without also providing for the possibility of annulment.

66. On that point reference should be made to the principle also enunciated in Hospital Ingenieure that the scope of judicial review cannot be interpreted restrictively. (17)

67. Against that background, to exclude the setting aside of withdrawals and to limit claimants to damages would have to be regarded as an exception from the general rule that all the possibilities envisaged in Article 2(1) of the Directive are to be available in respect of a contracting authority's decisions.

68. Such a restriction on the powers of review bodies is, however, provided for expressly only in Article 2(6) of the Directive. That provision states that after the conclusion of a contract

, following its award such powers may be limited to an award of damages.

69. The Directive does not, though, provide for their powers to be limited to awarding damages in any other cases.

70. It follows that a limitation to damages expressly provided for only where the contract has been concluded subsequent to its award cannot be applied to a withdrawal. It is true that withdrawal terminates the contract award procedure, but the principle underlying the exclusion of annulment and the limitation to damages in the situation mentioned above is that once concluded, contracts ought not to be set aside. Since there is no contract in the present case, that reasoning cannot apply.

C - The transposition of the Directive's requirements

71. The second question concerns in substance the transposition of the Directive's provisions by the Member States, and in particular the necessary, or at least permissible, separation of a withdrawal into a decision to withdraw the invitation to tender and the actual act of withdrawal, which in that case need not be amenable to challenge.

72. The problem addressed corresponds - at least at a higher level of abstraction - to the Court's requirement in Alcatel that the decision awarding the contract be amenable to review. (18)

73. There is indeed a certain parallelism between a withdrawal and an award, in so far as both acts terminate a contract award procedure.

74. One might start by taking from the judgment in Alcatel the requirement to provide for a measure of which the persons concerned can acquire knowledge and which may be the subject of an application to have it set aside'. (19)

75. Indeed, whichever decisions by a contracting authority should be liable to challenge, effective legal protection pre-supposes an external act by a contracting authority.

76. As regards the separation of a decision preceding an act, indicating the intention to act, from the act and the act itself, it is to be observed that in principle it is possible to imagine such a separation in respect of every act by a contracting authority. Thus, before a tender was eliminated, there would be a decision of the contracting authority notifying its intention to eliminate the tender.

77. In the present proceedings, however, irrespective of the sense or permissibility in law of such duplication, the only question to be decided is whether such separation in respect of withdrawal is sufficient.

78. The Commission submitted that the decision to withdraw, that is to say the withdrawal itself, must be amenable to challenge and that separation did not fulfil the Directive's requirements. The Commission based this argument on the fact that Alcatel concerned the contract award and the related conclusion of the contract. By contrast, a withdrawal did not precede the conclusion of a contract.

79. However, there are limits to the extent to which the judgment in Alcatel may be generalised. Not all of what the Court said in Alcatel can be applied to other sets of facts. This does not, however, mean that solutions similar to those permissible in relation to a contract award are necessarily not permissible in other cases.

80. In infringement proceedings against the Republic of Austria, the Court held that a separation was sufficient at least as regards a contract award. According to that judgment, the announcement of the award decision was enough if followed by a waiting or standstill period. The latter is intended to allow tenderers the opportunity to bring an appeal. (20)

81. However, it is not possible to conclude from the grounds of this judgment or the other case-law of the Court on the Directive that separating acts other than awards would infringe Community law. The decisive factor is achieving the essential objectives of the Directive: the effectiveness and rapidity of legal protection. It is precisely the latter objective that could in fact be better served by holding a decision preceding the actual withdrawal to be amenable to review.

82. Thus, by appropriate separation the national legislature can maintain the act of withdrawal as not being amenable to challenge. However, such a solution must satisfy the requirements of the Directive and the rest of Community law.

83. As regards decisions to withdraw an invitation to tender, the requirements include in particular the announcement of the decision to the tenderers, whose names are known where the withdrawal follows the opening of the tenders, and a reasonable waiting period.

84. For the sake of completeness, reference must be made to the amendments affecting withdrawal in the new legislative package. The new procurement directives provide that a decision not to award a contract is to be notified without the need for an application. (21)

85. Finally, it is to be observed that the effects of setting aside a withdrawal, namely the legal consequences for the withdrawn contract award procedure, or even for the contract award procedure following the withdrawal, are not within the scope of the questions, and therefore on procedural grounds cannot be considered by the Court.

D - Interpretation in conformity with Community law and direct applicability

86. As the Court has consistently emphasised in its case-law, provisions of national law are to be interpreted in conformity with Directives. That obviously applies for the interpretation of national procurement law in the light of the Directive. (22)

87. If it is not possible to interpret national law in conformity with the Directive, it must be considered whether the relevant provision of the Directive is directly applicable. That presupposes that the content of the provision is unconditional and sufficiently precise.

88. The present reference for a preliminary ruling concerns principally Article 2(1)(b) of the Directive and the requirement it lays down that is must be possible for decisions of a contracting authority to be set aside, withdrawal and the related decision being such decisions.

89. It might be objected to the proposition that a provision of the Directive was directly applicable that it is clear from the case-law of the Court that this Directive, including in particular Article 2(1), is not directly applicable.

90. For that reason, before considering whether the requirements for direct applicability are satisfied, this view has to be examined in the light of the relevant judgments of the Court.

91. The first judgment that can be cited against the direct applicability of Article 2(1) is Alcatel. In that case, the Court stated that Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 cannot be interpreted to the effect that, even where there is no award decision which may be the subject of an application to have it set aside, the bodies in the Member States having power to review public procurement procedures may hear applications under the conditions laid down in that provision'. (23) If one reads this passage in conjunction with the paragraph preceding it, in which the Court refers to the possibility of claiming damages where an interpretation in conformity with to Community law is impossible, one might conclude that Article 2(1) of the Directive was denied direct applicability.

92. A similar view might be taken of the Court's judgment in Tögel , which specifically raised the question as to the jurisdiction of national bodies in respect of a whole category of awards. In that case too, the Court was required to interpret Article 2(1) of the Directive and did not recognise it as being directly applicable. (24)

93. However, common to both judgments is the fact that they have to be considered against the background of national jurisdictional problems, and in my opinion they do not in terms generally exclude the direct applicability of the provisions of the Directive in question. The scope of both these judgments is thus limited in that no general statement can be drawn from them as regards direct applicability.

94. By contrast, the case-law relating to this Directive and in a judgment delivered after Alcatel and Tögel includes express recognition of the direct applicability of provisions of the Directive, namely their overriding effect.

95. Thus, in Santex the Court held that where application in accordance with the requirements of the Directive is not possible, the national court must fully apply Community law and protect the rights conferred thereunder on individuals, if necessary disapplying any provision in so far as its application would, in the circumstances of the case, lead to a result contrary to Community law.' (25)

96. Specifically, the Court ensured that tenderers should be able to raise objections to decisions of the contracting authorities by way of the national court disapplying certain national procedural rules. The fact that national law permitted such disapplication cannot be regarded as a general precondition.

97. Analysis of the case-law on the Directive accordingly permits the conclusion that Article 2(1)(b) of the Directive is directly applicable.

98. The general requirements for a provision of a Directive to be directly applicable are fulfilled. The wording of Article 2(1)(b) makes it clear that this provision is sufficiently precise. There can be no doubt that it is unconditional as regards its context.

99. The fact that the Member States have some discretion in regulating national review procedures does not preclude Article 2(1) of the Directive from being directly applicable, since the requirements it lays down are to be regarded as a minimum level of protection. According to the case-law of the Court, for the purposes of direct applicability it is enough that such minimum protection is sufficiently certain. (26)

100. The national court can comply with the requirements of Articles 1 and 2 of the Directive by either not applying the national provisions relating to decisions which may be challenged separately, including the provision as to the admissibility of a review, or by extending the category of such decisions so as to include withdrawals.

VI - Conclusion

101. For the foregoing reasons, it is submitted that the Court should answer the questions referred as follows:

Article 1 in conjunction with Article 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts is to be interpreted as meaning that the Member States are obliged to make a contracting authority's decision, prior to withdrawal of the invitation to tender, that it will withdraw the invitation to tender amenable to review, and the applicant is entitled to have that decision set aside if the relevant conditions are met, notwithstanding the possibility, once withdrawal has taken place, of obtaining an award of damages.

Article 2(1)(b) of the Directive is so unconditional and sufficiently precise that, in the event of withdrawal of the invitation to tender after the opening of the tenders, an individual is entitled to rely on it directly before the national courts and to seek a review on the basis of it.

Notice for the OJ

Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Bundesvergabeamt (Austria) by order of that Court of 12 January 2004 in the case of Koppensteiner GmbH against Bundesimmobiliengesellschaft m.b.H.

(Case C-15/04)

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Bundesvergabeamt (Austria) (Federal Procurement Office) of 12 January 2004, received at the Court Registry on 20 January 2004, for a preliminary ruling in the case of Koppensteiner GmbH against Bundesimmobiliengesellschaft m.b.H. on the following questions:

1. Are the provisions of Article 1 in conjunction with Article 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 so unconditional and sufficiently precise that, in the event of withdrawal of the invitation to tender after the opening of tenders, an individual is entitled rely on those provisions directly before the national courts and to seek a review of the withdrawal?

2. If Question 1 must be answered in the negative, are Article 1 in conjunction with Article 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989[1] to be interpreted as meaning that Member States are obliged to make a contracting authority's decision, prior to withdrawal of the invitation to tender, that it will withdraw the invitation to tender (withdrawal decision analogous to the award decision) amenable to review in any case, since the applicant is entitled to have that decision set aside if the relevant conditions are met, notwithstanding the possibility, once withdrawal has taken place, of obtaining an award of damages?

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 21 June 2007,

gives the following

Judgment

Legal context

1 Procedures for the award of service contracts by the Council of the European Union are subject to Title V of Part One of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1) ('the Financial Regulation') and Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1) ('the Implementing Rules'). Those provisions are based on the Community directives in the field, in particular on Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), on Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and on Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), as amended.

2 Article 97 of the Financial Regulation states:

‘1. The selection criteria for evaluating the capability of candidates or tenderers and the award criteria for evaluating the content of the tenders shall be defined in advance and set out in the call for tender.

2. Contracts may be awarded by the automatic award procedure or by the best-value-for-money procedure.’

3 Article 99 of the Financial Regulation provides:

‘While the procurement procedure is under way, all contacts between the contracting authority and candidates or tenderers must satisfy conditions ensuring transparency and equal treatment. They may not lead to amendment of the conditions of the contract or the terms of the original tender.’

4 Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation states:

‘The contracting authority shall notify all candidates or tenderers whose applications or tenders are rejected of the grounds on which the decision was taken, and all tenderers whose tenders are admissible and who make a request in writing of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract is awarded.

However, certain details need not be disclosed where disclosure would hinder application of the law, would be contrary to the public interest or would harm the legitimate business interests of public or private undertakings or could distort fair competition between those undertakings.’

5 The first paragraph of Article 101 of the Financial Regulation provides:

‘The contracting authority may, before the contract is signed, either abandon the procurement or cancel the award procedure without the candidates or tenderers being entitled to claim any compensation.’

6 The second subparagraph of Article 122(2) of the Implementing Rules, in the version in force at the relevant time, provided that contracts to be awarded by call for tender:

‘… are restricted where all economic operators may ask to take part but only candidates satisfying the selection criteria referred to in Article 135 and invited simultaneously and in writing by the contracting authorities may submit a tender.’

7 Article 128(1) and (3) of the Implementing Rules, which applies where the restricted procedure involving a call for expressions of interest is involved, states in particular:

‘1. A call for expressions of interest shall constitute a means of preselecting candidates who will be invited to submit tenders in response to future restricted invitations to tender …

3. Where a specific contract is to be awarded, the contracting authority shall invite either all candidates entered on the list or only some of them, on the basis of objective and non-discriminatory selection criteria specific to that contract, to submit a tender.’

8 Article 130(1) of the Implementing Rules, in the version in force at the relevant time, provided:

‘The documents relating to the invitation to tender shall include at least:

(a) the invitation to submit a tender or to negotiate;

(b) the attached specifications, to which shall be annexed the general terms and conditions applicable to contracts;

(c) the model contract.

9 Article 130(3)(a)(b) and (c) of the Implementing Rules, in the version in force at the relevant time, stated:

'The specifications shall at least:

(a) specify the exclusion and selection criteria applying to the contract, save in the restricted procedure and in the negotiated procedures following publication of a notice referred to in Article 127; in such cases those criteria shall appear solely in the contract notice or the call for expressions of interest;

(b) specify the award criteria and their relative weighting, if this is not specified in the contract notice;

(c) set out the technical specifications referred to in Article 131;

10 Article 138 of the Implementing Rules, in the version in force at the relevant time, provided:

'1. Contracts shall be awarded in one of the following two ways:

(a) under the automatic award procedure, in which case the contract is awarded to the tender which, while being in order and satisfying the conditions laid down, quotes the lowest price;

(b) under the best-value-for-money procedure.

2. The tender offering the best value for money shall be the one with the best price-quality ratio, taking into account criteria justified by the subject of the contract such as the price quoted, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, profitability, completion or delivery times, after-sales service and technical assistance.

3. The contracting authority shall specify, in the contract notice or in the specifications, the weighting it will apply to each of the criteria for determining best value for money.

The weighting applied to price in relation to the other criteria must not result in the neutralisation of price in the choice of contractor.

If, in exceptional cases, weighting is technically impossible, particularly on account of the subject of the contract, the contracting authority shall merely specify the decreasing order of importance in which the criteria are to be applied.'

11 Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, in the version in force at the relevant time, stated:

'If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low, the contracting authority shall, before rejecting such tenders on that ground alone, request in writing details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements, after due hearing of the parties, taking account of the explanations received.

The contracting authority may, in particular, take into consideration explanations relating to:

(a) the economics of the manufacturing process, of the provision of services or of the construction method;

(b) the technical solutions chosen or the exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer;

(c) the originality of the tender.'

12 Article 148(1) and (3) of the Implementing Rules provides:

'1. Contact between the contracting authority and tenderers during the contract award procedure may take place, by way of exception, under the conditions set out in paragraphs 2 and 3.

3. If, after the tenders have been opened, some clarification is required in connection with a tender, or if obvious clerical errors in the tender must be corrected, the contracting authority may contact the tenderer, although such contact may not lead to any alteration of the terms of the tender.'

Facts

13 On 4 March 2004, acting pursuant to the Financial Regulation and the Implementing Rules, the Council published a call for tenders in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2004 S 45) with reference UCA–033/04, under the restricted procedure. The call related to the provision of cleaning and maintenance services in two buildings occupied by the General Secretariat of the Council in Brussels. The procedure was divided into two lots, each of which related to services to be provided in a specific location, namely the 'Woluwé Heights' building (Lot No 1) and the 'Frère Orban' building (Lot No 2).

14 The specifications provided that the award criterion to be applied was that of the tender offering best value for money. The final evaluation of the tenders in respect of each lot was to be carried out by awarding to each tender a number of marks calculated as follows: 'Number of points in respect of "quality" x 100/price index'. The tender to be considered as being the best value for money was to be the tender which had, on conclusion of that final evaluation, obtained the highest number of marks but had, at the same time, been awarded the minimum number of marks under the heading 'Quality'.

15 The specifications also stated that the quality of each tender was to be assessed on the basis of a maximum of 100 marks and under reference to eight criteria. The eighth criterion, which carried a maximum of 50 marks, referred to 'Hours worked, calculated by applying the totals of A, B, C and D in the spreadsheet set out in Annex 3'.

16 The 50 marks available under the last-mentioned criterion were to be awarded on a basis which was proportional to the difference between, first, the total number of annual hours proposed in the tender subjected to evaluation (Ho) and, secondly, the average of the total number of hours proposed, for each accounting period, in each of the tenders found to be admissible (Hm). A tender which proposed the Hm average was to be assessed as satisfactory and to be awarded 40 marks (that is to say, 80% of the cap of 50 marks). The specifications provided that where the Hm threshold was exceeded by up to 12.5% the tender would benefit from the award of additional marks, subject always to the cap of 50 marks. Conversely, a failure to attain the Hm threshold by a factor of more than 12.5% would be penalised by the deduction of marks, subject to a minimum score of 30 marks, below which the tender fell to be eliminated.

17 In addition, the specifications provided that the average hourly rate in respect of each tender should not, if the tender was not to be eliminated, be lower than the average hourly rate fixed by the Union générale belge de nettoyage (Belgian General Cleaners' Union) ('the UGBN') for a category 1A cost price, on the basis of the rate in force on the date on which the tender was submitted. As at 1 July 2004, that average hourly rate was fixed at EUR 19.6962.

18 On 23 June 2004, the specifications relating to the call for tenders at issue were issued to the tenderers.

19 On 23 July 2004, the applicant, Belfass SPRL, submitted a tender in respect of each of the lots to be awarded under the UCA–033/04 call for tenders. The total annual price under the applicant's tender for Lot No 1 was EUR 234 059.67.

20 By letter of 13 October 2004, the Council informed the applicant that both its tenders had been rejected on the following grounds: '... With respect to Lot [No] 1, calculation of the average hourly rate contained in your tender gives a result which is lower than the minimum rate fixed by the UGBN of EUR 19.6962 as at [1 July 2004]. As regards Lot [No] 2, your tender was not awarded the minimum number of marks as regards quality by the evaluation committee, in accordance with the criteria referred to in the specifications ...'

21 On 15 October 2004, the applicant asked the Council to provide it with further and detailed information as to the circumstances in which its tender in respect of Lot No 2 had been rejected.

22 On 22 October 2004, the Council replied to that request, stating, inter alia, as follows:

'... your tender, which specified a number of hours which was 20% lower than the average number of hours in all tenders, was accordingly eliminated at that stage, in accordance with the formula set out on page 2.'

Procedure and forms of order sought

23 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 23 December 2004, the applicant brought the present action.

24 On hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court of First Instance (Fifth Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure.

25 On 13 December 2006, in reply to a request for the production of documents by the Court of 28 November 2006, issued by way of measures of organisation of procedure, the Council lodged the contract notice and the specifications relating to the UCA–033/04 call for tenders with the Court, together with the original report of the evaluation committee (non-confidential version) in respect of that call for tenders.

26 At the hearing on 21 June 2007, the parties presented oral argument and answered the questions put to them by the Court.

27 The applicant claims that the Court should:

– declare the application to be admissible and well founded;

– annul the Council's decision of 13 October 2004 not to accept each of its tenders submitted in relation to the UCA–033/04 call for tenders;

– order the Council to pay damages in respect of its loss assessed at EUR 1 481 317.65, together with interest at the rate of 7% a year;

– order the Council to pay the whole of the costs.

28 The Council contends that the Court should:

– dismiss the action as inadmissible as regards Lot No 2;

– declare the action for annulment to be unfounded;

– declare the application for damages to be unfounded;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

The admissibility of the action against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 2

Arguments of the parties

29 The Council, without raising a formal plea of inadmissibility, submits that, to the extent that it relates to Lot No 2, the action against the decision of 13 October 2004 is inadmissible. The applicant does not challenge the decision to exclude it from the tender process, as such, but the lawfulness of the Council's decision to include the criterion which led to its exclusion, namely the average of the total number of hours proposed by tenderers, in the specifications.

30 At the hearing, the Council stated that it was clear from the case-law of the Court of Justice that a person who considers that the specifications in a call for tenders, as prescribed by decision of the contracting authority, discriminate against him cannot await notification of the decision awarding the contract in question and then challenge it, on the ground specifically that those specifications are discriminatory, without infringing the objectives of speed and effectiveness of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 92/50 (Case C-230/02 Grossmann Air Service [2004] ECR I–1829, paragraph 37).

31 It takes the view that, since the specifications were sent to each of the candidates, and thus to the applicant, on 23 June 2004, the prescribed period of two months for challenging the lawfulness of the decision to include that criterion had expired on the date on which the present action was brought.

32 The applicant submits, as its principal argument, that specifications are not a challengeable act for the purposes of Article 230 EC. They constitute a preparatory act of general scope and, according to settled case-law, such an act, whatever the time at which it may take place, can never be the subject of an action for annulment.

33 It also argues that specifications are addressed to all undertakings which, belonging to a category defined generally and in the abstract, wished to tender for the award of a public procurement contract. In the present case, the specifications were neither a decision which was addressed to the applicant nor a decision which was of direct and individual concern to it. It infers from that that only an action against the decision to award the contract was capable of allowing it to challenge the lawfulness of the criterion included in the specifications which related to the total number of hours proposed by tenderers.

34 In the alternative, the applicant invokes a plea of illegality under Article 241 EC as regards the specifications.

Findings of the Court

35 As a preliminary point, the Court finds that the Council's position consists of challenging the admissibility of the present action inasmuch as, according to the Council, it is truly directed only against the specifications. The latter constitute a challengeable act, the lawfulness of which was not contested within the prescribed period.

36 It must, however, be held that the annulment sought in the present action is that of the Council's decision of 13 October 2004 not to accept the applicant's tenders submitted in response to the call for tenders and that it is for the purposes of the annulment, and thus incidentally, that the applicant challenges the lawfulness of the specifications.

37 Accordingly, the issue which arises is not that of the admissibility of the action for annulment in so far as that action is alleged to be directed against the specifications, but that of the admissibility of the plea relating to the unlawfulness of that document which is invoked in that action for annulment.

38 In order to rule on that issue, it is necessary to determine whether a document relating to a call for tenders, such as the specifications at issue, is an act which is capable, as the Council submits, of being the subject of a direct action brought under the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC and, accordingly, whether the applicant should have brought proceedings to challenge the specifications, on the basis of that provision, within the period of two months laid down under the fifth paragraph of Article 230 EC.

39 The fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC provides that any natural or legal person may institute proceedings against a decision addressed to that person or against a decision which, although in the form of a regulation or a decision addressed to another person, is of direct and individual concern to the former.

40 According to settled case-law, natural or legal persons other than the person to whom a measure is addressed can claim to be individually concerned, for the purposes of the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC, only if they are affected by the measure in question by reason of certain attributes peculiar to them, or by reason of a factual situation which differentiates them from all other persons and distinguishes them individually in the same way as the addressee (Case 25/62 Plaumann v Commission [1963] ECR 95, 107; Case C-50/00 P Unión de Pequeños Agricultores v Council [2002] ECR I–6677, paragraph 36; and Case C-263/02 P Commission v Jégo-Quéré [2004] ECR I–3425, paragraph 45).

41 In the present case, the Court finds that it is not possible to take the view that the specifications in question are of individual concern to the applicant.

42 First, contrary to what the Council submits, the fact that the specifications were sent individually to preselected tenderers, and thus to the applicant, on 23 June 2004, under the restricted procedure, cannot distinguish the applicant individually for the purposes of the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC. The specifications, like each of the other documents relating to the call for tenders issued by the Council in the present case and of which the specifications form part, apply to objectively determined situations and produce legal effects with respect to categories of persons envisaged generally and in the abstract. They are therefore of a general nature and it cannot be held that their communication to each of a number of undertakings preselected by the contracting authority allows each of those undertakings to be distinguished individually from all other persons for the purposes of the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC.

43 Secondly, the Council is wrong to rely on the judgment in Grossmann Air Service, cited in paragraph 30 above, in order to establish that it was open to the applicant to challenge the specifications in question. It must be pointed out that that judgment was delivered by the Court of Justice in response to a question referred for a preliminary ruling relating to the interpretation of Article 1(3) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665. The Council did not deny that the provisions of Directive 89/665, as amended, are therefore binding only on the Member States and not on the Community institutions. Furthermore, as the Council acknowledged at the hearing, it is clear that the Community legislation relating to the award of public service contracts by the Community institutions which is applicable in the present case contains no provision similar to those which are set out in Directive 89/665. Lastly, contrary to the situation which gave rise to the judgment in Grossmann Air Service, cited in paragraph 30 above, the criterion which features in the specifications and is challenged by the applicant did not prevent it from participating effectively in the contract award procedure in question. On the contrary, the documents before the Court show that the applicant, like the other tenderers included in the list drawn up after the preselection stage, was able to submit a tender for Lot No 2. Consequently, the interpretation given by the Court of Justice in the judgment in Grossmann Air Service, cited in paragraph 30 above, of the provisions of Directive 89/665, as amended, cannot be applied, by way of analogy, for the purposes of determining the admissibility of the present action in so far as it relates to Lot No 2.

44 It follows from the above that, since the specifications in question were not of individual concern to the applicant, it had no right to bring an action for annulment against the specifications under the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC. Accordingly, there is no basis on which the Council can plead that the applicant had the right to challenge those specifications as a basis for opposing the incidental challenge by the applicant in these proceedings to the lawfulness of that document.

Substance

The action against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 1

Arguments of the parties

45 In support of its action for annulment of the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 1, the applicant puts forward a single plea in law, alleging a manifest error of assessment.

46 The applicant essentially submits that the Council committed a manifest error of assessment in failing to give the applicant's tender in respect of Lot No 1 careful scrutiny.

47 Contrary to what the Council inferred from its tender, it argues that the average hourly rate in its tender amounted to EUR 22.123 and was accordingly higher than the minimum average hourly rate of EUR 19.6962 fixed by the UGBN.

48 It is true that the applicant acknowledges that that error on the Council's part is linked to an arithmetical error appearing in its tender as regards the total of categories A, B, C and D (EUR 234 059.67 instead of EUR 271 811.67).

49 However, it takes the view that the principle of sound administration required the Council, when assessing the applicant's tender, to take steps to ensure that the tender submitted for assessment by it did not contain an obvious clerical error of that kind, which it could have corrected on its own initiative.

50 It states that the Council could, merely by verifying the calculation, have established that the correct minimum hourly rate under its tender stood at EUR 20.92, as is clearly and precisely set out at page 40 of the tender.

51 At the very least, the applicant considers that, since the error was obvious and since to correct it would not have altered either the conditions of the contract or the original tender, the Council could, in accordance with Article 99 of the Financial Regulation and as Article 10 of the specifications relating to the calls for tenders in question provided, have made use of its right to contact the applicant.

52 The applicant claims that, contrary to what the Council contends, the conclusions drawn by the Court in its judgment in Case T-19/95 Adia interim v Commission [1996] ECR II-321, paragraph 47, cannot be applied in the present case. That judgment involved a systematic calculation error which it was difficult for the contracting authority to detect. In the present case, the applicant takes the view that the error in question is merely an error in the addition of categories A, B, C and D, which the Council ought easily to have been able to detect and correct.

53 The applicant likewise claims that the Council cannot argue that it did not detect that error when the correct, and therefore corrected, total price is set out in the 'ordinary' and 'theoretical' comparative evaluations of the applicant's tender in the annex to its defence.

54 It goes on to submit that the general principle laid down by the Court of Justice in Case 90/71 Bernardi v Parliament [1972] ECR 603, paragraph 10, according to which a party cannot invoke before the Court irregularities which may have been the consequence of its own behaviour, also does not apply in its case. Its conduct was neither intentional nor was it the source of the error committed by the Council. It adds that it had no interest in its error, which was in this case nothing more than an unintentional arithmetical error, not being corrected.

55 The applicant adds, in reply to the Council's arguments, that, while the notification provided for in Article 100 of the Financial Regulation confers on tenderers whose tenders are rejected a right to draw the contracting authority's attention to any errors of assessment which might have undermined the evaluation of their tender, the principles of sound administration and transparency require the contracting authority expressly to inform the recipient, in that notification, of the existence of that right. In its letter of 13 October 2004, the Council at no point informed it of the existence of such a right. There was accordingly a breach of the principle of equal treatment.

56 It infers from that that the error committed by the Council as to the calculation of the average hourly rate in its tender in respect of Lot No 1 is the result of the Council's failure to give that tender careful scrutiny and that, as a result, the final decision to reject that tender is vitiated by a manifest error of assessment of a particularly serious nature.

57 The Council argues in reply that, as is clear from the wording in the specifications relating to the call for tenders, the average hourly rate is equal to the total price of the tender under consideration divided by the total number of hours included in that tender. That is the reason for which it states that it was content to make the calculation on the basis of the total reference price of EUR 234 059.67 given by the applicant in its tender.

58 The Council is of the view that it was not under any duty to verify the addition of the total of categories A, B, C and D in the applicant's tender and, having done so, to establish that the correct total price was EUR 271 811.67 rather than EUR 234 059.67. Similarly, the Council considers that the information set out in the 'ordinary' and 'theoretical' comparative evaluations of the tender concerned included in the annex to its defence cannot be used to demonstrate that it had established the existence of that error when the tender was being assessed. It carried out those evaluations in the course of preparing its defence to the present action.

59 It adds that a contracting authority can contact tenderers only in order to correct obvious clerical errors. The error in the present case was not obvious at all, with the result that it could not have detected it.

60 The Council also relies on the general principle of law recognised by the Court of Justice in its judgment in Bernardi v Council, cited in paragraph 54 above, whereby a party cannot invoke before the Court irregularities which may have been the consequences of its own behaviour.

61 It likewise considers that, even if it should have detected the error in question, it would have been impossible for it, without risking infringing Article 99 of the Financial Regulation and Article 148(3) of the Implementing Rules, to make contact with the tenderer for the purposes of correcting the error concerned. In support of that argument, it relies in particular on Adia interim v Commission, cited in paragraph 52 above.

62 Lastly, the Council argues that one of the objectives of the notification provided for in Article 100 of the Financial Regulation, which follows the award of the contract and its signature, is to allow tenderers whose tenders are rejected to draw the contracting authority's attention to any errors of assessment which may have undermined the evaluation of the tender. There was no reaction whatever on the applicant's part once it had received the letter of 13 October 2004 informing it of the reasons for which its tender in respect of Lot No 1 had been rejected.

63 It is settled case-law that the Council has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender and that the Court's review must be limited to verifying that there has been no serious and manifest error (Case 56/77 Agence européenne d'interims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20; Adia interim v Commission, cited in paragraph 52 above, paragraph 49; and Case T-139/99 AICS v Parliament [2000] ECR II-2849, paragraph 39).

64 In addition, Article 148 of the Implementing Rules provides that if, after the tenders have been opened, some clarification is required in connection with a tender, or if obvious clerical errors in the tender must be corrected, the contracting authority may, by way of exception, contact the tenderer.

65 In the present case, it is necessary to verify whether the clerical error committed by the applicant, namely an arithmetical error in its tender relating to the total of categories A, B, C and D (EUR 234 059.67 instead of EUR 271 811.67), was an obvious clerical error which the Council should have detected.

66 In that regard, the Court finds, first, that the method of calculation of the hourly rate of tenderers' bids did not require the Council to make a fresh calculation of the total of categories A, B, C and D. It is common ground that the average hourly rate was to be calculated on the basis of the total price included in the tender and the total number of working hours proposed, as set out by the applicant in its tender.

67 Secondly, it cannot be the case that, as the applicant argues, the correct hourly rate under its tender was set at a minimum figure of EUR 20.92, with that amount being clearly and precisely shown at page 40 of the tender, and that the Council should, for that reason, have considered whether it was likely that there had been an arithmetical error in the calculation of the average hourly rate in the applicant's tender. That amount was entered at page 40 of the applicant's tender under category E, which expressly related to the hourly rate for additional work undertaken, on request, by the cleaning staff 'on working days (Monday to Friday) between 16.00 hrs and 22.00 hrs'. Accordingly, the hourly rate of EUR 20.92 thus referred to concerned a particular type of services, namely additional work, which is, therefore, a different kind of work from the services referred to in categories A, B, C and D.

68 Thirdly, contrary to what the applicant maintains, it cannot be accepted that the 'ordinary' and 'theoretical' evaluation tables produced by the Council as an annex to its defence in these proceedings show that the latter was aware of the error committed by the applicant. It is clear from the Council's written pleadings that it drew up those tables for the purposes of these proceedings. The Court also notes that the applicant has not established that the contrary is the case.

69 Furthermore, contrary to what the applicant claims, the Court considers that the Council cannot be criticised for not having informed the applicant, at the time of the notification provided for under Article 100 of the Financial Regulation, of the latter's right to draw the attention of the contracting authority to any errors of assessment that might have undermined the evaluation of its tender. According to the case-law, in the absence of express provisions of Community law, the Community administration and judicature cannot be placed under a general obligation to inform individuals of the remedies available or of the conditions under which they may exercise them (order in Case C-153/98 P Guérin automobiles v Commission [1999] ECR I–1441, paragraph 15, and Case T-145/98 ADT Projekt v Commission [2000] ECR II–387, paragraph 210). In the present case, Article 100 of the Financial Regulation does not impose any such express obligation.

70 In any event, it is clear that when the applicant received the Council's letter of 13 October 2004, when it decided to seek clarification as to the reasons for which its tender in respect of Lot No 2 was rejected, it said nothing as regards the existence of an obvious clerical error in its tender in respect of Lot No 1.

71 It follows that the clerical error committed by the applicant was not obvious, within the meaning of Article 148(3) of the Implementing Rules. Accordingly, the Council cannot be criticised for not having detected that error, and thus for not correcting it or, at the very least, for not contacting the applicant in order to allow it to rectify that error.

72 Consequently, the single plea in law, alleging a manifest error of assessment committed by the Council in the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 1, is unfounded. The action for annulment brought against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 1, must therefore be rejected.

The action against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 2

73 In support of its action against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 2, the applicant raises three pleas in law alleging breach of the general principle of sound administration, a manifest error of assessment and breach of the principle of non-discrimination. In addition, the applicant has raised a fourth plea in its reply, alleging that, by failing to contact it before its tender was rejected, the Council infringed Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules.

74 The applicant essentially submits that the first three pleas, alleging breach of the general principle of sound administration, breach of the principle of non-discrimination and a manifest error of assessment, are well founded inasmuch as its tender in respect of Lot No 2 was rejected automatically, without further consideration, on the sole ground that the total number of working hours included in that tender was more than 12.5% lower than the average of the total number of hours proposed in the tenders that were found to be admissible.

75 In the first place, the applicant argues that, for similar reasons, the selection criterion in the specifications regarding the average of the total number of hours proposed, on which the Council based its rejection of the applicant's tender, without giving it further consideration, infringes the principle of sound administration and is vitiated by a manifest error of assessment. The result was that preference was given to tenders that provided for a greater number of hours to be worked than was truly necessary and which were therefore more expensive.

76 In that regard, the applicant first of all argues that the criterion adopted by the Council does not allow for an objective evaluation of what is needed in order to provide the services in question. It states that it has, entirely to the Council's satisfaction, been providing cleaning and maintenance services for the building covered by Lot No 2 since 1 January 1998 and has been doing so on the basis of a total number of hours equivalent to that included in its tender. While acknowledging that the Council could not take that experience into account, it takes the view that such experience simply provides objective evidence that the total number of hours needed to provide the services in question, in, at the very least, equivalent conditions, was lower than that included in the tender that was ultimately accepted and, accordingly, that the criterion applied by the Council encouraged the number of hours in question to be overestimated.

77 It also considers that the evaluation of the volume of the services in question cannot reasonably be dependent on the bids submitted by the tenderers themselves, since the latter could, in collusion with one another, have an interest in artificially inflating the volume of the services tendered for. Finally, the number of hours worked cannot be the main criterion for assessing the quality of the work to be undertaken. As regards the last-mentioned point, the applicant states that, were it to have artificially inflated the number of hours proposed in its tender, that tender would not have been automatically excluded.

78 Secondly, the applicant argues that the Council cannot rely on the fact that although the successful tenderer's bid was 3.7% more expensive than that of the applicant, that tenderer proposed a number of hours that was 25.2% greater than the number of hours proposed in the applicant's tender. It states once again that the total number of hours proposed by the successful tenderer was higher than the number of hours that was actually necessary to carry out the work referred to in the specifications in compliance with the requisite quality standards. Accordingly, the overestimation of the services to be provided by the successful tenderer led to damage being done to the Council and those who fund it. It adds that the true position is that the selected tenderer does not provide all of the hours referred to in its tender and that that point confirms that the number of hours proposed by it corresponds with what was necessary in respect of the cleaning of the premises covered by Lot No 2.

79 In the second place, the applicant submits that the selection criterion adopted is discriminatory in so far as it leads to tenders being automatically excluded, without being given further consideration, that are objectively advantageous to the Council in budgetary terms and perfectly satisfactory from a qualitative point of view.

80 In the third place, the applicant submits that the Council infringed the provisions of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules. It argues that before rejecting its tender on account of the total number of hours of services proposed being abnormally low, the Council should have verified that tender, after due hearing of the parties, in accordance with Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules. Furthermore, it is clear from the case-law that the automatic elimination of abnormally low tenders on the basis of the application of a mathematical criterion is prohibited (Case 103/88 Fratelli Costanzo [1989] ECR 1839).

81 The Council states that, according to the case-law, the award of a contract to the tenderer who submitted the tender offering best value for money does not mean that the successful tender is necessarily the cheapest.

82 It adds that a particular objective of the regular use of the competitive tendering procedure is to show that it is possible to do better or to do more. In a competitive market, the average of the total number of hours proposed by all tenderers is likely to represent a robust and reliable estimate of the means required for the service to be properly provided from a qualitative point of view. The Council takes the view that, if a greater number of hours are allocated to cleaning, that will mean that a higher level of quality will be achieved. In the present case, the Council notes that, while the successful tenderer had submitted a bid that was 3.7% more expensive than that of the applicant, by contrast, it was proposing 25.2% more hours of work than the applicant. In addition, it points out that although the price criterion was worth a maximum of 50% in the tender evaluation procedure, the disputed criterion relating to the total number of hours proposed counted for only 25% of the total number of marks to be awarded. The successful tenderer's bid was therefore better value for money and the applicant's services were, for their part, considerably more expensive. The Council also states that the time-cards of the successful tenderer's employees show that the services provided are those which that tenderer is obliged to provide in accordance with the terms of the contract.

83 As regards the applicant's claims that there is a risk of collusion between tenderers, who might agree among themselves that the volume of services should be artificially inflated, the Council invites the applicant, to the extent that it has any evidence in that respect, to contact the competition authorities.

84 In relation to the third plea, alleging infringement of the principle of non-discrimination, the Council replies that that principle prohibited it from taking into account the quality of the services previously provided by the applicant when awarding the contract.

85 Lastly, the Council submits that since the fourth plea, alleging infringement of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, was raised by the applicant in its reply, it is a new plea and is, accordingly, inadmissible. In any event, the Council states that the applicant's tender was not abnormally low. It essentially argues that, in the case of an abnormally low tender, it is necessary to comply with the requirement laid down in Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules to verify the constituent elements of a tender, after due hearing of the parties, applies only in relation to the pricing of that tender. It states that while the applicant proposed a total number of hours in its tender that was 25.2% lower than the successful tenderer's bid its price was only 3.7% lower than that proposed by the latter. It accordingly takes the view that the applicant's services were considerably more expensive than those of the successful tenderer.

Findings of the Court

86 Before considering the substance of the action for annulment against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 2, it is necessary first of all to rule on the admissibility of the fourth plea, alleging infringement of the provisions of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules.

– The admissibility of the fourth plea, alleging infringement of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules

87 According to settled case-law, it follows from Article 44(1)(c) in conjunction with Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance that the original application must contain the subject-matter of the proceedings and a summary of the pleas in law relied on, and that new pleas in law may not be introduced in the course of the proceedings unless they are based on matters of law or of fact which come to light in the course of the procedure. However, a submission or argument which may be regarded as amplifying a plea made previously, whether directly or by implication, in the original application, and which is closely connected therewith, will be declared admissible (Case 108/81 Amylum v Council [1982] ECR 3107, paragraph 25; Case 306/81 Verros v Parliament [1983] ECR 1755, paragraph 9; and Case T-216/95 Moles García Ortúzar v Commission [1997] ECR-SC I–A–403 and II–1083, paragraph 87).

88 The case-law also provides that, under Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, the contracting authority is obliged to allow the tenderer to clarify, or even explain, the characteristics of its tender before rejecting it, if it considers that a tender is abnormally low (Case T-148/04 TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission [2005] ECR II–2627, paragraph 49).

89 In the present case, the Court finds that, in paragraph 17 of its application, the applicant places particular reliance, in support of it action against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 2, on the infringement of the general principle of sound administration, infringement of the principle of non-discrimination and a manifest error of assessment, in that its tender was rejected, without being given further consideration, on the sole ground that the total number of hours of work in that tender was more than 12.5% lower than the average of the total number of hours proposed. Similarly, in paragraph 26 of its application, it submits that the implementation of that criterion is discriminatory in that it leads to the automatic exclusion, without further consideration, of objectively more advantageous tenders. It follows that the applicant, in its application, expressly criticised the Council for having rejected its tender without further consideration, by reason of its being abnormally low.

90 It follows that although the fourth plea, alleging infringement of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, was not expressly raised by the applicant until its reply, that plea represents an amplification of the three pleas put forward in the original application and is closely connected with them. That plea must accordingly be declared admissible.

– The substance of the action against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 2

91 As was mentioned in paragraph 89 above, the three pleas raised in the application and alleging infringement of the principle of sound administration, a manifest error of assessment and infringement of the principle of non-discrimination essentially seek to show that the Council was wrong not to invite the applicant, prior to the automatic elimination of the latter's tender by reason of the abnormally low number of hours proposed by the applicant and in accordance with the principle that the constituent elements of that tender should be verified after due hearing of the parties laid down in Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, to provide it with evidence that the tender was a genuine one. Consequently, it is appropriate to start by examining the fourth plea, alleging infringement of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules.

92 In that respect, it is necessary, in the first place, to determine whether the concept of abnormally low tender extends, as the Council submits, only to the price criterion in the tender assessed by the contracting authority or, as the applicant essentially claims, that concept also extends to other criteria which apply to the evaluation of tenders.

93 According to the case-law, since the requirements laid down by Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), by Article 37(1) of Directive 92/50 and by Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 are in substance identical to those laid down by Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, the following considerations apply equally in relation to the interpretation of the last-mentioned provision (see, by way of analogy, Joined Cases C-285/99 and C-286/99 Lombardini and Mantovani [2001] ECR I–9233, paragraph 50).

94 It must also be pointed out that the Court of Justice held in paragraph 67 of the judgment in Lombardini and Mantovani, cited in paragraph 93 above, that it was undisputed that Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 did not define the concept of an abnormally low tender and, a fortiori, did not determine the method of calculating an anomaly threshold. In the same case, the Advocate General was of the opinion that the concept of an abnormally low tender was not an abstract one, but was very precise and had to be determined for each contract according to the specific purpose it was intended to fulfil (Opinion of Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer in Lombardini and Mantovani, cited in paragraph 93 above, points 32 and 35).

95 In the present case, the Court finds, first, that there is no definition of the anomaly threshold and of the concept of abnormally low tender, within the meaning of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, in the Financial Regulation or the Implementing Rules. Secondly, there is no express provision in that article to the effect that the concept of abnormally low tender cannot be applied to criteria other than that of price.

96 Consequently, in order to define the material scope of the concept of abnormally low tender within the meaning of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, it is necessary, first of all, to take as a basis the objective pursued by that provision.

97 As was mentioned in paragraph 88 above, where a contracting authority considers that a tender is abnormally low, Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules obliges it to allow the tenderer to clarify or even to explain the nature of its tender before rejecting that tender. More precisely, it is clear from the case-law that it is essential that each tenderer suspected of submitting an abnormally low tender should have the opportunity effectively to state its point of view in that respect, giving it the opportunity to supply all explanations as to the various elements of its tender at a time when it is aware not only of the anomaly threshold applicable to the contract in question and of the fact that its tender has appeared abnormally low, but also of the precise points which have raised questions on the part of the contracting authority (Lombardini and Mantovani, cited in paragraph 93 above, paragraph 53). At the same time, the Court of Justice stated that the existence of a proper exchange of views, at an appropriate time in the procedure for examining tenders, between the contracting authority and the tenderer constitutes a fundamental requirement, in order to prevent the contracting authority from acting in an arbitrary manner and to ensure healthy competition between undertakings (Lombardini and Mantovani, cited in paragraph 93 above, paragraph 57).

98 It follows that Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules enshrines a fundamental requirement in the field of public procurement, which obliges a contracting authority to verify, after due hearing of the parties and having regard to its constituent elements, every tender appearing to be abnormally low before rejecting it.

99 Next, the Court notes that Article 97(2) of the Financial Regulation provides that contracts may be awarded by the automatic award procedure or by the best-value-for-money procedure and that, as regards the latter form of procedure, Article 138(2) of the Implementing Rules states that the tender to be accepted is the one with the best price-quality ratio, taking into account criteria justified by the subject of the contract such as the price quoted, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, profitability, completion or delivery times, after-sales service and technical assistance.

100 The Court is accordingly of the view that, where the contract is awarded to the tender offering best value for money, the fundamental requirement referred to in paragraph 98 above applies not only to the price criterion under the tender evaluated but also to the other criteria referred to in Article 138(2) of the Implementing Rules, since those criteria allow an anomaly threshold to be determined beneath which a tender submitted in the tender procedure in question is suspected to be abnormally low, within the meaning of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules.

101 In the second place, it is necessary to determine in the light of the above whether the Council was, as the applicant submits, obliged in the present case to comply with the procedure for verification after due hearing of the parties laid down in Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules.

102 In that regard, the Court notes that the award procedure in question was that of the tender offering best value for money. In addition, it is not in dispute that, of the criteria which were relevant, the criterion regarding the average of the total number of hours proposed related to the qualitative aspect of the applicant's tender and constituted one of the various elements of its tender for the purposes of the case-law referred to in paragraph 97 above. Lastly, in accordance with the provisions of the specifications referred to in paragraph 16 above, that criterion allowed an anomaly threshold to be determined, beneath which the tender in question was to be automatically eliminated.

103 As is clear from the Council's letter of 22 October 2004 and as the Council expressly confirmed at the hearing in reply to a question from the Court, it is on the basis of the latter criterion that the applicant's tender was rejected, on the sole ground of the excessively low nature of the total number of hours included in that tender. Moreover, it is plain that the Council did not arrange any hearing of the parties, within the meaning of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, in relation to the applicant's tender prior to its being eliminated automatically.

104 That being the case, the Council has infringed the provisions of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules.

105 That conclusion cannot be affected by the fact that, as the Council argues in its reply, while the applicant's total number of hours was 25.2% lower than that of the successful tenderer, its total price was, by contrast, 3.7% beneath that of that tenderer. It is sufficient to point out once again that, as is clear from the Council's letter of 22 October 2004, the applicant's tender was excluded on the sole ground that the total number of hours included in that tender was excessively low.

106 It follows from the foregoing that the fourth plea, alleging infringement of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, is well founded.

107 Consequently, without it being necessary to rule on the merits of the first three pleas raised in support of the action for annulment, the decision of 13 October 2004 should be annulled, in so far as it relates to Lot No 2.

The claims for damages

108 The applicant considers that the wrongful rejection of each of its tenders by the Council has caused it damage and seeks compensation for that damage, which it assesses, by multiplying the annual price of its tender by the period of the contract (three years), at EUR 1 481 317.65, together with interest at the rate of 7% a year.

109 With respect to the existence of a wrongful act, it submits that the Council plainly committed a serious and manifest wrongful act, as regards Lot No 1, by failing to verify that its tender was correct and, as regards Lot No 2, by infringing the provisions of the Financial Regulation and the Implementing Rules.

110 With regard to the actual harm suffered, the applicant argues that the wrongful rejection of each of its tenders has led to a considerable loss of profits, which threatens its very survival.

111 First, and in the alternative, the applicant invites the Court, should the latter not be satisfied in the present case with its claims for compensation for the damage suffered by it as a result of the rejection of each of its tenders, to make an immediate award in its favour of EUR 500 000 by way of interim damages. Secondly, it proposes that prior to adjudicating definitively on the amount of the damages the Court should appoint an accountant to calculate the profits, both direct and indirect, that it would have earned from the award of each of the contracts.

112 As regards the existence of a causal link between the wrongful act and the damage suffered, the applicant is of the view that the principle of proximate causes requires that the Court examine whether it would have suffered the same damage in the absence of any wrongful act committed by the Council. It argues in that regard that since the Council excluded both of its tenders automatically it is not possible in the present case to assess the damage in this way.

113 According to the applicant, since the Council did not annex the original evaluation report to its defence, the Court cannot scrutinise the Council's reasoning and determine on what basis the applicant's tenders might, even without the Council acting wrongfully, have been excluded from the tender procedure at issue.

114 The Council considers, as regards Lot No 1, that it did not commit any manifest error of assessment. It adds that, even if it were to be accepted that it should be held liable for such an error, the applicant has not established that such an error was serious and manifest, that there was any actual harm suffered or the existence of a causal link between them.

115 As regards Lot No 2, the Council is of the view that it did not infringe the principles of sound administration and non-discrimination, and that it also did not commit a manifest error of assessment. It adds that, even if it were to be accepted that it should be held liable for such an infringement, the applicant has not established that such an error was serious and manifest, that there was any actual harm suffered or the existence of a causal link between them.

116 It submits that, contrary to what the applicant maintains, the criteria for awarding marks in respect of Lot No 2 clearly allowed it to evaluate the applicant's tender. The Council notes that 75% of those marks were allocated pursuant to calculations based on information provided by tenderers, while the remaining 25% were allocated pursuant to the evaluation that had been carried out.

117 Lastly, under reference to an 'ordinary' evaluation (described by the Council as being 'based on the documentation actually submitted by the applicant on the assumption that it was not excluded from the tender process') and a 'theoretical' evaluation (described by the Council as being 'based on the award to the applicant [of the maximum number of marks awarded] to the tenderer who was given the highest number of marks for each criterion, save where the criterion is based on mathematical information contained in the tender'), the Council claims that it can show that, as regards both Lot No 1 and Lot No 2, the applicant's tenders did not rank first and that, as a result, the requirement that actual harm must have been suffered is not satisfied in the present case.

118 In any event, both as regards Lot No 1 and Lot No 2, even if the Court were, contrary to all probability, to accept the applicant's claims for damages, the Council is of the view that the damages sought by the applicant should be recalculated and limited to the net annual profits which it can show it would have earned under the contract in question.

119 It is settled case–law that, in order for the Community to incur non–contractual liability under the second paragraph of Article 288 EC for unlawful conduct of its institutions, a number of conditions must be satisfied: the institution's conduct must be unlawful, actual damage must have been suffered and there must be a causal link between the conduct and the damage pleaded (Case 26/81 Oleifici Mediterranei v EEC [1982] ECR 3057, paragraph 16; Case T-175/94 International Procurement Services v Commission [1996] ECR II–729, paragraph 44; Case T-336/94 Efisol v Commission [1996] ECR II–1343, paragraph 30; and Case T-267/94 Oleifici Italiani v Commission [1997] ECR II–1239, paragraph 20).

120 Where one of those conditions is not satisfied, the action must be dismissed in its entirety and it is unnecessary to examine the other conditions (Case C-146/91 KYDEP v Council and Commission [1994] ECR I-4199, paragraphs 19 and 81, and Case T–170/00 Förde-Reederei v Council and Commission [2002] ECR II–515, paragraph 37).

121 Although the applicant invokes a right to damages on the basis of the loss it claims to have suffered by reason of the rejection of each of its tenders, taken together, it is necessary to consider its claims for damages by distinguishing between that part of the decision of 13 October 2004 which relates to Lot No 1 and that part of the decision which relates to Lot No 2.

122 It is settled case-law that an application for compensation for damage must be dismissed where there is a close connection between it and an application for annulment which has itself been dismissed (see Case T-340/99 Arne Mathisen v Council [2002] ECR II–2905, paragraph 134 and the case-law cited).

123 Since the claims for damages in respect of Lot No 1 were rejected, on the basis that the applicant's allegations of unlawfulness were unfounded, and since the application for damages is closely connected with those claims, the latter must be rejected as regards Lot No 1.

The claim for damages with respect to Lot No 2

124 The applicant seeks damages in the amount which it would have invoiced to the Council had the contract, and thus inter alia Lot No 2, been awarded to it. That claim must therefore be understood as being based not on the loss of an opportunity to enter into the contract but on the loss of the contract itself.

125 However, the applicant puts forward no evidence to show that, had the unlawful conduct established in relation to Lot No 2 not taken place, it would have been certain that it would have been awarded that lot of the contract. Put at its highest, it submits that since the Council did not annex its original evaluation report to its pleadings it is impossible to verify on what basis the applicant's tenders could have been excluded from the disputed tender procedure, even if the Council had not acted wrongfully.

126 In that last regard, since the Council has, in reply to a written question put by the Court, produced the original evaluation report and that report has been notified to the applicant, the only finding the Court can make is that the latter would in any event not have been awarded the contract in respect of Lot No 2, even in the absence of the unlawful conduct established in paragraph 106 above. The applicant's tender is ranked in the original evaluation report produced by the Council in eighth and last place.

127 It follows that the damage alleged by the applicant with respect to Lot No 2, that is to say, the loss of the contract itself, is not actual and certain, but hypothetical, with the result that it cannot give rise to compensation. That, of itself, is sufficient to reject the claim for damages. In addition and for the avoidance of doubt, there is nothing to suggest, nor does the applicant put forward anything to show, that by reason of the unlawful conduct that has been established it lost even an opportunity to obtain the contract.

128 Consequently, the applicant's claim for damages in respect of Lot No 2 must be rejected.

129 It follows from all of the above that the claims for damages must be rejected in their entirety.

Costs

130 Pursuant to Article 87(3) of the Rules of Procedure, the Court of First Instance may order that the costs be shared or that each party bear its own costs where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads. In the circumstances of the present case, each party must be ordered to bear its own costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fifth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Annuls the decision of the Council of the European Union of 13 October 2004 to reject the tenders of Belfass SPRL under tender procedure UCA–033/04, in so far as that decision rejected Belfass' tender with respect to Lot No 2;

2. Dismisses the action as to the remainder;

3. Orders each party to bear its own costs.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fifth Chamber)

21 May 2008 (*)

In Case T–495/04,

Belfass SPRL, established in Forest (Belgium), represented by L. Vogel, lawyer, applicant,

v

Council of the European Union, represented by B. Driessen and A. Vitro, acting as Agents, defendant,

APPLICATION, first, for annulment of the decision of the Council of the European Union of 13 October 2004 to reject both the tenders submitted by the applicant under tender procedure UCA–033/04 and, secondly, for compensation in respect of the damage allegedly suffered by the applicant by reason of the Council's conduct,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (Fifth Chamber), composed of M. Vilaras, President, M.E. Martins Ribeiro and K. Jürimäe (Rapporteur), Judges, Registrar: J. Plingers, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 21 June 2007,

gives the following

Judgment

Legal context

1 Procedures for the award of service contracts by the Council of the European Union are subject to Title V of Part One of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1) ('the Financial Regulation') and Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1) ('the Implementing Rules'). Those provisions are based on the Community directives in the field, in particular on Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), on Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and on Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), as amended.

2 Article 97 of the Financial Regulation states:

‘1. The selection criteria for evaluating the capability of candidates or tenderers and the award criteria for evaluating the content of the tenders shall be defined in advance and set out in the call for tender.

2. Contracts may be awarded by the automatic award procedure or by the best-value-for-money procedure.’

3 Article 99 of the Financial Regulation provides:

‘While the procurement procedure is under way, all contacts between the contracting authority and candidates or tenderers must satisfy conditions ensuring transparency and equal treatment. They may not lead to amendment of the conditions of the contract or the terms of the original tender.’

4 Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation states:

‘The contracting authority shall notify all candidates or tenderers whose applications or tenders are rejected of the grounds on which the decision was taken, and all tenderers whose tenders are admissible and who make a request in writing of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract is awarded.

However, certain details need not be disclosed where disclosure would hinder application of the law, would be contrary to the public interest or would harm the legitimate business interests of public or private undertakings or could distort fair competition between those undertakings.’

5 The first paragraph of Article 101 of the Financial Regulation provides:

‘The contracting authority may, before the contract is signed, either abandon the procurement or cancel the award procedure without the candidates or tenderers being entitled to claim any compensation.’

6 The second subparagraph of Article 122(2) of the Implementing Rules, in the version in force at the relevant time, provided that contracts to be awarded by call for tender:

‘… are restricted where all economic operators may ask to take part but only candidates satisfying the selection criteria referred to in Article 135 and invited simultaneously and in writing by the contracting authorities may submit a tender.’

7 Article 128(1) and (3) of the Implementing Rules, which applies where the restricted procedure involving a call for expressions of interest is involved, states in particular:

‘1. A call for expressions of interest shall constitute a means of preselecting candidates who will be invited to submit tenders in response to future restricted invitations to tender …

3. Where a specific contract is to be awarded, the contracting authority shall invite either all candidates entered on the list or only some of them, on the basis of objective and non-discriminatory selection criteria specific to that contract, to submit a tender.’

8 Article 130(1) of the Implementing Rules, in the version in force at the relevant time, provided:

‘The documents relating to the invitation to tender shall include at least:

(a) the invitation to submit a tender or to negotiate;

(b) the attached specifications, to which shall be annexed the general terms and conditions applicable to contracts;

(c) the model contract.

9 Article 130(3)(a)(b) and (c) of the Implementing Rules, in the version in force at the relevant time, stated:

'The specifications shall at least:

(a) specify the exclusion and selection criteria applying to the contract, save in the restricted procedure and in the negotiated procedures following publication of a notice referred to in Article 127; in such cases those criteria shall appear solely in the contract notice or the call for expressions of interest;

(b) specify the award criteria and their relative weighting, if this is not specified in the contract notice;

(c) set out the technical specifications referred to in Article 131;

10 Article 138 of the Implementing Rules, in the version in force at the relevant time, provided:

'1. Contracts shall be awarded in one of the following two ways:

(a) under the automatic award procedure, in which case the contract is awarded to the tender which, while being in order and satisfying the conditions laid down, quotes the lowest price;

(b) under the best-value-for-money procedure.

2. The tender offering the best value for money shall be the one with the best price-quality ratio, taking into account criteria justified by the subject of the contract such as the price quoted, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, profitability, completion or delivery times, after-sales service and technical assistance.

3. The contracting authority shall specify, in the contract notice or in the specifications, the weighting it will apply to each of the criteria for determining best value for money.

The weighting applied to price in relation to the other criteria must not result in the neutralisation of price in the choice of contractor.

If, in exceptional cases, weighting is technically impossible, particularly on account of the subject of the contract, the contracting authority shall merely specify the decreasing order of importance in which the criteria are to be applied.'

11 Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, in the version in force at the relevant time, stated:

'If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low, the contracting authority shall, before rejecting such tenders on that ground alone, request in writing details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements, after due hearing of the parties, taking account of the explanations received.

The contracting authority may, in particular, take into consideration explanations relating to:

(a) the economics of the manufacturing process, of the provision of services or of the construction method;

(b) the technical solutions chosen or the exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer;

(c) the originality of the tender.'

12 Article 148(1) and (3) of the Implementing Rules provides:

'1. Contact between the contracting authority and tenderers during the contract award procedure may take place, by way of exception, under the conditions set out in paragraphs 2 and 3.

3. If, after the tenders have been opened, some clarification is required in connection with a tender, or if obvious clerical errors in the tender must be corrected, the contracting authority may contact the tenderer, although such contact may not lead to any alteration of the terms of the tender.'

Facts

13 On 4 March 2004, acting pursuant to the Financial Regulation and the Implementing Rules, the Council published a call for tenders in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2004 S 45) with reference UCA–033/04, under the restricted procedure. The call related to the provision of cleaning and maintenance services in two buildings occupied by the General Secretariat of the Council in Brussels. The procedure was divided into two lots, each of which related to services to be provided in a specific location, namely the 'Woluwé Heights' building (Lot No 1) and the 'Frère Orban' building (Lot No 2).

14 The specifications provided that the award criterion to be applied was that of the tender offering best value for money. The final evaluation of the tenders in respect of each lot was to be carried out by awarding to each tender a number of marks calculated as follows: 'Number of points in respect of "quality" x 100/price index'. The tender to be considered as being the best value for money was to be the tender which had, on conclusion of that final evaluation, obtained the highest number of marks but had, at the same time, been awarded the minimum number of marks under the heading 'Quality'.

15 The specifications also stated that the quality of each tender was to be assessed on the basis of a maximum of 100 marks and under reference to eight criteria. The eighth criterion, which carried a maximum of 50 marks, referred to 'Hours worked, calculated by applying the totals of A, B, C and D in the spreadsheet set out in Annex 3'.

16 The 50 marks available under the last-mentioned criterion were to be awarded on a basis which was proportional to the difference between, first, the total number of annual hours proposed in the tender subjected to evaluation (Ho) and, secondly, the average of the total number of hours proposed, for each accounting period, in each of the tenders found to be admissible (Hm). A tender which proposed the Hm average was to be assessed as satisfactory and to be awarded 40 marks (that is to say, 80% of the cap of 50 marks). The specifications provided that where the Hm threshold was exceeded by up to 12.5% the tender would benefit from the award of additional marks, subject always to the cap of 50 marks. Conversely, a failure to attain the Hm threshold by a factor of more than 12.5% would be penalised by the deduction of marks, subject to a minimum score of 30 marks, below which the tender fell to be eliminated.

17 In addition, the specifications provided that the average hourly rate in respect of each tender should not, if the tender was not to be eliminated, be lower than the average hourly rate fixed by the Union générale belge de nettoyage (Belgian General Cleaners' Union) ('the UGBN') for a category 1A cost price, on the basis of the rate in force on the date on which the tender was submitted. As at 1 July 2004, that average hourly rate was fixed at EUR 19.6962.

18 On 23 June 2004, the specifications relating to the call for tenders at issue were issued to the tenderers.

19 On 23 July 2004, the applicant, Belfass SPRL, submitted a tender in respect of each of the lots to be awarded under the UCA–033/04 call for tenders. The total annual price under the applicant's tender for Lot No 1 was EUR 234 059.67.

20 By letter of 13 October 2004, the Council informed the applicant that both its tenders had been rejected on the following grounds: '... With respect to Lot [No] 1, calculation of the average hourly rate contained in your tender gives a result which is lower than the minimum rate fixed by the UGBN of EUR 19.6962 as at [1 July 2004]. As regards Lot [No] 2, your tender was not awarded the minimum number of marks as regards quality by the evaluation committee, in accordance with the criteria referred to in the specifications ...'

21 On 15 October 2004, the applicant asked the Council to provide it with further and detailed information as to the circumstances in which its tender in respect of Lot No 2 had been rejected.

22 On 22 October 2004, the Council replied to that request, stating, inter alia, as follows:

'... your tender, which specified a number of hours which was 20% lower than the average number of hours in all tenders, was accordingly eliminated at that stage, in accordance with the formula set out on page 2.'

Procedure and forms of order sought

23 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 23 December 2004, the applicant brought the present action.

24 On hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court of First Instance (Fifth Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure.

25 On 13 December 2006, in reply to a request for the production of documents by the Court of 28 November 2006, issued by way of measures of organisation of procedure, the Council lodged the contract notice and the specifications relating to the UCA–033/04 call for tenders with the Court, together with the original report of the evaluation committee (non-confidential version) in respect of that call for tenders.

26 At the hearing on 21 June 2007, the parties presented oral argument and answered the questions put to them by the Court.

27 The applicant claims that the Court should:

– declare the application to be admissible and well founded;

– annul the Council's decision of 13 October 2004 not to accept each of its tenders submitted in relation to the UCA–033/04 call for tenders;

– order the Council to pay damages in respect of its loss assessed at EUR 1 481 317.65, together with interest at the rate of 7% a year;

– order the Council to pay the whole of the costs.

28 The Council contends that the Court should:

– dismiss the action as inadmissible as regards Lot No 2;

– declare the action for annulment to be unfounded;

– declare the application for damages to be unfounded;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

The admissibility of the action against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 2

Arguments of the parties

29 The Council, without raising a formal plea of inadmissibility, submits that, to the extent that it relates to Lot No 2, the action against the decision of 13 October 2004 is inadmissible. The applicant does not challenge the decision to exclude it from the tender process, as such, but the lawfulness of the Council's decision to include the criterion which led to its exclusion, namely the average of the total number of hours proposed by tenderers, in the specifications.

30 At the hearing, the Council stated that it was clear from the case-law of the Court of Justice that a person who considers that the specifications in a call for tenders, as prescribed by decision of the contracting authority, discriminate against him cannot await notification of the decision awarding the contract in question and then challenge it, on the ground specifically that those specifications are discriminatory, without infringing the objectives of speed and effectiveness of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 92/50 (Case C-230/02 Grossmann Air Service [2004] ECR I–1829, paragraph 37).

31 It takes the view that, since the specifications were sent to each of the candidates, and thus to the applicant, on 23 June 2004, the prescribed period of two months for challenging the lawfulness of the decision to include that criterion had expired on the date on which the present action was brought.

32 The applicant submits, as its principal argument, that specifications are not a challengeable act for the purposes of Article 230 EC. They constitute a preparatory act of general scope and, according to settled case-law, such an act, whatever the time at which it may take place, can never be the subject of an action for annulment.

33 It also argues that specifications are addressed to all undertakings which, belonging to a category defined generally and in the abstract, wished to tender for the award of a public procurement contract. In the present case, the specifications were neither a decision which was addressed to the applicant nor a decision which was of direct and individual concern to it. It infers from that that only an action against the decision to award the contract was capable of allowing it to challenge the lawfulness of the criterion included in the specifications which related to the total number of hours proposed by tenderers.

Findings of the Court

35 As a preliminary point, the Court finds that the Council's position consists of challenging the admissibility of the present action inasmuch as, according to the Council, it is truly directed only against the specifications. The latter constitute a challengeable act, the lawfulness of which was not contested within the prescribed period.

36 It must, however, be held that the annulment sought in the present action is that of the Council's decision of 13 October 2004 not to accept the applicant's tenders submitted in response to the call for tenders and that it is for the purposes of the annulment, and thus incidentally, that the applicant challenges the lawfulness of the specifications.

37 Accordingly, the issue which arises is not that of the admissibility of the action for annulment in so far as that action is alleged to be directed against the specifications, but that of the admissibility of the plea relating to the unlawfulness of that document which is invoked in that action for annulment.

38 In order to rule on that issue, it is necessary to determine whether a document relating to a call for tenders, such as the specifications at issue, is an act which is capable, as the Council submits, of being the subject of a direct action brought under the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC and, accordingly, whether the applicant should have brought proceedings to challenge the specifications, on the basis of that provision, within the period of two months laid down under the fifth paragraph of Article 230 EC.

39 The fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC provides that any natural or legal person may institute proceedings against a decision addressed to that person or against a decision which, although in the form of a regulation or a decision addressed to another person, is of direct and individual concern to the former.

40 According to settled case-law, natural or legal persons other than the person to whom a measure is addressed can claim to be individually concerned, for the purposes of the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC, only if they are affected by the measure in question by reason of certain attributes peculiar to them, or by reason of a factual situation which differentiates them from all other persons and distinguishes them individually in the same way as the addressee (Case 25/62 Plaumann v Commission [1963] ECR 95, 107; Case C-50/00 P Unión de Pequeños Agricultores v Council [2002] ECR I–6677, paragraph 36; and Case C-263/02 P Commission v Jégo-Quéré [2004] ECR I–3425, paragraph 45).

41 In the present case, the Court finds that it is not possible to take the view that the specifications in question are of individual concern to the applicant.

42 First, contrary to what the Council submits, the fact that the specifications were sent individually to preselected tenderers, and thus to the applicant, on 23 June 2004, under the restricted procedure, cannot distinguish the applicant individually for the purposes of the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC. The specifications, like each of the other documents relating to the call for tenders issued by the Council in the present case and of which the specifications form part, apply to objectively determined situations and produce legal effects with respect to categories of persons envisaged generally and in the abstract. They are therefore of a general nature and it cannot be held that their communication to each of a number of undertakings preselected by the contracting authority allows each of those undertakings to be distinguished individually from all other persons for the purposes of the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC.

43 Secondly, the Council is wrong to rely on the judgment in Grossmann Air Service, cited in paragraph 30 above, in order to establish that it was open to the applicant to challenge the specifications in question. It must be pointed out that that judgment was delivered by the Court of Justice in response to a question referred for a preliminary ruling relating to the interpretation of Article 1(3) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665. The Council did not deny that the provisions of Directive 89/665, as amended, are therefore binding only on the Member States and not on the Community institutions. Furthermore, as the Council acknowledged at the hearing, it is clear that the Community legislation relating to the award of public service contracts by the Community institutions which is applicable in the present case contains no provision similar to those which are set out in Directive 89/665. Lastly, contrary to the situation which gave rise to the judgment in Grossmann Air Service, cited in paragraph 30 above, the criterion which features in the specifications and is challenged by the applicant did not prevent it from participating effectively in the contract award procedure in question. On the contrary, the documents before the Court show that the applicant, like the other tenderers included in the list drawn up after the preselection stage, was able to submit a tender for Lot No 2. Consequently, the interpretation given by the Court of Justice in the judgment in Grossmann Air Service, cited in paragraph 30 above, of the provisions of Directive 89/665, as amended, cannot be applied, by way of analogy, for the purposes of determining the admissibility of the present action in so far as it relates to Lot No 2.

44 It follows from the above that, since the specifications in question were not of individual concern to the applicant, it had no right to bring an action for annulment against the specifications under the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC. Accordingly, there is no basis on which the Council can plead that the applicant had the right to challenge those specifications as a basis for opposing the incidental challenge by the applicant in these proceedings to the lawfulness of that document.

Substance

The action against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 1

Arguments of the parties

45 In support of its action for annulment of the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 1, the applicant puts forward a single plea in law, alleging a manifest error of assessment.

46 The applicant essentially submits that the Council committed a manifest error of assessment in failing to give the applicant's tender in respect of Lot No 1 careful scrutiny.

47 Contrary to what the Council inferred from its tender, it argues that the average hourly rate in its tender amounted to EUR 22.123 and was accordingly higher than the minimum average hourly rate of EUR 19.6962 fixed by the UGBN.

48 It is true that the applicant acknowledges that that error on the Council's part is linked to an arithmetical error appearing in its tender as regards the total of categories A, B, C and D (EUR 234 059.67 instead of EUR 271 811.67).

49 However, it takes the view that the principle of sound administration required the Council, when assessing the applicant's tender, to take steps to ensure that the tender submitted for assessment by it did not contain an obvious clerical error of that kind, which it could have corrected on its own initiative.

50 It states that the Council could, merely by verifying the calculation, have established that the correct minimum hourly rate under its tender stood at EUR 20.92, as is clearly and precisely set out at page 40 of the tender.

51 At the very least, the applicant considers that, since the error was obvious and since to correct it would not have altered either the conditions of the contract or the original tender, the Council could, in accordance with Article 99 of the Financial Regulation and as Article 10 of the specifications relating to the calls for tenders in question provided, have made use of its right to contact the applicant.

52 The applicant claims that, contrary to what the Council contends, the conclusions drawn by the Court in its judgment in Case T-19/95 Adia interim v Commission [1996] ECR II-321, paragraph 47, cannot be applied in the present case. That judgment involved a systematic calculation error which it was difficult for the contracting authority to detect. In the present case, the applicant takes the view that the error in question is merely an error in the addition of categories A, B, C and D, which the Council ought easily to have been able to detect and correct.

53 The applicant likewise claims that the Council cannot argue that it did not detect that error when the correct, and therefore corrected, total price is set out in the 'ordinary' and 'theoretical' comparative evaluations of the applicant's tender in the annex to its defence.

54 It goes on to submit that the general principle laid down by the Court of Justice in Case 90/71 Bernardi v Parliament [1972] ECR 603, paragraph 10, according to which a party cannot invoke before the Court irregularities which may have been the consequence of its own behaviour, also does not apply in its case. Its conduct was neither intentional nor was it the source of the error committed by the Council. It adds that it had no interest in its error, which was in this case nothing more than an unintentional arithmetical error, not being corrected.

55 The applicant adds, in reply to the Council's arguments, that, while the notification provided for in Article 100 of the Financial Regulation confers on tenderers whose tenders are rejected a right to draw the contracting authority's attention to any errors of assessment which might have undermined the evaluation of their tender, the principles of sound administration and transparency require the contracting authority expressly to inform the recipient, in that notification, of the existence of that right. In its letter of 13 October 2004, the Council at no point informed it of the existence of such a right. There was accordingly a breach of the principle of equal treatment.

56 It infers from that that the error committed by the Council as to the calculation of the average hourly rate in its tender in respect of Lot No 1 is the result of the Council's failure to give that tender careful scrutiny and that, as a result, the final decision to reject that tender is vitiated by a manifest error of assessment of a particularly serious nature.

57 The Council argues in reply that, as is clear from the wording in the specifications relating to the call for tenders, the average hourly rate is equal to the total price of the tender under consideration divided by the total number of hours included in that tender. That is the reason for which it states that it was content to make the calculation on the basis of the total reference price of EUR 234 059.67 given by the applicant in its tender.

58 The Council is of the view that it was not under any duty to verify the addition of the total of categories A, B, C and D in the applicant's tender and, having done so, to establish that the correct total price was EUR 271 811.67 rather than EUR 234 059.67. Similarly, the Council considers that the information set out in the 'ordinary' and 'theoretical' comparative evaluations of the tender concerned included in the annex to its defence cannot be used to demonstrate that it had established the existence of that error when the tender was being assessed. It carried out those evaluations in the course of preparing its defence to the present action.

59 It adds that a contracting authority can contact tenderers only in order to correct obvious clerical errors. The error in the present case was not obvious at all, with the result that it could not have detected it.

60 The Council also relies on the general principle of law recognised by the Court of Justice in its judgment in Bernardi v Council, cited in paragraph 54 above, whereby a party cannot invoke before the Court irregularities which may have been the consequences of its own behaviour.

61 It likewise considers that, even if it should have detected the error in question, it would have been impossible for it, without risking infringing Article 99 of the Financial Regulation and Article 148(3) of the Implementing Rules, to make contact with the tenderer for the purposes of correcting the error concerned. In support of that argument, it relies in particular on Adia interim v Commission, cited in paragraph 52 above.

62 Lastly, the Council argues that one of the objectives of the notification provided for in Article 100 of the Financial Regulation, which follows the award of the contract and its signature, is to allow tenderers whose tenders are rejected to draw the contracting authority's attention to any errors of assessment which may have undermined the evaluation of the tender. There was no reaction whatever on the applicant's part once it had received the letter of 13 October 2004 informing it of the reasons for which its tender in respect of Lot No 1 had been rejected.

63 It is settled case-law that the Council has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender and that the Court's review must be limited to verifying that there has been no serious and manifest error (Case 56/77 Agence européenne d'interims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20; Adia interim v Commission, cited in paragraph 52 above, paragraph 49; and Case T-139/99 AICS v Parliament [2000] ECR II-2849, paragraph 39).

64 In addition, Article 148 of the Implementing Rules provides that if, after the tenders have been opened, some clarification is required in connection with a tender, or if obvious clerical errors in the tender must be corrected, the contracting authority may, by way of exception, contact the tenderer.

65 In the present case, it is necessary to verify whether the clerical error committed by the applicant, namely an arithmetical error in its tender relating to the total of categories A, B, C and D (EUR 234 059.67 instead of EUR 271 811.67), was an obvious clerical error which the Council should have detected.

66 In that regard, the Court finds, first, that the method of calculation of the hourly rate of tenderers' bids did not require the Council to make a fresh calculation of the total of categories A, B, C and D. It is common ground that the average hourly rate was to be calculated on the basis of the total price included in the tender and the total number of working hours proposed, as set out by the applicant in its tender.

67 Secondly, it cannot be the case that, as the applicant argues, the correct hourly rate under its tender was set at a minimum figure of EUR 20.92, with that amount being clearly and precisely shown at page 40 of the tender, and that the Council should, for that reason, have considered whether it was likely that there had been an arithmetical error in the calculation of the average hourly rate in the applicant's tender. That amount was entered at page 40 of the applicant's tender under category E, which expressly related to the hourly rate for additional work undertaken, on request, by the cleaning staff 'on working days (Monday to Friday) between 16.00 hrs and 22.00 hrs'. Accordingly, the hourly rate of EUR 20.92 thus referred to concerned a particular type of services, namely additional work, which is, therefore, a different kind of work from the services referred to in categories A, B, C and D.

68 Thirdly, contrary to what the applicant maintains, it cannot be accepted that the 'ordinary' and 'theoretical' evaluation tables produced by the Council as an annex to its defence in these proceedings show that the latter was aware of the error committed by the applicant. It is clear from the Council's written pleadings that it drew up those tables for the purposes of these proceedings. The Court also notes that the applicant has not established that the contrary is the case.

69 Furthermore, contrary to what the applicant claims, the Court considers that the Council cannot be criticised for not having informed the applicant, at the time of the notification provided for under Article 100 of the Financial Regulation, of the latter's right to draw the attention of the contracting authority to any errors of assessment that might have undermined the evaluation of its tender. According to the case-law, in the absence of express provisions of Community law, the Community administration and judicature cannot be placed under a general obligation to inform individuals of the remedies available or of the conditions under which they may exercise them (order in Case C-153/98 P Guérin automobiles v Commission [1999] ECR I–1441, paragraph 15, and Case T-145/98 ADT Projekt v Commission [2000] ECR II–387, paragraph 210). In the present case, Article 100 of the Financial Regulation does not impose any such express obligation.

70 In any event, it is clear that when the applicant received the Council's letter of 13 October 2004, when it decided to seek clarification as to the reasons for which its tender in respect of Lot No 2 was rejected, it said nothing as regards the existence of an obvious clerical error in its tender in respect of Lot No 1.

71 It follows that the clerical error committed by the applicant was not obvious, within the meaning of Article 148(3) of the Implementing Rules. Accordingly, the Council cannot be criticised for not having detected that error, and thus for not correcting it or, at the very least, for not contacting the applicant in order to allow it to rectify that error.

72 Consequently, the single plea in law, alleging a manifest error of assessment committed by the Council in the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 1, is unfounded. The action for annulment brought against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 1, must therefore be rejected.

The action against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 2

73 In support of its action against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 2, the applicant raises three pleas in law alleging breach of the general principle of sound administration, a manifest error of assessment and breach of the principle of non-discrimination. In addition, the applicant has raised a fourth plea in its reply, alleging that, by failing to contact it before its tender was rejected, the Council infringed Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules.

74 The applicant essentially submits that the first three pleas, alleging breach of the general principle of sound administration, breach of the principle of non-discrimination and a manifest error of assessment, are well founded inasmuch as its tender in respect of Lot No 2 was rejected automatically, without further consideration, on the sole ground that the total number of working hours included in that tender was more than 12.5% lower than the average of the total number of hours proposed in the tenders that were found to be admissible.

75 In the first place, the applicant argues that, for similar reasons, the selection criterion in the specifications regarding the average of the total number of hours proposed, on which the Council based its rejection of the applicant's tender, without giving it further consideration, infringes the principle of sound administration and is vitiated by a manifest error of assessment. The result was that preference was given to tenders that provided for a greater number of hours to be worked than was truly necessary and which were therefore more expensive.

76 In that regard, the applicant first of all argues that the criterion adopted by the Council does not allow for an objective evaluation of what is needed in order to provide the services in question. It states that it has, entirely to the Council's satisfaction, been providing cleaning and maintenance services for the building covered by Lot No 2 since 1 January 1998 and has been doing so on the basis of a total number of hours equivalent to that included in its tender. While acknowledging that the Council could not take that experience into account, it takes the view that such experience simply provides objective evidence that the total number of hours needed to provide the services in question, in, at the very least, equivalent conditions, was lower than that included in the tender that was ultimately accepted and, accordingly, that the criterion applied by the Council encouraged the number of hours in question to be overestimated.

77 It also considers that the evaluation of the volume of the services in question cannot reasonably be dependent on the bids submitted by the tenderers themselves, since the latter could, in collusion with one another, have an interest in artificially inflating the volume of the services tendered for. Finally, the number of hours worked cannot be the main criterion for assessing the quality of the work to be undertaken. As regards the last-mentioned point, the applicant states that, were it to have artificially inflated the number of hours proposed in its tender, that tender would not have been automatically excluded.

78 Secondly, the applicant argues that the Council cannot rely on the fact that although the successful tenderer's bid was 3.7% more expensive than that of the applicant, that tenderer proposed a number of hours that was 25.2% greater than the number of hours proposed in the applicant's tender. It states once again that the total number of hours proposed by the successful tenderer was higher than the number of hours that was actually necessary to carry out the work referred to in the specifications in compliance with the requisite quality standards. Accordingly, the overestimation of the services to be provided by the successful tenderer led to damage being done to the Council and those who fund it. It adds that the true position is that the selected tenderer does not provide all of the hours referred to in its tender and that that point confirms that the number of hours proposed by it corresponds with what was necessary in respect of the cleaning of the premises covered by Lot No 2.

79 In the second place, the applicant submits that the selection criterion adopted is discriminatory in so far as it leads to tenders being automatically excluded, without being given further consideration, that are objectively advantageous to the Council in budgetary terms and perfectly satisfactory from a qualitative point of view.

80 In the third place, the applicant submits that the Council infringed the provisions of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules. It argues that before rejecting its tender on account of the total number of hours of services proposed being abnormally low, the Council should have verified that tender, after due hearing of the parties, in accordance with Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules. Furthermore, it is clear from the case-law that the automatic elimination of abnormally low tenders on the basis of the application of a mathematical criterion is prohibited (Case 103/88 Fratelli Costanzo [1989] ECR 1839).

81 The Council states that, according to the case-law, the award of a contract to the tenderer who submitted the tender offering best value for money does not mean that the successful tender is necessarily the cheapest.

82 It adds that a particular objective of the regular use of the competitive tendering procedure is to show that it is possible to do better or to do more. In a competitive market, the average of the total number of hours proposed by all tenderers is likely to represent a robust and reliable estimate of the means required for the service to be properly provided from a qualitative point of view. The Council takes the view that, if a greater number of hours are allocated to cleaning, that will mean that a higher level of quality will be achieved. In the present case, the Council notes that, while the successful tenderer had submitted a bid that was 3.7% more expensive than that of the applicant, by contrast, it was proposing 25.2% more hours of work than the applicant. In addition, it points out that although the price criterion was worth a maximum of 50% in the tender evaluation procedure, the disputed criterion relating to the total number of hours proposed counted for only 25% of the total number of marks to be awarded. The successful tenderer's bid was therefore better value for money and the applicant's services were, for their part, considerably more expensive. The Council also states that the time-cards of the successful tenderer's employees show that the services provided are those which that tenderer is obliged to provide in accordance with the terms of the contract.

83 As regards the applicant's claims that there is a risk of collusion between tenderers, who might agree among themselves that the volume of services should be artificially inflated, the Council invites the applicant, to the extent that it has any evidence in that respect, to contact the competition authorities.

84 In relation to the third plea, alleging infringement of the principle of non-discrimination, the Council replies that that principle prohibited it from taking into account the quality of the services previously provided by the applicant when awarding the contract.

85 Lastly, the Council submits that since the fourth plea, alleging infringement of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, was raised by the applicant in its reply, it is a new plea and is, accordingly, inadmissible. In any event, the Council states that the applicant's tender was not abnormally low. It essentially argues that, in the case of an abnormally low tender, it is necessary to comply with the requirement laid down in Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules to verify the constituent elements of a tender, after due hearing of the parties, applies only in relation to the pricing of that tender. It states that while the applicant proposed a total number of hours in its tender that was 25.2% lower than the successful tenderer's bid its price was only 3.7% lower than that proposed by the latter. It accordingly takes the view that the applicant's services were considerably more expensive than those of the successful tenderer.

Findings of the Court

86 Before considering the substance of the action for annulment against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 2, it is necessary first of all to rule on the admissibility of the fourth plea, alleging infringement of the provisions of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules.

– The admissibility of the fourth plea, alleging infringement of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules

87 According to settled case-law, it follows from Article 44(1)(c) in conjunction with Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance that the original application must contain the subject-matter of the proceedings and a summary of the pleas in law relied on, and that new pleas in law may not be introduced in the course of the proceedings unless they are based on matters of law or of fact which come to light in the course of the procedure. However, a submission or argument which may be regarded as amplifying a plea made previously, whether directly or by implication, in the original application, and which is closely connected therewith, will be declared admissible (Case 108/81 Amylum v Council [1982] ECR 3107, paragraph 25; Case 306/81 Verros v Parliament [1983] ECR 1755, paragraph 9; and Case T-216/95 Moles García Ortúzar v Commission [1997] ECR-SC I–A–403 and II–1083, paragraph 87).

88 The case-law also provides that, under Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, the contracting authority is obliged to allow the tenderer to clarify, or even explain, the characteristics of its tender before rejecting it, if it considers that a tender is abnormally low (Case T-148/04 TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission [2005] ECR II–2627, paragraph 49).

89 In the present case, the Court finds that, in paragraph 17 of its application, the applicant places particular reliance, in support of it action against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 2, on the infringement of the general principle of sound administration, infringement of the principle of non-discrimination and a manifest error of assessment, in that its tender was rejected, without being given further consideration, on the sole ground that the total number of hours of work in that tender was more than 12.5% lower than the average of the total number of hours proposed. Similarly, in paragraph 26 of its application, it submits that the implementation of that criterion is discriminatory in that it leads to the automatic exclusion, without further consideration, of objectively more advantageous tenders. It follows that the applicant, in its application, expressly criticised the Council for having rejected its tender without further consideration, by reason of its being abnormally low.

90 It follows that although the fourth plea, alleging infringement of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, was not expressly raised by the applicant until its reply, that plea represents an amplification of the three pleas put forward in the original application and is closely connected with them. That plea must accordingly be declared admissible.

– The substance of the action against the decision of 13 October 2004, in so far as it relates to Lot No 2

91 As was mentioned in paragraph 89 above, the three pleas raised in the application and alleging infringement of the principle of sound administration, a manifest error of assessment and infringement of the principle of non-discrimination essentially seek to show that the Council was wrong not to invite the applicant, prior to the automatic elimination of the latter's tender by reason of the abnormally low number of hours proposed by the applicant and in accordance with the principle that the constituent elements of that tender should be verified after due hearing of the parties laid down in Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, to provide it with evidence that the tender was a genuine one. Consequently, it is appropriate to start by examining the fourth plea, alleging infringement of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules.

92 In that respect, it is necessary, in the first place, to determine whether the concept of abnormally low tender extends, as the Council submits, only to the price criterion in the tender assessed by the contracting authority or, as the applicant essentially claims, that concept also extends to other criteria which apply to the evaluation of tenders.

93 According to the case-law, since the requirements laid down by Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), by Article 37(1) of Directive 92/50 and by Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 are in substance identical to those laid down by Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, the following considerations apply equally in relation to the interpretation of the last-mentioned provision (see, by way of analogy, Joined Cases C-285/99 and C-286/99 Lombardini and Mantovani [2001] ECR I–9233, paragraph 50).

94 It must also be pointed out that the Court of Justice held in paragraph 67 of the judgment in Lombardini and Mantovani, cited in paragraph 93 above, that it was undisputed that Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 did not define the concept of an abnormally low tender and, a fortiori, did not determine the method of calculating an anomaly threshold. In the same case, the Advocate General was of the opinion that the concept of an abnormally low tender was not an abstract one, but was very precise and had to be determined for each contract according to the specific purpose it was intended to fulfil (Opinion of Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer in Lombardini and Mantovani, cited in paragraph 93 above, points 32 and 35).

95 In the present case, the Court finds, first, that there is no definition of the anomaly threshold and of the concept of abnormally low tender, within the meaning of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, in the Financial Regulation or the Implementing Rules. Secondly, there is no express provision in that article to the effect that the concept of abnormally low tender cannot be applied to criteria other than that of price.

96 Consequently, in order to define the material scope of the concept of abnormally low tender within the meaning of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, it is necessary, first of all, to take as a basis the objective pursued by that provision.

97 As was mentioned in paragraph 88 above, where a contracting authority considers that a tender is abnormally low, Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules obliges it to allow the tenderer to clarify or even to explain the nature of its tender before rejecting that tender. More precisely, it is clear from the case-law that it is essential that each tenderer suspected of submitting an abnormally low tender should have the opportunity effectively to state its point of view in that respect, giving it the opportunity to supply all explanations as to the various elements of its tender at a time when it is aware not only of the anomaly threshold applicable to the contract in question and of the fact that its tender has appeared abnormally low, but also of the precise points which have raised questions on the part of the contracting authority (Lombardini and Mantovani, cited in paragraph 93 above, paragraph 53). At the same time, the Court of Justice stated that the existence of a proper exchange of views, at an appropriate time in the procedure for examining tenders, between the contracting authority and the tenderer constitutes a fundamental requirement, in order to prevent the contracting authority from acting in an arbitrary manner and to ensure healthy competition between undertakings (Lombardini and Mantovani, cited in paragraph 93 above, paragraph 57).

98 It follows that Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules enshrines a fundamental requirement in the field of public procurement, which obliges a contracting authority to verify, after due hearing of the parties and having regard to its constituent elements, every tender appearing to be abnormally low before rejecting it.

99 Next, the Court notes that Article 97(2) of the Financial Regulation provides that contracts may be awarded by the automatic award procedure or by the best-value-for-money procedure and that, as regards the latter form of procedure, Article 138(2) of the Implementing Rules states that the tender to be accepted is the one with the best price-quality ratio, taking into account criteria justified by the subject of the contract such as the price quoted, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, profitability, completion or delivery times, after-sales service and technical assistance.

100 The Court is accordingly of the view that, where the contract is awarded to the tender offering best value for money, the fundamental requirement referred to in paragraph 98 above applies not only to the price criterion under the tender evaluated but also to the other criteria referred to in Article 138(2) of the Implementing Rules, since those criteria allow an anomaly threshold to be determined beneath which a tender submitted in the tender procedure in question is suspected to be abnormally low, within the meaning of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules.

101 In the second place, it is necessary to determine in the light of the above whether the Council was, as the applicant submits, obliged in the present case to comply with the procedure for verification after due hearing of the parties laid down in Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules.

102 In that regard, the Court notes that the award procedure in question was that of the tender offering best value for money. In addition, it is not in dispute that, of the criteria which were relevant, the criterion regarding the average of the total number of hours proposed related to the qualitative aspect of the applicant's tender and constituted one of the various elements of its tender for the purposes of the case-law referred to in paragraph 97 above. Lastly, in accordance with the provisions of the specifications referred to in paragraph 16 above, that criterion allowed an anomaly threshold to be determined, beneath which the tender in question was to be automatically eliminated.

103 As is clear from the Council's letter of 22 October 2004 and as the Council expressly confirmed at the hearing in reply to a question from the Court, it is on the basis of the latter criterion that the applicant's tender was rejected, on the sole ground of the excessively low nature of the total number of hours included in that tender. Moreover, it is plain that the Council did not arrange any hearing of the parties, within the meaning of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, in relation to the applicant's tender prior to its being eliminated automatically.

104 That being the case, the Council has infringed the provisions of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules.

105 That conclusion cannot be affected by the fact that, as the Council argues in its reply, while the applicant's total number of hours was 25.2% lower than that of the successful tenderer, its total price was, by contrast, 3.7% beneath that of that tenderer. It is sufficient to point out once again that, as is clear from the Council's letter of 22 October 2004, the applicant's tender was excluded on the sole ground that the total number of hours included in that tender was excessively low.

106 It follows from the foregoing that the fourth plea, alleging infringement of Article 139(1) of the Implementing Rules, is well founded.

107 Consequently, without it being necessary to rule on the merits of the first three pleas raised in support of the action for annulment, the decision of 13 October 2004 should be annulled, in so far as it relates to Lot No 2.

The claims for damages

108 The applicant considers that the wrongful rejection of each of its tenders by the Council has caused it damage and seeks compensation for that damage, which it assesses, by multiplying the annual price of its tender by the period of the contract (three years), at EUR 1 481 317.65, together with interest at the rate of 7% a year.

109 With respect to the existence of a wrongful act, it submits that the Council plainly committed a serious and manifest wrongful act, as regards Lot No 1, by failing to verify that its tender was correct and, as regards Lot No 2, by infringing the provisions of the Financial Regulation and the Implementing Rules.

110 With regard to the actual harm suffered, the applicant argues that the wrongful rejection of each of its tenders has led to a considerable loss of profits, which threatens its very survival.

111 First, and in the alternative, the applicant invites the Court, should the latter not be satisfied in the present case with its claims for compensation for the damage suffered by it as a result of the rejection of each of its tenders, to make an immediate award in its favour of EUR 500 000 by way of interim damages. Secondly, it proposes that prior to adjudicating definitively on the amount of the damages the Court should appoint an accountant to calculate the profits, both direct and indirect, that it would have earned from the award of each of the contracts.

112 As regards the existence of a causal link between the wrongful act and the damage suffered, the applicant is of the view that the principle of proximate causes requires that the Court examine whether it would have suffered the same damage in the absence of any wrongful act committed by the Council. It argues in that regard that since the Council excluded both of its tenders automatically it is not possible in the present case to assess the damage in this way.

113 According to the applicant, since the Council did not annex the original evaluation report to its defence, the Court cannot scrutinise the Council's reasoning and determine on what basis the applicant's tenders might, even without the Council acting wrongfully, have been excluded from the tender procedure at issue.

114 The Council considers, as regards Lot No 1, that it did not commit any manifest error of assessment. It adds that, even if it were to be accepted that it should be held liable for such an error, the applicant has not established that such an error was serious and manifest, that there was any actual harm suffered or the existence of a causal link between them.

115 As regards Lot No 2, the Council is of the view that it did not infringe the principles of sound administration and non-discrimination, and that it also did not commit a manifest error of assessment. It adds that, even if it were to be accepted that it should be held liable for such an infringement, the applicant has not established that such an error was serious and manifest, that there was any actual harm suffered or the existence of a causal link between them.

116 It submits that, contrary to what the applicant maintains, the criteria for awarding marks in respect of Lot No 2 clearly allowed it to evaluate the applicant's tender. The Council notes that 75% of those marks were allocated pursuant to calculations based on information provided by tenderers, while the remaining 25% were allocated pursuant to the evaluation that had been carried out.

117 Lastly, under reference to an 'ordinary' evaluation (described by the Council as being 'based on the documentation actually submitted by the applicant on the assumption that it was not excluded from the tender process') and a 'theoretical' evaluation (described by the Council as being 'based on the award to the applicant [of the maximum number of marks awarded] to the tenderer who was given the highest number of marks for each criterion, save where the criterion is based on mathematical information contained in the tender'), the Council claims that it can show that, as regards both Lot No 1 and Lot No 2, the applicant's tenders did not rank first and that, as a result, the requirement that actual harm must have been suffered is not satisfied in the present case.

118 In any event, both as regards Lot No 1 and Lot No 2, even if the Court were, contrary to all probability, to accept the applicant's claims for damages, the Council is of the view that the damages sought by the applicant should be recalculated and limited to the net annual profits which it can show it would have earned under the contract in question.

119 It is settled case–law that, in order for the Community to incur non–contractual liability under the second paragraph of Article 288 EC for unlawful conduct of its institutions, a number of conditions must be satisfied: the institution's conduct must be unlawful, actual damage must have been suffered and there must be a causal link between the conduct and the damage pleaded (Case 26/81 Oleifici Mediterranei v EEC [1982] ECR 3057, paragraph 16; Case T-175/94 International Procurement Services v Commission [1996] ECR II–729, paragraph 44; Case T-336/94 Efisol v Commission [1996] ECR II–1343, paragraph 30; and Case T-267/94 Oleifici Italiani v Commission [1997] ECR II–1239, paragraph 20).

120 Where one of those conditions is not satisfied, the action must be dismissed in its entirety and it is unnecessary to examine the other conditions (Case C-146/91 KYDEP v Council and Commission [1994] ECR I-4199, paragraphs 19 and 81, and Case T–170/00 Förde-Reederei v Council and Commission [2002] ECR II–515, paragraph 37).

121 Although the applicant invokes a right to damages on the basis of the loss it claims to have suffered by reason of the rejection of each of its tenders, taken together, it is necessary to consider its claims for damages by distinguishing between that part of the decision of 13 October 2004 which relates to Lot No 1 and that part of the decision which relates to Lot No 2.

122 It is settled case-law that an application for compensation for damage must be dismissed where there is a close connection between it and an application for annulment which has itself been dismissed (see Case T-340/99 Arne Mathisen v Council [2002] ECR II–2905, paragraph 134 and the case-law cited).

123 Since the claims for damages in respect of Lot No 1 were rejected, on the basis that the applicant's allegations of unlawfulness were unfounded, and since the application for damages is closely connected with those claims, the latter must be rejected as regards Lot No 1.

124 The applicant seeks damages in the amount which it would have invoiced to the Council had the contract, and thus inter alia Lot No 2, been awarded to it. That claim must therefore be understood as being based not on the loss of an opportunity to enter into the contract but on the loss of the contract itself.

125 However, the applicant puts forward no evidence to show that, had the unlawful conduct established in relation to Lot No 2 not taken place, it would have been certain that it would have been awarded that lot of the contract. Put at its highest, it submits that since the Council did not annex its original evaluation report to its pleadings it is impossible to verify on what basis the applicant's tenders could have been excluded from the disputed tender procedure, even if the Council had not acted wrongfully.

126 In that last regard, since the Council has, in reply to a written question put by the Court, produced the original evaluation report and that report has been notified to the applicant, the only finding the Court can make is that the latter would in any event not have been awarded the contract in respect of Lot No 2, even in the absence of the unlawful conduct established in paragraph 106 above. The applicant's tender is ranked in the original evaluation report produced by the Council in eighth and last place.

127 It follows that the damage alleged by the applicant with respect to Lot No 2, that is to say, the loss of the contract itself, is not actual and certain, but hypothetical, with the result that it cannot give rise to compensation. That, of itself, is sufficient to reject the claim for damages. In addition and for the avoidance of doubt, there is nothing to suggest, nor does the applicant put forward anything to show, that by reason of the unlawful conduct that has been established it lost even an opportunity to obtain the contract.

128 Consequently, the applicant's claim for damages in respect of Lot No 2 must be rejected.

129 It follows from all of the above that the claims for damages must be rejected in their entirety.

Costs

130 Pursuant to Article 87(3) of the Rules of Procedure, the Court of First Instance may order that the costs be shared or that each party bear its own costs where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads. In the circumstances of the present case, each party must be ordered to bear its own costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fifth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Annuls the decision of the Council of the European Union of 13 October 2004 to reject the tenders of Belfass SPRL under tender procedure UCA–033/04, in so far as that decision rejected Belfass' tender with respect to Lot No 2;

2. Dismisses the action as to the remainder;

3. Orders each party to bear its own costs.

Case T-495/04

Belfass SPRL

v

Council of the European Union

(Public procurement – Community tender procedure – Obvious clerical error – Award to the tender offering best value for money – Abnormally low tender – Article 139(1) of Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 – Plea of illegality – Specifications – Admissibility)

Summary of the Judgment

1. European Communities' public procurement – Tendering procedure

   (Arts 230, fourth para., EC and 241 EC)

2. Procedure – Introduction of new pleas during the proceedings

   (Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Arts 44(1)(c) and 48(2); Commission Regulation No 2342/2002, Art. 139(1))

3. European Communities' public procurement – Conclusion of a contract following a call for tenders

   (Commission Regulation No 2342/2002, Arts 138(2) and 139(1))

4. Non-contractual liability – Conditions – Unlawfulness – Damage – Causal link

   (Art. 288, second para., EC)

1. Since, in a procedure for the award of public contracts, the specifications are not of individual concern to tenderers, who accordingly have no right to bring an action for annulment against them under the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC, there is no basis on which the Council can plead that one of those tenderers had the right to challenge those specifications as a basis for opposing the incidental challenge by the latter to the lawfulness of that document in an application for the annulment of the decision to exclude it from the procedure at issue.

2. It follows from Article 44(1)(c) in conjunction with Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance that the original application must contain the subject-matter of the proceedings and a summary of the pleas in law relied on, and that new pleas in law may not be introduced in the course of the proceedings unless they are based on matters of law or of fact which come to light in the course of the procedure. However, a submission or argument which may be regarded as amplifying a plea made previously, whether directly or by implication, in the original application, and which is closely connected therewith, will be declared admissible.

   That applies to a plea alleging infringement of Article 139(1) of Regulation No 2342/2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation, which provides that, in procedures for the award of public contracts of the European Communities, the contracting authority is obliged to allow the tenderer to clarify, or even explain, the characteristics of its tender before rejecting it, if it considers that a tender is abnormally low, when the plea is raised expressly by an applicant only at the stage of its reply but when that applicant, in its application, had expressly criticised the Council for having rejected its tender without further consideration, by reason of its being abnormally low.

3. Article 139(1) of Regulation No 2342/2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation enshrines a fundamental requirement in the field of public procurement, which obliges a contracting authority to verify, after due hearing of the parties and having regard to its constituent elements, every tender appearing to be abnormally low before rejecting it.

Where the contract is awarded to the tender offering best value for money, that requirement applies not only to the price criterion under the tender evaluated but also to the other criteria referred to in Article 138(2) of Regulation No 2342/2002, since those criteria allow an anomaly threshold to be determined beneath which a tender submitted in the tender procedure in question is suspected to be abnormally low, within the meaning of Article 139(1) of that regulation.

Accordingly, in rejecting a tender, in a procedure for the award of public contracts to the tenderer offering best value for money, on the sole ground of the excessively low nature of the total number of hours included in that tender without arranging any hearing of the parties, within the meaning of Article 139(1), in relation to that tender prior to its being eliminated automatically, the Council infringed that article.

4. In order for the Community to incur non–contractual liability under the second paragraph of Article 288 EC for unlawful conduct of its institutions, a number of conditions must be satisfied: the institution's conduct must be unlawful, actual damage must have been suffered and there must be a causal link between the conduct and the damage pleaded. Where one of those conditions is not satisfied, the action must be dismissed in its entirety and it is unnecessary to examine the other conditions.

It follows that a claim for damages must be rejected where the damage alleged, that is to say, the loss of a Community contract, is not actual and certain, but hypothetical.

Action brought on 23 December 2004 by Belfass against the Council of the European Union

Language of the case: French

An action against the Council of the European Union was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 23 December 2004 by Belfass, established in Brussels (Belgium), represented by Lucas Vogel, lawyer.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

- annul the decision adopted by the General Secretariat of the Council of the European Union rejecting the two tenders entered by the applicant under call for tenders UCA 033/04 for the award of a contract for cleaning and maintenance services of two office buildings in Brussels;

- order the defendant to pay the sum of EUR 1 481 317.65 together with interest, calculated at the rate of 7% per annum, from the date on which the present action was brought, expressly subject to future increase, reduction or determination;

- order the defendant to pay the costs of the proceedings.

Pleas in law and main arguments:

The applicant in the present case, a company specialising in the cleaning of offices which has been responsible since 1 January 1998 for the cleaning of certain offices of the General Secretariat of the Council, challenges the rejection by the defendant of two tenders submitted by the applicant in respect of a tender relating to the conclusion of a contract for cleaning and general services to be performed in the 'Woluwe Heights' (lot 1) and 'Frère Orban' (lot 2) buildings.

In support of its claims, the applicant alleges:

- the existence in the present case of a manifest error of assessment in that, in order to reject the tender relating to lot 1, the defendant claims that the average hourly rate under that tender is less than the minimum wage laid down by the Union générale belge du nettoyage (Belgian General Cleaning Union) for category 1A, on 1 July 2004, whereas a precise analysis of the figures in the applicant's tender shows that the average hourly rate thereunder is above the minimum figure set by the Union générale belge du nettoyage;

- infringement of the principles of sound administration and non-discrimination and the existence in the present case of a manifest error of assessment in that the tender relating to lot 2 was rejected, without further consideration, on the sole ground that the total number of hours of work under that tender was less by more than 12.5% than the average number of hours under the other tenders received for the contract in question, whereas by using that criterion the contested decision favours the most expensive tenders providing for invoicing of an elevated number of hours, without any objective purpose.

Action brought on 25 November 2004 by European Dynamics SA against the Commission of the European Communities

Language of the case: English

An action against the Commission of the European Communities was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 25 November 2004 by European Dynamics SA, Athens, Greece, represented by N. Korogiannakis, lawyer.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

- annul the Decision of the Commission (DG Fisheries), of 15 September 2004, evaluating the applicant's bid as not successful and awarding the contract to the incumbent contractor;

- order the Commission to re-evaluate the tender submitted by the applicant;

- order the Commission to pay the applicant's legal costs and other costs and expenses incurred in connection with the application, even if the application is rejected.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant company filed a bid in response to the Commission's call for tenders FISH/2004/021 for the provision of computer and related services linked to the information systems of the Directorate - General for Fisheries. By the contested decision this bid was rejected and the contract awarded to another bidder, which was also the incumbent contractor.

In support of its application for annulment of that decision the applicant claims first of all that the Commission violated the principle of non-discrimination and of free competition. The applicant considers that the Commission's decision to impose a two month familiarisation period unfavourably discriminated in favour of the incumbent, for whom the familiarisation period was obviously not necessary. In the same context the applicant also contends that delivery of information to the tenderers regarding the software application subject to the call for tenders was insufficient whilst of course the incumbent had unlimited access to such information.

The applicant further submits that the Commission violated the Financial Regulation2 as well as Directive 92/503 by using evaluation criteria that were not included in the call for tenders, namely the size of the applicant's proposed team, which was considered excessive by the Commission, and the average number of years of experience of the applicant's team, which the Commission considered was lower than that of the team proposed by the successful tenderer.

The applicant further considers that the Commission committed manifest errors of appreciation in its evaluation of the applicant's tender and in particular in its assessments of the expertise of its proposed team and of the applicant's financial offer where, according to the applicant, the Commission mistakenly assumed that all sixteen persons proposed by the applicant would be working in parallel for the whole of the project.

The applicant also invokes a violation, by the Commission, of its obligation, under Article 253 EC, to state reasons and a failure to provide pertinent information requested by the applicant on the grounds for the rejection of its bid. The applicant also submits that the Commission violated the principle of good administration and diligence by acting with significant delay and by not offering adequate answers to the applicant's requests for information prior to the submission of the bids.

Action brought on 2 December 2004 by Danish Management A/S against the Commission of the European Communities

Language of the case: English

An action against the Commission of the European Communities was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 2 December 2004 by Danish Management A/S, Viby J, Denmark, represented by C. Kennedy-Loest and C. Thomas, Solicitors.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

- annul the Commission's decisions of 18 November 2004 and 30 November 2004 rejecting the tender submitted by the applicant in tender procedure service contract for a monitoring system of the implementation of projects and programmes of external co-operation financed by the European Community - lot 2: ACP, South Africa and Cuba - EuropeAid 119453/C/SV/Multi;

- order the defendant to pay the applicant's costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant submitted a tender for a service contract for a monitoring system of the implementation of projects and programmes of external co-operation financed by the European Community - lot no. 2 covering ACP, South Africa and Cuba, which was published the 26 May 2004 1.

The Commission rejected the tender by decision of 18 November 2004 on the grounds that there was a discrepancy between the applicants financial offer and technical offer as to the number of man/days required. The Commission upheld its decision by letter of 30 November 2004.

The applicant submits that the Commission's decision is based on an error of fact since, according to the applicant, there was no such discrepancy between the two parts of the companies tender.

The applicant further alleges that the Commission ought to have sought to clarify the alleged disrepancy and that in not having done so before rejecting the applicants tender the Commission has taken a disproportionate action and failed to exercise due diligence, whereby it infringed its duty of care.

In Case T-447/04 R,

Capgemini Nederland BV, established in Utrecht (Netherlands), represented by M. Meulenbelt and H. Speyart, lawyers, applicant,

v

Commission of the European Communities , represented by L. Parpala, acting as Agent, with an address for service in Luxembourg, defendant,

APPLICATION for suspension of operation, first, of the Commission's decision to reject the bid submitted by the applicant in response to a call for tenders (JAI-C3-2003-01) for the development and installation of a second-generation Schengen Information System (SIS II) and for the possible development and installation of a Visa Information System (VIS) in the field of justice and home affairs and of its decision to award the contract to another bidder and, secondly, of the Commission's decision to conclude a contract relating to the SIS II and VIS systems with another bidder,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

makes the following

Order

On those grounds,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

hereby orders:

1. The application for interim measures is dismissed.

2. Costs are reserved.

Facts of the dispute

1. By a notice of tender published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union on 25 June 2003 (OJ 2003 S 119), the Commission invited bids in accordance with the restricted procedure under tendering procedure JAI-C3-2003-01 for the development and installation of a second-generation Schengen Information System (SIS II) and for the possible development and installation of a Visa Information System (VIS) in the field of justice and home affairs.

2. The bid submitted by the applicant was not selected at the end of the tendering procedure. The Commission decision rejecting its bid and selecting that of a third party was notified to it on 13 September 2004 (hereinafter the decision of 13 September 2004'). In that decision the Commission stated that it would observe a delay of two weeks before entering into the SIS II/VIS contract (hereinafter also the contract at issue') with the bidder who had submitted the best bid.

3. By facsimile dated 16 September 2004, the applicant requested the Commission to specify the grounds of the decision of 13 September 2004 in accordance with Article 100(2) of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1; hereinafter the Financial Regulation'). In it the applicant also challenged the Commission's expressed intention to award the contract within a two-week period and relied in that connection on the judgment in Case C-81/98 Alcatel Austria and Others [1999] ECR I7671.

4. By letter dated 30 September 2004 the Commission confirmed its intention to award the contract to a third party on the basis of a report drawn up in August 2004 by the evaluation committee (hereinafter the evaluation report'), which was appended to that letter. According to the evaluation report, two bidders including the applicant satisfied the technical evaluation stages and were admitted to the financial evaluation stage.

5. By letter dated 8 October 2004 the applicant informed the Commission that it appeared to it that, in light of the evaluation report, rejection of its bid was contrary to Community law. Accordingly, it requested the Commission not to pursue the procedure and to await an analysis which it undertook to forward to the Commission within a period of a week.

6. On 15 October 2004 the applicant communicated the results of its analysis to the Commission and sought explanations concerning the method of calculating the total value of its bid. Again the applicant requested the Commission not to pursue the award procedure.

7. On 22 October 2004 the Commission entered into the contract at issue with a group of undertakings led by the companies, STERIA-France and HP-Belgium (hereinafter the decision of 22 October 2004').

8. On 26 October 2004 the Commission published press release No IP/04/1300 announcing signature of the contract at issue with a group of undertakings led by the companies STERIA-France and HP-Belgium (hereinafter Steria/HP') with a global budget amounting to EUR 40 million.

9. On 5 November 2004 the applicant pointed out to the Commission that the amount of EUR 40 million announced in the press release exceeded the total amount of its bid. It also requested the Commission to reply to its letter of 15 October 2004 and not to enter into the contract at issue with Steria/HP.

10. By a letter dated 11 November 2004 the Commission dismissed the objections raised by the applicant in its letters of 8 and 15 October 2004.

Procedure

11. By an application lodged at the registry of the Court of First Instance on 15 November 2004 the applicant brought an action for the annulment, first, of the decision of 13 September 2004 and, secondly, of the decision of 22 October 2004.

12. By a separate document the applicant applied for its action for annulment to be decided under an expedited procedure pursuant to Article 76a of the Rules of Procedure.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

13. By a separate document lodged at the registry of the Court of First Instance on the same day the applicant brought the present application for interim relief in which it seeks:

- suspension of operation of the decision of 13 September 2004 and of the decision of 22 October 2004 pending a decision on the present claim;

- suspension of operation of those decisions pending a decision by the Court of First Instance on the main action;

- if it were to be the case that the contract at issue had already been entered into, suspension of operation of that contract pending a decision by the Court of First Instance on the main action;

- such other interim measure as may be deemed appropriate;

- an order for costs against the Commission.

14. In reply to a written question raised on 17 November 2004 by the President of the Court of First Instance, the Commission on the following day specified the date on which the contract at issue was entered into. It also indicated that it did not intend to suspend operation of it pending an order by the President.

15. By order of 18 November 2004 the President ordered the immediate suspension of operation of the contract at issue under the second subparagraph of Article 105(2) of the Rules of Procedure pending the final order in these interim proceedings.

16. The Commission submitted written observations on the interim application on 25 November 2004.

17. The parties presented oral argument at the hearing before the President on 2 December 2004.

18. On 8 December 2004 the Court of First Instance granted the applicant's request for adjudication under the expedited procedure.

Law

19. Under the provisions of Articles 242 EC and 243 EC read with Article 225(1) EC, the Court of First Instance may, if it considers that circumstances so require, order that application of the contested act be suspended or prescribe such interim measures as may be necessary.

20. Under Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure an application for interim measures must state the circumstances giving rise to urgency and the pleas of fact and law establishing a prima facie case (fumus boni juris) for the interim measures applied for. Those conditions are cumulative, so that an application for interim measures must be dismissed if any one of them is absent (order of the President of the Court in Case C-268/96 P(R) SCK and FNK v Commission [1996] ECR I4971, paragraph 30).

Prima facie case

21. In regard to the decision of 13 September 2004 the applicant claims that the bid submitted by Steria/HP was in conformity neither with the financial conditions nor the technical conditions set out in the tender documentation.

22. In the first place, the financial conditions were not observed in several respects.

23. First, the method of financial evaluation selected by the Commission was unusual', inasmuch as it was not based on a fixed price for the project, or the sum of the prices submitted for the 15 separate items comprising the project. It was based on price ratios, that is to say the ratio between the price offered by a tenderer and the lowest price offered by the other tenderers selected, calculated at the level of each of the 15 items. An overall price ratio was subsequently determined by calculating the average of the price ratios of all 15 items. In that regard, the applicant stresses that, whilst it is for the Commission to decide upon a price evaluation system, it is also clear that this system will generate inequitable outcomes unless the Commission checks with particular diligence whether the prices allocated by the candidates for each individual item are credible, accurate, and not abnormally low. An incorrect analysis, in particular of the most minor items, will have a disproportionate effect on the overall price ratio.

24. The applicant points out that, given this method of evaluation, the tender requires tenderers to identify a price for each of the 15 items of the project. In that regard it refers to several provisions in the tender documentation including Clause 5.4 of the administrative instructions. The obligation to indicate a price was all the more necessary since the financial evaluation was based not on the overall sum of prices offered for the 15 items of the project but on price ratios calculated in respect of each item.

25. In the present case, it is clear from the evaluation report that Steria/HP deliberately chose not to indicate any price or left the price blank in respect of item 6 (simulators), item 7 (national interfaces) and item 11 (optional VIS functionalities). Instead of rejecting Steria/HP's offer as non-compliant, the Commission accepted it by entering a price of 0.01 under each of those items, which severely distorted the overall price ratio.

26. Secondly, the prices proposed by Steria/HP were abnormally low. In light of the method of financial evaluation selected by the Commission under which the 15 items had a significant impact on the overall price ratio, the rules relating to abnormally low offers ought to have been applied in respect of each of the 15 items. Indeed, apart from items 6, 7 and 11 of Steria/HP's offer, for which no price was indicated, the offer of that group of undertakings concerning items 1 (project management) and 2 (detailed design) ought to have given rise on the Commission's part to queries concerning the possibility of abnormally low prices. Yet it is plain from the Commission's letter of 11 November 2004 that it did not apply the rules relating to abnormally low offers in this case.

27. Thirdly, the Commission did not observe the principle that the economically most advantageous offer should be selected. This principle is laid down in Article 138(3) of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1; hereinafter the implementing regulation'). In fact it is apparent from the Commission's press release dated 26 October 2004 that the overall amount of Steria/HP's offer was clearly higher than the applicant's offer. As regards the overall amount of its offer, the applicant claims that the Commission took into account an incorrect amount in its initial bid, which was higher than the actual amount, owing to the fact that it improperly ignored a corrigendum sent to it on 26 May 2004.

28. In the second place, the technical conditions of the call for tenders were said not to have been complied with. First of all, Steria/HP's offer did not include the development of national interfaces in accordance with the technical specifications contained in the call for tenders, even though the technical specifications provided for the installation of national interfaces at national level. The evidence available to the applicant in fact indicates that the solution proposed by Steria/HP did not include the installation of national interfaces on the sites of users, that is to say the Member States. That evidence also suggests that Steria/HP did not offer the development or delivery of national simulators which were none the less necessary for verifying the proper functioning of national interfaces.

29. Yet, according to settled case-law, an offer which does not comply with the key technical requirements set out in the tender documentation must be rejected. That rule was expressly reproduced in Article 1.3 of the technical specifications under which the entire text of the tender documentation was made binding on the Commission. If Steria/HP proposed an alternative technical solution (variant), the Commission ought to have rejected its offer immediately.

30. As regards the decision of 22 October 2004 the applicant maintains, first of all, that it should be set aside on the ground that the Commission infringed the principle of entitlement to effective judicial protection (Case 222/84 Johnston [1986] ECR 1651, paragraph 18, and Case C-50/00 P Union de Pequeños Agricultores v Council [2002] ECR I-6677, paragraph 39). As far as national public procurement cases are concerned, that principle has been developed in Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), and has been upheld by the Court of Justice (judgment in Alcatel Austria and Others).

31. Under that principle, the awarding authority must allow for a reasonable period of time between the award of a contract and its conclusion, so that rejected tenderers can lodge an application, under national law, for interim measures against the award decision before the contract is concluded. Although neither the Financial Regulation nor its implementing regulation contain provisions on remedies before the Community courts, an obligation analogous to that flowing from Directive 89/665 applies in the present case under the general principle of the availability of an effective remedy.

32. In the present case the Commission decided to conclude the contract at issue without having set a realistic period in the 30 September 2004 letter which contained the first statement of reasons for the decision of 13 September 2004. That period would have enabled the applicant to prepare an effective remedy against that decision, through an application for interim measures following an application for annulment of the rejection decision. By setting a period of two weeks, the Commission de facto infringed the applicant's right to bring an action for annulment and an application for interim measures within the period of two months provided for in Article 230 EC and, consequently, infringed that provision.

33. Furthermore, in adopting the decision of 22 October 2004 the Commission infringed Article 103 of the Financial Regulat ion under which, where there is a possibility of an error or irregularity, there is an obligation on the institution concerned to suspend the procedure. Moreover, it is plain from Article 153(1) of the implementing regulation that the existence of a problem does not have to be established irrefutably in order for the first paragraph of Article 103 of the Financial Regulation to apply.

34. The Commission is of the view that the condition concerning a prima facie case is not satisfied.

35. As a preliminary point, the Commission points out that it has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender. Moreover, the applicant accepted the price evaluation method. In that connection section 3.1 of the administrative instructions clearly states that the submission of a tender offer entails irrevocable agreement of the tenderers to participate in all evaluation procedures foreseen in this call for tender'.

36. As to the alleged non-compliance with the financial conditions, the Commission contends, first, that the applicant is calling in question Steria/HP's offer for not fixing the price of certain items or pricing certain items at zero, even though the applicant itself did exactly the same thing in regard to several items including item 8 (user deliveries).

37. Moreover, according to the Commission, even though section 2.8 of the administrative instructions of the tender specifications in fact asked tenderers to indicate prices for all items, a price equal to zero is also a price that has to be accepted. In fact, it continues, the possibility of zero-pricing certain items could flow directly from the nature of the contract and be entirely justified.

38. In that regard the Commission states that it was for the tenderers to propose the most apposite solutions for meeting the objectives and the strategic needs of the call for tenders. Accordingly, tenderers were expected to provide technical solutions. Thus, the zero-¡pricing of certain items does not constitute price manipulation.

39. In regard to the price alteration alleged to have been carried out by the Commission, the latter states that it entered the price of EUR 0.01 for the sole purpose of being able to carry out a mathematical calculation. That justificatory reason was also mentioned in the evaluation report and was applied to all items concerned and to all tenderers.

40. Secondly, the Commission considers that it in no way disregarded the rules concerning abnormally low offers. In fact, the overall contract value of SIS II and VIS was, according to the notice of tender, between EUR 28 and 38 million. The value of the contract signed being more than EUR 37 million, the tender could not be regarded as abnormally low within the meaning of Article 139 of the implementing regulation.

41. In regard, thirdly, to the alleged non-observance of the principle that the economically most advantageous offer must be selected, the Commission contends that the applicant did not submit an offer the overall value of which was lower that Steria/HP's offer. Whilst it was true that the applicant sent a corrigendum to the Commission on 26 May 2004, the Commission was under no obligation to take account of it. In fact, under Article 148(3) of the implementing regulation, the contracting authority may contact the tenderer, if obvious clerical errors in the tender must be corrected. In the present case the multiplication error by the applicant did not impose on the Commission any obligation to contact it.

42. As far as the alleged non-observance of technical criteria is concerned, the Commission contends that, in regard to national interfaces, it is important to distinguish between, on the one hand, a communication part and, on the other, a logical software part. Only the communication part which did not form part of the call for tenders, needs to be installed in Member States' premises, whereas the logical software part can be installed at central level. The definition of the national interface in the call for tenders does not specify whether it has to be installed, in all parts, at central level or national level but clearly states that the national interface remains under the responsibility of the central domain. The fact that it is possible to install the software part of a national interface centrally is confirmed by the study which the Commission commissioned from Deloitte & Touche and which was annexed to the call for tenders as a technical input document. That study deals exclusively with the question of whether the software part of the national interfaces should be better instal1ed at the central or the local level. Had it been decided that it would be mandatory to install all parts of the national interface in the Member States, it would obviously have made no sense to provide the study as a technical input document.

43. Moreover, in reply to an argument by the applicant, the Commission states that Steria/HP's offer clearly states that the pricing for the development of simulators (item 6) was located under item 5 (central domain).

44. As regards the arguments deployed in support of the alleged illegality of the decision of 22 October 2004, the Commission contends that it in no way infringed the principle of entitlement to an effective remedy, since Directive 89/665 and the judgment in Alcatel Austria and Others were not relevant to the case. Moreover, the decision of 13 September 2004 and the letter of 30 September 2004 addressed to the applicant fully complied with the Commission's obligations under the first sentence of Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation to provide a statement of reasons. In fact the reasoning contained in the letter of 30 September 2004 manifestly enabled the applicant to take legal proceedings.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

45. As to Article 103 of the Financial Regulation invoked by the applicant, that provision is not applicable in the present case.

Urgency

46. The applicant claims that, if the interim measures sought are not granted, it is likely to suffer serious and irreparable damage.

47. The damage suffered would be serious because the only offers considered in the final round of the tendering procedure were its and Steria/HP's. Rejection of Steria/HP's bid would have resulted in the award to it of the contract.

48. Since, moreover, the SIS II/VIS project is an exceptionally high-profile project, the loss suffered by the applicant includes the loss of a major reference in the public sector as well as the loss of an opportunity to demonstrate its capacity to develop large-scale IT systems on an international scale.

49. In that connection the applicant adds that the companies involved in the implementation of the project will be in a very advantageous position to compete for future SIS II and VIS related contracts that will be awarded by the Commission, for example for the extension of the system to other Member States, and by the countries and the local authorities of the Schengen area, for example for updating their national information systems. The total value of these follow-up contracts is significantly higher than the value of the central system' put to tender by the Commission.

50. The damage suffered would also be irreparable. The award of the contract, and, a fortiori, the execution and performance of this contract, even for the duration of the interim measures proceedings, would make it impossible for the Commission to go back on the disputed decision. The only way to avoid a fait accompli would be an immediate suspension of the operation of those decisions. If no interim measures were adopted, an annulment judgment by the Court of First Instance would be devoid of effectiveness. As the Community judicature has held, a decision on the merits after performance of the contract cannot reverse the damage suffered by the Community legal order and by the rejected tenderers (order of the President of the Court in Case C-87/94 R Commission v Belgium [1994] ECR I1395, paragraph 31). Accordingly, an award of damages would not constitute appropriate reparation.

51. At the hearing the applicant maintained that the present case may be distinguished from the orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-148/04 R TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission [2004] ECR II-0000 and Case T303/04 R European Dynamics v Commission [2004] ECR II-0000, inasmuch as unlike the contracts in those cases the contract at issue is very narrow owing to its unique character in Europe and perhaps in the whole world. Access to the market at issue may be secured only by the successful bidder in the tendering procedure at issue.

52. The Commission stresses that the applicant has no entitlement to the award of the contract even were the decision of 13 September 2004 and the decision of 22 October 2004 to be annulled. Moreover, it notes that, if the Court of First Instance were to establish that an error was committed in the course of the financial evaluation, the same error also affected the offer submitted by the applicant since it entered a zero price for certain items.

53. It is settled case-law that the loss of a reference or opportunity to demonstrate a certain capacity does not have the consequence of causing such damage as to justify the adoption of urgent interim measures. In particular, the loss of a reference does not prevent the applicant from successfully participating in future calls for tenders. Moreover, damage which is purely hypothetical in so far as it is based on the occurrence of future and uncertain events cannot justify the grant of the interim measures sought.

54. As to the allegedly irreparable nature of the damage, the Commission emphasises as a preliminary matter that the order in Commission v Belgium is in no way relevant to the present case inasmuch as Article 226 EC and the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC pursue different objectives. More specifically, one of the reasons why the grant of interim measures could be envisaged in the case giving rise to the order in Commission v Belgium was the absence of any other measure protective of tenderers' interests.

55. Moreover, damage cannot be deemed irreparable, or even be deemed to be damage in respect of which reparation is difficult, if compensation may subsequently be obtained by means of an action for compensation under Article 288 EC.

56. Finally, the extent and reality of the damage suffered owing to rejection of the applicant's bid have not been demonstrated, nor has its seriousness and irreparable nature. Nor has the applicant shown that its very existence would be likely to be compromised or that its position in the market would be irremediably altered.

57. According to the settled case-law of the Court of First Instance, the fact that the contract at issue is in course of performance on the date of judgment in the main proceedings, is not a valid argument for proving urgency (TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium , paragraph 55). Indeed, the rejection of the applicant's bid, were it not justified, could be repaired: the costs of participating in the tender procedure could be quantified and made good, a pecuniary compensation envisaged and the applicant would be free to take part in a fresh call for tenders. At the hearing the Commission stated in that regard that, where a decision is annulled, it is for the institution concerned under Article 233 EC to take such consequential action as may be necessary, whilst observing the operative part of the judgment. None the less, neither the applicable rules nor the case-law of the Community courts make provision in regard to such consequences where a contract has been signed and is in course of performance. The present case concerns a contract which is valid under Belgian civil law. Moreover, annulment of the contract at issue would entail lengthy delays in the accomplishment of the SIS II/VIS project, which would prejudice the development and maintenance of an area of freedom, security and justice (Article 2 EU).

Balance of interests

58. The applicant claims, first, that the infringement of Community procurement law and the damage that such infringement inflicts upon the Community legal order, and on the rights of other tenderers, in themselves, constitute a serious interest to be protected by the Community courts (order in Commission v Belgium).

59. Second, a limited delay in the implementation of the SIS II/VIS project would not disproportionately harm the interests of the Commission and the Member States. The current Schengen Information System does not need to be replaced by the future system before the end of 2007; nor does provisional acceptance of the SIS II system have to take place before 31 March 2007. There is no indication at all that a limited delay beyond this date would cause harm of great significance or, alternatively, that such harm could not be mitigated to an acceptable degree by slightly increasing the speed of implementation. Conversely, performance of the contract at issue would create or contribute to a fait accompli representing serious and irreparable harm both to the applicant and to the Community legal order.

60. Third, rejection of Steria/HP's offer, and award of the contract to the applicant could be implemented within a very short time. Alternative measures to redress the infringements of Community law are available, for example allowing the applicant to submit a bid on the criteria that were apparently accepted for award of the contract to Steria/HP, or re-tendering the contract.

61. Fourth, even on the assumption that the suspension of operation of the decision of 13 September 2004 and the decision of 22 October 2004 would cause damage to the Commission or the Member States, the potential damage to the Commission is self-inflicted. The applicant consistently acted with great speed, which is a relevant factor in determining the balance of interests (order in Commission v Belgium , paragraph 34).

62. Fifth, the applicant submitted at the hearing that the Commission's assertions concerning the timetable for accomplishment of the project carried little conviction. Those assertions were, moreover, contradicted by a document of the Council dated 23 November 2001 exchanged between the delegations of the Member States responsible for implementation of the SIS system from which it appeared that it would be possible to continue with the current SIS system, even with 30 Member States.

63. Sixth, the applicant also referred at the hearing to the fact that the Council had already in 2001 entrusted the Commission with the task of developing the SIS II system. Moreover, the applicant maintained that provision was initially made for commencement of the SIS II/VIS project in January 2004. It cannot be accepted that the Commission can belatedly organise a tendering procedure at the same time as alleging that there is such a degree of urgency as to preclude the grant of interim measures.

64. The Commission contends that the grant of interim measures would occasion damage to the Community, the Commission, the Member States, non-member States, and indeed to the incumbent contractor, and that such damage far outweighs any potential damage to the applicant if interim measures are not granted.

Findings of the President

Prima facie case

65. It must be observed that, in its application for interim measures, the applicant makes a distinction between, on the one hand, the grounds of annulment of the decision of 13 September 2004 (paragraphs 21 to 29 above) and, on the other, the grounds of annulment referring to the decision of 22 October 2004 (paragraphs 30 to 33 above).

66. On that point the President considers that, were the decision of 13 September 2004 rejecting the applicant's bid and accepting the bid of a third party to be annulled, the decision of 22 October 2004 would be deprived of its legal basis. The latter decision would consequentially be vitiated by illegality and would therefore also have to be annulled.

67. It is therefore sufficient at an initial stage to examine whether the grounds of annulment of the decision of 13 September 2004, as set out in the application for interim measures, appear prima facie to be well founded.

68. As a preliminary matter it should be pointed out, first of all, that under Article 89(1) of the Financial Regulation all public contracts financed in whole or in part by the budget have to comply with the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non-discrimination. Next, under Article 97(1) of the Financial Regulation the selection criteria for evaluating the capability of candidates or tenderers and the award criteria for evaluating the content of the tenders are to be defined in advance and set out in the call for tender. Finally, it is settled case-law that the award criteria must be formulated, in the contract documents or the contract notice, in such a way as to allow all reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderers to interpret them in the same way (see, by analogy, judgment in Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 42).

69. It should further be observed, also as a preliminary matter, that, in accordance with settled case-law, the Commission has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender and the Court's review should be limited to checking that there has been no serious and manifest error (Case 56/77 Agence européenne d'interims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20, and Case T-19/95 Adia interim v Commission [1996] ECR II-321, paragraph 49).

70. Having formulated those preliminary observations, the President considers that two of the grounds raised by the applicant are of a serious nature.

71. The first ground alleges a manifest error in the assessment of the financial evaluation of the offer submitted by Steria/HP, stemming from the fact that it did not state a price for each of the 15 items of its bid.

72. The question arises as to whether the applicant has adduced evidence from which it may be concluded that prima facie it cannot be preclude d that the Commission manifestly erred in its assessment, inasmuch as it applied the financial evaluation system provided for in the call for tenders in such a way that the financial bids did not reflect their actual value in that connection.

73. In the context of these proceedings the Commission asserted, on the one hand, that section 2.8 of the administrative instructions of the tender documentation asked tenderers to indicate prices for all items and that a zero price was also a price that had to be accepted. In that regard Steria/HP's offer did not indicate a price or indicated a zero price for item 6 (simulators), item 7 (national interfaces) and item 11 (optional VIS functionalities) but the prices of each of these items were included in the valuation of the amount of other items with which they were inextricably linked from a technical point of view. Thus, the prices for items 6, 7 and 11 were respectively included in items 4 (central system), 3 (system environments) and 2 (detailed design).

74. The question therefore arises as to whether prima facie the Commission manifestly erred in its assessment by accepting as compliant with the tender specification the lack of indication of a price or the indication of a zero price for one or more items of the offer, where the solution proposed for that item or those items and the prices relating to them were included in one or several other items of that offer.

75. It should be noted on this point that section 2.8 of the administrative instructions of the tender specification provided that, for the purposes of the financial evaluation, tenderers had to indicate prices for all items and that, as regards the financial sheets, all prices had to be expressed in euros, be clearly stated and, where appropriate, indicate all pricing elements for all items and sub-items.

76. It is clear from this provision that the price had to be indicated for each item proposed in the bid and that it could not be included under another item.

77. That conclusion is corroborated by the very purpose of the financial evaluation system selected in the context of the procedure for the call for tenders at issue.

78. Thus, section 5.4 of the administrative instructions of the tender documentation entitled financial evaluation' opted for a system based on 15 separate items. For the purposes of financial evaluation offers were assessed not on the basis of the global sum of the prices offered for the fifteen separate items but in relation to the price ratios calculated in respect of each item. In fact, for each item the method of evaluation employed by the Commission was based on a score awarded to each tenderer on the basis of the ratio between, on the one hand, the price offered by the tenderer and, on the other, the lowest price offered by the other tenderers selected for the purposes of financial evaluation. As the applicant emphasises, without being contradicted by the Commission, the score in respect of each item was therefore accorded equal weight, whatever the scope and complexity of the various items.

79. Accordingly, to accept the Commission's argument that a zero price could be indicated for an item in respect of a technical solution would be to concede that a tenderer could artificially improve his overall price ratio and, thereby, obtain the best overall price ratio even though his overall bid value was not the lowest. In fact, as the applicant correctly observed, that system enabled a tenderer artificially to improve his overall price ratio, for example by taking EUR 500 000 from two items worth EUR 1 million each, and adding these amounts to an item worth EUR 10 million. A tenderer could also achieve an unbeatable overa11 ratio by offering an artificial price of less than half the price of its competitor for five or six smaller items. Thus the best overall price ratio could be obtained even though the overall bid value was manifestly higher than that of all the other bids. The President notes that the Commission has not explained how the detailed rules governing application of the financial evaluation system selected by it enabled such a risk to be avoided.

80. That finding is in no way affected by the Commission's argument to the effect that it did not wish to deprive tenderers of the opportunity of proposing their technical solutions in an unrestricted way. Apart from the fact that that argument relates to the technical evaluation and not the financial evaluation, it is not even argued that it would not have been possible to indicate an approximate price for each bid item, though the technical solution was included under another item.

81. The interpretation of the financial instructions of the tender specification proposed by the Commission in no way guarantees that the economically most advantageous offer has been selected, contrary to the principle, applicable in this case, that the most economically advantageous tender should be accepted (section IV.2 of the contract notice).

82. In those circumstances, it must be considered, prima facie, that the Commission disregarded the technical specification and committed a manifest error of assessment by accepting the absence of any indication of a price or the indication of a zero price for certain items of Steria/HP'S offer, even though it cannot be precluded that the latter's offer ought to have been rejected because it did not observe the conditions of the call for tenders.

83. The second ground considered serious by the President relates to non-observance of the technical condition of the bid relating to national interfaces (item 7). In fact, the applicant criticises the solution proposed by Steria/HP because it did not involve installation of national interfaces on the sites of users, that is to say the Member States, although that was a requirement under the contract notice.

84. In that connection it must be stated that the requirements of the tender documentation prima facie support the analysis that the national interfaces must be installed on user sites (section 2.2 of the SIS II module; sections 2.1.2, 4.1 and 4.3 of the common requirements; section 2.5.2 of the administrative instructions). In particular, under section 4.1 of the common requirements national interfaces must be installed on the User's own premises'. Under section 2.5.2 of the administrative instructions the places of delivery for deliverables destined for users (e.g. national interfaces) [would] be defined at signature of the contract'.

85. Moreover, both in its application and at the hearing the applicant explained in greater detail the reasons why the installation of national interfaces at national level is crucial.

86. At this stage the replies by the Commission to those arguments do not dispel the lack of precision concerning the technical specifications in regard to the location in which the national interfaces are to be installed.

87. Consequently, it cannot be precluded that the interpretation of the technical specifications put forward by the applicant is correct and that, accordingly, Steria/HP's bid contravened the technical specifications in the call for tenders.

88. In light of the foregoing it must be concluded that the condition relating to a prima facie case is satisfied.

Urgency

89. As was held in the order of the President of the Court in Case C65/99 P(R) Willeme v Commission [1999] ECR I-1857, the purpose of interim proceedings is not to secure reparation of damage but to guarantee the full effectiveness of the judgment on the substance. In order that the latter objective may be attained, the measures sought must be urgent in the sense that, in order to avoid serious and irreparable damage to the applicant's interests, they must be ordered and become effective even before the decision in the main proceedings (paragraph 62). It is for the party applying for interim measures to adduce proof that it cannot await the outcome of the main action without suffering serious and irreparable damage (order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-169/00 R Esedra v Commission [2000] ECR II-2951, paragraph 43).

90. In the present case the applicant maintains that the damage suffered owing to the fact that the contract at issue was not awarded to it is of an irreparable nature, inasmuch as annulment of the decision of 13 September 2004 and the decision of 22 October 2004 would, in the absence of any interim measure, produce no useful effect.

91. That argument cannot be upheld.

92. First of all, on the supposition that the Court of First Instance annuls those decisions it is in no way established, contrary to the applicant's assertions, that the contract would be awarded to it. In that regard, just as the successful bidder, the applicant proposed a zero price for an item of the project, namely item 8. Accordingly, the applicant's bid is prima facie affected by a lacuna analogous to the lacunae affecting the successful tenderer's bid.

93. Next, there is no warrant for concluding that, as is maintained by the applicant, its interests would not be adequately protected in the event of annulment by the Court of First Instance of the decision of 13 September 2004 and the decision of 22 October 2004.

94. It must first be noted that it is not correct to assert that compensation constitutes the sole means of compliance with an annulment judgment.

95. Under Article 233 EC it is the institution whose act has been declared void which is required to take the measures necessary for compliance with the judgment of the Court of First Instance. It follows, first, that the court annulling an act has no jurisdiction to direct the institution whose act it has annulled as to the manner in which a judgment is to be complied with (order of the Court of Justice of 26 October 1995 in Joined Cases C-199/94 P and C-200/94 P Pevasa and Inpesca v Commission [1995] ECR I-3709, paragraph 24). Secondly, the judge hearing the interim application cannot prejudge the measures which might be adopted following a judgment annulling an act. The manner in which a judgment annulling an act may be complied with depends not only on the provision annulled and the scope of the judgment in question, which must be appraised by reference to the grounds thereof (Joined Cases 97/86, 193/86, 99/86 and 215/86 Asteris and Others v Commission [1988] ECR I-2181, paragraph 27, and Joined Cases T305/94, T-306/94, T-307/94, T-313/94 to T-316/94, T-318/94, T-325/94, T328/94, T-329/94 and T-335/94 Limburgse Vinyl Maatschappij and Others v Commission [1999] ECR II-931, paragraph 184), but also on other factors specific to each case such as the period within which the annulment of the contested act comes into effect or the interests of third parties concerned.

96. In the present case in the event of annulment of the decision of 13 September 2004 and of the decision of 22 October 2004, it would be for the Commission, in light of the specific circumstances of this case, to adopt the necessary measures for ensuring appropriate protection of the applicant's interests (order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-108/94 R Candiotte v Council [1994] ECR II-249, paragraph 27; and orders in Esedra v C ommission, paragraph 51, and TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission, paragraph 55).

97. In that context it is important to emphasise the fact that the applicant brought its main application and its application for interim measures after the conclusion of the contract at issue and that therefore the application for interim measures did not enable the President of the Court of First Instance to prevent signature of the contract, whereas the applicant could have brought an action for annulment of the decision of 13 September 2004, at the same time as an application for interim measures, within the period of three weeks which elapsed between the date on which the Commission communicated to it the evaluation report (30 September 2004) and the date of signature of the contract (22 October 2004). It is none the less pointed out, first, that the stay ordered by way of a protective measure by the President (see paragraph 15 above) had the effect of suspending the operation of the contract at issue. Second, the Court of First Instance agreed to adjudication of the main action under the expedited procedure (see paragraph 18 above). Consequently, judgment will be given within a short period of time (see, in regard to an analogous situation, the judgment in Case T-211/02 Tideland Signal v Commission [2002] ECR II-3781). In those circumstances it can in no way be precluded that the Commission may be directed to bring the contract at issue to an end and to organise a fresh procedure for the award of the public contract at issue in which the applicant could take part.

98. It must be noted, second, that even if the Commission decided to make a payment of damages in reparation of the loss suffered by the applicant, such manner of compliance with any annulment judgment could, under settled case-law, be regarded as constituting adequate reparation. Consequently, the potential loss suffered by the applicant cannot be regarded as irreparable once it can be the subject of subsequent financial compensation (see order in Esedra v Commission , paragraph 44 and case-law cited; and order in TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission , paragraph 43).

99. In any event, even in the absence of voluntary reparation on the part of the Commission, it cannot but be noted that the applicant could, in the absence of indications to the contrary, bring an action for damages before the Court of First Instance, given that loss of a contract is a loss in respect of which financial reparation may be afforded by way of an action under Article 288 EC (order in Esedra v C ommission, paragraph 47; order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-132/01 R Euroalliages and Others v Commission [2002] ECR II-777, paragraphs 51 to 53; and order in TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission, cited above, paragraph 45).

100. In light of those considerations it cannot but be noted that the situation giving rise to the present dispute is fundamentally different to that in Commission v Belgium on which the applicant places reliance. Contrary to the finding in that case, it cannot be concluded in this case that a decision on the substance, even if made during the course of performance of the contract, would be unable to afford reparation of the damage to both the Community legal order and the applicant.

101. In light of the foregoing the interim measures sought would therefore be justified only in exceptional circumstances, that is to say if it appeared that, in the absence of such measures, the applicant would be in a situation likely to jeopardise its very existence or irremediably alter its position in the market (see, to that effect, orders in Esedra v Commission, paragraph 45, and TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission, paragraph 46).

102. In that regard it cannot but be noted that, whilst the applicant maintains that the award to it of the contract at issue would be beneficial, it is not maintaining that the decisions of 13 September 2004 and 22 October 2004 entail financial consequences such as to jeopardise its very existence. In fact, the applicant has in no way argued to that effect and has adduced no item of evidence concerning its financial situation which might lead the President to conclude that its existence was imperilled.

103. The only actual effects which the applicant associates with execution of the decision of 13 September 2004 and with the decision of 22 October 2004 are the loss of a major reference and the alleged difficulty of usefully tendering in the future in the context of projects connected with the contract at issue. To the extent to which those effects may be regarded as seeking to establish the irreparable nature of the alleged damage, the evidence in the case-file none the less does not permit an appraisal of their actual impact on the applicant's situation. In particular, the applicant has not demonstrated that that reference was essential to it or that it would be prevented in the future from accomplishing other projects of the same scale. Nor, moreover, has it adduced evidence from which it might be concluded that serious and irreparable damage has been done to its reputation or, a fortiori, that such damage prevents it from taking part in future calls for tenders by the Commission in connection with the SIS II and VIS systems. In that context, it should be added that, in any event, participation in a public call for tender procedure, which is by its nature highly competitive, necessarily entails risks for all the participants and the elimination of a tenderer under the tender rules is not in itself in any way prejudicial and cannot therefore, as a matter of principle, be regarded as damaging its reputation (see, in that connection, order of the President of the Court in Case 118/83 R CMC v Commission [1983] ECR 2583, paragraph 51, and the order in Esedra v Commission, paragraph 48).

104. In those circumstances it must be concluded that the evidence adduced by the applicant does not enable it to be established to the requisite legal standard that, failing the grant of the interim measures sought, the applicant would suffer serious and irreparable damage.

105. In light of the foregoing, it must be concluded that the condition relating to urgency is not satisfied and that therefore the application for interim measures must be rejected.

Action brought on 15 November 2004 by Capgemini Nederland B.V. against the Commission of the European communities

Language of the case: English

An action against the Commission of the European Communities was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 15 November 2004 by Capgemini Nederland B.V.,Utrecht, The Netherlands, represented by M. Meulenbelt and H. Speyart, lawyers.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

- Annul the Commission's decision, notified to the applicant by letter dated 13 September 2004, not to retain the applicant's offer in the context of the call for tender JAI-C3-2003-01;

- Annul the Commission's decision to sign a contract with another tenderer;

- Order the Commission to pay its own costs and those of the applicant.

Pleas in law and main arguments

On 25 June 2003 the Commission published a Contract Notice for the development and installation of a large scale information system in the field of justice and home affairs, referred to as SIS II and VIS. The applicant submitted a bid. By letter dated 13 September 2004 the Commission notified the applicant of its decision not to retain its offer and to award the contract to another tenderer. In the same letter it informed the applicant that it would not be signing the contract with the successful tenderer before the expiry of a period of two weeks from the date of the letter. An exchange of correspondence between the applicant and the Commission followed, in the course of which the Commission confirmed its intention to award the contract to another tenderer. On 26 October 2004 the Commission published a press release stating that it had signed a contract with the successful tenderer.

By its application the applicant requests the annulment of both the Commission's decision to reject its offer as well as the decision to sign a contract with the successful tenderer. In support of the request to annul the decision rejecting the applicant's offer, the applicant invokes a number of alleged violations of Regulation 1605/20021 (the Financial Regulation) and of Regulation 2342/20022 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation. In this context the applicant submits that the method of price evaluation chosen by the Commission is unusual in that it is not based on a fixed price for the project but rather on price ratios between the price offered by each particular tenderer and the lowest price offered, calculated at the level of each of the 15 individual items included in the project, which all carry equal weight even though they are of greatly diverging sizes. Use of this method, according to the applicant, did not result in a fair and equitable outcome. The applicant further alleges that the Commission failed to react to abnormally low prices in the successful tenderer's offer, failed to take into account a corrigendum submitted by the applicant and failed to reject the successful tenderer's offer in spite of non-compliance with technical criteria. The applicant also claims that the commission violated the "best value for money" principle since the total contract value for the successful tenderer is higher than that for the applicant.

In support of its request to annul the decision to sign a contract with the successful tenderer the applicant submits that by concluding that contract the Commission willingly deprived the applicant of an effective remedy. The applicant also invokes, in this context, a violation of Article 230 EC arguing that, by informing the applicant that it would only wait for two weeks before signing the contract with the successful tenderer, the Commission effectively shortened the two-month time limit for the introduction of an application set out in that article. Finally, the applicant argues that the Commission violated Article 103 of Regulation 1605/2002 by failing to suspend the procedure leading to the decision to sign the contract even though the applicant, by its letters, had drawn its attention to possible irregularities in the award procedure.

17 November 2006(*)

In Case T-303/04,

v

Commission of the European Communities, represented by L. Parpala and E. Manhaeve, acting as agents, assisted by J. Stuyck, lawyer, defendant,

APPLICATION for annulment of the tender procedure concerning the provision of services for data and information management applications and of the Commission's decisions relative to the evaluation of tenders,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE FIFTH CHAMBER
OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

makes the following

Order

1 By letter lodged at the Court Registry on 11 October 2006, the applicant informed the Court of First Instance, in accordance with Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, that it wishes to discontinue the proceedings and requested that each party bears its own costs.

2 By letter lodged at the Court Registry on 20 October 2006, the defendant indicated to the Court of First Instance that it had no objection to the discontinuance and requested that, in accordance with Article 87(5) of the Rules of Procedure, the applicant be ordered to pay the costs. The defendant denies the existence of any amicable settlement between the parties as suggested in the application for discontinuance.

3 Article 87(5), first subparagraph, of the Rules of Procedure provides that the party who discontinues or withdraws from proceedings be ordered to bear the costs, if they have been applied for in the observations of the other party on the discontinuance. In the present case, the defendant applied for the applicant to bear the costs, both in relation to the main application as well as to the two applications for interim measures.

4 It is, therefore, appropriate to order that the applicant bears its own costs and the costs incurred by the defendant.

On those grounds,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE FIFTH CHAMBER

hereby orders:

1. Case T-303/04 is removed from the register of the Court of First Instance.

2. The applicant shall bear its own costs and the costs incurred by the defendant in Case T-303/04 as well as in the interim measures CasesT-303/04 R-I and T-303/04 R-II.

Order of the President of the Court of First Instance
First InstanceFirst Instance2004. European Dynamics SA v Commission of the European Communities. Public service contracts - Community tender procedure - Interim measures - Application for suspension of operation - Urgency - New application - New facts - None. Case T-303/04 R II.

1. Applications for interim measures - Suspension of operation of a measure - Interim measures - Conditions for granting - Prima facie case - Cumulative nature - Provisional nature of the measure - Weighing-up of the interests at stake - Discretion of the judge dealing with the application for interim relief

(Arts 225(1) EC, 242 EC and 243 EC; Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Art. 104(2))

2. Applications for interim measures - Suspension of operation of a measure - Interim measures - Variation or cancellation - Condition - Change in circumstances - Variation or cancellation when the application is dismissed - Not covered

(Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Art. 108)

3. Applications for interim measures - Suspension of operation of a measure - Rejection of the application - Possibility of lodging another application - Condition - New facts - Meaning

(Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Art. 109)

1. Applications for interim measures must state the subject-matter of the proceedings, the circumstances giving rise to urgency and the pleas of fact and law establishing a prima facie case for the interim measures applied for. Those conditions are cumulative, so that those applications must be dismissed if any one of them is absent. The measures sought must also be provisional, in that they must not prejudge the points of law or fact at issue or neutralise in advance the effects of the decision subsequently to be given in the main action.

In the context of that overall examination, the judge hearing the application must, where appropriate, balance the interests concerned. He enjoys a broad discretion and is free to determine, having regard to the specific circumstances of the case, the manner and order in which those various conditions are to be examined, there being no rule of Community law imposing a pre-established scheme of analysis within which the need to order interim measures must be assessed.

2. Article 108 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, which provides that, on application by a party, an order may at any time be varied or cancelled on account of a change in circumstances, is applicable in situations where an order prescribing interim measures is in place. It cannot be applied to situations where an application has been dismissed, such situations being governed by Article 109 of those rules.

(see para. 54)

3. According to Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, rejection of an application for an interim measure shall not bar the party who made it from making a further application on the basis of new facts. It is for the applicant to show that the conditions allowing the making of a further application, set out in Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure, are met. New facts' within the meaning of that provision should be taken to mean facts which appear after the order rejecting the first application was made or during the proceedings leading to the first order or which the applicant was not capable of invoking in the first application and which are relevant to the assessment of the case in question.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

makes the following

Order

On those grounds,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

hereby orders:

1. The application for interim measures is dismissed.

2. Costs are reserved.

Luxembourg, 22 December 2004.

Facts of the dispute

1. European Dynamics SA is active in the field of information and communications technology, inter alia for the European institutions.

2. Following call for tenders ADMIN/DI/0005 ESP (External Service Providers') of 16 March 2001, the Commission concluded a number of framework contracts, applying the award system laid down for awards of multiple contracts in Article 1.4 of the General Terms and Conditions for Informatics Contracts published by the Commission on 11 June 1998 (the cascade' system), for the provision of external services relating to information systems. The overall contract was divided into nine lots, among which were Lot 4, for the provision of external services relating to data management applications and information systems (Lot ESP 4'), and Lot 5, for the provision of external services relating to internet and intranet applications (Lot ESP 5').

3. The applicant is a member of a consortium consisting of European Dynamics, IRIS SA, Datacep SA, Primesphere SA and Reggiani SpA (the ESP 5 consortium'), which is the contractor selected as first in the cascade for Lot ESP 5 and with which the Commission signed, on 5 November 2001, framework contract DI-02432-00 for the provision of services for Lot ESP 5.

4. With respect to Lot ESP 4, the contractor selected as first in the cascade is a consortium consisting of Trasys SA and Cronos Luxembourg SA, which later became Sword Technologies SA (the ESP 4 consortium'), with which the Commission signed, on 16 October 2001, a framework contract under reference DI0243200 for the provision of services for Lot ESP 4.

5. On 27 December 2003 the Commission launched a call for tenders under reference ADMIN/DI2/PO/2003/192 ESP-DIMA for the provision of on- and off-site IT services for data/information management systems at the European Commission including development, maintenance and other related activities' (the ESPDIMA call for tenders').

6. Following that call for tenders, the Commission services and the applicant engaged in correspondence and discussions regarding the applicant's concerns as to the implementation of Lot ESP 5 and Lot ESP 4 (the applicant considering in substance that Lot ESP 5 had been under-used to the advantage of Lot ESP 4) and the applicant's calls for the cancellation of the ESP-DIMA tender procedure. According to the applicant, that procedure had no raison d'être since, instead of using ESP-DIMA to replace ESP 4, whose budgetary ceiling had been reached, the Commission should have had recourse to Lot ESP 5 instead.

7. For a more detailed exposition of the facts underlying the dispute between the Commission and the applicant as to the raison d'être of ESP-DIMA and the implementation of Lot ESP 4 and Lot ESP 5, reference is made to the facts set out in the Order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 10 November 2004 in Case T303/04 R European Dynamics v Commission (the Order of 10 November'), dismissing the first application for interim measures made in this case.

8. On 20 February 2004 European Dynamics, IRIS, Datacep and Reggiani (in other words the companies forming the ESP 5 consortium minus Primesphere, the ED consortium') submitted a joint tender in response to the ESP-DIMA call for tenders.

9. On 2 June 2004 the Commission awarded the ESP-DIMA contract. The tenderer selected to be first in the cascade was a consortium of Trasys and Sword Technologies with Intrasoft International SA and TXT SpA (in other words the ESP 4 consortium plus two additional partners, the ESP-DIMA consortium'). The ED consortium was selected as second contractor in the cascade, followed by other tenderers in third and fourth places in the cascade.

10. Those results were notified to all the tenderers, including the ED consortium, by letter of 4 June 2004 (the award decision').

11. By fax of 8 June 2004, European Dynamics requested further details of the award decision. The Commission replied by letter of 9 June 2004, giving fuller information on the results of the technical evaluation in respect of each of the relevant criteria.

12. By letter of 14 July 2004 (the letter giving reasons'), the Commission replied to the points raised by European Dynamics in the above letters and refused to send it a copy of the evaluation report, stating that that would involve communicating confidential commercial information on other tenderers. As regards the doubts raised concerning the need to launch the ESP-DIMA call for tenders and the suggestion that Lot ESP 5 should be used for the provision of services covered by Lot ESP 4, the Commission said that DG Informatics had stated in a letter of 30 January 2004 that as the two lots represented separate and distinctly different markets it was not possible to switch from one to the other simply because one lot had not yet reached its budgetary ceiling. Launching a call for tenders for the lot whose budgetary ceiling could no longer be increased was therefore the only appropriate means, and was in line with Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1, the Financial Regulation').

13. On 15 July 2004 the Commission sent the contracts resulting from the award decision to the four selected consortia at the same time, including the ED consortium as second contractor (framework contract DIGIT0455100), stating that the contracts were to be returned signed by 30 July 2004.

14. By application registered at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 29 July 2004, the applicant brought an action under the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC seeking, first, annulment of the ESPDIMA tender procedure, that is, contract notice 2003/S249221337 ESPDIMA and the ESPDIMA call for tenders, and, second, annulment of the Commission's decisions relating to the order in which the tenders were ranked, that is, the award decision and the letter giving reasons.

15. By separate document registered at the Registry of the Court on the same date, the applicant made an application under Article 76a of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance for the Court to adjudicate under an expedited procedure.

16. By separate document registered at the Registry of the Court on the same date, the applicant made an application for interim measures, seeking suspension of operation of the award decision and the letter giving reasons, so as to prevent the contract being concluded by the ESPDIMA consortium, until the Court's decision in the main proceedings (the first application').

17. On 30 July 2004, the Commission received the ED consortium's contract signed. Some missing powers of attorney were sent to the Commission on 4 August 2004. On that date the Commission was in possession of all the originals of the contracts relating to ESPDIMA signed by all the contractors.

18. Since, however, the applicant had made an application for interim measures seeking suspension of operation of the award decision, the contracting authority decided on 4 August 2004 to postpone the signature of the four contracts relating to the ESPDIMA market.

19. Following the first application, the Commission submitted its observations on 26 August 2004. The applicant and the Commission were given the opportunity to present a second round of pleadings and submitted their observations, respectively, on 23 September 2004 and 15 October 2004.

20. It should be recalled that, in its observations of 23 September, the applicant asked for the Commission to be ordered to produce a number of documents, namely the requests for quotations and the statistics relating to the implementation of Lot ESP 4 (the documents at issue').

21. On 2 November 2004 the applicant sent a letter to the Registry of the Court of First Instance in which it made a number of additional observations on the Commission's observations of 15 October 2004 and requested the President of the Court of First Instance to take them into account in his assessment. The applicant stated in particular that two reports annexed to the Commission's observations of 15 October 2004, one from EuroDB dated 22 March 2004 and one from Dun & Bradstreet dated 26 July 2004, discussing the applicant's financial situation were wrong and obsolete'. That letter was accepted as part of the file and was notified to the Commission in accordance with Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure.

22. By letter of 9 November 2004 the Registrar of the Court of First Instance informed the applicant that the Court had decided not to grant the applicant's request for adjudication under the expedited procedure.

23. By the Order of 10 November the President of the Court of First Instance dismissed the first application on the grounds that the evidence adduced by the applicant had not established to the requisite legal standard that it would suffer serious and irreparable damage if the interim measures sought were not granted and that, therefore, the applicant had not succeeded in proving that the condition of urgency was satisfied and, consequently, the application for interim measures had to be dismissed, without it being necessary to rule on its admissibility or examine whether the other conditions for the grant of interim measures were satisfied.

24. In the Order of 10 November, the President likewise dismissed the applicant's request concerning the documents at issue considering that those documents were of no relevance for the examination of the application for interim measures, and there was, therefore, no need to adopt the measures sought by the applicant concerning those documents.

25. It appears that on 18 November 2004, the Commission signed the contract with the ESPDIMA consortium.

26. In those circumstances, by separate document registered at the Registry of the Court on 22 November 2004, the applicant made the present application for interim measures, pursuant to Article 242 EC and Articles 104, 108 and 109 of the Rules of Procedure, by which it seeks suspension of operation of the award decision and the letter giving reasons. The applicant reiterates its request that the President order the Commission to produce the documents at issue.

27. On 1 December 2004 the Commission submitted its observations on the present application. The Commission asks that the President dismiss the application as inadmissible or, in the alternative, as unfounded. As regards the application to produce the documents at issue, the Commission requests that it be dismissed on the basis that the applicant has not provided information indicating the relevance of those documents for the present proceedings.

Law

The application for interim measures

28. Pursuant to Articles 242 EC and 243 EC in conjunction with Article 225(1) EC, the Court of First Instance may, if it considers that circumstances so require, order that application of the contested act be suspended or prescribe any necessary interim measures.

29. Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure prescribes that applications for interim measures must state the subject-matter of the proceedings, the circumstances giving rise to urgency and the pleas of fact and law establishing a prima facie case for the interim measures applied for. Those conditions are cumulative, so that an application for interim measures must be dismissed if any one of them is absent (order of the President of the Court of Justice of 14 October 1996 in Case C268/96 P(R) SCK and FNK v Commission [1996] ECR I-4971, paragraph 30). The judge hearing an application for interim measures must also, where appropriate, balance the interests concerned (order of the President of the Court of Justice of 29 June 1999 in Case C107/99 R Italy v Commission [1999] ECR I4011, paragraph 59).

30. The measures sought must also be provisional, in that they must not prejudge the points of law or fact at issue or neutralise in advance the effects of the decision subsequently to be given in the main action (order of the President of the Court of Justice of 19 July 1995 in Case C149/95 P(R) Commission v Atlantic Container Line and Others [1995] ECR I2165, paragraph 22).

31. Moreover, in the context of that overall examination, the judge hearing the application enjoys a broad discretion and is free to determine, having regard to the specific circumstances of the case, the manner and order in which those various conditions are to be examined, there being no rule of Community law imposing a pre-established scheme of analysis within which the need to order interim measures must be assessed (order in Atlantic Container Line , paragraph 23).

32. Under Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure, [r]ejection of an application for an interim measure shall not bar the party who made it from making a further application on the basis of new facts'.

33. Having regard to the documents in the case-file, the President considers that he has all the material needed to decide the present application for interim measures, without there being any need first to hear oral argument from the parties.

Arguments of the parties

34. The applicant asks the President of the Court of First Instance to declare the application well founded on the basis that new facts support its arguments in the first application.

35. The applicant claims that the Order of 10 November is based on assumptions and facts which are wrong, in particular because of the two reports by EuroDB and Dun & Bradstreet, dated 22 March 2004 and 26 July 2004 respectively (the old reports'), which were produced as evidence by the Commission in the proceedings relating to the first application even though, according to the applicant, the Commission was in possession of new corrected versions of the reports and failed to inform the Court.

36. Regarding the conduct of the Commission, the applicant alleges, more generally, that the Commission is engaging in an undeclared war' which has taken the form of blacklisting' its company in Commission tenders. In this respect, the applicant alleges that figures pertaining to the amounts paid by the Commission for Lots 2, 4 and 7 of the ESP contracts reveal that all the lots controlled by consortia involving Trasys SA or Sword Technologies SA (both members of the ESP 4 consortium) present abnormally high levels of consumption. According to the applicant, these abnormally high levels of consumption can be revealed through the Requests for Quotation issued by the Commission in the context of ESP which the applicant demands be disclosed by the Commission.

37. The applicant finally alleges that the execution of ESPDIMA entails in reality the end of Lot ESP 5, given that ESP-DIMA is the continuation of Lot ESP 4 which has, according to the applicant, been used incorrectly by the Commission to the detriment of Lot ESP 5.

38. Given this reality and its current financial situation, the applicant claims that it will suffer irreparable damage if interim measures are not granted.

39. In particular, according to the applicant, the Order of 10 November is based, inter alia, on incorrect assumptions as regards the applicant's financial situation, that is, that the applicant has a large number of clients, including European institutions, national public bodies and international companies, and that its financial situation is classified as good, with positive marks for sales, profitability and total assets (paragraph 79 of the Order of 10 November).

40. The applicant claims that the new versions of the reports, a report by Dunn and Bradstreet dated 2 November 2004 and a report by EuroDB, which are annexed to the present application (the new reports'), reveal that, on the basis of data up to December 2003, its annual turnover had fallen from EUR 16 million in 2001 to EUR 14 million in 2002 to EUR 10 million in 2003. The new reports show, moreover, that several companies mentioned in the old reports are no longer suppliers or clients of the applicant. In this respect, the applicant stresses that its number of clients has dropped from 200 to 15, that it is not involved in large-scale projects', except in projects involving the Commission, such as the ESEM, Lot ESP 5 and the DG Budget framework contracts, and that it does not own any real estate.

41. The applicant further claims that the Commission's handling of Lot ESP 5 and other contracts it has signed with the Commission will lead the applicant to dismiss over 30% of its staff before the end of the year.

42. With regard to the fall in income and dismissal of its staff arising from the incorrect implementation of Lot ESP 5, the applicant claims that such a fall in income cannot be easily overcome unless the company's financial situation improves. In any event, the damage is not only financial but irreparable. This is due to the magnitude of the damage, the enormous expenditure the applicant has incurred in order to perform Lot ESP 5 services, the fact that Lot ESP 5 is the largest part of its projects and of its budget, and the fact that its budget has been declining.

43. The Commission objects strongly to the applicant's allegations of biased conduct on the part of the Commission and suggestions that the Commission deliberately invoked false data as evidence in the context of the first application. According to the Commission those allegations, which are of an extremely serious nature and may constitute libel, are entirely unsubstantiated and untrue. In particular, the Commission denies in the strongest possible terms that it was in possession of the new reports when it submitted the old reports to the Court. In fact, the Commission only received the new reports when it received the present application on 24 November 2004. It is absurd for the applicant to make an allegation to the effect that the old reports contain data which are false or obsolete given that those reports were based on interviews with the applicant's representatives and were presented as evidence of the applicant's financial capacity in the ESPDIMA call for tenders.

44. According to the Commission, the present application is manifestly inadmissible.

45. First, the application is devoid of purpose given that the applicant is not seeking suspension of performance of the contract signed with the ESP-DIMA consortium.

46. Second, the present application amounts effectively to an appeal against the Order of 10 November and not a new application for interim measures.

47. Third, the application does not fulfil the conditions of Article 104 of the Rules of Procedure as it does not mention the conditions required for an application for interim measures, namely urgency, a prima facie case and a balance of interests in favour of the applicant.

48. Fourth, while the application is based on Articles 108 and 109 of the Rules of Procedure, there are no new facts or change in circumstances within the meaning of those provisions which could justify the admissibility of the present application. The Commission observes that the new reports do not constitute new facts' or a change in circumstances'. Given that those reports are made in real time', that is at the client's request, if they were considered to be new facts' or a change in circumstances' within the meaning of Articles 108 and 109 of the Rules of Procedure, litigants could reopen closed cases simply by requesting the creation of such new reports.

49. The Commission points out that, in any event, the reports cannot constitute new facts since they are not dated after the Order of 10 November (the Dunn and Bradstreet report is dated 2 November 2004 and the EuroDB report is undated), they are based on financial data up to the end of 2003 and, in any case, they do not contain new facts that could change the conclusion on urgency contained in the Order of 10 November. The Commission observes that, on the contrary, the new reports continue to show that the financial situation of the applicant is not such as to endanger its existence. The fact that the new reports show a diminution in its client base does not change the fact that the applicant continues to have a large client base as indicated on its website. Finally, the applicant's allegation regarding dismissal of its staff is contradicted directly by the fact that its website shows that it is actively seeking to recruit a large number of new staff, inter alia, to work on latest European Commission projects'.

50. In the alternative, the Commission claims that, were the Court to find the application admissible, the above facts clearly show that there continues to be no urgency, as the President of the Court of First Instance rightly held in the Order of 10 November.

51. Finally the Commission claims that the balance of interests leans clearly in its favour given that suspension would damage the interests of the other tenderers with whom contracts have been signed.

Findings of the President

52. It should be observed at the outset that, in the present application, which constitutes a new application in the context of the same main action as the first application, the applicant invokes Articles 108 and 109 of the Rules of Procedure and seeks interim measures which are identical to those sought in the first application, that is suspension of the operation of the award decision and the letter giving reasons.

53. However, the first application was dismissed by the Court of First Instance by the Order of 10 November.

54. To the extent that in the present application the applicant invokes, without explaining why, Article 108 of the Rules of Procedure, it should be noted that, according to that provision, on application by a party, an order may at any time be varied or cancelled on account of a change in circumstances. This provision is, however, applicable in situations where an order prescribing interim measures is in place. It cannot be applied to situations where an application has been dismissed, such situations being governed by Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure (see to that effect the order of the Court of Justice of 14 February 2002 in Case C440/01 P(R) Commission v Artegodan [2002] ECR I1489, paragraphs 62 to 64).

55. According to Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure, rejection of an application for an interim measure shall not bar the party who made it from making a further application on the basis of new facts'.

56. Since the first application was dismissed and the present application is based on the alleged existence of new facts, it follows that it can be declared admissible only if the conditions prescribed in Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure are met (see to that effect the order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 8 October 2001 in Case T236/00 R II Stauner and Others v Parliament and Commission [2001] ECR II2943, paragraph 46).

57. It is for the applicant to show that the conditions allowing the making of a further application, set out in Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure, are met.

58. The applicant has not, however, shown that those conditions are met in the present case.

59. It should be observed, as a preliminary point, that the applicant does not attempt to show clearly why the facts presented in the present application should be considered as new facts' within the meaning of Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure.

60. New facts' within the meaning of Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure should be taken to mean facts which appear after the order rejecting the first application for interim measures was made or which the applicant was not capable of invoking in the first application or during the proceedings leading to the first order and which are relevant to the appreciation of the case in question (see to that effect the order in Stauner and Others v Parliament and Commission ,cited above, paragraph 49; see also the order of the Court of Justice of 14 February 2002 in Case C440/01 P(R) Commission v Artegodan [2002] ECR I1489, paragraphs 63 and 64, the order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 4 April 2002 in Case T198/01 R Technische Glaswerke Ilmenau v Commission [2002] ECR II2153, paragraph 123, and the order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 21 January 2004 in Case T245/03 R FNSEA and Others v Commission [2004] ECR II-0000, paragraph 129, discussing the meaning of change in circumstances' in Article 108 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance).

61. None of the data put forward by the applicant in the present application can be regarded as new facts within the meaning of Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure.

62. In essence, the applicant relies on the new reports and, in addition, reiterates certain arguments, already put forward in the first application, regarding the importance of Lot ESP 5 for its overall operations and budget and the effects that the allegedly incorrect implementation of Lot ESP 5 could have on its operations, staff and budget.

63. The arguments in paragraph 3 of the present application regarding the fall in revenue of the applicant from EUR 16 million in 2001 to EUR 10 million in 2003, were already contained in the first application and were expressly rejected in the Order of 10 November as evidence supporting the allegation that the applicant's existence could be put in danger (paragraphs 51 and 75 to 76). Apart from the fact that, as in the first application, the applicant does not even attempt to show how such a fall in revenue could put its existence in danger, it is obvious that financial data dating from 2003 and already produced in the first application cannot constitute new facts within the meaning of Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure.

64. The same considerations apply as regards the arguments in paragraphs 3, 5 and 6 of the present application relating to the implementation of Lot ESP 5 and the consequences it could have on the applicant's operations, staff and budget, such as in particular the alleged forthcoming dismissal of a large number of the applicant's staff. These arguments do not present any new facts. They were already made in the first application and expressly rejected in the Order of 10 November (paragraphs 49 to 52 and 81).

65. The data presented in paragraph 4 of the present application are not relevant to an analysis of the condition of urgency and cannot therefore cast doubt on the conclusions reached in the Order of 10 November. In any event, those data relate to historical levels of consumption of various lots in the ESP markets. The applicant does not allege and it does not appear from the file that such data contain new facts which came into being after the Order of 10 November or which the applicant could not have invoked during the proceedings leading to that order. They cannot therefore constitute new facts within the meaning of Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure.

66. As regards the new reports annexed to the present application, the applicant claims that they show that its financial situation was worse than it was painted in the old reports, in particular that its revenue up to 2003 had declined, that the list of customers and suppliers presented in the old reports was wrong and that the applicant does not own any real estate.

67. However, as the Commission rightly points out in its observations, the new reports cannot be considered new facts' within the meaning of Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure nor even a change in circumstances.

68. It should first be observed that the reports are not new, since the applicant could have invoked the new reports during the proceedings leading to the Order of 10 November. The Dunn and Bradstreet report of 2 November 2004 pre-dates the Order of 10 November while the EuroDB report is of unspecified date, and both reports are based on data pre-dating the Order of 10 November, in particular interviews with the applicant's management which took place on 1 November 2004 (page 2 of the Dunn and Bradstreet report) and financial data presenting the situation of the company as of the end of the calendar year 2003 (page 4 of the Dunn and Bradstreet report and page 3 of the EuroDB report). The applicant was therefore capable of invoking the new reports when it wrote to the Court on 2 November 2004. It should be recalled that the applicant's letter of 2 November was taken into account by the Court at the applicant's request.

69. Second, the new reports do not contain data which the applicant could not have invoked during the proceedings leading to the Order of 10 November. Financial reports such as the reports in question merely discuss the financial situation of a company on the basis of data collected by the authors of the reports. They may constitute additional evidence relating to the financial situation of the applicant but they do not change the actual facts pertaining to that situation. As the Commission rightly points out in its observations, if the mere existence of those reports (as opposed to the actual financial situation which they discuss), which are made in real time' at the request of a client and based largely on data provided by that client, were regarded as new facts' within the meaning of Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure, a litigant would be given the possibility of creating endless new facts by simply ordering a new report without any real change in its financial situation.

70. In this respect, the applicant was perfectly capable of presenting data regarding the actual state of its own financial situation at the time of the first application or in response to the Commission's observations on the first application. It did not need external financial reports in order to prove that it has a certain number of clients or that it does not own real estate. In addition, given that the reports can be obtained in real time at the request of a client, it cannot be considered that the applicant was incapable of invoking updated reports in order to support its allegations with regard to urgency in the first application.

71. However, as the Order of 10 November makes clear, the applicant failed, in the first application, to provide data supporting its arguments that in the absence of the requested interim measures its financial situation was such that its existence would be put in danger. The mere existence of the new reports does not change the underlying financial situation of the applicant at the time of the first application or of the adoption of the Order of 10 November. In this respect, it is hard to imagine that the financial situation of the applicant changed sufficiently in the short period of two weeks between the date of the Order of 10 November and the date the present application for interim measures was made or even in the period following the first application. The applicant does not even claim that this is the case.

72. In the light of the above considerations, it can be concluded that the two reports cannot be regarded as new facts within the meaning of Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure.

73. It should be observed in addition that, in any event, an examination of the content of the new reports, which it should be recalled discuss the applicant's financial situation at a time pre-dating the Order of 10 November, reveals that the overall evaluation of its financial situation is not substantially different from that painted by the old reports. It cannot thus constitute evidence putting into question the conclusion reached in the Order of 10 November that the applicant had not shown that it would be in a situation which, in the absence of interim measures, could endanger its very existence or irretrievably alter its position in the market (paragraph 73 of the Order of 10 November).

74. As the Commission rightly points out in its observations, the Dunn and Bradstreet report of 26 July 2004 and the new Dunn and Bradstreet report of 2 November 2004 classify the overall financial situation of the applicant in identical terms as being fair' with a financial rating of 2A3. (The old EuroDB report characterised the financial situation of the applicant as good' whereas the new EuroDB report does not contain any such description.) The new Dunn and Bradstreet report of 2 November 2004 adds that the applicant can be characterised as self-financed [to] a satisfactory degree'. Nor does the content of these reports change the conclusion reached in the Order of 10 November that the applicant has a large number of clients and participates in a variety of projects. Despite referring to a smaller client base, the new reports continue to indicate that the applicant has a range of 27 clients (see page 3 of the new Dunn and Bradstreet report) including major clients such as the European Commission, EUROSTAT, OPOCE and Cedefop (see page 2 of the EuroDB report). The applicant itself acknowledges that it continues to participate in major projects for the European Commission. As the Commission points out in its observations, such facts are corroborated by the applicant's own website.

75. Finally, it should also be noted that, in any event, neither the existence nor the content of the new reports is such as to have any bearing on the conclusions reached in the Order of 10 November.

76. The existence of the reports cannot cast doubt on the conclusion reached in the Order of 10 November, that the applicant had failed to prove to the requisite legal standard that the alleged damage would flow from the contested acts, or that any such damage could be regarded as serious and irreparable as defined in the Court's case-law (see, to that effect, in particular, the orders of the President of the Court of First Instance of 20 July 2000 in Case T169/00 R Esedra v Commission [2000] ECR II2951, paragraph 43, and of 27 July 2004 in Case T148/04 R TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission [2004] ECR II-0000, paragraph 41, and the case-law cited). That order was not based primarily on the content of the old reports but, inter alia, first, on the failure of the applicant to show a link between the alleged damage and the acts suspension of whose operation was sought (paragraphs 66 to 70 of the Order of 10 November) and, second, on the failure of the applicant to produce evidence concerning its financial situation from which the President could conclude that its existence would be endangered pending the Court's judgment in the main action (paragraphs 75 to 76) or evidence that the applicant's position in the market would be irretrievably altered (paragraph 81).

77. In the light of the above, it cannot be considered that the present application provides new facts within the meaning of Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure or, in any event, facts which could cast doubt on the conclusions reached in the Order of 10 November.

78. It follows that in the absence of such new facts the present application should be dismissed as inadmissible.

The application for measures of inquiry seeking production of documents by the Commission

Arguments of the parties

79. In the present application, the applicant reiterates its request, made in its observations of 23 September 2004 in the context of the first application, that the President of the Court of First Instance order the Commission to produce the documents at issue, on the ground that they might show that the implementation of Lot ESP 4 and Lot ESP 5 was incorrect and biased in favour of the ESP 4 consortium and that it would therefore be essential for the applicant's rights of defence, would be of assistance to the Court, and would even be decisive for the Court's judgment, to obtain those documents.

80. The Commission contends that the application for measures of inquiry must be dismissed on the ground that the applicant has not shown that there would be any purpose in producing the documents at issue, contrary to the requirements of the case-law of the Court of Justice.

Findings of the President

81. As was already held in the Order of 10 November, the applicant's request for production of the documents at issue can be understood only as an application for measures of inquiry or measures of organisation of procedure.

82. Under the first subparagraph of Article 105(2) of the Rules of Procedure the President of the Court assesses whether a preparatory inquiry should be ordered. Article 65 of the Rules of Procedure specifies that measures of inquiry include inter alia the production of documents. Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure allows the Court to adopt measures of organisation of procedure, including inter alia the production of documents or any papers relating to the case.

83. Since the present application for interim measures must be dismissed for failure to meet the conditions of Article 109 of the Rules of Procedure, the President considers that the documents at issue are of no relevance for the examination of the present application for interim measures, and that the measures sought by the applicant concerning those documents should not therefore be adopted.

Order of the President of the Court of First Instance First InstanceFirst Instance2004. European Dynamics SA v Commission of the European Communities. Public service contracts - Community tender procedure - Interim measures - Application for suspension of operation - Urgency - None. Case T-303/04 R.

1. Applications for interim measures - Suspension of operation of a measure - Conditions for granting - Serious and irreparable damage - Burden of proof - Causal link between the alleged damage and the contested act

(Art. 242 EC)

2. Applications for interim measures - Suspension of operation of a measure - Conditions for granting - Serious and irreparable damage - Financial loss

(Art. 242 EC; Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Art. 104(2))

3. Applications for interim measures - Suspension of operation of a measure - Conditions for granting - Serious and irreparable damage - Non-financial loss

(Art. 242 EC; Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Art. 104(2))

1. The urgency of an application for interim measures must be assessed in relation to the need for an interim order in order to avoid serious and irreparable damage being caused to the party seeking the interim measure. It is for that party to adduce proof that it cannot await the outcome of the main action without suffering such damage. Therefore, if the applicant does not show a link between the alleged damage and the acts suspension of whose operation is sought, the interim measures cannot be regarded as relevant and necessary for avoiding the occurrence of the alleged damage.

2. Pecuniary damage cannot in principle be regarded as irreparable, or even reparable only with difficulty, if it may be the subject of subsequent compensation by means, for example, of an action for compensation under Article 288 EC.

(see para. 72)

3. The decision not to award a public contract does not necessarily have the consequence of causing irreparable harm to the reputation and credibility of the tenderers which are not successful. Taking part in a public tender procedure, by nature highly competitive, necessarily involves risks for all the participants and the elimination of a tenderer under the tender rules is not in itself in any way prejudicial.

of which the applicant is a member following a call for tenders for the provision of informatics services and, second, the Commission's decision of 14 July 2004 (DG DIGIT/R2/CTR/mas D(2004) 811) rejecting the applicant's complaints of 21 June, 1, 5 and 8 July 2004 against the award of the contract to another consortium,

makes the following

Order

On those grounds,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

hereby orders:

1. The application for interim measures is dismissed.

2. Costs are reserved.

Facts of the dispute

1. European Dynamics SA is active in the field of information and communications technology, inter alia for the European institutions.

2. Following call for tenders ADMIN/DI/0005 ESP (External Service Providers') of 16 March 2001, the Commission concluded a number of framework contracts, applying the award system laid down for awards of multiple contracts in Article 1.4 of the General Terms and Conditions for Informatics Contracts published by the Commission on 11 June 1998 (the cascade' system), for the provision of external services relating to information systems. The overall contract was divided into nine lots, among which were Lot 4, for the provision of external services relating to data management applications and information systems (Lot ESP 4'), and Lot 5, for the provision of external services relating to internet and intranet applications (Lot ESP 5').

3. On 16 October 2001 a framework contract under reference DI-02432-00 was concluded with the contractor selected as first in the cascade for Lot ESP 4, a consortium consisting of Trasys SA and Cronos Luxembourg SA, which later became Sword Technologies SA (the ESP 4 consortium').

4. On 5 November 2001 framework contract DI-02432-00 was concluded with the contractor selected as first in the cascade for Lot ESP 5, a consortium consisting of European Dynamics, IRIS SA, Datacep SA, Primesphere SA and Reggiani SpA (the ESP 5 consortium').

5. On 23 November 2001 the Commission published the budgetary ceilings based on the volume estimates announced for Lots ESP 4 and ESP 5, fixed at totals of EUR 42 885 318 and EUR 34 656 804 respectively, for the duration of the contracts, namely until October 2006.

6. Since the actual use of the contracts covered by Lot 4 had proved substantially greater than expected - according to the case-file, by the end of March 2003, which was after less than one third of the maximum total duration of the contract covered by Lot ESP 4, more than three quarters of the credits provided for had already been spent - the Commission decided to raise the budgetary ceiling of Lot ESP 4 and to prepare a fresh call for tenders for services of the same kind as those under Lot ESP 4 for the period ending in October 2006.

7. By decision of 28 April 2003, the Commission raised the budgetary ceiling of Lot ESP 4 by EUR 20 million, and on 10 May 2003 an award notice was published in the Official Journal of the European Union under reference ADMIN/PN/2003/105.

8. On 23 May 2003 the ESP 5 consortium wrote to the director of the Informatics Directorate (now Directorate-General (DG) Informatics) to inform him of its concerns about the increase in the budgetary ceiling for Lot ESP 4, claiming that the Commission should have made more intensive use of Lot ESP 5, use of which was said to have been lower than the initial forecasts.

9. It is apparent from the case-file that the letter of 23 May 2003 was followed by correspondence between the Commission and the ESP 5 consortium, in particular a letter from the Commission of 4 July 2003 explaining the implementation of Lots ESP 4 and ESP 5, meetings between the parties, and a workshop arranged by the Commission on 6 November 2003, at which the ESP 5 consortium was able to explain the potential of the services covered by Lot ESP 5 to the Commission's Directorates-General.

10. On 27 December 2003 the Commission launched a call for tenders under reference ADMIN/DI2/PO/2003/192 ESP-DIMA for the provision of on- and off-site IT services for data/information management systems at the European Commission including development, maintenance and other related activities' (the ESP-DIMA call for tenders').

11. By letter of 19 January 2004, the legal adviser of the ESP 5 consortium called on the Commission to cancel the ESP-DIMA call for tenders, claiming that instead of awarding a new service contract to replace Lot ESP 4 the Commission should use Lot ESP 5.

12. That request was rejected by letter of 30 January 2004, in which DG Informatics stated that the use of Lot ESP 5 instead of Lot ESP 4 or the ESP-DIMA contract was not possible, as Lot ESP 5 on the one hand and Lot ESP 4 and the ESP-DIMA contract on the other had different objects, the former concerning internet and intranet applications and the latter data management applications and information systems.

13. On 20 February 2004 European Dynamics, IRIS, Datacep and Reggiani (in other words the companies forming the ESP 5 consortium minus Primesphere, the ED consortium') submitted a joint tender in response to the ESP-DIMA call for tenders.

14. On 2 June 2004 the Commission awarded the ESP-DIMA contract. The tenderer selected to be first in the cascade was a consortium of Trasys and Sword Technologies with Intrasoft International SA and TXT SpA (in other words the ESP 4 consortium plus two additional partners, the ESP-DIMA consortium'). The ED consortium was selected as second contractor in the cascade, followed by other tenderers in third and fourth places in the cascade.

15. Those results were notified to all the tenderers, including the ED consortium, by letter of 4 June 2004 (the award decision').

16. By fax of 8 June 2004, European Dynamics requested further details of the award decision. The Commission replied by letter of 9 June 2004, giving fuller information on the results of the technical evaluation in respect of each of the relevant criteria.

17. By letter of 21 June 2004, European Dynamics asked DG Informatics to provide a copy of the evaluation report for all the tenders submitted following the ESP-DIMA call for tenders, in particular the sections relating to its consortium and to that of the successful tenderer, and the names of the persons responsible for the evaluation.

18. On 29 June 2004 a meeting took place between European Dynamics and DG Informatics, at which the parties discussed the evaluation of the tenders and the concerns of European Dynamics as to the comparative implementation of Lots ESP 4 and ESP 5. A minute of the meeting was sent to European Dynamics by the Commission on 6 July 2004. Also on that date, the Commission confirmed that no contract had yet been concluded following the award in respect of the ESP-DIMA market.

19. Following that meeting, European Dynamics sent several letters to the Commission, inter alia on 1, 5 and 8 July 2004, in which it contested the lawfulness of the ESP-DIMA call for tenders and the award decision. European Dynamics argued in particular that the ESP-DIMA tender procedure had no raison d'être, since Lot ESP 5 should have been used instead of Lot ESP 4. It said that there was a conflict of interests in the case of one member of the evaluation committee, the marking scale used for the technical evaluation was inadequate, and the successful tender was of lower quality and offered a very limited informatics system. In those letters European Dynamics asked for a copy of the evaluation report and to be told the names of the members of the evaluation committee. It also requested that signature of the contracts be postponed until all the points raised had been satisfactorily resolved.

20. By letter of 14 July 2004 (the letter giving reasons'), the Commission replied to the points raised by European Dynamics in the above letters and refused to send it a copy of the evaluation report, stating that that would involve communicating confidential commercial information on other tenderers. As regards the doubts raised concerning the need to launch the ESP-DIMA call for tenders and the suggestion that Lot ESP 5 should be used for the provision of services covered by Lot ESP 4, the Commission said that DG Informatics had stated in its letter of 30 January 2004, cited above, that as the two lots represented separate and distinctly different markets it was not possible to switch from one to the other simply because one lot had not yet reached its budgetary ceiling. Launching a call for tenders for the lot whose budgetary ceiling could no longer be increased was therefore the only appropriate means, and was in line with Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1, the Financial Regulation').

21. On 15 July 2004 the Commission sent the contracts resulting from the award decision to the four selected consortia at the same time, including the ED consortium as second contractor (framework contract DIGIT-04551-00), stating that the contracts were to be returned signed by 30 July 2004.

22. On 27 July 2004 a meeting took place between the representatives of the ED consortium and those of DG Informatics, at which the latter restated the Commission's position that it would not agree to the suggestion of European Dynamics that it should be allowed to play an active role in monitoring the distribution of projects between Lot ESP 4 and Lot ESP 5.

23. On 28 July 2004 the ED consortium requested the Commission to defer for one month conclusion of the contracts resulting from the ESP-DIMA call for tenders, on the ground that the members of the consortium needed more time to take various administrative steps. The Commission immediately replied that those administrative steps could be taken after signature of the contract and that no postponement was necessary. The ED consortium's contract was returned signed on 30 July 2004. Some missing powers of attorney were sent to the Commission on 4 August 2004.

24. On 4 August 2004 the Commission was therefore in possession of all the originals of the contracts relating to ESP-DIMA signed by all the contractors.

Procedure and forms of order sought by the parties

25. By application registered at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 29 July 2004, the applicant brought an action under the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC seeking, first, annulment of the ESP-DIMA tender procedure, that is, contract notice 2003/S249-221337 ESP-DIMA and the ESP-DIMA call for tenders, and, second, annulment of the Commission's decisions relating to the order in which the tenders were ranked, that is, the award decision and the letter stating reasons.

26. By separate document registered at the Registry of the Court on the same date, the applicant made an application under Article 76a of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance for the Court to adjudicate under an expedited procedure.

27. By separate document registered at the Registry of the Court on the same date, the applicant made the present application for interim measures, seeking suspension of operation of the award decision and the letter giving reasons, so as to prevent the contract being concluded by the ESP-DIMA consortium, until the Court's decision in the main proceedings. The applicant also asks for the Commission to be ordered to pay the costs.

28. On 4 August 2004 a copy of the application for interim measures was served on the Commission in accordance with Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure, and the Commission was given until 19 August 2004 to submit its observations.

29. Since the applicant had made an application for interim measures seeking suspension of operation of the award decision, the contracting authority decided on 4 August 2004 to postpone the signature of the four contracts relating to the ESP-DIMA market.

30. On 12 August 2004 the Commission requested an extension of the period for submitting observations until 26 August 2004. That request was granted by decision of 16 August 2004.

31. On 26 August 2004 the Commission submitted observations on the application for interim measures, in which it contended that the application should be dismissed as inadmissible and, in the alternative, as unfounded.

32. On 31 August 2004 the Registry of the Court transmitted the Commission's observations to the applicant.

33. On 8 September 2004 the applicant requested leave to submit observations on the Commission's observations.

34. By decision of 14 September 2004, the President of the Court granted that request and set a deadline of 24 September 2004 for the submission of the applicant's observations on the Commission's observations.

35. On 23 September 2004 the applicant submitted its observations on the Commission's observations, with a large number of additional documents annexed. In its observations the applicant also asked for the Commission to be ordered to produce a number of documents, namely the requests for quotations and the statistics relating to the implementation of Lot ESP 4 (the documents at issue').

36. On 29 September 2004 the President of the Court set a deadline of 8 October 2004 for the submission by the Commission of observations on the applicant's observations.

37. On 6 October 2004 the Commission requested an extension of the period for submitting observations until 15 October 2004, and that request was granted by decision of the President of the Court of the same date.

38. On 15 October 2004 the Commission submitted observations in reply to the applicant's observations.

39. On 2 November 2004 the applicant sent a letter to the Registry of the Court in which it made a number of additional observations on the Commission's observations of 15 October 2004 and requested the President of the Court to take them into account in his assessment. That letter was notified to the Commission in accordance with Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure.

Law

The application for interim measures

40. Pursuant to Articles 242 EC and 243 EC in conjunction with Article 225(1) EC, the Court of First Instance may, if it considers that circumstances so require, order that application of the contested act be suspended or prescribe any necessary interim measures.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

41. Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure prescribes that applications for interim measures must state the subject-matter of the proceedings, the circumstances giving rise to urgency and the pleas of fact and law establishing a prima facie case for the interim measures applied for. Those conditions are cumulative, so that an application for interim measures must be dismissed if any one of them is absent (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C268/96 P(R) SCK and FNK v Commission [1996] ECR I-4971, paragraph 30). The judge hearing an application for interim measures must also, where appropriate, balance the interests concerned (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C107/99 R Italy v Commission [1999] ECR I401 1, paragraph 59).

42. The measures sought must also be provisional, in that they must not prejudge the points of law or fact at issue or neutralise in advance the effects of the decision subsequently to be given in the main action (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C149/95 P(R) Commission v Atlantic Container Line and Others [1995] ECR I2165, paragraph 22).

43. Moreover, in the context of that overall examination, the judge hearing the application enjoys a broad discretion and is free to determine, having regard to the specific circumstances of the case, the manner and order in which those various conditions are to be examined, there being no rule of Community law imposing a pre-established scheme of analysis within which the need to order interim measures must be assessed (order in Atlantic Container Line , paragraph 23).

44. Having regard to the documents in the case-file, the President considers that he has all the material needed to decide the present application for interim measures, without there being any need first to hear oral argument from the parties.

Arguments of the parties

- Admissibility

45. The applicant submits that it has an interest in bringing proceedings against the acts it seeks to have suspended, and that it made the application in due time, so that its application is admissible.

46. The Commission submits that the application serves no purpose, as the applicant has not sought suspension of the decision to launch the ESP-DIMA tender procedure but suspension of decisions awarding the contract. The interim measures sought cannot therefore have the effect of suspending the ESP-DIMA tender procedure, contrary to what the applicant really seeks to obtain. The Commission adds that the application is inadmissible because the main application is also inadmissible. In its view, the applicant has not shown that it is directly concerned by the contested acts, and in any event it has not demonstrated the existence of a personal interest in bringing proceedings, since the acts concern the ED consortium and not the applicant individually.

- Prima facie case

47. The applicant, referring to its main application, submits that the ESP-DIMA contract should be annulled, on the grounds of erroneous assessment of the facts, breach of essential procedural requirements and an insufficient statement of reasons. It is apparent from the account of the facts in the application that the applicant considers that the launching of the ESP-DIMA call for tenders was unnecessary, since the Commission could have recourse to Lot ESP 5 instead of replacing Lot ESP 4 by the ESP-DIMA contract. The applicant further considers that the award of the ESP-DIMA contract is unlawful because at least one member of the evaluation committee was in a situation of serious conflict of interests, the Commission did not use the same scale for assessing the various tenderers, the successful tender offered only an informatics system of very limited value and restricted scope, and, finally, the Commission did not provide it with a copy of the evaluation report, contrary to the requirements of the Financial Regulation.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

48. The Commission considers that the applicant has not put forward pleas of fact and law making a prima facie case for granting the interim measures, and that it is only incidentally that it mentions the grounds on which the main application is based. It asserts that the allegations are unfounded, as may clearly be seen from the letter giving reasons of 14 July 2004, that they are not substantiated, and that they should not even be examined in the context of the present application for interim measures.

- Urgency

49. The applicant submits that the condition of urgency is satisfied. It states that it cannot wait for the outcome of the procedure in the main action without suffering serious and irreparable harm, consisting in extremely heavy pecuniary damage such that the applicant will no longer be able to survive in the market, the loss of a substantial part of its business leading to the dismissal of half of its staff, and particularly serious damage to its reputation.

50. As regards pecuniary damage, the applicant alleges that the harm would flow from the distorted implementation of Lot ESP 4 instead of Lot ESP 5 and from the continuation of Lot ESP 4 by the ESP-DIMA contract, which has been awarded to another tenderer. The applicant considers that that situation will put an end to implementation of Lot ESP 5, since Lot ESP 4 will be extended by the ESPDIMA contract and it is to be expected that a large number of existing contracts will be extended immediately after signature of contracts relating to the ESP-DIMA market, for several years. Consequently, the decision to award the ESP-DIMA contract to another tenderer and the continuation of the incorrect implementation of that contract in place of Lot ESP 5 will deprive the applicant of the income normally linked to implementation of Lot ESP 5, which constitutes the largest part of its activity.

51. In this respect, the applicant states that it is a company of medium size employing about 200 workers, that it is developing a number of projects, among which those falling within Lot ESP 5 are by far the most substantial, and that Lot ESP 5 covers the major part of its budget and occupies about half of its employees, who were recruited precisely for the requirements of Lot ESP 5. The accompanying infrastructure has also grown, thus constituting a system which altogether owes its existence and its survival to Lot ESP 5 and is designed and put into practice to ensure implementation of a contract in the amount of EUR 35 million. The award of Lot ESP 5 obliges the applicant to maintain expensive infrastructure, assign employees to that project and set up for those employees a continuous training structure necessitated by the technological changes adopted by the Commission at intervals of a few months. The applicant's activities connected with Lot ESP 5 represent the sum of approximately EUR 4 million a year and constitute a substantial part of its entire activities in the field of informatics services. The applicant's income fell from EUR 16 million in 2001 to EUR 14 million in 2002 and EUR 10 million in 2003, and is likely to continue falling during 2004 and 2005 to EUR 5 million, precisely because of the inadequacy of the orders placed within the framework of Lot ESP 5. Many of its employees have already left the company for that reason. With such a loss of employees, the applicant asserts that it will not be possible to regain the lost share of the market.

52. The applicant alleges that the possible non-implementation or reduction of orders of Lot ESP 5 would thus be fatal for it. It says that an entire infrastructure provided specially for implementation of Lot ESP 5 will disappear, with irreparable consequences for the applicant, which will no longer be in a position to survive in the highly competitive market in which it operates.

53. As regards the harm to its reputation, the applicant states that this situation will be liable to damage its relations with other operators in the market and other customers who will interpret the situation as demonstrating its inability to meet the Commission's expectations.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

54. Finally, the applicant considers that the interim measures sought are necessary since, if the acts against which it has brought the present application for interim measures are implemented before being annulled, the Commission will sign the corresponding contracts and thus clear the way for the absorption by the ESP-DIMA contract of a large proportion of the remaining credits. According to the applicant, EUR 120 million will be allocated to the ESP-DIMA contract, which would make it the Commission's largest investment in this field and definitively tie the Commission to the ESP-DIMA consortium.

55. The Commission contends that the damage alleged by the applicant is neither serious nor irreparable within the meaning of the case-law of the Court of First Instance.

56. As regards the alleged pecuniary damage, the Commission begins by stating that the applicant's arguments show that there is no causal link between, on the one hand, the act suspension of whose operation is sought (the award of the ESP-DIMA contract to another tenderer) and, on the other, the loss the applicant is allegedly liable to suffer, namely a reduction in its turnover from the contract relating to Lot ESP 5.

57. In this respect, the Commission submits that the damage allegedly liable to be caused proceeds from the applicant's argument that the Commission should have had recourse more intensively to Lot ESP 5 instead of following the tender procedure for replacing the former Lot ESP 4 contracts by the ESP-DIMA contract. The Commission states that the applicant's approach is in fact based on the - completely incorrect - hypothesis that, if the Commission is unable to sign the contracts resulting from the ESP-DIMA call for tenders, it will have to have recourse to Lot ESP 5 to provide the kind of services previously covered by Lot ESP 4, which will increase the applicant's turnover. According to the Commission, that argument is simply wrong, since the contracting authority will continue in any event to apply the distinction between Lots ESP 4 and ESP 5 which it has applied since the conclusion of those contracts and which derives from the definitions of those contracts in the relevant contract notices.

58. In any event, the Commission also submits that the damage allegedly incurred if the interim measures were not granted would be neither serious nor irreparable. The financial damage is clearly reparable, according to settled case-law, since it could be the subject of subsequent financial compensation. The applicant has not shown that there are exceptional circumstances which would allow that damage to be classified as serious and irreparable. The Commission emphasises in that regard that the applicant confines itself to making general assertions and has not demonstrated either that the market loss in question would endanger its existence or that its position in the market would be irretrievably changed.

59. On the contrary, according to the Commission, it is clear that the applicant can continue to exist until the Court's decision in the main action. The Commission refers in this respect inter alia to two reports, one from EuroDB dated 22 March 2004 and one from Dun & Bradstreet dated 26 July 2004, annexed to the Commission's observations of 15 October 2004, which indicate that the applicant's financial situation is good. In its letter of 2 November 2004, the applicant asserts that those reports are out of date and incorrect.

60. As regards the non-pecuniary damage alleged by the applicant, namely an especially serious impairment of its reputation as a result of the market loss in question, the Commission observes that taking part in a call for tenders obviously carries a risk for tenderers that the contract may not be awarded to them. That situation does not therefore involve any damage to reputation, as the Court has already found in its case-law.

61. Finally, the Commission considers that the fact that the contact may be concluded with the successful tenderer and a large part of the budget allocated to it before the Court gives judgment in the main action is not a factor which shows that the condition of urgency is satisfied, in accordance with settled case-law. In the event of annulment the Commission would be able to restore the applicant's rights.

- Balance of interests

62. Although the applicant has not expressly addressed the balance of interests in its application, the Commission states that the balance tilts in its favour, given that the damage the applicant is liable to suffer if interim measures are not granted does not exceed the damage the Commission and the other tenderers concerned could suffer it they are granted. The other tenderers have a legitimate expectation that the Commission will continue with the awarding of the contacts. The interim measures would prevent those contracts from being concluded, so that the informatics activities of the Commission would be impeded. Moreover, the Commission considers that, since the validity of the tenders expires on 19 November 2004, suspension would put an end to those tenders, so that the measures could not be regarded as provisional. The applicant rejects those last two assertions on the ground that the Commission has other ways of replacing the contracts at issue, in particular by seeking an extension to the validity of the tenders or by using other contracts. In this respect, the Commission considers that such an extension, while possible, is uncertain, and that the other means of obtaining the services in question would be less satisfactory than conclusion of the ESP-DIMA contract.

Findings of the President

- Preliminary remarks

63. It is settled case-law that the conditions laid down in Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure require that the essential elements of fact and law on which an application is founded are set out in a coherent and comprehensible fashion in the application for interim measures itself (orders of the President of the Court in Case T175/03 R Schmitt v EAR [2003] ECRSC IA175 and II883, paragraph 18; Case T236/00 R Stauner and Others v Parliament and Commission [2001] ECR II-15, paragraph 34; and Case T-306/01 R Aden and Others v Council and Commission [2002] ECR II2387, paragraph 52).

64. Even though, as the Commission rightly points out, the application contains few elements to enable the judge hearing the application to examine whether there is a prima facie case for granting the measures sought, the Commission's observations and the second round of observations of the parties have shed light on the subject-matter of the application in such a way as to allow the judge to examine it. The condition relating to urgency should be examined first.

- The condition of urgency

65. It is settled case-law that the urgency of an application for interim measures must be assessed in relation to the need for an interim order in order to avoid serious and irreparable damage being caused to the party seeking the interim measure. It is for that party to adduce proof that it cannot await the outcome of the main action without suffering such damage (see orders of the President of the Court in Case T169/00 R Esedra v Commission [2000] ECR II2951, paragraph 43, and Case T148/04 R TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission [2004] ECR II0000, paragraph 41 and the case-law cited).

66. It must be stated at once that, as the Commission rightly points out, the applicant has not shown a link between the alleged damage and the acts suspension of whose operation is sought.

67. The applicant essentially complains of the way in which the contract relating to Lot ESP 5 was implemented, a lot which in its view was underused in comparison with Lot ESP 4. The applicant contests that allegedly improper implementation and the Commission's decision to start the tender procedure for the ESP-DIMA market for the purpose of renewing Lot ESP 4. However, the applicant has not challenged the Commission for improper implementation of its contract relating to Lot ESP 5, and has not sought suspension of operation of the tender procedure for the ESP-DIMA market. It should be recalled here that the ESP-DIMA call for tenders was published on 27 December 2003 and that the applicant's complaints against the very principle of that call for tenders were rejected by the Commission's letter of 30 January 2004.

68. This approach of the applicant has a direct effect on the value of its arguments relating to the condition of urgency. The applicant alleges only indirectly that serious and irreparable harm would flow from the award of the ESP-DIMA contract to another tenderer or from the very existence of that contract. On the contrary, it clearly states that it considers that the damage would flow from the possible non-execution or decrease of [Lot] ESP 5', which would be fatal' for it. The applicant attempts to show the existence of a causal link between the incorrect implementation of Lot ESP 5 and the award of the ESP-DIMA contract by saying, in its application, that it is more than obvious that the distorted implementation of [Lot] ESP 4 if it is prolonged by ESP-DIMA will mean the end of [Lot] ESP 5', that if the suspension sought is not granted the Commission will sign the relevant contracts opening thus the way for ESP-DIMA', and that as from this moment [Lot] ESP 5 will have no more room for services'.

69. The applicant has not, however, challenged either the defective implementation of Lots ESP 4 and ESP 5 which is essentially the source of its concerns or the foreseeable conditions of implementation of the ESP-DIMA contract. It is therefore clear that the applicant cannot show that the grant of the interim measures would bring about increased recourse to the Lot ESP 5 contracts, given that the Commission has clearly stated that in no circumstance would it use the Lot ESP 5 contracts to obtain services falling within the original Lot ESP 4 field or the ESP-DIMA contract. The applicant has not therefore shown that there is a causal link between, on the one hand, the acts suspension of whose operation is sought (the decision to award the ESP-DIMA contract to another tenderer and the letter giving reasons) and, on the other, the damage it is allegedly liable to suffer, namely a reduction in its turnover from Lot ESP 5. It thus appears that the interim measures sought will have no effect on the implementation of Lot ESP 5.

70. It follows that the interim measures sought are neither relevant nor necessary for avoiding the occurrence of the alleged damage.

71. In any event, even supposing that the alleged damage would flow from the contested acts, it is clear that that damage cannot be regarded as serious and irreparable as defined in the Court's case-law.

72. As regards the pecuniary damage alleged by the applicant, it must be observed that, as the Commission has submitted, it is settled case-law that such damage cannot in principle be regarded as irreparable, or even reparable only with difficulty, if it may be the subject of subsequent compensation (see the order in Esedra , paragraph 44 and the case-law cited). The applicant has not shown or even alleged that it would be unable to obtain such compensation by means of an action for compensation under Article 288 EC (see, to that effect, the order in Esedra , paragraph 47, and the order of the President of the Court in Case T230/97 R Comafrica and Dole Fresh Fruit Europe v Commission [1997] ECR II1589, paragraph 38).

73. In the light of the foregoing, the interim measures sought could be justified in the circumstances of the present case only if it were apparent that in the absence of such measures the applicant would be in a situation which could endanger its very existence or irretrievably alter its position in the market (see, to that effect, the order in Esedra , paragraph 45).

74. The applicant has not, however, adduced proof that in the absence of the interim measures sought it is liable to be placed in such a situation.

75. It is clear in this respect that the applicant has not produced evidence concerning its financial situation from which the President could conclude that its existence would be endangered pending the Court's judgment in the main action.

76. In particular, it must be observed that the applicant's arguments concerning falling income are not supported by evidence and, in any event, that the applicant has not shown that such a fall in income will be such as to endanger its existence before the Court's decision in the main action.

77. It must be considered, on the contrary, that the elements in the case-file indicate that the applicant will continue to pursue sufficient activity to exist until the Court gives judgment in the main action.

78. As the applicant itself emphasises in its application, it regularly takes part successfully in calls for tenders by the Commission, and has developed a number of projects for the European institutions, not only the Commission.

79. That is also confirmed by the reports by EuroDB of 22 March 2004 and Dun & Bradstreet of 26 July 2004, annexed to the Commission's observations of 15 October 2004, which indicate that the applicant has a large number of clients, including European institutions, national public bodies and international companies. Moreover, those reports show that the applicant's financial situation is classified as good', with positive marks for sales, profitability and total assets. With respect to those reports, it must be stated that the applicant's assertion in its letter of 2 November 2004 that those reports are out of date and incorrect is in very general terms, and the applicant has not produced the slightest evidence to demonstrate the truth of that assertion.

80. It should be observed, finally, that the applicant will continue to take part in the ESP 5 consortium, as first contractor for Lot ESP 5, and will also take part in the ED consortium, as second contractor for the ESP-DIMA contract, precisely because it demonstrated to the Commission, in the context of taking part in the ESP-DIMA call for tenders, that it had the financial and technical capacity required for such a project.

81. As to the possibility that in the absence of the interim measures sought the applicant's position in the market would be irretrievably altered, while the applicant alleges in this respect that it will be forced to terminate half its activity and dismiss half its staff and that all the infrastructure intended for the implementation of Lot ESP 5 will have to disappear with fatal' consequences, the applicant has not supported those arguments and, moreover, has not shown or even attempted to show that structural or legal obstacles would prevent it from regaining a substantial proportion of the lost market (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the Court in Case T369/03 R Arizona Chemical and Others v Commission [2004] ECR II0000, paragraph 84). In particular, the applicant has not shown that it would be prevented from winning other contracts, including the contract at issue following a fresh call for tenders, or from taking on employees or recreating a technical infrastructure capable of supporting large projects such as those implemented in the framework of Lot ESP 5, if that proved to be necessary for regaining the lost market shares. In this respect, it should be noted that Lot ESP 5 will continue to exist, and also that the fact that the applicant takes part, and will be able to continue taking part, in other projects for European institutions and other clients ensures that its technical capacity will not disappear.

82. As to the non-pecuniary damage alleged by the applicant, with respect to its argument that the interim measures are urgent because of the irreparable harm which would be caused to its reputation and credibility, it must be observed that the award decision does not have the consequence of causing such damage. According to settled case-law, taking part in a public tender procedure, by nature highly competitive, necessarily involves risks for all the participants and the elimination of a tenderer under the tender rules is not in itself in any way prejudicial (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case 118/83 R CMC v Commission [1983] ECR 2583, paragraph 51, and order in Esedra , paragraph 48).

83. Similarly, the applicant's arguments intended to show that urgency derives from the fact that the contract with the ESP-DIMA consortium will be concluded and the budget corresponding to the ESP-DIMA contract fixed, before delivery of the decision putting an end to the main action, at an amount liable to tie the Commission permanently to that consortium cannot be accepted. Such a situation does not constitute a circumstance establishing urgency, since if the Court were to consider the main action well founded, the Commission would have to take the measures necessary to ensure appropriate protection of the applicant's interests. In that event, the institution would be able, without encountering great difficulties, to organise a new call for tenders in which the applicant could take part. Such a measure might be combined with the payment of compensation. The applicant has not referred to any circumstance which could prevent its interests from being safeguarded in such a way (see, to that effect, the order in Esedra , paragraph 51, and the order of the President of the Court in Case T108/94 R Candiotte v Council [1994] ECR II249, paragraph 27).

84. In those circumstances, it must be concluded that the evidence adduced by the applicant has not established to the requisite legal standard that it would suffer serious and irreparable damage if the interim measures sought were not granted.

85. It follows that the applicant has not succeeded in proving that the condition of urgency is satisfied. Consequently, the application for interim measures must be dismissed, without it being necessary to rule on its admissibility or examine whether the other conditions for the grant of interim measures are satisfied (order of the President of the Court in Joined Cases T38/99 R to T42/99 R, T45/99 R and T48/99 R Sociedade Agrícola dos Arinhos and Others v Commission [1999] ECR II2567, paragraph 48).

The application for measures of inquiry seeking production of documents by the Commission

Arguments of the parties

86. In its observations of 23 September 2004, the applicant requests the President of the Court to order the Commission to produce the documents at issue, on the ground that they might show that the implementation of Lot ESP 4 was incorrect and that it would therefore be of assistance to the Court, and even decisive for the Court's judgment, to obtain them.

87. The Commission contends that the application for measures of inquiry must be dismissed on the ground that the applicant has not shown that there would be any purpose in producing the documents at issue, contrary to the requirements of the case-law of the Court of Justice. The Commission further states that those documents contain confidential information and cannot be disclosed, as production of them would run counter to the protection of the tenderers' legitimate business interests.

Findings of the President

88. The applicant's request for production of the documents at issue can be understood only as an application for measures of inquiry or measures of organisation of procedure.

89. It must be recalled that under the first subparagraph of Article 105(2) of the Rules of Procedure the President of the Court assesses whether a preparatory inquiry should be ordered. Article 65 of the Rules of Procedure specifies that measures of inquiry include inter alia the production of documents. Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure allows the Court to adopt measures of organisation of procedure, including inter alia the production of documents or any papers relating to the case.

90. Since the application for interim measures must be dismissed for want of urgency, without there being any need to examine whether the other conditions for granting interim measures are satisfied, in particular the condition relating to a prima facie case, the President considers that the documents at issue are of no relevance for the examination of the present application for interim measures, and that the measures sought by the applicant concerning those documents should not therefore be adopted.

ORDER OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

of 10 November 2004

in Case T-303/04 R, European Dynamics SA v Commission of the European Communities

(Public service contracts - Community tender procedure - Interim measures - Application for suspension of operation - Urgency -- None)

(Language of the case: English)

In Case T-303/04 R, European Dynamics SA, established in Athens (Greece), represented by S. Pappas, lawyer, against Commission of the European Communities (Agents: L. Parpala and E. Manhaeve, and J. Stuyck, lawyer, with an address for service in Luxembourg) – application for suspension of operation of, first, the Commission's decision of 4 June 2004 (DIGIT/R2/CTR/mas D(2004) 324) to rank only in second place the offer submitted by the consortium of which the applicant is a member following a call for tenders for the provision of informatics services and, second, the Commission's decision of 14 July 2004 (DG DIGIT/R2/CTR/mas D(2004) 811) rejecting the applicant's complaints of 21 June, 1, 5 and 8 July 2004 against the award of the contract to another consortium – the President of the Court of First Instance has made an order on 10 November 2004, the operative part of which is as follows:

The application for interim measures is dismissed.

Costs are reserved.

Action brought on 29 July 2004 by European Dynamics SA against the Commission of the European Communities

(Case T-303/04)

Language of the case: English

An action against the Commission of the European Communities was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 29 July 2004 by European Dynamics SA, Athens, Greece, represented by Mr S. Pappas, lawyer.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

- annul the Commission's Contract Notice 2003/S249-221337 ESP-DIMA;

- annul the Commission's call for tenderers PO/2003/192 (ESP-DIMA);

- annul the Commission's Decision of 4 June 2004 ranking the offer of European Dynamic's consortium only second after the first successful tenderer;

- annul the Commission's Decision of 14 July 2004 rejecting the applicant's appeals against the award of the tender;

- order the Commission to pay European Dynamic's legal and other fees and expenses incurred in connexion with this application.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant is part of a consortium that was the successful tenderer as service provider for ESP Lot 5, web applications. ESP Lot 4, Data/Information management applications, was awarded to another consortium.

According to the applicant, the tender contested in the present application, ESP-DIMA, was based on the wrong assumption that the provision of services for data and information management constitutes a new market and that the use of ESP Lot 4 had exceeded all expectations. The applicant submits that the Commission has wrongly allocated work to ESP Lot 4 that, according to the applicant, actually fell within ESP Lot 5. The applicant states that, as a result, the Commission had to increase the budget forecast for ESP Lot 4 and issue a new tender ESP-DIMA while the budget used for ESP Lot 5 remained behind the provisions.

The applicant furthermore submits that the Commission infringed an essential procedural requirement in that at least one member of the evaluation committee of the contested tender had a conflict of interest with the applicant.

Finally, the applicant claims that its ranking as second successful tenderer for ESP-DIMA is not sufficiently justified. The applicant also submits that the Commission refused to disclose information regarding the evaluation report.

Judgment of the Court of First Instance (Second Chamber)
First Instance (Second Chamber)First Instance (Second Chamber)2005. TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium SA v Commission of the European Communities. Public service contracts - Community tendering procedure - Provision of travel agency services for travel undertaken by officials and other staff of the institutions. Case T-148/04.

1. European Communities' public procurement - Conclusion of a contract following a call for tenders - Discretion of the institutions - Judicial review - Limits

2. European Communities' public procurement - Conclusion of a contract following a call for tenders - Abnormally low offer - Obligation of the contracting authority to hear from the tenderer

(Commission Regulation No 2342/2002, Art. 139)

3. European Communities' public procurement - Conclusion of a contract following a call for tenders - Award of contracts - Award criteria - Choice of the contracting authorities - Limit - Use of criteria enabling identification of the economically most advantageous offer - Admissibility of criteria not purely economic in nature

4. European Communities' public procurement - Conclusion of a contract following a call for tenders - Award of contracts - Evaluation of the offers on the basis of the offers themselves

1. The Commission enjoys a broad margin of assessment with regard to the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender, and review by the Court is limited to checking compliance with the procedural rules and the duty to give reasons, the correctness of the facts found and that there is no manifest error of assessment or misuse of powers.

(see para. 47)

2. Regarding European Communities' procurement contracts, Article 139 of Regulation No 2342/2002 laying down detailed rules on the implementation of the Financial Regulation, provides that the contracting authority is obliged to allow the tenderer to clarify, or even explain, the characteristics of its tender before rejecting it, if it considers that a tender is abnormally low. This should be interpreted in the sense that the obligation to check the seriousness of a tender arises where there are doubts beforehand as to its reliability. Thus, the main purpose of this article is to enable a tenderer not to be excluded from the procedure without having had an opportunity to explain the terms of its tender which appear abnormally low.

(see para. 49)

3. For the purposes of identifying the economically most advantageous tender, in the context of the procedure for awarding a contract following an invitation to tender, each of the award criteria used by the contracting authority does not necessarily have to be of a purely economic nature, since it cannot be excluded that factors which are not purely economic may influence the value of a tender from the point of view of the contracting authority.

(see para. 51)

4. In the context of the procedure for awarding a contract following an invitation to tender, the quality of tenders must be evaluated on the basis of the tenders themselves and not on that of the experience acquired by the tenderers with the contracting authority in connection with previous contracts or on the basis of the selection criteria (such as the technical standing of candidates) which were checked at the stage of selecting applications and which cannot be taken into account again for the purpose of comparing the tenders.

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (Second Chamber), composed of J. Pirrung, President, N.J. Forwood and S. Papasavvas, Judges, Registrar: J. Palacio Gonzalez, Principal Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 8 March 2005,

gives the following

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Second Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the application;

2. Orders the applicant to pay the costs of the Commission and of the intervener, including those incurred in the proceedings for interim relief.

Law

1. The award of service contracts by the Commission is subject to the provisions of Title V of Part One of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1; the Financial Regulation') and to the provisions of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1; the detailed implementing rules'). Those provisions are based on the relevant Community directives and, in particular, as regards service contracts, on Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by Directive 97/52/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1).

2. Article 100(1) of the Financial Regulation provides that [t]he authorising officer shall decide to whom the contract is to be awarded, in compliance with the selection and award criteria laid down in advance in the documents relating to the call for tenders and the procurement rules'. Article 97(2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 138(1)(b) and (2) of the detailed implementing rules state that a contract may be awarded to the tender offering the best value for money, that is, the one with the best pricequality ratio.

3. Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation states:

The contracting authority shall notify all candidates or tenderers whose applications or tenders are rejected of the grounds on which the decision was taken... However, certain details need not be disclosed where disclosure would hinder application of the law, would be contrary to the public interest or would harm the legitimate business interests of public or private undertakings or could distort fair competition between those undertakings.'

4. Article 139(1) of the detailed implementing rules provides that, [i]f, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low, the contracting authority shall, before rejecting such tenders on that ground alone, request in writing details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements, after due hearing of the parties, taking account of the explanations received'.

5. Article 146(4) of the detailed implementing rules provides that, [i]n the case of abnormally low tenders as referred to in Article 139 of this regulation, the evaluation committee shall request any relevant information concerning the composition of the tender'.

Facts

6. By framework contract 98/16/IX.D.1/1 dated 13 January 1999, the company Belgium International Travel was entrusted by the Commission with the management of the travel agency services for its Brussels staff. That contract was concluded for an initial two-year period, with the possibility of renewal for three oneyear periods, that is, for the period from 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2004. By addendum dated 27 February 2001, that contract was transferred to the applicant.

7. By a contract notice of 30 May 2003, published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2003 S 103), the Commission issued an invitation to tender, in accordance with the restricted procedure, under the reference ADMIN/D1/PR/2003/051, for the provision of travel agency services for travel undertaken by officials and other staff carrying out missions and by any other persons travelling on behalf of or at the request of the Community institutions, agencies and bodies.

8. The file shows that that invitation to tender was cancelled by the Commission following the withdrawal of certain Community institutions.

9. On 29 July 2003, acting pursuant to the Financial Regulation and the detailed implementing rules, the Commission published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2003 S 143), under the reference 2003/S 143-129409, a new invitation to tender, in accordance with the restricted procedure, for the provision of travel agency services for travel undertaken by officials and other staff carrying out missions and by any other persons travelling on behalf of or at the request of certain Community institutions, agencies and bodies (section II.1.6 of the contract notice). The contract consisted of a number of lots, each corresponding to a site where the services were to be provided, including Brussels (lot 1), Luxembourg (lot 2), Grange (lot 3), Ispra (lot 4), Geel (lot 5), Petten (lot 6) and Seville (lot 7).

10. By registered letter of 28 November 2003, the applicant submitted to the Commission a tender for lots 1, 2, 3, 5, 6 and 7 of that contract.

11. By letter of 24 February 2004, the Commission informed the applicant that its tender for lot 1 of the contract (lot 1' or the contract at issue') had not been accepted, since the price-quality ratio of its tender was lower than that of the selected tender. That letter of 24 February 2004 states:

After examining the tenders received in response to our invitation to tender, we regret to inform you that your tender could not be accepted in respect of lots 1, 2, 3 and 7 of the above contract. The grounds justifying the rejection of your tender are the following:

Lot 1 (Brussels)

It was established that the pricequality ratio of your tender (51.55) is lower than that of the firm proposed as the successful tenderer (87.62)...'

12. By letter of 8 March 2004, the applicant sought from the Commission disclosure of more detailed information regarding the choice of the tender selected for the contract at issue. The applicant also requested that the Commission suspend the procedure for the award of that contract and refrain from concluding a contract with the undertaking selected for that contract.

13. By letter of 16 March 2004, the Commission provided the applicant with information on the grounds of its decision of 24 February 2004 not to award it the contract at issue and of its decision to award it to another undertaking (the refusal decision' and the award decision' respectively). The Commission pointed out inter alia that the applicant's tender had obtained 51.55 points, whereas the selected tender, from the company WagonLits Travel (WT' or the intervener'), had received 87.62 points after a qualitative and financial analysis, and that, as a consequence, WT's tender offered the best value for money and justified the award of the contract at issue to that undertaking. The Commission also stated that WT's tender, although appreciably lower in terms of price than the applicant's (index 100 for WT and index 165.56 for the applicant), did not appear abnormally low and it was therefore unnecessary to apply the provisions of Article 139 [of the detailed implementing rules]'.

14. By fax of 17 March 2004, the Commission proposed to the applicant that framework contract 98/16/IX.D.1/1 on travel agency services, which was due to expire on 31 March 2004, be extended until 27 June 2004.

15. By letter of 19 March 2004, the Commission justified its request for an extension of the abovementioned framework contract, stating that the communication of instructions to the new contractor, namely WT, and the entry into force of the new contract could not take place by the expiry date provided for in that framework contract. That letter specified that, owing to time-limits which cannot be shortened and which are beyond the control of the Commission and the other contracting party, the passing of instructions to the new contractor and the entry into force of the new contract cannot take place by the natural expiry date [of the applicant's] contract'.

16. By fax of 22 March 2004, the applicant informed the Commission that it did not wish to extend the framework contract and that, consequently, that contract would expire on 1 April 2004.

17. By letters of 23 and 26 March 2004, the Commission asked the applicant to intermediate by forwarding to WT the files of traveller profiles' which it had drawn up, so as to ensure the continuity of the missions sector service'. By letters of 25 and 31 March 2004, the applicant informed the Commission that it refused to forward those profiles to WT.

18. On 31 March 2004, the Commission concluded a contract with WT for the provision of travel agency services in Brussels. That contract entered into force on 1 April 2004 with an addendum allowing the new contractor to perform the service explant' (in its own offices) for a transitional period from 1 April to 19 May 2004.

Procedure and forms of order sought by the parties

19. By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 26 April 2004, the applicant brought the present action seeking, firstly, annulment of the refusal decision and the award decision and, secondly, compensation for the loss suffered by it as a result of both those decisions.

20. On 26 April 2004, the applicant lodged an application for the case to be decided under an expedited procedure in accordance with Article 76a of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance. That application was dismissed by decision of the Court of First Instance of 10 June 2004.

21. By separate document lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 26 April 2004, the applicant made an application for interim relief, seeking, firstly, suspension of operation of the refusal decision and the award decision and, secondly, an order that the Commission take the measures necessary to suspend the effects of the award decision or of the contract concluded following that decision. That application was dismissed by order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 27 July 2004, the costs relating to those proceedings having been reserved.

22. By document lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 9 June 2004, WT sought leave to intervene in the present proceedings in support of the forms of order sought by the Commission. By order of 14 July 2004, the President of the Second Chamber of the Court of First Instance granted that leave to intervene. WT lodged its statement in intervention and the other parties lodged their observations on that statement within the prescribed periods.

23. Upon hearing the report of the JudgeRapporteur, the Court of First Instance decided to open the oral procedure and, by way of the measures of organisation of procedure provided for in Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure, asked the Commission to reply to a number of questions and WT, firstly, to reply to a question and, secondly, to produce a nonconfidential copy of the financial and technical tender submitted in connection with the tendering procedure in question. By letter of 9 February 2005, the Commission submitted its replies to the Court's questions and, by letter of 14 February 2005, WT produced the requested document and submitted its reply to the Court's question.

24. The applicant claims that the Court of First Instance should:

- annul the refusal decision;

- annul the award decision;

- declare that the unlawful act committed by the Commission constitutes a fault capable of rendering it liable;

- order, pursuant to Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure, the production by the Commission of all the documents in its possession relating to the award of lot 1;

- refer the applicant back to the Commission for the loss suffered to be assessed;

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

25. The Commission contends that the Court should:

- dismiss the application in its entirety;

- order the applicant to pay the costs.

26. The intervener contends that the Court should:

- dismiss the application;

- order the applicant to pay the costs.

The claims for annulment

27. In support of its claims for annulment, the applicant puts forward, in essence, two pleas. The first alleges infringement of Article 146 of the detailed implementing rules and a manifest error of assessment of the financial tenders. The second alleges a manifest error of assessment of the quality of the tenders.

1. The first plea, alleging infringement of Article 146 of the detailed implementing rules and a manifest error of assessment of the financial tenders

Arguments of the parties

28. The applicant submits that, by considering that WT's tender was not abnormally low and, therefore, by failing to comply with its obligation to request from WT any relevant information concerning the composition of the tender, the Commission infringed Article 146 of the detailed implementing rules since, in the applicant's view, Article 139 of the detailed implementing rules is not applicable to the present case.

29. According to the applicant, the price of WT's tender was 42% lower than the mean value between the tender submitted by the applicant and the tender of a third bidder which had submitted a tender which was even higher in price, the applicant's tender being assigned an index for its price of 165.56 and the most expensive tender an index of 181.13. That major difference should have prompted the Commission to consider WT's tender abnormally low, particularly since, by letter of 8 March 2004, the applicant had informed the Commission of its doubts as to the reliability of the terms of WT's tender.

30. The applicant points out that, even though the Commission enjoys a broad margin of assessment with regard to the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender, the Community judicature nevertheless checks compliance with the applicable procedural rules and the duty to state reasons, the correctness of the facts found and that there is no manifest error of assessment or misuse of powers (Case T-211/02 Tideland Signal v Commission [2002] ECR II-3781, paragraph 33).

31. In that regard, the applicant recalls that the Court held in Case T4/01 Renco v Council [2003] ECR II171, paragraph 76, that the Council ... must examine the reliability and seriousness of the tenders which it considers to be generally suspect, which necessarily means that it must ask, if appropriate, for details of the individual prices which seem suspect to it, a fortiori when there are many of them' and that, in addition, the fact that the applicant's tender was considered to conform to the contract documents did not relieve the Council of its obligation, under the same article, to check the prices of a tender if doubts arose as to their reliability during the examination of the tenders and after the initial assessment of their conformity'.

32. In this case, the applicant points out that, for each of the lots, the price of the travel agency services is made up, on the one hand, of the management fee', which is the charge payable to the travel agency to cover the management costs relating to travel undertaken by staff of the Community institutions and agencies, and, on the other, the transaction fee', which is the charge payable to the travel agency to cover the administrative costs relating to travel undertaken by persons other than the staff of Community institutions and agencies but travelling at the request of Community institutions and agencies.

33. The applicant notes that the management fee' is made up of wage costs, operating expenses and general expenses. According to the applicant, wage costs make up the bulk of the management fee' and, therefore, of the price of the travel agency services relating to lot 1. The applicant thus estimated in its financial tender that wage costs represented 79.5% of the management fee'. Since the price of travel agency services consists mainly of wage costs, the Commission should, in its view, have considered the price tendered by WT to be abnormally low.

34. In those circumstances, the applicant submits that the only possible way to reduce wage costs and therefore the price tendered, would have been to reduce significantly the number of persons assigned to the performance of the contract or the amount of their pay compared with that proposed by the applicant. Such reductions would then have been bound to have an effect on the quality of the services provided.

35. First, as regards pay, the applicant points out that the contract document provided that the travel agency services were to be provided on the premises of the Community institutions and agencies. The employment contracts of the employees are therefore subject to Belgian law, which imposes a minimum level of remuneration for employment contracts.

36. Second, as regards the number of employees, the applicant submits that the employment of 39 persons is necessary in order to ensure the quality of the services provided. Since the staff costs are irreducible, the substantial difference in price between the tender submitted by WT and those of two other tenderers suggests an abnormally low tender. It points out that, although it is possible to submit a more competitive tender than its own, a difference of 42% is, on any view, difficult to justify.

37. The applicant further submits that the Commission was wrong to pay attention to the ratio between the volume of transactions and the management fee', since that criterion is not included in the contract document. In that regard, the applicant points out that no proportionality can exist between the volumes of transactions for lots 1 and 2 and the budgets estimated for those lots. The budget estimated for lot 2 represents only 12.58% of the budget estimated for lot 1. In addition, the volume estimated for lot 2 represents only 22.8% of that expected for lot 1.

38. Finally, the applicant notes that the Commission used criteria other than those set out in the contract document, firstly, in regard to the management fee' and, secondly, by taking into account both the profitsharing scheme proposed by WT and its technical and logistical resources.

39. In the Commission's view, the tender submitted by WT was not abnormally low and the application of Article 139 of the detailed implementing rules was therefore not necessary. The use of the verb appear' in Article 139(1) of the detailed implementing rules makes clear the intention of the Community legislature to confer on the contracting authority a wide discretion during tendering procedures. The Commission further points out that it is clear from the same article that an abnormally low tender is not unlawful per se, since explanations for the abnormally low tender in question may be taken into account.

40. The Commission points out that there was no significant difference between the average cost of the transaction fees' tendered by the applicant and that of the transaction fees' tendered by WT, whereas there was a significant variation between the levels of the management fees' quoted by the two tenderers.

41. With regard to wage costs, WT properly estimated the number of persons necessary, basing its estimate inter alia on an annual average volume of transactions per manager' ratio. The Commission further points out that another tender also proposed a lower number of advisers than that proposed by the applicant. In terms of the cost per person, the Commission points out that WT quoted the second lowest price, the applicant for its part having submitted the highest price.

42. As regards general expenses, those quoted in WT's tender were far lower than those of the applicant.

43. The evaluation committee also took into account various parameters in evaluating the consistency of the tenders in respect of the management fee'. Firstly, it analysed the average cost of a missions' transaction paid for by the management fee' as compared with the average cost of an other travel' transaction paid for by the transaction fee'. That average cost was EUR 32.94 as against EUR 14.37 in the case of the applicant, and EUR 16 as against EUR 15.66 in the case of WT. Secondly, it compared the cost of the management fee' relating to lot 1 (Brussels) with that relating to lot 2 (Luxembourg) on the basis of the proportional volume of each lot. It was apparent from that analysis that WT's management fee' for lot 1 was 3.64 times higher than that quoted for lot 2, for a volume of missions 3.56 times higher. As for the applicant's management fee', it appeared to be higher for lot 1, since it was 7.89 times higher than that quoted for lot 2, likewise for a volume 3.56 higher.

44. In the light of that analysis, the Commission considered that WT's tender was realistic, balanced and proportional. It points out that it based its view on parameters which were objective and comparable as between the tenders, thus making it possible to assess the consistency between the technical content and the price level of the tender.

45. The Commission also draws attention to the fact that it took into account WT's profitsharing scheme (sharing between the agency and the Commission of any discounts negotiated by the agency on the purchase price of tickets as compared with International Air Transport Association (IATA') prices). It submits that the profitsharing scheme is a relevant factor, firstly, for the purpose of assessing the potential income that a tenderer can expect in addition to payment for the service and, secondly, for the purpose of assessing the economic balance of a tender as regards the management fee'.

46. WT, for its part, submits that the Commission has demonstrated that it carried out a detailed and precise comparative examination, and that its tender cannot, therefore, appear abnormally low.

Findings of the Court

47. As a preliminary point, it should be recalled that the Commission enjoys a broad margin of assessment with regard to the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender, and that review by the Court is limited to checking compliance with the procedural rules and the duty to give reasons, the correctness of the facts found and that there is no manifest error of assessment or misuse of powers (Case T-145/98 ADT Projekt v Commission [2000] ECR II-387, paragraph 147, and Case T169/00 Esedra v Commission [2002] ECR II609, paragraph 95).

48. It should also be noted that, under Article 97 of the Financial Regulation, [c]ontracts may be awarded by the automatic award procedure or by the best-value-for-money procedure'. In addition, under Article 138 of the detailed implementing rules, [t]he tender offering the best value for money shall be the one with the best price-quality ratio, taking into account criteria justified by the subject of the contract'.

49. Moreover, under Article 139 of the detailed implementing rules, the contracting authority is obliged to allow the tenderer to clarify, or even explain, the characteristics of its tender before rejecting it, if it considers that a tender is abnormally low. The obligation to check the seriousness of a tender also arises where there are doubts beforehand as to its reliability, also bearing in mind that the main purpose of that article is to enable a tenderer not to be excluded from the procedure without having had an opportunity to explain the terms of its tender which appears abnormally low.

50. The application of Article 146 of the detailed implementing rules is therefore inherently connected with that of Article 139 of those rules, since only when a tender is considered abnormally low, within the meaning of the latter article, is the evaluation committee required to request details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant before, where appropriate, rejecting it. Moreover, contrary to what the applicant claims, where a tender does not appear to be abnormally low for the purposes of Article 139 of the detailed implementing rules, Article 146 of those rules is not relevant. Consequently, given that the evaluation committee had no intention, in this case, of rejecting WT's tender, since that tender did not appear to it to be abnormally low, Article 139 of the detailed implementing rules proves to be irrelevant.

51. So far as the award of the contract at issue is concerned, under Article 6 of the contract document, for each lot, the contract will be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender, taking account of the quality of the services proposed and the prices tendered'. According to settled case-law, for the purpose of identifying the economically most advantageous tender, each of the award criteria used by the contracting authority does not necessarily have to be of a purely economic nature, since it cannot be excluded that factors which are not purely economic may influence the value of a tender from the point of view of the contracting authority (Case C513/99 Concordia Bus Finland [2002] ECR I7213, paragraph 55, and Renco v Council , paragraph 67).

52. In this case, the price of the travel agency services is made up of two main elements: (I) the management fee', which represents the total monthly amount covering wage costs, operating expenses and general expenses and (II) the transaction fee', which represents the charge payable to the travel agency for administrative expenses relating to travel undertaken by persons travelling at the request of the Community institutions and agencies.

53. The Court notes that the applicant does not call in question the transaction fee' proposed by WT, but challenges only the amount of the management fee' tendered by the latter. Consequently, it must be determined whether the Commission made a manifest error of assessment in regard to the financial terms of the management fee' taken in its various elements, since the management fee' tendered by WT was the least expensive, that of the applicant the most expensive and two other tenders were between the two.

Wage costs

54. It must be observed that the wage costs are established on the basis, first, of the number of persons employed and, secondly, of the cost generated by each employee.

55. As regards, firstly, the number of employees, this may be a useful indicator from the point of view of a possible underestimate of the requirements essential for a satisfactory performance of the services covered by the invitation to tender. However, such statistical data cannot be considered a decisive guide, since the efficiency of a tenderer's structural organisation may justify a smaller number of employees.

56. In this case, the Court notes that, in estimating the number of employees necessary, WT took as its basis the annual average volume of transactions per manager', that calculation being based on an objective and realistic criterion. WT stated, in reply to a written question from the Court, that the number of employees which it considered necessary for lot 1 was 29, even though it knew that another tender was proposing a still lower number.

57. The applicant's estimate, according to which 39 persons are needed to perform the services, is not relevant, since the possibility remains that other tenderers may tender a lower number of employees by virtue, inter alia, of a more efficient modus operandi and greater technical competitiveness.

58. Consequently, the Court takes the view that the applicant has not proved to the requisite legal standard that WT's estimate, having regard to the number of employees, was inappropriate or that WT underestimated that number.

59. As regards, secondly, the cost per person, it is to be observed that WT proposed the second lowest price per employee, the applicant, for its part, having proposed the highest price.

60. In the light of that fact, it is apparent that WT was not the only economic operator to estimate the requirements for lot 1 at a cost below that estimated by the applicant. Moreover, the fact that another tenderer proposed a cost per person which was lower than that proposed by the selected tenderer may have confirmed the contracting authority's assessment that the prices proposed by WT were not abnormally low.

61. The Court notes that the applicant merely relies on the fact that WT proposed either an insufficient number of employees or an abnormally low level of pay allocated to them. However, the applicant has not adduced any evidence that the Commission made a manifest error of assessment. Consequently, the contracting authority was able to show that the number of employees proposed by WT was consistent and that the selected tender was not abnormally low.

Operating expenses

62. So far as the operating expenses are concerned, it is apparent from Annex 2 to the contract document that those expenses are made up, firstly, of the expenses relating to the allocation by the agency of the period between the date of payment by the agency of its suppliers' invoices and the date of payment by the Commission of the agency's invoices and, secondly, of the other all management expenses and changes relating to capital goods, consumable goods, maintenance and operation of the computer and communication equipment used for the purposes of performing the contract.

63. In that regard, the applicant has adduced no proof that the operating expenses estimated by WT were abnormally low, but merely, in its pleadings, defined the components of those expenses without clarifying in what respect WT's estimate of them was abnormally low.

General expenses

64. So far as general expenses are concerned, it must be observed that the Commission found that WT's tender showed a far lower proportion of general expenses than the applicant's tender. With regard to this item, it must be pointed out that tenderers make estimates on the basis of their practice and experience. The applicant's estimates cannot therefore be regarded as a standard, since the specific organisational structure of each tenderer may be a reason for lower expenses.

65. Furthermore, in the Commission's submission, WT was concerned to minimise costs whilst ensuring a high level of quality through reliance on highly efficient infrastructures and technologies, thanks to advanced productivity techniques'. It is apparent from a written reply to a question put by the Court that the Commission took into account inter alia the fact that WT was able to propose not only solutions deemed optimal for the provision of the services from the point of view of reducing costs, but also innovative information technology solutions. In addition, the exhaustive description of the technical and logistic resources in WT's tender enabled the Commission to satisfy itself that the infrastructures used and tools developed were geared to productivity and cost reduction whilst ensuring the effectiveness of the services. The technical tender also placed to the fore a concern to provide the best possible service at the lowest possible cost.

66. Consequently, in the light of that information, the Court considers that the Commission took pains to satisfy itself that the general expenses ensured correct performance of the expected services and that the selected tender was reliable and serious.

67. It should also be noted that the evaluation committee checked the consistency of the management fee' by comparing, in the first pla ce, the average cost of a missions' transaction paid for by the management fee' with the average cost of an other travel' transaction paid for by the transaction fee'. That analysis showed that, in the case of the applicant's tender, that cost was nearly twice as high as the average cost of a transaction paid for by the transaction fee' (EUR 32.94 as compared with EUR 14.37), unlike WT's tender, which proposed very slightly differing costs (EUR 16 as compared with EUR 15.66).

68. In the second place, the evaluation committee compared the cost of the management fee' for lots 1 (Brussels) and 2 (Luxembourg) on the basis of the proportional volume of each lot. The tender submitted by WT appeared reliable to the contracting authority since the management fee' for lot 1 was 3.64 times higher than that tendered for lot 2, for a volume of missions 3.56 times higher, that is, a justified proportion which did not reveal any inconsistency in the prices tendered. Conversely, the applicant's management fee' appeared much higher for lot 1 since it was 7.89 times higher than that tendered for lot 2, likewise for a volume 3.56 times higher.

69. The Court notes that the applicant disputes the foregoing comparison based on ratios, but does not prove that it is incorrect, bearing in mind, moreover, contrary to what the applicant claims, that the Commission used that comparative method only in order to satisfy itself as to the consistency of the selected tender and not in any way for the purpose of allocating lot 1. Consequently, the Commission was reasonably entitled to consider that the management fee' in WT's tender was serious and reliable.

The profitsharing scheme

70. It must be held that, as is maintained by the Commission, the profitsharing scheme was taken into account in the qualitative assessment of the tender, in order to show that the Commission was fully entitled to consider that the tender was not abnormally low. That element was used in order to check the reliability and seriousness of the financial tender as a whole, and not as an award criterion. Since any discount received by the service provider gives rise to a proportional payment to the Commission and since, in this case, WT's tender envisaged a substantial proportion of additional income in the profitsharing part, the Commission was able to satisfy itself that the management fee' was economically in balance.

71. In the light of the foregoing, it does not appear that the Commission made a manifest error of assessment in considering that WT's financial tender offered best value for money, yet without being abnormally low. Accordingly, the first plea must be rejected.

2. The second plea, alleging manifest error in the assessment of the quality of the technical tenders

Arguments of the parties

72. The applicant submits that the Commission made a manifest error of assessment by awarding WT's tender the highest mark (87.62 out of 100) for the quality of the proposed services. In its view, in order to explain the award of a higher mark, WT's tender was required to include not only substantial guarantees of quality with regard to the travel agency services, but also guarantees of quality superior to those offered by the applicant. In its view, WT's tender could provide no assurance whatsoever of a sufficient level of quality for those services.

73. The applicant submits that WT, by recruiting 14 of its 35 former employees, did not have the necessary staff to guarantee good quality of service provision.

74. The applicant raises the point that it was not accused, in the course of providing the services during the performance of the framework contract, that is, in the period from 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2004, of any breach of its obligations. In that regard, it recalls that, in an internal note of 6 December 2001, the head of unit in charge of missions at the Commission acknowledged the good performance of the travel agency services provided by it, emphasising the generally positive' character of those services. Consequently, the applicant submits that its tender fully satisfied the requirements laid down by the contract document.

75. The applicant points out that the Commission knew, even before the start of performance of the contract, that WT would be unable to guarantee a correct performance of the services for a threemonth period, that is, a period corresponding to one eighth of the initial term of the contract. However, the applicant points out that Annex 1 to the contract document makes provision of the travel agency services at the premises of the institutions a mandatory condition of performance of the service, bearing in mind also that the contract may be terminated if performance of the contract has not actually started within three months following the date laid down for that purpose'. The applicant also expresses surprise that WT, even though it was expected, at the time of the evaluation of tenders, not to be able to perform the contract for three months, was awarded the highest qualitative mark.

76. The applicant submits that the award of lot 1 to WT was made in disregard of the requirements of the contract document, which lays down, in Annex 1, as a condition of the admissibility of tenders, that tenderers must lodge proof that they have the necessary authorisations to issue tickets and states that an IATA licence number will be required before the start of performance of the contract. However, performance of the contract concluded with WT on 31 March 2004 began as from 1 April 2004, even though WT was unable to produce the abovementioned licence number. Consequently, the applicant submits that it was the only tenderer in a position to comply with the contract document so far as obtaining the IATA licence was concerned.

77. The Commission, on the other hand, submits that it evaluated the quality of the technical tenders in accordance with the contract document and with the evaluation methodology established prior to the opening of the tenders, and that it did so without making any manifest errors of assessment.

78. With regard to the inability to perform the contract between 1 April and 27 June 2004, the Commission notes that none of the contracting parties, apart from the applicant, would have been in a position to comply with the administrative and technical formalities necessary for performance of the services at the Commission's offices within six weeks following the award decision and less than one month from the first appropriate date for signing the contract. That is why the Commission asked the applicant to continue providing that service, although in the end the applicant refused to respond favourably to that request.

79. The Commission therefore points out that, faced with a situation of extreme urgency brought about by unforeseeable events not attributable to the contracting authority and likely to jeopardise the Community's interests, it had to resort to Article 126(1)(c) of the detailed implementing rules. Accordingly, it signed the contract in question with an addendum allowing the new contractor to perform the service ex-plant', that is to say, on its own premises, for a transitional period from 1 April to 19 May 2004 and not for a threemonth period as the applicant claims.

80. In that regard, the Commission reiterates that it was faced with the unforeseen withdrawal of several institutions, including the European Parliament and the Court of Justice. In this case, the contract document did not lay down a precise date for the commencement of performance of the services, except that the contract had to be signed before 30 June 2004 and that tenders were valid for nine months from 2 December 2003. Moreover, WT would still have been in a position to perform the contract at issue, which was not due to start until 1 July 2004 at the latest.

81. In addition, it disputes the allegation that it was aware, at the time of the inter-institutional invitation to tender, of the exact nature of the difficulties which would arise as a result of the withdrawals of the institutions. It was only on 8 March 2004, at the meeting with WT, that the technical and administrative problems, which precluded performance of the contract inplant' from 1 April 2004, manifested themselves. The Commission therefore submits that the problems were known about only after the closure of the invitation to tender, obliging the Commission to find an appropriate solution.

82. The Commission points out that, according to the contract document, the IATA licence is required only before commencement of the services, that is, after the tendering procedure is closed. Moreover, that licence is not a qualitative evaluation criterion.

83. WT, on the other hand, disputes the fact that an existing contractor should automatically be awarded the highest mark.

84. Regarding IATA licences, WT points out that it did have a general licence covering its operations in Belgium and IATA licences for each of its agencies. WT submits that none of the tenderers except the applicant could be in possession of a licence covering premises located inside the Commission. WT also points out that it is clear from Annex 1 to the contract document (clause 2.2) that holding an IATA licence number specific to the performance of the contract did not in any way constitute a condition of admissibility of tenders.

85. Finally, so far as the number of employees is concerned, WT reiterates that it satisfied the condition set out in the contract notice. It had at least 70 employees in Belgium and submits that, for the most part, its employees held the professional qualifications referred to in Article 5.2 of Annex 1 to the contract document.

Findings of the Court

86. It must be recalled, as a preliminary point, that it is settled caselaw that the quality of tenders must be evaluated on the basis of the tenders themselves and not on that of the experience acquired by the tenderers with the contracting authority in connection with previous contracts or on the basis of the selection criteria (such as the technical standing of candidates) which were checked at the stage of selecting applications and which cannot be taken into account again for the purpose of comparing the tenders (Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, paragraph 15, and Esedra v Commission , paragraph 158).

87. In this case, under Article 6 of the contract document, the criteria for awarding the contract are two in number, namely, the quality of the services proposed and the prices tendered. As regards the quality of the tender, this must be evaluated on the basis of four criteria: (i) staff, (ii) technical and logistical resources, (iii) management and communication of information and (iv) capacity to negotiate the lowest possible fares.

88. Consequently, the applicant's past experience cannot preclude the existence of a tender from another tenderer capable of offering a higher quality of services than its own and complying appropriately with the four criteria establishing the expected quality.

89. Regarding the number of employees, WT proposed 29 employees for lot 1, whereas the applicant tendered 39. WT's estimate was found reliable by the Commission since WT's productivity and efficiency, as explained by it in one of its written replies to the Court mentioned in paragraph 65 above, may justify a smaller number of employees than that used by the applicant, without impairing the expected quality of the services.

90. Moreover, neither the Financial Regulation nor the detailed implementing rules requires a tenderer actually to have available to it, at the time it submits its tender, the staff to perform a future contract which might be awarded to it. Any selected tenderer must be able to start providing the services on the date set by the contract resulting from the tendering procedure, and not before the contract is finally awarded to it. To require the tenderer to have the requisite number of employees at the time it lodges its tender would be tantamount to favouring the tenderer holding the existing contract and thus nullify the very essence of the call for tenders. In this case, the contract document required only that the tenderer, at the time of lodging its tender, have at least 70 employees in Belgium, a condition met by WT.

91. It should be noted that the performance difficulties encountered by WT, which was unable to obtain the required IATA licence and therefore to provide the services in-house from 1 April 2004, were connected with the withdrawal of certain institutions, which necessitated the issue of a second invitation to tender, and emerged only after the contract had been awarded. It was not until 8 March 2004, at the meeting between the Commission and WT, that those difficulties emerged. Consequently, the applicant's argument, that WT's performance difficulties during the first three months of the contract could not justify the award of a high mark and should have prompted the Commission to terminate the contract eventually signed with WT, is irrelevant.

92. According to the draft contract annexed to the contract document, the possibility of termination is only an option available to the institution, contrary to what the applicant claims. However, in this case, the Commission considered that the services in question had not been provided excessively late, and that their performance had not given rise to an unacceptable delay, given also that WT started to provide its services as from 1 April 2004, and did so under the conditions laid down and adapted by the addendum.

93. Moreover, according to the contract document, the capacity to perform the services immediately did not constitute a qualitative evaluation criterion, since the contract document provided only for a deadline for the commencement of performance of the services, in this case 1 July 2004. Consequently, the fact that WT was unable to provide its services inhouse from 1 April 2004 cannot constitute an infringement of the contract document, since the latter mentioned only a time-limit for the start of the services. WT actually provided the services inplant' from 24 May 2004 onwards, that is, more than a month before the deadline set by the contract document.

94. So far as the licence specific to the performance of the contract is concerned, the contract document states that an IATA licence number specific to the performance of the contract and an attestation from the local authorities administering the travel agency sector ... will be required before the start of operations...' (Annex 1 to the contract document (Clause 2.2)). WT stated at the hearing that it had received, on 10 May 2004, licence A', which is required in order to be able to obtain an IATA licence subsequently. In this case, WT obtained that IATA licence on 18 May 2004. Accordingly, WT complied with the requirements of the contract document, since it was in possession of that licence before 1 July 2004.

95. With regard to use of the negotiated procedure, Article 126(1)(c) of the detailed implementing rules states that [c]ontracting authorities may use the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice... in so far as is strictly necessary where, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by unforeseeable events not attributable to the contracting authorities and likely to jeopardise the Communities' interests, it is impossible to comply with the time-limits set for the other procedures'.

96. As regards the unforeseeable nature of the event and whether or not it was attributable to the contracting authority, it should be noted that it was following the withdrawal of other institutions that the Commission published the contract again on 29 July 2003, resulting in the timetable being put back. The Commission explained, in its reply to a written question put by the Court, that, after giving its agreement to the publication of the contract notice, the Parliament expressed reluctance, at a meeting held on 3 June 2003, to participate in the invitation to tender. It had reservations inter alia about awarding the contract on the basis of one lot per city. By note of

11 June 2003, the Parliament's DirectorGeneral of Personnel stated that it would be impossible for the Parliament to finalise the contract document before 30 October 2003. Compliance with the timelimit proposed by the Parliament would have jeopardised the progress of the invitation to tender in relation to the maximum duration of the current contract, namely, expiring on 31 March 2004. On 8 July 2003, the Parliament announced its withdrawal, also resulting in that of other institutions. The Commission also explained that it had been unable to specify a date of commencement of the services in the invitation to tender, but merely a deadline, since each lot had specific characteristics of its own, inter alia different expiry dates, which made it impossible to set a single start date for provision of the services for all the lots. Furthermore, it was only at the meeting on 8 March 2004 that the Commission became aware of the fact that the procedure for obtaining the IATA licence, which was required in order to provide the services in-plant', was timeconsuming and could thus result in some delay in the performance of the services.

97. Consequently, in order to overcome that difficulty resulting from the original withdrawal of the institutions, the Commission asked the applicant to provide the service for a transitional period of six to eight weeks, which it refused to do.

98. The Court therefore takes the view that the timetable, disrupted by the unforeseeable withdrawal of certain institutions and the applicant's refusal to provide the services for a transitional period, did not enable the Commission to maintain the continuity of the travel agency services without resorting to the signing of an addendum allowing WT to provide the services ex-plant' from 1 April to 19 May 2004, in order to cope with the situation of extreme urgency with which it was faced.

99. Moreover, it is apparent that the Commission had no part in the withdrawals in question, given that they were not attributable to it and were unforeseeable, since the Parliament's reservations emerged only after the initial publication of the contract notice.

100. With regard to jeopardising the Community's interests, it must be held that the importance of the continuity of the services at issue in this case, involving nearly 57 000 missions per year, is such that the Commission was obliged to ensure their continuity, and to do so by using the negotiated procedure.

101. The Court notes that the negotiated procedure was not used at all in the invitation to tender. It was used only in order to sign an addendum to the main contract, which arises from the tendering procedure and was signed on 31 March 2004. Consequently, the sole purpose of that addendum was to allow the provision ex-plant' of the services in question during the period from 1 April to 19 May 2004, in the light of the applicant's refusal to provide the services for a transitional period.

102. The Court also considers, on the basis of the contract document, that the tenderer was required to be in a position to provide the services inhouse not on the date of submission of the tender, but on 1 July 2004. Because of the applicant's refusal to extend the contract beyond the expiry of the framework contract on 31 March 2004, the Commission was forced to come to a contractual arrangement with WT in order to ensure the continuity of the services. It seems legitimate that early performance of the services on 1 April 2004 should require a contractual adjustment, allowing inter alia temporary provision of the services explant'. In that regard, it must also be pointed out that WT was in a position to meet the requirements laid down by the contract document, since it was able to provide the services in-house from 24 May 2004, that is, more than a month before the deadline set by that document.

103. Accordingly, it must be held that the conditions set out in Article 126(1)(c) of the detailed implementing rules were met and use of the negotiated procedure was justified.

104. Finally, as regards the applicant's plea, put forward in its reply, alleging infringement of the principles of equal treatment and nondiscrimination given effect by Article 89(1) of the Financial Regulation, it must be pointed out that, under Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure, no new plea in law may be introduced in the course of proceedings unless it is based on matters of law or of fact which come to light in the course of the procedure. Since that plea was not mentioned in the application and is not a matter which has come to light in the course of the procedure, it must be declared inadmissible.

105. In the light of the foregoing, the Commission does not appear to have made a manifest error in the qualitative assessment of the selected tender. Accordingly, the second plea must be rejected.

3. The request for production of documents relating to the award of lot 1

106. In the context of the measures of organisation of procedure, the Court inter alia asked the intervener to produce data relating to its tender. The Court therefore considers that it has obtained sufficient information from the documents in the file to dispose of the case without ordering the Commission to produce all the documents relating to the award of lot 1, as requested by the applicant under Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure.

The claims for compensation

107. It follows from the foregoing that the Commission did not make a manifest error of assessment in the choice of the selected tenderer and did not in any way infringe the Financial Regulation. Moreover, the applicant alleges no other matter, apart from its two pleas, which could constitute an unlawful act capable of rendering the Community liable. Consequently, the claim for compensation must be held to be unfounded without there being any need for the Court to rule on its admissibility.

108. Accordingly, in the light of the foregoing, the application must be dismissed in its entirety.

Costs

109. Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the applicant has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs of the Commission and of the intervener, including those incurred in the proceedings for interim relief.

Order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 27 July 2004

TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium SA v Commission of the European Communities. Public service contracts - Community tendering procedure - Interim proceedings - Application for suspension of operation and interim measures - Urgency - None. Case T-148/04 R.

1. Applications for interim measures - Suspension of operation of a measure - Interim measures - Conditions for granting - Serious and irreparable damage - Financial loss - Situation capable of jeopardising the existence of the applicant company or of irremediably altering its market position

(Arts 242 EC and 243 EC; Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Art. 104(2))

2. Applications for interim measures - Suspension of operation of a measure - Interim measures - Conditions for granting - Serious and irreparable damage - Non-financial damage - Damage to the reputation of an undertaking caused by the non-award of a public contract - Not included

(Arts 242 EC and 243 EC; Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Art. 104(2))

1. In the context of interim proceedings, financial loss cannot in principle be regarded as irreparable, or even as being hard to repair, where it can be the subject of future financial compensation and thus consitutes a loss which is economically capable of being compensated for through the means of redress laid down under the Treaty, in particular Article 288 EC. It would be otherwise if, were the interim measures sought not granted, the applicant would find itself in a situation which could jeopardise its very existence or irremediably alter its position in the market.

2. A decision not to award a public contract does not necessarily result in irreparable damage to the reputation and credibility of unsuccessful tenderers. Participation in a public tender procedure, by nature highly competitive, necessarily involves risks for all the participants, and the elimination of a tenderer under the rules on tenders is not, in itself, in any way damaging. Similarly, the fact that an undertaking is unsuccessful in renewing a contract for a set period in a new tender procedure arises from the periodic nature of invitations to tender in the public procurement sector and does not harm its credibility and reputation.

to the applicant Lot No 1 of the contract which was the subject of notice No 2003/S 143-129409 for the provision of travel agency services and to award that lot to another undertaking and, secondly, for an order directing the Commission to take the measures necessary to suspend the effects of the decision to award that contract and of the contract entered into pursuant to that decision,

makes the following

Order

On those grounds,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

hereby orders:

1. The application for interim measures is dismissed.

2. Costs are reserved.

Luxembourg, 27 July 2004.

Facts and procedure

1. By framework contract No 98/16/IX.D.1/1 of 13 January 1999, the Commission entrusted the management of the travel agency services for its staff in Brussels to Belgium International Travel. That contract was entered into for an initial period of two years, with the possibility of extension for three further periods of one year, that is to say for the period from 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2004. By supplementary agreement of 27 February 2001, the contract was assigned to TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium (the applicant').

2. By contract notice published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2003 S 103), the Commission called for tenders under the restricted procedure for the provision of travel agency services for travel undertaken by officials and other staff carrying out missions and by any other persons travelling on behalf of or at the request of the Community institutions, agencies and bodies. The reference number was ADMIN/D1/PR/2003/051.

3. The documents in the case show that that tendering procedure was annulled by the Commission following the withdrawal of certain Community institutions.

4. On 29 July 2003, acting under Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1), the Commission published a new call for tenders under the restricted procedure for the provision of travel agency services for travel undertaken by officials and other staff carrying out missions and by any other persons travelling on behalf of or at the request of the Community institutions, agencies and bodies (section II.1.6 of the tender notice) in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2003 S143) under reference number 2003/S 143-129409. The contract was divided into a number of lots, each corresponding to the place where the services were to be performed, including Brussels (Lot No 1), Luxembourg (Lot No 2), Grange (Lot No 3), Geel (Lot No 5), Petten (Lot No 6) and Seville (Lot No 7).

5. By registered letter of 28 November 2003, the applicant submitted to the Commission a tender for Lots Nos 1, 2, 3, 5, 6 and 7.

6. By letter of 24 February 2004, the Commission informed the applicant that its tender for Lot

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

No 1 had not been accepted, since the price-quality ratio of its tender was lower than that of the selected tender.

7. By letter of 8 March 2004, the applicant requested more detailed information regarding the selection of the tender accepted for Lot No 1. It also requested the Commission to suspend the award procedure for that contract and not to enter into a contract with the undertaking selected under the tendering procedure.

8. By letter of 16 March 2004, the Commission provided information to the applicant as to the reasons for its decision of 24 February 2004 not to award Lot No 1 to it (the refusal decision') and to award the lot to another undertaking (the award decision'). In particular, the Commission noted that the applicant's tender had obtained 51.55 points, while the tender selected, which had been submitted by Wagon-Lits Travel (WT'), had obtained 87.62 points following a qualitative and financial analysis, and that WT's tender therefore offered the best value for money. The award of the contract for Lot No 1 to that undertaking was accordingly justified. The Commission also stated that, although the prices incorporated in WT's tender had been significantly lower than those in the applicant's tender (index 100 for WT and 165.56 for the applicant), the former tender did not appear abnormally low and it was therefore unnecessary to apply the provisions of Article 139 of Regulation... No 2342/2002'.

9. By fax of 17 March 2004, the Commission proposed to the applicant that framework contract No 98/16/IX.D.1/1 relating to travel agency services, which was due to expire on 31 March 2004, be extended until 27 June 2004.

10. By letter of 19 March 2004, the Commission explained that it had requested that the framework contract be extended because the issuing of instructions to the new contractor, namely WT, and the entry into force of the new contract could not take place by the date of expiry provided for under the framework contract.

11. By fax of 22 March 2004, the applicant informed the Commission that it did not wish to extend the framework contract and that that contract would accordingly expire on 1 April 2004.

12. On 31 March 2004, the Commission entered into a contract with WT for the provision of travel agency services in Brussels.

13. By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 26 April 2004, the applicant brought proceedings seeking, first, the annulment of the refusal decision and of the award decision and, secondly, compensation for the damage allegedly suffered by it by reason of those decisions.

14. By separate document lodged at the Court Registry on the same date, the applicant brought the present application for interim measures seeking:

- first, suspension of the operation of the refusal decision and the award decision;

- secondly, an order requiring the Commission to take the measures necessary to suspend the effects of the award decision or the contract entered into following that decision.

15. On 4 May 2004, the Commission submitted its observations on that application, in which it stated that none of the conditions applicable to an order for interim measures was satisfied and that the application should accordingly be dismissed.

16. On 5 May 2004, the Court Registry forwarded the Commission's observations to the applicant and, on 10 May 2004, it invited the applicant to submit its observations on them.

17. On 12 May 2004, the applicant lodged an application for measures of inquiry pursuant to Article 105(2) and Article 65(b) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance together with Articles 24 and 26 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, requesting that the Commission be ordered to produce certain documents, namely the contract entered into between the Commission and WT on 31 March 2004, the tender submitted by WT in response to the invitation to tender and the report of the Tender Appraisal Committee (the documents at issue'), which the applicant claimed formed the basis of the Commission's contention in points 46 to 49 of its observations that no prima facie case existed. The applicant also requested that the President of the Court allow the parties to be heard in relation to those documents.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

18. On 17 May 2004, the applicant submitted its observations on the Commission's observations of 4 May 2004. The applicant repeated its application for interim measures and also requested that the President of the Court exclude from consideration the Commission's arguments set out in points 46 to 49 of its observations of 4 May 2004.

19. On 18 May 2004, the Commission submitted its observations on the application for measures of inquiry, in which it stated that the application should be rejected.

20. On 24 May 2004, the Commission lodged its observations in reply to the applicant's observations of 17 May 2004. The Commission repeated its request that the President of the Court dismiss the application for interim measures and requested that the application to have points 46 to 49 of its observations of 4 May 2004 excluded from consideration be rejected as being manifestly inadmissible.

21. By document lodged at the Court Registry on 9 June 2004, WT applied for leave to intervene in these proceedings in support of the form of order sought by the Commission. That application for leave was served on the parties in accordance with Article 116(1) of the Rules of Procedure. The parties raised no objections to that application.

22. By order of the President of the Court of 28 June 2004, WT was granted leave to intervene in these proceedings in support of the form of order sought by the Commission. A copy of all procedural documents was served on WT.

23. On 5 July 2004, WT submitted its observations on the application for interim measures. The intervener concurred with the observations of the Commission. It asked the President of the Court to reject the application for interim measures and to reject the application for measures of inquiry as being manifestly inadmissible.

24. On 16 July 2004, the applicant submitted its observations on the observations of WT. It repeated its application for interim measures and, contesting WT's arguments regarding the production of the documents in question, also repeated its application for a declaration that the Commission be ordered to produce the abovementioned documents, and that the President of the Court allow the parties to be heard in relation to those documents, failing which, that it exclude points 46 to 49 of the observations of 4 May 2004 from consideration. For its part, the Commission stated that it had no observations to make on the statement in intervention.

Law

The application for interim measures

25. Under Article 242 EC in conjunction with, first, Article 243 EC and, secondly, Article 225(1) EC, the Court may, if it considers that circumstances so require, order that the operation of the contested measure be suspended or prescribe any necessary interim measures.

26. Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure provides that applications for interim measures are to state the subject-matter of the proceedings, the circumstances giving rise to urgency and the pleas of fact and law establishing a prima facie case for the interim measures applied for. Those conditions are cumulative, so that an application for interim measures must be rejected if any one of them is absent (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C268/96 P(R) SCK and FNK v Commission [1996] ECR I-4971, paragraph 30).

27. The measures applied for must also be provisional inasmuch as they must not prejudge the points of law or fact in issue or neutralise in advance the effects of the decision subsequently to be given in the main proceedings (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-149/95 P(R) Commission v Atlantic Container Line and Others [1995] ECR I-2165, paragraph 22).

28. Furthermore, the judge hearing the application enjoys, in the context of that overall examination, a broad discretion and is free to determine, having regard to the specific circumstances of the case, the manner and order in which those various conditions are to be examined, there being no rule of Community law imposing a pre-established scheme of analysis within which the need to order interim measures must be analysed and assessed (order in Commission v Atlantic Container Lines and Others , paragraph 23).

29. Having regard to the documents before the Court, the Court considers that it is in possession of all information necessary to give a ruling on the application for interim measures before it, and that it is not necessary to hear oral argument from the parties before doing so.

30. It is appropriate in this case to consider the condition relating to urgency first of all.

Arguments of the parties

31. The applicant argues that the condition relating to urgency is satisfied. It states that it could not await the outcome of the main proceedings without suffering serious and irreparable damage involving the loss of a substantial market share, extremely significant pecuniary damage and particularly serious harm to its reputation.

32. The applicant claims that the decision to award the disputed contract to another tenderer deprives it of substantial income and market share. The annual turnover for the disputed contract amounts to EUR 44 900 000, which represents approximately 20 per cent of the applicant's annual turnover in Belgium. Depending on the method of calculation used, the disputed contract represents between 16.83 and 23.85 per cent of its annual turnover.

33. The loss of that market share and of an essential reference related to the supply and management of travel agency services within the Commission in Brussels' will have an irremediable effect on its position on the market, particularly in the light of the difficult economic circumstances prevailing. The market share in question is of considerable significance in the travel agency sector, which has been faced with a particularly difficult economic situation for a number of years. That situation will deteriorate further after 1 January 2005, when commissions previously paid by airlines will be terminated in Belgium. The result will be a substantial reduction in income for travel agencies.

34. Lastly, the applicant considers that the interim measures applied for are necessary, since the annulment of the disputed decisions by the Court in the main proceedings would not be sufficient to eliminate the damage suffered by the Community legal order and by the applicant, as the contract between the Commission and WT will have been fully performed, or substantially performed, by that time.

35. The Commission considers that the damage which the applicant alleges is neither serious nor irreparable within the meaning of the case-law of the Court of First Instance.

36. As regards the alleged pecuniary damage, the Commission argues that, as the applicant is in a position to quantify its direct loss, that loss is reparable by an award of damages.

37. The Commission adds that the applicant has failed to establish exceptional circumstances which would allow the pecuniary damage to be classified as serious and irreparable. It points out in that regard that the applicant has failed to show either that the loss of market share at issue jeopardises its existence or that its position on the market has been irremediably altered. The applicant is not prevented from recovering the lost market share and its activities elsewhere than on that market are quite adequate to ensure that its existence itself is not jeopardised.

38. As regards the non-pecuniary damage alleged by the applicant, namely the loss of an essential reference and particularly serious harm to its reputation, the Commission states that the loss of an essential reference has no role to play at the contract award stage and that the loss of a reference contract implies no harm to reputation, as the Court has already held in its case-law.

39. Lastly, the Commission argues that the fact that the contract entered into by it with WT may be fully performed by the time the Court gives judgment in the main proceedings does not go to show that the condition as to urgency is satisfied. Were there to be an annulment, the Commission would be in a position to restore the applicant's rights by issuing a new invitation to tender and making payment of compensation.

40. WT supports the Commission's arguments and states that the applicant has failed to establish the serious and irreparable nature of the alleged damage. The applicant has not shown in what way a reduction in its turnover of approximately 20 per cent could affect its survival. WT notes that the applicant is a member of an international group, the TUI Group, which is one of the leading European groups in the travel sector, with a turnover for 2003 of approximately EUR 19 215 million and net profits for the same year of EUR 315 million. As regards the loss of market share, it observes that the applicant could easily recover it if, on the expiry of the current contract or, as the case may be, on its annulment, the applicant were to be awarded the contract following a new tender procedure organised by the Commission. As regards harm to its reputation, WT supports the Commission's arguments and adds that the loss of a contract following a tender procedure is not, in practice, harmful.

Findings of the Court

41. It is settled case-law that the urgency of an application for interim measures must be assessed in relation to the need for an interim order in order to avoid serious and irreparable damage being caused to the party who requests the interim measure. It is for that party to demonstrate that it cannot await the outcome of the main proceedings without suffering such damage (see order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-169/00 R Esedra v Commission [2000] ECR II2951, paragraph 43, and the case-law cited there).

42. In the present case, the applicant argues that the serious and irreparable nature of the alleged damage arises from the fact that, in losing the disputed contract not only has it suffered damage consisting in loss of income and significant market share (pecuniary damage), but it has also lost an essential reference and suffered particularly serious harm to its reputation (nonpecuniary damage).

43. As regards the pecuniary damage relied on by the applicant, it should be pointed out that, as the Commission has stated, settled case-law provides that such damage cannot in principle be regarded as irreparable, or even reparable with difficulty, where it can be the subject of future pecuniary compensation (see order in Esedra v Commission , paragraph 44, and the case-law cited there).

44. In the present case, as the Commission rightly points out, the applicant appears to be able to quantify the pecuniary loss complained of, as it has not only brought proceedings on the basis of Articles 230 EC and 288 EC before the Court of First Instance, but also assessed its loss at the sum of EUR 44 900 000.

45. It follows that the pecuniary damage invoked by the applicant cannot be considered to be irreparable. Such damage represents a loss which is economically capable of being compensated for through the means of redress laid down under the Treaty, in particular Article 288 EC (order in Esedra v Commission , paragraph 47, and order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T230/97 R Comafrica and Dole Fresh Fruit Europe v Commission [1997] ECR II1589, paragraph 38).

46. In the light of the above, the interim measures applied for would be justified in this case only if it appeared that, if the order were not granted, the applicant would find itself in a situation which could jeopardise its very existence or irremediably alter its position in the market (see, to that effect, order in Esedra v Commission , paragraph 45).

47. The applicant has not shown that if the interim measures applied for are not granted it is at risk of being placed in a situation which could jeopardise its very existence or irremediably alter its share of the market.

48. It must be held in that regard that the applicant has produced no evidence regarding its financial position which would allow the Court to conclude that its existence will be jeopardised. On the contrary, it must be held that the fact that the disputed contract accounts for only 15 to 25 per cent of the applicant's annual turnover in Belgium demonstrates the applicant's ability to remain in business until the Court delivers its judgment in the main proceedings. That conclusion is supported by the fact that the applicant also carries on business outside Belgium, that it was in fact successful in bidding for other lots in the tendering procedure at issue and that it is a member of a large and profitable international group. The applicant's arguments regarding the difficulties faced by travel agencies do not alter that conclusion in any way. Even if it is accepted that travel agencies are in a difficult economic situation and that that situation will continue, the applicant does not explain how the loss of the disputed contract jeopardises its existence. In any event, the damage alleged is not the result of the refusal decision but arises from factors unconnected with it.

49. With respect to the possibility that if the interim measures applied for were not to be granted the applicant's position on the market would be irremediably altered, it is clear that the applicant has produced no evidence to show that its position will be altered in that way.

50. The applicant has failed to show that obstacles of a structural or legal nature would prevent it from regaining a significant proportion of the market share lost (see, to that effect, order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T369/03 R Arizona Chemical and Others v Commission [2004] ECR II0000, paragraph 84).

51. In particular, the applicant has not demonstrated that it will be prevented from being successful in other tendering procedures, including one having as its subjectmatter the disputed contract on the occasion of a new invitation to tender. The applicant's arguments based on the general economic situation faced by travel agencies do not show that its position on the market in question will be irremediably altered. The purported economic situation has the same consequences for all operators in the travel agency sector. There is nothing to prevent the applicant from recovering the lost market share, as it is fully open to it to recover that market share following a new invitation to tender. The fact that the applicant has lost an essential reference' does not preclude it from participating and being successful in new tendering procedures. Those references represent only one of many criteria taken into account in the qualitative selection of service providers (see Article 137 of Regulation No 2432/2002; see also, to that effect, order in Esedra v Commission , paragraph 49).

52. It follows that the applicant has failed to provide sufficient evidence to allow the Court to reach the view that the pecuniary damage alleged is serious and irreparable.

53. As regards the non-pecuniary damage alleged by the applicant and its argument that interim measures are urgent because of the irreparable damage caused to its reputation and credibility,

it must be pointed out that the refusal decision would not necessarily cause such damage. According to settled case-law, participation in a public tender procedure, by nature highly competitive, necessarily involves risks for all the participants, and the elimination of a tenderer under the rules on tenders is not, in itself, prejudicial (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case 118/83 R CMC v Commission [1983] ECR 2583, paragraph 5, and order in Esedra v Commission, paragraph 48).

54. As the Commission and WT rightly point out, the fact that an undertaking is unsuccessful in renewing a contract for a set period in a new tender procedure arises from the periodic nature of invitations to tender in the public procurement sector and does not harm its credibility and reputation.

55. The applicant's arguments seeking to establish urgency by reason of the fact that the contract entered into with WT will have been fully performed, or substantially performed, before the delivery of the judgment in the main proceedings also cannot be accepted. That is not a matter establishing urgency, since, if the Court considered the main proceedings to be well founded, the Commission would have to adopt the measures necessary to ensure appropriate protection of the applicant's interests (see, to that effect, order in Esedra v Commission , paragraph 51, and order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-108/94 R Candiotte v Council [1994] ECR II-249, paragraph 27). As the Commission points out, it would be in a position in such a situation to organise a new tendering procedure in which the applicant would be able to participate without undue difficulty. Such a step could be coupled with payment of compensation. The applicant has not referred to any matter which might prevent its interests from being protected in that way (see, to that effect, order in Esedra v Commission , paragraph 51).

56. In those circumstances, it must be held that the evidence adduced by the applicant does not establish to the requisite legal standard that it will suffer serious and irreparable damage if the interim measures applied for are not granted.

57. The application for interim measures must accordingly be dismissed, and it is not necessary to consider whether the other conditions relating to the grant of such measures are satisfied.

The application for measures of inquiry and the application to have points 46 to 49 of the Commission's observations of 4 May 2004 excluded from consideration

Arguments of the parties

58. The applicant points out in its application of 12 May 2004 and its observations of 17 May and 16 July 2004, that the documents at issue are of decisive importance in the Commission's observations relating to the existence of a prima facie case. The applicant states that it would be difficult for it to provide evidence in support of its application if it were not allowed to have access to all of those documents. The production of the documents at issue is accordingly essential by virtue, in particular, of Article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights, which requires that civil and criminal proceedings be fairly conducted. Alternatively, the applicant seeks an order that points 46 to 49 of the Commission's observations of 4 May 2004 be excluded from consideration.

59. The Commission, supported by WT, argues that the application for measures of inquiry should be rejected, on the grounds that the applicant has not shown that the production of the documents at issue will be worthwhile, that, in the absence of exceptional circumstances, those Commission internal documents cannot be made available and that the production of those documents would undermine the protection of the legitimate commercial interests of tenderers. WT adds that the documents at issue contain confidential commercial information and that their disclosure to a competitor would infringe the competition rules.

Findings of the Court

60. It is clear, first of all, that the applicant's request regarding the production of the documents at issue and its request to have points 46 to 49 of the Commission's observations of 4 May 2004 excluded from consideration do not constitute an application for interim measures relating to the disputed decisions and can be understood only as an application for measures of inquiry or organisation of procedure.

61. It should be noted that under the first subparagraph of Article 105(2) of the Rules of Procedure the President of the Court of First Instance is to decide whether a preparatory inquiry is necessary. Article 65 of the Rules of Procedure provides that measures of inquiry include the production of documents. Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure allows the Court to adopt measures of organisation of procedure, including the production of documents or any papers relating to the case.

62. It should next be noted that the documents at issue, as also points 46 to 49 of the Commission's observations of 4 May 2004, relate solely to the requirement that there be a prima facie case, as the applicant itself notes in its application for interim measures and in its observations of 16 July 2004.

63. As the application for interim measures falls to be dismissed by reason of lack of urgency, without it being necessary to consider whether the other conditions for the grant of such measures are satisfied, in particular the requirement that there be a prima facie case, the Court considers that the documents in question are not relevant to the current application for interim measures and that there is therefore no need to adopt the measures regarding the documents at issue which the applicant has applied for.

Action brought on 26 April 2004 by TQ3 Travel Solutions against the Commission of the European Communities

Language of the case: French

An action against the Commission of the European Communities was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 26 April 2004 by TQ3 Travel Solutions, established in Mechelen (Belgium), represented by Rusen Ergec and Kim Möric, lawyers.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

-- Annul the Commission's decision of 24 February 2004, informing the applicant of the rejection of its tender for Lot 1 (Brussels) of Contract No ADMIN/D1/PR/2003/131;

-- Annul the Commission's decision awarding Lot 1 to Carlson Wagonlit Travel, notified to the applicant by a letter from the Commission of 16 March 2004;

-- Hold that the unlawful action by the Commission constitutes a fault capable of rendering it liable to the appliant;

-- Send the applicant back to the Commission for the loss suffered to be assessed;

-- Order the Commission to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

Following a restricted invitation to tender for "travel agency services" issued on 20 October 2003 and the tendering procedure, the Commission took the decision not to award the contract to the applicant and to award it to Carlson Wagonlit Travel.

The applicant makes two identical pleas in law challenging those decisions, alleging obvious error by the Commission in assessing the tenders.

In its first plea, the applicant claims that the Commission made an obvious error of assessment by holding that the tender of Carlson Wagonlit Travel was not abnormally low; it also claims that the Commission acted unlawfully by failing to comply with the obligation under Article 146(4) of Commission Regulation (EC) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002, requiring it to ask for appropriate clarifications as to the composition of the tender.

The second plea alleges obvious error by the Commission in assessing the quality of the tenders, giving the tender by Carlson Wagonlit Travel the highest mark for the quality of the services offered, whereas that tender was unable to allow sufficient quality for the services concerned to be guaranteed.

Order of the Court of First Instance (Third Chamber)
First Instance (Third Chamber)First Instance (Third Chamber)2005. Adviesbureau Ehcon BV v Commission of the European Communities. Inadmissibility. Case T-140/04.

1. Actions for damages - Limitation period - Starting point - Date to be taken into consideration

(Art. 288, second para., EC; Statute of the Court of Justice, Art. 46)

2. Non-contractual liability - Conditions - Unlawfulness - Damage - Causal link - One of the conditions not present - Dismissal of the action for damages in its entirety

(Art. 288, second para., EC)

3. Non-contractual liability - Damage - Damage for which compensation is available - Costs incurred for the proceedings - Not included

(Art. 288, second para., EC)

4. European ombudsman - Alternative to an action before the Community judicature - Not possible to pursue both remedies in parallel - Whether action before the Ombudsman appropriate is a matter for the citizen to decide

(Art. 195(1) EC; Statute of the European Ombudsman, Art. 2(6) and (7))

1. It is apparent from the second paragraph of Article 288 EC that the existence of Community noncontractual liability and the enforceability of a right to compensation for damage suffered depend on the satisfaction of a number of requirements: the conduct of the institution must be unlawful, there must be actual damage and there must be a causal relationship between the conduct of the institution and the damage alleged. The fiveyear limitation period which applies to proceedings alleging Community liability, provided for by Article 46 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, therefore cannot begin before all the requirements governing the obligation to provide compensation are satisfied and in particular before the damage to be made good has materialised.

Since, in the context of Directive 80/778 relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption, the tenderer was aware of the fundamental reason for the rejection of its tender by the Commission, namely, its lack of experience in the design of water treatment facilities, a reason which it has always disputed, the fact that it could only have known later that the criterion in question was allegedly applied in a discriminatory manner cannot postpone until that date the point from which the limitation period for the action for compensation started to run. The function of the limitation period is to reconcile protection of the rights of the aggrieved person and the principle of legal certainty. The length of the limitation period was thus determined by taking into account, in particular, the time that the party who has allegedly suffered harm needs to gather the appropriate information for the purpose of a possible action and to verify the facts likely to provide the basis of that action. Knowledge of the facts is not one of the conditions which must be met in order for the limitation period to run.

Similarly, the fact that the tenderer allegedly became aware of additional information in support of its action after the rejection by the Commission of its tender, even though it had since the beginning disputed the fundamental reason for that rejection, which also constitutes the event giving rise to the damage, within the meaning of Article 46 of the Statute, cannot place the point from which the limitation period started to run at the date on which the tenderer became aware of that information. This applies a fortiori because, on the day on which that tenderer claims to have received the tender documents of one of the tenderers accepted at the end of the selection stage, and even on the day on which it itself considers that it had enough evidence to bring proceedings for compensation, that is, when the Ombudsman adopted his decision critical of the Commission, the limitation period had not yet expired.

It follows that, unlike the situation in which an applicant is prevented from bringing proceedings within a reasonable time because he became aware of the event giving rise to the damage only belatedly, expiry of the limitation period cannot be fixed at a date later than the normal date of expiry of that period.

In addition, although the time bar applies only to the period preceding by more than five years the date of the act stopping time from running and does not affect rights which arose during subsequent periods, this is only in the exceptional situation in which it is established that the damage in question was repeated on a daily basis after the occurrence of the event which caused it. That is not the position where the loss concerned, if proved, even though its full extent may not have been appreciated until after the rejection of the tenderer's tender for the contract in question, was nevertheless caused instantly by that rejection.

2. In order for the Community to incur non-contractual liability, a number of conditions must be met: the conduct of the Community institutions in question must be unlawful; there must be real and certain damage; and a direct causal link must exist between the conduct of the institution concerned and the alleged damage. If any one of those conditions is not satisfied the application must be dismissed in its entirety without it being necessary to examine the other preconditions for such liability.

The loss of the chance of securing a subsequent contract can be regarded as real and certain damage only if, in the absence of the allegedly improper conduct by the Commission, there would be no doubt that the tenderer would have been awarded the first contract.

(see paras 75, 77)

3. As regards the loss suffered as a result of the costs allegedly incurred in gathering evidence, the costs incurred by the parties for the purpose of the judicial proceedings cannot as such be regarded as constituting damage distinct from the burden of costs. Furthermore, even though, as a rule, substantial legal work is carried out in the course of the proceedings prior to the judicial phase, by proceedings' Article 91 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance refers only to proceedings before the Court of First Instance, to the exclusion of the prior stage. That follows in particular from Article 90 of the Rules of Procedure, which refers to proceedings before the Court of First Instance'. Therefore, to regard such costs as a loss for which compensation may be claimed in an action for damages would be inconsistent with the fact that costs incurred during the phase before the judicial proceedings are not recoverable.

(see para. 79)

4. In the institution of the Ombudsman, the Treaty has given citizens of the Union an alternative remedy to that of an action before the Community judicature in order to protect their interests. That alternative non-judicial remedy meets specific criteria and does not necessarily have the same objective as judicial proceedings. Moreover, as is clear from Article 195(1) EC and Article 2(6) and (7) of Decision 94/262 on the regulations and general conditions governing the performance of the Ombudsman's duties, the two remedies cannot be pursued at the same time. Indeed, although complaints submitted to the Ombudsman do not affect time-limits for bringing actions before the Community judicature, the Ombudsman must none the less cease consideration of a complaint and declare it inadmissible if the citizen simultaneously brings an action before the Community judicature based on the same facts. It is therefore for the citizen to decide which of the two available remedies is likely to serve his interests best.

applicant,

v

Commission of the European Communities, represented by L. Parpala and E. Manhaeve, acting as Agents, with an address for service in Luxembourg, defendant,

APPLICATION for damages for the loss allegedly suffered by the applicant as a result of the rejection of its tender submitted in response to an invitation to tender, published on 10 August 1996 (OJ 1996 C 232, p. 35), for services in relation to Council Directive 80/778/EEC of 15 July 1980 relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption (OJ 1980 L 229, p. 11),

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (Third Chamber), composed of M. Jaeger, President, V. Tiili and O. Czucz, Judges, Registrar: H. Jung,

makes the following

Order

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Third Chamber)

hereby orders:

1. The application is dismissed as in part inadmissible and in part manifestly unfounded.

2. The applicant shall pay the costs.

Luxembourg, 14 September 2005.

Facts

1. On 10 August 1996, the Commission published in the Official Journal of the European Communities (OJ 1996 C 232, p. 35) an invitation to tender for services in relation to Council Directive 80/778/EEC of 15 July 1980 relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption (OJ 1980 L 229, p. 11) (the invitation to tender'). The procedure was to lead to the conclusion of an initial one-year contract with the possibility of an extension for another two years if the service provider gave full satisfaction. The subject of the contract was the supply of technical and scientific support to the Drinking water' team of the Water protection, soil conservation and agriculture' unit of the Directorate-General for the Environment, Nuclear Safety and Civil Protection, in connection with the proposal aimed at the revision of the aforementioned directive.

2. In accordance with the technical annex to the invitation to tender, the tender procedure was to be completed in two stages.

3. The first stage consisted in selecting the tenderers who fulfilled the following criteria. They were required:

- to be individuals or legal entities, and provide evidence of this by supplying official registration

documents or registration numbers;

- to provide evidence of their financial and economic position by supplying bank statements and/or balance sheets or extracts therefrom;

- to provide evidence that they had the necessary experience in the field of water research, as attested by qualifications, references to previous work and the composition of the proposed team, including curricula vitae;

- to have the network necessary to cover all the Member States of the Union.

4. At the end of the second stage, the contract was then awarded, on the basis of the following criteria, to one of the tenderers previously selected:

- presentation, clarity and quality of the tender;

- awareness and understanding of the technical requirements of such work (evidence of the necessary experience in water science on the basis of qualifications, references to earlier work and the composition of the proposed team, including curricula vitae);

- the price.

5. The applicant submitted its tender in September 1996.

6. By letter of 7 January 1997, the Commission informed the applicant that its tender had not been selected.

7. By letters of 13 and 31 January 1997 and 15 February 1997, the applicant asked the Commission to inform it of the reasons for the rejection of its tender.

8. By letter of 13 March 1997, the Commission replied to that request, stating that the applicant's tender had been rejected on the ground that the applicant did not have the necessary experience in the field of water research, which was a condition laid down in the technical annex, and adding that the Commission was looking for tenderers with experience in the research, development and design of water treatment facilities. Furthermore, although that factor was not conclusive, the applicant had only slight knowledge and coverage of the Union as a whole.

9. By letter of 20 March 1997, the applicant informed the Commission that the documents submitted showed that it did indeed have extensive experience in the field of water research and drinking water purification systems, and that experience in the research, development and design of water treatment facilities was not one of the criteria mentioned in the technical annex.

10. By letter of 10 April 1997, the Commission informed the applicant that the expression necessary experience in the field of water research' was to be taken as meaning experience in the design of water treatment facilities. The Commission expected tenderers to put down the experience their staff already had in water management and control, in particular with respect to the technical and financial impacts of the standards proposed by the Commission for certain chemical substances and with regard to the design and operation of water treatment facilities. Furthermore, the Commission pointed out that the applicant's tender was very weak as regards the criterion relating to knowledge and coverage of the European Union.

11. During 1997, the applicant submitted a complaint to the European Ombudsman. That complaint was rejected by decision of 3 December 1997. By letters of 7 December 1997 and 20 February 1998, the applicant requested the Ombudsman to reconsider his view. That request was rejected on 24 March 1998. By letters of 30 March 1998 and 12 January 1999, the applicant again requested the Ombudsman to reconsider his view. That request was rejected on 6 May 1999.

12. By letter of 20 September 1999, the applicant contacted the President of the Commission seeking compensation for the loss it claimed to have suffered and requested access to the documents relating to the invitation to tender. Those requests were refused by letter of 11 January 2000.

13. Having managed to obtain, by its own efforts, the tender of one of the tenderers, the company EDC, selected at the end of the first stage, which did not show evidence of experience in the design of water treatment facilities, the applicant submitted a further complaint to the Ombudsman on 22 July 2000. By letter of 15 February 2001, the Ombudsman informed the applicant that he had requested the Commission to supply certain information by 31 March 2001. The Commission acceded to that request.

14. On 22 October 2001, the Ombudsman gave his decision on the applicant's complaint of 22 July 2000 (the Ombudsman's decision'). In that decision, the Ombudsman found that, in view of the fact that the Commission had acted on the basis of a criterion which was not included in the invitation to tender, the selection procedure had not been conducted with transparency, and that, by selecting at the end of the first stage the tenders of two tenderers (EDC and Eunice) which did not show their experience in the design of water treatment systems, the Commission had also not accorded the applicant equal treatment. The Ombudsman concluded that those two cases of improper administration were open to criticism.

15. By letter of 12 November 2001, the applicant submitted a further claim for compensation to the Commission. The Commission rejected that claim by letter of 31 January 2002.

16. By application lodged at the Court Registry on 25 March 2002, the applicant applied for legal aid under Article 94(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance with a view to bringing an action for compensation against the Commission.

17. That application was rejected by order of the President of the Second Chamber of the Court of First Instance of 13 December 2002 in Case T-90/02 AJ Ehcon v Commission , not published in the ECR.

Procedure and forms of order sought by the parties

18. By application lodged at the Court Registry on 8 April 2004, the applicant brought the present action.

19. By separate document lodged at the Court Registry on 29 July 2004, the Commission raised an objection of inadmissibility pursuant to Article 114(1) of the Rules of Procedure.

20. The applicant submitted its observations on that objection on 30 August 2004.

21. In its application, the applicant claims that the Court should:

- order the Commission to pay the sum of EUR 243 900, together with interest at the statutory rate;

- in the alternative, order the Commission to pay the sum of EUR 40 400, together with interest at the statutory rate;

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

22. In its objection of inadmissibility, the Commission contends that the Court should:

- dismiss the application as inadmissible;

- order the applicant to pay the costs.

23. In its observations on the objection of inadmissibility, the applicant claims that the Court should:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

- declare the objection of inadmissibility unfounded;

- in the alternative, dismiss it;

- order the Commission to pay the costs of the preliminary objection.

Law

24. Under Article 114(1) of the Rules of Procedure, the Court may, if one of the parties so requests, rule on admissibility without going to the substance of the case. Under Article 114(3), the remainder of the procedure is to be oral, unless the Court of First Instance otherwise decides.

25. Furthermore, under Article 111 of the Rules of Procedure, where it is clear that the Court of First Instance has no jurisdiction to take cognisance of an action or where the action is manifestly inadmissible or manifestly lacking any foundation in law, the Court of First Instance may, without taking any further steps in the proceedings, give a decision on the action by reasoned order.

26. In the present case, the Court considers that it has sufficient information from the documents before it and will therefore give its decision without taking any further steps in the proceedings.

Arguments of the parties

27. The Commission raises an objection of inadmissibility against the whole application on the ground that the action brought by the applicant is time-barred for the purposes of Article 46 of the Statute of the Court of Justice.

28. It points out that, according to the case-law, the event which gives rise to the action is the materialisation of the damage (order in Case C-136/01 P Autosalone Ispra dei Fratelli Rossi v Commission [2002] ECR I-6565, paragraph 30). Moreover, the period of limitation is interrupted only if proceedings are instituted before the Court or an application is made to the competent institution of the Community; however, in the latter case, interruption only occurs if the application is followed by proceedings within the time-limit determined by reference to Articles 230 EC or 232 EC (Case 11/72 Giordano v Commission [1973] ECR 417, paragraph 6; Case T-167/94 Nölle v Council and Commission [1995] ECR II2589, paragraph 30; and order in Case T-332/99 Jestädt v Council and Commission [2001] ECR II-2561, paragraph 47).

29. With the exception of the costs incurred in obtaining evidence of the alleged unlawfulness of the Commission's conduct, the damage for which the applicant claims compensation materialised at the moment the Commission notified it of the formal decision to reject its tender, that is, 7 January 1997. With regard to those costs, the Commission points out, however, that the applicant had already indicated, by fax of 25 March 1997, that it had sufficient evidence to support a finding that the Commission was liable. The Commission therefore considers that costs incurred after that date cannot be the subject of compensation.

30. Since this action was lodged on 8 April 2004, that is, more than two years after expiry of the five -year limitation period, the Commission considers that it should be dismissed as inadmissible. The Commission also points out that, although the applicant lodged a request for compensation with its services on 21 September 1999, the rejection of that request on 11 January 2000 was not followed by an action within the time-limits laid down in Articles 230 EC and 232 EC, so that request cannot have interrupted the limitation period. The same applies to the second request for compensation made by the applicant on 12 November 2001 and rejected by the Commission on 31 January 2002.

31. Finally, the Commission points out that the applicant was aware that it was subject to the limitation period, as is clear from the letters sent to the Ombudsman on 12 January and 10 May 1999.

32. The applicant considers that the action is admissible in its entirety.

33. It maintains, first, that the limitation period starts to run only on the day on which the party concerned becomes aware of the events giving him entitlement to compensation. In response to the applicant's numerous requests to the Commission for clarification regarding its decision not to accept the applicant's tender at the end of the first selection stage, the Commission always maintained that the applicant did not have sufficient experience in the field of water research, a criterion which must also be regarded as including the design of water treatment facilities. It follows that the applicant was misled by the Commission and could not have been aware of the unequal treatment initiating the Commission's decision until the year 2000, when it finally managed, through its own efforts, to obtain the tender of a tenderer admitted to the second stage.

34. The Court of Justice has moreover stated that a person who supplies incorrect information to an opposing party may not invoke the limitation of the action against that party. Accordingly, the strict application of a limitation period cannot reasonably be justified on the basis of the principles of legal certainty and the sound administration of justice (Case C-326/96 Levez [1998] ECR I-7835).

35. According to the applicant, logic and fairness therefore support the conclusion, in accordance with the principle of non valentem agere non currit praescriptio , that the limitation period was suspended until 22 October 2001, the day on which the Ombudsman concluded, in his decision on the applicant's complaint, that the Commission appeared to have discriminated between the tenderers. Before that date, in the absence of evidence, an action against the Commission could not have succeeded, as is shown by the fact that the applicant's previous complaints were rejected by the Ombudsman.

36. Secondly, the applicant maintains that the loss for which it claims compensation had not yet materialised on the day on which its tender was rejected by the Commission. It was only during the subsequent years that it suffered continual loss because it was unable to exploit and extend its expertise. Similarly, the loss suffered because the second public services contract was awarded to another tenderer materialised only when that contract was awarded, on 30 November 2000. Finally, the costs incurred in gathering evidence against the Commission and in submitting the complaint to the Ombudsman were not incurred until 2000.

37. Thirdly and lastly, the applicant points out that, on 25 March 2002, it applied for legal aid in order to bring an action for compensation against the Commission. Since that application was refused by the Court, the applicant did not have the funds to bring an action before the date on which it brought the present one.

Findings of the Court

38. Article 46 of the Statute of the Court of Justice provides:

Proceedings against the Communities in matters arising from non-contractual liability shall be barred after a period of five years from the occurrence of the event giving rise thereto. The period of limitation shall be interrupted if proceedings are instituted before the Court or if prior to the proceedings an application is made by the aggrieved party to the relevant institution of the Communities. In the latter event the proceedings must be instituted within the period of two months provided for in Article 230 of the EC Treaty and Article 146 of the EAEC Treaty; the provisions of the second paragraph of Article 232 of the EC Treaty and the second paragraph of Article 148 of the EAEC Treaty, respectively, shall apply where appropriate.'

39. According to the case-law, it is apparent from the second paragraph of Article 288 EC that the existence of the non-contractual liability of the Community and the enforceability of the right to compensation for damage suffered depend on the satisfaction of a number of requirements: the conduct of the institution must be unlawful, there must be actual damage and there must be a causal relationship between the conduct of the institution and the damage alleged (Joined Cases 256/80, 257/80, 265/80, 267/80 and 5/81 Birra Wührer v Council and Commission [1982] ECR 85, paragraph 9, and order in Case T-106/98 Fratelli Murri v Commission [1999] ECR II-2553, paragraph 25), and that the five-year limitation period which applies to proceedings alleging Community liability therefore cannot begin before all the requirements governing the obligation to provide compensation are satisfied and in particular before the damage to be made good has materialised (see, to that effect, Birra Wührer v Council and Commission , paragraphs 9 and 10).

40. In the present case, it should be pointed out that the applicant seeks compensation for damage of a different kind.

41. In essence, it seeks compensation for:

- the loss suffered as a result of not being awarded the initial contract, equal to the net profit which that contract would have generated, estimated at EUR 158 400 (the loss suffered as a result of not being awarded the contract in question');

- the loss suffered as a result of the damage caused to its reputation as an expert in the field of water research, of the reduction in its workload, of its inability to extend its expertise in water-related research and of the need to develop its expertise in a new area, estimated at EUR 60 000 at least (the loss suffered as a result of the damage caused to its reputation, of the reduction in its workload, of its inability to extend its expertise in water-related research and the development of its expertise in a new area');

- the loss of the chance of securing a later contract, awarded on 30 November 2000 to Haskoning, estimated at 10% of the net profits received by that company on that occasion, that is EUR 25 500 (the damage suffered as a result of the loss of the chance of securing the next contract').

42. In the alternative, the applicant seeks compensation for:

- the loss of the chance of securing the contract in question, estimated, having regard to the fact that six companies were selected at the end of the first selection stage, at 1/6 of the net profits generated by the contract, that is EUR 26 400 (the loss suffered as a result of the loss of the chance of securing the contract in question');

- the costs incurred in participating in the initial tendering procedure, estimated at EUR 10 000 (the costs of the tendering procedure');

- the costs incurred in bringing the various complaints before the Ombudsman and in obtaining evidence against the Commission, estimated at EUR 4 000 (the costs incurred in bringing the matter before the Ombudsman and in obtaining evidence').

Concerning the loss which materialised on the day on which the applicant's tender was rejected

43. It must be held that the loss suffered as a result of not being awarded the contract in question, the damage suffered as a result of the loss of the chance of securing the contract in question, the costs of the tendering procedure and the loss suffered as a result of the damage to its reputation, of the reduction in its workload, of its inability to extend its expertise in water-related research and of the development of its expertise in a new area materialised on the day on which the Commission rejected the applicant's tender. That rejection also constitutes the event giving rise to these proceedings to establish liability, within the meaning of Article 46 of the Statute of the Court of Justice.

44. Furthermore, it is common ground that the rejection occurred on the date of the Commission's decision, 7 January 1997, and that, at the applicant's request, the Commission set out the reasons for its decision in a letter of 13 March 1997. It must also be stated that the applicant knew those reasons by, at the latest, 20 March 1997, the date on which it wrote to the Commission referring to the Commission's letter of 13 March 1997.

45. It follows that, in respect of those losses, all the conditions for the applicant to assert its right to compensation were satisfied on 20 March 1997 at the latest and that, therefore, the five-year limitation period expired on 20 March 2002 at the latest.

46. The fact that the applicant submitted two claims to the Commission, on 20 September 1999 and 12 November 2001, for compensation for the loss it claims to have suffered does not lead to a different result, since it is not disputed that those claims were not followed by proceedings under Article 230 EC or 232 EC.

47. In accordance with Article 46 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, the period of limitation is interrupted only if proceedings are instituted before the Court or if prior to the proceedings an application is made to the relevant institution of the Community; however, in the latter case, interruption only occurs if the application is followed by proceedings within the time-limit determined by reference to Article 230 EC or 232 EC (Giordano v Commission , paragraph 28 above, paragraph 6; Case T-222/97 Steffens v Council and Commission [1998] ECR II4175, paragraphs 35 and 42; and order in Jestädt v Council and Commission , paragraph 28 above, paragraph 47).

48. Consequently, since the application was lodged on 8 April 2004, that is, more than seven years after 20 March 1997, the point from which the five-year limitation period started to run, this action, in so far as it seeks compensation for those losses, must be declared time-barred and therefore inadmissible.

49. None of the applicant's arguments can affect that conclusion.

50. In the first place, the applicant claims that it could not have known of the alleged illegality committed by the Commission until 2000, that is to say, when it managed to obtain another tenderer's tender, which was accepted at the end of the selection stage and which shows that that tenderer did not have experience in the design of water treatment facilities. Without specifying the day on which it actually managed to obtain that document, the applicant considers that logic and fairness call for the point from which the limitation period started to run to be set at 22 October 2001, the day on which the Ombudsman gave his decision on the basis of that document and of the inquiries made at the Commission, because before that date the applicant had no evidence and its action would therefore have failed.

51. It should be pointed out that the unlawfulness of the conduct for which the applicant criticises the Commission and of which it became aware only belatedly, consists essentially in the alleged application of a selection criterion, namely experience in the design of water treatment facilities, which was not included among the criteria contained in the invitation to tender and which was applied to the applicant in a discriminatory manner.

52. As regards the unlawfulness resulting from the application of the criterion at issue, a study of the documents before the Court shows that the applicant knew that its tender had been rejected on the basis of that criterion since the Commission's letter of 13 March 1997. It must further be stated that, in its letter of 20 March 1997, the applicant challenged the Commission's arguments, saying that it had extensive experience in water-related research and that experience in the design of water treatment facilities was not one of the selection criteria. The applicant therefore concluded that it had been wrongly excluded from the award procedure, reported a case of improper administration and threatened to bring proceedings if it had not received a reply by 10 April 1997. The applicant repeated those arguments in its claim for compensation sent to the President of the Commission on 20 September 1999, in which it stated that, if that claim were rejected, it would bring the matter before the Court of First Instance.

53. As regards the claim that the criterion in question was also applied in a discriminatory manner, the applicant submits that it was not aware of that fact until 2000, when it managed to obtain, through its own efforts, the tender of another tenderer, namely the company EDC, whose tender was selected at the end of the first stage even though that tenderer likewise did not satisfy that criterion.

54. Apart from the fact that the applicant does not adduce proof of that fact, it should first be pointed out again that, in its letter of 20 September 1999, it was already complaining that the criterion in question was not applied to the other tenderers, as is apparent from the report of the Advisory Committee on Procurement and Contracts (the ACPC'), and that the Commission had thus infringed the principle of non-discrimination laid down in Article 3(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1). It should also be pointed out that, in its letter to the Ombudsman of 30 March 1998, to which it refers in its letter of 12 January 1999, the applicant already complained of fraud, favouritism and improper administration on the part of the Commission. Therefore, the applicant's assertion that it had not been aware until 2000 of the discriminatory application by the Commission of the criterion in question is incorrect.

55. In any event, it is apparent from paragraph 52 above that the applicant had known since 1997 the fundamental reason for the rejection of its tender, namely, its lack of experience in the design of water treatment facilities, a reason which it has always disputed, both before the Commission and the Ombudsman as well as in these proceedings, inasmuch as that criterion was not included in the invitation to tender.

56. Therefore, even if the applicant could not have known until 2000, or even 22 October 2001, that the criterion in question was allegedly applied in a discriminatory manner, that fact cannot postpone until that date the point from which the limitation period for the action for compensation started to run.

57. It should be pointed out that the function of the limitation period is to reconcile protection of the rights of the aggrieved person and the principle of legal certainty. The length of the limitation period was thus determined by taking into account, in particular, the time that the party who has allegedly suffered harm needs to gather the appropriate information for the purpose of a possible action and to verify the facts likely to provide the basis of that action (order in Autosalone Ispra dei Fratelli Rossi v Commission , paragraph 28 above, paragraph 28).

58. Thus, it has been held that the argument that the limitation period cannot begin until the victim has specific and detailed knowledge of the facts of the case is misconceived, since knowledge of the facts is not one of the conditions which must be met in order for the limitation period to run (order in Autosalone Ispra dei Fratelli Rossi v Commission , paragraph 28 above, paragraph 31).

59. Similarly, in the present case, the fact that the applicant allegedly became aware of additional information in support of its action after the rejection - for which the Commission stated its reasons on 13 March and 10 April 1997 - of its offer, even though it had since the beginning disputed the fundamental reason for that rejection, which also constitutes the event giving rise to the damage, cannot place the point from which the limitation period started to run at the date on which the applicant became aware of that information.

60. This applies a fortiori because in 2000, on the day on which the applicant claims to have received the tender documents of one of the tenderers accepted at the end of the selection stage, and even on the day on which the applicant itself considers that it had enough evidence to bring proceedings for compensation, that is, when the Ombudsman adopted his decision of 22 October 2001 which was critical of the Commission, the five-year limitation period had not yet expired.

61. It follows that, in this case, unlike the situation in which an applicant is prevented from bringing proceedings within a reasonable time because he only belatedly became aware of the event giving rise to the damage, expiry of the limitation period cannot be fixed at a date later than the normal date of expiry of that period (see, to that effect, Case 145/83 Adams v Commission [1985] ECR 3539, paragraphs 50 and 51, and the order in Autosalone Ispra dei Fratelli Rossi v Commission , paragraph 28 above, paragraph 32).

62. In the second place, the applicant's argument that the Commission is responsible for the limitation of the action inasmuch as it provided the applicant with incorrect information in order to conceal the alleged unlawfulness of the tendering procedure likewise cannot be accepted.

63. It is true that the Court of Justice has already held, in connection with the implementation of Council Directive 75/117/EEC of 10 February 1975 on the approximation of the laws of the Member States relating to the application of the principle of equal pay for men and women (OJ 1975 L 45, p. 19) that Community law precludes the application of a rule of national law which time-bars an action brought by an employee for arrears of remuneration or damages for breach of the principle of equal pay, there being no possibility of extending that period, where the delay in bringing a claim is attributable to the fact that the employer deliberately supplied the employee with incorrect information (Levez , paragraph 34 above, paragraph 34).

64. However, even assuming that the Court of Justice has thus laid down a general rule, the rule is not applicable in the present case.

65. Indeed, contrary to the situation in the above case, the fact that, in the present case, the Commission may have deliberately misled the applicant by informing it that the main reason that its tender had been rejected was that it did not have experience in the design of water treatment facilities, if proved, was not such as to prevent the applicant from bringing proceedings in good time.

66. First, it is clear from the foregoing that the applicant knew, from the time the Commission gave the reasons for its decision on 13 March 1997, that its tender had been rejected on the ground that it did not satisfy the criterion relating to experience in the design of water treatment facilities and that it has from the beginning disputed the lawfulness of the application of that criterion, a complaint which it maintains in these proceedings. Second, even if it were conceded that the Commission's conduct might have prevented the applicant from being fully aware that the Commission had allegedly treated it differently, it must be stated that the applicant was already making that complaint, on the basis of the ACPC report, in its letter to the Commission of 20 September1999, and itself acknowledges that it became aware of the fact in 2000 after obtaining EDC's tender. By that time at the latest, the applicant therefore had the evidence it claims it needed in order to bring its action. It therefore cannot be accepted that the delay in bringing this action is solely, or even largely, due to the Commission's attitude, because the applicant still had an opportunity to bring its action, within the time-limit, after the Ombudsman's decision.

67. In the third place, contrary to what the applicant claims, it cannot be considered that the loss allegedly suffered as a result of the damage caused to its reputation, of the reduction in its workload, of its inability to extend its expertise in water-related research and of the development of its expertise in a new area was suffered continuously. Although, according to settled case-law, the time bar applies only to the period preceding by more than five years the date of the act stopping time from running and does not affect rights which arose during subsequent periods (see, to that effect, Case T-20/94 Hartmann v Council and Commission [1997] ECR II-595, paragraph 132, and Case T-201/94 Kustermann v Council and Commission [2002] ECR II-415, paragraph 64), this is only in the exceptional situation in which it is established that the damage in question was repeated on a daily basis after the occurrence of the event which caused it. That is not the position in the present case, in which the loss described above, if proved, even though its full extent may not have been appreciated until after the rejection of the applicant's tender for the contract in question, was nevertheless caused instantly by that rejection.

68. Finally and in the fourth place, the applicant's argument that it was not in a financial position to bring an action against the Commission before it initiated these proceedings obviously does not support the conclusion that this action is admissible.

69. Indeed, it should be pointed out that, under Article 94(1) of the Rules of Procedure, a party who is wholly or in part unable to meet the costs of the proceedings may at any time apply for legal aid. The applicant's alleged poverty cannot therefore be a reason justifying the late submission of the application.

70. It should also be noted that the applicant was familiar with that procedure and that it has not established that it is entitled to legal aid, since, on 25 March 2002, it submitted an application for legal aid which the Court of First Instance dismissed by order of 13 December 2002.

71. It follows that, in accordance with paragraphs 43 and 48 above, the action is time-barred and therefore inadmissible, in so far as it seeks compensation for the loss suffered as a result of the applicant's not being awarded the contract in question, the damage suffered as a result of the loss of the chance of securing the contract in question, the costs of the tendering procedure and the loss suffered as a result of the damage to its reputation, of the reduction in its workload, of its inability to extend its expertise in water-related research and of the development of its expertise in a new area.

The other losses

72. As regards the damage suffered as a result of the loss of the chance of securing the next contract and the costs incurred in bringing the matter before the Ombudsman and in obtaining evidence, the Court considers that it is first necessary to examine the substance of the applicant's claim (see, to that effect, Case C-23/00 P Council v Boehringer [2002] ECR I-1873, paragraphs 51 and 52, and Case C-233/02 France v Commission [2004] ECR I-2759, paragraph 26).

73. In the first place, the applicant claims that the allegedly unlawful rejection of its tender for the contract in question caused it damage owing to the fact that it lost the chance, during the tendering procedure in which it participated, to secure a subsequent contract, which was awarded on 30 November 2000 to the company Haskoning (the renewal contract'). It maintains that that contract followed on from the contract which was the subject of the invitation to tender of 10 August 1996 (the first contract') and that it was therefore at an unfair disadvantage in relation to Haskoning, which had already been awarded the first contract.

74. In the second place, the applicant claims that it also suffered loss as a result of the costs incurred in obtaining evidence against the Commission, inter alia the tender submitted by EDC, and in presenting the complaints to the Ombudsman.

75. It is settled case-law that in order for the Community to incur non-contractual liability, a number of conditions must be met: the conduct of the Community institutions in question must be unlawful; there must be real and certain damage; and a direct causal link must exist between the conduct of the institution concerned and the alleged damage (see, inter alia, Case T-231/97 New Europe Consulting and Brown v Commission [1999] ECR II-2403, paragraph 29). If any one of those conditions is not satisfied, the application must be dismissed in its entirety without it being necessary to examine the other preconditions for such liability (Case C-146/91 KYDEP

v Council and Commission [1994] ECR I-4199, paragraph 81, and Case C-104/97 P Atlanta v European Community [1999] ECR I-6983, paragraph 65).

76. With regard, first, to the loss allegedly suffered owing to the loss of the chance of securing the renewal contract, it should be pointed out that the applicant furnishes no information regarding the subject of the invitation to tender which it claims followed, in 2000, the invitation to tender of 10 August 1996, or regarding the connection between those two invitations to tender. It is therefore impossible to establish the existence of any causal link between the allegedly unlawful rejection of the applicant's tender during the first tendering procedure and the loss which the applicant suffered owing to the loss of the chance of securing the renewal contract.

77. In any event, the loss of the chance of securing the renewal contract can be regarded as real and certain damage only if, in the absence of the allegedly improper conduct by the Commission, there would be no doubt that the applicant would have been awarded the first contract. However, it should be pointed out that, in a public tendering system such as the one in this case, the awarding authority has a broad discretion in deciding to award a contract. Consequently, the applicant could not be sure of securing the first contract even if it had been selected to participate in the second stage of the tendering procedure (see, to that effect, New Europe Consulting and Brown v Commission , paragraph 75 above, paragraph 51), and that is so even without it being necessary to ascertain whether it satisfied the conditions laid down by the invitation to tender.

78. It follows that even if the applicant might have lost the chance of securing the first contract owing to the fact that it did not participate in the second stage of the first tendering procedure, damage which is in any event time-barred, that single loss of a chance could not be regarded as sufficient to cause the applicant real and certain damage as a result of the loss of the chance of securing the renewal contract, if it were accepted that there was a sufficient link between that contract and the first one.

79. As regards, next, the loss suffered as a result of the costs incurred in gathering evidence, inter alia the tender submitted by EDC, it should be noted that the costs incurred by the parties for the purpose of the judicial proceedings cannot as such be regarded as constituting damage distinct from the burden of costs (see, to that effect, Case C-334/97 Commission v Montorio [1999] ECR I-3387, paragraph 54). Furthermore, the Court of First Instance has held that, even though, as a rule, substantial legal work is carried out in the course of the proceedings prior to the judicial phase, it must be pointed out that by proceedings' Article 91 of the Rules of Procedure refers only to proceedings before the Court of First Instance, to the exclusion of the prior stage. That follows in particular from Article 90 of the Rules of Procedure, which refers to proceedings before the Court of First Instance' (see, to that effect, the order in Case T-38/95 DEP Groupe Origny v Commission [2002] ECR II-217, paragraph 29 and the case-law cited). Therefore, to regard such costs as a loss for which compensation may be claimed in an action for damages would be inconsistent with the fact that costs incurred during the phase before the judicial proceedings are not recoverable, as is evident from the case-law cited above.

80. It follows that the applicant is not entitled to claim, in an action for damages, compensation for loss suffered as a result of costs allegedly incurred in obtaining evidence prior to these proceedings.

81. Similarly, if it were to be understood that what the applicant is in fact claiming is that the costs incurred in obtaining sufficient evidence were caused by the Commission's alleged unlawful failure to send a notice concerning the outcome of the tendering procedure to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities, under Articles 16, 17(2) et seq. of Directive 92/50, the fact remains that the applicant does not show in what respect sending the notice to the Publications Office would have saved it from incurring the costs in question.

82. Furthermore, as has already been stated, the applicant was under no obligation to acquire the tender submitted by EDC in order properly to bring an action for compensation before the Court of First Instance.

83. Finally, with regard to the loss as a result of the costs allegedly incurred in bringing the matter before the Ombudsman, it should be pointed out that, in the institution of the Ombudsman, the Treaty has given citizens of the Union an alternative remedy to that of an action before the Community judicature in order to protect their interests. That alternative non-judicial remedy meets specific criteria and does not necessarily have the same objective as judicial proceedings (Case T209/00 Lamberts v Ombudsman [2002] ECR II-2203, paragraph 65).

84. Moreover, as is clear from Article 195(1) EC and Article 2(6) and (7) of Decision 94/262/ECSC, EC, Euratom of the European Parliament of 9 March 1994 on the regulations and general conditions governing the performance of the Ombudsman's duties (OJ 1994 L 113, p. 15), the two remedies cannot be pursued at the same time. Indeed, although complaints submitted to the Ombudsman do not affect time-limits for bringing actions before the Community judicature, the Ombudsman must none the less cease consideration of a complaint and declare it inadmissible if the citizen simultaneously brings an action before the Community judicature based on the same facts. It is therefore for the citizen to decide which of the two available remedies is likely to serve his interests best (Lamberts v Ombudsman , paragraph 83 above, paragraph 66).

85. It follows that the applicant's decision to bring the complaints in question before the Ombudsman was its own independent choice and that it was under no obligation to proceed in that way before properly bringing its action before the Court of First Instance.

86. Consequently, the applicant has not managed to establish the existence of a direct causal relationship between the alleged costs incurred before the Ombudsman and the alleged illegalities. A citizen's free choice to refer a matter to the Ombudsman cannot appear to be the direct and necessary consequence of cases of improper administration which may be attributable to Community institutions or bodies.

87. It is apparent from the above that the applicant's claim for compensation for damage suffered as a result of the loss of the chance to secure the renewal contract and of the costs incurred before the Ombudsman and in obtaining evidence must be dismissed as manifestly unfounded, without there being any need to give a ruling on its admissibility.

88. Accordingly, the application must be dismissed in its entirety, as in part inadmissible and in part manifestly unfounded.

89. It is therefore unnecessary to grant the applicant's request that Mr Trouwborst, Mr Brinkman and Mr Söderman be called as witnesses. In any event, it must be stated that that request does not state precisely about what facts or for what reasons those witnesses should be examined, and that it therefore does not fulfil the requirements laid down in the second subparagraph of Article 68(1) of the Rules of Procedure.

Costs

90. Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the applicant has been unsuccessful, and the Commission has applied for costs, the applicant must be ordered to pay the costs.

Judgment of the Court (Grand Chamber)

THE COURT (Grand Chamber), composed of V. Skouris, President, P. Jann, C.W.A. Timmermans, A. Rosas, K. Lenaerts, G. Arestis (Rapporteur) and U. Lohmus, Presidents of Chambers, J.N. Cunha Rodrigues, R. Silva de Lapuerta, J. Makarczyk, M. Ilei, J. Malenovsku and J. Kluka, Judges, Advocate General: C. Stix-Hackl,

Registrar: K. Sztranc-Sawiczek, Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 4 April 2006, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 14 September 2006,

gives the following

Judgment

1. By its application, the Commission of the European Communities asks the Court of Justice to declare that, in permitting Dublin City Council (DCC'), successor to the Dublin Corporation Fire Brigade, to provide emergency ambulance services without the Eastern Regional Health Authority (the Authority'), previously known as the Eastern Health Board, having undertaken any prior advertising, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 43 EC and 49 EC and the general principles of Community law.

Legal context

Community legislation

2. The provisions governing the award of public service contracts are contained in Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328; p. 1; Directive 92/50'). Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 provides in particular that public service contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority.

National legislation

3. Section 65(1) of the Health Act 1953, as applicable in 1999, which applies to the present dispute (the Health Act'), provides:

(1) A health board may, subject to any general directions given by the Minister and on such terms and conditions as it sees fit to impose, give assistance in any one or more of the following ways to any body which provides or proposes to provide a service similar or ancillary to a service that the health board may provide:

(a) by contributing to the expenses incurred by the body'.

4. Section 57 of the Health Act 1970 provides:

A health board may make arrangements for providing ambulances or other means of transport for the conveyance of patients...'

5. Under section 25 of the Fire Services Act 1981:

A fire authority may carry out or assist in any operations of an emergency nature, whether or not a risk of fire is involved, and a fire authority may accordingly make such provision for the rescue or safeguarding of persons and protection of property as it considers necessary for the purposes of that function.'

6. Section 9(1)(a) of the 1981 Act provides that the council of a county' is the fire authority for the purposes of the Act.

Facts and pre-litigation procedure

7. DCC, which is responsible for the fire service in Dublin, provides emergency ambulance services in part of the area served by the Authority, inter alia in the city of Dublin. It provided that service as a health authority until 1960, then as a local authority through its permanent fire brigade service.

8. Pursuant to section 65 of the Health Act and in order to contribute financially to the provision of emergency ambulance services, the East Coast Area Health Board - a board responsible for health matters that is separate from the Authority and which performs its functions as delegated by the Authority - makes annual payments to DCC, the final amount of which is determined following negotiations between DCC and the East Coast Area Health Board and which represents part of DCC's expenditure on the provision of the services in question.

9. In June 1998, the Eastern Health Board and the Dublin Corporation Fire Brigade drew up a draft agreement on the provision of emergency ambulance services. At the beginning of 2003, that is, as at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion, that draft agreement included the financing arrangements between those two bodies and constituted an overview of the management of the public expenditure relating to that draft agreement.

10. The draft agreement gave rise to a complaint to the Commission in which it was claimed that the draft agreement should have been the subject of prior advertising in accordance with the requirements of Directive 92/50. Correspondence was initiated between the Commission and the Irish authorities with a view to establishing whether there was a contract to which such an advertising requirement would have applied.

11. Having concluded that the provision of emergency ambulance services to the Authority on the basis of an agreement made without any prior advertising was inconsistent with Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, the Commission initiated the infringement procedure laid down in Article 226 EC.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

12. After giving Ireland formal notice to submit its observations, the Commission issued a reasoned opinion on 17 December 2002, requesting Ireland to take the necessary steps to comply with that opinion within a period of two months from its receipt.

13. Taking the view that Ireland's response to the reasoned opinion was unsatisfactory, the Commission decided to bring the present action.

The action

Arguments of the parties

14. The Commission claims that the arrangements under which emergency ambulance services are provided by DCC by agreement with the Authority without there having been any prior advertising constitutes a breach of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC and of the general principles of Community law.

15. According to the Commission, in the absence of a written contract, the provision of such services falls outside the scope of Directive 92/50. However, those arrangements should be considered in the light of the fundamental freedoms and the general principles of Community law, which include the principle of transparency.

16. Referring to the judgment in Joined Cases 27/86 to 29/86 CEI and Bellini [1987] ECR 3347, the Commission claims that Community law applies in full to situations which are not covered by the public procurement directives. It submits further that, according to paragraphs 60 to 62 of the judgment in Case C324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I10745, compliance with the rules of the EC Treaty relating to the fundamental freedoms in general, and with the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality in particular, implies, notably, an obligation of transparency which allows the services market to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed.

17. The Commission takes the view in this regard that the foregoing considerations apply to the provision of emergency ambulance services. It claims that DCC provides such services for remuneration at the behest of the Authority. The Authority takes an active role in ensuring that the services provided meet its requirements and in controlling the amount to be paid in respect of those services. The Commission notes also that the Authority's financial contribution appears to cover almost all of DCC's expenditure on the provision of those services.

18. Ireland contests the alleged failure to fulfil its obligations.

19. At the hearing, Ireland explained that the present dispute relates to the mobile emergency medical service, which must be provided as a public service. It contends that the Commission has not established that DCC provides emergency ambulance services at the behest of the Authority, or demonstrated that the arrangement between the Authority and DCC constitutes an award of a public contract'.

20. As regards the funding of those services, Ireland contends that the Authority's participation is undertaken in the exercise of its functions, in accordance with the provisions of the Health Act, and that its financial contribution covers only part of DCC's expenditure. In the present case, there is no fixed price and the Authority endeavours to control or limit the amount which it is empowered by law to pay to DCC towards the cost of those services.

21. Ireland maintains that section 25 of the Fire Services Act 1981 specifically confers on DCC statutory powers to provide emergency ambulance services. DCC, it argues, has provided such services in its capacity as a local authority which, under national law, is also the fire authority.

22. Ireland submits that the fact that the emergency ambulance and fire brigade services are concentrated in one public body is an advantage in terms of health and public safety, since all members of the combined ambulance and fire brigade services receive emergency medical training.

23. Furthermore, Ireland notes that, according to the Court's judgment in Case 263/86 Humbel and Edel [1988] ECR 5365, those services, which fall within Annex 1 B to Directive 92/50, are not services normally provided for remuneration and, as such, are not covered by Articles 43 EC and 49 EC.

24. As regards possible discrimination on the ground of nationality, Ireland submits that its national law does not prohibit providers of emergency ambulance services from other Member States from establishing themselves or providing services in Ireland.

25. Ireland takes the view that the Commission has failed to identify any directly or indirectly discriminatory provision in the Fire Services Act 1981 or in the Health Acts. In the present case, Ireland relies on the judgment in Case C70/95 Sodemare and Others [1997] ECR I3395, in which the Court held that it was not contrary to the principle of equal treatment to reserve participation in the social welfare system of providing old people's homes to non-profit-making private operators.

26. Ireland submits further that Articles 43 EC and 49 EC are inapplicable as the services in question are services of general economic interest' and that the level of their public funding is strictly limited to that which is necessary to cover the actual cost of those services.

27. The Kingdom of the Netherlands, which was granted leave to intervene in support of the form of order sought by Ireland by order of the President of the Court of 15 June 2004, submits that the principle of transparency does not apply in a situation in which there is no connecting factor with the internal market, in the present case, the freedom to provide services. As a subsidiary point, the Netherlands claims that, even if the Court were to rule that the principle of transparency must be applied if Directive 92/50 is not applicable, it is for the Member States to define what constitutes a sufficient degree of advertising'.

Findings of the Court

28. As a preliminary point, it must be noted that, as is apparent from the form of order sought in the application initiating proceedings, the present action for failure to fulfil obligations does not concern the application of Directive 92/50, but relates to the issue as to whether the provision by DCC, without prior advertising, of emergency ambulance services is contrary to the fundamental rules of the Treaty and, in particular, to the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services enshrined in Articles 43 EC and 49 EC respectively.

29. It follows from the case-law of the Court that, without prejudice to the obligation of the Member States, under Article 10 EC, to facilitate the achievement of the Commission's tasks, which consist in particular, pursuant to Article 211 EC, in ensuring that the provisions of the Treaty and the measures taken by the institutions pursuant thereto are applied (Case C494/01 Commission v Ireland [2005] ECR I3331, paragraph 42), in an action for failure to fulfil obligations it is incumbent upon the Commission to prove the allegation that the obligation has not been fulfilled. It is the Commission's responsibility to place before the Court the information needed to enable the Court to establish that the obligation has not been fulfilled, and in so doing the Commission may not rely on any presumption (see, in particular, Case 96/81 Commission v Netherlands [1982] ECR 1791, paragraph 6; Case C404/00 Commission v Spain [2003] ECR I6695, paragraph 26; and Case C135/05 Commission v Italy [2007] ECR I0000, paragraph 26).

30. The Commission claims that the maintenance of an agreement between DCC and the Authority, without any prior advertising, constitutes a breach of the rules of the Treaty and thereby of the general principles of Community law, in particular the principle of transparency.

31. In support of its case, the Commission takes the view that, even in the absence of a written contract detailing the terms of the services to be provided by DCC, the correspondence attached to a letter of 19 September 2002 shows that the scope of those services and the basis on which they are to be remunerated were considered by the parties and formalised in a draft agreement drawn up in June 1998. In particular, in a letter of 15 January 1999 attached to the letter of 19 September 2002, DCC's Finance Officer stated that the negotiations on the funding of the emergency ambulance service had resulted, in June 1998, in an agreement determining future charges by DCC to the Authority.

32. The Commission submits that it seems that DCC and the Authority agreed to enter into a service-level agreement and that a contract was drafted to that end. Therefore, according to the Commission, DCC provides emergency ambulance services at the behest of the Authority and for remuneration.

33. In that respect, it is apparent from the documents before the Court that national legislation empowers both the Authority and DCC to carry out emergency ambulance services. Under section 25 of the Fire Services Act 1981, a fire authority may carry out or assist in any operations of an emergency nature, whether or not a risk of fire is involved, and may accordingly make such provision for the rescue or safeguarding of persons and protection of property as it considers necessary for the purposes of that function. Thus, under section 9 of that Act, a local authority such as DCC is the responsible fire authority.

34. Bet ween 1899 and 1960, DCC provided emergency ambulance services in its capacity as a health authority. It subsequently acted in its capacity as a local authority and, under section 25 of the Fire Services Act 1981, provided those services through its permanent fire brigade service.

35. Consequently, it is conceivable that DCC provides such services to the public in the exercise of its own powers derived directly from statute, and applying its own funds, although it is paid a contribution by the Authority for that purpose, covering part of the costs of those services.

36. In that regard, as follows from the case-law cited in paragraph 29 of this judgment, it is, in the present case, incumbent upon the Commission to place before the Court the information needed to enable the Court to establish that a public contract has been awarded, and in so doing the Commission may not rely on any presumption in that regard.

37. However, neither the Commission's arguments nor the documents produced demonstrate that there has been an award of a public contract, since it is conceivable that DCC provides emergency ambulance services in the exercise of its own powers derived directly from statute. Moreover, the mere fact that, as between two public bodies, funding arrangements exist in respect of such services does not imply that the provision of the services concerned constitutes an award of a public contract which would need to be assessed in the light of the fundamental rules of the Treaty.

38. Since the Commission has not proved that Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty, the action must be dismissed.

Costs

39. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since Ireland has applied for the Commission to be ordered to pay the costs and the latter has been unsuccessful, the Commission must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby:

1. Dismisses the action;

2. Orders the Commission of the European Communities to pay the costs.

Opinion of Advocate General Stix-Hackl delivered on 14 September 2006. Commission of the European Communities v Ireland. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Public procurement - Articles 43 EC and 49 EC - Emergency ambulance services. Case C-532/03.

I - Introductory remarks

1. This action for failure to fulfil obligations, like another such action brought in parallel, (2) relates to the question of what requirements can be inferred from primary law as regards the transparency of award procedures. In particular, the present case concerns the obligations that can be derived from the fundamental freedoms and general principles of law for awards which are not covered by the public procurement directives. Finally, the case concerns the interpretation and further development of the Court's case-law in Telaustria (3) and Coname. (4)

2. While Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, (5) which has been replaced in the meantime by the legislative package', covers awards in respect of emergency services, which are the services at issue in the present case, it covers only contracts in writing.

II - Legal context

A - Community law

3. This case involves primarily the freedom to provide services, that is to say Article 49 EC.

4. Article 86 EC is also to be noted. Article 86(1) imposes obligations on Member States with regard to particular undertakings. Article 86(2), on the other hand, lays down obligations for particular undertakings, above all for undertakings entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest.

B - National law

5. Section 65(1) of the Health Act 1953 provides:

A health board may, subject to any general directions given by the Minister and on such terms and conditions as it sees fit to impose, give assistance in any one or more of the following ways to any body which provides or proposes to provide a service similar or ancillary to a service that the health board may provide:

(a) by contributing to the expenses incurred by the body,

6. Section 25 of the Fire Services Act 1981 provides:

A fire authority [section 9 of the Act provides that local authorities are fire authorities] may carry out or assist in any operations of an emergency nature, whether or not a risk of fire is involved, and a fire authority may accordingly make such provision for the rescue or safeguarding of persons and protection of property as it considers necessary for the purposes of that function.'

III - Facts, pre-litigation procedure and proceedings before the Court

7. The Commission learnt following a complaint of the manner in which emergency ambulance services were allocated in Ireland. Since the Commission was of the view that the award should have been advertised in accordance with Directive 92/50, it entered into an exchange of correspondence with Ireland. The correspondence concerned the question whether there was a contract to which certain advertising requirements should have applied.

8. On 28 November 2001 the Commission requested from the Irish authorities information on the relationship between Dublin City Council (DCC') and the Eastern Regional Health Authority (the Authority'). Since the Commission received no reply, it initiated the Treaty infringement procedure under Article 226 EC.

9. In their response of 18 June 2002, the Irish authorities stated that the services provided by DCC and paid for by the Authority under section 65(1)(a) of the Health Act 1953 were provided by DCC independently as principal' and not pursuant to any contract with, or under any control or supervision of, the Authority. Moreover, such services had been provided for decades.

10. In its letter of 9 August 2002, the Commission requested from the Irish authorities all relevant documents in order to determine the relationship between DCC and the Authority.

11. The Department of Health and Children replied on 19 September 2002, attaching a number of documents.

12. The Commission maintained its position that there was a breach of Community law and on 17 December 2002 sent Ireland a reasoned opinion under Article 226 EC. By letter of 14 February 2003, the Irish authorities sent a detailed reply to the Commission. The Commission was not satisfied by this reply.

13. In its application, the Commission claims that the Court should:

1. declare that, in permitting emergency ambulance services to be provided by Dublin City Council without the Eastern Regional Health Authority undertaking any prior advertising, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty;

2. order Ireland to pay the Commission's costs.

14. Ireland contends that the Court should:

1. dismiss the Commission's application;

2. order the Commission to pay Ireland's costs.

IV - Submissions of the principal parties and the intervener

A - The Commission

15. The Commission submits that although, in the absence of a contract in writing, the basis upon which the emergency ambulance services are performed does not fall within the scope of Directive 92/50, certain obligations do arise from the fundamental freedoms, in particular Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, and from general principles of law. Those general principles undoubtedly include the principle of transparency and the principle of equality or non-discrimination. The Commission refers in this connection to the decisions in Telaustria and Vestergaard.

16. While the Member States are free to opt for a particular procedure, they must in so doing comply with the requirements of Community law. An appropriate form of advertising must therefore be undertaken. The advertising to be undertaken depends on the nature of the service and on the class of undertakings for which the service is of interest.

17. The Commission considers that its interpretative communication on concessions under Community law (6) constitutes a guide in this regard.

18. It is apparent from a number of letters, in particular one written by DCC's Finance Officer and Treasurer dated 15 January 1999, that certain arrangements regarding the services to be performed were entered into in June 1998. This also led to a contract being drafted, whose categorisation under national law is immaterial for the purposes of Community law.

19. The Commission therefore rejects Ireland's argument that the services have not been performed for the Authority. The tasks discharged by the Authority indeed involve, amongst others, monitoring the performance of the services. While DCC may be under no obligation to provide the services, the Authority must ensure their provision. This is clear, for example, from the draft contract mentioned above.

20. If Ireland argues that performance - without prior advertising - of the services is founded on section 65(1)(a) of the Health Act, this merely means that that provision infringes Articles 43 EC and 49 EC. In the Commission's submission, however, that provision merely empowers the Authority to enter into an arrangement. It does not prevent the Authority from calling for tenders. The nature of the service and its lack of attraction for undertakings do not mean that all advertisement can be dispensed with.

21. Nor is the approach adopted rendered lawful by the fact that the Authority would not outsource the services at issue if DCC did not provide them.

22. It is also not correct that the exception in Article 6 of Directive 92/50 is applicable.

23. Finally, the argument according to which the provision of services of general economic interest within the meaning of Article 86(2) EC is involved must be rejected. Compliance with the obligations arising under the EC Treaty does not obstruct performance of the particular tasks assigned. Besides, it is unclear whether DCC or the Authority is to be regarded as the undertaking entrusted with operation of the services.

24. In arguing that emergency ambulance services are provided free of charge, Ireland confuses the services drawn on by individuals with those provided vis-à-vis the Authority.

25. The Commission observes with regard to Ireland's submission that DCC is not reimbursed all its costs that that is immaterial, and moreover disputes the truth of the submission.

26. The Commission submits with regard to the Netherlands Government's view that application of the fundamental freedoms requires a cross-border element that that is the case here.

27. The restriction referred to by the Netherlands Government relating to the precedence accorded to harmonising provisions rests on a false understanding of the case-law cited. Moreover, Directive 92/50 itself requires application of the principle of non-discrimination, in Article 3(2).

28. The view that the requirement of transparency applies only where a voluntary tendering procedure is conducted must be rejected, as must the view that in the present case grounds of justification exist or the requirements of Article 86(2) EC are met.

29. The Commission stresses with regard to the appropriate degree of publicity that advertisement nationally or internationally is not required in all cases, and that notification given to specific firms may suffice. The carrying out of an award procedure as under the directives is not required.

B - Ireland

30. Ireland disputes the need for advertising in respect of the services at issue.

31. Fundamentally the Commission is challenging the existence of an arrangement and not a new award. The provisions relied upon by the Commission are, however, inapplicable thereto. The alteration of existing arrangements cannot be required.

32. Nor is there a contract or contractual arrangement of any kind between DCC and the Authority. The arrangement' of June 1998 concerns an interinstitutional arrangement between two statutory bodies and negotiations on the contribution to DCC's costs.

33. DCC acts pursuant to statutory powers of its own, and in its own name. Nor is it subject to the Authority's control. The costs contribution made by the Authority does not constitute consideration and does not fully cover the costs.

34. Ireland points out that the services at issue fall under Annex I B to Directive 92/50. Even if a contract had been concluded in writing, under Article 9 of the directive only the less stringent regime would be applicable, that is to say Articles 14 and 16. In the contrary case the Commission would have had to propose an appropriate amendment to the directive.

35. It follows from the fact that emergency ambulance services are provided free of charge in Ireland that they are not services normally provided for remuneration. Articles 43 EC and 49 EC are therefore also not applicable. Nor is there any discrimination against foreign private undertakings.

36. Ireland further submits that the Court's case-law in Telaustria and Bellini (7) which is cited by the Commission is not relevant.

37. Article 295 EC leaves the Member States free to choose the rules governing the system of property ownership.

38. Finally, reference should be made to the special provisions for services of general economic interest under Articles 16 EC and 86(2) EC.

C - The intervener

39. The Kingdom of the Netherlands, which has intervened in the proceedings in support of Ireland, notes that the principle of transparency does not mean that there is an obligation to apply the requirements of Directive 92/50. Furthermore, a series of exceptions to that principle exists. First, here there is no connecting factor with the internal market. Freedom to provide services is not affected. There are no grounds for examining compliance with the principle of non-discrimination. If the threshold under the directives is not reached, the requirement of transparency is also inapplicable.

40. Second, the requirement of transparency also does not apply in so far as secondary Community legislation lays down corresponding provisions. Nor does it operate in cases in respect of which the public procurement directives lay down an exception, such as Articles 4 and 6 of Directive 92/50. Since the directives provide for minimum harmonisation with regard to transparency, the Member States are of course free to go further.

41. Third, a Member State is required to observe the principles of the EC Treaty only where a tendering procedure is initiated.

42. Fourth, it must be examined whether grounds of justification exist or the requirements of Article 86(2) EC are met.

43. With regard to the content of the requirement of transparency, the Netherlands Government submits that it must be determined what the appropriate degree of publicity is. That is to be left in every award procedure to the contracting authority. In October 2005 the Commission put forward a draft interpretative communication, which concerns the requirement of transparency. It is therefore high time that the Court determined more precisely the content of that requirement.

V - Appraisal

A - Preliminary remarks

44. It must be stated with regard to the form of order sought by the Commission that the latter has applied only for a declaration that the provision of certain services is contrary to Community law. That, by its nature, involves conduct of the defendant Member State in the past and, to be more precise, at a particular time, namely upon expiry of the period set in the reasoned opinion. In principle, therefore, the subsequent adherence to certain conduct, including toleration, can also be the subject-matter of a failure to fulfil obligations under Article 226 EC.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

45. The form of order sought by the Commission does not concern the equally interesting issue of whether and how a particular contract or concession awarder has the obligation to terminate a contract that has been concluded. For Ireland, however, this question arises in so far as it will be obliged under Article 228(1) EC, if the arrangement is declared unlawful, to take the measures necessary to comply with the judgment of the Court. (8)

46. The Commission's action is limited to an application for a declaration that the particular activity should have been advertised. By this, the Commission would appear to mean a form of contract notice.

47. This action for failure to fulfil obligations is therefore not intended to determine the form which the approach adopted in respect of the particular award would have taken, but only that it was in any event impermissible for there to be no contract notice at all.

48. According to the Court's case-law, Article 49 EC prohibits restrictions on freedom to provide services within the European Community in respect of nationals of Member States who are established in a State of the Community other than that of the person for whom the services are intended. Furthermore, it is settled case-law that that provision requires the elimination of any restriction, even if it applies to national providers of services and to those of other Member States alike, when it is liable to prohibit or impede the activities of a provider of services established in another Member State where he lawfully provides similar services'. (9)

49. With regard to the legal bases whose infringement is to be examined in the present proceedings, the broad formulation of the form of order sought by the Commission, which complains of a failure to fulfil obligations under the Treaty', means that not only Articles 43 EC and 49 EC may require consideration, but also general principles of law and Article 10 EC. The latter provision may require consideration in the form of the requirement for equivalence and effectiveness. (10)

50. According to the Court's case-law, (11) provisions of primary law apply if the award is not governed by any of the directives. This precondition is met with regard to the award at issue here because, as the parties to the dispute correctly submit, in the absence of a contract in writing it is not covered by Directive 92/50.

51. The process which forms the basis for this action for failure to fulfil obligations relates to a specific mechanism concerning the use of public funds for specific services. Ireland itself acknowledges that a certain form of arrangement exists.

52. As the judgment in Commission v Spain demonstrates, the public procurement directives also cover cooperation agreements between the public authorities and other public bodies. (12) The fact that that case concerned agreements that were in writing is of no consequence for the present action since it concerns not compliance with a condition laid down in the directives but the application of primary law. Even less strict requirements than under the directives apply in the case of primary law, so far as the nature of the relations is concerned. It is in any event not in dispute that the present proceedings also involve two mutually distinguishable bodies.

53. Application of the freedom to provide services stands at the heart of the present proceedings. That presupposes that the subject-matter of the contested award constitutes services' within the meaning of Article 50 EC.

54. The view could be taken that normally ambulance services or emergency ambulance services are not paid for directly by the person who avails himself of the service, but that the costs are met by insurance or borne directly by the State budget. Since it suffices under the Court's case-law in the very area of health care (13) if the payment for a service is made by a third party, detailed examination of the accounting system for the services at issue is superfluous. It is in any event not in dispute that the East Coast Area Health Board pays a contribution'. There is accordingly no need for the purpose of the present proceedings to clarify how great its share of the actual costs is.

B - Principle: requirement of transparency

55. The present action for failure to fulfil obligations is concerned with the question whether the requirement of transparency was infringed in a specific process.

56. As already explained in my Opinion in Coname , transparency under just the directives encompasses a whole series of aspects. (14) The present proceedings concern only particular advertising obligations relating to the allocation of particular services.

57. According to the Court's case-law, it is necessary to ensure, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the service concession to be opened up to competition and... procedures to be reviewed'. (15) This requirement indeed applies not only to awards which fall outside Directive 92/50 because they take the form of a concession but also to awards which are not covered by this, or another, public procurement directive for other reasons. It may be added here purely for the sake of clarification that the same standard does not apply to all awards irrespective of their subject-matter and their value.

58. The criterion for assessing the legality of the defendant Member State's action is whether an appropriate degree of transparency was ensured.

59. It must therefore be examined whether in the specific case the lack of a call for tenders infringes that requirement. As the Court stated in Coname , it must be determined whether the award... complies with transparency requirements which, without necessarily implying an obligation to hold an invitation to tender, are, in particular, such as to ensure that an undertaking located in the territory of [another] Member State... can have access to appropriate information regarding that concession before it is awarded, so that, if that undertaking had so wished, it would have been in a position to express its interest in obtaining that concession'. (16)

60. It can thus be inferred from the case-law that what is appropriate is to be determined having regard to the persons interested in the particular award. In this connection, account is to be taken not only of persons who are actually interested: those interested also include all potentially interested persons in other Member States.

61. Thus, the degree of transparency which satisfies this requirement must be chosen. The question is, however, whether that must necessarily be in the form of a call for tenders (tender notice).

1. Need for a call for tenders?

62. It must be determined first of all whether primary law requires a call for tenders in all cases.

63. That view might be supported by the judgments of the First Chamber in Parking Brixen and ANAV , (17) in which the Court held that the Member States must not maintain in force national legislation which permits the award of public service concessions without their being put out to competition [ohne eine Ausschreibung', that is to say without a call for tenders', in the German version] since such an award infringes Article 43 EC or 49 EC or the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency'.

64. However, there would appear to be an inaccuracy in the German version of those judgments. The French version in both cases, and similarly the Italian version in ANAV , speak of mise en concurrence' and a procedura concorrenziale' respectively. Reference is therefore deliberately not being made to an appel d'offres' or a bando di gara', that is to say to a tender notice for the purposes of the public procurement directives.

65. Besides, the Court expressly points out in the judgment delivered by the Grand Chamber in Coname that primary law does not in all cases require advertising in the form of a call for tenders (tender notice). (18)

66. That judgment of the Court is therefore to be regarded as the leading decision and thus forms the starting point for the assessment below. Apart from the fact that the judgment in Coname was delivered by the Grand Chamber and that the other judgments contain linguistic inaccuracies, this also follows from a consideration of principle.

67. The view that an award without a tender notice (call for tenders) and the direct contacting of specific undertakings are universally impermissible cannot be followed if only because even the public procurement directives provide for exceptions to such an obligation to advertise. The Commission itself expressly points out that, for it, it is not a question of transposing the obligations to advertise under Directive 92/50 into primary law. If a tender notice were always required under primary law, contracting authorities would be subject to stricter rules outside the public procurement directives than within their field of application.

68. In addition, certain exceptions to the requirement to comply with the obligations of primary law were recognised by the Court in Coname . Those exceptions are still to be addressed separately.

69. It therefore remains to be stated that there can be procurement for which no call for tenders (tender notice) is required to be issued.

70. In this context, it appears to me necessary to recall the view that I have already expressed in my Opinion in Coname (19) that there is no uniform set of procurement rules under primary law and that instead it is appropriate to draw distinctions according to the circumstances of the particular award. The present proceedings offer the Court an opportunity to provide the necessary clarification.

2. Differentiation according to the particular award

71. The starting point must therefore be the principle that the details of the requirement of transparency depend on the circumstances of each particular case.

72. The following observations concern, in accordance with the subject-matter of this action for failure to fulfil obligations, the conditions under which advertising may be dispensed with and whether they were met in this specific case.

73. Guidance is provided by the principle that review must be possible and the principles of proportionality and equal treatment. Also, regard is to be had to the objectives of all Community procurement law, such as safeguarding competition and the internal market, and to the effet utile' of the provisions of primary law.

74. The content of the obligation of transparency in each case depends on various factors, such as the subject-matter - that is to say whether services, the supply of goods, or works are involved - and the estimated value of the contract.

75. Since the present proceedings concern services falling within Annex I B to Directive 92/50, that is to say non-priority services, it must be examined whether the distinction drawn in the directive between priority and non-priority services is also relevant to primary law.

76. This categorisation found in the directives would appear to be based on the idea, applicable to procurement generally, that some awards are of greater relevance to the internal market than others, that is to say they are of interest to a wider group of economic operators - to be more precise, also to undertakings from other Member States. This could be a matter relevant particularly to application of the fundamental freedoms, given that they require a cross-border element. (20)

77. While it is true that the Community legislature made only certain categories of services, namely priority services, subject to the full regime under Directive 92/50, that cannot automatically be taken to mean that other services, namely non-priority services, are not relevant to the internal market, that is to say that they essentially could not be provided from another State. Even though the Community legislature retained this split when the rules were amended, that is to say in Directive 2004/18, and used the same reasoning, (21) that does not in itself preclude as a matter of principle the application of primary law.

78. If a presumption were to be applied that non-priority services are of no interest to tenderers from other Member States, the Commission would have to furnish proof in an action for failure to fulfil obligations that the award at issue nevertheless does potentially have transnational interest.

79. It is true that the Commission is in principle obliged in an action for failure to fulfil obligations to prove its submissions with regard to both the facts and the law. This might be taken to mean that the Commission must show, by way of a market analysis, which economic operators have an interest in the proposed award as potential competitors; in this connection the value and subject-matter of the contract play a decisive role.

80. Neither the written nor the oral submissions of the Commission satisfy those requirements. On the basis of this strict standard for allocation of the burden of proof, the Commission's claims would have to be rejected as unfounded.

81. However, it is not to be overlooked in this context that hitherto the Court has not applied such a strict standard in relation to procurement. (22) Rather, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it would probably proceed on the basis that awards of a certain order of magnitude are, in the event of doubt, potentially of interest to undertakings from other Member States.

82. Thus, the principle remains in the present proceedings that as much information is to be given as potentially interested undertakings need to enable them to decide whether to participate in the award procedure or to submit a tender. Under no circumstances does primary law require the details which the models laid down in the public procurement directives prescribe for notices. (23)

83. It is not to be inferred from the documents in the case or the hearing that the specific features of the particular award are such as to warrant no advertising at all. Neither the annual value nor the subject-matter of the services supports the conclusion that such an omission is in conformity with Community law.

84. It must therefore now be examined whether it was possible for that omission to be founded on exceptions expressly provided for in primary law, or on the grounds of justification recognised by the case-law on the fundamental freedoms generally or relating to procurement.

85. Since in the case in point no advertising at all of the planned services took place, there is, however, no need to examine in detail what publication medium should have been chosen and what the minimum content of the advertising should have been.

C - Exceptions and grounds of justification

86. It is now to be investigated whether, because the effects of the restrictions are slight, the fundamental freedoms are not affected, whether the defendant Member State can rely on one of the Treaty rules providing for a general exemption of measures of the Member States from the application of primary law, whether one of the grounds of justification expressly provided for in the Treaty or a ground of justification recognised by case-law applies, and whether Article 86(2) EC is applicable. Finally it must be examined whether the exceptions in the directives, in particular Article 6 of Directive 92/50, are to be applied as such or by analogy.

1. Slight effects of the award

87. In Coname , the Court took up again a line of case-law, developed in the context of the free movement of goods, in accordance with which, because of special circumstances, such as a very modest economic interest at stake, it could reasonably be maintained that an undertaking located in [another] Member State... would have no interest in the concession at issue and that the effects on the fundamental freedoms concerned should therefore be regarded as too uncertain and indirect to warrant the conclusion that they may have been infringed'. (24)

88. Apart from the fact that it is open to question where the limit lies as to what is modest', the award at issue, having a value of several million Irish punts per year, in any event does not satisfy those requirements. In 2001 the annual value of the services is supposed already to have amounted to more than IEP 7 000 000. This indeed exceeded by far the threshold value under Directive 92/50.

2. Grounds of justification expressly laid down in the Treaty

89. First, the Treaty rules are to be noted that provide, even if subject to certain conditions, for a general exemption of measures of the Member States from the application of primary law. In relation to procurement, it is above all the exemptions relating to security that are relevant, to be more precise Articles 296 EC and 297 EC. These exemptions cannot, however, apply in the case in point, in the absence of any basis therefor.

90. In addition, the Member States can rely on the grounds of justification expressly provided for in the Treaty under Article 46 EC in conjunction with Article 55 EC, such as public policy or public health. In the case in point it is, however, to be observed that the defendant Member State has not defended itself in such a way as to have proved the presence of a ground of justification of this kind. (25)

91. A justification relating to official authority, that is to say one based on Article 45 EC, required that certain conditions be met. It is settled case-law that, as derogations from the fundamental rule of freedom of establishment, Articles 45 EC and 55 EC must be interpreted in a manner which limits their scope to what is strictly necessary for safeguarding the interests which those provisions allow the Member States to protect'. (26)

92. According to settled case-law, derogation under those articles must be restricted to activities which in themselves are directly and specifically connected with the exercise of official authority. (27)

93. Here, however, the conditions specified in the case-law in order for these expressly prescribed grounds to apply are not met.

3. Grounds of justification not expressly laid down in the Treaty or requirements in the general interest

94. Under the Court's case-law, (28) which in principle can also be applied in relation to procurement, (29) restrictions on freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services can be justified if they satisfy certain conditions.

95. According to that case-law, the restrictions must be justified by imperative requirements in the general interest, be suitable for achieving the objective which they pursue and not go beyond what is necessary in order to attain it. They must in any event be applied without discrimination.

96. However, the defendant Member State has been unable to demonstrate that grounds of justification, or requirements in the general interest, recognised by the Court, for example consumer protection, justify the approach chosen.

97. Finally, reference should be made to the ground of justification, developed by the Court, of objective circumstances'. (30) It is unnecessary to conduct a detailed analysis of this possibility, not explained more precisely by the Court, of justifying certain Member State rules, and in particular of the conditions for the ground's application, because Ireland has made no relevant submissions in this regard.

4. Article 86 EC

98. In the present proceedings Article 86 EC has also been discussed.

99. It must be pointed out with regard to the award in question that strictly speaking it involves the grant of exclusive rights, in the field of emergency services, to be more precise emergency ambulance services.

100. The question arises in this regard whether the very entrustment with such rights, and not just further State measures in relation to undertakings to which the Member States grant special or exclusive rights, is covered by Article 86(1) EC. The Court's case-law yields indications that the very grant of exclusive rights - to be more precise by way of creation of a dominant position - also falls within Article 86(1) EC in conjunction with Article 82 EC. That does not mean, however, that the grant of such rights is automatically prohibited. (31) The question whether their grant, for example grant of the right enabling emergency services to be provided by DCC, is consistent with Community law is to be determined by means of provisions other than Article 86(1) EC. The provisions of substantive law pertinent in this regard include Article 86(2) EC. This provision thus acquires a relevance that extends beyond measures of the undertakings covered by it to State measures.

101. However, the present proceedings are concerned not with the vesting of rights in the Authority but with the Authority's actions in the context of the provision of essential services, to be more precise the awards made by it, namely the assignment of emergency services to DCC. It is in relation to the conduct of the bodies in which specific rights have been vested that Article 86(2) EC is of legal significance.

102. So far as concerns the assignment of emergency services to DCC, it must be examined whether the Authority satisfies the conditions of Article 86(2) EC, that is to say whether it is an undertaking that is entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest and whether the application of the provisions of primary law would have obstructed the performance, in law or in fact, of the tasks assigned to it.

103. It must in principle be acknowledged that, because of the lead time involved and the period to be specified for the submission of tenders, the carrying out of an award procedure entailing a call for tenders can in certain cases obstruct the performance of tasks. That would be true, for example, in the case of a utility company if interruptions or delayed commencement of the energy or water supply were to result.

104. In light of the Court's case-law, it must therefore be examined to what extent a restriction on competition or even the exclusion of all competition from other economic operators was necessary to enable the holder of the exclusive right to perform its task of general interest, and in particular to have the benefit of economically acceptable conditions. (32)

105. Even though it is not necessary that the survival of the undertaking itself would have been threatened had a call for tenders been issued, it should at least be proved that the performance, in law or in fact, of the special obligations incumbent upon that undertaking would have been obstructed. (33)

106. The defendant Member State has not been able to demonstrate that the approach adopted was necessary to enable DCC to perform its task in economically acceptable conditions.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

107. There is accordingly no need to examine whether DCC is in fact an undertaking to which tasks of general economic interest were assigned.

108. It should, moreover, be pointed out in this context that, being a provision permitting derogation from the Treaty rules, Article 86(2) EC must be interpreted strictly. (34) Nor, in the present proceedings, does Article 16 EC change anything.

5. Application of exceptions under the directives

109. Finally, consideration is to be given to the application of exceptions to the duty first to publish a (contract) notice which are laid down in the directives.

110. It is necessary to proceed on the basis of the principle that, within the field of application of primary law, precisely the same rules cannot apply in respect of the award procedure as under the directives. This admittedly does not prevent many requirements, for example the prohibition of discrimination, from also applying outside the directives - though pursuant to another legal basis, for example a general principle of law.

111. As has already been pointed out a number of times, (35) exceptions corresponding to those which the directives (36) lay down ought in any event to be recognised in the context of primary law. It thus cannot be ruled out that there may also be cases in which an award procedure may be conducted without a prior contract notice, that is to say without advertising.

112. It must, however, be stated here with regard to this kind of exception that the defendant Member State has not relied on any of the exceptions laid down in Directive 92/50 for conducting a negotiated procedure without a contract notice.

6. Article 6 of Directive 92/50

113. In the proceedings the applicability of Article 6 of Directive 92/50 was discussed a number of times. This provision removes public service contracts from the directive's field of application subject to certain conditions - inter alia the service provider must have an exclusive right.

114. It must be pointed out, as a matter of principle, with regard to the applicability of this exception that it can have effect only where the award actually falls within Directive 92/50. Since it is, however, not in dispute that other conditions required in order for Directive 92/50 to apply are already not met, there is no need to examine whether an exclusive right exists in the present case.

115. In an action for failure to fulfil obligations, it is for the defendant State to put forward possible reasons why the provisions of Community law do not apply. In the present proceedings, the discussion has, however, been limited to Article 6 of Directive 92/50 in the strict sense.

116. The parties have not discussed in any detail whether a comparable exception exists in primary law, possibly as a ground of justification or objective circumstance' within the meaning of Coname , with the effect that such processes are exempt even from the application of primary law.

D - Conclusion

117. Overall, examination of the process complained of by the Commission has shown that there were no circumstances which would have allowed the services at issue to be performed without any advertising being undertaken.

118. It is true that there can be procurement procedures for which advertising can be entirely dispensed with, but in the case in point such circumstances were simply not present or at least have not been proved.

VI - Costs

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

119. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since Ireland is unsuccessful and the Commission has applied for Ireland to pay its costs, Ireland should accordingly be ordered to pay those costs. Pursuant to the first subparagraph of Article 69(4) of the Rules of Procedure, the Kingdom of the Netherlands which has intervened in the proceedings should bear its own costs.

VII - Conclusion

120. In accordance with all of the foregoing, I propose that the Court should:

(1) declare that, in permitting emergency ambulance services to be provided by Dublin City Council without the Eastern Regional Health Authority undertaking any prior advertising, although there were no circumstances which would have permitted Ireland to proceed in such a way, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty;

(2) order Ireland to pay the Commission's costs;

(3) order the Kingdom of the Netherlands to bear its own costs.

Judgment of the Court (Second Chamber) of 27 October 2005

Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - National rules ceasing to have any legal effect before the expiry of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion - Inadmissibility of the action. Case C-525/03.

Actions for failure to fulfil obligations - Infringement terminated before the expiry of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion - Inadmissibility

(Art. 226, second para., EC)

Under the second paragraph of Article 226 EC, the Commission may bring an action for failure to fulfil obligations before the Court only if the Member State concerned has failed to comply with the reasoned opinion within the period laid down by the Commission for that purpose.

Furthermore, the question whether a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations must be determined by reference to the situation prevailing in the Member State at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion.

An action for failure to fulfil obligations is therefore inadmissible where the national measure which is the sole object of the action has been exhausted before the period laid down in the reasoned opinion expired and even before the letter of formal notice was sent.

1. By its application the Commission of the European Communities requests the Court to declare that, by adopting Articles 1(2) and 2(1) to (3) of Ordinance No 3231 of the President of the Council of Ministers of 24 July 2002 introducing urgent measures for aerial forest firefighting on national territory (GURI No 177, 30 July 2002, p. 42; the contested order'), which authorise recourse to private negotiations by way of derogation from the Community directives on public supply and service contracts and, in particular, from the common rules on advertising and participation laid down by Titles III and IV of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001 (OJ 2001 L 285, p. 1; Directive 93/36'), and by Titles III and V of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by Directive 2001/78 (Directive 92/50'), for the acquisition of aircraft to combat forest fires and for the acquisition of firefighting services and which similarly allow for recourse to the aforementioned procedure for the acquisition of technical and computer equipment and two-way radios, without any of the lawful conditions for derogation from those common rules being satisfied and, in any event, without ensuring any form of direct advertising such as to permit a competitive comparison between potential tenderers, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the said Directives and Articles 43 EC and 49 EC.

Facts

2. The contested ordinance was made in application of the decree of the President of the Council of Ministers of 28 June 2002 declaring a state of emergency until 31 October 2002 on the national territory for the purposes of aerial forest firefighting (GURI No 161, 11 July 2002, p. 4).

3. That ordinance authorised the Corpo forestale dello Stato (National Forest Rangers), firstly, to purchase aircraft to combat forest fires by private negotiated contract, by derogation from the statutory provisions listed in Article 4 [of that ordinance]', that is to say in particular from the national legislation transposing Directives 92/50 and 93/36 and, secondly, to obtain, also by privately negotiated contract, two-way radio equipment for communication with firefighting aircraft. It moreover permitted the Dipartimento della protezione civile (Department of Civil Protection) to have recourse to private negotiation for the acquisition of equipment to reinforce its technological and computing resources, and for the acquisition and implementation of aerial forest firefighting services.

4. Pursuant to the contested ordinance, the Ministero delle Politiche agricole e forestali (Italian Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry) adopted Decree No 1619/2002 on 28 October 2002, authorising and approving a contract concluded with the company Agusta SpA, by private negotiation within the meaning of the said ordinance, relating to the supply of two helicopters, accompanying equipment, technical assistance, spare parts and all items necessary for the functioning of those aircraft.

The pre-litigation procedure

5. The Commission considered that the provisions of the contested ordinance authorising the award of supply and service contracts by the negotiated procedure in cases not covered by Directives 92/50 and 93/36 were contrary to those directives and to Articles 43 EC and 49 EC and, on 19 December 2002, sent the Italian Republic a letter of formal notice calling upon it to submit within one month its observations on the failure of which it was accused.

6. Not satisfied with the observations submitted by the Italian Government in reply to that letter, the Commission sent the Italian Republic a reasoned opinion on 3 April 2003 requesting it to take the measures necessary to comply with the reasoned opinion within one month of notification thereof and, in particular, to repeal or amend certain provisions of the contested ordinance and to annul and render void the acts and measures taken for the purposes of the award of public contracts on the basis of those provisions and, where contracts had been concluded, to suspend their performance.

7. Since the Commission was not convinced by the Italian Republic's responses to the reasoned opinion, it decided to bring the present proceedings.

Admissibility of the action

8. It is appropriate at the outset to emphasise that the Court may of its own motion examine the question whether the conditions laid down in Article 226 EC for the bringing of an action for failure to fulfil obligations are satisfied (see, inter alia, Case C-362/90 Commission v Italy [1992] ECR I-2353, paragraph 8, and Case C-439/99 Commission v Italy [2002] ECR I-305, paragraph 8).

9. It is of no effect in that regard that, in reply to a question put at the hearing, the Italian Republic submitted that the action was admissible although in the defence it claimed that the action was devoid of purpose on the ground that the contested ordinance had ceased to produce any effect even before the Commission disputed its legitimacy or sought to have it set aside.

10. Nor is the fact that the Italian Republic did not acknowledge the failure of which it was accused, a fact also evoked by the Commission at the hearing in support of the admissibility of its action, of any relevance since the procedure for a declaration of a failure on the part of a Member State to fulfil an obligation is based on the objective finding that a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty or secondary legislation (see, inter alia, Case C-71/97 Commission v Spain [1998] ECR I-5991, paragraph 14, and Case C-83/99 Commission v Spain [2001] ECR I-445, paragraph 23).

11. It is appropriate, firstly, to state, as is clear from the form of order sought in the application initiating proceedings, that the present action for failure to fulfil obligations is limited to Articles 1(2) and 2(1) to (3) of the contested ordinance and does not seek to call into question the subsequent acts adopted pursuant to that ordinance, which were nevertheless explicitly mentioned in the reasoned opinion.

12. It is important, secondly, to recall that the Commission, in exercising its powers under the second paragraph of Article 226 EC, has the function, in the general interest of the Community, of ensuring that the Member States give effect to the Treaty and the provisions adopted by the institutions thereunder and of obtaining a declaration of any failure to fulfil the obligations deriving therefrom with a view to bringing it to an end (see, to that effect, Case C-431/92 Commission v Germany [1995] ECR I2189, paragraph 21, and Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 Commission v Germany [2003] ECR I-3609, paragraph 29).

13. In that regard, it follows from the very terms of the second paragraph of Article 226 EC that the Commission may bring an action for failure to fulfil obligations before the Court only if the Member State concerned has failed to comply with the reasoned opinion within the period laid down by the Commission for that purpose (see Case C-362/90 Commission v Italy , cited above, paragraph 9).

14. It is, furthermore, settled case-law that the question whether a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations must be determined by reference to the situation prevailing in the Member State at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion (see, inter alia, Case C-362/90 Commission v Italy , cited above, paragraph 10, Case C-173/01 Commission v Greece [2002] ECR I-6129, paragraph 7, and Case C-114/02 Commission v France [2003] ECR I-3783, paragraph 9).

15. It must be stated that the contested ordinance had ceased to produce any legal effect at the expiry date of the state of emergency declared on Italian territory until 31 October 2002 by the decree of the President of the Council of Ministers of 28 June 2002, the duration for the application of that ordinance being limited to that fixed by the decree.

16. The effects intrinsic to the contested ordinance, which was no longer in force from 1 November

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

2002, had, as a consequence, been exhausted before the period laid down in the reasoned opinion expired and even before the letter of formal notice was sent. Since it relates only to that single ordinance, the failure of which the Italian Republic is accused in the present action, even if established, could in any event no longer have existed at the time that period expired.

17. It follows from all the foregoing that the Commission's application must be dismissed as inadmissible.

Costs

18. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. The Italian Republic has not applied for costs against the Commission. Consequently, each party shall bear its own costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby:

1. Dismisses the action as inadmissible.

2. Orders the Commission of the European Communities and the Italian Republic to bear their own costs.

[1] - OJ C 59 of 06.03.2004

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Jacobs delivered on 2 June 2005. Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - National rules ceasing to have any legal effect before the expiry of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion - Inadmissibility of the action. Case C-525/03.

1. In the present case, the Commission alleges that, by adopting certain provisions authorising recourse to a negotiated procedure without publication of a tender notice for the acquisition of forest firefighting equipment and services, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/36/EEC (2) and Articles 43 and 49 EC.

Relevant legislation

Community legislation

2. Directive 93/36 coordinates procedures for the award of public supply contracts, and Directive 92/50 (3) coordinates procedures for the award of public service contracts, by State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law. (4)

3. The directives provide for three types of procedure:

- open procedures', in which all interested suppliers may submit tenders;

- restricted procedures', in which only those suppliers invited by the contracting authorities may submit tenders; and

- negotiated procedures', in which contracting authorities consult suppliers of their choice and negotiate the terms of the contract with one or more of them. (5)

4. As a general rule, contracting authorities are to award supply and service contracts by an open or a restricted procedure. (6)

5. However, in a number of exceptional cases, they may award contracts by negotiated procedure, without prior publication of a tender notice.

6. For supply contracts, those cases are set out in Article 6(3) of Directive 93/36 and include, in so far as is relevant:

(c) when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with protection of exclusive rights, the products supplied may be manufactured or delivered only by a particular supplier;

(d) in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable by the contracting authorities in question, the time-limit laid down for the open, restricted or negotiated procedures referred to in paragraph 2 [(7)] cannot be kept. The circumstances invoked to justify extreme urgency must not in any event be attributable to the contracting authorities;

(e) for additional deliver[ie]s by the original supplier which are intended either as a partial replacement of normal supplies or installations or as the extension of existing supplies or installations where a change of supplier would oblige the contracting authority to acquire material having different technical characteristics which would result in incompatibility or disproportionate technical difficulties in operation and maintenance. The length of such contracts as well as that of recurrent contracts may, as a general rule, not exceed three years.'

7. For service contracts, they are set out in Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50, in slightly different terms:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(b) when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the services may be provided only by a particular service provider;

...

(d) in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable by the contracting authorities in question, the time-limit for the open, restricted or negotiated procedures [(8)] referred to in Articles 17 to 20 cannot be kept. The circumstances invoked to justify extreme urgency must not in any event be attributable to the contracting authorities;

...

(f) for new services consisting in the repetition of similar services entrusted to the service provider to which the same contracting authorities awarded an earlier contract, provided that such services conform to a basic project for which a first contract was awarded according to the procedures referred to in paragraph 4. As soon as the first project is put up for tender, notice must be given that the negotiated procedure might be adopted and the total estimated cost of subsequent services shall be taken into consideration by the contracting authorities when they apply the provisions of Article 7. This procedure may be applied solely during the three years following the conclusion of the original contract.'

8. However, even where such exceptions apply, or where the value of contracts falls below the threshold for the application of the directives, (9) the Court has held that the procedure used must comply with the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination as it follows from the provisions of the Treaty on the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services, namely Articles 43 and 49 EC. (10) That principle implies an obligation of transparency which in turn requires a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the market to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed. (11)

National legislation

9. Article 23 quinquies of Law No 61 of 30 March 1998 (12) allocated certain sums for the Corpo Forestale dello Stato (National Forest Rangers, hereinafter Corpo Forestale') to purchase helicopters to combat forest fires in the years 1998 to 2000.

10. Article 5(1) of Law No 225 of 24 February 1992 on national service and civil protection (13) authorises the President of the Council of Ministers to declare a state of emergency in a specified area for a specified period in the case of natural calamities, catastrophes or other events of such magnitude and extent as to require exceptional measures and powers. Article 5(2) allows ordinances to be adopted in such cases, derogating from provisions in force but in compliance with general principles of law, for the purpose of ensuring emergency intervention consequent upon such a declaration.

11. By decree of 28 June 2002, (14) taken on the basis of Article 5(1) of Law No 225 following the outbreak of numerous forest fires, the President of the Council of Ministers declared a state of emergency for the whole of Italy, for the purpose of aerial forest firefighting. The state of emergency was to last until 31 October 2002. By another decree of the same date, (15) a more limited state of emergency was declared in the province of Verbano-Cusio-Ossola, to last until 31 December 2002. The latter state of emergency, but apparently not the former, was subsequently extended until 30 December 2003 (16) and again until 31 July 2004. (17)

12. On 24 July 2002, the President of the Council of Ministers adopted Ordinance No 3231 (the contested ordinance'), (18) concerning aerial forest firefighting, on the basis of: Law No 225, in particular Article 5 thereof; Decree-Law No 343 of 7 September 2001, as converted into Law No 401 of 9 November 2001; (19) and the two abovementioned Decrees of 28 June 2002. (20)

13. Articles 1(2) and 2(1), (2) and (3) of the ordinance (the contested provisions') are the object of the present proceedings.

14. Article 1(2) reads as follows:

In order to improve the operational capacity of airborne units employed in forest firefighting, the Department of Civil Protection is authorised to draw up and implement a special emergency programme to reinforce its technological and computing resources, and may acquire necessary equipment by procedures including privately negotiated contracts.'

15. Article 2(1), (2) and (3) read as follows:

1. In order to respond adequately and with the necessary immediacy to the forest fires occurring throughout the national territory, in pursuance of the aims set out in Article 7(2) of Law No 353 of 21 November 2000, [(21)] in a context of substantial and stable reinforcement of the fleet of aircraft at the disposal of the Department of Civil Protection, having regard to the great variety of emergency situations, and at the same time in order to meet the essential needs of preventing the possible spread of such fires, likely to endanger seriously both persons and property, the Department of Civil Protection is authorised to specify with the utmost urgency such aircraft as are deemed most suitable for the accomplishment of its tasks, concluding, by private negotiation, by derogation from the statutory provisions listed in Article 4 below, [(22)] contracts for the acquisition or implementation of aerial forest firefighting services.

2. In pursuance of the aims set out in Article 7(2) of Law No 353 of 21 November 2000, for the reinforcement of the operational capacity of the airborne units of the Corpo Forestale dello Stato employed in forest firefighting, and in subsequent action dealing with possible civil protection emergencies, the Corpo Forestale is authorised to specify with the utmost urgency such aircraft as are deemed most suitable for the accomplishment of its tasks and of other duties flowing from Article 11 of Law No 225/1992, [(23)] to be acquired by privately negotiated contract, by derogation from the statutory provisions listed in Article 4 below. For that purpose, the Corpo Forestale may also acquire and evaluate the results of tests performed by, and civil protection experience of, other State, regional or local entities, and of any technical research that may have been carried out, in order to achieve the most profitable functional and operational integration possible and the most economical management of the entire State fleet of forest firefighting aircraft. For the acquisition of the aircraft referred to in this paragraph and by derogation from the general rules on government accounting, the Corpo Forestale may also enter into agreements for trading in aircraft in its possession which are intended to be but have not yet been sold.

3. In order to allow the chief fire officer to ensure coordination between ground teams and firefighting aircraft, the Corpo Forestale is authorised to acquire, also by privately negotiated contracts, such radio transceiving equipment and accessories as are necessary for ground-to-air communication with those aircraft when employed in firefighting operations.'

16. The preamble to the ordinance mentions as reasons for its adoption the climatic and meteorological conditions prevailing since the beginning of 2002, with exceptionally high temperatures in June, increasing the risk of forest fires, and the urgent need for aerial firefighting equipment.

Procedure

17. In December 2000, pursuant to Article 23 quinquies of Law No 61/98, the Italian Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry issued two invitations to tender for the supply of a total of 49 helicopters. Those procedures were subsequently suspended and then withdrawn, a matter which gave rise to a complaint to the Commission. Questioned by the Commission, the Italian authorities replied that the step had been taken following the attack on the World Trade Centre in September 2001, since there was a need to ensure that the helicopters could be used in anti-terrorist as well as forest firefighting operations. On 22 July 2002, the Italian authorities informed the Commission that they intended to purchase the helicopters in question, and considered that the con tracts were not subject to Community law, being matters of national security.

18. The contested ordinance was adopted on 24 July 2002, and it appears to be common ground that the only relevant acquisition made pursuant to it was of two AB 412 helicopters, supplied by the Italian company Agusta Bell SpA (Agusta') following a negotiated procedure culminating in a contract signed on 28 October and approved on 31 October 2002.

19. The Commission took the view however that the authorisations contained in the contested ordinance were contrary to Community law and, on 19 December 2002, sent the Italian Government a letter of formal notice, asking it to submit its observations in accordance with Article 226 EC. The Government replied stressing the seriousness of the forest fires in Italy in 2002.

20. The Commission then, on 3 April 2003, sent the Italian Government a reasoned opinion pursuant to Article 226 EC, in which it concluded that the adoption of Articles 1(2) and 2(1), (2) and (3) of the contested ordinance was contrary to Community law. It requested Italy to comply with the opinion within one month.

21. Although the Italian authorities made a number of replies after the expiry of that period, the Commission considers that it has not been informed of any measures taken to comply with the reasoned opinion.

22. It has therefore brought the present action, in which it asks the Court to:

- declare that, by adopting Articles 1(2) and 2(1), (2) and (3) of Ordinance No 3231 of the President of the Council of Ministers of 24 July 2002, which allow for private negotiations by way of derogation from the provisions of the Community directives on public supply and service contracts, and in particular, from the common rules on advertising and participation laid down by Titles III and IV of Directive 93/36 and III and V of Directive 92/50, for the acquisition of aircraft to combat forest fires and for the acquisition of firefighting services and which similarly allow for such negotiations for the acquisition of technical and computer equipment and two-way radios, without any of the lawful conditions for derogation from those common rules being satisfied and, in any event, without ensuring any form of direct advertising such as to permit a competitive comparison between potential tenderers, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/36 of 18 June 1992 and Articles 43 and 49 EC;

- order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

23. Italy contends that the Court should declare the proceedings devoid of purpose or should dismiss the action as unfounded.

Admissibility

24. Italy points out in its written pleadings that the contested ordinance related to a limited period, defined by the duration of the state of emergency which was declared until 31 October 2002.

25. That factor gave rise to some discussion at the hearing as to whether the Commission's action could be regarded as admissible, since the reasoned opinion was not sent until 3 April 2003, and it might be questioned whether the alleged infringement was still in existence at the end of the period of one month laid down for compliance in that opinion.

26. The Commission argued, first, that the contested ordinance did not contain any provision limiting its effects in time or expire by operation of any other legal rule; second, that one of the measures on which it was based, namely the decree declaring a state of emergency in the province of Verbano-Cusio-Ossola, was extended until 31 July 2004; third, that the contract for the supply of two helicopters, concluded on the basis of the contested ordinance, had not been completed by the end of that period, since technical verifications were still being carried out; and, fourth, that if the Court were to find the action inadmissible on the ground envisaged Member States could adopt temporary measures authorising unjustified derogations from the Community procurement rules but escape censure by ensuring that they lapsed or were repealed before the Commission could take legal action.

27. The agent for the Italian Republic agreed that the action was admissible. He expressly acknowledged that, if that were not so, there would be no way of obtaining the requisite judicial scrutiny in cases of this kind.

28. In those circumstances I do not propose to examine the question of the expiry of the contested ordinance as a factor affecting the admissibility of the action. I agree however with both parties that short-term infringements of Community law, of the kind alleged in the present case, should not be immune from the procedure laid down in Article 226 EC merely because of their limited duration.

29. In any event, whether the contested ordinance was still in force or not at the end of the period laid down for compliance in the reasoned opinion, and whatever the situation as regards the procedures commenced on the basis of the ordinance, it is clear that no step was taken by Italy to remedy the alleged infringement, the existence of which it continues to deny.

30. In those circumstances, Italy cannot be considered to have complied with the reasoned opinion and the action cannot be held inadmissible. (24)

The declaration sought

31. The Commission seeks a declaration that by adopting Articles 1(2) and 2(1), (2) and (3) of the contested ordinance, Italy has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 93/36 and Articles 43 and 49 EC.

32. That delimitation of the scope of the application gives rise to two preliminary remarks.

33. First, the Commission has referred to supply procedures commenced and withdrawn before the adoption of the contested ordinance. (25) Those circumstances may explain the Commission's specific interest in the ordinance, and they may be relevant to some of the Commission's arguments concerning the existence of urgency.

34. Second, the discussion in the pleadings has dwelt to some extent on the acquisition of two Agusta AB 412 helicopters on the basis of the contested ordinance. The circumstances of those purchases may throw some light on the circumstances of the adoption of the ordinance.

35. It must however be remembered in both regards that the declaration sought relates solely to the adoption of specific provisions of that ordinance, and not to any actual procurement procedures whenever initiated and on whatever basis.

36. The wording of the declaration sought also gives rise to some rather more substantial observations.

37. That declaration asserts that the contested provisions authorise negotiated procedures by way of derogation from the provisions of the Community directives on public supply and service contracts, and in particular, from the common rules on advertising and participation laid down by Titles III and IV of Directive 93/36/EEC and III and V of Directive 92/50/EEC... without any of the lawful conditions for derogation from those common rules being satisfied and, in any event, without ensuring any form of direct advertising such as to permit a competitive comparison between potential tenderers'.

38. From that, it concludes that Italy has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 93/36 and Articles 43 and 49 EC - but not Directive 92/50.

39. That approach, whilst perfectly coherent with regard to supply contracts governed by Directive 93/36, seems more puzzling where service contracts are concerned.

40. It is true that the Court has held that, even where there is no requirement to comply with the provisions of the services directive, public procurement procedures must comply with the fundamental principles which flow from Articles 43 and 49 EC, in particular the principle of non-discrimination, which implies an obligation of transparency and thus in turn a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the market to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed. (26)

41. Consequently, it may be reasoned, recourse to a privately negotiated procedure where such recourse is not authorised by Directive 92/50 must also offend against those principles, since by definition there will be no advertising.

42. However, that seems an unduly circuitous route to take, particularly when a perfectly straightforward approach is available - and is taken in the strictly parallel context of supply contracts governed by Directive 93/36.

43. The Commission does not offer any direct explanation for the approach it has taken, but one might infer from a passage in the application (27) that it intended to cater for a defence - which the Italian Government has not in fact advanced - to the effect that the service contracts concerned fell below the value threshold for the application of Directive 92/50.

44. However, since the case is concerned with the authorising provisions and not with any procedures carried out under them, even that consideration would be relevant only if those provisions applied expressly and exclusively to contracts whose value was below the threshold, whereas in fact they make no reference to any value whatever.

45. Another point is that the form of order sought refers to the authorisation of recourse to negotiated procedures without any of the conditions for derogation being satisfied and, in any event [comunque], without ensuring any form of direct advertising such as to permit a competitive comparison between potential tenderers'.

46. Yet it cannot be the case that the absence of publicity can infringe Community law in any event.

47. If the conditions for derogation are satisfied, and a negotiated procedure without prior publication of an invitation to tender is thus justified, there can be no requirement for advertising. The principles which flow from the Treaty cannot impose a requirement of publicity which has to be satisfied even when the directives expressly provide for a derogation, or that derogation would be nugatory.

48. That must in my view apply by analogy even if the value of a particular contract is below the threshold for application of the relevant directive. (28) Where circumstances would normally justify recourse to a negotiated procedure, it would be absurd for that justification to be lost where the value of the contract falls below the threshold laid down in the directive.

49. Consequently, the separate reference to a lack of publicity, in the context of Articles 43 and 49 EC, could be relevant only in cases where a particular contract fell outside the scope of the relevant directive and there were no circumstances which would have justified a derogation of the kind authorised by the directive.

50. In the present case, however, the authorisation contained in the contested provisions is in no way confined to such situations.

51. Overall, the formulation of the declaration sought does not appear particularly consistent or clear, a circumstance which does not assist the Court in its assessment.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

52. However, on analysis the issue is simply whether any of the lawful conditions for derogation from the common rules in Directive 93/36 or, as the case may be, Directive 92/50 are present.

Substance

53. The authorisation contained in the contested provisions can be legitimate only if justified by one of the derogations in Article 6(3) of Directive 93/36, or Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50.

54. Italy does not in fact specifically invoke Directive 92/50. That may be due to an excessive concern with the two contracts actually concluded under the authorisation, which were supply contracts governed by Directive 93/36. However, since the relevant derogations are substantially the same in the two directives, whatever view is reached with regard to one directive will be valid with regard to the other.

55. Italy relies principally on Article 6(3)(d) of Directive 93/36, (29) which allows recourse to a negotiated procedure in situations of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable by the contracting authorities. The urgent need to combat forest fires during the state of emergency declared in July 2002 constitutes, it claims, such a situation.

56. It also invokes, secondarily, Article 6(3)(c) and (e) of the same directive, (30) which allow such a procedure, respectively, where for technical reasons the products must come from a particular supplier and where it is necessary to continue to deal with the same supplier in order to ensure homogeneity of supply. Those conditions, Italy argues, are fulfilled by the need for the Corpo Forestale to maintain a homogenous fleet of AB412 helicopters, which only Agusta could supply.

Technical requirements and homogeneity of supply

57. These criteria may be dealt with very simply.

58. Whatever reasons may or may not have given rise to the alleged need to acquire Agusta AB 412 helicopters, they are relevant only to the actual procedures carried out under the authorisations conferred by the contested ordinance.

59. The alleged infringement however concerns the contested provisions of that ordinance, and not the negotiated contracts themselves. Nothing in those provisions, or in the context of the contested ordinance, indicates any limitation to a particular supplier on whatever grounds.

60. The contested provisions therefore cannot be justified on the basis of Article 6(3)(c) or (e) of Directive 93/36, or of Article 11(3)(b) or (f) of Directive 92/50.

Urgency

61. As a general proposition, it seems incontrovertible that widespread outbreaks of forest fires may be reasons of extreme urgency giving rise to a need for the acquisition of firefighting services and equipment if they are not already sufficiently available.

62. The Commission does not argue against that proposition as such, but submits that not all the conditions for the application of the derogation are satisfied. On the one hand, outbreaks of forest fires in summer are a regularly recurring event throughout southern Europe; they are thus foreseeable, and any urgency in the need to acquire means to combat them is attributable to the Italian authorities. On the other hand, the contested ordinance remained valid after the end of the national state of emergency on 31 October 2002, and could thus be used to authorise recourse to negotiated procedures after any situation of urgency had disappeared.

63. I agree that regular seasonal occurrences cannot be considered unforeseeable events.

64. However, it cannot be denied that even such occurrences may in some years be of such exceptional intensity or extent as to be legitimately regarded as unforeseeable.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

65. Both the decree declaring the national state of emergency and the contested ordinance itself speak, in their preambles, of exceptional meteorological conditions giving rise to drought and an increased risk of forest fires. The latter mentions such conditions in the early part of the year, giving rise to exceptional intervention by forest firefighting units and a need to increase capacity, followed by a long period of unseasonably high temperatures in June with a consequent increase in the risk of the outbreak and spread of forest fires. In its pleadings, the Italian Republic asserts that in the summer of 2002 such fires exceeded the worst forecasts.

66. The Commission however has not addressed the question of the exceptional nature of the meteorological conditions or of the outbreaks of forest fires in the summer of 2002. Its arguments are directed solely to the foreseeability of summer forest fires in general and to the mechanisms whereby the Italian authorities could legitimately have acquired the necessary means to combat such fires in good time and without recourse to any urgent procedure. And even in the latter regard, it refers extensively to the actual acquisition of two AB 412 helicopters rather than to the authorisations which are at issue.

67. It may be accepted that forest fires in summer are foreseeable in Italy, so that the authorities cannot rely on their own failure to provide in advance for such fires in order to justify recourse to a negotiated procedure under Article 6(3)(d) of Directive 93/36.

68. Exceptional forest fires due to exceptional weather conditions are however by definition not foreseeable as such and may provide reasons of extreme urgency for the purposes of that provision.

69. The Commission has not sought to disprove or deny the exceptional nature of the circumstances on which the contested ordinance was based.

70. I therefore consider that Italy has made an adequate prima facie case for the existence of urgency as a ground for authorising recourse to negotiated procedures without prior publication of an invitation to tender, and that the Commission has not rebutted that case.

71. But the Commission further objects that the authorisation in that ordinance cannot be covered by the derogation for urgent situations because it was not limited to the specific period of emergency.

72. It puts forward two arguments: first, the contested ordinance did not contain any provision limiting its effects in time or expire by operation of any other legal rule; second, the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry, in a letter of 21 May 2003, (31) undertook not to use the contested ordinance for any future acquisition of supplies - demonstrating that the ordinance had not lapsed with the national state of emergency on 31 October 2002.

73. Before dealing with those arguments, however, it may be useful to point out that the fact that the decree declaring a state of emergency in the province of Verbano-Cusio-Ossola was extended until 31 July 2004 (32) is not relevant to this issue. The application seeks a declaration that by adopting the contested provisions Italy failed to fulfil its obligations. There is no indication or allegation that at the time of that adoption any extension of the legal basis for it was contemplated, and the declaration sought does not refer to any such extension or to the maintenance in force of the contested ordinance beyond any specified date.

74. Nor is it relevant that performance of the contract for the purchase of two AB 412 helicopters was not completed until after the end of the national state of emergency. What matters is whether the authorisation to initiate a negotiated procedure could still be relied upon after that period.

75. Turning now to the Commission's first argument, the Italian Government responds that the contested ordinance logically lapsed with the expiry of the state of emergency on which it was based.

76. That seems a credible contention.

77. Where an executive ordinance is adopted on the basis of a declaration of a state of emergency, it appears reasonable to suppose that its effects and validity will lapse when the state of emergency legally comes to an end. In the present case, the preamble to the contested ordinance does not merely mention the declaration of a national state of emergency but specifies that it is to come to an end on 31 October 2002. I note also that Article 5(2) of Law No 225 of 24 February 1992, which is one of the legal bases for the contested ordinance, specifies that measures derogating from rules in force may be adopted for the purpose of ensuring emergency intervention consequent upon' a declaration of a state of emergency, a detail which strongly suggests that no such measures can be valid if adopted outside that context.

78. It certainly seems likely that any negotiated procedure concluded on the basis of the authorisation contained in the contested ordinance after the end of the state of emergency could be challenged on that ground. However, and in any event, there is no indication or allegation that the relevant authorities have attempted to initiate any such procedure since that date. It is moreover consistent with Italy's contention, and possibly suggestive of an assumption that the authorisation must lapse with the national state of emergency, that the contract for the purchase of two AB 412 helicopters, the only contract apparently negotiated under the authorisation, was approved on 31 October 2002, the last day of that state of emergency.

79. However, the undertaking given on 21 May 2003, not to use the contested ordinance for any future acquisition of supplies, could well seem in contradiction with the view that the ordinance was no longer valid by that date.

80. The Italian Government accepts the difficulty, but contends that the ministry's undertaking merely expresses the fact that it was no longer possible legally to rely on the contested ordinance, and does not indicate that it had any choice in the matter.

81. A reading of the relevant passage of the letter - which deals also with other matters and seems intended to demonstrate that the Commission's allegations are unfounded over a range of issues - shows that the undertaking follows an assertion that the acquisition of the two AB412 helicopters was in any event in compliance with Community law and that the contested ordinance was relied upon simply as a reinforcing measure'.

82. In those circumstances, I do not consider that the letter is sufficient to establish that the contested ordinance was still in force on 21 May 2003.

83. I thus reach the view that the Commission has not established that the contested provisions could have been relied upon in order to acquire supplies or services after the end of the state of emergency for which they were adopted or, in general, that the reasons of extreme urgency on which the Italian Government credibly relies were absent or were attributable to the Italian authorities.

Costs

84. The Italian Republic has not asked for costs in its pleadings; consequently, pursuant to Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the parties should be ordered to bear their own costs.

Conclusion

85. In the light of all the foregoing considerations, I am of the opinion that the Court should:

- dismiss the application;

- order the parties to bear their own costs.

Notice for the OJ

Action brought on 16 December 2003 by the Commission of the European Communities against the Italian Republic

(Case C-525/03)

An action against the Italian Republic was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 16 December 2003 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by Klaus Wiedner and Claudio Loggi, acting as Agents.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

- Declare that, by adopting Article 1, second subparagraph and first, second and third subparagraphs of Article 2 of Order No 3231 of the President of the Council of Ministers of 24 July 2002, which allow for private negotiations by way of derogation from the provisions of the Community directives on public supply and service contracts, and in particular, from the common rules on advertising and participation laid down by Titles III and IV of Directive 93/36/EEC[1] and III and V of Directive 92/50/EEC[2], for the acquisition of aircraft to combat forest fires and for the acquisition of firefighting services and which similarly allow for such negotiations for the acquisition of technical and computer equipment and two-way radios, without any of the lawful conditions for derogation from those common rules being satisfied and, in any event, without ensuring any form of direct advertising such as to permit a competitive comparison between potential tenderers, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 18 June 1992 and Articles 43 and 49 of the EC Treaty;

- Order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments:

Contracts for the supply of aircraft fall within the scope of Directive 93/36/EEC which governs the award procedure for public supply contracts.

Pursuant to Article 6 of the directive, the contracting authorities are to award supply contracts by the open or restricted procedures. Recourse to the negotiated procedure is permitted only in the cases expressly provided for in paragraphs 2 and 3 of that article. Article 6(3) includes, amongst the cases in which the negotiated procedure is permitted, that where, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable by the contracting authorities, and for which those authorities are not responsible, the time limits laid down for the competitive procedures with prior publication cannot be observed.

The Commission points out that, in the present case, none of the conditions laid down by Article 6 of Directive 93/36/EEC for derogation from the provisions of that directive appears to apply and that, in particular, there do not appear to be reasons of urgency such as to permit the contracting authority to avail itself of the derogation under Article 6(3)(d) of the directive.

The Commission further points out that the contested order lays down numerous other possibilities for resorting to private negotiations, namely for the acquisition of the material necessary to equip the Department of Civil Protection with technical and computer systems, for the acquisition by the State Forest Department of two-way radio equipment for communication with firefighting aircraft and for the acquisition and/or implementation, again on behalf of that Department, of air services for fighting forest fires, in the last case providing, in terms similar to the provision in respect of the acquisition of firefighting aircraft, that the relevant contracts may also be entered into in derogation from the legislation transposing the Community directives on public contracts and, in particular, Directives 92/50/EEC and 93/36/EEC.

The Commission further considers that, in those cases, recourse cannot be had to private negotiations and that, in any case, no evidence of the existence of the conditions required for recourse to such negotiations was provided by the Italian authorities. In particular, none of the conditions under Article 6(2) and (3) of Directive 93/36/EEC and Article 11(2) and (3) of Directive 92/50/EEC is satisfied.

Judgment

1. By its application, the Commission of the European Communities seeks a declaration from the Court that, in deciding to entrust the provision of services relating to the payment of social welfare benefits to An Post, the Irish postal service, without undertaking any prior advertising, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 43 EC and 49 EC and the general principles of Community law in connection with a contract for the supply of such services.

Legal framework

2. The 20th recital in the preamble to Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

1) states the following:

... to eliminate practices that restrict competition in general and participation in contracts by other Member States' nationals in particular, it is necessary to improve the access of service providers to procedures for the award of contracts'.

3. Under Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50:

Contracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.'

4. Title II of Directive 92/50 defines a so-called two-tier' application. Under Article 8, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A to the directive are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI thereof, that is, Articles 11 to 37. By contrast, under Article 9 of that directive, [c]ontracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I B shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16'.

5. Article 14 of Directive 92/50 lays down the detailed rules for the technical specifications which are to be included in the contractual documents.

6. Article 16 of that directive provides:

1. Contracting authorities who have awarded a public contract or have held a design contest shall send a notice of the results of the award procedure to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities [the Publications Office].

3. In the case of public contracts for services listed in Annex I B, the contracting authorities shall indicate in the notice whether they agree on its publication.

4. The Commission shall draw up the rules for establishing regular reports on the basis of the notices referred to in paragraph 3, and for the publication of such reports in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 40(3).

7. Article 43 of Directive 92/50 provides:

Not later than three years after the time-limit for compliance with this Directive, the Commission, acting in close cooperation with the Committees referred to in Article 40(1) and (2), shall review the [manner] in which this Directive has operated, including the effects of the application of the Directive to procurement of the services listed in Annex I A and the provisions concerning technical standards. It shall evaluate, in particular, the prospects for the full application of the Directive to procurement of the other services listed in Annex I B, and the effects of in-house performance of services on the effective opening-up of procurement in this area. It shall make the necessary proposals to adapt the Directive accordingly.'

8. Annex I B to Directive 92/50 lists a series of categories of services.

Facts and pre-litigation procedure

9. On 4 December 1992, without following any competitive tendering process, the Irish Minister for Social Welfare entered into a contract with An Post, pursuant to which those entitled under various social benefit schemes could collect their payments from post offices.

10. The original term of the agreement was from 1 January 1992 until 31 December 1996. In May 1997, it was extended to 31 December 1999. In May 1999, the Irish authorities approved a further extension of that contract for the period between 1 January 2000 and 31 December 2002.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

11. Following a complaint, the Commission entered into correspondence with Ireland in October 1999.

12. Following the Commission's intervention, Ireland did not formally extend the contract with An Post, pending resolution of the issues raised by the Commission. An Post has continued to provide the relevant services on an ad hoc basis so as to ensure continuity of social welfare payments.

13. In the context of the Article 226 EC procedure Ireland has not, according to the Commission, provided any solution to the problems raised. The Commission takes the view, having regard to the Member State's replies to its letter of formal notice of 26 June 2002 and its reasoned opinion of 17 December 2002, that the award of a new contract to An Post without any prior advertising is contrary to the EC Treaty, and it therefore brought the present action.

Arguments of the parties

14. The Commission submits that Ireland has infringed Articles 43 EC and 49 EC as well as the general principles of transparency, equality and non-discrimination. In its application, the Commission submits that these provisions are binding on the Member States, in addition to the obligations laid down by Articles 14 and 16 of Directive 92/50.

15. It bases its analysis on several judgments of the Court which, in its view, demonstrate that primary law can be invoked in addition to the obligations laid down by a directive (judgment in Case C-324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I-10745; order in Case C59/00 Vestergaard [2001] ECR I-9505; and judgment in Case C92/00 HI [2002] ECR I-5553).

16. Ireland contests the Commission's analysis and submits that, where the Community legislature adopts express provisions governing specific subject-matter, those provisions cannot be overlooked, disregarded or ignored through the application of general rules. Special rules, it submits, must take precedence over general rules. By its action, the Commission thus seeks to extend the obligations of the Member States in the field of public service contracts.

17. Ireland also submits that, although the Commission initiated several consultations on the reform of Directive 92/50 and several amendments have been made since it was adopted, it failed to take legislative action on this issue. The Commission's approach, it argues, is contrary to the general principles of legitimate expectation and legal certainty.

18. The Commission contests this line of argument by making reference to the principle that secondary legislation is ancillary to primary law, with the result that any amendment to Directive 92/50 would not have affected Ireland's obligations.

19. The Kingdom of Denmark, the French Republic, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Finland have intervened in support of Ireland.

20. According to the Kingdom of the Netherlands, the contracting authorities are subject only to a limited obligation of transparency. For the Kingdom of Denmark and the Republic of Finland, there is a linguistic difference between the language versions of the judgments referred to by the Commission which allows their scope to be modified. According to the French Republic, the limitation on the Member States' obligations is confirmed by Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), which maintains the distinction laid down by Directive 92/50.

Findings of the Court

21. The first point to be noted here is that none of the parties denies that, in the present case, the contract in question does indeed come within the scope of application of Directive 92/50 and that the services relating to social benefit payments in question belong to the non-priority category of services listed in Annex I B thereto.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

22. According to the wording of Article 9 of Directive 92/50, [c]ontracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I B shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16'.

23. Those specific provisions, in Articles 14 and 16 of Directive 92/50 respectively, require contracting authorities to define the technical specifications by reference to national standards implementing European standards which must be given in the general or contractual documents relating to each contract and to send a notice of the results of the award procedure to the Publications Office.

24. It is thus clear from a combined reading of Articles 9, 14 and 16 of Directive 92/50 that when, as in the present case, contracts concern services which fall under Annex I B, the contracting authorities are bound only by the obligations to define the technical specifications by reference to national standards implementing European standards which must be given in the general or contractual documents relating to each contract and to send a notice of the results of the award procedure to the Publications Office. The other procedural rules provided for by that directive, including those relating to the obligations to invite competing bids by means of prior advertising, are, by contrast, not applicable to those contracts.

25. For the services coming within the ambit of Annex I B to Directive 92/50, and subject to a subsequent evaluation as referred to in Article 43 of that directive, the Community legislature based itself on the assumption that contracts for such services are not, in the light of their specific nature, of cross-border interest such as to justify their award being subject to the conclusion of a tendering procedure intended to enable undertakings from other Member States to examine the contract notice and submit a tender. For that reason, Directive 92/50 merely imposes a requirement of publicity after the fact for that category of services.

26. It is common ground, however, that the award of public contracts is to remain subject to the fundamental rules of Community law, and in particular to the principles laid down by the Treaty on the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services (see, to that effect, HI , paragraph 42).

27. In this regard, according to settled case-law, the purpose of coordinating at Community level the procedures for the award of public contracts is to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and goods and therefore to protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State (see, inter alia, Case C380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I8035, paragraph 16; Case C19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 32; and HI , paragraph 43).

28. Directive 92/50 pursues just such an objective. As the 20th recital in its preamble shows, it is designed to eliminate practices that restrict competition in general, and participation in contracts by other Member States' nationals in particular, by improving the access of service providers to procedures for the award of contracts (see HI , paragraph 44).

29. It follows that the advertising arrangement, introduced by the Community legislature for contracts relating to services coming within the ambit of Annex I B, cannot be interpreted as precluding application of the principles resulting from Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, in the event that such contracts nevertheless are of certain cross-border interest.

30. Also, in so far as a contract relating to services falling under Annex I B is of such interest, the award, in the absence of any transparency, of that contract to an undertaking located in the same Member State as the contracting authority amounts to a difference in treatment to the detriment of undertakings which might be interested in that contract but which are located in other Member States (see, to that effect, Telaustria and Telefonadress , paragraphs 60 and 61, and Case C231/03 Coname [2005] ECR I-7287, paragraph 17).

31. Unless it is justified by objective circumstances, such a difference in treatment, which, by excluding all undertakings located in another Member State, operates mainly to the detriment of the latter undertakings, amounts to indirect discrimination on the basis of nationality, prohibited under Articles 43 EC and 49 EC (Coname , paragraph 19 and case-law cited).

32. In those circumstances, it is for the Commission to establish that, notwithstanding the fact that the contract in question relates to services coming within the scope of Annex I B to Directive 92/50, that contract was of certain interest to an undertaking located in a different Member State to that of the relevant contracting authority, and that that undertaking was unable to express its interest in that contract because it did not have access to adequate information before the contract was awarded.

33. According to settled case-law, it is the Commisssion's responsibility to provide the Court with the evidence necessary to enable it to establish that an obligation has not been fulfilled and, in so doing, the Commission may not rely on any presumption (see, to that effect, inter alia, Case C-434/01 Commission v United Kingdom [2003] ECR I13239, paragraph 21; Case C-117/02 C ommission v Portugal [2004] ECR I-5517, paragraph 80; and Case C-135/05 Commission v Italy [2007] ECR I-0000, paragraph 26), in this case a presumption that a contract relating to services coming within the scope of Annex I B to Directive 92/50 and subject to the rules described in paragraph 24 of this judgment necessarily is of certain cross-border interest.

34. In the present case, that evidence has not been provided by the Commission. A mere statement by it that a complaint was made to it in relation to the contract in question is not sufficient to establish that the contract was of certain cross-border interest and that there was therefore a failure to fulfil obligations.

35. The Court accordingly finds that, in entrusting the provision of social benefit payment services to An Post without undertaking any prior advertising, Ireland has not failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 43 EC and 49 EC and the general principles of Community law in connection with a contract for the supply of such services.

36. The Commission's action must therefore be dismissed.

Costs

37. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since Ireland has applied for costs to be awarded against the Commission and the latter has been unsuccessful, the Commission must be ordered to pay the costs. Pursuant to the first subparagraph of Article 69(4) of the Rules of Procedure, the Kingdom of Denmark, the French Republic, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Finland, which have intervened in the proceedings, are to bear their own costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby:

1. Dismisses the action;

2. Orders the Commission of the European Communities to pay the costs;

3. Orders the Kingdom of Denmark, the French Republic, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Finland to bear their own costs.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
STIX-HACKL
of 14 September 2006 1

Case C-507/03

Commission of the European Communities
v
Ireland

(Public procurement – Articles 43 EC and 49 EC – Directive 92/50/EEC – Non-priority services – Award of a contract to An Post without a contract notice (advertising) – Transparency – Equality – Failure to fulfil obligations)

I – Introductory remarks

1. This action for failure to fulfil obligations, like another such action brought in parallel, (2) relates to the question of what requirements can be inferred from primary law as regards the transparency of award procedures. In particular, the present case concerns the obligations that can be derived from the fundamental freedoms and general principles of law for 'non-priority' services, that is to say for services in respect of which Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, (3) replaced in the meantime by the 'legislative package', prescribes a special set of less stringent rules.

2. In addition, the present case concerns the interpretation and further development of the Court's case-law in Telaustria(4) and Coname. (5)

II – Legal context

3. The 21st recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 states:

'... full application of this Directive must be limited, for a transitional period, to contracts for those services where its provisions will enable the full potential for increased cross-frontier trade to be realised; ... contracts for other services need to be monitored for a certain period before a decision is taken on the full application of this Directive; ... the mechanism for such monitoring needs to be defined; ... this mechanism should at the same time enable those interested to share the relevant information'.

4. Under Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50, contracting authorities are to ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.

5. In Title II, Directive 92/50 provides for a 'two-tier application'. Pursuant to Article 8, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI, that is to say in accordance with Articles 11 to 37. On the other hand, Article 9 provides that only Articles 14 and 16 are to be complied with in the case of contracts which have as their object services known as 'non-priority services', that is to say services listed in Annex I B.

6. Annex I B lists a series of categories of services. Category No 27 is 'Other services'.

7. Article 14 contains provisions on technical specifications which are to be given in the general documents or the contractual documents relating to each contract.

8. Article 16 states:

'1. Contracting authorities who have awarded a public contract or have held a design contest shall send a notice of the results of the award procedure to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities.

...

3. In the case of public contracts for services listed in Annex I B, the contracting authorities shall indicate in the notice whether they agree on its publication.

4. The Commission shall draw up the rules for establishing regular reports on the basis of the notices referred to in paragraph 3, and for the publication of such reports, in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 40(3).

III – Facts, pre-litigation procedure and proceedings before the Court

9. On 4 December 1992, without prior advertising, the Irish Minister for Social Welfare concluded a contract with An Post, the Irish postal service, under which persons entitled to social welfare benefits could collect their payments from post offices.

10. The original term of the contract was from 1 January 1992 until 31 December 1996. In May 1997 the contract was extended to 31 December 1999. The competent Irish authorities had a prior information notice concerning the planned award of a contract published in the Official Journal of the European Communities of 16 February 1999. Nevertheless, it was decided in May 1999 to extend the contract with An Post to 31 December 2002. This decision was subsequently suspended.

11. Prompted by a complaint, the Commission began an exchange of correspondence with the Irish authorities in October 1999.

12. As a result of the Commission's intervention, Ireland has not formally extended the contract. An Post continues, however, to provide the services, albeit on an ad hoc basis, so as to ensure continuity of social welfare payments.

13. In the Treaty infringement procedure initiated by the Commission under Article 226 EC, Ireland failed, in the Commission's view, to propose any solution to the problems raised. In light of the replies given by Ireland to the letter of formal notice of 26 June 2002 and the reasoned opinion of 17 December 2002, the Commission took the view that Ireland's approach with regard to renewal of the contract was contrary to the EC Treaty and it therefore brought the present action.

14. In its action the Commission claims that the Court should:

1. declare that, in deciding to entrust the provision of services to An Post without undertaking any prior advertising, Ireland has failed to comply with its obligations under the Treaty;

2. order Ireland to pay the Commission's costs.

15. Ireland contends that the Court should:

1. dismiss the Commission's application;

2. order the Commission to pay Ireland's costs.

IV – Submissions of the principal parties and the interveners

A – The Commission

16. According to the Commission, the fact that the contract in question falls within the scope of Directive 92/50 does not preclude application of the obligations developed by the Court's case-law which are derived from the fundamental freedoms laid down in the Treaty and from the general principles which are given specific expression in those fundamental freedoms.

17. The obligation on Member States to comply with general principles is confirmed, within the directive itself, by Article 3(2), which contains a general obligation on contracting authorities to avoid all discrimination between service providers. This obligation is incumbent on the Irish authorities in respect of Annex I B services just as much as in respect of Annex I A services.

18. The Commission's analysis is the only one which is consistent with the 'internal market logic of the Treaty'. The Court's case-law clearly holds that the Treaty provisions on freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services impose obligations on the Member States in respect of the award of public contracts outside the scope of the directives. This applies both to types of contracts (such as service concessions) that are not specifically covered and also to contracts of types that are covered but whose value falls below the thresholds set in the various directives.

19. It would therefore run directly counter to the logic of the internal market if, although Community law requires an appropriate level of advertising in such situations even if the contract falls outside the scope of the directives because of its structure or value, it were nevertheless open to the Member States not to advertise in any way contracts (whose value is above the financial thresholds) solely on the ground that the services to which they relate fall within the scope of Annex I B to the directive.

20. National measures are to be assessed in the light of the provisions of a directive, and not also those of the EC Treaty, only where the directive brings about exhaustive harmonisation.

21. The Commission submits with regard to the argument that the objective which it pursues is attainable only by means of legislation that a directive cannot derogate from primary law. Obligations flowing from primary law overlie those deriving from directives. Secondary law is intended to supplement primary law and to facilitate achievement of the objectives laid down therein.

22. Finally, the Commission stresses that primary law imposes requirements far less strict than those of the directive. Contrary to the interveners' understanding, the Commission is not requiring a call for tenders in every case. Nor is the Commission demanding that Ireland must apply to non-priority services the rules applicable to priority services.

23. As regards legal certainty, the Commission points out that observance of limits imposed by primary law is nothing unusual in procurement matters.

B – Ireland

24. Ireland disputes that the Commission's submissions are correct. First, it argues that the Court's case-law cited by the Commission is not relevant, and supports that with a commentary on the individual cases and on the line of argument put forward by the Commission in relation to each of them. Second, given that Directive 92/50 is applicable, measures adopted by Ireland are to be assessed by reference to that directive and not the fundamental freedoms too.

25. In addition, the Commission's approach infringes the principles of transparency, the protection of legitimate expectations and legal certainty. Instead of putting forward a proposal for appropriate amendment of the directive, which it would have been obliged to do under Article 43 thereof, the Commission pursues 'nebulous concepts'. Moreover, the Commission did not include a corresponding amendment in its proposal which led in 2004 to the adoption of Directive 2004/18/EC.

26. The Commission is seeking to persuade the Court to act as legislature in the Council's stead. Its aim is to impose obligations on Ireland that are expressly ruled out by Directive 92/50. Thereby the Commission also harms the institutional balance. If the Commission can derive an obligation to advertise from the principle of equality, the question arises as to what purpose is served by the directive.

C – The interveners

27. The Kingdom of Denmark, the Republic of Finland, the French Republic and the Kingdom of the Netherlands have intervened in the proceedings in support of Ireland.

28. In the submission of the Danish, Finnish, French and Netherlands Governments, Articles 14 and 16 of the directive alone apply to the services at issue. Other provisions relating to notices therefore do not apply to non-priority services. Nor can an obligation to advertise in all cases be derived from the Court's case-law. Also, the requirements of the principle of legal certainty are to be noted; this principle would be infringed by the wide interpretation put forward by the Commission. In this context it was also pointed out that the breach of procedural provisions could result in an obligation for contracting authorities to pay damages.

29. According to the Danish Government, an obligation to conduct a specific award procedure cannot be derived from Article 3 of the directive or from Articles 12 EC, 43 EC and 49 EC. To make non-priority services subject to detailed procedural provisions would, moreover, infringe the principles of proportionality and subsidiarity.

30. National measures are to be assessed by reference only to harmonising provisions and not primary law too. Furthermore, on its view of the law, the Commission should consequently have called the directive's validity into question.

31. The interveners refer to the history of Directive 92/50 and its objective. They also point out – partly with reference to the obligation of review under Directive 92/50 – that, in its proposal for amendment of the procurement directives, which inter alia led to the adoption of Directive 2004/18, the Commission itself did not take up any modification of the system, under which a less stringent set of rules continues to apply to non-priority services.

V – Appraisal

A – Subject-matter of the present action for failure to fulfil obligations

32. As regards the subject-matter of the present action, a number of points are not in dispute between the parties. That is true, first, of the fact that the supply of services that is at issue falls within Class 913 of the CPC (Central Product Classification). It is covered by Category No 27 ('Other services') in Annex I B to Directive 92/50. The services are thus to be classified as 'non-priority services'. It is also an undisputed fact that in the case in point the relevant threshold value under Article 7(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 has been exceeded.

33. Thus, while the question whether the supply of services at issue falls within the scope of Directive 92/50 and whether it is, in this regard, subject to a special set of rules can be answered with relative ease, it remains to be settled what other provisions of Community law are to be used as criteria of assessment. In a direct action such as an action for failure to fulfil obligations, the criteria of assessment are determined in accordance with the claims of the applicant – here, therefore, the Commission.

34. As is apparent from the application, the Commission claims that the Court should find a dual infringement. First, it complains that fundamental freedoms, in particular Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, have been infringed. Second, it complains that general principles of Community law, in particular the principles of transparency and of equality (non-discrimination), have been infringed.

35. In addition, a further provision has been discussed in the proceedings before the Court, namely Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50, under which contracting authorities are to ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.

36. The Commission seeks to deduce from this provision a requirement that applies to services of all kinds and therefore also to those at issue here, that is to say non-priority services.

37. The Commission has failed though to include Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50 in the form of order sought by it. It is true that the Commission refers to this provision of the directive as well in its application, (6) but that is not sufficient. By that reference, the Commission seeks to prove only that the directive itself expressly lays down a prohibition of discrimination. The Commission would appear to regard that as confirmation that the Member States have to observe corresponding general principles of law. Moreover, in the reasoned opinion too the Commission complained of infringement of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC only.

38. The alleged infringement of general principles of law, on the other hand, is dealt with by the Commission not only in its legal assessment of the situation but also in the passage in the application where it summarises, by way of conclusion, the provisions which it considers to have been breached (paragraph 56). That is also true of the complaint that Articles 43 EC and 49 EC have been infringed.

39. The question as to what effects Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50 has with regard to 'non-priority services' is therefore not to be examined in detail.

B – Can the directives be supplemented by primary law?

40. The present proceedings do not concern the applicability of primary law outside the procurement directives, an issue that has been settled at least in principle, as under the Court's case-law (7) the provisions of primary law apply if the award is not covered by any of the directives. The present case, on the other hand, concerns the question whether requirements of primary law apply also to situations which fall within the directives.

41. However, this legal problem is also not entirely novel. The Court's case-law should be recalled under which rules of primary law, in particular fundamental freedoms, also apply to procurement which is covered by the procurement directives.

42. The Court thus held in an action for failure to fulfil obligations, which also related to Ireland, that 'by allowing the inclusion in the contract specification for tender for a public works contract of a clause stipulating … , Ireland [had] failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 30 of the EEC Treaty'. (8) The Court made a similar declaration in another action for failure to fulfil obligations, finding, in the case concerning the Storebælt, that Articles 30, 48 and 59 of the EEC Treaty had been infringed. (9)

43. In addition, a recent judgment in an action for failure to fulfil obligations should be mentioned, where the Court declared that Article 49 EC had been infringed. This case, like the case concerning the Storebælt, concerned the content of tendering specifications, in particular sub-criteria for the award of contracts. (10)

44. The principle under which the directives are, in their interpretation, to be completed or supplemented by primary law has, however, been confirmed by the Court in other situations too.

45. Valuable guidance is provided by the judgment in HI, where the Court held that 'even though, apart from the duty to notify the reasons for the withdrawal of the invitation to tender, Directive 92/50 contains no specific provision concerning the substantive or formal conditions for that decision, the fact remains that the latter is still subject to fundamental rules of Community law, and in particular to the principles laid down by the EC Treaty on the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services'. (11)

46. Paragraph 47 of that judgment is couched by the Court in more general terms: 'even though Directive 92/50 does not specifically govern the detailed procedures for withdrawing an invitation to tender for a public service contract, …'.

47. The principle under which primary law is to be taken into account supplementarily has been confirmed by the Court in a further decision. (12) The fact the Court chose to give that decision in the form of an order shows that it at least considers this legal question to be settled.

48. Similarly, the Court held in Makedoniko Metro that 'even if the Community directives on public procurement do not contain specifically applicable provisions, the general principles of Community law … govern procedures for the award of public contracts'. (13)

49. While the judgment in Unitron, (14) which has been discussed in the present proceedings, admittedly also concerns transparency, that case, however, concerned the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality and not the requirement of equal treatment as a general principle of law, that is to say the principle of equality.

50. It can therefore be stated that the principle under which primary law also applies to awards which fall within the procurement directives has been confirmed by the Court. The scope of this principle must, however, be examined. Under the principle that informs the relationship between primary and secondary law, application of primary law is precluded in so far as the situation is governed by exhaustive provisions of secondary law. (15) Community law therefore imposes limits on the application of primary law to supplement the directives.

51. While it has also been made clear in the meantime by the Court's case-law that the procurement directives do not regulate exhaustively the content of award criteria and the procedure for withdrawal, it remains to be considered how the rules relating to the obligation of transparency in respect of non-priority services are to be assessed.

C – Is the obligation of transparency in respect of non-priority services regulated exhaustively in Directive 92/50?

52. An essential feature of the present proceedings is that they relate to the applicability of primary law in connection with an award that is subject to a special set of rules under a procurement directive.

53. The category constituted by non-priority services is, incidentally, not the only category of awards for which a special set of rules is laid down in the procurement directives. Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (16) lays down a less stringent regime for public works concessions. Similarly to Article 9 of Directive 92/50, Article 3(1) of that directive lays down which of the directive's provisions are to be applied. In contrast to the rules in Directive 92/50 concerning non-priority services, Directive 93/37 does, however, make public works concessions also subject to the obligation to have a notice published with a certain minimum content (Article 11).

54. It should be made clear that the present proceedings are not concerned with whether the obligations which Directive 92/50 lays down for priority services also have effect in the case of non-priority services, that is to say whether those obligations are to be applied directly or at least by analogy.

55. It must also be noted that the issue is not whether the entire directive is to be classified as an exhaustive harmonising measure but whether the relevant aspect is regulated exhaustively. In Community law it is in fact typical for directives to contain exhaustive rules for certain situations and not others. (17) The Court thus held with regard to one of the procurement directives that it did not lay down a uniform and exhaustive body of Community rules and that the Member States had to comply with all the relevant provisions of Community law. (18)

56. Requirements under primary law are applicable to the award of contracts for non-priority services in so far as there is, in that connection, no exhaustive harmonisation. It is not, on the other hand, a precondition that Directive 92/50 must not be an exhaustive harmonising measure in respect of non-priority services in their entirety. In these proceedings it is to be examined only whether the rules in Directive 92/50 on the obligation of transparency are exhaustive, as Ireland, France and the Netherlands submit. Should that not be the case, the Court's case-law set out above on award criteria and withdrawal could be applied.

57. Furthermore, in this context the judgment in Contse is to be mentioned, where the Court proceeded on the basis that fundamental freedoms are applicable to non-priority services. It may be noted here merely in passing that, pursuant to Article 9 of Directive 92/50, not even the rules in the directive requiring to be supplemented on award criteria apply to non-priority services.

58. However, the present proceedings concern neither the drawing up of award criteria nor withdrawal, but a quite specific aspect of transparency, namely prior advertising of a contract. The question whether Directive 92/50 exhaustively harmonises the aspect of the obligation of transparency relevant here is, according to the Court's case-law, to be determined in the light of the wording of the relevant provision, the context in which it occurs and the objectives of the rules of which it is part. (19)

59. As the Court has already held, the starting point for the interpretation is the 21st recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 and Article 9 thereof. (20)

60. The 21st recital states that application of the directive in full must be limited, for a transitional period, to contracts for those services where its provisions will enable the full potential for increased cross-border trade to be realised, the contracts for other services during that period being subject only to monitoring.

61. The wording of the central provision, that is to say of Article 9 of Directive 92/50, makes it clear that contracts for non-priority services are to be awarded in accordance with provisions that are expressly referred to. Those provisions are Articles 14 and 16. While Article 14 lays down 'Common rules in the technical field', Article 16 regulates certain aspects of transparency. With regard to transparency in respect of non-priority services, the Community legislature thus referred not to the whole of Title V of the Directive, which is headed 'Common advertising rules', but only to a part of the title.

62. The Community legislature thus made a conscious decision to lay down only certain obligations of transparency as regards non-priority services. Article 16(1) for example requires the results of award procedures to be sent to the Office for Official Publications.

63. The decision of the Community legislature not to refer also to the important Article 11 is, however, central to the present action for failure to fulfil obligations. This provision lays down, inter alia, the conditions under which a contracting authority may opt for a negotiated procedure without publication of a contract notice. This allows an award by private treaty (a direct award), that is to say an award without advertising. Those requirements were thus not applied to non-priority services.

64. Article 16(2) states that Articles 17 to 20 apply only to priority services. Those provisions essentially lay down the models to be used for notices and the time-limits to be observed.

65. The Commission is therefore correct in its view that Articles 14 and 16 of the directive specifically do not regulate the aspect at issue in the present case. However, the Commission draws the premature conclusion that this is in itself sufficient to bring primary law into play. It must be examined first whether it is to be concluded from the fact that only certain aspects are expressly regulated that there is no exhaustive harmonisation.

66. That question is preliminary to the question whether, while the strict requirements of Directive 92/50 admittedly do not have to be observed as regards non-priority services, less strict requirements of primary law must be at least.

67. The answer to this preliminary question must be to the effect that Directive 92/50 does not contain exhaustive rules on transparency in relation to the award of contracts for non-priority services, and instead primary law is to be taken into account supplementarily.

68. The effect of the contrary view would be that awards that fall entirely outside Directive 92/50, for example service concessions, would be subject to stricter requirements, namely those under Telaustria and Coname, than non-priority services. An alternative solution would of course be to lower the standard, that is to say the degree of transparency, for awards falling outside the directive and to apply to non-priority services that lower standard or one slightly higher.

D – Specific content of the provision alleged to have been infringed

69. In order to be able to declare that Community law has been infringed, the Court must first ascertain the content of the provision whose infringement is alleged. If the criterion of assessment is not clearly defined, it is not possible to appraise the conduct of the Member State in question.

70. In a direct action such as the present Treaty infringement proceedings, the applicant – here, therefore, the Commission – must specify what the obligation owed by the defendant Member State involved.

71. In the written procedure, the Commission admittedly did not simply refer to the existence of the obligations resulting from Articles 43 EC and 49 EC and from certain principles, but submitted at least that according to the Court's case-law on those rules of primary law an appropriate degree of transparency must be ensured. However, the Commission essentially left it at that.

72. The Commission cites in this context a judgment (21) on two actions for failure to fulfil obligations. It is to be observed in this regard that there was a clear obligation in those actions, namely an obligation under Directive 93/37. That directive contained an express obligation to publish a contract notice, whose minimum content was indeed prescribed in certain models.

73. In the present proceedings, such requirements of Community law are just lacking. The directive applicable in this case does not prescribe any prior notice. That is also true of the case-law on the fundamental freedoms and general principles of law which has frequently been referred to in the proceedings. The most recent leading decision of the Court on the problem in point, the judgment in Coname, also yields only generally adhered to principles, but no concrete obligations.

74. If the present action for failure to fulfil obligations concerned the compatibility of national public-procurement legislation with Community law, a more tolerant view could be taken with regard to the burden of proof on the applicant. However, the action is concerned with proceeding against specific conduct, that is to say against a specific supply. The Commission's submissions should be correspondingly specific.

75. While it is true that, as a matter of law, the present action relates to one particular instance, it is nevertheless concerned with a legal problem of general practical importance. How should the numerous individual contracting authorities that award contracts and concessions in the Member States structure their practices in relation to procurement if the legal framework is so ill-defined and not even the Commission, which the Member States face in actions for failure to fulfil obligations, including in the prior administrative procedure, is able or wishes to state in specific terms what particular requirements are to be observed? The fact that, in the absence of an interpretative communication on the matter, it has been unclear until the last few weeks precisely what attitude the Commission takes must not operate to the detriment of the affected Member States. This very fact should have prompted the Commission to indicate more specifically the content of the obligation which it alleges to have been infringed.

76. From this angle, the following statement of Advocate General Jacobs in another procurement case is also true of the Commission in the present case: 'It did not however specify in what concrete ways those requirements could be fulfilled.' (22)

77. The principle requiring an appropriate degree of transparency thus entails as a rule the publication of a (contract) notice (a call for tenders). This rule is, however, subject to a series of exceptions and grounds of justification, which I have already addressed in detail in my Opinion in Coname(23) and in my Opinion delivered today in the action before the Court (C-532/03) parallel to the present action for failure to fulfil obligations. (24) It must therefore be examined below whether one of those exceptions or grounds of justification is applicable in the present proceedings. Since the Court does not consider that of its own motion, the following remarks are limited to the relevant arguments put forward in the proceedings.

78. It must be stated at the outset that the defendant Member State has been unable to prove the presence of a ground of justification expressly provided for in the Treaty or one recognised by case-law. The same is true as regards the application by analogy of one of the exceptions laid down in the directives. (25)

79. It cannot be ruled out that in some cases an award procedure may be conducted without a prior contract notice, that is to say without advertising. However, such circumstances were not present in the case in point or at least have not been proved.

80. Even the fact that the degree of transparency depends on the specific circumstances of the award, such as its subject-matter and value, does not mean in the case in point that the obligation to conduct some advertising could be dispensed with.

81. It is also necessary to consider Ireland's submission that the Commission's actions infringe the principles of the protection of legitimate expectations and of legal certainty. In this regard, reference must be made to a circumstance not discussed in the proceedings. The defendant Member State adopted the measure which the Commission criticises in May 1999, whereas the judgment in Telaustria, where the principle of transparency under primary law was presented, was not, however, delivered until 2000.

82. However, it is to be remembered that judgments interpreting Community law which are delivered on orders for references under Article 234 EC in principle have retroactive effect. No exception to this principle is made in the judgments in Telaustria and Coname. In actions for failure to fulfil obligations under Article 226 EC, such a possibility is not provided for.

83. Questions of law concerning the appraisal of Court judgments declaring the Member States to owe obligations which had not hitherto been anticipated might perhaps be settled in a second action for failure to fulfil obligations under Article 228 EC, but here only if the judgment in the present action is not complied with. That circumstance could then be taken be taken into account when determining the financial penalty.

84. Overall, examination of the process complained of by the Commission has thus shown that there were no circumstances which would have allowed the services at issue to be provided without any advertising being undertaken.

VI – Costs

85. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since Ireland is unsuccessful, and the Commission has applied for Ireland to pay its costs, Ireland should accordingly be ordered to pay the Commission's costs.

86. The Kingdom of Denmark, the Republic of Finland, the French Republic and the Kingdom of the Netherlands have intervened in the proceedings. Pursuant to the first subparagraph of Article 69 (4) of the Rules of Procedure, the interveners should bear their own costs.

VII – Conclusion

87. In accordance with all of the foregoing, I propose that the Court should:

(1) declare that, in deciding to entrust the provision of services to An Post without a prior notice, although there were no circumstances which would have allowed no advertising at all, Ireland has failed to comply with its obligations under the Treaty;

(2) order Ireland to pay the Commission's costs;

(3) order the Kingdom of Denmark, the Republic of Finland, the French Republic and the Kingdom of the Netherlands to bear their own costs.

Action brought on 1 December 2003 by the Commission of the European Communities against Ireland.

(Case C-507/03)

An action against Ireland was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 1 December 2003 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by K. Wiedner, acting as agent, assisted by J. E. Flynn QC, Barrister, with an address for service in Luxembourg.

The Applicant claims that the Court should:

declare that, in deciding to entrust the provision of services to An Post without undertaking any prior advertising, Ireland has failed to comply with its obligations under the Treaty; and order Ireland to pay the Commission's costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments:

The Commission considers that the fact that the contract at issue in this case falls within the scope of Council Directive 92/50/EEC[1] as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC[2] does not preclude the application of the principle enunciated in Telaustria[3] deriving from the fundamental freedoms laid down in the Treaty and the application of general principles which are given specific expression in those fundamental freedoms. The obligation on Member States to comply with general principles is confirmed, within the Directive itself by Article 3(2) (see above), a general obligation on contracting authorities to avoid all discrimination between service providers. That obligation is incumbent on the Irish authorities in respect of Annex 1B services just as much as in respect of Annex 1A services.

It is submitted that the Commission's analysis is the only one which can be regarded as consistent with the internal market logic of the Treaty. The Court's case-law clearly holds that the Treaty provisions on the freedoms of establishment and service provision impose obligations on Member States in respect of the award of public contracts outside the scope of the directives. This applies to types of contracts (such as service concessions) that are not specifically covered and also to contracts of types which are covered but where the value falls below the thresholds set in the various directives.

That being so, the Commission submits that it would run directly counter to the logic of the internal market if, whereas Community law requires an appropriate level of advertising in such situations even if the contract falls outside the scope of the directives because of its structure or value, it were nevertheless open to Member States not to advertise in any way contracts (whose value is above the financial thresholds) solely on the grounds that the services to which they relate fall within the scope of Annex 1B of the Directive.

Strabag AG (C-462/03) and Kostmann GmbH (C-463/03) v Osterreichische Bundesbahnen. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria. Public procurement contracts - Directive 93/38/EEC - Water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Concepts of "operation' and "provision' of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway - Railway infrastructure works. Joined cases C-462/03 and C-463/03.

Approximation of laws - Procurement procedures in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Directive 93/38 - Scope - Contracting entities exercising one of the activities mentioned in the directive and awarding a contract or organising a design contest for the purposes of the pursuit of that activity

(Council Directive 93/38, Arts 2(2), 4(1) and 6(1))

The applicability of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors depends on the activity exercised by the contracting entity concerned and on the links between that activity and the contract planned by that entity. If the latter carries on one of the activities listed in Article 2(2) of that directive, and in so doing contemplates, which it is a matter for the national court to verify, the award of a supply, works or service contract or the organisation of a design contest, the provisions of this directive will apply to that contract or contest. If the contracting entity does not carry on one of those activities, the contract or contest will be governed by the rules laid down in the directives concerning the award of public supply, works or service contracts as the case may be.

In accordance with Article 6(1) of Directive 93/38, the directive is not to apply, in particular, to contracts or design contests which the contracting entities award or organise for purposes other than the pursuit of their activities as described in Article 2(2) of that directive. In addition, the latter is not to extend to activities of those entities which either fall outside the water, energy, transport or telecommunications sectors or which fall within those sectors but are nevertheless directly exposed to competitive forces on markets to which entry is unrestricted.

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) rules as follows:

Where a contracting entity exercising one of the activities particularly mentioned in Article 2(2) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors contemplates, in the exercise of that activity, the award of a supply, works or service contract or the organisation of a design contest, that contract or contest is governed by the provisions of this directive.

1. These references for a preliminary ruling concern the interpretation of Article 2(2)(c) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84).

2. The references were made in the course of proceedings between Strabag AG and Kostmann GmbH respectively and Osterreichische Bundesbahnen (Austrian Federal Railways, the OBB'), concerning the award to competitors of the former parties of procurement contracts for the construction and double-track extension of railway lines involving, in particular, the carrying out of work involving earthworks, levelling and concreting, and the construction of railway bridges and works.

Law

The relevant provisions of Community law

3. Article 1(1) of Directive 93/38 defines certain concepts used in that act. So, under Article 1(1), (2), (4) and (7), for the purpose of the directive:

(1) public authorities shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, or associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

A body is considered to be governed by public law where it:

- is established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not being of an industrial or commercial nature,

- has legal personality, and

- is financed for the most part by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or is subject to management supervision by those bodies, or has an administrative, managerial or supervisory board more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law;

(2) public undertaking shall mean any undertaking over which the public authorities may exercise directly or indirectly a dominant influence by virtue of their ownership of it, their financial participation therein, or the rules which govern it. A dominant influence on the part of the public authorities shall be presumed when these authorities, directly or indirectly, in relation to an undertaking:

- hold the majority of the undertaking's subscribed capital, or

- control the majority of the votes attaching to shares issued by the undertaking, or

- can appoint more than half of the members of the undertaking's administrative, managerial or supervisory body;

...

(4) ... works... contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one of the contracting entities referred to in Article 2, and a... contractor..., having as their object ... either the execution, or both the execution and design or the realisation, by whatever means, of building or civil engineering activities referred to in Annex XI. These contracts may, in addition, cover supplies and services necessary for their execution...

...

(7) open, restricted and negotiated procedures shall mean the award procedures applied by contracting entities whereby:

(a) in the case of open procedures, all interested suppliers, contractors or service providers may submit tenders;

(b) in the case of the restricted procedures, only candidates invited by the contracting entity may submit tenders;

(c) in the case of negotiated procedures, the contracting entity consults suppliers, contractors or service providers of its choice and negotiates the terms of the contract with one or more of them.'

4. By virtue of Article 2(1) of Directive 93/38, the latter is to apply to contracting entities which:

(a) are public authorities or public undertakings and exercise one of the activities referred to in paragraph 2;

...'

5. Described in Article 2(2) of the directive, the activities falling within the scope of that act - and referred to in Article 2(1) - are the following:

(a) the provision or operation of fixed networks intended to provide a service to the public in connection with the production, transport or distribution of:

(i) drinking water; or

(ii) electricity; or

(iii) gas or heat;

or the supply of drinking water, electricity, gas or heat to such networks;

(b) the exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(i) exploring for or extracting oil, gas, coal or other solid fuels, or

(ii) the provision of airport, maritime or inland port or other terminal facilities to carriers by air, sea or inland waterway;

(c) the operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

As regards transport services, a network shall be considered to exist where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service;

(d) the provision or operation of public telecommunications networks or the provision of one or more public telecommunications services.'

6. Under Article 4(1) of Directive 93/38:

When awarding supply, works or service contracts, or organising design contests, the contracting entities shall apply procedures which are adapted to the provisions of this Directive.'

7. Article 6(1) of the directive states that it is not to apply to contracts or design contests which the contracting entities award or organise for purposes other than the pursuit of their activities as described in Article 2(2) or for the pursuit of such activities in a non-member country, in conditions not involving the physical use of a network or geographical area within the Community'.

8. Lastly, according to Article 20(1) of Directive 93/38, [c]ontracting entities may choose any of the procedures described in Article 1(7), provided that, subject to paragraph 2, a call for competition has been made in accordance with Article 21'. Article 20(2) sets out the precise circumstances in which contracting authorities may use a procedure without a prior call for competition.

The relevant provisions of domestic law

The federal law of 1997 on public procurement contracts

9. Directive 93/38 was transposed into Austrian law by the federal Law of 1997 on the award of public procurement contracts (Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen [Bundesvergabegesetz] 1997, BGBl. I, 56/1997, the BVergG'). Under Paragraph 84(1), (2) and (4) of Chapter 5 of that Law, headed Specific provisions relating to awarding authorities in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors':

(1) Public awarding authorities, to the extent that they carry out an activity within the meaning of subparagraph 2,... shall be governed exclusively by the provisions of this chapter.

(2) The activities covered by subparagraph 1 are the following:

1. the provision or operation of fixed networks...

2. the exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of...

3. the operation of fixed networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, bus, trolley bus, or cable;

4. the provision or operation of public telecommunications networks or the provision of one or more public telecommunications services.

(4) As regards transport services, a network shall be considered to exist where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service....'

10. Paragraph 113 of the BVergG sets out the powers of the Bundesvergabeamt (federal procurement office). It provides:

(1) The Bundesvergabeamt is responsible on application for carrying out a review procedure in accordance with the provisions of the following chapter.

(2) For the purpose of eliminating infringements of this federal law and of the regulations implementing it, the Bundesvergabeamt is authorised until the time of the award:

1. to adopt interim measures and

2. to set aside unlawful decisions of the contracting authority.

(3) After the award of the contract or the close of the contract award procedure, the Bundesvergabeamt is competent to determine whether, on grounds of infringement of this Federal Law or of any regulations issued under it, the contract has not been awarded to the best tenderer....'

The federal law of 2002 on the award of public procurement contracts

11. The BVergG 1997 was repealed and replaced, as from 1 September 2002, by a new federal law on the award of public procurement contracts (Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen, BGBl. I, 99/2002, the BVergG 2002'). Paragraph 120 of that law very largely recapitulates the wording of Paragraph 84 of the BVergG 1997. Unlike Paragraph 84, however, Paragraph 120(2)(3) of the BVergG 2002 provides, in respect of the transport sector, that the ope ration as well as the provision of fixed networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, bus, trolley bus, or cable, are among the activities referred to in subparagraph 1 and to which apply, therefore, the specific rules laid down in Directive 93/38.

12. So far as concerns the powers conferred on the Bundesvergabeamt, the BVergG 2002 is again largely based on the provisions of the BVergG 1997, Paragraph 162 of the BVergG 2002 reproducing, in particular, with certain amendments, the wording of Paragraph 113 of the BVergG 1997.

13. Paragraph 188 of the BVergG 2002, concerning the entry into force of that law and the repeal of the BVergG 1997, states in subparagraph 1 that the BVergG 2002 is not applicable to procedures for public procurement contracts begun before the date of its entry into force. As a result, Paragraph 188(3) of that law provides that if actions have been brought before the Bundesvergabeamt before 1 September 2002, that body is as a rule bound to carry out its consideration of those actions on the basis of the provisions of the BVergG 1997, in the version published in BGBl. I, 136/2001.

14. By virtue of the second sentence of that provision, however, that rule is not applicable where proceedings are stayed or a reference made for a preliminary ruling. In those two cases, the Bundesvergabeamt is as a matter of fact required, after ruling on the matter giving rise to the stay of proceedings or after receiving the reference for a preliminary ruling, to conduct the proceedings on the basis of the BVergG 2002.

The disputes in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

15. The disputes in the main proceedings are based on similar facts. They arise out of the decision by which the OBB - a company wholly owned by the Austrian State and responsible, under Paragraph 1(3) of the federal law on railways of 1992 (Bundesbahngesetz 1992, BGBl. 825/1992), for the carriage of persons and goods and for the construction and maintenance of the infrastructures necessary for that purpose - rejected the tenders made by the companies which are the applicants in the main proceedings and awarded to competitors of those companies the works contracts at issue in the two cases. Strabag and Kostmann in essence challenge the use by the OBB of the negotiated procedure for the award of contracts.

16. By communication of 29 December 2000 the OBB published in the Official Journal of the European Communities a contract notice relating to reinforced concrete works and construction of railways and railway bridges.

17. Fourteen construction undertakings, including Strabag and Kostmann, submitted tenders for that contract. The tenders made by those two undertakings were, however, rejected. Having been informed by fax of 5 July 2002 of the name of the tenderer selected by the OBB, Strabag decided to bring an action before the Bundesvergabeamt against the decision awarding the contract, seeking, first, to have that decision annulled pursuant to Paragraph 113(2) of the BVergG 1997 and, second, to have provisional measures adopted consisting, in this case, of an injunction addressed to the contracting authority for the purpose of preventing the contract in question's being concluded before a ruling should have been given on the merits of the action.

18. By an initial decision of 22 July 2002, that is to say, the very day of the conclusion of the contract between the OBB and the successful tenderer, the Bundesvergabeamt gave a favourable decision on the application for provisional measures and made the injunction sought by Strabag.

19. By a further decision of 30 August 2002 that body, ruling on the merits of the case, nevertheless held that the award had been made in accordance with the domestic and Community rules on public procurement contracts, so that it was no longer possible to uphold the application to have that contract annulled. In the same decision, le Bundesvergabeamt none the less found that recourse to the negotiated procedure for the award of the contract was unlawful. In that respect, it based its decision on the fact that the infrastructure project at issue in the case in the main proceedings constituted provision' of a network of public transport and could therefore not be regarded as an activity covered by Paragraph 84(2)(3) of the BVergG 1997. According to the Bundesvergabeamt, such a finding of unlawfulness would not, however, require a question to be referred to the Court of Justice seeking interpretation of the Community legislation, since the provisions of domestic law concerned are plain and on this point faithfully reflect the terms of Directive 93/38, in particular, those of Article 2(2)(c) thereof.

20. Following the adoption of that last decision, Strabag first brought an action challenging it before the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court), claiming, inter alia, that the Bundesvergabeamt had been wrong to dismiss the reference for a preliminary ruling presented by the applicant. Second, Strabag asked the Bundesvergabeamt to find, pursuant to Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG 1997, that as a result of infringement of that law, the contract had not been awarded to the best tenderer. On that point, the company argued on the basis of the finding made by that same body, that the OBB's choice of the negotiated procedure for the award of public procurement contracts had been incorrect. That latter request, made on 30 August 2002, was received at the Bundesvergabeamt on 2 September 2002, that is to say, the day after the entry into force of the BVergG 2002.

21. Taking the view that in those circumstances it was faced with a question demanding an interpretation of Community law in the light, particularly, of the new wording of the provision of the BVergG 2002 concerning the transport sector, viz., Paragraph 120(2)(3) of that law and having regard to the differences, both terminological and linguistic, between the situations referred to in Article 2(2)(a) and (d) of Directive 93/38 on the one hand and those mentioned in Article 2(2)(b) and (c) on the other, the Bundesvergabeamt has decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

(1) On a proper construction of Article 2(2)(c) of Directive 93/38/EEC, so far as transport is concerned, and contrary to the other situations covered by Article 2(2) of the directive, is it merely the operation of networks that must be considered to be a sectoral activity?

(2) What activities are covered by the expression operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway under Article 2(2)(c) of Directive 93/38/EEC? To what extent, in particular, are measures in the sphere of infrastructure to be included therein? And to what extent are such measures to be classed under the expression provision of networks?

(3) In so far as in the sphere of transport (by railway) it is exclusively the operation of networks that falls within the ambit of Directive 93/38/EEC (if the answer to the first question should be Yes): is a review authority bound to refrain from applying a provision of domestic law according to which, contrary to the wording of Directive 93/38/EEC, the provision of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway constitutes a sectoral activity also?'

22. As has been observed in paragraph 15 above, the facts occasioning this second case are similar to those which gave rise to Case C-462/03. Following the publication by the OBB of various contract notices for works involving excavation, earthworks, levelling and concreting and the construction of bridges, shafts, tunnels and underground passages linked to the construction or double-track extension of certain railways, Kostmann submitted tenders for the purpose of obtaining the award of those contracts.

23. On being informed by the OBB that its tender for the first contract had not been successful and that that contract had been awarded to a competitor undertaking, by letter of 13 December 2000 Kostmann requested the Bundesvergabeamt to find, pursuant to Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG 1997, that the contract had not been awarded to the best tenderer because, in its view, of the unwarranted use, contrary to that law, of the negotiated procedure.

24. The lawfulness of recourse to that last procedure is also at issue in the dispute between Kostmann and the OBB with regard to the other contract notices published by the OBB, in connection with the actions for annulment brought by Kostmann before the Bundesvergabeamt by letters of 13 December 2000 and 13 January 2001, that is to say, just a few days after the publication of those calls in the Official Journal of the European Communities. In those cases also the contracts were awarded to undertakings in competition with the applicant in the main proceedings after, in some of them, the latter's request for provisional measures had been rejected.

25. The arguments advanced before the Bundesvergabeamt in those various proceedings are, essentially, the same as those giving rise to Case C-462/03. The OBB defend having resorted to the negotiated procedure by inferring from the fact that the infrastructure projects that occasioned the various contract notices fall within the sector referred to in Article 2(2)(c) of Directive 93/38, and in the corresponding provision of the BVergG 1997, that the contracting authority might freely have recourse to an open, restricted or negotiated procedure. In contrast, Kostmann maintains that the OBB were bound to use the ordinary rules of public procurement, in particular, those laid down by Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), which states that the negotiated procedure is to be considered to be exceptional, for the infrastructure works at issue in the main proceedings are not among the activities within the sector referred to in Article 2(2)(c) of Directive 93/38.

26. Considering, in those circumstances, that the terms of that last directive call for interpretation, the Bundesvergabeamt has decided to stay proceedings and to refer to the Court for a preliminary ruling three questions, worded identically to those set out in paragraph 21 above.

27. By order of the President of the Court of 16 January 2004 Cases C-462/03 and C-463/03 were joined for the purposes of the written and oral procedure and of the judgment.

On the admissibility of the questions referred

28. In the observations it has submitted to the Court, the Commission of the European Communities expresses, as a preliminary point, some doubts as to the admissibility of the questions referred. It argues here that those questions are purely hypothetical, for the OBB are a contracting entity exercising one of the activities specifically mentioned in Article 2(2)(c) of Directive 93/38 and the infrastructure projects at issue in the main proceedings are directly linked to that activity. The question whether the provision of railway networks falls in a general way within the ambit of Article 2(2)(c) is therefore quite irrelevant to the cases in the main proceedings.

29. It ought to be borne in mind that, in accordance with settled case-law, it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (see, inter alia, Case C-390/99 Canal Satélite Digital [2002] ECR I-607, paragraphs 18 and 19; Case C-373/00 Adolf Truley [2003] ECR I-1931, paragraphs 21 and 22, and Case C-380/01 Schneider [2004] ECR I-1389, paragraphs 21 and 22).

30. In the present case, it is not apparent that the questions referred by the national court fall within one of those hypotheses.

31. First, it cannot be maintained that the interpretation sought of Community law bears no relation to the actual facts of the main actions or their purpose, or that the matter raised is hypothetical, for the Bundesvergabeamt's assessment of the lawfulness of resort to the negotiated procedure for procurement contracts depends, in particular, on the question whether or not the infrastructure projects at issue in the main proceedings fall within the material scope of Directive 93/38.

32. Second, the national court has provided the Court with all the information necessary to enable it to give a useful answer to the questions referred.

33. The questions must therefore be held to be admissible.

On the first and second questions

34. By its two first questions, which may appropriately be dealt with together, the Bundesvergabeamt in substance raises the issue of the material scope of Directive 93/38. It is clear, both from the explanations given in the orders for reference and from the observations submitted to the Court, that by its questions concerning the meaning of the expressions operation' and provision' of transport networks, that body seeks to ascertain whether the infrastructure projects at issue in the main proceedings are among the activities mentioned in Article 2(2)(c) of the directive and whether the contracting entity may, as a result, derogate from the ordinary rules governing the award of procurement contracts laid down in Directive 93/37 in favour of those contained in Directive 93/38, authorising more extensive use of the negotiated procedure.

35. On this point it is first to be noted, that, according to Article 2(2)(a) of Directive 93/38, the latter applies to contracting entities which are public authorities or public undertakings and which exercise one of the activities referred to in paragraph 2 of that article.

36. Second, Article 4(1) of that directive makes it apparent that when awarding supply, works or service contracts, or organising design contests, the contracting entities are to apply procedures which are adapted to the provisions of the directive.

37. As the Commission has correctly noted in its written observations, reading those two provisions together shows that the applicability of Directive 93/38 depends on the activity exercised by the contracting entity concerned and on the links between that activity and the contract planned by that entity. If the latter carries on one of the activities listed in Article 2(2) of Directive 93/38, and in so doing contemplates, which it is a matter for the national court to verify, the award of a supply, works or service contract or the organisation of a design contest, the provisions of this directive will apply to that contract or contest. If the contracting entity does not carry on one of those activities, the contract or contest will be governed by the rules laid down in the directives concerning the award of public supply, works or service contracts as the case may be.

38. Furthermore, that interpretation is expressly supported both by the very wording of Article 6(1) of Directive 93/38, which states that the directive is not to apply to contracts or design contests which the contracting entities award or organise for purposes other than the pursuit of their activities as described in Article 2(2) of that directive and by reading the 13th recital in the preamble thereto, which states that the directive is not to extend to activities of those entities which either fall outside the water, energy, transport or telecommunications sectors or which fall within those sectors but are nevertheless directly exposed to competitive forces on markets to which entry is unrestricted.

39. Having regard to the foregoing considerations, the answer to be given to the two first questions referred in each of the cases in the main proceedings is that where a contracting entity exercising one of the activities mentioned in Article 2(2) of Directive 93/38 contemplates, in the exercise of that activity, the award of a supply, works or service contract or the organisation of a design contest, that contract or contest is governed by the provisions of this directive.

On the third question

40. By its third question, which is worded identically in the two cases in the main proceedings, the national body seeks to ascertain, in substance, whether it is bound to refrain from applying a provision of domestic law that, contrary to the tenor of Article 2(2)(c) of Directive 93/38, provides that the provision of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway also constitutes an activity falling within a sector covered by that directive.

41. That question relies on the premiss that infrastructure works such as those at issue in the main proceedings do not fall within the material ambit of Directive 93/38, given that, according to the Bundesvergabeamt, such work must be treated as provision' of transport networks and that such activity does not appear among those expressly listed in Article 2(2)(c) of that directive.

42. Now that premiss is mistaken. As has been noted in paragraph 37 above, the applicability of Directive 93/38 depends on the activity exercised by the contracting entity concerned and on the links between that activity and the contract planned by that entity.

43. In the circumstances there is no need to answer the third question.

Costs

44. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the Bundesvergabeamt, the decision on costs is a matter for the latter. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT

(Second Chamber)

of 16 June 2005

in Joined Cases C-462/03 and C-463/03: Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Bundesvergabeamt Strabag AG, Kostmann GmbH v Österreichische Bundesbahnen [1]

(Public procurement contracts - Directive 93/38/EEC - Water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Concepts of 'operation' and 'provision' of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway - Railway infrastructure works)

(Language of the case: German)

In Joined Cases C-462/03 and C-463/03: reference for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC from the Bundesvergabeamt (Austria), made by decision of 27 October 2003, received at the Court on 4 November 2003, in the proceedings pending before that court between Strabag AG (C-462/03), Kostmann GmbH (C-463/03) and Österreichische Bundesbahnen - the Court (Second Chamber) composed of C.W.A. Timmermans (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, R. Silva de Lapuerta, R. Schintgen, G. Arestis and J. Klučka, Judges; P. Léger, Advocate General, R. Grass, Registrar, has given a judgment on 16 June 2005, the operative part of which is as follows:

Where a contracting entity exercising one of the activities particularly mentioned in Article 2(2) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors contemplates, in the exercise of that activity, the award of a supply, works or service contract or the organisation of a design contest, that contract or contest is governed by the provisions of this directive.

Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Bundesvergabeamt (Wien) by order of that Court of 27 October 2003 in the case of STRABAG AG against Österreichische Bundesbahnen

(Case C-462/03)

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Bundesvergabeamt (Wien) (Federal Procurement Office, Vienna) of 27 October 2003, received at the Court Registry on 4 November 2003, for a preliminary ruling in the case of STRABAG AG against Österreichische Bundesbahnen on the following questions:

1. Is Article 2(2)(c) of Directive 93/38/EEC[1] to be interpreted as meaning that, contrary to the other factual situations covered by Article 2(2) of the Directive, in the area of transport 'merely' the operation of networks is to be considered a sectoral activity?

2. Which activities fall within the scope of 'the operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway' under Article 2(2)(c) of Directive 93/38/EEC? To what extent are, in particular, measures in the field of infrastructure to be subsumed under this heading? To what extent are such measures in the field of infrastructure to be classified under the heading 'provision of networks'?

3. Inasmuch as in the (railway) transport sector it is exclusively the operation of networks that is governed by Directive 93/38/EEC (affirmation of Question 1): Does a review authority have to refrain from applying a national provision in which, contrary to the wording of Directive 93/38/EEC, also the 'provision of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway' is listed as a sectoral activity?

Judgment of the Court (First Chamber)
of 13 October 2005
Parking Brixen GmbH v Gemeinde Brixen and Stadtwerke Brixen AG. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Verwaltungsgericht, Autonome Sektion für die Provinz Bozen - Italy. Public procurement - Procedures for the award of public contracts -Service concession - Management of public pay car parks. Case C-458/03.

1. Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Scope - Public service concession covering the management of a public pay car park - Excluded

(Council Directive 92/50)

2. Community law - Principles - Equal treatment - Discrimination on the ground of nationality - Freedom of establishment - Freedom to provide services - Treaty provisions - Scope - Public service concession contracts - Included - Limits - Specific case

(Arts 12 EC, 43 EC and 49 EC)

1. The award, by a public authority to a service provider, of the management of a public pay car park, in consideration for which that provider is remunerated by sums paid by third parties for the use of that car park, is a public service concession to which Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts does not apply.

(see para. 43, operative part 1)

2. Public authorities concluding public service concession contracts are bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the EC Treaty, in general, particularly Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, and the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality set out in Article 12 EC, which are specific expressions of the general principle of equal treatment. The principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality imply, in particular, a duty of transparency which consists in ensuring, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the service concession to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed.

However, the application of the rules set out in Articles 12 EC, 43 EC and 49 EC, as well as the general principles of which they are the specific expression, is precluded if the control exercised over the concessionaire by the concession-granting public authority is similar to that which the authority exercises over its own departments and if, at the same time, that entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority.

The aforementioned provisions and principles preclude, in that regard, a public authority from awarding, without putting it out to competition, a public service concession to a company limited by shares resulting from the conversion of a special undertaking of that public authority, a company whose objects have been extended to significant new areas, whose capital must obligatorily be opened in the short term to other capital, the geographical area of whose activities has been extended to the entire country and abroad, and whose Administrative Board possesses very broad management powers which it can exercise independently.

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 1 March 2005,

gives the following

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby rules:

1. The award, by a public authority to a service provider, of the management of a public pay car park, in consideration for which that provider is remunerated by sums paid by third parties for the use of that car park, is a public service concession to which Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts does not apply.

2. Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, and the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency, are to be interpreted as precluding a public authority from awarding, without putting it out to competition, a public service concession to a company limited by shares resulting from the conversion of a special undertaking of that public authority, a company whose objects have been extended to significant new areas, whose capital must obligatorily be opened in the short term to other capital, the geographical area of whose activities has been extended to the entire country and abroad, and whose Administrative Board possesses very broad management powers which it can exercise independently.

1. The request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC, and the principles of non-discrimination, transparency and equal treatment.

2. That request was made in the course of a dispute between, on the one hand, Parking Brixen GmbH (hereinafter Parking Brixen') and, on the other hand, the Gemeinde Brixen (Municipality of Brixen) and Stadtwerke Brixen AG concerning the award to that company of the management of two car parks within that municipality.

Law

Community law

3. Article 43 EC provides:

Within the framework of the provisions set out below, restrictions on the freedom of establishment of nationals of a Member State in the territory of another Member State shall be prohibited....

Freedom of establishment shall include the right to take up and pursue activities as self-employed persons and to set up and manage undertakings, in particular companies or firms within the meaning of the second paragraph of Article 48, under the conditions laid down for its own nationals by the law of the country where such establishment is effected, subject to the provisions of the Chapter relating to capital.'

4. The first paragraph of Article 49 EC provides:

Within the framework of the provisions set out below, restrictions on freedom to provide services within the Community shall be prohibited in respect of nationals of Member States who are established in a State of the Community other than that of the person for whom the services are intended.'

5. The eighth recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 states:

... the provision of services is covered by this Directive only in so far as it is based on contracts;... the provision of services on other bases, such as law or regulations, or employment contracts, is not covered.'

6. Article 1 of that Directive provides:

For the purposes of this Directive:

(a) public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority...

(b) contracting authorities shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

7. Article 22(3) of Italian Law No 142 of 8 June 1990 on the government of autonomous areas (Ordinary Supplement to the GURI No 135 of 12 June 1990; hereinafter Law No 142/1990') provides that municipalities and provinces may use the following management structures for local public services for which they are responsible under the law:

(a) direct management, where, owing to the small size or the characteristics of the service, it would not be expedient to create an institution or an undertaking;

(b) concessions to third parties, where there are technical or economic reasons or reasons of social expediency;

(c) by special undertakings, also for the management of a number of services of economic and commercial importance;

(d) by institutions, for the provision of social services without commercial importance;

(e) by companies limited by shares with a majority local public shareholding, where participation by other public or private persons appears expedient owing to the nature of the service to be provided.'

8. Article 44 of Regional Law No 1 of 4 January 1993, in its original version, largely reproduced Article 22 of Law No 142/1990. Subsequently, Article 44 was amended by Regional Law No 10 of 23 October 1998.

9. Article 44 of Regional Law No 1, as amended by Regional Law No 10, provides:

...

6. Municipalities shall by regulations establish the procedures and selection criteria for the forms of organisation set forth hereunder for the management of public services of economic and commercial importance:

(a) formation of special undertakings;

(b) formation of, or participation in, public or private limited companies, under predominantly public local influence;

(c) entrusting the management of public services to third parties, in which case suitable procedures for their being put out to competition must be laid down for their selection. Without prejudice to other legal provisions, such relationships may not endure more than 20 years and may be renewed with the same subject-matter only in accordance with the rules referred to in this subparagraph. Cooperatives, associations representing, by virtue of the law, the sick or handicapped, as well as voluntary associations and non-profit-making organisations are to be accorded preference on equal conditions.

18. The associated local authorities may, at any time, entrust to companies formed as referred to in paragraph 6 and to companies referred to in paragraph 17 the performance of other public services compatible with the company's objects, by resolution of the board simultaneously approving the service contract relating thereto.'

10. The provisions of Article 44(6) and (18) of Regional Law No 1, as amended by Regional Law No 10, are reproduced word for word as Article 88(6) and (18) of the consolidated text of the provisions concerning local government in the Trentino-Südtirol Autonomous Region.

11. Article 115 of Decree-Law No 267 of 18 August 2000, the single text of the laws on the organisation of local authorities (Ordinary Supplement to the GURI No 227 of 28 September 2000, hereinafter Decree-Law No 267/2000'), authorises municipalities to convert their special undertakings into limited companies and to be their sole shareholder for a period not exceeding two years from the date of such conversion.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12. Under Article 22 of Law No 142/1990, the Gemeinde Brixen had had recourse, for the management of certain local public services for which it was responsible, to Stadtwerke Brixen, a special undertaking owned by that municipality.

13. Under Article 1 of its statutes, Stadtwerke Brixen was endowed, from 1 January 1999, with legal personality and corporate autonomy and it constituted a municipal body, the specific function of which is the uniform and integrated provision of local public services.

14. Under Article 2 of its statutes, Stadtwerke Brixen's objective was, in particular:

(f) the management of car parks and multi-storey car parks including the carrying out of any related activity'.

15. Under Article 115 of Decree-Law No 267/2000, the Gemeinde Brixen, by Decision No 97 of 25 October 2001, converted the special undertaking Stadtwerke Brixen into a limited company called Stadtwerke Brixen AG'.

16. Under Article 1(3) of that company's statutes, all existing rights and obligations of the special undertaking [Stadtwerke Brixen] shall continue after the conversion and the company [Stadtwerke Brixen AG] shall, as a result, succeed to all the rights and obligations of the [special] undertaking Stadtwerke Brixen'.

17. Under Article 4 of its statutes, Stadtwerke Brixen AG may carry on, among others, the following activities at local, national and international level:

(g) the management of car parks and garages and related activities'.

18. Article 18 of Stadtwerke Brixen AG's statutes provides that the following powers are conferred on its Administrative Board:

(1) The Administrative Board shall have the broadest possible powers relating to the company's routine administration with the authority to carry out all acts which it deems appropriate or necessary to attain the objective of the company.

(2) Unless authorised by the shareholders' meeting, the Administrative Board is prohibited from providing guarantees with a value of over EUR 5 (five) million and from signing promissory notes and accepting drafts which exceed this amount.

(3) The purchase and sale of holdings in other companies, the purchase, sale and leasing of businesses or branches of businesses, and the purchase and sale of vehicles up to a value of EUR 5 (five) million per transaction shall be regarded as acts of routine administration.

(4) Those decisions which relate to the fixing and/or amendment of remuneration for special tasks in accordance with Article 2389(2) of the Italian Civil Code shall fall within the exclusive competence of the Administrative Board.'

19. Under Article 5(2) of Stadtwerke Brixen AG's statutes, the Gemeinde Brixen's holding in the nominal capital shall, in no circumstances, be below the absolute majority of nominal shares'. In addition, the Gemeinde Brixen shall have the right to appoint a majority of the members of the company's Administrative Board. Since the supervisory board of the company is to be composed of three full members and two alternates, that municipality shall appoint at least two full members and one alternate of that board.

20. According to the referring court, the conversion of a special undertaking into a company limited by shares entails an obvious increase in its independence. Indeed, Stadtwerke Brixen AG's area of operation has been considerably extended compared with that of Stadtwerke Brixen since it can pursue activities at local, national and international level, whereas the activities of the special undertaking Stadtwerke Brixen were limited to the territory of the Gemeinde Brixen. In addition, the special undertaking Stadtwerke Brixen was subject to the direct control and influence of the municipal council, whereas, as regards Stadtwerke Brixen AG, the control exercised by the municipality is limited to those measures which company law assigns to the majority of shareholders.

21. By Decision No 37 of 23 March 2000, the municipal council of Brixen entrusted the construction and management of a public swimming pool to Stadtwerke Brixen. When it was converted, on 25 October 2001, into a company limited by shares, Stadtwerke Brixen AG succeeded to the rights and obligations resulting from that decision.

22. By Decision No 118 of 18 December 2001, the municipal council of Brixen granted Stadtwerke Brixen AG building rights over the soil and sub-soil of the site intended for the swimming pool, among others over registered plot 491/11 in the Gemeinde Brixen, for the construction of underground parking spaces.

23. Until the planned underground car park was built, provision was made for a temporary car park on the surface. For that purpose, plot 491/11, which had until then been used as a football pitch, was given a temporary tarmac surfacing to become an above-ground car park with about 200 spaces. According to the referring court, no agreement was made for the operation of plot 491/11 as an above-ground car park.

24. In order to provide additional parking spaces, the above-ground car park on the adjacent plot, namely registered plot 491/6, also in the Gemeinde Brixen, which had about 200 spaces and had been directly managed by the Gemeinde for more than 10 years, was awarded, for the purposes of its management, to Stadtwerke Brixen AG, by Decision No 107 of 28 November 2002 of the municipal council of Brixen. That decision states that, for the activity of the baths, a temporary car park has already been built by Stadtwerke Brixen AG in close proximity to municipal land' and that it seems therefore necessary and expedient to entrust also to Stadtwerke Brixen AG the management of the adjacent land, consisting of plot 491/6... covering 5 137 m 2 , which is currently managed direct ly by the municipality'.

25. On 19 December 2002, the Gemeinde Brixen, in order to implement Decision No 107, concluded with Stadtwerke Brixen AG an agreement which entrusted to it, for a nine-year term, the management of the car park on plot 491/6.

26. In consideration of the management of that car park, Stadtwerke Brixen AG collects the parking charges. However, it pays to the Gemeinde Brixen an annual fee of EUR 151 700, which is indexed on the parking charges, so that an increase in those charges leads to an increase in the fee paid to the municipality. Apart from the management of the car park, Stadtwerke Brixen AG takes responsibility for the free bicycle hiring service and accepts that the weekly market continues to be held on the area in question. Stadtwerke Brixen AG also took over the staff who were previously employed there by the Gemeinde Brixen. Finally, the routine and non-routine maintenance of the area is the task of that company which takes full responsibility in that regard.

27. Under a concession contract made on 19 June 1992 with the Gemeinde Brixen, Parking Brixen had undertaken to build and manage a car park, which is distinct from those which are the subjectmatter of the main proceedings, but also situated within that municipality. Parking Brixen challenged, before the Verwaltungsgericht, Autonome Sektion für die Provinz Bozen (Administrative Court, Autonomous Division for the Province of Bolzen), the award to Stadtwerke Brixen AG of the management of the car parks on plots 491/6 and 491/11. In its submission, the Gemeinde Brixen should have applied the provisions on public procurement.

28. The defendants in the main proceedings, namely Stadtwerke Brixen AG and the Gemeinde Brixen, denied that there was any obligation to proceed by way of a public call for tenders. The Gemeinde maintained in that regard that it completely controls Stadtwerke Brixen AG and that there was therefore no award of a contract to a third party.

29. In those circumstances, the Verwaltungsgericht, Autonome Sektion für die Provinz Bozen, decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

1. Does the award of the management of the public pay car parks in question constitute a public service contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50/EEC or a public service concession to which the competition rules of the European Community, in particular the obligation to ensure equal treatment and transparency, must be applied?

2. If that award does constitute a service concession relating to the management of a local public service, is the award of the management of public pay car parks which, under Article 44(6)(b) of Regional Law No 1 of 4 January 1993, as amended by Article 10 of Regional Law No 10 of 23 January 1998 and under Article 88(6)(a) and (b) of the consolidated text of the provisions concerning local government, can be effected without a public call for tenders, compatible with Community law, in particular with the principles of freedom to provide services and freedom of competition, the prohibition of discrimination, and the resultant obligations to ensure equal treatment, transparency and proportionality, where a company limited by shares is involved which was set up pursuant to Article 115 of Legislative Decree No 267/2000 by the conversion of a special undertaking of a municipality, whose share capital at the time of the award was held 100% by the municipality itself but whose administrative board enjoys all extensive powers of routine administration up to a value of EUR 5 million per transaction?'

30. By order of the President of the Court of 25 May 2004, an application by Energy Service Srl for leave to intervene was rejected as inadmissible.

The first question

31. By its first question, the referring court is asking whether the award of the management of the public pay car parks in question in the main proceedings involves a public service contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50, or a public service concession.

32. It is appropriate to state at the outset that it is not for the Court to classify specifically the transactions at issue in the main proceedings. That is within the jurisdiction of the national court alone. The Court's role is confined to providing the national court with an interpretation of Community law which will be useful for the decision which it has to take in the dispute before it.

33. For that purpose the Court may deduce from the case-file of the main proceedings the matters which are relevant to the interpretation of Community law.

34. In that context it is appropriate to note that the main proceedings concern the award of the management of two distinct car parks: first, that on plot 491/11 and, second, that on plot 491/6.

35. As regards the above-ground car park on plot 491/11, the order for reference states only that no agreement was concluded for its operation. In particular, that decision contains no information about the conditions for remunerating the car park operator.

36. In those circumstances, the Court can state only that it does not have sufficient information to give a useful interpretation of Community law in reply to that part of the question.

37. As regards the car park on plot 491/6, it is clear from the order for reference, as noted in paragraphs 24 to 26 of this judgment, that the car park had been managed directly by the Gemeinde Brixen for more than 10 years when its management was entrusted, for a term of nine years, to Stadtwerke Brixen AG by a contract which it concluded with the municipality on 19 December 2002. In consideration for managing the car park, parking charges are collected from its users by Stadtwerke Brixen AG, which pays the Gemeinde Brixen an annual fee. In addition, Stadtwerke Brixen AG accepts that the weekly market will continue to be held on the area in question, provides the free bicycle hiring service and takes responsibility for the maintenance of that area.

38. In view of that information, it must be understood that, by its first question, the referring court is asking, in essence, whether the award, by a public authority to a service provider, of the management of a public pay car park, in consideration for which that provider is remunerated by amounts paid by third parties for the use of the car park, is a public service contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50, or a public service concession to which that directive does not apply.

39. As stated in the eighth recital in its preamble, Directive 92/50 applies to public service contracts', which are defined in Article 1(a) thereof as contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority'. It follows from that definition that a public service contract within the meaning of that directive involves consideration which is paid directly by the contracting authority to the service provider.

40. In the situation referred to in the first question, on the other hand, the service provider's remuneration comes not from the public authority concerned, but from sums paid by third parties for the use of the car park in question. That method of remuneration means that the provider takes the risk of operating the services in question and is thus characteristic of a public service concession. Therefore, in a situation such as that in the main proceedings, it is not a case of a public service contract, but of a public service concession.

41. In that regard, it is relevant to point out that that interpretation is confirmed by Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), even though it was not applicable at the date of the facts in the main proceedings. Under Article 1(4) of that directive, service concession is a contract of the same type as a public service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in this right together with payment'.

42. It is common ground that public service concessions are excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50 (see order in Case C-358/00 BuchhändlerVereinigung [2002] ECR I-4685, paragraph 28).

43. The reply therefore to the first question must be that the award, by a public authority to a service provider, of the management of a public pay car park, in consideration for which that provider is remunerated by sums paid by third parties for the use of that car park, is a public service concession to which Directive 92/50 does not apply.

The second question

44. By its second question, the referring court is asking, in essence, whether the award of a public service concession without it being put out to competition is compatible with Community law, if the concessionaire is a company limited by shares resulting from the conversion of a special undertaking of a public authority, a company whose share capital is at the time of the award 100% owned by the concession-granting public authority, but whose administrative board enjoys all extensive powers of routine administration and can effect independently, without the agreement of the shareholders' meeting, certain transactions up to a value of EUR 5 million.

45. That question refers, first, to the conduct of the concession-granting authority in relation to the award of a specific concession and, second, to the national legislation which permits the award of such a concession without a call for tenders.

46. Notwithstanding the fact that public service concession contracts are, as Community law stands at present, excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50, the public authorities concluding them are, none the less, bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the EC Treaty, in general, and the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality, in particular (see, to that effect, Case C-324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I-10745, paragraph 60, and Case C-231/03 Coname [2005] ECR I-0000, paragraph 16).

47. The prohibition on any discrimination on grounds of nationality is set out in Article 12 EC. The provisions of the Treaty which are more specifically applicable to public service concessions include, in particular, Article 43 EC, the first paragraph of which states that restrictions on the freedom of establishment of nationals of a Member State in the territory of another Member State are to be prohibited, and Article 49 EC, the first paragraph of which provides that restrictions on freedom to provide services within the Community are to be prohibited in respect of nationals of Member States who are established in a State of the Community other than that of the person for whom the services are intended.

48. According to the Court's case-law, Articles 43 EC and 49 EC are specific expressions of the principle of equal treatment (see Case C-3/88 Commission v Italy [1989] ECR 4035, paragraph 8). The prohibition on discrimination on grounds of nationality is also a specific expression of the general principle of equal treatment (see Case 810/79 Überschär [1980] ECR 2747, paragraph 16). In its case-law relating to the Community directives on public procurement, the Court has stated that the principle of equal treatment of tenderers is intended to afford equality of opportunity to all tenderers when formulating their tenders, regardless of their nationality (see, to that effect, Case C-87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I-2043, paragraphs 33 and 54). As a result, the principle of equal treatment of tenderers is to be applied to public service concessions even in the absence of discrimination on grounds of nationality.

49. The principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality imply, in particular, a duty of transparency which enables the concession-granting public authority to ensure that those principles are complied with. That obligation of transparency which is imposed on the public authority consists in ensuring, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the service concession to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed (see, to that effect, Telaustria and Telefonadress , cited above, paragraphs 61 and 62).

50. It is for the concession-granting public authority to evaluate, subject to review by the competent courts, the appropriateness of the detailed arrangements of the call for competition to the particularities of the public service concession in question. However, a complete lack of any call for competition in the case of the award of a public service concession such as that at issue in the main proceedings does not comply with the requirements of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC any more than with the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency.

51. Furthermore, Article 86(1) EC provides that, in the case of public undertakings and undertakings to which Member States grant special or exclusive rights, Member States shall neither enact nor maintain in force any measure contrary to the rules contained in the Treaty, in particular to those laid down in Articles 12 EC and 81 EC to 89 EC.

52. It follows therefrom that the Member States must not maintain in force national legislation which permits the award of public service concessions without their being put out to competition since such an award infringes Article 43 EC or 49 EC or the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency.

53. Two arguments are deployed to maintain that the provisions of the Treaty and the general principles mentioned in paragraphs 46 to 52 of this judgment do not apply to a public service concession awarded in circumstances such as those of the main proceedings.

54. First, Stadtwerke Brixen AG argues that Articles 43 EC to 55 EC do not apply to a situation such as that in the main proceedings, because it is a situation purely internal to a single Member State, given that Parking Brixen, Stadtwerke Brixen AG and the Gemeinde Brixen all have their seats in Italy.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

55. That argument cannot be accepted. It is possible that, in the main proceedings, undertakings established in Member States other than the Italian Republic might have been interested in providing the services concerned (see, to that effect, Commission v Belgium , cited above, paragraph 33). In the absence of advertising and the opening to competition of the award of a public service concession such as that at issue in the main proceedings, there is discrimination, at least potentially, against undertakings of the other Member States which are prevented from making use of the freedom to provide services and of the freedom of establishment provided for by the Treaty (see, to that effect, Coname , cited above, paragraph 17).

56. Secondly, the Italian Republic, Stadtwerke Brixen AG and the Gemeinde Brixen contend that the application of the rules of the Treaty and of the general principles of Community law to a situation such as that in the main proceedings is precluded by the fact that Stadtwerke Brixen AG is not an entity independent of that municipality. In support of that argument, they rely on the judgment in Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I-8121, paragraphs 49 to 51.

57. In that regard, it is important to recall that, in Teckal , cited above, the Court held that Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) is applicable where a contracting authority, such as a local authority, plans to conclude in writing, with an entity which is formally distinct from it and independent of it in regard to decision-making, a contract for pecuniary interest for the supply of goods.

58. As regards the existence of such a contract, the Court stated, in paragraph 50 of the judgment in Teckal , that, in accordance with Article 1(a) of Directive 93/36, it is in principle sufficient if the contract was concluded between, on the one hand, a local authority and, on the other, a person legally distinct from that local authority. The position can be otherwise only in the case where the local authority exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling local authority or authorities.

59. The Court has confirmed that the same considerations apply to Directive 92/50 on public service contracts and Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) (see, respectively, Case C-26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I-1, paragraphs 48, 49 and 52, and Case C-84/03 Commission v Spain [2005] ECR I-139, paragraph 39).

60. Those considerations are based on the premiss that the application of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 depends on the existence of a contract concluded between two distinct persons (see Teckal , paragraphs 46 and 49). Yet the application of Articles 12 EC, 43 EC and 49 EC, as well as the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency associated with them, does not depend on the existence of a contract. As a result, the considerations developed in the case-law cited in paragraphs 56 to 59 of this judgment do not apply automatically either to those provisions of the Treaty or to those principles.

61. Nevertheless, it must be held that those considerations may be transposed to the Treaty provisions and to the principles which relate to public service concessions excluded from the scope of the directives on public procurement. Indeed, in the field of public procurement and public service concessions, the principle of equal treatment and the specific expressions of that principle, namely the prohibition on discrimination on grounds of nationality and Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, are to be applied in cases where a public authority entrusts the supply of economic activities to a third party. By contrast, it is not appropriate to apply the Community rules on public procurement or public service concessions in cases where a public authority performs tasks in the public interest for which it is responsible by its own administrative, technical and other means, without calling upon external entities (see, to that effect, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau , paragraph 48).

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

62. Consequently, in the field of public service concessions, the application of the rules set out in Articles 12 EC, 43 EC and 49 EC, as well as the general principles of which they are the specific expression, is precluded if the control exercised over the concessionaire by the concession-granting public authority is similar to that which the authority exercises over its own departments and if, at the same time, that entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority.

63. Since it is a matter of a derogation from the general rules of Community law, the two conditions stated in the preceding paragraph must be interpreted strictly and the burden of proving the existence of exceptional circumstances justifying the derogation to those rules lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances (see Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau , paragraph 46).

64. It is appropriate to examine, first, whether the concession-granting public authority exercises a control over the concessionaire which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.

65. That assessment must take account of all the legislative provisions and relevant circumstances. It must follow from that examination that the concessionaire in question is subject to a control enabling the concession-granting public authority to influence the c oncessionaire's decisions. It must be a case of a power of decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions.

66. It is clear from the order for reference that under Article 1 of the statutes of the special undertaking, Stadtwerke Brixen, it was a municipal body whose specific function was the uniform and integrated provision of local public services. The municipal council laid down the general guidelines, allocated the start-up capital, ensured that any social costs were covered, monitored the operating results and exercised strategic supervision, the undertaking being guaranteed the necessary independence.

67. By contrast, Stadtwerke Brixen AG became market-oriented, which renders the municipality's control tenuous. Militating in that direction are:

(a) the conversion of Stadtwerke Brixen - a special undertaking of the Gemeinde Brixen - into a company limited by shares (Stadtwerke Brixen AG) and the nature of that type of company;

(b) the broadening of its objects, the company having started to work in significant new fields, particularly those of the carriage of persons and goods, as well as information technology and telecommunications. It must be noted that the company retained the wide range of activities previously carried on by the special undertaking, particularly those of water supply and waste water treatment, the supply of heating and energy, waste disposal and road building;

(c) the obligatory opening of the company, in the short term, to other capital;

(d) the expansion of the geographical area of the company's activities, to the whole of Italy and abroad;

(e) the considerable powers conferred on its Administrative Board, with in practice no management control by the municipality.

68. In fact, as regards the powers conferred on the Administrative Board, it is clear from the decision of reference that the statutes of Stadtwerke Brixen AG, particularly Article 18 thereof, give the board very broad powers to manage the company, since it has the power to carry out all acts which it considers necessary for the attainment of the company's objective. In addition, the power, under the said Article 18, to provide guarantees up to EUR 5 million or to effect other transactions without the prior authority of the shareholders' meeting shows that the company has broad independence vis-à-vis its shareholders.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

69. The decision of reference also states that the Gemeinde Brixen has the right to appoint the majority of the members of Stadtwerke Brixen AG's Administrative Board. However, the referring court notes that the control exercised by the municipality over Stadtwerke Brixen AG is limited, essentially, to those measures which company law assigns to the majority of shareholders, which considerably attenuates the relationship of dependence which existed between the municipality and the special undertaking Stadtwerke Brixen, in the light, above all, of the broad powers possessed by Stadtwerke Brixen AG's Administrative Board.

70. Where a concessionaire enjoys a degree of independence characterised by elements such as those noted in paragraphs 67 to 69 of this judgment, it is not possible for the concession-granting public authority to exercise over the concessionaire control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.

71. In those circumstances, and without it being necessary to consider the question whether the concessionaire carries out the essential part of its activities with the concession-granting public authority, the award of a public service concession by a public authority to such a body cannot be regarded as a transaction internal to that authority, to which the rules of Community law do not apply.

72. It follows that the reply to the second question referred for a preliminary ruling must be as follows:

Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, and the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency, are to be interpreted as precluding a public authority from awarding, without putting it out to competition, a public service concession to a company limited by shares resulting from the conversion of a special undertaking of that public authority, a company whose objects have been extended to significant new areas, whose capital must obligatorily be opened in the short term to other capital, the geographical area of whose activities has been extended to the entire country and abroad, and whose Administrative Board possesses very broad management powers which it can exercise independently.

Costs

73. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT

(First Chamber)

of 13 October 2005

in Case C-458/03: Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Verwaltungsgericht, Autonome Sektion für die Provinz Bozen, Parking Brixen GmbH v Gemeinde Brixen, Stadtwerke Brixen AG [1]

(Public procurement - Procedures for the award of public contracts - Service concession - Management of public pay car parks)

(Language of the case: German)

In Case C-458/03: Reference for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC from the Verwaltungsgericht, Autonome Sektion für die Provinz Bozen (Italy), made by decision of 23 July 2003, received at the Court on 30 October 2003, in the proceedings between Parking Brixen GmbH and Gemeinde Brixen and Stadtwerke Brixen AG - the Court (First Chamber), composed of P. Jann, President of the Chamber, K. Schiemann, K. Lenaerts, J.N. Cunha Rodrigues (Rapporteur) and E. Juhász, Judges; J. Kokott, Advocate General; M.-F. Contet, Principal Administrator, for the Registrar, gave a judgment on 13 October 2005, the operative part of which is as follows:

The award, by a public authority to a service provider, of the management of a public pay car park, in consideration for which that provider is remunerated by sums paid by third parties for the use of that car park, is a public service concession to which Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts does not apply.

Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, and the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency, are to be interpreted as precluding a public authority from awarding, without putting it out to tender, a public service concession to a company limited by shares which resulted from the conversion of a special undertaking of that public authority, whose objects have been extended to significant new areas, whose capital must obligatorily be opened in the short term to other capital, the geographical area of whose activities has been extended to the entire country and abroad, and whose Administrative Board possesses very broad management powers which it can exercise independently.

[1] - OJ C 7 of 10.01.2004.

Opinion of Advocate General Kokott delivered on 1 March 2005. Parking Brixen GmbH v Gemeinde Brixen and Stadtwerke Brixen AG. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Verwaltungsgericht, Autonome Sektion für die Provinz Bozen - Italy. Public procurement - Procedures for the award of public contracts -Service concession - Management of public pay car parks. Case C-458/03.

I - Introduction

1. One of the key questions in public procurement law is the distinction between award transactions which are subject to a compulsory call for tenders and those which are not. Particularly topical in this connection is the differentiation between the award of contracts to third parties and internal procurement operations, also referred to as in-house operations'.

2. In-house operations stricto sensu are transactions in which a body governed by public law awards a contract to one of its departments which does not have its own legal personality. Largo sensu , however, in-house operations may also include certain situations in which contracting authorities conclude contracts with companies controlled by them which do have their own legal personality. Whereas in-house operations stricto sensu are by definition irrelevant for the purposes of procurement law, since they involve transactions wholly internal to the administration, (2) in-house operations largo sensu (sometimes called quasi-in-house operations' (3)) frequently raise the difficult question whether or not there is a requirement to put them out to tender. That is the issue with which the Court is concerned once again (4) in this case.

3. The Municipality of Brixen awarded the management of two public pay car parks to its subsidiary Stadtwerke Brixen AG without first carrying out an award procedure. The private company Parking Brixen GmbH challenged that award. An Italian court, the Verwaltungsgericht, Autonome Sektion für die Provinz Bozen (Administrative Court, Autonomous Division for the Province of Bolzano) (hereinafter also called the referring court'), has referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling two questions which relate essentially to the distinction between public service concessions and public service contracts, and the distinction between external awards subject to a compulsory call for tenders and in-house operations not subject to a compulsory call for tenders.

II - Relevant legislation

A - Community law

4. The Community legislation relevant to this case comprises Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (5) (hereinafter Directive 92/50') and Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86(1) EC.

5. Article 1(a) and (b) of Directive 92/50 reads as follows:

For the purposes of this Directive:

(a) public service contracts' shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority,...;

(b) contracting authorities' shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

...'.

6. Article 43 EC establishes the freedom of establishment and Article 49 EC the freedom to provide services. Under the first paragraph of Article 48 EC and Article 55 EC, companies or firms formed in accordance with the law of a Member State and having their registered office, central administration or principal place of business within the Community are, for the purposes of those freedoms, to be treated in the same way as natural persons who are nationals of Member States.

7. Finally, Article 86(1) and (2) EC provides as follows:

1. In the case of public undertakings and undertakings to which Member States grant special or exclusive rights, Member States shall neither enact nor maintain in force any measure contrary to the rules contained in this Treaty, in particular to those rules provided for in Article 12 and Articles 81 to 89.

2. Undertakings entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest or having the character of a revenue-producing monopoly shall be subject to the rules contained in this Treaty, in particular to the rules on competition, in so far as the application of such rules does not obstruct the performance, in law or in fact, of the particular tasks assigned to them. The development of trade must not be affected to such an extent as would be contrary to the interests of the Community.'

B - National law

8. In Italy, Article 115(1) of Decreto Legislativo (6) No 267 of the President of the Republic of 18 August 2000 (hereinafter, Decree-Law 267/2000') (7) allows municipalities and other local authorities to convert their dedicated undertakings (also known as special undertakings'), by means of a unilateral legal transaction, into public limited companies. In those circumstances, the companies in question retain the rights and obligations obtaining prior to the conversion and take over the assets and liabilities of the original special undertakings. Under that provision, the local authority concerned may continue to be the sole shareholder in such a company, albeit for no more than two years following the conversion.

9. Article 88(6) of the consolidated text of the provisions concerning local government of the Autonomous Region of Trentino-South Tyrol (hereinafter, the provisions concerning local government') provides:

Municipalities shall by regulations establish the procedures and selection criteria for the forms of organisation set forth hereunder for the management of public services of economic and commercial importance:

(a) Formation of special undertakings;

(b) Formation of, or participation in, public or private limited companies, under predominantly public local influence;

(c) Entrusting the management of public services to third parties, in which case suitable procedures for their being put out to competition must be laid down....'. (8)

10. Also, Article 88(18) of the provisions concerning local government provides that local authorities with holdings in companies formed under Article 6 may - subject to certain conditions defined in greater detail in paragraph 18 - entrust such companies with the management of other public services which are compatible with the objectives of the company.

III - Facts

Facts and main proceedings

11. In 2001 and 2002, the Municipality of Brixen, situated in the Italian Autonomous Region of Trentino-South Tyrol, transferred the management of two public car parks to Stadtwerke Brixen AG, in each case without a prior award procedure. Both car parks belong to the municipal public swimming baths, the construction and management of which had already been transferred to Stadtwerke Brixen in 2000. As became clear at the hearing, however, those car parks are not used exclusively by patrons of the swimming baths.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

12. According to the information supplied by the referring court, those car parks are situated on two different plots of land bearing numbers 491/6 and 491/11.

13. With respect to plot 491/11, in December 2001, the municipality granted (9) Stadtwerke Brixen AG an overground and underground building right for the construction of a car park. Pending completion of the planned underground car park, provision was made for a temporary overground car park. To that end, the land in question (which had previously been a football field) was temporarily surfaced and converted into a car park with approximately 200 spaces.

14. In order to provide additional parking, management of the neighbouring overground car park on plot 491/6 was also transferred to Stadtwerke Brixen AG in November 2002 for a period of nine months. (10) That car park, which likewise comprised some 200 spaces, had previously been administered directly by the Municipality of Brixen for 10 years.

15. Under an agreement concluded with the Municipality of Brixen on 19 December 2002, Stadtwerke Brixen AG is permitted to charge patrons a fee for using the latter car park, situated on plot 491/6. In return, it undertook to pay the municipality annual compensation in the amount of EUR 151 700, which is to increase proportionately if the parking fee is raised. (11) In addition, Stadtwerke Brixen AG continued to employ the car park operating staff formerly employed by the Municipality of Brixen, undertook to ensure the routine and non-routine upkeep of the site and assumed full liability in this regard. Stadtwerke Brixen AG also stated that it was willing to carry on the cycle hire service which the Municipality of Brixen had previously operated from the car park and to allow the weekly market to continue to be held there.

16. According to the information supplied by the referring court, no such agreement was concluded, however, with respect to use of the overground car park on plot 491/11.

17. The award of the car park management contract to Stadtwerke Brixen AG is challenged by Parking Brixen GmbH, which already operates a multi-storey car park at another location in Brixen and is itself interested in managing the two car parks at issue here. On 17 January 2003, it brought a Rekurs' (appeal) before the referring court and seeks the annulment of the legal transactions by which the award was effected.

Additional information on Stadtwerke Brixen AG and the former dedicated undertaking

18. Stadtwerke Brixen AG is the legal successor to Stadtwerke Brixen, formerly a dedicated undertaking (also called a special undertaking') of the Municipality of Brixen. As a dedicated undertaking, it had had legal personality and commercial independence since 1 January 1999 and was converted by the municipality into a public limited company, Stadtwerke Brixen AG, under Article 115 of Legislative Decree 267/2000 in October 2001. (12)

19. The tasks of Stadtwerke Brixen AG are set out in Article 4 of its statutes. Under that article, it is permitted to operate in numerous areas falling under the heading of services of general economic interest in the broadest sense of that term, in particular water supply and sewage disposal, heating and power supply, highway construction, refuse disposal, transport of passengers and goods, as well as information technology and telecommunications, in each case at local, national and international level. Its tasks also include the management of car parks and garages, together with the activities associated with them.

20. The only shareholder in Stadtwerke Brixen AG at the time of the transfer of the two car parks, and thereafter, was the Municipality of Brixen. Article 5(2) of the statutes of Stadtwerke Brixen AG provides that participation by the Municipality of Brixen in the company's authorised share capital must not under any circumstances be less than the absolute majority of the ordinary share capital.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

21. Under Article 17 of its statutes, Stadtwerke Brixen AG is to be administered by an Administrative Board consisting of between three and six members to be appointed by the shareholders' meeting, the Municipality of Brixen being able in any event to appoint the majority of the members of the Administrative Board. (13) Under Article 18 of the statutes, the Administrative Board has the power to ensure the routine administration of the company, although that power is subject to a number of limitations including, in some circumstances, the carrying out of legal transactions up to a value of no more than EUR 5 000 000 per transaction. Furthermore, Article 24 of the statutes provides for a Supervisory Board consisting of three ordinary members and two alternate members, of which the Municipality is to appoint at least two ordinary members and one alternate member.

22. The former special undertaking Stadtwerke Brixen had tasks materially similar to those of the present Stadtwerke Brixen AG, although confined to the municipality's area of responsibility and to cooperation with other undertakings in matters extending beyond the boundaries of the municipality. Its tasks already included the management of single- and multi-storey car parks but not, for example, information technology and telecommunications. Stadtwerke's Supervisory Board was appointed by the Municipal Council and was subject in relation to its activities to the directives laid down by the Municipal Council.

IV - Reference for a preliminary ruling and procedure before the Court

23. By order of 23 July 2003, the referring court stayed the proceedings before it and referred two questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling. By those questions, the introduction to which also refers to Articles 43 et seq. EC, 49 et seq. EC and 86 EC, it seeks to ascertain whether:

1) the award of the management of the public pay car parks in question constitutes a public service contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50/EEC or a public service concession to which the competition rules of the EC, in particular the obligation to ensure equal treatment and transparency, must be applied;

2) if that award does constitute a service concession relating to the management of a local public service, the award of the management of public pay car parks which, under Article 44(6)(b) of Regional Law No 1 of 4 January 1993, as amended by Article 10 of Regional Law No 10 of 23 January 1998, and under Article 88(6)(a) and (b) of the provisions concerning local government, can be effected without a public call for tenders, is compatible with Community law, in particular with the principles of freedom to provide services and freedom of competition, the prohibition of discrimination, and the resultant obligations to ensure equal treatment, transparency and proportionality, where a company limited by shares is involved which was set up pursuant to Article 115 of Legislative Decree No 267/2000 by the conversion of a special undertaking of a municipality, whose share capital at the time of the award was held 100% by the municipality itself but whose administrative board enjoys all extensive powers of routine administration up to a value of EUR 5 000 000 per transaction.

24. By letter of 16 December 2004, the Court Registry drew the attention of the interested parties to the judgment in Stadt Halle (14) due to be delivered on 11 January 2005 in order to give them an opportunity to make observations on that judgment at the hearing in this case on 13 January 2005.

25. In the proceedings before the Court, written and oral observations were submitted by Parking Brixen AG, Stadtwerke Brixen AG, the Municipality of Brixen, the Italian Government, the Austrian Government and the Commission. The Netherlands Government also presented oral argument at the hearing.

V - Legal assessment

26. This reference for a preliminary ruling is aimed essentially at ascertaining what, if any, rules Community law lays down in respect of transactions between contracting authorities and their subsidiaries. That is the subject-matter of the referring court's second question. Before looking at this, however, we must, in the context of the first question referred, consider where in Community law such rules, if they do exist, are to be found in the first place - in Directive 92/50 or in general legal principles contained in the EC Treaty. To that end, it is necessary to distinguish between public service contracts and service concessions.

A - The first question: distinction between a public service contract and a service concession

27. By its first question, the referring court essentially wishes to ascertain whether a situation where a contracting authority assigns the management of a public car park to a contractor which may charge a fee for the use of the car park and, in return, undertakes to pay annual compensation to the municipality constitutes a public service contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50 or a service concession.

28. The distinction I referred to at the outset between awards to third parties which are subject to a compulsory call for tenders and in-house operations (15) which are not subject to a compulsory call for tenders has no bearing at this stage on the answer to this question. It is sufficient for now to examine whether the mere subject-matter of a transaction such as that in this case between the Municipality of Brixen and Stadtwerke Brixen AG is capable of falling within the scope of Directive 92/50 in the first place. That question would have to be answered in the affirmative if the transaction constituted a public service contract but in the negative if it were a service concession since, according to the Court's case-law, which was initially developed in relation to the Utilities Directive' (93/38) (16) and then transposed to the sphere of Directive 92/50, service concessions are not contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing within the meaning of those two directives, (17) not even where they relate to the spheres of activity listed in the annexes to the relevant directive. Moreover, this is also confirmed by a converse interpretation of the prospectively applicable Directive 2004/18, in which express reference is made for the first time to service concessions. (18)

29. Unlike a public service contract , a service concession is characterised by the fact that, in consideration for the service in question, the service provider obtains from the contracting authority the right to exploit for payment its own service. (19)

30. As the Commission, the Austrian Government and the Italian Government rightly submit, in the case of a service concession , the contractor bears the risks associated with the service and receives his consideration - at least in part - from the user of the service, for example through the payment of a fee. (20) There is therefore a triangular relationship between the contracting authority, the service provider and the service user. A public service contract , on the other hand, leads only to a bilateral legal relationship in which payment for the service provided is made by the contracting authority itself, which, moreover, also bears the risk connected with the procurement.

31. In this case, according to the facts set out above, the consideration which the Municipality of Brixen grants to Stadtwerke Brixen AG for managing the car park on plot 491/6 consists exclusively in permitting Stadwerke Brixen AG to charge patrons of the car park a user fee. From an economic point of view, Stadtwerke Brixen AG is thus able to reap the benefits of the service which it provides, that is to say the management and maintenance of the car park. At the same time, however, it also bears the economic risk connected with managing the car park, since it must use the revenue from the user fees to finance not only the running costs but also the upkeep of the parking surfaces and the annual compensation payable to the municipality. All of this indicates that the transaction in question is not a service contract but a service concession.

32. Whether the same is also true of the car park on plot 491/11 cannot be conclusively determined on the basis of the information available. However, application of the criteria laid down by Community law to the facts of the main proceedings is in any event a matter not for the Court of Justice but for the referring court. (21) That court will have to ascertain, in particular, whether the consideration which the Municipality of Brixen grants to Stadtwerke Brixen AG for managing the car park consists in the permission to charge patrons of the car park a user fee.

33. In conclusion, I in any event concur with Parking Brixen GmbH, the Austrian and Italian Governments and the Commission (22) that a situation where a contracting authority assigns the management of a public car park to an undertaking which may charge a fee for the use of the car park and, in return, undertakes to pay annual compensation to the contracting authority does not constitute a public service contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50 but a service concession not falling within the scope of that directive.

B - The second question: rules of Community law governing the award of service concessions to subsidiaries of contracting authorities

34. By its second question, the referring court essentially wishes to ascertain the conditions under which a contracting authority may award to one of its subsidiaries, without first conducting an award procedure, a service concession such as the authority to manage public pay car parks at issue in the main proceedings.

1. Prohibition of discrimination under Community law and the obligation of transparency even outside the scope of the procurement directives

35. Contrary to the view taken by the Netherlands Government, it is already settled case-law that contracting authorities are subject, even outside the prevailing scope of the procurement directives, (23) to the requirements of Community law arising from the fundamental rules of the EC Treaty, in particular the fundamental freedoms (24) and the prohibition of discrimination contained in them. (25)

36. The prohibition of discrimination carries with it an obligation of transparency. Only if the award of a contract or a concession is carried out transparently can it be established at all whether, in a particular case, the principle of non-discrimination was observed or whether the decision to accept or reject a particular applicant was arbitrary. (26)

37. All of this does not mean of course that the procedure applied must be the same in every detail as that provided for in the procurement directives. However, as the Court held in the judgment in Telaustria and Telefonadress , the obligation of transparency imposed on the contracting authority means that it must:

for the benefit of any potential tenderer, [ensure] a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the services market to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed.' (27)

38. I would mention merely in passing that, in this connection, Stadtwerke Brixen AG raises the objection that the provisions of Article 43 et seq. EC are not at all applicable to this case because the situation in the main proceedings has no cross-border connection. All the parties to the main proceedings are established in Italy.

39. It must be pointed out in this regard that it is true that the fundamental freedoms are not in fact applicable to purely internal situations. (28) However, as the Commission, Parking Brixen GmbH and the Austrian Government have rightly submitted, in public procurement law, any failure to fulfil the obligation of transparency has an impact not only on domestic undertakings such as Parking Brixen GmbH but on all potential candidates, including any tenderers from other Member States. (29) Consequently, any lack of publicity always simultaneously affects the fundamental freedoms of potential candidates from other Member States as well.

2. Possible exception for operations with a contracting authority's own subsidiaries: the rule in Teckal

40. It remains to be considered, however, whether a contracting authority may exceptionally be exempt from the rules of Community law described above in cases where it commissions services from entities which it itself controls.

41. If the intention of the contracting authority in so doing is to use an organisationally independent public undertaking, in particular one of its subsidiaries, the answer appears initially to be readily apparent. In accordance with the principle of the equal treatment of public and private undertakings, as defined in particular in Article 86(1) EC, public undertakings must not, subject to the exceptions contained in Article 86(2) EC, be treated any more favourably than private competitors. A contracting authority cannot therefore simply entrust the provision of services to an undertaking which it itself controls without first giving any consideration to other possible tenderers or conducting a transparent selection procedure in order to do so.

42. On the other hand, the public body is of course at liberty to perform the tasks conferred on it by using exclusively its own resources , that is to say by performing them in-house, without calling on legally independent - public or private - undertakings at all. In those circumstances, moreover, it is not subject to the requirements of procurement law (30) or of Article 86 EC.

43. As I said at the outset, the distinction between in-house operations and external procurement transactions not infrequently creates difficulties in individual cases. In its judgment in Teckal , (31) the Court - in connection with Directive 93/36 - established a precedent in this regard. It can be inferred from that judgment that procurement law becomes applicable, in principle, upon the conclusion of an agreement between two separate persons , (32) in other words upon the coming into being of a contract.

44. However, the question whether or not procurement law is applicable depends not only on purely formal criteria but also on a process of evaluation. For, even where both parties to a legal transaction, from a formal point of view, each have their own legal personality, the transaction carried out between them may none the less exceptionally be treated in the same way as an in-house operation, in so far as two cumulative criteria developed by the Court in its case-law are fulfilled: (33)

- the contracting authority (34) must exercise over the contractor (35) a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments (first Teckal criterion);

- the other contractor must carry out the essential part of its activities for (36) the controlling contracting authority or authorities (second Teckal criterion).

45. The Court has since applied that rule not only to Directive 93/36 but also to Directives 92/50 and 93/37. (37)(38)

46. The Teckal criteria can also be transposed to circumstances such as those of this case, which do not fall within the scope of any of the public procurement directives. (39) If the procurement directives, which lay down detailed requirements relating to the procedure for awarding contracts, themselves permit exceptions for in-house operations, such exceptions must with all the more reason also be permissible in cases where the procedural requirements are less detailed to begin with, relating only to general conditions arising from the prohibition on discrimination and the obligation of transparency. The absurd consequence if that were not the case would be that, in circumstances falling outside the scope of the directives, contracting authorities would be subject to stricter requirements than in circumstances falling within the scope of the directives, that is to say that they would in that event have an obligation without exception to ensure transparency and publicity.

47. Moreover, it must be taken into account that the procurement directives are for their part intended only to implement the fundamental rules of the EC Treaty as they arise in particular from the fundamental freedoms. (40) Derogations from the directives are therefore ultimately derogations from those principles. This too supports the proposition that the rule in Teckal should be transposed to cases in which the prohibition on discrimination and the obligation of transparency derive directly from the fundamental freedoms without first having been given expression in the procurement directives.

48. Whether, however, the two Teckal criteria are capable of being fulfilled in a particular case such as this, with the result that the contracting authority may, as the Municipality of Brixen, Stadtwerke Brixen AG and the Italian Government claim, be exempt from the rules of Community law, depends on an assessment of all the circumstances of the case in question.

a) First Teckal criterion: control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments

49. In accordance with the first Teckal criterion, treatment as an in-house operation is subject to the condition that the contracting authority must exercise over its contractor a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.

50. The Commission doubts whether this can be said to be the case in relation to an undertaking such as Stadtwerke Brixen AG, for two reasons: first, Stadtwerke Brixen AG may in future be required by law to open up its capital to participation by third parties; and, secondly, its managerial bodies can for the most part run the company's day-to-day business independently. The second point was also made by Parking Brixen GmbH and the Austrian Government.

i) Possibility of a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments excluded by private participation

51. The starting point for an examination of this issue should be the recent judgment in Stadt Halle. In that judgment, the Court clarified the first Teckal criterion as meaning that any participation by private undertakings, even as minority shareholders, excludes the possibility of a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.(41)

52. That clarification shows that, through the criterion of a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments , the Court has established in its case-law a more stringent standard than is customary in competition law, for example. Thus, the fact that the contracting authority has a majority holding in the capital of its subsidiary, the fact that it exercises the majority of the voting rights and the fact that it appoints the majority of the members of the subsidiary's managerial bodies may - together with any agreements between the members - combine to support the conclusion as to the existence of control within the meaning of competition law (42) and make the subsidiary a public undertaking within the meaning of Article 86(1) EC; (43) such considerations are not sufficient, however, to support the assumption of a - more extensive - control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.

53. The mere presence of a private third party, even if only in the form of a minority holding without rights of veto, makes it impossible for the contracting authority to exercise a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments. The reason for this is that the presence of a private third party always presupposes a minimum degree of consideration on the part of the public body for the private party's economic interests - for only then will a private third party make its know-how or financial might available to the public body in the first place. Thus, where a private third party - following the completion of a public call for tenders, where there has been one - acquires a holding in an undertaking, the consideration for the private party's economic interests may prevent the public body from fully pursuing its public interests, however legitimate such consideration

may be from a purely legal point of view. It is essentially this combination of public and private interests which distinguishes semi-public undertakings as they are known from mere departments of the administration. (44)

54. Since a public body cannot therefore control semi-public undertakings in the same way as it can its own departments, all legal transactions which contracting authorities enter into with their semi-public subsidiaries are subject to the rules of public procurement law, in particular the prohibition on discrimination and the obligation of transparency.

ii) Future opening-up of the company's capital to participation by third parties

55. At the time of the transfer of the two car parks, and thereafter, Stadtwerke Brixen AG was not a semi-public undertaking but a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Municipality of Brixen. However, the municipality was required, within a maximum of two years following the conversion of the former dedicated undertaking, to surrender its status as sole shareholder to that of mere majority shareholder. (45)

56. The principle of legal certainty requires that the obligation to conduct an award procedure must always be assessed ex ante , that is to say in the context of the time when the legal transaction was carried out. For, both from the point of view of the contracting authority and its contractor and from the point of view of competitors not taken into consideration, the question whether or not it was necessary to carry out an award procedure must be determinable at the time when the contract was actually concluded. Subsequent events can be taken into account, at most, if their occurrence was already foreseeable with certainty at the time of the award.

57. The loss of the municipality's 100% holding in its subsidiary would have been foreseeable with certainty in any event if the acquisition of a holding in the company by a specific third party had already been imminent.

58. Taking that argument further, however, the Commission submits that, in a case such as this, the loss of the municipality's 100% holding was sufficiently foreseeable by virtue of the law then in force alone, and should therefore have been taken into consideration at the time when the car parks were transferred.

59. However, a provision of law such as Article 115 of Legislative Decree 267/2000 supports the inference only - and at most (46) - of an obligation to sell shares within a specified period. Whether and when such shares will actually be sold and transferred to a third party depends on many other circumstances about the materialisation of which the mere existence of such a statutory obligation says nothing at that stage. More specifically, it is by no means inconceivable that no candidate will be prepared to acquire a holding in the undertaking concerned on the terms offered, as is elegantly illustrated by the circumstances of this case in particular. According to the information supplied by the Municipality of Brixen and Stadtwerke Brixen AG at the hearing, no third party has to date acquired a holding in Stadtwerke Brixen AG.

60. The interests of the parties concerned are likewise not the same at that stage as they would be in a semi-public undertaking. For, so long as there is only an obligation to open up the capital of the subsidiary subsequently , but no particular third party has yet emerged, the contracting authority still has no reason, when awarding contracts or concessions to its subsidiaries, to take into consideration the interests of such a private investor.

61. The Commission voices the concern that a third party may, during the (potentially long (47)) term of a concession which has been awarded, acquire a holding in the public limited company and then, by virtue of its holding, share in the revenue from the concession. However, the danger associated with this possibility, that the subsequent private investor will be treated more favourably than other private undertakings, (48) does not have to be addressed at the time when the concession itself is awarded to the municipal subsidiary; it is sufficient for suitable precautions to be taken at the time when the third party is selected , that is to say before the shareholding is transferred to it. For, in the context of the participation by a private third party in a public undertaking, the fundamental freedoms (49) require compliance with the prohibition against discrimination and the obligation of transparency, in particular the assurance of an appropriate degree of publicity. (50)

62. For the foregoing reasons, the statutory obligation to open up a company's capital to participation by third parties within a certain period, in itself, does not at that stage make it impossible for the contracting authority to exercise over that company a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.

iii) Power of the managerial bodies of a public limited company to run the day-to-day business independently

63. On the other hand, doubts as to the existence of a control similar to that which a contracting authority exercises over its own departments may, irrespective of the shareholdings, follow generally from the fact that an undertaking such as Stadtwerke Brixen AG is a public limited company the managerial bodies of which are to a large extent permitted to run the day-to-day business independently. (51) These doubts have been expressed not only by Parking Brixen GmbH, the Austrian Government and the Commission, but also by the referring court.

64. In this connection, a distinction should be drawn between the public undertaking's external relations with other market operators and its internal relations with the municipality.

65. The fact that the managerial bodies of a public undertaking have extensive powers in their external relations still does not by any means make it impossible for the municipality to exercise over that undertaking a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments. In fact, such powers in external relations are usually necessary in order to guarantee the undertaking's ability to pursue its activities, to ensure the smooth running of the day-to-day business and, not least, to protect the interests of third parties. (52) Even in the public sector itself, it is by no means unusual for individual officials, such as the mayor of a municipality, the head (Landrat') of a district authority or the heads of national authorities, to have relatively far-reaching powers to represent the organisation in question externally.

66. Of greater significance for the question of control at issue here, therefore, are the internal relations between a municipality and an undertaking such as Stadtwerke Brixen AG. In this regard, the referring court expresses the view that Stadtwerke Brixen AG has appreciably greater autonomy than its legal predecessor, the dedicated undertaking Stadtwerke Brixen. For, while the dedicated undertaking was under the direct control and influence of the municipal council, the only means by which the municipality can influence the public limited company are those provided by company law. The Commission and Parking Brixen GmbH advance similar arguments.

67. The control which a public body exercises over its own departments is usually characterised in law by rights to give instructions and supervisory powers. Within a single authority, for example, the authority's management usually has the right to give instructions to the departments under its responsibility. In relation to subordinate authorities, it also has a right to give instructions, or at least the possibility, under its supervisory powers, of reviewing and correcting the decisions they take.

68. In relation to the managerial bodies of public undertakings, at least where these are organised in the form of a public or private limited company, such powers of instruction or supervision should be the exception. Accordingly, any requirement that the public shareholder should have the same possibilities in law in relation to its contractor as it has in relation to its own departments would make it almost impossible for the first Teckal criterion to be fulfilled in respect of capital companies incorporated under private law. In that event, contracting authorities would always, even as the sole shareholder , be required to comply with the procurement rules before concluding contracts with subsidiaries of theirs organised as public or private limited companies, and would have to assign the performance of their tasks to private third parties if these had submitted better tenders. In those circumstances, the mere transfer of tasks to such companies, including in such sensitive areas as water supply, would ultimately amount to the compulsory commencement of the privatisation of those tasks.

69. It may well be that, in certain cases, the conversion of dedicated undertakings into public or private limited companies is actually intended as the first step towards privatisation of the tasks in question. However, this is not necessarily so. It may equally conceivably be nothing more than an internal reorganisational measure aimed, for example, at securing a more efficient - because more cost-effective - provision of services and more flexible working arrangements for employees, there not necessarily being any desire on the part of the public body in question to outsource the performance of its tasks at the same time. Moreover, because of the accounting rules applicable to them, the choice of public or private limited company as the form of organisation for the undertaking may lead to a welcome increase in transparency. (53)

70. If, on the other hand, the procurement rules were also applied to transactions between contracting authorities and their wholly-owned subsidiaries, the private-law form of organisation of a public or private limited company could no longer be used purely for the purposes of internal reorganisation. In those circumstances, the public body in question would essentially be left with a choice between privatising its tasks (54) or having them performed in-house by departments of the administration or by dedicated undertakings which form part of the administrative hierarchy and have no real independence to speak of. In some cases, public bodies might even take the retrograde step of converting existing subsidiaries back into dedicated undertakings.

71. However, such extensive interference in the organisational sovereignty of Member States and, in particular, in the self-government of many municipalities (55) is - even from the point of view of the market-opening function of procurement law - entirely unnecessary. After all, the purpose of procurement law is to ensure that contractors are selected in a transparent and non-discriminatory manner in all cases where a public body has decided to use third parties to perform certain tasks. However, the spirit and purpose of procurement law is not also to bring about, through the back door ', the privatisation of those public tasks which the public body would like to continue to perform by using its own resources. (56) This would require specific liberalisation measures on the part of the legislature. (57)

72. In any event, through its use of the phrase control similar to that which', (58) the judgment in Teckal indicates that the possibilities open to an authority for exerting influence over its own departments and over public undertakings do not have to be identical. What matters in deciding whether an undertaking is akin to an administrative department or to other market operators is not whether, from a formal point of view , the public body has the same possibilities in law as it does in relation to its own departments, for example the right to give instructions in a particular case. What matters is rather whether, in practice , the contracting authority is able to attain its public-interest objectives in full at all times. It is only where an undertaking has been made independent (autonomous) (59) to such an extent that the contracting authority is no longer able to pursue its interests in full within the undertaking that the contracting authority can no longer be said to exercise a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.

73. This focus on the interests involved is particularly apparent in the judgment in Stadt Halle

, (60) where regard is had exclusively to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest as the decisive criterion in interpreting the first Teckal criterion. According to the judgment in Stadt Halle , the need to pursue those public interests dictates what possibilities for exerting influence on its departments the public body actually requires. (61)

74. Now, as for what those possibilities for exerting influence actually are, my comments in point 53 of this Opinion apply mutatis mutandis : if a private third party has a holding, even a minority holding, in an undertaking, the consideration given to the economic interests of that undertaking may prevent the public body from fully pursuing its public-interest objectives, however legitimate such consideration may be from a purely legal point of view. If, on the other hand, the contracting authority is the only shareholder in its subsidiary, its interests and those of the subsidiary can normally be deemed to be essentially the same, even if the subsidiary is organised as a private or public limited company. More specifically, the sole shareholder has a 100% economic share in the profits made and is alone able to decide how they are to be used.

75. Where consideration for the economic interests of private third parties is unnecessary because the public body holds all the shares, the pursuit of public interests within the company is made sufficiently possible, even without a formal power of instruction, by the means available under company law, and in particular by the presence on the company's managerial boards of representatives nominated (appointed) exclusively by the public body. It seems highly unlikely that these boards, which, moreover, are usually characterised by having close personal links with the public body, will, in the day-to-day running of the business, deviate from the philosophy of the local authority which nominated them to such an extent as to be capable of frustrating the pursuit of objectives in the public interest. What is more, if they did, the representatives in question would be bound to fear that they might in future be removed from the board or at least not be re-appointed.

76. In any event, the mere fact that a company such as Stadtwerke Brixen AG is a public limited company the managerial bodies of which have extensive powers in the day-to-day running of the business is not capable of supporting the conclusion that that company is autonomous of its public shareholder and that the latter no longer exercises over it a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.

b) Second Teckal criterion: the contractor must carry out the essential part of its activities for its public shareholder or shareholders

77. In accordance with the second Teckal criterion, treatment as an in-house operation is also subject to the condition that the contractor used by the contracting authority must carry out the essential part of its activities for the controlling contracting authority.

78. In the order for reference, the referring court cites only the provisions of Stadtwerke Brixen's statutes, according to which the company's material field of business comprises an extensive list of activities which can essentially be classified as services of general economic interest, capable of being carried out at local, national and international level. (62)

79. However, such provisions have little indicative value. On the one hand, they are not infrequently framed in particularly broad terms which are intended to cover not necessarily only the activities in which the company is engaged at present but also any others which it may carry out in future. On the other hand, even restrictions on a public limited company's field of activity which are laid down in the statutes cannot be relied on as against third parties; (63) - by means of the statutes, the company's shareholders set out only for internal purposes the framework within which its activities may be carried on.

80. Thus, if account were taken only of the - usually relatively extensive - fields of activity in which a public or private limited company is permitted to operate from a purely legal point of view (that is by law or under the company's statutes), it would be practically impossible for such undertakings to fulfil the second Tickal criterion. In those circumstances, contracting authorities would always be required to comply with the procurement rules before concluding contracts with their subsidiaries, in so far as those subsidiaries are organised as public or private limited companies. This would make the choice of public or private limited company as a form of organisation appreciably less attractive. (64) Such extensive interference in the organisational sovereignty of the Member States and, in particular, the self-government of many municipalities is not necessary for the purposes of the market-opening function of public procurement law.

81. It is sufficient to be guided by the actual activities of the undertaking concerned. (65) For, whatever its form of organisation in law, the activities which an undertaking actually pursues are the best indicator of whether that undertaking operates in the same way as others on the market or is so closely connected to the public body that contracts between it and the contracting authority can be treated as in-house operations and therefore justify an exception to the procurement rules.

82. In this connection, it should be noted that an exception to the procurement rules is already possible under the second Teckal criterion where the undertaking concerned carries out the essential part of its activities for the controlling contracting authority or authorities. Any activity pursued for third parties is therefore innocuous provided that it is of only secondary importance.

83. In order to decide whether that is so, it is necessary, as I said at the outset, to carry out an assessment of all the circumstances of the case in question. If a transaction is to be regarded as an in-house operation, the contractor used by the contracting authority must carry out the essential part of its activities, both quantitatively and qualitatively , for the controlling contracting authority or authorities. (66) An initial indicator in this regard may be the share of turnover which that undertaking derives from the contracts with its public shareholder. If an undertaking - such as Stadtwerke Brixen, for example - is active in several fields, account must also be taken of how many of those areas of business are ones in which the undertaking carries out the essential part of its activities for public shareholders and how important each of those areas of business is to the undertaking. (67)

84. The geographical range of activity of undertakings such as Stadtwerke Brixen AG also requires close examination. The mere fact that a municipal public undertaking does or can perform activities beyond the boundaries of a municipality does not necessarily mean that it does not carry out the essential part of its activities for that municipality. The examination should concentrate rather on determining what value in quantitative and qualitative terms any such activity outside the municipal boundaries has in relation to the activities it performs for its public shareholder or shareholders.

85. The mere fact that the field of activity defined in the statutes of a public limited company such as Stadtwerke Brixen AG is extensive in material terms, and, in geographical terms, also allows activities to be pursued beyond the boundaries of the municipality, does not in any event mean that such a public limited company does not in fact carry out the essential part of its activities for the controlling municipality.

c) Interim conclusion

86. In summary, therefore, it is appropriate to find that:

The fact that a municipality awards the management of a public pay car park to a public limited company in which it is the sole shareholder without first carrying out an award procedure does not infringe Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC, in so far as the municipality exercises over the public limited company a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and the public limited company carries out the essential part of its activities for the municipality.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

The exercise by a contracting authority of a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments is not automatically precluded because the municipality has a statutory obligation to open up the capital of the public limited company to participation by third parties within a certain period in the future, or because the managerial bodies of the public limited company have extensive powers in the day-to-day running of the business.

The pursuit by a contractor of the essential part of its activities for the municipality is not automatically precluded because the field of activity in which the public limited company is permitted to operate under its statutes is extensive in material and geographical terms; it is the activities which the company actually carries on which are the decisive criterion.

VI - Conclusion

87. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court should answer as follows the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Verwaltungsgericht, Autonome Sektion für die Provinz Bozen:

(1) A situation where a contracting authority assigns the management of a public car park to an undertaking which may charge a fee for the use of the car park and, in return, undertakes to pay annual compensation to the contracting authority does not constitute a public service contract within the meaning of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, but a service concession not falling within the scope of that directive;

(2) The fact that a municipality awards the management of a public pay car park to a public limited company in which it is the sole shareholder without first carrying out an award procedure does not infringe Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC, in so far as the municipality exercises over the public limited company a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and the public limited company carries out the essential part of its activities for the municipality.

The exercise by a contracting authority of a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments is not automatically precluded because the municipality has a statutory obligation to open up the capital of the public limited company to participation by third parties within a certain period in the future, or because the managerial bodies of the public limited company have extensive powers in the day-to-day running of the business.

The pursuit by a contractor of the essential part of its activities for the municipality is not automatically precluded because the field of activity in which the public limited company is permitted to operate under its statutes is extensive in material and geographical terms; it is the activities which the company actually carries on which are the decisive criterion.

(32) - As regards the scope ratione personae of procurement law, it is necessary - and, on the other hand, sufficient - that one of the parties to the contract should be a contracting authority (judgments in Teckal , cited in footnote 2, paragraph 42, second sentence, and Stadt Halle , cited in footnote 4, paragraph 47; see also the judgment in Case C-94/99 ARGE [2000] ECR I-11037, paragraph 40.)

(33) - The criteria, as originally defined, can be found in paragraph 50, second sentence, of the judgment in Teckal (cited in footnote 2) and are also referred to in the judgment in Case C-84/03 Commission v Spain [2005] ECR I-0139, paragraph 38). The same criteria, albeit defined in slightly different words, are applied in the judgment in Stadt Halle (cited in footnote 4, paragraph 49, second sentence). The comments that follow are based on the latter definition, unless otherwise indicated.

(34) - In terms of terminology, the judgment in Stadt Halle uses the clumsy formulation public authority which is a contracting authority'; the judgment in Teckal uses the term - based on the circumstances of that case - local authority'.

(35) - In terms of terminology, the contractor is referred to in the judgment in Teckal as the person concerned'; in the judgment in Stadt Halle as entity concerned'.

(36) - The use of the word with' in the judgment in Stadt Halle and in most language versions of the judgment in Teckal is unusual from a linguistic point of view, given that such a transaction does not usually involve cooperation between two undertakings but a relationship in which a public undertaking performs certain tasks or provides certain services for the public body which controls it.

(37) - Council Directive 93/37EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L199, p. 54), since repealed and replaced by Directive 2004/18.

(38) - On Directive 92/50, see the judgment in Stadt Halle (cited in footnote 4, paragraphs 47 and 49); similar evidence was already to be found in the judgment in ARGE (cited in footnote 32, paragraph 40). On Directive 93/97, see the judgment in Commission v Spain (cited in footnote 33, paragraph 39).

(39) - On the inapplicability of Directive 92/50 in circumstances such as those of this case, see my comments on the first question (points 27 to 33 of this Opinion).

(40) - See in this regard, for example, the sixth recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 and recital 2 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18, as well as the judgments in Case C-380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I-8035, paragraph 16, and Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraph 51. See also points 35 to 37 of this Opinion.

(41) - Judgment in Stadt Halle (cited in footnote 4, paragraphs 49 and 52).

(42) - See for example in this connection - on the definition of control in the context of concentrations - paragraphs 13, 14 and 18 et seq. of Commission Notice on the concept of concentration under Council Regulation (EEC) No 4064/89 on the control of concentrations between undertakings (OJ 1998 C 66, p. 5).

(43) - See also Article 2 of Commission Directive 80/723/EEC of 25 June 1980 on the transparency of financial relations between Member States and public undertakings (OJ 1980 L 195, p. 35; last amended by Commission Directive 2000/52/EC of 26 July 2000, OJ 2000 L 193, p. 75).

(44) - This is also referred to in the judgment in Stadt Halle (cited in footnote 4, paragraph 50). On the definition of a semi-public undertaking, see, for example, point 58 of the Opinion of Advocate General Stix-Hackl in Stadt Halle (cited in footnote 3).

(45) - See Article 115 of Decree-Law 267/2000, on the one hand, and Article 88(6)(b) of the Provisions concerning local government together with Article 5(2) of the Statutes of Stadwerke Brixen AG, on the other.

(46) - As became clear at the hearing before the Court, the parties to these proceedings are in disagreement as to whether Article 115 of Decree-Law 267/2000 does impose a statutory obligation on the municipality to open up the share capital of Stadtwerke Brixen AG, or whether, alternatively, the municipality may continue be the sole shareholder in the long term. The Municipality of Brixen relies in this regard on Article 2362 of the Italian Civil Code (Codice Civile, as amended by Decree-Law No 6 of the President of the Republic of 17 January 2003, Ordentliches Beiblatt No 8), under which, in Italy, public limited companies may also consist of a single shareholder.

(47) - In this case, a term of nine years was agreed in relation to the car park on plot No 491/6; see point 14 of this Opinion.

(48) - Judgment in Stadt Halle (cited in footnote 4, paragraph 51).

(49) - Freedom of establishment (Article 43 EC) and the free movement of capital (Article 56(1) EC).

(50) - See in this regard points 35 to 39 of this Opinion.

(51) - As the referring court points out in its second question, the Administrative Board of Stadtwerke Brixen AG enjoys all extensive powers of routine administration up to a value of EUR 5 000 000 per transaction'.

(52) - See Article 9 of, and the second recital in the preamble to, First Council Directive 68/151/EEC of 9 March 1968 on coordination of safeguards which, for the protection of the interests of members and others, are required by Member States of companies within the meaning of the second paragraph of Article 58 of the Treaty, with a view to making such safeguards equivalent throughout the Community (OJ, English Special Edition 1968 (I), p. 41).

(53) - See in particular Article 2 et seq. of Directive 68/151 and Articles 2 and 47 of Fourth Council Directive 78/660/EEC of 25 July 1978 based on Article 54(3)(g) of the Treaty on the annual accounts of certain types of companies (OJ 1978 L 222, p. 11).

(54) - A publicly-controlled undertaking in the form of a public or private limited company would in some circumstances have to bid as one of several potential tenderers for the contract or concession in question.

(55) - Evidence of which can be found in the European Charter of Local Self-Government of 15 October 1985 (ETS No 122), which was ratified by most Member States within the framework of the Council of Europe. Article 6(1) of the Charter provides that local authorities must be able to determine their own internal administrative structures in order to adapt them to local needs and ensure effective management'. Moreover, the importance of local self-government is emphasised by the express reference to it in Article I-5(1) of the Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe (signed in Rome on 29 October 2004, OJ 2004 C 310, p. 1).

(56) - See also in this regard point 42 of this Opinion.

(57) - In this connection, regard should be had, for example, to the liberalisation of the telecommunications sector. See in particular in this respect Commission Directive 2002/77/EC of 16 September 2002 on competition in the markets for electronic communications networks and services (OJ 2002 L 249, p. 21). See also the Amended Proposal for a Regulation of the European Parliament and of the Council on action by Member States concerning public service requirements and the award of public service contracts in passenger transport by rail, road and inland waterway (COM (2002) 107 final, OJ 2002 C 151 E, p. 146).

(58) - My emphasis. Unlike the other language versions of the judgment in Teckal , the German version omits the word similar'. This inconsistency was rectified in the judgment in Stadt Halle.

(59) - The judgment in Teckal (cited in footnote 2, paragraph 51) refers to the concept of independence from the contracting authority in regard to decision-making (the French language version uses the adjective autonome , the Italian, the language of the case, the adjective autonomo).

(60) - Judgment in Stadt Halle (cited in footnote 4, paragraph 50).

(61) - The judgment in Stadt Halle (cited in footnote 4, paragraph 50) is worded as follows: [t]he relationship between a public authority which is a contracting authority is governed by considerations and requirements proper to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest'.

(62) - See in this regard point 19 of this Opinion.

(63) - Article 9(1) and (2) of Directive 68/151.

(64) - See also in this regard points 68 to 71 of this Opinion.

(65) - Advocate General Stix-Hackl likewise emphasises in point 83 of her Opinion in Stadt Halle

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(cited in footnote 3) that it is the activities actually carried out which count, not those permitted by law or under the undertaking's statutes.

(66) - See also to this effect Advocate General Stix-Hackl in point 89 of her Opinion in Stadt Halle (cited in footnote 3).

(67) - In a case such as this, consideration should also be given, for example, to the value in relation to the undertaking's activities as a whole of the new areas of work assigned to Stadtwerke Brixen AG in its statutes in addition to those in which the former special undertaking was active (that is to say information technology and telecommunications), and who contracted the undertaking to carry out such activities.

Notice for the OJ

Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Verwaltungsgericht, Autonome Sektion für die Provinz Bozen by order of that Court of 27 September 2003 in the case of Parking Brixen G.m.b.H against Municipality of Brixen/Bressanone and Stadtwerke Brixen A.G.

(Case C-458/03)

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Verwaltungsgericht, Autonome Sektion für die Provinz Bozen (Administrative Court, Autonomous Division for the Province of Bolzano) of 27 September 2003, received at the Court Registry on 30 October 2003, for a preliminary ruling in the case of Parking Brixen G.m.b.H against Municipality of Brixen/Bressanone and Stadtwerke Brixen A.G. on the following questions:

1.Does the award of the management of the public pay car parks in question concern a public service contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50/EEC[1] or a public service concession contract to which the competition rules of the EC, in particular the obligation to ensure equal treatment and transparency, must be applied?

2.If that award does concern a service concession contract relating to the management of a local public service, is the award of the management of public pay car parks which, under Article 44(6)(b) of Regional Law No 1 of 4 January 1993, as amended by Article 10 of Regional Law No 10 of 23 January 1998 and under Article 88(6)(a) and (b) of the consolidated text of the provisions concerning local government, can be effected without a public invitation to tender, compatible with Community law, in particular with the principles of freedom to provide services and freedom of competition, the prohibition of discrimination, and the resultant obligations to ensure equal treatment, transparency and proportionality, where a public limited company is involved which was set up pursuant to Article 115 of Legislative Decree No 267/2000 by the conversion of a special undertaking of a municipality, whose share capital at the time of the award was held 100% by the municipality itself but whose administrative board enjoys all extensive powers of routine administration up to a value of EURO 5 000 000.00 per transaction?

ARRÊT DE LA COUR (quatrième chambre)
3 mars 2005 (1)

«Manquement d'État – Article 8 de la directive 92/50/CEE – Procédure de passation des marchés publics de services – Enlèvement des ordures dans le Land de Basse-Saxe»

Dans l'affaire C-414/03, ayant pour objet un recours en manquement au titre de l'article 226 CE, introduit le 2 octobre 2003,

Commission des Communautés européennes, représentée par M. K. Wiedner, en qualité d'agent, ayant élu domicile à Luxembourg,

1
Par sa requête, la Commission des Communautés européennes demande à la Cour de constater que, un contrat d'enlèvement d'ordures ayant été passé par le Landkreis Friesland, dans le Land de Basse-Saxe, sans respecter les règles de publicité et de procédure prévues à l'article 8 de la directive 92/50/CEE du Conseil, du 18 juin 1992, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de services (JO L 209, p. 1), lu en combinaison avec les titres III à VI de cette directive, la République fédérale d'Allemagne a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de ladite directive.

2
L'annexe I A de la directive 92/50 vise, à son point 16, les «[s]ervices de voirie et d'enlèvement des ordures: services d'assainissement et services analogues».

3
Selon l'article 8 de cette directive, «[l]es marchés qui ont pour objet des services figurant à l'annexe I A sont passés conformément aux dispositions des titres III à VI».

4
En 1994, le Landkreis Friesland a conclu un contrat d'enlèvement d'ordures. D'une durée de dix ans, ce contrat courait jusqu'au 31 décembre 2004 et portait sur un montant de 29 millions de DEM, soit environ 14,83 millions d'euros.

5

Après avoir mis la République fédérale d'Allemagne en mesure de présenter ses observations, la Commission a, le 18 octobre 2002, émis un avis motivé relevant que le marché en cause aurait dû faire l'objet d'un appel d'offre publié au Journal officiel des Communautés européennes et être passé conformément aux exigences prévues aux titres III à VI de la directive 92/50, et que cet État membre aurait dû mettre un terme audit contrat. Elle a dès lors invité la République fédérale d'Allemagne à se conformer à ses obligations résultant du traité CE dans un délai de deux mois à compter de la notification de cet avis. Insatisfaite de la réponse apportée par les autorités allemandes par lettre du 16 décembre 2002, la Commission a décidé d'introduire le présent recours.

Le gouvernement allemand admet que le Landkreis Friesland aurait dû passer le marché en cause en conformité avec les dispositions de la directive 92/50. Il n'est par ailleurs pas contesté que ce pouvoir adjudicateur s'est abstenu de le faire.

7
Il est également constant que, à la date à laquelle le délai imparti dans l'avis motivé a expiré, le contrat en cause était en cours d'exécution si bien que le manquement persistait encore à cette date (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 9 septembre 2004, Commission/Allemagne, C-125/03, non publié au Recueil, point 13).

8
Selon le gouvernement allemand, la République fédérale d'Allemagne ayant reconnu le manquement au cours de la phase précontentieuse, la Commission n'était pas obligée, en l'absence de litige entre les parties, de s'adresser à la Cour, si bien que le recours doit être rejeté.

9
À cet égard, il convient de rappeler que, dans le cadre d'un recours en manquement, il appartient à la Cour de constater si le manquement reproché existe ou non, même si l'État concerné ne conteste plus celui-ci. S'il en était autrement, les États membres, en reconnaissant le manquement et en admettant la responsabilité qui peut en découler, seraient libres, à tout moment lors d'une procédure en manquement pendante devant la Cour, de mettre fin à celle-ci sans que l'existence du manquement et le fondement de leur responsabilité aient jamais été établis (voir, notamment, arrêt Commission/Allemagne, précité, point 16).

10
Par ailleurs, les parties ont échangé divers arguments quant aux conséquences découlant de la constatation qu'une attribution de marché est intervenue en méconnaissance de la directive 92/50 et, notamment, quant à la question de savoir si une telle constatation avait pour conséquence de contraindre le pouvoir adjudicateur concerné à résilier le contrat en cours. Selon le gouvernement allemand, le débat ainsi introduit par la Commission est étranger à l'objet du litige soumis à la Cour et ne contribue ni à clarifier ni à fonder la demande formulée par la Commission, laquelle demande doit dès lors être rejetée.

11
À cet égard, il suffit de rappeler que, si, dans le cadre de la procédure en manquement au titre de l'article 226 CE, la Cour est uniquement tenue de constater qu'une disposition du droit communautaire a été violée, il ressort de l'article 228, paragraphe 1, CE que l'État membre concerné est tenu de prendre les mesures que comporte l'exécution de l'arrêt de la Cour (voir arrêt du 18 novembre 2004, Commission/Allemagne, C-126/03, non encore publié au Recueil, point 26).

12
Par ailleurs, ainsi qu'il ressort des points 6 à 9 du présent arrêt, le manquement dont la requête poursuit la constatation est clairement établi, si bien que le recours de la Commission doit être accueilli.

13
Eu égard à ce qui précède, il convient de constater que, un contrat d'enlèvement d'ordures ayant été passé par le Landkreis Friesland sans respecter les règles de publicité et de procédure prévues à l'article 8 de la directive 92/50, lu en combinaison avec les titres III à VI de cette directive, la République fédérale d'Allemagne a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de ladite directive.

Aux termes de l'article 69, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens. La Commission ayant conclu à la condamnation de la République fédérale d'Allemagne et cette dernière ayant succombé en ses moyens, il y a lieu de la condamner aux dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (quatrième chambre) déclare et arrête:

Un contrat d'enlèvement d'ordures ayant été passé par le Landkreis Friesland, dans le Land de Basse-Saxe, sans respecter les règles de publicité et de procédure prévues à l'article 8 de la directive 92/50/CEE du Conseil, du 18 juin 1992, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de services, lu en combinaison avec les titres III à VI de cette directive, la République fédérale d'Allemagne a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de ladite directive.

2)

La République fédérale d'Allemagne est condamnée aux dépens.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT

(Fourth Chamber)

of 3 March 2005

in Case C-414/03: Commission of the European Communities v Federal Republic of Germany [1]

(Failure to fulfil obligations - Article 8 of Directive 92/50/EEC - Procedure for awarding contracts for public services - Waste disposal in the Land of Lower Saxony)

(Language of the case: German)

In Case C-414/03 Commission of the European Communities (Agent: K. Wiedner) v Federal Republic of Germany (Agent: W.-D. Plessing and M. Lumma) - action for failure to fulfil obligations under Article 226 EC - the Court (Fourth Chamber), composed of K. Lenaerts, President of the Chamber, K. Schiemann (Rapporteur) and M. Ilešič, Judges; L.A. Geelhoed, Advocate General; R. Grass, Registrar, gave a judgment on 3 March 2005, in which it:

Declares that by the Landkreis Friesland in the Land of Lower Saxony awarding a contract for the disposal of waste without complying with the rules on advertising and the procedure laid down by Article 8 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts together with Titles III and VI of that directive, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive;

Orders the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs.

greffier: M. R. Grass,

vu la procédure écrite, vu la décision prise, l'avocat général entendu, de juger l'affaire sans conclusions, rend le présent

1
Par sa requête, la Commission des Communautés européennes demande à la Cour de constater que, en ne transposant pas de façon correcte et complète la directive 89/665/CEE du Conseil, du 21 décembre 1989, portant coordination des dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives relatives à l'application des procédures de recours en matière de passation des marchés publics de fournitures et de travaux (JO L 395, p. 33), la République portugaise a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu du droit communautaire.

Réglementation communautaire

L'article 1^er^, paragraphe 1, de la directive 89/665 dispose:

3

La directive 71/305/CEE du Conseil, du 26 juillet 1971, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux a été abrogée par la directive 93/37/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993. La référence faite par l'article 1er, paragraphe 1, de la directive 89/665 à la directive 71/305, ainsi abrogée, doit s'entendre comme faite à la directive 93/37.

4
Aux termes de l'article 2, paragraphe 1, de la directive 89/665:

«Les États membres veillent à ce que les mesures prises aux fins des recours visés à l'article 1er prévoient les pouvoirs permettant:

c)
d'accorder des dommages-intérêts aux personnes lésées par une violation».

Réglementation nationale

5
Sous le titre «Responsabilité des organismes publics», l'article 22 de la Constitution de la République portugaise énonce:

«L'État et les autres organismes publics sont civilement responsables, solidairement avec les membres de leurs organes, fonctionnaires ou agents, de toutes leurs actions ou omissions dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions et en raison de cet exercice, dont il résulte une violation des droits, des libertés et des garanties d'autrui ou un préjudice pour autrui».

Aux termes de l'article 1er du décret-loi n° 48 051, du 21 novembre 1967 (ci-après le «décret-loi n° 48 051»):

«Dans le domaine des actes de gestion publique, la responsabilité civile extracontractuelle de l'État et des autres personnes morales de droit public est régie par les dispositions du présent décret-loi pour tout ce qui n'est pas prévu par des lois spéciales».

L'article 2 dudit décret-loi n° 48 051 précise:

«L'État et les autres personnes morales de droit public sont civilement responsables envers les tiers pour les violations de leurs droits ou des dispositions légales destinés à protéger leurs intérêts, résultant d'actes illégaux commis avec faute par leurs organes ou agents administratifs, dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions et au motif de cet exercice».

Aux termes de l'article 3 de ce décret-loi:

2. En cas d'acte dolosif, la personne morale est toujours solidairement responsable avec les titulaires de l'organe ou les agents».

Selon l'article 4 du décret-loi n° 48 051:

«La faute des titulaires de l'organe ou des agents est appréciée sur la base des dispositions de l'article 487 du code civil».

10
Aux termes de l'article 487 du code civil:

«Il incombe à la personne lésée de prouver la faute de l'auteur du dommage, à moins qu'il n'y ait présomption légale de faute».

11
Selon l'article 342 du même code:

«1. La personne qui invoque un droit doit apporter la preuve des faits constitutifs du droit allégué.

2. La charge de la preuve des faits empêchant, modifiant ou invalidant le droit invoqué incombe à la personne contre laquelle le droit est invoqué […]».

12
Le décret-loi n° 134/98, du 15 mai 1998, qui transpose également en droit portugais la directive 89/665, a établi une forme de procédure urgente pour attaquer les actes administratifs individuels affectant des droits ou des intérêts légalement protégés, au stade de la formation des contrats de fourniture et d'adjudication de contrats publics de services et a institué des mesures de protection.

Procédure précontentieuse

Après un échange d'informations, le gouvernement portugais a, par lettre du 26 juillet 1995, communiqué à la Commission les mesures nationales de transposition de la directive 89/665.

14
Le 8 septembre 1995, la Commission, insatisfaite par cette communication, a mis en demeure le gouvernement portugais de transposer de façon correcte et complète la directive 89/665.

15
Le 7 juillet 1997, la Commission a adressé au gouvernement portugais un avis motivé. Elle considère que les productions qui lui ont été adressées n'ont pas apporté de suite satisfaisante à ses demandes.

16
Le 9 février 2001, la Commission a adressé au gouvernement portugais un avis motivé complémentaire. Elle évoque la réunion du 29 septembre 2000 au cours de laquelle les autorités portugaises ont indiqué que la transposition de la directive 89/665 serait complétée dans le cadre de la réforme en cours du contentieux administratif.

17
Dans cet avis motivé complémentaire, la Commission a rappelé que la transposition de la directive en cause restait incomplète sur deux points. En ce qui concerne le champ d'application de la directive 89/665, tout d'abord, elle reproche à la réglementation portugaise de ne pas inclure les concessions de travaux publics. En ce qui concerne l'octroi d'indemnisations, la Commission fait remarquer que l'abrogation du décret-loi n° 48 051 qui limite les possibilités d'indemnisation n'est toujours pas intervenue.

18
La Commission estime qu'à l'issue du délai, prolongé, fixé dans l'avis motivé, le manquement se limite à l'absence d'abrogation du décret-loi n° 48 051.

Sur le recours

19
La Commission fait valoir que la directive 89/665, dans son article 2, paragraphe 1, point c), prévoit l'indemnisation des personnes lésées par toute violation du droit communautaire régissant la passation de marchés publics ou des règles nationales le transposant.

20
Elle reproche au droit administratif portugais en vigueur, résultant du décret-loi n° 48 051, de subordonner l'octroi de dommages-intérêts à la production de la preuve, par les personnes lésées, que les actes illégaux de l'État ou des personnes morales de droit public ont été commis fautivement ou dolosivement. Elle estime donc que la République portugaise aurait dû abroger ce texte pour se conformer à la directive 86/665.

21
La Commission souligne que la preuve exigée est extrêmement difficile, voire impossible, à apporter, dans la mesure où l'auteur de la faute ne peut, en général, être individualisé de sorte que, dans la plupart des cas, la personne lésée n'obtiendra pas les dommages-intérêts qu'elle avait demandés et auxquels elle pouvait prétendre.

22
En outre, la difficulté à rapporter une telle preuve mène immanquablement à ce que les recours intentés par les personnes lésées en vue de l'obtention de dommages-intérêts soient lents et, probablement, inefficaces. Une telle situation serait contraire à l'article 1er, paragraphe 1, de la directive 89/665, qui insiste sur la nécessité de disposer de recours rapides et efficaces.

23
Le gouvernement portugais soutient que la directive 89/665 n'impose pas une responsabilité de type objectif. Il souligne qu'elle évoque simplement la possibilité pour les citoyens d'obtenir des «indemnisations» quand ils s'estiment lésés par des décisions illégales, sans spécifier si l'octroi d'une indemnisation est, ou non, subordonné au respect de conditions particulières.

24
Ce gouvernement ajoute que le décret-loi n° 48 051, contrairement à l'interprétation donnée par la Commission, n'exige pas la preuve d'une faute grave ou d'un dol de la part de l'État ou de la personne morale pour obtenir des dommages-intérêts. La faute grave ou le dol ne seraient exigés que pour établir, respectivement, soit le droit à l'action récursoire de l'entité jugée responsable contre le fonctionnaire ou l'agent qui a commis l'acte illégal, soit la recherche de la responsabilité solidaire de l'agent et du service.

Les autorités portugaises font valoir que, en tout état de cause, le juge national, pour respecter l'article 22 de la Constitution consacrant, en toutes circonstances, la responsabilité de l'État, n'applique pas les règles restrictives de cette responsabilité qui seraient contenues dans le décret-loi n° 48 051 critiqué par la Commission.

26
Le gouvernement portugais fait enfin état de l'adoption prochaine d'un projet de texte relatif à la responsabilité civile extracontractuelle de l'État, introduisant la notion de présomption de faute tirée de l'illégalité d'actes administratifs. Ce texte consacrerait en outre la notion de faute de service, permettant ainsi d'engager la responsabilité de l'État et des autres personnes morales de droit public en cas de fonctionnement anormal, alors même qu'il n'est pas possible d'imputer les dommages à un acteur déterminé. Les autorités portugaises regrettent que le précédent projet n'ait pu être adopté en raison de la démission du gouvernement portugais présentée le 17 décembre 2001.

Contrairement à l'affirmation du gouvernement portugais, il ressort du décret-loi n° 48 051, en vigueur à l'expiration du délai imparti dans l'avis motivé, que l'octroi de dommages-intérêts aux personnes lésées par une violation du droit communautaire régissant la passation de marchés publics ou des règles nationales le transposant est subordonné à la preuve que les actes illégaux de l'État ou des personnes morales de droit public ont été commis fautivement ou d'une façon dolosive.

28
Ainsi qu'il résulte de ses premier et deuxième considérants, la directive 89/665 vise à renforcer les mécanismes existants, tant sur le plan national que sur le plan communautaire, pour assurer l'application effective des directives communautaires en matière de passation de marchés publics, dans la mesure où les mécanismes qui existaient en général dans ce domaine, tant sur le plan national que sur le plan communautaire ne permettaient pas toujours de veiller au respect des dispositions communautaires (arrêt du 4 février 1999, Köllensperger et Atzwanger, C-103/97, Rec. p. I-551, point 3).

29
À cet effet, l'article 1er, paragraphe 1, de ladite directive impose aux États membres l'obligation de garantir que les décisions illégales des pouvoirs adjudicateurs puissent faire l'objet de recours efficaces et aussi rapides que possible (voir, notamment, arrêt du 28 octobre 1999, Alcatel Austria e.a., C-81/98, Rec. p. I-7671, points 33 et 34).

30
Parmi les procédures de recours que la directive 89/665 impose aux États membres d'instaurer aux fins de garantir que les décisions illégales des pouvoirs adjudicateurs puissent faire l'objet de tels recours, figure expressément, à l'article 2, paragraphe 1, sous c) de cette directive, celle permettant d'accorder des dommages-intérêts aux personnes lésées par une violation.

31
Or, si la réglementation portugaise prévoit la possibilité d'obtenir des dommages-intérêts en cas de violation du droit communautaire régissant la passation de marchés publics ou des règles nationales le transposant, elle ne saurait néanmoins être considérée comme un système de protection juridictionnelle adéquat dans la mesure où elle exige la preuve d'une faute ou d'un dol commis par les agents d'une entité administrative déterminée. Ainsi, le soumissionnaire lésé par une décision illégale des pouvoirs adjudicateurs risque d'être privé du droit de demander des dommages-intérêts au titre du préjudice causé par cette décision, ou du moins de les obtenir tardivement, au motif qu'il ne peut établir la preuve d'un dol ou d'une faute.

Dès lors, en n'abrogeant pas le décret-loi n° 48 051, subordonnant l'octroi de dommages-intérêts aux personnes lésées par une violation du droit communautaire des marchés publics ou des règles nationales le transposant à la preuve d'une faute ou d'un dol, la République portugaise a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu des articles 1er, paragraphe 1, et 2, paragraphe 1, sous c), de la directive 89/665.

33
La circonstance que le juge national n'applique pas les dispositions restrictives de ce texte pour engager la responsabilité de l'administration est sans incidence sur le manquement qui consiste à avoir laissé subsister ledit texte dans l'ordre juridique interne. Il est, en effet, important, afin que soit satisfaite l'exigence de sécurité juridique, que les particuliers bénéficient d'une situation juridique claire et précise, leur permettant de connaître la plénitude de leurs droits et de s'en prévaloir, le cas échéant, devant les juridictions nationales (voir arrêt du 19 septembre 1996, Commission/Grèce, C-236/95, Rec. p. I-4459, point 13).

34
Il est en outre établi que, à l'expiration des délais fixés par les avis motivés, le projet de loi relatif à la responsabilité civile extracontractuelle de l'État introduisant la notion de présomption de faute n'avait pu être adopté. Or, d'une part, un État membre ne saurait exciper de situations de son ordre juridique interne pour justifier le non-respect des obligations et des délais prescrits par une directive (arrêt du 10 avril 2003, Commission/France, C-114/02, Rec. p. I-3783, point 11) et, d'autre part, des modifications introduites dans la législation nationale sont sans pertinence pour statuer sur l'objet d'un recours en manquement, dès lors qu'elles n'ont pas été mises en œuvre avant l'expiration du délai imparti dans l'avis motivé (voir arrêt du 24 mars 1994, Commission/Belgique, C-80/92, Rec. p. I-1019, point 19).

Au vu de l'ensemble des considérations qui précèdent, le grief de la Commission doit en conséquence être accueilli.

36
Aux termes de l'article 69, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens. La Commission ayant conclu à la condamnation de la République portugaise et celle-ci ayant succombé en ses moyens, il y a lieu de la condamner aux dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (troisième chambre) déclare et arrête:

En n'abrogeant pas le décret-loi n° 48 051, du 21 novembre 1967, subordonnant l'octroi de dommages-intérêts aux personnes lésées par une violation du droit communautaire des marchés publics ou des règles nationales le transposant à la preuve d'une faute ou d'un dol, la République portugaise a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu des articles 1er, paragraphe 1, et 2, paragraphe 1, sous c), de la directive 89/665/CEE du Conseil, du 21 décembre 1989, portant coordination des dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives relatives à l'application des procédures de recours en matière de passation des marchés publics de fournitures et de travaux.

2)
La République portugaise est condamnée aux dépens.

Judgment of the Court (Third Chamber) of 20 October 2005

Commission of the European Communities v French Republic. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Public contracts - Directive 92/50/EEC - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Freedom to provide services - Agency of delegated project contracting - Persons to whom the task of delegated project contracting may be entrusted - Exhaustive list of legal persons under French law. Case C-264/03.

1. Freedom to provide services - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Contracts excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50 - Obligation to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty

(Art. 49 EC; Council Directive 92/50)

2. Freedom to provide services - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - National legislation permitting the project manager to delegate certain of its responsibilities - Task of agent reserved to exhaustively listed legal persons under national law - Not permissible

(Art. 49 EC; Council Directive 92/50)

1. The provisions of the EC Treaty relating to freedom of movement are intended to apply to public contracts which are outside the scope of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts. Although certain contracts are excluded from the scope of Community directives in the field of public procurement, the contracting authorities which conclude them are nevertheless bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty and the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality in particular. That is particularly the case in relation to public service contracts the value of which does not reach the thresholds fixed by Directive 92/50. The mere fact that the Community legislature considered that the strict special procedures laid down in the directives on public procurement are not appropriate in the case of public contracts of small value does not mean that those contracts are excluded from the scope of Community law.

(see paras 32-33)

2. A Member State which reserves the task of delegated project contracting to an exhaustive list of legal persons under national law, by which the contracting authority may, by an agreement in writing and for remuneration, appoint an agent to fulfil, in its name and on its behalf, all or any of certain of its responsibilities, fails to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by Directive 97/52, and under Article 49 EC as regards public service contracts outside the scope of Directive 92/50.

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 7 October 2004, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 24 November 2004,

gives the following

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby:

Declares that, by reserving, in Article 4 of Law No 85704 of 12 July 1985 on public project contracting and its relationship to private project management, as amended by Law No 96987 of 14 November 1996 on the implementation of the urban revival pact, the task of delegated project contracting to an exhaustive list of legal persons under French law, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, and under Article 49 EC.

1. By its application, the Commission of the European Communities is seeking a declaration by the Court that, by reserving, in Article 4 of Law No 85704 of 12 July 1985 on public project contracting and its relationship to private project management (JORF of 13 July 1985, p. 7914), as amended by Law No 96987 of 14 November 1996 on the implementation of the urban revival pact (JORF of 15 November 1996, p. 16656) (hereinafter Law No 85-704'), the task of delegated project contracting to an exhaustive list of legal persons under French law, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) (hereinafter Directive 92/50'), and, in particular, Articles 8 and 9 thereof, and under Article 49 EC.

Legal framework

Community legislation

2. Under Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50, public service contracts' means contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority, to the exclusion of the contracts listed in Article 1(a)(i) to (ix). Under Article 1(b) of that directive, contracting authorities' means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law'. Article 1(c) defines service provider' as any natural or legal person, including a public body, which offers services'.

3. Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50 provides that contracting authorities are to ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.

4. Under Article 6 of Directive 92/50, that directive shall not apply to public service contracts awarded to an entity which is itself a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) on the basis of an exclusive right which it enjoys pursuant to a published law, regulation or administrative provision which is compatible with the Treaty'.

5. Article 7(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 provides that it applies to public service contracts where the estimated value net of valueadded tax is not less than [EUR] 200 000'.

6. Under Article 8 of Directive 92/50, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex IA thereto must be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI thereto, that is by a call for tenders and by being made the subject of appropriate publicity.

7. Category 12 in Annex IA to Directive 92/50 covers [a]rchitectural services; engineering services and integrated engineering services; urban planning and landscape architectural services; related scientific and technical consulting services; technical testing and analysis services'.

8. Under Article 9 of Directive 92/50, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex IB thereto are to be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16 of that directive. Article 14 concerns common rules in the technical field and Article 16 notices of the results of award procedures.

9. Categories 21 and 27 in Annex IB to Directive 92/50 comprise legal services' and other services' respectively.

10. Article 10 of Directive 92/50 provides that [c]ontracts which have as their object services listed in both Annexes IA and IB shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI where the value of the services listed in Annex IA is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex IB. Where this is not the case, they shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16'.

National legislation

11. The provisions of Law No 85704 apply, under Article 1 thereof, to the execution of all construction or infrastructure projects, and to industrial plant intended for their exploitation where the contracting authorities are:

1. The State or its public undertakings;

2. Local authorities, their public undertakings, public undertakings for new town planning created under Article L. 3211 of the Code de l'urbanisme (Town Planning Code), groups thereof and associations of different types of public undertaking, referred to in Article L. 166-1 of the Code des communes (Municipal Code);

3. The private bodies mentioned in Article L. 64 of the Code de la sécurité sociale (Social Security Code), and consortia and federations thereof;

4. The private bodies for lowrent housing, mentioned in Article L. 4112 of the Code de la construction et de l'habitation (Building and Housing Code), and public/private partnership companies, for rented accommodation subsidised by the State and provided by such bodies and companies.'

12. Article 2 of that Law defines the contracting authority as:

... the legal person, mentioned in Article 1, for which the project is to be built. Since it is primarily responsible for the project, it performs in that role a task in the public interest from which it may not resile.

...

The contracting authority defines in the planning brief the operation's objectives and the needs which it must satisfy as well as the social, town planning, architectural, functional, technical and economic constraints and requirements, and those of its insertion into the landscape and environmental protection, relating to the execution and use of the project.

13. Article 3 of that Law provides:

... the contracting authority may appoint an agent, on the terms set out in the agreement referred to in Article 5, to fulfil, in its name and on its behalf, all or any of the following responsibilities of the contracting authority:

1. Defining the administrative and technical terms according to which the project will be worked up and executed;

2. Preparing for the selection of the project manager, signature of the project management contract, after approval of the choice of the project manager by the contracting authority, and management of that contract;

3. Approving the preliminary designs and agreements on the project;

4. Preparing for the selection of the contractor, signature of the contract for the works, after approval of the choice of the contractor by the contracting authority, and management of that contract;

5. Paying the remuneration for the project management and the works;

6. Acceptance of the works, and carrying out any measures relating to the aforementioned responsibilities.

The agent shall be under no obligation to the contracting authority other than for the proper performance of the responsibilities for which that authority has made the agent personally responsible.

The agent shall represent the contracting authority as against third parties in the performance of the responsibilities entrusted to him until the contracting authority certifies completion of his task under the terms set out in the agreement referred to in Article 5. He may engage in legal proceedings.'

14. Under Article 4 of Law No 85-704:

The responsibilities specified in the preceding article may be entrusted, within the limits of their powers, only to:

(a) The legal persons referred to in Article 1(1) and (2) of this Law, excepting public undertakings engaged in health and social matters, which may act as agents only for other such undertakings;

(b) Legal persons of which at least half the capital is held, directly or through an intermediary, by the legal persons referred to in Article 1(1) and (2) and whose purpose is to render their assistance to the contracting authority, provided that they are not acting as project manager or contractor on behalf of a third party;

(c) The private bodies for lowrent housing mentioned in Article L. 4112 of the Code de la construction et de l'habitation, but only for other lowrent housing bodies and for projects linked to a subsidised housing operation;

(d) Local public/private partnership companies governed by Law No 83597 of 7 July 1983 on local public/private partnership companies;

(e) Public undertakings created under Article L. 3211 of the Code de l'urbanisme as well as urban land associations approved or formed automatically under Article L. 3221 et seq. of the Code de l'urbanisme;

(f) Companies formed under Article 9 of Law No 51592 of 24 May 1951 concerning the Treasury special accounts for 1951, as amended by Article 28 of Law No 62933 of 8 August 1962 supplementing the

Law providing guidance concerning agriculture;

(g) Any public or private person to which is entrusted the creation of a concerted development area or a housing development...;

(h) Companies which enter into the contract prescribed in Article L. 2221 of the Code de la construction et de l'habitation for the execution of operations of urban restructuring of large estates and areas of rundown housing....

Those authorities, undertakings and bodies shall be subject to the provisions of this Law in the performance of the responsibilities which, under this article, are entrusted to them by the contracting authority.

The rules for the award of contracts signed by the agent shall be the rules applicable to the contracting authority, subject to any necessary adaptations made by decree to take account of the intervention of an agent.'

15. Article 5 of Law No 85-704 provides:

The relationship between the contracting authority and the legal persons referred to in Article 4 shall be governed by an agreement, which shall be void unless it provides for:

(a) The project which forms the subjectmatter of the agreement, the responsibilities entrusted to the agent, the terms under which the contracting authority shall certify completion of the agent's tasks, the detailed arrangements for the agent's remuneration, the penalties applicable to the agent in the event of breach of his obligations and the circumstances in which the agreement may be terminated;

...'

The pre-litigation procedure

16. Since it considered that certain provisions of Law No 85704, and particularly those relating to the circumstances in which a contracting authority may have recourse to an operations manager and entrust the performance of some of its responsibilities to a delegated project contractor, were contrary, first, to the provisions of Directive 92/50 and, second, to those of Article 49 EC, the Commission, by letter of 25 July 2001, gave the French Republic formal notice to submit its observations.

17. By letter of 8 March 2002, the French authorities rejected the Commission's complaints, save those relating to operations management governed by Article 6 of Law No 85704. They admitted, in that regard, that the task of operations management is a supply of services for the purposes of Community law and stated that it was thenceforth to be made subject to the new French Code des marchés publics (Code on Public Procurement).

18. Unsatisfied by that answer, the Commission, on 27 June 2002, sent the French Republic a reasoned opinion, requesting it to adopt the measures necessary to comply with the opinion within two months of its notification.

19. By letter of 14 October 2002, the French Republic informed the Commission that it adhered to the points of view set forth in its letter of 8 March 2002.

20. Since it considered that the failure to fulfil obligations was persisting in relation to delegated project contracting, the Commission decided to bring this action.

21. Since the lodgement of the application in this action, the French authorities have adopted Order No 2004566 of 17 June 2004 amending Law No 85704 (JORF of 19 June 2004, p. 11020), which amends that Law by allowing the agency of delegated project contracting to be henceforth entrusted to any public or private person, thus removing the requirement that the agent be a legal person under French law, subject however to compliance with certain rules on disqualification intended to prevent conflicts of interest. According to the French Government, that amendment is not the result of this action and makes no difference to the point of law which it is defending in this connection.

The action

Arguments of the parties

22. The Commission claims that, by reserving, in Article 4 of Law No 85704, the task of delegated project contracting to certain exhaustively listed categories of legal persons under French law, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50 and, in particular, Articles 8 and 9 thereof, and under Article 49 EC.

23. According to the Commission, the agency of a delegated project contractor is a public service contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50. The tasks subject to the agency come within Category 12 in Annex IA to that directive, save for tasks of representation, with the result that the provisions of Law No 85704 do not comply with Article 8 of that directive. As regards agencies exclusively or principally covering tasks of representation, they fall under Annex IB to Directive 92/50, with the result that that law does not comply with Article 9 of the same directive either.

24. In addition, the Commission asserts that, in relation to agencies of project contracting of a value lower than the thresholds fixed by Directive 92/50, as well as agencies covering exclusively or principally the services mentioned in Annex IB thereto, Article 4 of Law No 85704 constitutes a restriction on the principle of the freedom to provide services enshrined in Article 49 EC. Such a restriction can be justified neither by Articles 45 EC and 55 EC, since the tasks concerned do not include participation, even on an occasional basis, in the exercise of public authority, nor by Articles 46 EC and 55 EC, since the grounds of public policy, public safety and pu blic health do not apply in the circumstances of this case.

25. The French Government contends that the agency agreement of delegated project contracting provided for by Law No 85-704 is not a commercial contract and does not come within the scope of Directive 92/50. The agent participates in a task in the public interest and cannot be regarded as being a service provider. The agent represents the contracting authority, which is, essentially, the function of the agency. In that context, responsibilities are transferred to the agent, accompanied by a power to take decisions. The function of representation is inseparable from all the actions carried out by the agent on behalf of the principal. In exercising his powers, which are in effect those of a contracting authority, the agent is subject to the Community directives relating to public procurement.

26. The French Government also relies on Case C-399/98 Ordine degli Architetti and Others [2001] ECR I5409 relating to the application of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54). It follows from the Court's reasoning in that judgment, which is applicable by analogy to the facts of this case, that a contract for pecuniary interest, if it constitutes a contract of agency, may fall outside the scope of the Community directives relating to public procurement. It is sufficient that the agent is himself subject to the obligations arising from those directives. Law No 85704 makes contracts concluded by the agent subject to the same obligations as they would be were they concluded by the contracting authority.

27. Since the agency agreement of delegated project contracting presents, according to the French Government, characteristics such that it cannot be treated in the same way as a contract for the supply of services, Article 4 of Law No 85704 is not contrary to Article 49 EC.

Findings of the Court

Preliminary observations

28. Article 3 of Law No 85704 provides that the contracting authority may appoint an agent, on the terms set out in the agreement referred to in Article 5 of that law, to perform, in its name and on its behalf, all or any of certain of its responsibilities. Article 4 of that law reserves the task of delegated project contracting to certain exhaustively listed categories of persons. The French Government has not denied that those persons must, as the Commission claims, be legal persons under French law.

29. Admittedly, since the commencement of this action, the French authorities have amended Law No 85704 by allowing the agency of delegated project contracting henceforth to be entrusted to any public or private person, thus abolishing the requirement that the agent be a legal person under French law. It is appropriate none the less to point out that the question whether a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations must be determined with reference to the situation prevailing in the Member State at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion (see, among others, Case C63/02 Commission v United Kingdom [2003] ECR I-821, paragraph 11, and Case C313/03 Commission v Italy , not published in the ECR, paragraph 9). The Court cannot take account of any subsequent changes (see, among others, Case C482/03 Commission v Ireland , not published in the ECR, paragraph 11, and Case C-341/02 Commission v Germany [2005] ECR I2733, paragraph 33).

30. In such circumstances, it is important to examine whether Article 4 of Law No 85704 complies, first, with the provisions of Directive 92/50 and, second, with the principle of freedom to provide services enshrined in Article 49 EC.

31. So far as concerns the alleged infringement of Directive 92/50, it must be ascertained, first, whether, and if so to what extent, the agency contract of delegated project contracting, as defined by Law No 85704, falls within the scope of that directive. In that regard, it is appropriate to observe that that directive does not apply to contracts of a value below the threshold fixed therein.

32. As regards the complaint alleging breach of Article 49 EC, it is appropriate to point out that the provisions of the EC Treaty relating to freedom of movement are intended to apply to public contracts which are outside the scope of Directive 92/50. Although certain contracts are excluded from the scope of Community directives in the field of public procurement, the contracting authorities which conclude them are nevertheless bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty and the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality in particular (see, to that effect, Case C324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I10745, paragraph 60; Case C92/00 HI [2002] ECR I5553, paragraph 47, and the order of 3 December 2001 in Case C59/00 Vestergaard [2001] ECR I9505, paragraph 20).

33. That is particularly the case in relation to public service contracts the value of which does not reach the thresholds fixed by Directive 92/50. The mere fact that the Community legislature considered that the strict special procedures laid down in the directives on public procurement are not appropriate in the case of public contracts of small value does not mean that those contracts are excluded from the scope of Community law (see the order in Vestergaard , paragraph 19). Likewise, contracts outside the scope of Directive 92/50, such as concession agreements, continue to be subject to the general rules of the Treaty (see, to that effect, Case C-231/03 Coname [2005] ECR I7287, paragraph 16).

34. Finally, it is appropriate to point out that, so far as any given Member State is concerned, activities which in that State are connected, even occasionally, with the exercise of official authority do not come within the scope of Article 49 EC, by virtue of the first paragraph of Article

45 EC and Article 55 EC.

The complaint alleging infringement of Directive 92/50

35. The expression public service contracts' is defined in Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50. That provision states that such contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority.

36. In order to establish whether the agency agreement of delegated project contracting within the meaning of Law No 85704 falls within the scope of Directive 92/50, it is necessary to examine whether the criteria established in Article 1(a) of that directive are met. Since that provision makes no express reference to the law of the Member States for the purpose of determining its meaning and scope, there is no need to inquire as to how French law categorises such agreements.

37. In the present case, it appears that the said criteria are met.

38. First of all, Article 5 of Law No 85704 provides that the relationship between, on the one hand, the contracting authority and, on the other, the delegated project contractor is to be defined by an agreement, concluded between them in writing. Furthermore, it is clear from the same provision that the delegated project contractor receives remuneration. Therefore, that agreement may be regarded as a contract for pecuniary interest, concluded in writing.

39. Next, so far as concerns the expression contracting authorities', they are defined in Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 as the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law'.

40. Article 1 of Law No 85704 provides that the persons which can perform the functions of the contracting authority are the State and its public undertakings, local authorities, their public undertakings, public undertakings for new town planning, groups thereof and associations of different types of public undertaking. The private bodies mentioned in Article L. 64 of the Code de la sécurité sociale may also conclude agency agreements of delegated project contracting under that law, as may consortia and federations thereof, as well as private lowrent housing bodies and public/private partnership companies, for rented accommodation subsidised by the State and provided by such bodies and companies.

41. In this case, it is not disputed that those persons may be contracting authorities' within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50.

42. Finally, Article 1(c) of Directive 92/50 defines service provider' as any natural or legal person, including a public body, which offers services'. Article 50 EC treats services' as such where they are normally provided for remuneration, in so far as they are not governed by the provisions relating to freedom of movement for goods, capital and persons'. The contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex IA to Directive 92/50 are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI and those listed in Annex IB in accordance with Articles 14 and 16 of that directive.

43. The persons which may be appointed to fulfil the responsibilities of the delegated project contractor are listed in Article 4 of Law No 85704. It is appropriate to observe that some of those persons may, themselves, be contracting authorities within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50. While Article 6 of that directive excludes from its scope public service contracts awarded to an entity which is itself a contracting authority on the basis of an exclusive right which it enjoys pursuant to a published law, regulation or administrative provision, the fact remains that those conditions are not satisfied in the circumstances of this case.

44. Persons eligible to be appointed to fulfil the responsibilities of the delegated project contractor may be regarded as service providers', since the responsibilities entrusted to them, by the agency agreement of delegated project contracting, under Article 3 of Law No 85704, correspond to the provision of services within the meaning of Community law.

45. In that regard, the argument developed by the French Government to establish that the agent does not provide services cannot be accepted.

46. It is clear from Article 3 of Law No 85704, which lists the responsibilities which the contracting authority may appoint an agent to fulfil, that the agency agreement of delegated project contracting is not only a contract by which the agent undertakes to represent the contracting authority. Those responsibilities include various tasks corresponding, first, to providing technical and administrative assistance and, second, to tasks the object of which is the representation of the contracting authority.

47. First of all, as regards the question whether the function of representation is, as the French Government contends, inseparable from all the actions performed by the agent on behalf of the principal, it must be observed that it is perfectly feasible to separate those different tasks. Indeed, the contracting authority may appoint an agent, under Article 3 of Law No 85704, to fulfil all or any of the responsibilities listed in that provision. It is important also to state, as the Advocate General correctly noted in point 37 of his Opinion, that there is nothing to prevent the possibility of those tasks being subject to different rules.

48. Next, as regards the nature of those responsibilities, it is appropriate to observe that the question whether the agent contributes to the performance of a task in the public interest is not decisive in determining whether or not he provides services. It is not unusual, in the field of public procurement, for the contracting authority to entrust to a third party an economic task intended to meet a public interest need. That statement is corroborated, in particular, by the fact that Directive 92/50 applies, with certain exceptions, to public service contracts awarded by contracting authorities in the field of defence.

49. Finally, it must be determined whether the agency agreement of delegated project contracting effects a transfer of official authority, as the French Government argues. The examination of that question presupposes that the fulfilment of the responsibilities in question involves, on the part of the contracting authority, direct participation in the exercise of official authority.

50. In that regard, the French Government has not asserted the existence of circumstances in which the contracting authority is responsible for a structure for the inhouse' management of a public service within the meaning of the Court's caselaw (see, to that effect, Case C107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I8121, paragraph 50, and Coname , paragraph 26). Indeed, there is no suggestion that the principal exercises over the agent a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and that the agent carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority or authorities (see, to that effect, Case C-26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I1, paragraph 49).

51. As regards tasks of administrative and technical assistance, such as defining the administrative and technical terms according to which the project will be worked up and executed, they seem to be provisions of services within the meaning of Article 8 of, and Annex IA to, Directive 92/50 and the agent does not appear to participate in the exercise of official authority.

52. As for agency agreements of delegated project contracting the object of which is tasks involving a representation function, it is important to point out at the outset that the fact that a service is provided in the performance of such an agreement is not sufficient to exclude it from the scope of Directive 92/50. That statement is supported by the fact that, as the Commission points out by way of example, agency agreements between a contracting authority and its lawyer come within the scope of Articles 14 and 16 of Directive 92/50, under Article 9 thereof and point 21 of Annex IB thereto.

53. Under Article 3 of Law No 85704, the agent may be entrusted with various tasks involving the function of representing the contracting authority. Thus it is, particularly, as regards the signature of the project contracting agreement and the works contract, as well as where the agent pays the service providers and chosen contractors their remuneration.

54. As the Advocate General correctly observes in point 41 of his Opinion, although the agent may be authorised to sign the project contracting agreement and works contract on behalf of the contracting authority, he does not have sufficient autonomy in the execution of its acts to enable it to be considered the beneficiary of a transfer of official authority. In fact, according to Article 2 of Law No 85704, the contracting authority, which is primarily responsible for the project, performs in that role a task in the public interest from which it may not resile. Furthermore, the agent may act only after the contracting authority has given its approval. As regards the payment of remuneration to the service providers and contractors, it is financed by the contracting authority, with the result that the agent has no room for manoeuvre in that field either. The agent confines himself to advancing funds, which are reimbursed to him by the contracting authority.

55. In those circumstances, agency agreements of delegated project contracting the object of which is tasks involving a function of representing the contracting authority fall within Article 9 of, and Annex IB to, Directive 92/50.

56. The reasoning followed by the Court in paragraph 100 of the judgment in Ordine degli Architetti and Others , relating to the application of Directive 93/37, is not such as to undermine that conclusion. The Court observed, as regards compliance with that directive in cases concerning the execution of infrastructure works in circumstances such as were presented to it, that it was not necessary for the municipal authorities themselves to apply the awardofcontractprocedures laid down by that provision. That directive was still given full effect as long as the national legislation allowed the municipal authorities to require the developer holding the building permit to carry out the work contracted for in accordance with those procedures.

57. That assessment was made in the context of specific legislation in respect of town planning according to which the grant of a building permit entailed the payment, by its holder, of a contribution to the infrastructure costs engendered by its project. However, that developer could, by way of total or partial setoff against the amount due, undertake to execute the infrastructure works directly. On the latter hypothesis, the Court concluded that it was a public works contract within the meaning of Directive 93/37. Since the municipality had no power to choose who was to be made responsible for executing the infrastructure works, since, by operation of law, that person is the owner of the land to be developed and the holder of the building permit, it was possible to find that the award procedures could be applied, in place of the municipality, by the holder of the permit, the only appropriate person, according to the law, to execute the works, as an alternative to the payment to the municipality of a contribution to the infrastructure costs. That situation is different from the situation governed by Law No 85704, which leaves to the contracting authority the choice of the agent and does not lay down prior obligations for which the latter's remuneration would be consideration.

58. In the light of the preceding considerations, it must be held that an agency agreement, as defined by Law No 85704, is a public service contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 and comes within the scope of the directive.

59. Therefore, it is necessary to examine whether Article 4 of Law No 85704, which reserves the role of agent to exhaustively listed categories of legal persons under French law, complies with the provisions of Directive 92/50.

60. In that regard, it is important to recall that Directive 92/50 is intended to improve the access of service providers to procedures for the award of contracts in order to eliminate practices that restrict competition in general and participation in contracts by other Member States' nationals in particular. Those principles are referred to in Article 3(2) of that directive which prohibits discrimination between different service providers.

61. It must be held that Article 4 of Law No 85704 does not comply with the principle of equal treatment between different service providers, in as much as that provision reserves the task of delegated project contracting to exhaustively listed categories of legal persons under French law.

62. Furthermore, without it being necessary even to determine which services come within Annex IA to Directive 92/50 and which come within Annex IB thereto, as well as, in that context, what effect the application of Article 10 thereof may have, it is established that Law No 85704 prescribes no procedure for putting the choice of agent out to competition.

63. In those circumstances, the complaint alleging infringement of Directive 92/50 is well founded.

The complaint alleging breach of Article 49 EC

64. For public service contracts outside the scope of Directive 92/50, it remains to decide whether Article 4 of Law No 85704 complies with the principle, enshrined in Article 49 EC, of freedom to provide services.

65. It must be observed at the outset that, as stated in paragraphs 49 to 55 of this judgment, an agency agreement of delegated project contracting, as defined by Law No 85704, does not confer on the agent tasks connected with the exercise of official authority, for the tasks either of administrative or technical assistance or of representation which are entrusted to it. As a result, the exception under Articles 45 EC and 55 EC does not apply in this case.

66. Article 49 EC prohibits restrictions on freedom to provide services within the European Community in respect of nationals of Member States who are established in a State of the Community other than that of the person for whom the services are intended. Furthermore, it is settled caselaw that that provision requires the elimination of any restriction, even if it applies to national providers of services and to those of other Member States alike, when it is liable to prohibit or impede the activities of a provider of services established in another Member State where he lawfully provides similar services (see, in particular, Case C262/02 Commission v France [2004] ECR I6569, paragraph 22, and Case C429/02 Bacardi France [2004] ECR I-6613, paragraph 31 and the caselaw cited therein).

67. In particular, a Member State may not make the provision of services in its territory subject to compliance with all the conditions required for establishment, thereby depriving of all practical effectiveness the provisions of the Treaty whose object is to guarantee the freedom to provide services (see Case C-180/89 Commission v Italy [1991] ECR I709, paragraph 15).

68. In this case, it must be held that Article 4 of Law No 85704 is an obstacle to the freedom to provide services for the purposes of Article 49 EC in that it leads to the reservation of the task of delegated project contracting to an exhaustive list of legal persons under French law.

69. However, Article 46 EC, read in conjunction with Article 55 EC, allows restrictions on the freedom to provide services justified by grounds of public policy, public security or public health. The examination of the casefile has not however enabled any such justification to be established.

70. In those circumstances, the complaint alleging breach of Article 49 EC is well founded.

71. Having regard to all the preceding considerations, it must be held that, by reserving, in Article 4 of Law No 85704, the task of delegated project contracting to an exhaustive list of legal persons under French law, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50 and Article 49 EC.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Costs

72. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs, if they have been applied for. Since the Commission has applied for an order for costs against the French Republic and since the latter has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT

(Third Chamber)

of 20 October 2005

in Case C-264/03: Commission of the European Communities v French Republic [1]

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Public contracts - Directive 92/50/EEC - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Freedom to provide services - Agency of delegated project contracting - Persons to whom the task of delegated project contracting may be entrusted - Exhaustive list of legal persons created under French law)

(Language of the case: French)

In Case C-264/03: ACTION under Article 226 EC for failure to fulfil obligations, brought on 17 June 2003, Commission of the European Communities (Agents: B. Stromsky, K. Wiedner and F. Simonetti) v French Republic (Agents: G. de Bergues and D. Petrausch - the Court (Third Chamber), composed of A. Rosas (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, J. Malenovský, J.-P. Puissochet, A. Borg Barthet and U. Lõhmus, Judges; Advocate General: M. Poiares Maduro, Registrar: K. Sztranc, Administrator, gave a judgment on 20 October 2005, in which it:

Declares that, by reserving, in Article 4 of Law No 85-704 of 12 July 1985 on public project contracting and its relationship to private project management, as amended by Law No 96-987 of 14 November 1996 on the implementation of the urban revival pact, the task of delegated project contracting to an exhaustive list of legal persons created under French law, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, and under Article 49 EC.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Poiares Maduro delivered on 24 November 2004. Commission of the European Communities v French Republic. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Public contracts - Directive 92/50/EEC - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Freedom to provide services - Agency of delegated project contracting - Persons to whom the task of delegated project contracting may be entrusted - Exhaustive list of legal persons under French law. Case C-264/03.

1. In this action for failure to fulfil obligations, the Commission seeks a declaration that, by reserving, in Article 4 of Law No 85704 of 12 July 1985 on public project contracting and its relationship to private project management, as amended by Law No 91662 of 13 July 1991, and by Law No 96-987 of 14 November 1996, (2) the task of delegated project contracting to an exhaustive list of legal persons under French law, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (3) and, in particular, Articles 8 and 9 thereof, and under Article 49 EC.

2. This action enables the material scope of Directive 92/50 to be clarified, and, in particular, the definition of the term contract'. Moreover, it concerns both compliance with that directive and the principle of freedom to provide services laid down in Article 49 EC, which makes it necessary to define the relationship between these two pieces of legislation.

I - Factual and legislative background

3. It must be noted at the outset that Article 4 of Law No 85-704, which is the subject of the present action, is in the process of being amended. Order No 2004566 of 17 June 2004 amends that article, by permitting authority henceforth to be delegated both to public bodies and to private persons. (4) The order creates an incompatibility between the role of agent and any task of project management, execution of works or technical supervision relating to the work or works connected to the delegated authority' in order to avoid conflicts of interest. (5) The incompatibility extends to any undertakings connected with the agent. A draft law aiming to ratify that order was laid before the Assemblée Nationale on 15 September 2004. However, the Court has consistently held that the failure to fulfil obligations must be assessed as at the end of the period of two months from the reasoned opinion, dated 27 June 2002. That is why in the rest of this Opinion I shall be referring to the French law as it was in force at that time.

4. Before explaining the respective positions of the French Republic and the Commission on these two issues, let me briefly set out the relevant national and Community law provisions.

5. Directive 92/50 coordinates the procedure for the award of public service contracts. It aims to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and therefore to protect the interests of economic operators established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities in another Member State'. (6) To achieve that aim, the Directive seeks to ensure that undertakings from other Member States will be able to tender for contracts or bundles of contracts likely to be of interest to them for objective reasons relating to their value.' (7) Under Directive 92/50 two categories of services, set out in Annexes IA and IB, are subject to different regimes. In accordance with Article 9 of the Directive, the rules applicable to the services listed in Annex IB are concerned only with a requirement for a definition of the technical specifications and the sending of a notice of the result of the award procedure. On the other hand, the services listed in Annex IA of the Directive are, in accordance with Article 8 thereof, subject to more extensive obligations: they must, for example, be subject to prior advertising in accordance with detailed procedures and fixed timelimits.

6. The principle of freedom to provide services set out in Article 49 EC applies to all provisions of services, provided that they do not fall within the exceptions laid down in Articles 45 EC and 46 EC. Since Directive 92/50 applies only to the provision of services based on public contracts, (8) services carried out on other bases are only subject to the principle of freedom to provide services. Contracts not exceeding the financial thresholds defined in Article 13 of Directive 92/50 are also subject to Article 49 EC.

7. The Law which is the subject of these proceedings organises and regulates public project contracting. It applies to the execution of all construction or infrastructure projects, and to industrial plant intended for their operation where the contracting authorities are the State, public bodies or certain designated private bodies. (9) Within that framework, the contracting authority may enter into an agency contract in accordance with the provisions of that law.

8. The features of this type of contract are specified in Article 5 of Law No 85-704: the relationship between the contracting authority and [the agent] shall be governed by an agreement, which shall be void unless it provides for:... the project which forms the subjectmatter of the agreement, the responsibilities entrusted to the agent, the terms under which the contracting authority shall certify completion of the agent's tasks, the detailed arrangements for the agent's remuneration, the penalties applicable to the agent in the event of breach of his obligations and the circumstances in which the agreement may be terminated;...'

9. Article 3 of that law then lists the responsibilities which the contracting authority may entrust to an agent:

- Defining the administrative and technical terms according to which the project will be worked up and executed;

- Preparing for the selection of the project manager, signature of the project management contract, after approval of the choice of the project manager by the contracting authority, and management of that contract;

- Approving the preliminary designs and agreements on the project;

- Preparing for the selection of the contractor, signature of the contract for the works, after approval of the choice of the contractor by the contracting authority, and management of that contract;

- Paying the remuneration for the project management and the works;

- Acceptance of the works, and carrying out any measures relating to the aforementioned responsibilities.'

10. Under Article 2 of that law, certain tasks are not eligible for delegation by the contracting authority. They include the general design of the work and the way that it is carried out.

11. As is apparent from the abovecited provisions of the Law at issue in these proceedings, the responsibilities that the contracting authority may entrust to the agent are very broad. However, what constitutes the specific nature of the agency contract is the identity of the agent, which the contracting authority may select only from the exhaustively prescribed classes in Article 4 of the law in question:

(a) The legal persons referred to in Article 1(1) and (2) of this Law, excepting public undertakings engaged in health and social matters, which may act as agents only for other such undertakings;

(b) Legal persons of which at least half the capital is held, directly or through an intermediary, by the legal persons referred to in Article 1(1) and (2) and whose purpose is to render their assistance to the contracting authority, provided that they are not acting as project manager or contractor on behalf of a third party;

(c) The private bodies for lowrent housing mentioned in Article L. 4112 of the Code de la construction et de l'habitation, but only for other lowrent housing bodies and for projects linked to a subsidised housing operation;

(d) Local public/private partnership companies governed by Law No 83597 of 7 July 1983 on local public/private partnership companies;

(e) Public undertakings created under Article L. 3211 of the Code de l'urbanisme as well as urban land associations approved or formed automatically under Article L. 3221 et seq. of the Code de l'urbanisme;

(f) Companies formed under Article 9 of Law No 51592 of 24 May 1951 concerning the Treasury special accounts for 1951, as amended by Article 28 of Law No 62933 of 8 August 1962 supplementing the Law providing guidance concerning agriculture;

12. Agency contracts made pursuant to Law No 85-704 are not subject to the French Code des marchés publics (Code on Public Procurement). (10) The contracting authority is not obliged to go through the process of preliminary competitive tendering regarding its choice of agent. On the other hand, the agent itself is subject to the Code des marchés publics (11) in respect of any contracts it enters into on behalf of the contracting authority. The question which arises is whether agency contracts made pursuant to Law No 85-704 must be subject to the principles of putting out to competitive tender and of prior advertising which stem from Directive 92/50 and the provisions of the Treaty which relate to the freedom to provide services.

13. After having sent a letter requesting information to the French Republic on 31 May 2000, the Commission, not satisfied with the replies it received, sent France a letter of formal notice on 25 July 2001. As the replies sent by the French authorities did not convince the Commission, it sent a reasoned opinion on 27 June 2002. Although the French Republic announced the imminent repeal of the provisions in issue, the Commission chose to bring an action before the Court.

14. I should point out that the Commission's complaints turn on two aspects. First, the agency contract as described by French legislation falls within the scope of Directive 92/50 and its conditions are incompatible with Articles 8 and 9 of that directive. Second, where Directive 92/50 is not applicable, Article 4 of the Law in question, in so far as it reserves agency contracts to certain legal persons, is not consistent with the provisions of the Treaty which relate to the freedom to provide services.

15. In so far as Directive 92/50 is applicable, I shall consider the question of compliance with that Directive. Subsequently, it will be necessary to establish whether Law No 85-704 is consistent with Article 49 EC, where the directive is not applicable.

II - Incompatibility of Law No 85-704 with Directive 92/50

16. In order to establish whether, as the Commission claims in its action, Article 4 of Law No 85-704 is incompatible with the provisions of Directive 92/50, we must first examine whether the situations covered by that law fall within the scope of the Directive.

A - The inclusion of agency contracts as defined by Law No 85704 within the scope of Directive 92/50

17. The parties disagree in essence on whether agency contracts as defined by Law No 85-704 fall within the material scope of Directive 92/50. The scope of that directive is defined in Article 1 thereof. Therefore, for the purpose of establishing whether there is any failure to fulfil obligations, I must first consider whether an agency contract as defined by Law No 85-704 fulfils the criteria of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50.

18. According to the definition given under that provision, public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority'. Those criteria appear to be satisfied in this case.

19. Firstly, contracting authorities, within the meaning of Article 1(b) of the Directive, are the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.' Bodies governed by public law are defined in the same article in a functional way as any body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character' and controlled by the State, whether by a majority capital holding or by the power to appoint the management authorities of the body concerned. Under Article 1 of Law No 85-704, those who may perform the tasks of a contracting authority are the State and its public undertakings, local authorities, their public undertakings, public undertakings for new town planning, groups thereof and associations of different types of public undertaking. Agency contracts may also be made under Law No 85-704 by the private bodies mentioned in Article L. 64 of the Code de la sécurité sociale (Social Security Code) and consortia and federations thereof as well as private bodies for low-rent housing and public/private partnership companies, for rented accommodation subsidised by the State and provided by such bodies and companies. There is no doubt that these bodies are all contracting authorities within the meaning of Directive 92/50.

20. Secondly, it is apparent from Article 5 of Law No 85-704 that all agency contracts must be made in writing. The second condition set out in Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 is therefore satisfied.

21. Thirdly, for the agency contract to be valid, Article 5 of the said Law provides for the agent to be remunerated. The agency contract for project contracting is therefore a contract for pecuniary interest.

22. Fourthly, the responsibilities entrusted to the agent, as described in Article 4 of the Law, seem to correspond to the provision of services.

23. In applying these criteria, it appears, on first analysis, that the agency contract within the meaning of French legislation is a public service contract for the purposes of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50.

24. However, the French Republic puts forward two arguments against that classification. First of all, it submits that, in the light of its numerous specificities, the agency contract as defined under Law No 85-704 cannot be considered a public service contract. Moreover, it takes the view that the reasoning adopted by the Court in Ordine degli Architetti and Others , (12) which is applicable by analogy, means that the agency contract within the meaning of Law No 85-704 also falls outside the scope of Directive 92/50.

1. Does the agency contract for project contracting mean that there is a transfer of official authority?

25. The French Republic asserts that the agency contract for project contracting may be distinguished from a contract for the provision of services on several counts. The essence of the agency contract is the power it grants the agent to represent the contracting authority. An inseparable link binds this representative role to the other responsibilities devolved to the agent. Thus the agent is charged with a task of general interest and even has a power of co-decision making with the contracting authority. The terms of the relationship between the contracting authority and the agent are quite different from those under a contract of a commercial nature. These specificities considered together prevent an agency contract from being treated as a contract for the provision of services.

26. The Commission disputes each of the arguments put forward. It asserts that the fact that services are provided under an agency contract is not sufficient to make them fall outside the scope of Directive 92/50. Thus, agency contracts made between a lawyer and his client, for example, fall within the ambit of that directive, under point 21 of Annex IB thereto. Moreover, such an analysis is consistent with that put forward by the Conseil d'Etat in its judgment of 5 March 2003, (13) in which it held that a general and systematic exclusion of agency contracts from the French Code des marchés publics was not compatible with Directive 92/50. Finally, nor does the existence of considerations of general interest preclude classification as a public service contract within the meaning of the Directive, since such elements are very often present in contracts subject to the Directive. (14) Thus, none of the specificities put forward by the French Republic would appear to be capable of excluding the contract from the scope of Directive 92/50.

27. The first question to be resolved concerns the nature of the contract made between the contracting authority and its agent. Although in principle it is immaterial to ascertain which classification national law accords to a contract made between a contracting authority and a service provider for the purposes of classifying it under Community law, it is to be noted nevertheless that the Directive applies only to contracts' for services, excluding, inter alia, public service concessions.

28. Without claiming that the contractual relationship in issue is to be treated as a concession, (15) the French Republic maintains that there is nevertheless a transfer of the exercise of official authority, from the contracting authority to the agent. It thus attempts to establish a parallel between the caselaw on concessions and the line of reasoning which the Court might adopt concerning agency contracts for project contracting. Indeed, it is clear from an analysis of the caselaw that it is precisely such a transfer of official authority to the concession holder that makes it fall outside the scope of Directive 92/50. After setting out the Community caselaw on concessions, we shall see whether it is possible to transpose that caselaw to the agency contract in issue in this case.

29. Whereas concessions for public works are expressly subject to Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, (16) service concessions are not governed by Directive 92/50. It has been established that they are excluded from its scope. (17) Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, (18) which replaces, inter alia, Directive 92/50, maintains this exclusion of service concessions from its scope.

30. The criterion for a concession, although not laid down by any legislative provisions, may be ascertained by comparison with the definition set out in Directive 93/37. (19) In its interpretative communication on concessions under Community law, (20) the Commission also seeks to work out a definition of this term and declares the existence of exploitation risk to be the determining factor. Directive 2004/18 eliminates all uncertainty in this regard, as it defines a service concession in Article 1(4) as a contract of the same type as a public service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in this right together with payment.'

31. In BFI Holding , the Court held that a contract classified as a concession under national law, which concerned refuse collection, could fall within the scope of Directive 92/50. (21) Indeed, without concerning itself with the national law's classification, the Court referred solely to the conditions laid down in Article 1 of Directive 92/50.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

32. In his Opinion in Telaustria and Telefonadress , Advocate General Fennelly had suggested using first the fact that the concessionaire itself must bear the principal... economic risk.' (22) The fact that the concession contract is made for the benefit of thirdparty users is a subsidiary criterion and, according to him, the requirement that the service ceded must be in the public interest ought to be disregarded. In that case, the Court did not rule on the precise scope of the term, while holding that a concession existed where the consideration provided by the first undertaking to the second consists in the second obtaining the right to exploit for payment its own service'. (23)

33. When the Court was considering the Loto concession in Italy, (24) it held that, in the absence of any transfer of authority to the concessionaire, the concession had to be regarded as a contract subject to Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts. (25)

34. The criterion on remuneration of the concessionaire cannot be transposed to reasoning about agency contracts. Indeed, the right of exploitation cannot exist in connection with delegation of project contracting. On the other hand, let us check whether the agency contract effects a transfer of official authority from the contracting authority to the agent. This would be a sign that such a contract would in fact not be a contract for the purposes of Directive 92/50. On the contrary, in the absence of any such transfer, the argument submitted by the French Republic would have to be rejected.

35. The difficulty in this case rests in the specific nature of the agency contract, under which the agent represents the principal. However, and this is why the French Republic's argument based on this particularity cannot succeed, the agency contract for project contracting, as defined under Law No 85-704, is not only a contract under which the agent undertakes to represent the contracting authority. As may be seen from the list of the diverse responsibilities that may be entrusted to the agent, in accordance with Article 3 of the Law, the agent also provides assistance to the contracting authority. (26)

36. The French Republic submits that the two tasks performed by the agent are inseparable. However, the fact that Article 3 of Law No 85704 provides only an indicative list of the tasks that may be entrusted to an agent militates against the French Republic's interpretation. According to that provision of the Law in question, the contracting authority may quite easily use a service provider to perform certain services and entrust only representative duties to the agent. On the other hand, it may entrust all the tasks listed in Article 3 of the Law to one person. The contracting authority's freedom is curtailed only by Article 2 of the Law which forbids it from resiling from the task in its role as primarily responsible for the project'. The fact that the contracting authority may choose which tasks it does or does not wish to entrust to the agent illustrates that it is entirely conceivable that the agent's various tasks can be separated: on the one hand, those which relate to the provision of services and, on the other, those which include a role of representing the contracting authority.

37. Since it is possible to distinguish the two kinds of responsibilities entrusted to the agent, there is nothing to prevent those two categories of task from being subject to different rules. As regards the provision of services carried out under an agency contract for project contracting, they correspond to the concept of public service contracts within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50. Therefore, at least in so far as it involves a provision of services, an agency contract for project contracting concluded pursuant to Law No 85-704 will be subject to the rules of that directive.

38. Let me now analyse the second category of tasks entrusted to the agent, in order to determine whether they may fall outside the scope of the Directive in that they might correspond to a transfer of official authority. The agent represents the contracting authority in two situations: firstly, when the project management contract is signed and when the contract for works is signed and, secondly, when paying remuneration to the service providers and contractors engaged.

39. Although the agent is entitled to sign the project management contracts and the contracts for works on behalf of the contracting authority, it may do so only after having obtained its agreement. (27) In that situation there cannot be any genuine transfer of official authority, as the agent is not in a position to make autonomous decisions.

40. As regards paying their remuneration to the service providers and contractors, the finance is provided by the contracting authority, so that the agent does not have any freedom to act in that regard either. It merely advances funds, which are reimbursed to it by the contracting authority.

41. Thus, although the agent may carry out certain legal transactions on behalf of the contracting authority, it does not thereby have sufficient autonomy in the performance of its tasks to be able to be regarded as the beneficiary of a transfer of official authority. (28) Therefore, the argument put forward by the French Republic concerning the specific nature of the delegation of project contracting must be rejected and this contract must be subject, in its entirety, to the provisions of Directive 92/50.

2. The possible effect of the decision in Ordine degli Architetti and Others

42. The French Republic asserts that the reasoning in Ordine degli Architetti and Others is applicable by analogy and it has the effect of excluding all agency contracts from the scope of the directives relating to public contracts. In this case, an Italian court had referred a question to the Court for a preliminary ruling on the compatibility with Community law of national legislation which provided that an applicant for a building permit may be partly or wholly exempt from payment of a contribution due as a result of the grant of building permission, in return for direct execution of infrastructure works (such as residential streets, parking areas, or networks for the distribution of gas.)

43. After having analysed the execution of such works as falling within the ambit of Directive 93/37, the Court declared that national legislation such as that at issue was incompatible with that directive in cases where the value of the work in question exceeds the ceiling fixed by that directive. (29) In other words, the Court considers that the contract made between the municipality and the landowner seeking a building permit falls within the scope of the Directive. Before arriving at that conclusion, the Court gives a proviso at paragraph 100 of the judgment: That does not mean that, in cases concerning the execution of infrastructure works, the Directive is complied with only if the municipal authorities themselves apply the award-of-contract procedures laid down therein. The Directive would still be given full effect if the national legislation allowed the municipal authorities to require the developer holding the building permit, under the agreements concluded with them, to carry out the work contracted for in accordance with the procedures laid down in the Directive so as to discharge their own obligations under the Directive. In such a case, the developer must be regarded, by virtue of the agreements concluded with the municipality exempting him from the infrastructure contribution in return for the execution of public infrastructure works, as the holder of an express mandate granted by the municipality for the construction of that work. Article 3(4) of the Directive expressly allows for the possibility of the rules concerning publicity to be applied by persons other than the contracting authority in cases where public works are contracted out.'

44. The Commission and the French Republic interpret that passage in different ways.

45. The French Republic infers a general theory about agency from that paragraph. (30) According to its suggested interpretation of the paragraph, in order for the provisions of Directive 93/37

or Directive 92/50 to be complied with, it is sufficient that the agent itself be subject to those directives. Law No 85-704 is therefore consistent with Community law, since it makes contracts made by the agent subject to the same obligations as if the contracting authority made them. (31)

46. The Commission attempts to identify the differences between the main proceedings and those which gave rise to the judgment in Ordine degli Architetti and Others. Firstly, it points out that different directives are in issue. Then, it notes that, in a situation such as that in Ordine degli Architetti and Others , the municipality may not choose its agent, which is necessarily the paying party with the building permit. Finally, the contract made between a municipality and the landowner applying for a building permit provides only for the deduction of a charge due in return for infrastructure works, and not some other provision of services carried out for the benefit of the municipality.

47. In the light of these considerations, it seems to me that the judgment in Ordine degli Architetti and Others cannot be interpreted in the way suggested by the French Republic. Indeed, as the Commission explains, provided that the works contracts entered into by the landowner are subject to the requirements of Directive 93/37, the effectiveness of that directive is maintained. (32) To put it another way, for compliance with the objectives of Directive 93/37, it is immater ial whether the contracting authority obliged to put out to competitive tender is the municipality or the landowner applying for the building permit.

48. If it were accepted, by analogy, that the contract for the provision of services made between the contracting authority and the agent was able to fall outside the ambit of Directive 92/50, this would go against the effectiveness of that directive. Indeed, in contrast to the situation considered by the Court in Ordine degli Architetti and Others , a distinction must be made between, on the one hand, the representative tasks such as the signing of contracts on behalf of the contracting authority and, on the other, services performed for pecuniary interest by the agent for the contracting authority. Any application of Ordine degli Architetti and Others could relate only to the first of those tasks. If there were a transfer of official authority from the contracting authority to the agent, then it might be considered that applying Directive 92/50 to the agent alone would be sufficient to ensure the effectiveness of the legislation. On the other hand, in respect of provisions of services carried out for the benefit of a contracting authority, the mere fact that they are carried out under an agency contract cannot prevent their being subject to that Directive.

49. As regards the representative activities of the agent, in the absence of any transfer of official authority, these activities must be treated as provisions of services. Moreover, in so far as a contracting authority may entrust to a service provider, under a public contract and not by way of agency, tasks of assistance identical to those which might be carried out by an agent, there can be no doubt that Directive 92/50 applies to the agency contract for project contracting. It is established that the classification of a contract under national law cannot have the effect of circumventing the applicability of Community law. It is thus apparent that Directive 92/50 is applicable to provisions of services performed by the agent for the contracting authority, and the classification of that contractual relationship under national law has no bearing whatsoever.

50. In any event, and as will be seen more clearly in the third section, even when an agency contract as defined by French legislation does not fall within the scope of the Directive, it remains subject to the requirements relating to the freedom to provide services.

B - The incompatibility of Article 4 of Law No 85-704 with Directive 92/50

51. Where the agency contract within the meaning of Law No 85704 falls within the scope of Directive 92/50, we must see whether the French legislation is compatible with that directive. Article 4 of Law No 85-704, which is the subject of these proceedings, reserves the role of agent to exhaustively listed categories of public persons under French law.

52. This appears to be clearly inconsistent with the aim of Directive 92/50 to grant equal access for all service providers to public procurement. (33) As the Court held, with regard to Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, (34) although the directive makes no express mention of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers, the duty to observe that principle lies at the very heart of the directive' (35) The same assertion applies to Directive 92/50. Article 4 of Law No 85704 is thus clearly inconsistent with the principle of equal treatment of tenderers by virtue of the fact that it reserves exclusively to certain classes of publiclaw legal persons the benefit of agency contracts for project contracting.

53. Moreover, Law No 85-704 does not require any prior competitive tendering for the conferment of an agency contract, so that the contracting authority is completely free in its choice, within the class of public persons referred to in Article 4 of that Law, even if the value of the services concerned exceeds the ceiling laid down by Article 13 of Directive 92/50.

54. As pointed out above, the requirements regarding competitive tendering and prior advertising differ, depending on whether the services rendered to the contracting authority are listed in Annex IA or IB to Directive 92/50. Whether a service belongs to category IA or IB therefore affects which rules apply to it. Contracts which relate to services listed in Annex IB are subject to lesser obligations than those which relate to services covered by Annex IA. Where the contract is a mixed one, Article 10 of Directive 92/50 provides: [c]ontracts which have as their object services listed in both Annexes IA and IB shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI where the value of the services listed in Annex IA is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex IB. Where this is not the case, they shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.'

55. In this case, and without needing to determine which procedure ought to apply to the agency contract for project contracting, it is sufficient to observe that the law under scrutiny does not lay down any procedure for competitive tendering by agents. Thus, whether the provision of services entrusted to him falls within Annex IA or Annex IB, Law No 85-704 is not compatible with Articles 8 and 9 of Directive 92/50.

56. Even if the classification of the services performed by the agent has little effect in the light of the incompatibility of the national legislation with Directive 92/50, clarification is required, as the parties hold opposing views. (36) The French Republic claims, in the alternative, that the services performed by the agent are in essence legal services, as referred to in point 21 of Annex IB to Directive 92/50, and, to a lesser extent, administrative tasks, such as preparing the competitive tendering and contract award procedures and accountancy matters, which come under category 27 (other services) of the same Annex. The Commission takes the view that the agent mainly provides architectural and engineering services, listed in point 12 of Annex IA. According to the Commission, the agent's purely representative tasks can fall within point 27 of Annex IB of Directive 92/50, entitled Other services'.

57. On reading Article 3 of Law No 85-704, cited in point 9 of this Opinion, which describes the tasks which may be conferred on the agent, it seems difficult to assert, as the Commission does, that the tasks entrusted to the agent consist only in architectural planning or engineering services listed in category 12 of Annex IA, even if defining the administrative and technical terms according to which the project will be worked up and executed' (37) as well as acceptance of the works' (38) appear to fall within this category. In that respect this must be considered on a case-by-case basis. Under Article 10 of Directive 92/50, the contracting authority will be in a position to establish which rules are applicable to the agency contract for project contracting in question, as it does not seem possible to subject them all to the same regime, given the variety in the subjectmatter of such contracts. (39)

58. In the light of these considerations, Article 4 of the Law in question is incompatible with Articles 8 and 9 of Directive 92/50. (40) In cases where the Directive does not apply, it remains to be determined whether Article 4 of Law No 85-704 is consistent with the principle of the freedom to provide services.

III - The incompatibility of Article 4 of Law No 85-704 with Article 49 EC

59. The question may well be asked what the point is of applying both the Treaty articles relating to freedom to provide services and freedom of establishment and the directives governing public contracts, in this case Directive 92/50. However, in respect of all the public contracts which fall outside the scope of the directives, the Treaty provisions on free movement may of course apply. (41) Likewise, contracts outside the scope of Directive 92/50, such as concession contracts, are still subject to the general rules of the Treaty. (42) Thus, in respect of the situation where the agency contract for project contracting fell short of the financial thresholds of Directive 92/50, (43) or if it were covered by an exception to that directive, it must be determined whether Article 4 of the Law in question is consistent with Article 49 EC.

60. According to the French Republic, Article 49 EC does not apply to this case, as the agent does not provide any services. Unlike a service provider, the agent takes part in a task of general interest, acts in a representative role on behalf of a public person and is the beneficiary of a transfer of responsibilities together with a power to make decisions.

61. As explained above, it does not appear that there is anything preventing the tasks carried out by the agent from being classified as provisions of services.

62. Moreover, the French Republic reiterates its line of argument based on Ordine degli Architetti and Others and considers that its legislation is consistent with Article 49 EC provided that the agent is subject to the rules governing public contracts in respect of the contracts he enters into on behalf of the contracting authority.

63. The French Republic's interpretation of that judgment is not convincing. Indeed, as explained above, the agent does not simply make contracts on behalf of the contracting authority, but also performs numerous remunerated services for him. The Commission's criticisms relate exclusively to the contractual relationship in which the agent is in fact a service provider. The judgment in Ordine degli Architetti and Others envisages only agency in the strict sense, that is, the situation where the agent acts merely on behalf of the person he represents. Moreover, at no point does that judgment exclude an agency contract from being classified as a provision of services. As soon as the agent also acts as a service provider it is, as such, subject to Article 49 EC.

64. Reserving the right to enter into agency contracts for project contracting to certain public-law legal persons under Article 4 of Law No 85-704 constitutes a restriction on freedom to provide services. Although the provision in question does not make express reference to the nationality of authorised service providers, it is, in fact, practically impossible for an undertaking from another Member State to obtain the legal status of a legal person governed by French public law. (44)

65. Furthermore, even if it were possible for a foreign undertaking to belong to one of the categories of legal persons cited in Article 4 of the Law in question, to require a foreign undertaking to change its legal status in order to be able to provide the services in question would be contrary to the principle of freedom to provide services. As Advocate General Lenz made clear in point 22 of his Opinion in Commission v Italy , (45) [e]ntrepreneurial freedom, which Article 59 is specifically intended to protect, implies that such a step should not be necessary.'

66. In short, Article 4 of Law No 85-704 constitutes a restriction on freedom to provide services in that it has the effect of reserving to service providers of French nationality the contracts relating to the services listed in Article 3 of that law.

67. Since the fact that Law No 85-704 is inconsistent with Article 49 EC is established, it is necessary to consider whether the first paragraph of Article 45 EC applies, which provides that [t]he provisions of this Chapter shall not apply, so far as any given Member State is concerned, to activities which in that State are connected, even occasionally, with the exercise of official authority.' The Commission considers the application of that exception, and then rejects it. Having pointed out that that exception must be interpreted strictly as applying to activities... which in themselves involve a direct and specific connection with the exercise of official authority,' (46) the Commission states that the tasks entrusted to the agent are essentially technical in nature, which does not correspond to that definition.

68. As regards the activities in which the agent represents the contracting authority, such as the signing of the project management and works contracts, and the remuneration of contractors and service providers, the Commission also considers that Article 45 EC is inapplicable. The signing of the contracts is subject to the contracting authority's agreement, so that, according to the Commission, it cannot be considered that there is actually any delegation of official authority to the agent. Nor does paying remuneration to the contractors and service providers constitute the exercise of official authority by the agent, since the finances are provided by the contracting authority.

69. As demonstrated above, the agent does not take part in any exercise of official authority, whether the tasks entrusted to him are those of assistance or representation. Therefore, the exception provided for in Article 45 EC does not apply to it. (47)

70. Nor does the exception laid down in Article 46 EC apply, since the French Republic has not put forward any justification relating to public policy, public security or public health.

IV - Conclusion

71. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court declare that the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, and in particular Articles 8 and 9 thereof, and under Article 49 EC, by reserving, in Article 4 of Law No 85-704 of 12 July 1985 on public project contracting and its relationship to private project management, as amended by Law No 91-662 of 13 July 1991 and Law No 96-987 of 14 July 1996, the task of delegated project contracting to an exhaustive list of legal persons under French law.

Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 corordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84).

(8) - Eighth recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50.

(9) - Article 1 of Law No 85-704: the contracting authorities are (1) The State or its public undertakings; (2) Local authorities, their public undertakings, public undertakings for new town planning created under Article L. 3211 of the Code de l'urbanisme (Town Planning Code), groups thereof and associations of different types of public undertaking, referred to in Article L. 166-1 of the Code des communes (Municipal Code); (3) The private bodies mentioned in Article L. 64 of the Code de la sécurité sociale (Social Security Code), and consortia and federations thereof; (4) The private bodies for lowrent housing, mentioned in Article L. 4112 of the Code de la construction et de l'habitation (Building and Housing Code), and public/private partnership companies, for rented accommodation subsidised by the State and provided by such bodies and companies.'

(10) - This stemmed from Article 3(7) of the Code des marchés publics, enacted by Decree No 2001-210 of 7 March 2001 on the Code des marchés publics (JORF of 8 March 2001, p. 3700). On that subject, see Richer, L, Le contrat de mandat au risque du droit administratif, CJEG 1999, p. 127. It should be noted that this provision was annulled by a decision of the Conseil d'Etat (France) of 8 March 2003. The Code des marchés publics enacted by Decree No 2004-15 of 7 January 2004 (JORF of 8 January 2004, p. 703) takes into account that annulment: from then on, agency contracts are subject to the Code.

(11) - Article 4, last paragraph, of Law No 85-704.

(12) - Case C-399/98 Ordine degli Architetti and Others [2001] ECR I-5409.

(13) - Case No 233372, Union nationale des services publics et industriels et commerciaux and Others.

(14) - See, in that regard, Case 3/88 Commission v Italy [1989] ECR 4035.

(15) - Note that different types of contracts for the delegation of public service which exist under French law may be treated as concessions under Community law. The term concession is wider under Community law than in French law.

(16) - Article 3 of Directive 93/37 (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), most recently amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EEC of 13 September 2001 amending Annex IV to Council Directive 93/36/EEC, Annexes IV, V and VI to Council Directive 93/37/EEC, Annexes III and IV to Council Directive 92/50/EEC, as amended by Directive 97/52/EC, and Annexes XII to XV, XVII and XVIII to Council Directive 93/38/EEC, as amended by Directive 98/4/EC (Directive on the use of standard forms in the publication of public contract notices) (OJ 2001 L 285, p. 1).

(18) - OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114. Indeed, Article 17 of this directive states that this Directive shall not apply to service concessions'.

(19) - Article 1(d) of Directive 93/37 defines a public works concession as a contract of the same type as that indicated in (a) [that is, public works contracts] except for the fact that the consideration for the works to be carried out consists either solely in the right to exploit the construction or in this right together with payment'.

(20) - OJ 2000 C 121, p. 2.

(21) - Case cited above. Advocate General La Pergola had analysed the situation differently:

[t]o sum up, I consider that there is no third party element, that is to say no essential distinction between ARA and the two municipalities, in the present case. What is involved here is a form of inter-departmental delegation that remains within the administrative ambit of the municipalities. In assigning the activities in question to ARA, the municipalities had absolutely no intention of privatising the functions they themselves had previously performed in this sector. In short, I take the view that the relationship between the municipalities and ARA cannot be regarded as a contract within the meaning of the Directive' (point 38 of the Opinion).

(26) - For example defining the administrative and technical terms according to which the the project will be worked up and executed, or the management of contracts for project management or works.

(27) - Note that the agent, on the other hand, cannot oppose a decision taken by the contracting authority.

(31) - Article 4, last subparagraph, Law No 85-704.

(32) - Of course, a different conclusion would be reached if the landowner applying for a building permit were not subject to the obligations of the Directive for contracts he makes with contractors, because then the Directive would not apply at all, even where the buildings to be constructed are public works' within the meaning of the Directive.

(33) - See, in particular, the 20th recital in the preamble to the Directive.

(34) - OJ, English Special Edition 1971(II), p. 682.

(35) - Case C-243/89 Commission v Denmark [1993] ECR I3353, paragraph 33. See also point 18 of the Opinion of Advocate General Tesauro in that case: [o]n that point, it is hardly necessary to point out that, where a public contract falls to be awarded, it is precisely because the procedure is a competition that it must be ensured that all those who take part have an equal chance: otherwise, it would no longer be a public tendering procedure but private bargaining. In sum, equal treatment underlies any set of rules governing procedures for the award of public contracts since it is the very essence of such procedures'.

(40) - In this regard, it should be noted that, under Article 2(2) of the French Code des marchés publics, as adopted by Decree No 2004-15, contracts made under an agency agreement granted by one of the public entities referred to in 10 of this Article' are subject to the provisions of that code.

Notice for the OJ

Action brought on 17 June 2003 by the Commission of the European Communities against the French Republic

Case C-264/03

An action against the French Republic was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 17 June 2003 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by B. Stromsky, K. Wiedner and F. Simonetti, acting as Agents, with an address for service in Luxembourg.

The Commission of the European Communities claims that the Court should:

1.declare that, by reserving, in Article 4 of the Law of 12 July 1985, delegated management contracts to an exhaustive list of legal entities governed by French law, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50/EEC,[1] and in particular Articles 8 and 9 thereof, and under Article 49 of the Treaty establishing the European Community;

2.order the French Republic to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments:

Reserving delegated management contracts to certain legal entities governed by French law constitutes a breach of Directive 92/50/EEC and a restriction on the principle of the freedom to provide services laid down in Article 49 of the Treaty which is not justified under the exception provided for in Article 45 of the Treaty.

The management contract is a public service contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50. Moreover, management contracts fall within Category No 12 of Annex IA, apart from contracts exclusively or principally concerning representative tasks, so that the French legislation fails to comply with Article 8 of the Directive. Management contracts which relate exclusively or principally to representative tasks come under Annex IB of the Directive, so that the French legislation fails to comply with Article 9 of the Directive as well.

Secondly, reserving delegated management contracts solely to the legal entities listed in Article 4 of the Law of 12 July 1985 on the supervision of public work and its relation with the supervision of private work, as amended, constitutes a restriction on the principle of the freedom to provide services. Such a restriction cannot be justified either by Article 45, inasmuch as the tasks entrusted are not connected, even occasionally, with the exercise of official authority, or by Article 46, since grounds of public policy, public security or public health are not applicable in the present case.

Freedom to provide services - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Award of contracts - Criteria - Conditions of admissibility - Specific case

(Art. 49 EC)

Article 49 EC precludes a contracting authority from providing, in the tendering specifications for a public contract for health services of home respiratory treatments and other assisted breathing techniques, first, for an admission condition which requires an undertaking submitting a tender to have, at the time the tender is submitted, an office open to the public in the capital of the province where the service is to be supplied and, second, for evaluation criteria which reward, by awarding extra points, the existence at the time the tender is submitted of oxygen production, conditioning and bottling plants situated within 1 000 kilometres of that province or offices open to the public in other specified towns in that province, and which, in the case of a tie between a number of tenders, favours the undertaking which was previously providing the service concerned, in so far as those criteria are applied in a discriminatory manner, are not justified by imperative requirements in the general interest, are not suitable for securing the attainment of the objective which they pursue or go beyond what is necessary to attain it, which is a matter for the national court to determine.

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 49 EC precludes a contracting authority from providing, in the tendering specifications for a public contract for health services of home respiratory treatments and other assisted breathing techniques, first, for an admission condition which requires an undertaking submitting a tender to have, at the time the tender is submitted, an office open to the public in the capital of the province where the service is to be supplied and, second, for evaluation criteria which reward, by awarding extra points, the existence at the time the tender is submitted of oxygen production, conditioning and bottling plants situated within 1 000 kilometres of that province or offices open to the public in other specified towns in that province, and which, in the case of a tie between a number of tenders, favours the undertaking which was previously providing the service concerned, in so far as those criteria are applied in a discriminatory manner, are not justified by imperative requirements in the general interest, are not suitable for securing the attainment of the objective which they pursue or go beyond what is necessary to attain it, which is a matter for the national court to determine.

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 12 EC, 43 EC et seq., 49 EC et seq. and Article 3(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

2. The reference was made in the course of proceedings between Contse SA (Contse'), Vivisol Srl and Oxigen Salud SA (all three forming a temporary consortium owning oxygen-producing factories in Italy and Belgium), and the Instituto Nacional de la Salud (the National Health Institute, Insalud'). The applicants brought an action in respect of, first, two calls for tenders issued by Insalud for services of home respiratory treatments and other assisted breathing techniques in the provinces of Caceres and Badajoz and, second, the decision of the Presidencia Ejecutiva (Executive Board) of Insalud of 10 July 2000 dismissing the complaints made against those calls for tenders.

Legal background

3. Article 12 EC provides that, within the scope of application of the EC Treaty, and without prejudice to any special provisions contained therein, any discrimination on grounds of nationality is to be prohibited.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

4. Articles 43 EC and 49 EC enshrine freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services respectively. Those provisions are a specific expression of the principle of non-discrimination.

5. Directive 92/50 also contains an expression of that principle in Article 3(2) stating that the contracting authorities are to ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.

The facts and the dispute in the main proceedings

6. By two decisions of 24 May 2000, Insalud issued calls for tenders for the supply of services of home respiratory treatments and other assisted breathing techniques in the provinces of Caceres and Badajoz (the contested calls for tenders').

7. The tendering specifications, the specific administrative clauses and the technical specifications of those two calls for tenders lay down the admission conditions and the evaluation criteria.

8. The admission conditions, which are not subject to any evaluation, must necessarily be fulfilled at the time the tender is submitted.

9. In that connection, it is stipulated that the tenderer must have at least one office open to the public for a minimum of eight hours a day, morning and afternoon, five days a week, in the provincial capital concerned (the admission condition').

10. It is clear from the file that the evaluation criteria concern a number of economic and technical characteristics for which points are awarded. In this case, out of a maximum of 140 points which may be awarded, 40 relate to the financial aspect of the tender and 100 concern its technical evaluation criteria.

11. In addition to the submission of a quality certificate (for which 20 points are awarded) the technical specifications are set out in various sections: equipment (35 points), supply of services (35 points), information for the patient (5 points), and service inspection report (5 points).

12. Under the section equipment', in the part relating to the provision of oxygen by pressurised gas cylinder, it is stipulated that a maximum of 4.6 points, defined according to the total annual production, is to be awarded if at the time the tenders are submitted the tenderer owns at least two oxygen-producing factories situated within 1 000 kilometres of the province concerned. Half a point is also awarded if, at the time the tenders are submitted, the tenderer owns at least one cylinder-conditioning plant and at least one oxygen-bottling plant situated, in both cases, within 1 000 kilometres of the province concerned.

13. Under the section supply of services', the existence, at the time the tenders are submitted, of offices open to the public for a minimum of eight hours per day, morning and afternoon, five days a week, in certain towns in the province concerned may lead to the award of a maximum of 0.9 extra points (0.3 for each of the three towns mentioned in the contested calls for tenders).

14. The contract is awarded to the undertaking which submits the tender gaining the highest number of points. In the case of a tie, the tender with the best technical evaluation will be successful. If the position is still tied the undertaking which has previously provided that service will be successful.

15. The appellants in the main proceedings lodged complaints against the contested calls for tenders, which were dismissed on 10 July 2000 by decision of Insalud's Presidencia Ejecutiva.

16. Subsequently, the appellants in the main proceedings brought an action against that decision and the contested calls for tenders before the Juzgado Central de lo Contencioso-Administrativo Madrid (Central Court for Contentious Administrative Proceedings, Madrid) which dismissed that action on 20 September 2001. An appeal was brought before the referring court.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

17. The appellants in the main proceedings, first, submit that a number of elements in the contested calls for tender, set out in paragraphs 8 to 14 of this judgment (the disputed elements'), infringe Articles 12 EC, 43 EC and 49 EC and Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50, and, second, requested the referring court to make a reference to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling on this matter.

18. Insalud contends that the disputed elements in the contested calls for tender are lawful in that the fact that the service concerned is a health service and the particularly vulnerable category of patients who rely on it compel the competent authorities not only to ensure the supply of services at all times, but also to take account of and evaluate the circumstances likely to reduce the risks inherent in all human activity, by favouring the tender which minimises those risks.

19. In those circumstances the Audiencia Nacional decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

Is it contrary to Articles 12 EC, 43 EC et seq. and 49 EC et seq., and Article 3(2) of [Directive 92/50] to include in the tendering specifications, special administrative clauses and technical specifications governing calls for tender relating to services of home respiratory treatments and other assisted breathing techniques

(1) admission conditions requiring undertakings which wish to submit a tender already to have offices open to the public in the province or the capital of the province in which the service is to be provided; and

(2) award criteria which [favour tenders submitted by undertakings:

(a) which have their own oxygen production, conditioning and bottling plants situated within a radius of 1 000 kilometres of the capital of the province where the service is to be provided],

(b) which already have offices open to the public in certain towns in that province or

(c) which have been providing the service previously?'

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

20. By its question the national court asks essentially whether Articles 12 EC, 43 EC and 49 EC and Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50 preclude a contracting authority from laying down, in the tendering specifications for a public contract for the provision of health services of home respiratory treatments and other assisted breathing techniques, first, an admission condition which requires the tenderer at the time the tender is submitted to have an office open to the public in the capital of the province where the service is to be provided and, second, evaluation criteria for the tenders which take account, by awarding extra points, of the existence at that time of oxygen producing, conditioning and bottling plants situated within 1 000 kilometres of that province or of offices open to the public in other specified towns in that province and which, in the event that there is a tie on points between a number of tenders, favour the undertaking which was previously providing the service in question.

21. The appellants in the main proceedings, the Commission of the European Communities and the Austrian Government suggest that the answer to that question should be in the affirmative. Insalud and the Spanish Government support the contrary argument.

22. As a preliminary point, it should be observed that the case in the main proceedings, contrary to the Spanish Government's submissions, appears to concern a public service contract and not a management contract for a service categorised as a concession. As Insalud stated at the hearing, the Spanish administration remains liable for all harm suffered on account of a failure of the service. That factor, which implies that there is no transfer of risks connected to the provision of the service concerned, and the fact that the service is paid for by the Spanish health administration, support that conclusion. It is, however, for the national court to determine whether in fact that is the case.

23. In any event, since the questions from the national court are based on the fundamental rules laid down by the Treaty, the following considerations will be helpful to it even if this contract is a public service concession not covered by Directive 92/50. It is in the light of primary law and, in particular, of the fundamental freedoms provided for by the Treaty that the consequences in Community law of the award of such concessions must be examined (see, in particular, Case C-231/03 Coname [2005] ECR I-0000, paragraph 16).

24. Those fundamental rules, referred to by the national court, are of two kinds. Article 43 EC et seq. relates to freedom of establishment and Article 49 EC et seq. concerns freedom to provide services.

25. It must be recalled, as all the parties which lodged observations before the Court have done, that, disregarding Article 46 EC, the national measures liable to hinder or make less attractive the exercise of fundamental freedoms guaranteed by the Treaty must, according to settled case-law, fulfil four conditions in order to comply with Article 43 EC and Article 49 EC: they must be applied in a non-discriminatory manner, they must be justified by imperative requirements in the general interest, they must be suitable for securing the attainment of the objective which they pursue, and they must not go beyond what is necessary in order to attain it (see Case C-19/92 Kraus [1993] ECR I-1663, paragraph 32; Case C-55/94 Gebhard [1995] ECR I-4165, paragraph 37; and Case C-243/01 Gambelli and Others [2003] ECR I-13031, paragraphs 64 and 65).

26. Therefore, it is appropriate to examine the disputed elements of the contested calls for tender in order to determine whether those elements are liable to hinder or make less attractive the exercise of the fundamental freedoms guaranteed by the Treaty by undertakings which are not established in Spain.

27. In so far as such elements are not obstacles to the establishment of the undertakings on Spanish territory it must be held, first of all, that no restriction on freedom of establishment exists in this case.

28. Second, it is appropriate to examine whether those elements constitute a restriction on the freedom to provide services.

29. In that regard, it is common ground that Insalud is the main recipient of the services concerned, since the public sector represents 90% of the requests for home respiratory treatments. The Commission rightly states therefore that the admission condition gives rise for undertakings to a series of costs which will be absorbed only if the contract is awarded to them, which has the effect of rendering the submission of a tender clearly less attractive. The same is true for the evaluation criterion, pursuant to which extra points are awarded if an office is already open in the towns listed in the calls for tenders.

30. As regards the evaluation criteria for the oxygen producing, conditioning and bottling plants, it is clear that unless it already owns such plants within a 1 000 kilometres radius, an undertaking could be hindered in submitting a tender.

31. Lastly, the fact that in the final analysis the method of deciding between two tenderers who have the same number of points operates in favour of the undertaking already established on the relevant Spanish market is liable to render the submission of a tender less attractive by any other undertaking on account, in particular, of the considerable homogeneity of the market.

32. It is clear from the file that the Spanish market in gas for medical use is 97% controlled by four multinational undertakings. Moreover, as Contse rightly observed without being contradicted on that point, there cannot be any major differences between the participants as regards the number of points awarded for the techn ical aspects because all the tenderers use similar technical equipment which is produced by only two or three undertakings.

33. Therefore, it must be held that the disputed elements in the contested calls for tender are all liable to hinder or render less attractive the exercise of the freedom to provide services as guaranteed by the Treaty. Therefore, it is appropriate to determine whether each of those disputed elements fulfils the four conditions which are clear from the case-law cited in paragraph 25 of this judgment.

34. As regards the division of jurisdiction between the Community judicature and national courts, it is for the national court to determine whether those conditions are fulfilled in the case pending before it. The Court, when giving a preliminary ruling, may, where appropriate, provide clarification designed to give the national court guidance in its interpretation (see, to that effect, Case C-79/01 Payroll and Others [2002] ECR I-8923, paragraphs 28 and 29). In that connection, and in answer to the questions referred by the national court, it is for that court to take account of the factors stated in the following paragraphs.

The admission condition

35. First of all the national measure must be applied in a non-discriminatory manner.

36. According to the case-law of the Court, the principle of equality, of which Article 49 EC is a specific expression, prohibits not only overt discrimination based on nationality but also all covert forms of discrimination which, by applying other distinguishing elements, lead in fact to the same result (see Case 22/80 Boussac Saint-Frères [1980] ECR 3427, paragraph 9, and Case C-3/88 Commission v Italy [1989] ECR 4035, paragraph 8).

37. Although the admission condition is applicable without distinction to any undertaking intending to respond to the call for tenders in question, it is for the national court to determine whether that condition may in practice be met more easily by Spanish operators than by those established in another Member State. In such a case, that criterion infringes the principle of non-discriminatory application (see, to that effect, Gambelli and Others , paragraph 71).

38. It must, however, be stated that in the absence of restrictions on the freedom of establishment the very fact of having an office open to the public in the capital of the province where the service will be provided would not pose a serious obstacle for foreign operators.

39. Second, the national provision must be justified by imperative requirements in the general interest.

40. In this case it is common ground that the admission condition and the other disputed elements in the contested calls for tender are intended to ensure better protection of the life and health of patients.

41. Third and fourth, the national measure must be suitable for securing the attainment of the objective pursued and must not go beyond what is necessary for attaining it.

42. On that point the Commission and Contse take the view that the condition of having, at the time the tender is submitted, an office open to the public in the capital of the province concerned is irrelevant to the aim identified above of better ensuring the protection of the life and health of patients. Insalud considers, on the contrary, that the existence of such an office serves to achieve that aim.

43. Even assuming that the existence of such an office may be regarded as suitable for ensuring patients' health, it is evident that the requirement to have an office at the time the tender is submitted is clearly disproportionate.

44. The Spanish Government's argument which, by stating that the purpose of a call for tenders is to determine which undertakings already have the means necessary to provide the service in question, places an office open to the public on the same footing as any other equipment necessary for the supply of the service cannot be accepted.

45. In that regard, the Commission rightly considers that such an office is not an essential element for the supply of the service in question. The minimum conditions already require a technical support service to be set up which is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week, which will, by means which are less restrictive of freedom to provide services, lead to the attainment in an initial period of the objective pursued in this case, that is, not to endanger the life or health of patients where there is a problem with the functioning or handling of the equipment.

46. Furthermore, as Contse pointed out, a transitional period during which the undertaking already providing the service in question transfers management of the service to the new contractor is provided, if necessary, in order to ensure that treatment of patients is not interrupted. It is important to note that, in such a case, the contractor is obliged to remunerate the undertaking which continues to provide services according to a formula set out in the specific administrative clauses in the call for tenders. The remuneration increases each month until the third month from the date on which the contract was awarded. If the new contractor has still not assumed responsibility for all the services required, the contract may be terminated.

The evaluation criteria

47. As a preliminary point it must be recalled that, although it is true that Directive 92/50 is evidently applicable to the contested calls for tenders, it is clear that the service concerned in this case features in Annex I B to that directive. Under Article 9 only Articles 14 and 16 apply to such services, together with the general provisions of Title I including Article 3(2), referred to by the national court, and the final provisions in Title VII. Article 14 concerns common rules in the technical field and Article 16 concerns notices of the results of the award procedure.

48. Therefore, and in order to give a useful answer to the national court, it must be stated that the disputed elements in the contested calls for tenders are not, in any event, subject to Chapter 3, entitled Criteria for the award of contracts', in Title VI of Directive 92/50 or the limitations for which it provides.

49. It should also be recalled that the evaluation criteria, like any national measure, must comply with the principle of non-discrimination as derived from the provisions of the Treaty relating to the freedom to provide services, and that restrictions on that freedom must themselves fulfil four conditions which are set out in the case-law cited in paragraph 25 of this judgment.

50. As was stated in paragraph 34 of this judgment, it is for the national court to determine whether those conditions are fulfilled in the case pending before it, taking account of the factors set out in the following paragraphs.

51. As regards, first, the application in a non-discriminatory manner of the criterion by which extra points are awarded if the tenderer has offices open to the public in certain towns in the province where the service will be provided, it appears, as was stated in respect of the admission condition, that that criterion itself is applicable without distinction to any undertaking wishing to submit a tender.

52. Furthermore, as was stated in paragraph 40 of this judgment, it is common ground that the disputed elements in the contested calls for tenders have all been included in order to provide better protection for the life and health of patients. Insalud goes on to explain that those elements are designed, more particularly, to resolve problems with the supply of oxygen and the functioning of equipment and to ensure an adequate supply of the service in question, without undue delay or harm to the patient.

53. Next, it should be determined whether that criterion is suitable for securing the attainment of that objective but does not go beyond that which is necessary to attain it.

54. In that regard, the Commission repeats the argument it put forward in relation to the admission condition, that having those offices available prior to the performance of the contract is unnecessary and disproportionate. Contse accepts that such a criterion, given the purpose of assisting patients, might be consistent with the objective pursued, but takes the view that a simple contractual undertaking to set up such offices in the event that the contract is awarded would have enabled that objective to be attained. Neither Insalud nor the Spanish Government deal specifically with this evaluation criterion.

55. As regards that issue, as was stated in paragraph 43 of this judgment, even assuming that the existence of such offices might be regarded as suitable for protecting patients' health, it is clear that the requirement to have those offices already available at the time the tender is submitted is clearly disproportionate, even more so as the minimum conditions already require, as it was stated in paragraph 45 of this judgment, the setting up of a technical support service.

56. As regards the evaluation criteria relating to the ownership of certain plants for oxygen production, conditioning and bottling, situated within a radius of 1 000 kilometres of the province where the service will be provided, it is important to determine whether, although applicable without distinction to any undertaking, those elements might in fact favour essentially those undertakings already established in Spain.

57. Unlike having an office available, a condition which could by its very nature be fulfilled on many occasions or even each time the award of a contract made it necessary, the existence of production, conditioning or bottling plants belonging to the tenderer requires a much more substantial investment which is not normally repeated. The nature of this criterion means that it would not be easy to satisfy it if such plants are not already in place. The fact that it is not just availability but ownership of the plants in question which is required only reinforces the idea that that criterion is intended, in fact, to favour permanence.

58. Therefore, only undertakings which already own such plants on Spanish territory, or outside Spanish territory but still within a distance of 1 000 kilometres of the province in question, could be awarded the points relating to those elements.

59. Furthermore, although the geographical zone situated within a radius of 1 000 kilometres of the provinces concerned, namely Caceres and Badajoz, includes in addition to Spanish territory all Portuguese territory, it includes only a part of France and excludes almost all the Member States so that plants which, as in this case, are situated in Belgium and Italy would be outside the required radius.

60. As was stated in paragraph 37 of this judgment, if the national court finds that a criterion is in practice more easily fulfilled by Spanish operators than by those established in another Member State, that criterion infringes the principle of non-discriminatory application (see Gambelli and Others , paragraph 71).

61. In any event, although reliability of supplies may be included in the elements to be considered in order to ascertain the most economically advantageous tender in the case of a service such as that in question in the main proceedings, which aims to protect the life and health of persons by providing a suitable and diversified production close to the place of consumption (see, by analogy Case C-324/93 Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith [1995] ECR I-563, paragraph 44), it must be held that those elements do not appear, in this case, to be adapted to the objective pursued in several respects.

62. In the first place, although the Spanish Government rightly observes that any choice of distance or transport time is arbitrary, the fact remains that the criterion of 1 000 kilometres chosen in this case appears to be inappropriate for securing the attainment of the objective in question.

63. First, the Spanish Government does not provide any evidence in support of its argument that the risk of delays, which increases proportionally with the distance to be covered, is lower because of the control that the Spanish authorities could exercise in the event of a problem arising on Spanish territory. That argument cannot be accepted.

64. Second, even assuming that crossing the internal borders of the European Community creates the delays feared by the Spanish Government, the radius of 1 000 kilometres, in that it goes beyond the Spanish borders, is not suitable for attaining the objective pursued.

65. In the second place, the Commission points out that the oxygen produced in the production plants is delivered to compression centres, in order to be compressed into bottles and that in those centres there is an emergency stock of full bottles which is sufficient in the event of damage, technical interruption or emergency to ensure the supply of oxygen for at least 15 days.

66. Therefore, as Contse also states, the proximity of the production plants does not secure the attainment of the objective of reliable supplies. It is for the national court to determine whether the situation is different for oxygen conditioning and bottling plants.

67. The stated practice of the undertakings confirms, moreover, that means exist, which are less restrictive of the freedom to provide services, for attaining the objective pursued of guaranteed availability of gas for medical use close to the place of consumption. As the Commission and Contse point out, that is to give credit, by awarding extra points, to storage depots with a stock of gas intended to cover, where necessary for a stated period, any interruptions or irregularities in transport from production or bottling plants.

68. Lastly, in so far as the Commission and Contse criticise the importance attributed to the ownership of production plants, it must be observed that the contracting authorities are free not only to choose the elements for awarding the contract but also to determine the weighting of such elements, provided that the weighting enables an overall evaluation to be made of the elements applied in order to identify the most economically advantageous tender (see, to that effect, Case C448/01 EVN and Wienstrom [2003] ECR I-14527, paragraph 39). The same would be true if the service in question came under Annex I B to Directive 92/50, which could be the case for the contracts in question, and, therefore, were covered by a less restrictive scheme for the award of contracts.

69. In the main proceedings the criterion relating to production plants does not concern the supply which is the subject of the contract, namely the supply of home respiratory treatments, or even the amount of gas which will be produced, but the maximum production capacity of the plants owned by the tenderer in so far as extra points are awarded each time one of the three thresholds for total annual production is reached.

70. Therefore the evaluation criteria relating, in this case, to the award of extra points for an ever-increasing production capacity, cannot be regarded as linked to the objective of the contract and even less as suitable for ensuring that it is attained (see, to that effect, EVN and Wienstrom , paragraph 68)

71. Finally, even assuming that those elements were a response to the need to ensure reliability of supplies and, therefore, that they were linked to the objective pursued in the contested calls for tenders and suitable for attaining it, the capacity of tenderers to provide the largest possible amount of the product cannot legitimately be given the status of an award criterion (see, to that effect, EVN and Wienstrom , paragraph 70).

72. In that regard, it must be recalled that the contested calls for tender provide, as conditions for the submission of a tender, that the tenderer should have more than one source of production and bottling and be able to produce at least 400 000 m3 per year, in connection with the call for tenders relating to the province of Caceres, and 550 000 m3 per year in connection with that relating to the province of Badajoz. It is clear from the file that those quantities represent approximately 75% and 80% respectively of the consumption planned for the first year of the contract concerned.

73. Furthermore, it must be observed that the first of the three thresholds provided for in the contested calls for tenders, that is a total annual production, for each of the contracts, of at least 800 000 m3 and 1 000 000 m3 respectively, in respect of which extra production confers in both cases 1.3 points, corresponds to a volume exceeding the total consumption anticipated for the fourth and final year of the contract concerned. Therefore, a total annual production capacity of such a level could, in some circumstances, be regarded as being necessary to the objective, recalled in paragraph 71 of this judgment, of ensuring reliability of supplies.

74. However, the evaluation criteria under consideration go beyond what is necessary. 1.3 points are still awarded where total annual production exceeds a threshold of at least 1 200 000 m3 and 1 500 000 m3 respectively and 2 extra points if that production is at least 1 600 000 m3 and 2 000 000 m3 respectively.

75. It should be noted that those figures, which correspond to the third total annual production threshold, represent each time twice the figure for the first threshold, set out in paragraph 73 of this judgment.

76. It follows that, in so far as the maximum number of points is allocated to tenderers with a production capacity which largely exceeds the consumption expected in the context of the contested calls for tenders, while the first threshold already appears suitable for ensuring, as far as possible, a reliable supply of gas, the evaluation criteria used in the case, as regards the award of extra points where the second and third total annual production thresholds are exceeded, are not compatible with the requirements of the relevant Community law (see, by analogy, EVN and Wienstrom , paragraph 71).

77. Finally, as regards the manner of deciding between two tenderers with the same number of points, the award criterion used applies not only where there is an overall tie, but also where there is a tie in respect of technical aspects between two tenders with the same number of points, and favours the undertaking which was already supplying the service.

78. The conditions to be fulfilled, set out above, are also applicable to such a criterion. Deciding automatically and definitively in favour of the operator already present on the market concerned is discriminatory.

79. It follows from all the foregoing considerations that Article 49 EC precludes a contracting authority from providing in the tendering specifications for a public contract for health services of home respiratory treatment and other assisted breathing techniques, first, for an admission condition which requires an undertaking submitting a tender to have, at the time the tender is submitted, an office open to the public in the capital of the province where the service is to be supplied and, second, for evaluation criteria which reward, by awarding extra points, the existence at the time the tender is submitted of oxygen production, conditioning and bottling plants situated within

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

1 000 kilometres of that province or offices open to the public in other specified towns in that province, and which, in the case of a tie between a number of tenders, favour the undertaking which was already providing the service concerned, in so far as those elements are applied in a discriminatory manner, are not justified by imperative requirements in the general interest, are not suitable for securing the attainment of the objective which they pursue or go beyond what is necessary to attain it, which is a matter for the national court to determine.

Costs

80. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Audiencia Nacional by order of that Court of 16 April 2003 in the case of Contse S.A., Vivisol SRL and Oxigen Salud S.A. against INSALUD (now INGESA)

(Case C-234/03)

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Audiencia Nacional (National High Court) of 16 April 2003, received at the Court Registry on 2 June 2003, for a preliminary ruling in the case of Contse S.A., Vivisol SRL and Oxigen Salud S.A. against INSALUD (now INGESA) on the following questions:

Is it contrary to Articles 12, 43 et seq. and 49 et seq. of the EC Treaty, and Article 3(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC[1] of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, to include in the general specifications and special administrative clauses and technical specifications governing public competitions relating to home respiratory treatments and other assisted breathing techniques: 1) the requirement that, in order to qualify to tender, undertakings must already have offices open to the public in the province or capital of the province in which the service is to be provided; 2) award criteria which favour: a) tenders from undertakings established within a 1 000 Km radius of the capital in which the service is to be provided; b) undertakings which already have offices open to the public in certain towns in that province; or c) undertakings which have been providing the service previously?

of 21 July 2005
Consorzio Aziende Metano (Coname) v Comune di Cingia de' Botti. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia - Italy. Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 81 EC - Concession for the management of a public gas-distribution service. Case C-231/03.

1. Competition - Agreements, decisions and concerted practices - Agreements between undertakings - Concept - Grant by a public authority of a concession to operate a public service - Excluded

(Art. 81 EC)

2. Freedom of movement for persons - Freedom of establishment - Freedom to provide services - Direct award of a concession for the management of a public gasdistribution service - Not permissible in the absence of sufficient transparency

(Arts 43 EC and 49 EC)

1. Article 81 EC, which applies, according to its wording, to agreements between undertakings', does not, in principle, apply to contracts for concessions concluded between municipalities acting in their capacity as public authorities and concessionaires entrusted with responsibility for a public service.

(see para. 12)

2. Articles 43 EC and 49 EC preclude the direct award by a municipality of a concession for the management of the public gas-distribution service to a company in which there is a majority public holding and in the capital of which the municipality in question has a 0.97% holding, if that award does not comply with transparency requirements which, without necessarily implying an obligation to hold an invitation to tender, are, in particular, such as to enable an undertaking located in the territory of a Member State other than that of the municipality in question to have access to appropriate information regarding that concession, so that, if that undertaking had so wished, it would have been in a position to express its interest in obtaining that concession.

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 12 April 2005,

gives the following

Judgment

1. The reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 81 EC.

2. That reference has been made in proceedings between Consorzio Aziende Metano (Coname') and the Comune di Cingia de' Botti (municipality of Cingia de' Botti) concerning the award by the latter to Padania Acque SpA (Padania') of service covering the management, distribution and maintenance of methane gas distribution installations.

Law

3. Under Article 22(3) of Law No 142 of 8 June 1990 on the organisation of local selfgovernment (Legge no 142, recante ordinamento delle autonomie locali) (ordinary supplement to GURI No 135 of 12 June 1990, Law No 142/1990'), a service such as that covering the management, distribution and maintenance of methane gas distribution installations may be provided by the public authority itself, by concession to third parties through recourse to outside undertakings or, in accordance with Article 22(3)(e), by means of companies limited by shares or limitedliability companies with predominantly local public capital, established by, or with the participation of, the body responsible for the public service and, if it is found to be appropriate due to the nature or extent of the territory covered by the service, with the participation of a number of public or private operators'.

The main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

4. Coname had concluded with the Comune di Cingia de' Botti a contract for the award of the service covering the maintenance, operation and monitoring of the methane gas network for the period from 1 January 1999 to 31 December 2000.

5. By letter of 30 December 1999, that municipality informed Coname that, by decision of 21 December 1999, the municipal council had entrusted the service covering the management, distribution and maintenance of the methane gas distribution installations for the period from 1 January 2000 to 31 December 2005 to Padania. The latter company's share capital is predominantly public, held by the province of Cremona and almost all the municipalities of that province. The Comune di Cingia de' Botti holds a 0.97% share in the capital of that company.

6. The service at issue in the main proceedings was entrusted to Padania by direct award pursuant to Article 22(3)(e) of Law No 142/1990.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

7. Coname, which claims that the referring court should, inter alia, annul the decision of 21 December 1999, submits that the award of that service should have been made following an invitation to tender.

8. As it took the view that the outcome of the proceedings before it hinges on the interpretation of certain provisions of the EC Treaty, the Tribunal amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Lombardy Regional Administrative Court) decided to stay those proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

Do Articles 43 [EC], 49 [EC] and 81 EC, in so far as they prohibit, respectively, restrictions on the freedom of establishment of nationals of a Member State in the territory of another Member State and on freedom to provide services within the Community in respect of nationals of Member States, as well as commercial and corporate practices which are liable to prevent, restrict or distort competition within the European Union, preclude provision for the direct award, that is to say without an invitation to tender, of the management of the public gasdistribution service to a company in which a municipality has a holding, whenever that holding is such as to preclude any direct control over the management itself, and must it therefore be declared that, as is the case in these proceedings, where the holding amounts to 0.97%, the essential preconditions for in-house management are not met?'

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

9. It must be observed at the outset that the case in the main proceedings appears to relate, as follows from the reply given by the referring court to a request for clarification made by the Court under Article 104(5) of its Rules of Procedure, to a service described as a concession, which does not fall within the scope of either Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) or Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84) (see, to that effect, Case C-324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I-10745, paragraph 56, and the order in Case C358/00 Buchhändler-Vereinigung [2002] ECR I-4685, paragraph 28).

10. The present judgment is therefore based on the premiss that the main proceedings concern the award of a concession, a premiss which it is for the referring court to verify.

11. That having been made clear, the referring court seeks, by its question, an interpretation of Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 81 EC.

Article 81 EC

12. It must be recalled that Article 81 EC, which applies, according to its wording, to agreements between undertakings', does not, in principle, apply to contracts for concessions concluded between municipalities acting in their capacity as public authorities and concessionaires entrusted with responsibility for a public service (see, to that effect, Case 30/87 Bodson [1988] ECR 2479, paragraph 18).

13. Consequently, as the Finnish Government and the Commission rightly point out, that provision does not apply to the case in the main proceedings, as it is described in the order for reference.

14. There is therefore no need to answer the question in that regard.

Articles 43 EC and 49 EC

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

15. By its question, the referring court seeks, in essence, to ascertain whether Articles 43 EC and 49 EC preclude the direct award, that is to say without an invitation to tender, by a municipality of a concession for the management of the public gas-distribution service to a company with predominantly public capital in which that municipality holds a 0.97% share.

16. It must be remembered that the award of such a concession is not governed by any of the directives by which the Community legislature has regulated the field of public contracts. In the absence of any such legislation, the consequences in Community law of the award of such concessions must be examined in the light of primary law and, in particular, of the fundamental freedoms provided for by the Treaty.

17. In that regard, it must be pointed out that, in so far as the concession in question may also be of interest to an undertaking located in a Member State other than the Member State of the Comune di Cingia de' Botti, the award, in the absence of any transparency, of that concession to an undertaking located in the latter Member State amounts to a difference in treatment to the detriment of the undertaking located in the other Member State (see, to that effect, Telaustria and Telefonadress , paragraph 61).

18. In the absence of any transparency, the latter undertaking has no real opportunity of expressing its interest in obtaining that concession.

19. Unless it is justified by objective circumstances, such a difference in treatment, which, by excluding all undertakings located in another Member State, operates mainly to the detriment of the latter undertakings, amounts to indirect discrimination on the basis of nationality, prohibited under Articles 43 EC and 49 EC (see in particular, to that effect, Case C-111/91 Commission v Luxembourg [1993] ECR I-817, paragraph 17, Case C-337/97 Meeusen [1999] ECR I-3289, paragraph 27, and Case C294/97 Eurowings Luftverkehr [1999] ECR I-7447, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited).

20. With regard to the case in the main proceedings, it is not apparent from the file that, because of special circumstances, such as a very modest economic interest at stake, it could reasonably be maintained that an undertaking located in a Member State other than that of the Comune di Cingia de' Botti would have no interest in the concession at issue and that the effects on the fundamental freedoms concerned should therefore be regarded as too uncertain and indirect to warrant the conclusion that they may have been infringed (see, to that effect, Case C-69/88 Krantz [1990] ECR I-583, paragraph 11; Case C44/98 BASF [1999] ECR I-6269, paragraph 16; and the order in Case C431/01 Mertens [2002] ECR I7073, paragraph 34).

21. In those circumstances, it is for the referring court to satisfy itself that the award of the concession by the Comune di Cingia de' Botti to Padania complies with transparency requirements which, without necessarily implying an obligation to hold an invitation to tender, are, in particular, such as to ensure that an undertaking located in the territory of a Member State other than that of the Italian Republic can have access to appropriate information regarding that concession before it is awarded, so that, if that undertaking had so wished, it would have been in a position to express its interest in obtaining that concession.

22. If that is not the case, it must be concluded that there was a difference in treatment to the detriment of that undertaking.

23. With regard to the objective circumstances that could justify such a difference in treatment, it must be pointed out that the fact that the Comune di Cingia de' Botti has a 0.97% holding in the share capital of Padania does not, by itself, constitute one of those objective circumstances.

24. Even if the need for a municipality to exercise control over a concessionaire managing a public service may constitute an objective circumstance capable of justifying a possible difference in treatment, it must be pointed out that the 0.97% holding is so small as to preclude any such control, as the referring court itself observes.

25. At the hearing, the Italian Government submitted, in essence, that, in contrast to some large Italian cities, most municipalities lack the resources to provide, through in-house structures, public services such as that of gas distribution within their territory, and are therefore obliged to resort to structures, such as that of Padania, in the share capital of which several municipalities have holdings.

26. In that regard, it must be held that a structure such as that of Padania may not be treated in the same way as a structure through which a municipality or a city manages, on an inhouse basis, a public service. As is apparent from the file, Padania is a company open, at least in part, to private capital, which precludes it from being regarded as a structure for the in-house' management of a public service on behalf of the municipalities which form part of it.

27. The Court has not been made aware of any other objective circumstance capable of justifying any difference in treatment.

28. In those circumstances, the answer to the question referred must be that Articles 43 EC and 49 EC preclude, in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings, the direct award by a municipality of a concession for the management of the public gasdistribution service to a company in which there is a majority public holding and in which the municipality in question has a 0.97% holding, if that award does not comply with transparency requirements which, without necessarily implying an obligation to hold an invitation to tender, are, in particular, such as to enable an undertaking located in the territory of a Member State other than that of the municipality in question to have access to appropriate information regarding that concession, so that, if that undertaking had so wished, it would have been in a position to express its interest in obtaining that concession.

Costs

29. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby rules:

Articles 43 EC and 49 EC preclude, in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings, the direct award by a municipality of a concession for the management of the public gasdistribution service to a company in which there is a majority public holding and in the capital of which the municipality in question has a 0.97% holding, if that award does not comply with transparency requirements which, without necessarily implying an obligation to hold an invitation to tender, are, in particular, such as to enable an undertaking located in the territory of a Member State other than that of the municipality in question to have access to appropriate information regarding that concession, so that, if that undertaking had so wished, it would have been in a position to express its interest in obtaining that concession.

Opinion of Advocate General Stix-Hackl delivered on 12 April 2005. Consorzio Aziende Metano (Coname) v Comune di Cingia de' Botti. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia - Italy. Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 81 EC - Concession for the management of a public gas-distribution service. Case C-231/03.

I - Introductory remarks

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the significance of primary law in the area of public procurement. The matter is concerned, in particular, with determining the obligations that are imposed on contracting authorities in pursuance of the fundamental freedoms. These proceedings thus also provide an opportunity to define further the case-law of the Court of Justice, in particular the Telaustria judgment. (2)

II - Relevant legislation

A - Community law

2. In the context of secondary Community law applying to public procurement, the following legislation (hereinafter: the directives'), which has since been superseded by new directives (the legislative package'), must be mentioned:

- from among the classic' directives, Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (3) (hereinafter: Services Directive'), and

- Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (4) (hereinafter: Utilities Directive').

B - National law

3. Article 22(3) of Law No 142 of 8 June 1990 on local self-government (5) permitted municipalities and provinces to perform the local public functions for which they are responsible by one of the methods listed in (a) to (e) of that provision, namely:

(a) by public management, where, owing to the small size or the special features of the relevant function, it is not expedient to set up an institution or an undertaking;

(b) by concessions (concessione') to third parties, where there are technical, economic or social expediency reasons;

(c) by recourse to special undertakings, inter alia for the performance of a number of functions of economic and commercial interest;

(d) by recourse to institutions, for the performance of social functions not having any commercial interest;

(e) by recourse to companies limited by shares or to limited-liability companies with a predominantly public shareholding, which have been set up by or involve the participation of the establishment responsible for providing the public service concerned.

III - Facts, main proceedings and question referred for a preliminary ruling

4. The Consorzio Aziende Metano (hereinafter: Co.Na.Me.') had entered into a contract with the Municipality of Cingia de' Botti for the maintenance, supply and supervision of the methane gas network' for the period from 1 January 1999 to 31 December 2000.

5. By letter of 30 December 1999 the Municipality of Cingia de' Botti notified Co.Na.Me. that, by decision of 21 December 1999, the municipal council had approved the agreement with Padania Acque SpA for the management of the distribution and maintenance of the gas installation'. By that decision, approval was also granted for the draft contract between Padania Acque SpA (hereinafter: Padania') and the Municipality of Cingia de' Botti.

6. Padania, a predominantly state-owned undertaking, was created through the transfer of the former Consorzio per l'acqua potabile (Consortium for drinking water) to the municipalities of the Province of Cremona. Almost all the municipalities of that province have a holding in Padania, including the Municipality of Cingia de' Botti, which holds 0.97% of the share capital, together with the Province of Cremona itself.

7. In view of its nature, that undertaking was entrusted directly with supplying the services in question pursuant to Article 22(3)(e) of Law No 142.

8. Co.Na.Me. brought an action before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Lombardia - Sezione staccata di Brescia (Lombardy Regional Administrative Court - Separate Chamber for Brescia) seeking, in particular, annulment of the municipality's decision. The national court referred the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

Do Articles 43 [EC], 49 [EC] and 81 EC, in so far as they prohibit, respectively, restrictions on the freedom of establishment of nationals of a Member State in the territory of another Member State and on freedom to provide services within the Community in respect of nationals of Member States, as well as commercial and corporate practices which are liable to prevent, restrict or distort competition within the European Union, preclude provision for the direct award, that is to say, without an invitation to tender, of the management of the public gas distribution service to a company in which a municipality has a holding, whenever that holding is such as to preclude any direct control over the management itself, and must it therefore be declared that, as is the case in these proceedings where the holding amounts to 0.97%, the essential preconditions for in-house' management are not met?

IV - Admissibility

9. The reference for a preliminary ruling in this case raises various issues as regards admissibility.

A - Article 81 EC

10. There are doubts concerning the admissibility of the question referred as regards Article 81 EC.

11. As the Court has consistently held, the national court must state the precise reasons which caused it to question itself as to the interpretation of Community law and to consider it necessary to refer questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling. (6) The Court has accordingly held that it is essential that the national court should give at the very least some explanation of the reasons for the choice of the Community provisions of which it requests an interpretation and of the link it establishes between those provisions and the national legislation applicable to the dispute.

12. The Court has further held that it has no jurisdiction to rule on questions referred for a preliminary ruling where it is obvious that the interpretation of Community law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose. (7)

13. In the light of the abovementioned requirements established in the Court's case-law with regard to the admissibility of questions referred for a preliminary ruling, it should be noted that, apart from reproducing the wording of Article 81 EC, the observations on that Treaty provision in the order for reference merely point to the fact that free competition constitutes a general principle of Community law and that any infringement of that principle constitutes a wholly exceptional situation which is permitted only under specific conditions.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

14. On that basis, the order for reference fails, however, to meet the requirements of the case-law cited above as regards the reasons underlying the request for the interpretation of a provision of Community law.

15. According to consistent case-law, moreover, questions referred for a preliminary ruling are admissible only if the order for reference contains sufficient information on the facts of the case in the main proceedings. (8)

16. It is essential in that regard to impose particularly stringent criteria in the context of competition law, which includes Article 81 EC on the prohibition of cartels. (9)

17. As far as Article 81 EC is concerned, the order for reference also fails to meet the requirements as regards the facts. Thus, the order for reference does not contain, in particular, information on the undertakings concerned or on the practices which, in the view of the referring court, fall within the scope of Article 81 EC.

18. As regards Article 81 EC, the order for reference therefore fails to meet the criteria governing the admissibility of the question referred for a preliminary ruling.

B - The fundamental freedoms

19. The question referred raises problems as to admissibility also in relation to the fundamental freedoms cited (Articles 43 EC and 49 EC).

20. The Court had declared a reference for a preliminary ruling from the same Member State, which likewise concerned public procurement, to be inadmissible because, in that case, the undertaking which challenged the legality of the choice made by a municipality had its seat in Italy and did not operate on the Italian market in reliance on freedom of establishment or freedom to provide services. The Court of Justice concluded that the situation did not therefore have any connecting link with one of the situations envisaged by Community law in the area of the free movement of persons and services. If, however, there is a situation in which all the facts are confined to within a single Member State and which does not therefore have any connecting link with one of the situations envisaged by Community law in the area of the freedom of movement for persons and freedom to provide services, the fundamental freedoms do not apply. The Court of Justice came to that conclusion in the RI.SAN. case. (10)

21. However, the Court has also held references for a preliminary ruling to be admissible and has responded to them with indications as to the interpretation and application of primary law, even though the matters at issue likewise concerned purely internal situations. (11) In the context of public procurement, reference in this regard must be made to the Telaustria case, (12) in the main proceedings in which the parties came from the same Member State. The Buchhändler-Vereinigung case, (13) in which the principles developed in Telaustria were applied, must also be cited. Likewise in Buchhändler-Vereinigung , all parties to the proceedings were from the same Member State. The same is true of the ARGE case, in which the Court of Justice none the less answered a question on the interpretation of a fundamental freedom. (14)

22. It must therefore be determined why the Court none the less still ruled on the substance of those three references for a preliminary ruling concerning public procurement, even though the facts of those cases were similar to those in RI.SAN. One possible reason could be that, in the cases of Telaustria and Buchhändler-Vereinigung , the questions themselves specifically addressed the interpretation of directives. In contrast, the question referred in the present proceedings is focused specifically on primary law, in particular on two fundamental freedoms.

23. Consequently it could be inferred that the admissibility of a question referred for a preliminary ruling depends on its specific focus, that is to say whether it concerns primary or secondary law.

24. There are two reasons to suggest, in these proceedings also, that the question referred with regard to the relevant fundamental freedoms is admissible, the first of which deals with procedure and the second with substance.

25. As far as procedure is concerned, it should be borne in mind that in preliminary ruling proceedings the Court of Justice is concerned with providing the referring court with an answer that will be of use to it. In some cases, that even means the Court having to reword the questions referred. In these proceedings, however, the question cannot be reworded because it focuses expressly on the interpretation of primary law, not on that of the directives, as the national court confirmed in its written answer to a question to that effect raised by the Court.

26. The question whether the main proceedings involve a concession or a contract for the purposes of Community law can ultimately be left unanswered. After all, as far as the Court is concerned, questions referred for a preliminary ruling need only give it cause to consider other factors in making an interpretation which may assist the determination of the main proceedings.' (16) Whether or not they are actually applied to the specific facts of the case in the main proceedings should not therefore be relevant.

27. As regards substance, it is essential to caution against dogmatising the approach adopted in the RI.SAN. case. In the specific context of procurement law, which is aimed at opening up national markets, whether or not all the parties in a given award procedure and/or in the subsequent national review procedure come from the same Member State as the contracting authority must not be the decisive factor. (17) That approach could even be construed as an indication that the requisite announcement of the award procedure had not in fact taken place and, therefore, that no foreign undertaking could participate in it. That is the case not only for the procurement directives but also for the fundamental freedoms concerned. Thus, protection must be afforded not only to the undertakings actually participating in an award procedure but also to potential tenderers. Therefore, undertakings from other Member States need only be potentially concerned for there to be a cross-border situation and, thus, for a criterion for the application of the fundamental freedoms to be met.

28. In so far as they concern the fundamental freedoms in Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, those reasons support the admissibility of the question referred.

V - Substance

29. The question referred for a preliminary ruling, in so far as it is admissible, essentially concerns the scope of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, and more specifically the requirements or prohibitions under those provisions in respect of award procedures.

30. It thus relates to an essential part of the principles which the Court has described as fundamental rules of the Treaty, in general, and the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality, in particular.' (18)

A - Preliminary observations on the legislation applicable

31. Even though the question referred for a preliminary ruling refers expressly to the interpretation of specific provisions of primary law, that in itself still does not mean that those provisions are in fact applicable.

32. Rather, their applicability depends on whether the actual award process at issue in the main proceedings meets the relevant requirements for the application of those provisions of primary law.

33. In that regard it is irrelevant that the national court has described the award as a concessione' because that description could be a specific reference to national law, where that term is familiar.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Nevertheless, the national term does not necessarily have to be coterminous with the Community law term. However, even if the national court has in mind the Community concept of concession, that still does not mean that classification of the award as such is actually accurate in the main proceedings.

34. Moreover, even if the requirements essential for the application of secondary law are met, further clarification is necessary to determine the directive under which the facts of this case fall. It should be noted in this regard that the Court is not familiar with all the relevant details of the facts of this case.

35. Since municipalities, as local authorities, are contracting authorities within the meaning of the classic directives on public procurement and the Utilities Directive alike, the purpose of the award should therefore be established. After all, that purpose determines which of the directives applies. (19)

36. Even if it is established that the Utilities Directive - a special directive in relation to the other directives - does not apply, it would still be unclear under which of the classic procurement directives the award falls. The decisive factor in that regard is the object of the award, whether, for instance, it concerns the supply of products, such as the supply of energy, or the provision of services, such as maintenance. If the award is for a mixed contract, that is to say, if it covers both products and services, the directive applicable is determined, in accordance with Article 2 of the Services Directive, by a comparison of the values of each of the component parts of the contract.

37. Although it cannot be inferred from the documents before the Court whether the main action is concerned with a mixed contract of that kind, that does not appear to be inconceivable in the light of the practice pursued in the Member State concerned, as is indeed shown by preliminary ruling proceedings in which the Court has already delivered its ruling. (20)

38. As already shown in RI.SAN. , the Court is unable to verify the accuracy of the referring court's analysis that the award of a public service contract is not at issue in the main proceedings. (21)

39. However, even if a given contract in principle meets all the requirements essential for the application of one of the directives, the actual award process could still be excluded from the scope of the directive in question. Thus, in this case, besides one of the exceptions expressly provided for in the directives, such as in Article 13 of the Utilities Directive, one of the unwritten exceptions established by the Court could also apply, such as the exception established in Teckal (22) and interpreted in the Stadt Halle judgment (23) in respect of quasiinhouse' contracts. If that were the case, primary law would again apply.

40. That would also be a reason for the national court to confine the question referred to the interpretation of primary law.

41. After all, if none of the directives is actually applicable, the fundamental freedoms, which impose on the Member States inter alia obligations of equality of treatment and transparency in relation to operators from other Member States, could be material to a decision in the case at issue.

B - Fundamental freedoms and positive obligations

42. These proceedings, which are concerned with establishing the obligations for the contracting authorities that derive from the fundamental freedoms enshrined in Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, relate to the central issue of whether the fundamental freedoms not only impose prohibitions in the form of restrictions on the actions of Member States but also lay down positive obligations and, if so, of what those obligations are.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

43. Some of the prohibitions deriving from the fundamental freedoms can easily be defined as restrictions; those prohibitions, moreover, have been the subject of countless proceedings before the Court. In the context of public procurement, reference might be had - simply by way of example - to the prohibition deriving from the free movement of goods, under which a contracting authority [is precluded] from including in the contract documents for that contract a clause requiring the use in carrying out the contract of a product of a specified make, without adding the words or equivalent.' (24)

44. However, the circumstances of that case and their treatment by the Court show very clearly that a prohibition against refraining from carrying out a measure, namely against refraining from adding particular words, can also be construed as an obligation to carry out a measure, that is to say to add particular words.

45. Applying that reasoning to the circumstances of the main action forming the basis of these preliminary ruling proceedings, those circumstances can thus be construed from at least two angles. First, it could be examined whether the fundamental freedoms - understood as meaning restrictions - impose a prohibition on contracts awarded directly or by private agreement. Secondly, it could be examined whether some degree of advertising or a particular form of publication is required under the fundamental freedoms. Whether or not a positive obligation is considered to exist therefore depends on whether the reasoning is based on omissions or on measures actively carried out.

46. However, for the purposes of answering the question referred for a preliminary ruling, it proves absolutely vital, for a further reason, to address the issue of positive obligations in the circumstances of this case.

47. Indeed, the circumstances at issue can also be considered from the perspective of defensive rights'. The practices of the contracting authority or entity awarding the concession may also be regarded as an encroachment on a right of a third party, and more specifically as an encroachment on the right of undertakings to participate in an award procedure or to submit a tender. Member States, including the contracting authorities or entities awarding concessions, must ensure observance of that right conferred by Community law.

48. For the sake of completeness it should be observed finally that the circumstances of this case could be assessed on the basis of whether they give rise to an obligation of protection or of guarantee on the part of the local authority concerned. In any event, it is not in dispute that a Member State, of which the municipality concerned in these proceedings is also considered a part, is required to safeguard the fundamental freedoms, in this case, those enjoyed by the undertakings, that is to say, by the potential tenderers.

49. The Court's case-law on mutual recognition is an essential starting point with a view to determining whether the fundamental freedoms contain any positive obligations and, if so, what their content is.

50. The Member States' obligation to set up and apply a particular procedure can, in fact, be inferred from that case-law. The obligation actively to carry out measures is addressed to the legislature, the administrative authorities and the judiciary alike. The requirements deriving from the fundamental freedoms relate in particular to the content of the procedure, for example, the requirement to carry out a specific examination procedure. From a procedural perspective, such examination is defined even further in that its objective and method - proceeding by way of a comparison of certain documents - are specified. In addition, the decisions must be reasoned and capable of being subject to review in judicial proceedings. (25)

51. Those requirements can also be transposed to public procurement law, an area concerned - likewise in this case - with the observance of certain procedural principles. It can therefore be concluded from the existing case-law on mutual recognition that the fundamental freedoms certainly do impose specific procedural obligations on the Member States.

52. A further source of rights under primary law - in addition to the fundamental freedoms - from which procedural requirements can be inferred is Article 10 EC. The first paragraph of that provision contains a clear obligation to take action which is addressed to the Member States (Member States shall take all appropriate measures ...'). That general and entirely fundamental provision at the very least gives rise to the obligation to organise procedures, thus including tendering procedures, in such a way that the Member States meet their substantive obligations under Community law.

53. To the extent to which certain obligations are derived from Community law, and thus from the fundamental freedoms in this case, the Member States, including the municipalities, also have to take relevant measures with regard to contracts or concessions, for instance comply with certain time-limits or proceed with specific publications.

54. Also connected with and developed from Article 10 EC are the Community law principles of equivalence and effectiveness, which impose certain limits as regards the procedural law of the Member States, including the law governing procurement procedure. The rules in question do not simply concern legal protection but actually relate to the phase upstream, that is to say when tendering procedures are carried out. Admittedly, in that respect each case must be analysed by reference to the role of [the] provision [concerned] in the procedure, its progress and its special features'. (26)

55. Those requirements of primary law, which supplement the Member States' obligations deriving from the fundamental freedoms, acquire great significance specifically beyond the scope of the procurement directives.

56. It remains, finally, to mention the general principles of law, from which it is possible likewise to infer rules for national procedural law and which may likewise play a part in the award procedure. That is true in particular of the general principle of equality (principle of equal treatment), which goes beyond the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality.

C - Obligations arising from the fundamental freedoms in the area of public procurement

1. Restricted scope of the fundamental freedoms

57. Even if it is accepted that the fundamental freedoms apply as a rule to contracting authorities and entities awarding concessions, that still certainly does not mean that every award procedure is, on that ground, subject to the fundamental freedoms.

58. Thus it is not inconceivable for a contracting authority or entity awarding a concession to cite, as is their right, one of the numerous grounds which justify the non-application of the fundamental freedoms. Included in that regard, in addition to the grounds expressly laid down in the Treaty, such as public security or public health, (27) are the general interests as defined in the Cassis de Dijon case-law.

59. In one of its communications (28) the Commission also acknowledged that the grounds of justification can in general be applied as regards the award of concessions. Of course, the criteria essential for allowing the justification - the details of which I will not go into here - such as the proportionality of a national measure, must also be met in the context of procurement.

60. In addition to such justification relating to the fundamental freedoms, the derogations expressly provided for in the Treaty also come into play. Those derogations can in themselves apply to the award of concessions, as a result of which the awarding entity is not bound by the requirements of the fundamental freedoms.

61. Of relevance here, in particular, are the provisions concerning various aspects of internal or external security, reference to which was in fact made at the hearing. Article 296(1)(b) EC accordingly permits the Member States to take certain measures considered necessary for the protection of the essential interests of their security. In the area of public procurement, that involves the procurement of specific supplies intended for defence purposes. Although that sector is not exactly suitable for concessions, their inclusion still would not be ruled out on the basis of Community law.

62. Article 297 EC, for its part, permits Member States to take certain measures in specific crisis situations. That provision is likewise applicable in principle to procurement.

63. As is apparent in particular from Article 298 EC, the Member States' powers in applying the two Treaty provisions cited above are not by any means unlimited and are in particular subject to scrutiny by the Commission and the Court of Justice.

64. It remains, finally, to refer to a further provision of primary law which, although not tailored specifically to the fundamental freedoms, can still function as a derogation from them. Article 86(2) EC provides that the rules contained in this Treaty,' thus including the fundamental freedoms, apply in so far as the application of such rules does not obstruct the performance, in law or in fact, of the particular tasks assigned to them [the undertakings].' The provision lays down the further condition that the development of trade must not be affected beyond the degree specified. However, the sole addressees of that provision - in contrast with Article 10 EC, which applies to the Member States - are undertakings, and specifically only those which are entrusted with the operation of particular services or are revenue-producing monopolies. It therefore applies only to those entities awarding concessions which can be designated as undertakings of that kind.

65. As regards these preliminary ruling proceedings, it should therefore be examined whether the entity awarding the concession falls within one of the categories of undertaking covered by that derogation and whether the manner in which the award was made was necessary to enable it to perform its task of general interest in economically acceptable conditions. (29) Indeed, even the Member State concerned may rely on Article 86 EC to justify the grant of rights to an undertaking. (30)

66. To conclude, it is essential to mention the case-law in Teckal (31) and Stadt Halle (32) cited in the course of these proceedings, and the derogation laid down in Article 13 of the Utilities Directive applying to particular contracts awarded to affiliated undertakings.

67. The above case-law and provision allow, subject to very specific conditions, the non-application of the classic directives on public procurement or the Utilities Directive. Awards which come under one of those derogations are not therefore subject to the procurement rules under secondary law. However, primary law, including the fundamental freedoms at issue in these proceedings, then automatically applies.

68. However, neither the case-law cited nor the express provisions of the Utilities Directive result in the non-application of primary law. In fact, neither primary law nor case-law provide a basis for such a broad derogation from Community law. If, therefore, primary law applies to the award at issue in the main proceedings, the issue as to the significance of the case-law cited or of the provisions of the Utilities Directive is no longer relevant because that involves derogations from the application of secondary law.

2. Grading within primary law or a uniform set of rules on procurement?

69. Even if it is established that primary law, such as the fundamental freedoms, is applicable to a specific award, a further step is necessary in order to determine the specific obligations falling to the contracting authority or entity awarding the concession. It is therefore a matter of establishing the procurement rules which may be derived from the fundamental freedoms.

70. It is first of all uncertain in this regard whether the fundamental freedoms establish any set of rules at all, let alone a uniform set of rules, in other words whether the same rules apply to all awards they envisage. That may well be the case at a very generalised level. Accordingly, the contracting authorities and entities awarding concessions, regarded as part of the Member States, are required for instance to observe the principle of non-discrimination and to comply with certain restrictions on freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services.

71. The very fact that rules even approximately as specific as those defined in the directives cannot be inferred from the fundamental freedoms militates against the argument that the same procedural rules, such as those concerning the method of publication and its content, are to apply to all awards.

72. In the interest of legal clarity and legal certainty, it would be advantageous to the contracting authorities, entities awarding concessions and undertakings as potential tenderers if there was a set of rules on procurement under primary law or indeed a few such sets of rules: then, it would be possible, for example, to avoid the problems that occasionally arise in practice as a result of the fact that, in the course of a procedure for the award of a concession, it is not until the negotiation stage that the award in question becomes a public contract. (33)

73. On the other hand, it is favourable for the parties to enjoy a margin of discretion in award procedures. The directives themselves thus provide for a number of options. The same must also be true a fortiori within the scope of primary law.

74. The problem now lies in determining categories of awards to which a particular set of rules applies in each case. However, criteria for distinguishing between different groups (categories) of awards cannot be deduced either from the wording of the Treaty or from the case-law on the fundamental freedoms, in particular the case-law relating to public procurement. The principle of proportionality itself suggests, however, that grading is necessary.

75. Admittedly, it would be conceivable to have recourse, also in this context, to the derogations established in the case-law in Teckal and Stadt Halle and under Article 13 of the Utilities Directive so that awards which they envisage are subject to a less stringent set of rules. However, the fact that there are absolutely no uniform rules on procurement under primary law from which a derogation could be made precludes application mutatis mutandis of the above derogations as a classification criterion.

76. It would therefore be appropriate to have recourse to criteria established by the directives themselves for the purpose of defining categories of awards.

77. The estimated value of the contract awarded is an essential criterion in that regard. (34) A further element for consideration is the subject-matter of the contract, that is to say whether it is for services, supplies or construction works. A distinction could be made between services, again as the directives do between excluded, non-priority and priority services, on the basis of their more detailed subject-matter. Furthermore, assessment should be based on the degree of complexity of the contract in question, that is to say, whether it involves relatively standardised products or complex infrastructure-related projects the technical, legal or financial conditions governing which cannot by any means be specified at the start of the award procedure.

78. The categorisation in the directives is based on the idea, applicable to procurement generally, that some awards are of greater relevance to the internal market than others, that is to say they are of interest to a wider group of economic operators - to be more precise, also to undertakings from other Member States. This could be a matter relevant particularly to application of the fundamental freedoms, given that they require a cross-border element.

79. Furthermore, for the purpose of distinguishing between the various categories, that is to say, attributing a particular award to a particular category and, therefore, also to a particular set of rules, specific circumstances, such as the existence of exclusive rights or urgency, could be taken into account, just as they are in the directives. Some awards which fall within the scope of the fundamental freedoms could in that way be exempted in full from the obligation to publish a contract notice.

80. However, in the extreme, a system applying to all awards - and consisting of a number of categories, for each of which there is a specific set of rules - would ultimately give rise to a complex set of procurement rules under primary law modelled on the rules laid down in the directives, or, more specifically, to a number of sets of rules. However, the transparency mentioned in these preliminary ruling proceedings constitutes just one regulatory area among many.

81. Lastly, reference must be made to the principle of effectiveness which is also applicable to award procedures. Under that principle, the procedure actually adopted, viewed as a whole, its progress and its special features must be taken into consideration. (35)

3. Rules applicable under primary law

82. To begin with, it can be established that the rules on procurement that apply within the scope of the directives cannot in any event apply under primary law. Two reasons above all militate against such wholesale transposition.

83. First, the rules laid down solely in respect of the awards envisaged by the directives would in that case effectively apply, without any recourse to the legislative procedure provided for in primary law, even beyond the scope of those directives. In that way, the Community legislative procedure would be circumvented. Secondly, those directives, which lay down rules exclusively for specific awards, would be circumvented.

84. However, it should be borne in mind, first of all, that the rules deriving from the fundamental freedoms apply, in principle, to all aspects of awards, that is to say, on the one hand, to their substance, which includes the description of the object of the service to be provided (for instance, by means of technical specifications or duration of a concession) as well as criteria for qualitative selection (qualifications primarily) and for the award of the contract, in which respect the principle of mutual recognition in particular must be observed. On the other hand, those rules also apply to the procedural aspect, thus to the procedure in the strict sense, which includes the choice of type of procedure - which also covers the publication of a contract notice - and the time-limits involved (for example, for receipt of the request to participate or of the tender).

85. In addition to the obligation of transparency at issue in these proceedings, the associated obligation of equality of treatment, (36) the principle of competition and the principle of proportionality can also be cited as rules that would also be applicable within the scope of primary law.

86. It can be inferred from the obligation of equality of treatment, for example, that concessionaires must be selected objectively. That also means that the requirements stipulated at the outset of the award procedure must be met and must be applied in the same manner to all candidates.

87. Since, however, these proceedings for a preliminary ruling are concerned exclusively with the issue of the transparency requirement, the following observations will be confined to that consideration.

a) Transparency

88. First it should be made clear that transparency, for the purposes of the directives, covers more than simply the matters connected with advertising particular award procedures. Such advertising comprises inter alia the various types of notice, whether in the form of an invitation to participate in an award procedure or a call for tenders, that is to say, an invitation to submit tenders.

89. The directives, moreover, acknowledge other obligations to publish, such as the obligation to announce the award that has been made. Furthermore, the directives impose obligations to compile internal records, for instance, in the form of written reports or by keeping particular documentation. (37) Those obligations could also be transposed to primary law.

90. In fact, the principle of transparency is, moreover, a guiding principle for the award procedure as a whole. It also comprises, for example, the demonstrability of decisions taken by contracting authorities and, generally, an objective approach during an award procedure.

91. In these proceedings the Court is requested to define further its case-law on the obligation to publish. In Telaustria it held, as a matter of principle, that the contracting authority must ensure, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the services market to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed.' (38)

92. In order to determine the degree of advertising' required, recourse must in the first instance be had to the objective of the transparency requirement of which an interpretation is sought. Indeed, as in the case of the directives, transparency is designed - also within the scope of primary law - to guarantee undistorted competition and contribute to the opening up of national markets.

93. The degree of advertising' necessary for an award relates primarily to the question whether there has to be any publication at all. Thus, cases in which a contract may be awarded by private agreement, that is to say by way of an award made without prior publication of a contract notice, cannot be ruled out. After all, whatever the directives allow must be permissible a fortiori under primary law. To avoid any blurring of the distinction between directives and primary law, it would be excessive to permit award procedures to go ahead without the publication of a contract notice only if the conditions specified in the directives are met, that is to say on the grounds exhaustively listed therein. It would also be excessive to make the validity of such procedures dependent on the requirement that all potential tenderers should be contacted. If the contracting authority or entity awarding a concession nevertheless proceeded to do that, the transparency requirement would in any case be met. (39)

94. Of course, contracting authorities or entities awarding concessions must, conversely, be prevented from abusing the discretion conferred on them. It could therefore be assumed that primary law imposes a principle of mandatory publication, which comprises various options for applying derogations. The contracting authority or entity awarding the concession would, accordingly, have to state the reasons, in the specific case, for its derogation from the publication rule.

95. However, even if the principle of mandatory publication is accepted, a number of issues are still unresolved.

96. For example, there is still the issue of the means of publication. This, on the one hand, involves geographical coverage, that is to say whether publication takes place at local, regional, national or European level. On the other hand, it relates to the actual publishing medium. Thus, in addition to the traditional print media such as official journals, the daily press or publications from the relevant economic sector, electronic forums such as the internet are also envisaged. In some circumstances recourse may even be had to the antiquated method of posting appropriate notices. (40)

97. However, the method of publication is just one aspect. In addition, it is important for the contracting authority or entity awarding the concession to know what restrictions are imposed on it by the fundamental freedoms as regards the minimum content of the notice. Generally, the rule of thumb here is that it is essential to give as much information as the undertakings need to enable them to decide whether to participate in the award procedure or to submit a tender. However, it is by no means possible to deduce from the fundamental freedoms sufficient details, applying to all circumstances, which can then be used in their entirety to produce model contract notices, as provided for in the directives. The general rule, which applies also to the minimum content of a contract notice, is, therefore, that the fundamental freedoms do not in all circumstances require the entity concerned to provide the information which is mandatory in the model contract notices under secondary law.

98. However, both the method of publication and the content of the notice published are dependent on the abovementioned criteria for distinguishing - within primary law - between categories of awards and for the resulting grading.

99. In view of the fact that the documents in the case, in particular the order for reference, do not provide the information necessary to make it possible to determine the degree of advertising appropriate to the main proceedings, and in view of the principle that it is not for the Court of Justice, in the preliminary ruling procedure under Article 234 EC, to apply provisions of Community law to specific circumstances, it will fall to the national court to rule on the question whether the obligation of transparency was complied with in the case in the main proceedings. (41)

100. To that end the national court must, in the manner of a market analysis, identify the economic operators to whom the proposed contract is of interest, bearing in mind the potential competition, the value and object of the contract in that respect playing a decisive role.

b) The derogation for some quasi-in-house' contracts

101. As already stated, neither the derogation under secondary law in the case-law in Teckal and Stadt Halle nor the derogation under Article 13 of the Utilities Directive can result in the non-application of primary law, and hence of the fundamental freedoms relevant in this case.

102. If the award at issue in the main proceedings is in fact to be regarded as a services concession and therefore does not fall within the scope of the directives, the question whether the directives do not apply to the award in question because of another factor, for example because of the derogation established by the case-law or laid down by the Utilities Directive, is redundant. In that case, primary law indeed applies for a different reason.

103. Moreover, in the context of a reference for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC, it does not fall to the Court of Justice to apply the Community provisions to the specific facts of the case. The Court has emphasised that point on a number of occasions, specifically in cases involving public procurement. (42) Accordingly, it instead falls to the national court to examine whether the criteria developed by the Court of Justice or the requirements laid down in the Utilities Directive are met in the main action. However, it would first be necessary to establish whether any of the directives is actually applicable.

104. If the matter concerns a services concession and, consequently, the directives are not applicable, the application of the two derogations for quasi-in-house' operations will in any event not be an issue.

VI - Conclusion

105. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court should answer the question referred for a preliminary ruling as follows:

Articles 43 EC and 49 EC are to be interpreted as establishing in principle an obligation of transparency. However, Articles 43 EC and 49 EC do not in all circumstances preclude the direct award of contracts, that is to say, contracts awarded without publication of a contract notice or a call for competition. In assessing whether a direct award is permissible in an award procedure such as the one at issue in the main proceedings, the national court must, in the manner of a market analysis, identify the economic operators to whom the proposed contract is of interest, bearing in mind the potential competition, the value and object of the contract playing a decisive role

Notice for the OJ

Appeal brought on 6 May 2003 by Strabag Benelux NV against the judgment delivered on 25 February 2003 by the Court of First Instance (Fifth Chamber) in Case T-183/00 Strabag Benelux NV v Council of the European Union.

(Case C-186/03 P)

An appeal has been brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 6 May 2003 by Strabag Benelux NV, represented by A. Delvaux and V. Bertrand, with an address for service in Luxembourg, against the judgment delivered on 25 February 2003 by the Court of First Instance (Fifth Chamber) in Case T-183/00 Strabag Benelux NV v Council of the European Union.

The appellant claims that the Court should:

(set aside the judgment of the Court of First Instance inasmuch as it dismissed the applications for annulment and compensation on the ground that they were unfounded;

(uphold the forms of order sought by STRABAG in respect of those applications and accordingly:

*annul the decision of 12 April 2000 by which the Council awarded to the DE WAELE company the refitting and general maintenance work contract which was the subject of invitation to tender No 107865 published in the Official Journal of the European Communities S 146 of 30 July 1999, and by which the Council implicitly rejected the tender submitted by STRABAG;

*order the Council of the European Union to pay to STRABAG, subject to any increase, the sum of BEF 153 421 286 or EUR 3 803 214 together with interest thereon at the rate of 6% as from 12 April 2000; (order the Council of the European Union to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments:

In support of its application for annulment, the appellant puts forward four pleas in law.

The first plea is divided into two limbs. The appellant first criticises the Court of First Instance for failing properly to construe the concepts of 'contract' and 'decision' in so far as it took the view that the contract which the Council concluded with the successful tenderer constituted the decision to award the contract. Second, the appellant claims that the Court of First Instance breached Article 8(3) of Directive 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts in so far as the Court took the view that the written report required under that provision could consist of three documents, that is to say, the report to the Advisory Committee on Procurement and Contracts (ACPC), the favourable opinion of the ACPC, and the notice of contract award published in the Official Journal.

By its second plea in law, the appellant submits that there is a contradiction in the grounds of the judgment under appeal inasmuch as the Court of First Instance formed the view that the contract concluded between the Council and the successful tenderer was the decision to award the contract (paragraph 44) but examined the Council's letter of 11 March 2000 to determine that the decision to award the contract was adequately reasoned (paragraphs 56, 57 and 58). By way of alternative submission, the appellant criticises the Court of First Instance for having failed to ensure compliance with the obligation to state reasons imposed by Article 253 EC in so far as it took the view that the Council's letter of 11 March 2000 was adequately reasoned, particularly having regard to Article 8(1) of Directive 93/37.

By its third plea in law, the appellant contends that the Court of First Instance breached Articles 18 and 30(1) and (2) of Directive 93/37 and the contract documents and infringed the principles of equality and transparency inasmuch as it formed the view that the qualitative criteria have as their main function to check that each tenderer has the competence and abilities required to carry out the works and that the award criteria, in particular the qualitative and quantitative criteria, carry a different weight even though that does not follow from the contract documents.

By its fourth plea in law, the appellant criticises the Court of First Instance on the ground that it distorted the appellant's argument in forming the view that, in regard to the three criteria in respect of which STRABAG's tender was superior to that of the successful tenderer, the appellant had placed in question the Council's assessment in its report to the ACPC, whereas it in fact criticised the Council for having submitted during the proceedings before the Court of First Instance assessments which differed from those contained in that report.

In support of its claim for compensation, the appellant argues that, at the time when the contract was being awarded, the Council acted unlawfully in such a way as to incur non-contractual liability. This unlawful conduct formed the basis of significant damage incurred by STRABAG, which forfeited the profit which it hoped to secure from performing the contract and whose commercial image and reputation have suffered as a result. The appellant calculates its total damage to be EUR 3 803 214, that is to say, 10% of the turnover which it might have hoped to achieve.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
JACOBS
delivered on 21 April 2005 (1)

Case C-174/03

Impresa Portuale di Cagliari Srl
v
Tirrenia di Navigazione SpA

1. In this case the Tribunale amministrativo per la Sardegna (the Administrative Court for Sardinia) has referred to the Court two questions concerning the interpretation of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors. (2)

2. First, the national court seeks clarification on how to categorise, for the purposes of Directive 93/38, an entity whose activities are carried out partly subject to competition and partly under a de facto monopoly.

3. Then, depending on the answer to that question, it wishes to know whether the technical specifications mentioned in Article 18 of Directive 93/38 must be laid down before the selection of the successful bidder and whether they must be publicised.

The Directive

4. In so far as is relevant, the aims of Directive 93/38 are explained as follows in the preamble.

5. Recitals 11 and 12 state that the main reasons for which entities operating in the sectors concerned do not purchase on the basis of Community-wide competition are 'the closed nature of the markets in which they operate, due to the existence of special or exclusive rights granted by the national authorities' and the 'various ways in which national authorities can influence the behaviour of these entities, including participations in their capital and representation in the entities' administrative, managerial or supervisory bodies'.

6. As regards scope, recital 13 states that 'this Directive should not extend to activities of those entities which either fall outside the sectors [concerned], or which fall within those sectors but are nevertheless directly exposed to competitive forces in markets to which entry is unrestricted'.

7. With regard to the existence of competition in certain areas, recitals 18 and 19 state respectively that, in view of the various Community legal acts designed to introduce more competition between the entities offering air transport services to the public, it is 'not appropriate for the time being to include such entities in the scope of this Directive although the situation ought to be reviewed at a later stage in the light of progress made as regards competition', and that, 'in view of the competitive position of Community shipping, it would be inappropriate for the greater part of the contracts in this sector to be subject to detailed procedures; … the situation of shippers operating sea-going ferries should be kept under review; [and] certain inshore and river ferry services operated by public authorities should no longer be excluded from the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC and 77/62/EEC'. (3)

8. Article 1(1) states that for the purposes of Directive 93/38 '"public authorities" shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, or associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law. A body is considered to be governed by public law where it:

– is established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not being of an industrial or commercial nature,

– has legal personality, and

– is financed for the most part by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or is subject to management supervision by those bodies, or has an administrative, managerial or supervisory board more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law'.

9. Article 2 defines the scope of the Directive. Article 2(1)(a) states that it shall apply 'to contracting entities which are public authorities or public undertakings and exercise one of the activities referred to in paragraph 2'; Article 2(1)(b) adds entities which 'have as one of their activities any of those referred to in paragraph 2 or any combination thereof and operate on the basis of special or exclusive rights granted by a competent authority of a Member State'.

10. Article 2(2) sets out the relevant activities for the purposes of the Directive. Shipping is not mentioned among those activities.

11. Article 2(2)(b)(ii) defines as one of the relevant activities the exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of the provision of airport, maritime or inland port or other terminal facilities to carriers by air, sea or inland waterway.

12. Article 2(2)(c) defines as a relevant activity the operation of networks providing a public transport service by, inter alia, bus. However, Article 2(4) states that 'the provision of bus transport services to the public shall not be considered to be a relevant activity within the meaning of paragraph 2(c) where other entities are free to provide those services, either in general or in a particular geographical area, under the same condition[s] as the contracting entities'.

13. Article 2(2)(d) defines as a relevant activity the provision or operation of public telecommunications networks or the provision of public telecommunications services. However, Article 8(1) states that 'this Directive shall not apply to contracts which contracting entities exercising an activity described in Article 2(2)(d) award for purchases intended exclusively to enable them to provide one or more telecommunications services where other entities are free to offer the same services in the same geographical area and under substantially the same conditions'.

14. Article 16 provides that 'contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex XVI B shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 18 and 24'. That list includes, in category 20, 'supporting and auxiliary transport services'.

15. Article 18 governs the use of technical specifications in contract award procedures under the directive. Article 18(1) requires contracting entities to include the technical specifications in the general documents or the contract documents relating to each contract. No other publicity requirement prior to the award is imposed by that provision. Other paragraphs of Article 18 lay down requirements which are intended, in essence, to avoid the discriminatory use of technical specifications by contracting authorities.

16. Technical specifications are defined in Article 1(8) as 'the technical requirements contained in particular in the tender documents, defining the characteristics of a set of works, material, product, supply or service, and enabling a piece of work, a material, a product, a supply or a service to be objectively described in a manner such that it fulfils the use for which it is intended by the contracting entity'.

17. Pursuant to Article 19(1): 'Contracting entities shall make available on request to suppliers, contractors or service providers interested in obtaining a contract the technical specifications regularly referred to in their supply, works or service contracts or the technical specifications which they intend to apply to contracts covered by periodic information notices within the meaning of Article 22.' Article 19(2) provides that 'where such technical specifications are based on documents available to interested suppliers, contractors or service providers, a reference to those documents shall be sufficient'.

18. Article 24 requires contracting entities which have awarded a contract to communicate to the Commission the results of the awarding procedure by means of a notice drawn up in accordance with the relevant Annexes of the directive.

The national proceedings and the questions referred

19. Impresa Portuale di Cagliari Srl, the applicant in the main proceedings ('the applicant'), is a company carrying on business in the Port of Cagliari, Italy. Its activities include the loading, unloading, transhipment, storage and general movement of goods and equipment transported on ships.

20. Before the national court the applicant has challenged the validity of a two-year private agreement by which, without following the award procedures contained in Directive 93/38, Tirrenia di Navigazione SpA ('Tirrenia'), a shipping company, contracted Combined Terminals Operators ('CTO') to provide the abovementioned port services.

21. The applicant argues that Tirrenia qualified as a contracting authority under that directive and was obliged to follow the award procedures provided for therein.

22. In the alternative the applicant contends that, if Directive 93/38 were found not to be applicable, the contract would fall under the more general rules of Council Directive 92/50/EEC. (4)

23. In its order for reference the national court considers that the agreement in question constitutes a contract within the scope of Directive 93/38 and that ratione personae Tirrenia qualifies as a contracting authority thereunder. It does not however give the reasons for its view.

24. Tirrenia argues that the rationale of Directive 93/38 is to exclude from its scope contracts entered into by undertakings operating in sectors fully open to competition, and it considers itself to come within that category of undertaking.

25. Referring to the preamble of Directive 93/38, in particular recital 13, and to the case-law of the Court, in particular the judgment in British Telecommunications, (5) the national court agrees that where a market is substantially open to competition from a number of operators Directive 93/38 does not apply. Relying on the analysis carried out by the Commission in its decision of 21 June 2001 (6) under the State aid provisions of the Treaty, it notes that Tirrenia faces strong competition from private operators on some of its routes whereas on others it enjoys a de facto monopoly. The national court is therefore uncertain as to how the company's activities should be categorised for the purposes of deciding whether Directive 93/38 applies.

26. Accordingly the national court seeks a preliminary ruling on:

'(a) whether, in accordance with the recitals in the preamble to Directive 93/38, a company in the maritime transport sector which in some cases operates under a de facto monopoly and in others in circumstances of free competition and which benefits from State aid is to be regarded as always (7) subject to Directive 93/38 and, in the event that such a company is subject to the rules on public notice,

(b) whether the "technical specifications" mentioned in Article 18 of Directive 93/38 (transposed by Article 19 of Legislative Degree No 158/95) must be established prior to the procedure for selecting a contractor and whether they are subject to any publicity requirements'.

27. In addition to the parties in the main proceedings, Austria, the Netherlands and the Commission have submitted written observations. The parties in the main proceedings and the Commission also presented oral observations at the hearing.

Admissibility

28. Austria considers that both preliminary questions should be declared inadmissible. It claims that the order for reference fails to provide the necessary elements of fact and law to enable the Court to give an interpretation which could be useful for the purposes of the resolution of the main proceedings by the national court. Tirrenia objects to the admissibility of the second question, on the ground that it is irrelevant for the resolution of the case before the national court.

29. It is settled case-law that whenever questions referred to the Court in accordance with Article 234 EC involve the interpretation of Community law and the Court is sufficiently informed as to the context in which those questions have been raised, the Court is, in principle, obliged to give a ruling. (8) Moreover, 'the Court can refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it'. (9) Thus, a finding that a reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible is and, given the objective underlying Article 234 EC, should remain exceptional and limited to the circumstances mentioned.

30. Some of the conclusions reached by the national court in the instant case are not supported by a detailed exposition of the relevant facts or legal reasoning. It is also true, as most of the parties who have submitted written observations have pointed out, that the order for reference may be based on a misinterpretation of the criteria for determining the application of Directive 93/38.

31. Those shortcomings however do not necessarily mean that the questions referred should be declared inadmissible. Those questions are straightforward and are expressed in simple and succinct terms. Moreover the questions of Community law which they raise are clearly related to a real dispute and are, in the context referred to by the national court, relevant to the resolution of the main proceedings. They are not hypothetical in nature.

32. The factual and legal background of the main proceedings is explained in succinct but, in my view, sufficient detail to enable the Court and the parties submitting observations to make a proper assessment of the questions referred. Reference is also made to the relevant legal provisions, even though they may not have been explained in detail, and the parties submitting observations have been able to address the points at issue.

33. I therefore conclude that the questions referred are admissible.

Substance

34. Before consideration of the two questions referred by the national court, two preliminary issues must be examined: first, whether on a correct interpretation Directive 93/38 is applicable in the instant case; second, if it is not, whether Directive 92/50 is applicable.

Is Directive 93/38 applicable?

35. In its order for reference the national court reasons on the premiss that the dispute before it falls to be assessed under Directive 93/38 since Tirrenia is a contracting authority thereunder. It does not however explain the grounds for its premiss. It does not describe the private or public nature of Tirrenia or its main business activities, but merely refers to the analysis carried out by the Commission in its abovementioned decision of 21 June 2001. (10)

36. The Netherlands Government, the Commission and Tirrenia contend that since Tirrenia's main activity is the shipping of goods and persons, Directive 93/38 is not applicable to it.

37. Even though in the context of Article 234 EC the Court must in principle confine its examination to the matters which the referring court has decided to submit to it for consideration and must therefore proceed on the basis of the situation which that court considers to be established, (11) the Court may extract from the information contained in the order for reference those aspects of Community law the interpretation of which will help the national court to resolve the issue before it. (12)

38. The scope of Directive 93/38 is defined in Article 2, which lays down a double criterion: it applies to contracting entities which meet the definition in Article 2(1)(a) and (b), read in conjunction with Article 1(1) and (2), and which exercise one of the activities referred to in Article 2(2). If either criterion is not satisfied, the body in question falls outside the scope of the directive.

39. As regards the activities covered, it follows from recital 19 in the preamble and from Article 2(2)(b)(ii) that, within the transport sector, shipping is excluded from the scope of Directive 93/38. Recital 19 justifies the exclusion by the competitive position of Community shipping, which makes it 'inappropriate for the greater part of the contracts in this sector to be subject to detailed procedures'. (13) Accordingly, Article 2(2)(b)(ii) does not mention shipping as a relevant activity and subjects to the directive only 'the provision of airport, maritime or inland port or other territorial facilities to carriers by air, sea or inland waterway'.

40. From the information contained in the case-file and the observations made at the hearing, in particular by Tirrenia, it appears that Tirrenia is a company whose main, if not sole, activity is the shipping of goods and persons, in which case it must fall outside the scope of Directive 93/38.

41. It is for the national court to determine, after reassessment of the facts in the light of the above considerations, whether that is indeed the case. If it finds that Directive 93/38 does not apply, the questions referred will not arise unless, as has been suggested, Directive 92/50 (14) can apply in the alternative. That directive, it will be recalled, lays down general rules for the award of public service contracts.

Can Directive 92/50 apply in the alternative?

42. In the main proceedings the applicant argued in the alternative that, if the national court were to conclude that Directive 93/38 was not applicable, Tirrenia would be subject to the provisions of Directive 92/50. The national court, convinced that Directive 93/38 was applicable to the facts before it, did not refer a question to the Court on this point. Since that assumption may prove erroneous for the reasons stated above, the Court should, in line with previous practice and on grounds of procedural economy and expediency, address this issue in order to assist the national court in the determination of the case pending before it.

43. I do not agree with the applicant, the Commission and Austria that Directive 92/50 should apply in the alternative to Tirrenia.

44. It is commonplace that the original 1970s public procurement directives applying to works and supply contracts excluded from their field of application any contract awarded in the so-called utilities sectors, namely water, energy, transport and, as regards public supply contracts, telecommunications. The transport sector as a whole was thus excluded from the secondary Community rules on procurement until the utilities sectors were first regulated by Directive 90/531. (15) That directive was subsequently replaced by Directive 93/38, which extended its scope to public services contracts. Their content is otherwise essentially the same. Directive 93/38 will in turn be finally superseded in January 2006 when the period allowed for implementing Directive 2004/17 (16) expires. The latter directive, in the interest of clarity, simplifies and updates the regulation of procurement in the utilities sectors in the light of the suggestions made by contracting entities and economic operators involved in those sectors (17) and the case-law of the Court.

45. As stated above, in view of its competitive position, Community shipping is explicitly excluded from the scope of Directive 93/38. That exclusion was already declared in the preamble to Directive 90/531 (18) and is maintained, in simpler terms, in the preamble to Directive 2004/17. (19)

46. As regards the relationship between Directive 93/38 and Directive 92/50, (20) the 17th recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 states that 'the rules concerning service contracts as contained in [Directive 90/531] should remain unaffected by this Directive'. That recital was interpreted by the Court in Telaustria as meaning that the provisions of Directive 92/50 must not affect those of Directive 90/531 or those of its successor, Directive 93/38. (21) On that basis the Court concluded that 'where a contract is covered by Directive 93/38 governing a specific sector of services, the provisions of Directive 92/50, which are intended to apply to services in general, are not applicable'. (22)

47. Like its predecessor, Directive 90/351, and its successor, Directive 2004/17, Directive 93/38 seeks to fill in the regulatory void as regards the sectors previously excluded from the general public procurement directives and to cater for the specific features of procurement in those sectors. It must be regarded as a self-contained regime unless otherwise expressly stated. Shipping, a sub-sector of the transport sector, would in principle have fallen within the subject-matter of Directive 93/38, but has been explicitly excluded. In this way, the Community legislature has laid down in Directive 93/38 what may be regarded as a lex specialis with regard to shipping, namely its exclusion from the Community public procurement legal regime.

48. It is moreover important to note that by reason of the specific characteristics of the targeted sectors, Directive 93/38 is meant to allow for greater flexibility than the general procurement directives. (23) In contrast to the situation under those directives, the main obligation on contracting entities under Directive 93/38 is that of publishing a notice in the Official Journal, after which they remain largely free to choose the award procedure most suitable to their own needs. The view that Directive 92/50 should apply in the alternative would lead to the paradoxical result that a sub-sector excluded by reason of its competitive nature from the application of the more flexible Directive 93/38 would become subject to the more rigid rules of Directive 92/50. That would in my view defeat the aim of the exclusion intended by the Community legislature when adopting Directive 93/38.

49. In view of the foregoing I conclude that a body whose sole business activity is shipping is excluded from the scope of Directive 93/38 and is not subject in the alternative to Directive 92/50. In the light of those considerations it is for the national court to assess the facts before it in order to determine whether Tirrenia exercises its activities in the excluded shipping sector. If so, the questions referred to the Court by the national court do not arise.

50. I will however go on to examine the questions referred, which are relevant if the national court finds that Tirrenia, by reason of its other business activities, falls within the scope of Directive 93/38.

The first question

51. According to the national court's interpretation of Directive 93/38, in particular of recital 13 in the preamble, where free competition exists in a particular utilities sector, entities operating in that sector fall outside the scope of the directive. The national court has doubts however as to how a situation such as Tirrenia's, whose activities are carried out in some cases under competitive conditions and in other cases under a de facto monopoly, must be qualified for the purposes of Directive 93/38 and, by its first question, seeks clarification from the Court in this respect.

52. First, however, I must examine whether the existence of competition in the sector concerned is relevant for the application of the directive. If not, the questions raised by the national court need not be addressed.

53. Two opposing positions emerge on that issue.

54. On the one hand, the national court, the parties to the main proceedings, and the Netherlands and Austrian Governments contend that, whenever a sector is subject to open competition, the provisions of Directive 93/38 should not apply.

55. On the other hand, the Commission maintains that Directive 93/38 was never intended to provide for a general exemption for sectors where competition exists. Only when an express exemption is provided for by one of its provisions, such as Articles 2(4) and 8(1), are contracting authorities operating in those sectors exempted from the provisions of Directive 93/38.

56. It is clear in my view that the Commission's thesis cannot be accepted.

57. In the first place, the wording of recital 13 in the preamble is couched in unambiguous terms, covers all four sectors and leaves little scope for interpretation.

58. In addition, the purpose of the Community rules governing procurement in the utilities sectors is to address the circumstances which led entities operating in those sectors to award contracts on a national basis. According to the preambles to the past, present and future directives regulating procurement in the utilities sectors, there are two main interrelated causes for discriminatory procurement, namely, the closed nature of the markets in which the relevant entities operate and the various ways in which national authorities can influence the behaviour of those entities. (24) It is assumed that where entities operate under undistorted competitive conditions, market forces will by themselves ensure that the best value for money is sought in every contract, and that there is therefore no need to subject their procurement to detailed award procedures.

59. In this respect the Court has held in its case-law on the notion of 'body governed by public law' for the purposes of the procurement directives that 'if the body operates in normal market conditions, aims to make a profit, and bears the losses associated with the exercise of its activity, it is unlikely that the needs it aims to meet are not of an industrial or commercial nature. In such a case, the application of the Community directives relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public contracts would not be necessary, moreover, because a body acting for profit and itself bearing the risks associated with its activity will not normally become involved in an award procedure on conditions which are not economically justified'. (25)

60. Furthermore, the interpretation proposed by the Commission might distort competition in two ways. On the one hand, it would place public entities or public undertakings operating in truly competitive markets at a disadvantage with respect to competing private firms. Whereas the latter would be able to procure freely, contracting public entities would be required to comply with award procedures and other procurement obligations, regardless of whether their procurement policies were carried out on strict commercial criteria. On the other hand, it would also distort competition between sub-sectors that are in a relationship of competition substitution, such as bus transport and railways or different forms of energy. Such distortions of competition are not regarded as minor by the economic actors involved. Indeed, one of the most common criticisms of Community public procurement regulation relates to its complexity, rigidity and the related compliance costs that entities subject to it must endure. (26)

61. In the same vein, the principle of proportionality requires in my view that where there is a choice between different interpretations, recourse must be had to the least onerous, and the disadvantages caused must not be disproportionate to the aims pursued. For the reasons above I question whether the Commission's proposed interpretation respects that principle.

62. Finally, as regards the judgment in British Telecommunications (27) referred to as authority by the national court and some of the parties, the Court's interpretation in that case is confined to the specific exemption contained in Article 8(1) of Directive 93/38. For that reason it does not in my view support the general conclusion that, as a matter of principle, the degree of competition should be taken as to be a relevant factor when deciding whether Directive 93/38 should apply.

63. The above considerations lead me to conclude that, where bodies which would qualify as contracting entities under Directive 93/38 carry out their business activities under direct exposure to competitive forces in a market where access is unrestricted, the directive should not apply. When assessing whether that is the case, the national court must verify whether the body in question operates without the protection of the public authorities, assumes the commercial and financial risks inherent in economic activity, does not have recourse to the public purse to offset potential losses and, ultimately, bears the risk of bankruptcy.

64. Having reached that conclusion, I turn now to the national court's first question, namely how to classify for the purposes of Directive 93/38 an entity which in some cases operates under a de facto monopoly and in others in circumstances of free competition and which benefits from State aid.

65. In order to answer that question it is again useful to refer to the Court's case-law on the notion of 'body governed by public law'. As the Austrian Government rightly observes, the Court appears to have endorsed in that case-law, starting with its judgment in Mannesman, (28) the 'infection theory' to the effect that if one of an entity's activities falls within the scope of the procurement directives, all its other activities are equally subject, regardless of whether they are of an industrial or commercial nature. The Court justified that approach on the basis of the need to respect the principle of legal certainty, which requires a Community rule to be clear and its application foreseeable by all those concerned. According to the Court's reasoning such a principle would be impaired if the application of the procurement directives could vary according to the relative proportion of the entity's activities pursued for the purpose of meeting needs not having an industrial or commercial character.

66. To subject the award of all contracts 'whatever their nature' to the discipline of the directive without further qualification is perhaps too radical a stance. Entities carrying out only a minor part of their activities under the directives would be placed at a competitive disadvantage with respect to the majority of their commercial activities. The Court appears to have weighed those drawbacks against the requirements of legal certainty, finally accepting the former as the price to be paid for the latter. (29) That interpretation has been confirmed in later judgments. (30)

67. In view of that case-law and in application of the 'infection theory', all contracts of a body performing activities both under competition and under a de facto or de jure monopoly would come within the scope of the directive since in the latter case the conditions for exclusion would be absent. That would moreover be so regardless of the relative proportion between activities carried out under pure market forces and under a monopoly.

68. I would suggest a qualification to such an approach for the same reasons that have led me to conclude that competition should be taken as a relevant factor when deciding whether the directive should apply. In my view, if the entity can show that the contracts in question relate exclusively to its activities directly exposed to competitive forces and that there is no cross-subsidisation between those activities and others exercised under non-competitive conditions, then the infection theory should give way. The national court must satisfy itself that those conditions are fulfilled.

69. As regards the State aid referred to by the national court, it seems clear that public financing is one of the elements which the national court should take into consideration in deciding whether the entity in question truly operates directly under competitive forces. (31)

The second question

70. By its second question the national court asks whether, if Directive 93/38 applies, the 'technical specifications' mentioned in Article 18 must be established prior to the procedure for selecting a contractor and whether they are subject to any publicity requirements.

71. As regards the first limb of the question, technical specifications are defined by Article 1(8) of Directive 93/38 as 'the technical requirements contained in particular in the tender documents, defining the characteristics of a set of works, material, product, supply or service, and enabling a piece of work, a material, a product, a supply or a service to be objectively described in a manner such that it fulfils the use for which it is intended by the contracting entity'.

72. Technical specifications define the object of the contract in precise terms, they enable interested undertakings to assess whether to present a bid and they provide contracting authorities with the technical parameters to assess in relation to their needs the various offers presented. It clearly follows from their very nature that they must be established prior to the selection of a contractor.

73. As regards the second limb of the question, relating to publicity requirements, Directive 93/38, reproducing the approach of Directive 92/50, distinguishes between 'priority' public service contracts, to which the directive applies in full, and 'non-priority' service contracts, to which, pursuant to Article 16 of the directive, only Articles 18 and 24 apply. Article 18 lays down the rules concerning the use of technical specifications and standards in contract award procedures. Article 24 governs the post-award information that the contracting authority must communicate to the Commission for monitoring purposes. Non-priority service contracts, which are considered to have little impact on cross-border trade, are thus not subject to the detailed award procedures of the directive, including the requirement of publication. Non-priority services are listed in Annex XVI B to Directive 93/38.

74. The services which are the subject of the contract at issue in the national proceedings appear to fall within Annex XVI B of Directive 93/38, category 20, 'supporting and auxiliary transport services'. (32) Article 18(1) requires contracting authorities to include the technical specifications in the general documents or contract documents relating to each contract. No other publication obligation is imposed on contracting authorities by that provision. There is thus in principle no specific obligation to publish the technical specifications relating to services contracts falling under Annex XVI B.

75. The Court held in Telaustria, however, that, even when contracts are excluded from the scope of the procurement directives, the contracting entities concluding them are none the less bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty in general, and the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality in particular. That principle implies an obligation of transparency, which includes ensuring, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the market to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed. (33)

76. The same reasoning should, as the Commission points out in its observations, apply when a contract is subject only to certain provisions of the procurement directives. As the Court has held, the duty to treat tenderers equally lies at the heart of the procurement directives and, together with the principle of transparency, must be complied with in every stage of the award procedure so as to afford equality of opportunity to all tenderers when formulating their tenders. (34) Thus, those general principles cover not only the definition of technical specifications by contracting authorities but also the means by which those specifications are made known to potential bidders. Those means must therefore ensure a sufficient degree of transparency and place all potential bidders on an equal footing.

77. The question remains as to what means are to be considered sufficient in that regard. At the hearing, answering a question posed by the Court, the Commission acknowledged that transparency requirements for technical specifications in contracts relating to non-priority services could not go as far as those imposed for contracts concerning priority services. It did not however specify in what concrete ways those requirements could be fulfilled.

78. In the instant case, since technical specifications are usually contained in rather voluminous documents, it would in my view fulfil those criteria to make the general documents readily available to all interested undertakings in sufficient time and on equal conditions. Support for that view may be drawn from Article 19 of Directive 93/38, which requires contracting entities to make available on request to interested parties the technical specifications regularly referred to in their contracts. Even though that provision is not applicable to the instant case, it indicates that the Community legislature considers making the relevant technical specifications available on request to be a suitable solution.

79. It is for the national court to decide whether, on the facts of the case, the means adopted by the contracting authority to make potential bidders aware of the technical specifications have respected these conditions.

Conclusion

80. In view of the foregoing I consider that the Court should answer the national court's questions in the following terms:

– A body whose sole business activity is shipping is excluded from the scope of Directive 93/38 and is not subject in the alternative to Directive 92/50. It is for the national court to determine whether the body in question exclusively exercises its activities in the excluded shipping sector.

– Where bodies that would otherwise qualify as contracting entities under Directive 93/38 carry out their business activities directly under competitive forces in a market where access is unrestricted, Directive 93/38 does not apply. When assessing whether that is the case, the national court must verify that the market concerned is de jure and de facto competitive and that the body in question operates without the protection of the public authorities, assumes the commercial and financial risks inherent in economic activity, does not have recourse to the public purse to offset potential losses and, ultimately, bears the risk of bankruptcy.

– If where Directive 93/38 applies a contracting entity carries out its activities both directly under competitive forces in a market where access is unrestricted and under a de facto monopoly, it must respect the obligations arising from that directive, unless it can show that the contracts in question relate exclusively to the activities directly exposed to competitive forces and that there is no cross-subsidisation between those activities and the ones exercised under non-competitive conditions.

– Technical specifications governed by Article 18 of Directive 93/38 must be established prior to the selection of a contractor and must be made known or available to potential bidders by means that ensure transparency and place all potential bidders on an equal footing. It is for the national court to decide whether, in each case, the means used by the contracting entity to make potential bidders aware of the technical specifications have respected those conditions. It will normally be sufficient to make the general documents containing the technical specifications readily available to all interested undertakings in sufficient time and on equal conditions.

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Tribunale Amministrativo per la Sardegna (The Administrative Court for Sardinia) of 15 January 2003 and 12 February 2003, received at the Court Registry on 14 April 2003, for a preliminary ruling in the case of Impresa Portuale di Cagliari s.r.l. against Tirrenia di Navigazione SpA and C.T.O. Combined Terminals Operators s.r.l. on the following questions:

(a)whether, in accordance with the recitals in the preamble to Directive 93/38[1], a company in the maritime transport sector, which in some cases operates under a de facto monopoly and in others in circumstances of free competition and which benefits from State aid is to be regarded as always subject to the Directive 93/98, and, in the event that such a company is subject to the rules on public notice,

(b)whether the "technical specifications" mentioned in Article 18 of Directive 93/38 (transposed by Article 19 of Legislative Decree No 158/95) must be established prior to the procedure for selecting a contractor and whether they are subject to any publicity requirements.

[1] - Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ L 199 of 09.08.1993, p. 84).

Judgment of the Court (First Chamber)
of 18 November 2004
Commission of the European Communities v Federal Republic of Germany. Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Directive 92/50/EEC - Public contracts - Waste transport services - Procedure without prior publication of a contract notice - Contract concluded by a contracting authority in relation to an economic activity subject to competition - Contract concluded by a contracting authority in order to be able to submit an offer in a tender procedure - Proof of the service provider's capabilities - Possibility of relying on the capabilities of a third party - Subcontracting - Consequences of a judgment finding a failure to fulfil an obligation. Case C-126/03.

Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Scope - Contract unrelated to the activities in the general interest of the contracting authority - Included - Contract aiming to subcontract the activities of a local or regional authority operating as a service provider - Included

(Council Directive 92/50, Arts 1(a) and (b), 8 and 11)

Article 8 of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, read in conjunction with Article 1(a) and (b) and Article 11(1) of the directive, provides that, where contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a regional or local authority have as their object the services listed in Annex I A to the directive, they must be the subject of an open, restricted or negotiated procedure within the meaning of that directive.

In that regard, the fact that the contract does not fall within the scope of activities in the general interest of that local or regional authority, but comprises an independent economic activity, which is clearly distinct and subject to competition, does not show that that contract is not a public contract for the purposes of Articles 8 and 11 of Directive 92/50. Article 1(a) of that directive makes no distinction between public contracts awarded by a contracting authority for the purposes of fulfilling its task of meeting needs in the general interest and those which are unrelated to that task.

It is likewise irrelevant that the contracting authority intends to operate as a provider of services itself and that the contract in question aims, in that context, to subcontract a part of the activities to a third party.

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 24 June 2004,

gives the following

Judgment

1. By its application, the Commission of the European Communities asks the Court to declare that, as the contract for the transport of waste from discharge points in the region of Donauwald (Germany) to the Munich-North thermal power station was awarded by the City of Munich (Germany) in breach of the procedural rules laid down in Article 8 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), read in conjunction with Article 11(1) of that directive, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive.

Legal framwork

2. Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 provides that public service contracts' are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority', to the exclusion of the contracts listed in points (i) to (ix) of that provision.

3. Article (1)(b) of that directive states that contracting authorities' are the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law'.

4. Article 8 of Directive 92/50 provides that contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI'.

5. Article 11(1) of Directive 92/50 states that in awarding public service contracts, contracting authorities are to apply the open, restricted or negotiated procedures defined in Article 1(d), (e) and (f), respectively, of the directive.

Facts and pre-litigation procedure

6. In 1997, the city of Munich, which operated the Munich-North thermal power station, concluded a contact with a private sector undertaking, Rethmann Entsorgungswirtschaft GmbH & Co. KG (Rethmann'), under which it undertook to entrust to Rethmannn responsibility for the transport of waste from discharge points to that power station if the City of Munich was awarded the waste disposal contract for the region of Donauwald (Germany) which had been the subject of an invitation to tender issued by the Abfallwirtschaftsgesellschaft Donau-Wald mbH (AWG Donau-Wald'), to which the City of Munich had responded.

7. Having been awarded that contract, the City of Munich entrusted responsibility for the transport of waste to Rethmann pursuant to the agreement concluded with that company, without, however, the transfer of that activity being the subject of an invitation to tender under Directive 92/50.

8. Having given the Federal Republic of Germany an opportunity to submit observations in that regard, the Commission sent a reasoned opinion to that Member State on 25 July 2001, in which it stated that the contract for the transport of waste from the discharge points in the Donauwald region to the Munich-North thermal power station (the contract at issue') should have been the subject of an invitation to tender published in the Official Journal of the European Communities in accordance with Directive 92/50. It invited the Member State to comply with its obligations under Community law within two months of the reasoned opinion being notified. Following the reply by the German authorities of 30 October 2001, in which they denied the infringement, the Commission brought the present action.

The action

The infringement

9. In support of its application, the Commission relies on a single complaint, alleging a breach of Article 8 of Directive 92/50, read in conjunction with Article 11(1) of that directive, on the ground that the City of Munich failed to make the contract at issue the subject of an invitation to tender.

10. It should be noted in that regard that under Article 8 of Directive 92/50, read in conjunction with Article 11(1) of that directive, public contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A must be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI of the directive, applying the open, restricted or negotiated procedures within the meaning of the directive.

11. Public service contracts' are defined in Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 as being contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority.

12. Contracting authorities' are defined in Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 as being the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law'.

13. Accordingly, Article 8 of Directive 92/50, read in conjunction with Article 1(a) and (b) and Article 11(1) of the directive, provides that, where contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a regional or local authority have as their object the services listed in Annex I A to the directive, they must be the subject of an open, restricted or negotiated procedure within the meaning of that directive.

14. In the present case, it must be held that the contract at issue is a public contract for the purposes of Articles 8 and 11 of Directive 92/50, and that that contract should have been awarded in accordance with Titles III to VI of that directive.

15. The contract concluded between the City of Munich and Rethmann, under which that company undertook to transport waste from the discharge points in the Donauwald region to the Munich-North thermal power station, relates to a service covered by Annex I A to the directive and provided by an undertaking to a regional or local authority. It is accordingly a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority.

16. In that regard, the arguments relied on by the German Government to show that the contract at issue is not a public contract for the purposes of Articles 8 and 11 of Directive 92/50 cannot be accepted.

17. First of all, the German Government maintains that the City of Munich is not, in relation to the contract at issue, a contracting authority' for the purposes of Article 1(b) of Directive

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

92/50 and that the contract is not a public contract' for the purposes of Article 1(a) of the directive. According to that government, the contract does not fall within the scope of activities in the general interest of the City of Munich, but comprises an independent economic activity, which is clearly distinct and subject to competition, that is to say the operation of the MunichNorth thermal power station.

18. It must be answered in that regard that, under Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, regional or local authorities are, by definition, contracting authorities. It is clear from case-law that Article 1(a) of the directive makes no distinction between public contracts awarded by a contracting authority for the purposes of fulfilling its task of meeting needs in the general interest and those which are unrelated to that task (see, by way of analogy, in relation to Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the awarding of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others [1998] ECR I-73, paragraph 32). It is likewise irrelevant that the contracting authority intends to operate as a provider of services itself and that the contract in question aims, in that context, to subcontract a part of the activities to a third party. It is conceivable that the decision of the contracting authority as to the choice of that third party will be based on considerations that are not economic ones. It follows that, whatever the nature and context of the contract at issue may be, it constitutes a public contract' within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50.

19. As regards the argument that the activity of transporting waste carried on by Rethmann would, in the end result, be the subject of two invitations to tender, it is sufficient to observe that that activity is the subject of two separate public contracts, that is to say the one awarded by the City of Munich and the one, concerning more generally the disposal of waste in the Donauwald region, awarded by AWG Donau-Wald, each of which required to be the subject of an invitation to tender, and that the application of Directive 92/50 thus has the result that the service provided by Rethmann required to be the subject of two successive invitations to tender.

20. As regards the argument that there was no use of public resources of the City of Munich in the present case, it must be held that use of that kind is not a factor that determines whether or not there is a public contract for the purposes of Articles 8 and 11 of Directive 92/50.

21. The German Government also submits that, inasmuch as it was awarded for the purpose of resale to third parties, the contract at issue is excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50 by reason of Article 1(a)(ii) of that directive, read in conjunction with Article 7 of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84). In that regard, as the Advocate General observes at point 34 of his Opinion, it must be held that Article 1(a)(ii) of Directive 92/50 excludes from its scope contracts awarded in the fields covered by Directive 93/38, because the Community legislature wished those contracts to be covered only by Directive 93/38. The exception laid down in Article 7 of Directive 93/38 would therefore apply only if the contract at issue fell within the scope of that directive. Inasmuch as that contract does not come within the activities referred to in Article 2(2) of Directive 93/38, the exception laid down in Article 7 of that directive cannot apply in the present case.

22. The German Government also argues that it would have been impossible in practice to award the contract at issue in accordance with Titles III to VI of Directive 92/50, inasmuch as, in order to demonstrate its technical capability for the purposes of Article 32(2)(c) and (h) of that directive when the invitation to tender was issued by AWG DonauWald, the City of Munich needed to communicate the name of its subcontractor at the time its offer was lodged. In that regard it is true that a service provider which, with a view to being admitted to participate in a tendering procedure, intends to rely on the resources of entities or undertakings with which it is directly or indirectly linked must establish that it actually has available to it the resources of those entities or undertakings which are necessary for the performance of the contract but which it does not itself own (see, to that effect, Case C-176/98 Holst Italia [1999] ECR I-8607, paragraph 29; Case C-399/98 Ordine degli Architetti and Others [2001] ECR I-5409, paragraph 92; and Case C-314/01 Siemens and ARGE Telekom & Partner [2004] ECR I0000, paragraph 44). However, in the present case, it would in any event have been possible for the City of Munich to undertake an accelerated restricted procedure under Article 20 of Directive 92/50 between the issuing of the invitation to tender and the lodging of its offer.

23. The German Government maintains that the contract at issue could, by reason of Article 11(3)(d) of Directive 92/50, have been awarded using a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice. It should be pointed out in that regard that, as a derogation from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the EC Treaty in relation to public service contracts, Article 11(3)(d) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted strictly and that the burden of proving the existence of exceptional circumstances justifying a derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances (see Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 Commission v Germany [2003] ECR I-3609, paragraph 58). The application of Article 11(3) of the directive is thus subject to three cumulative conditions. It requires the existence of an unforeseeable event, extreme urgency rendering the observance of time-limits laid down by other procedures impossible, and a causal link between the unforeseeable event and the extreme urgency resulting therefrom (see, in relation to Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), Case C-107/92 Commission v Italy [1993] ECR I-4655, paragraph 12, and Case C-318/94 Commission v Germany [1996] ECR I-1949, paragraph 14). In the present case, as was held in paragraph 22 of this judgment, it would have been possible for the City of Munich to undertake an accelerated restricted procedure (see, in relation to Directive 71/305, Case C-24/91 Commission v Spain [1992] ECR I-1989, paragraph 14, and Commission v Italy, paragraph 13). It follows that the Federal Republic of Germany has not shown that a situation of extreme urgency existed.

24. In the light of the above, it must be held that, as the contract for the transport of waste from the discharge points in the Donauwald region to the Munich-North thermal power station was awarded by the City of Munich in breach of the procedural rules laid down in Article 8 of Directive 92/50, read in conjunction with Article 11(1) of that directive, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive.

The consequences of a judgment finding a failure to fulfil obligations

25. The German Government submits that, should there be a finding of failure to fulfil obligations, the Federal Republic of Germany would not be obliged to terminate the contract which has already been entered into.

26. In that regard, it is sufficient to reply that while, in proceedings for failure to fulfil obligations under Article 226 EC, the Court is only required to find that a provision of Community law has been infringed, it is clear from Article 228(1) EC that the Member State concerned is required to take the measures necessary to comply with the judgment of the Court.

Costs

27. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission has applied for costs and the Federal Republic of Germany has been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, as the contract for the transport of waste from the discharge points in the Donauwald region to the Munich-North thermal power station was awarded by the City of Munich in breach of the procedural rules laid down in Article 8 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, read in conjunction with Article 11(1) of that directive, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive;

2. Orders the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Geelhoed delivered on 24 June 2004. Commission of the European Communities v Federal Republic of Germany. Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Directive 92/50/EEC - Public contracts - Waste transport services - Procedure without prior publication of a contract notice - Contract concluded by a contracting authority in relation to an economic activity subject to competition - Contract concluded by a contracting authority in order to be able to submit an offer in a tender procedure - Proof of the service provider's capabilities - Possibility of relying on the capabilities of a third party - Subcontracting - Consequences of a judgment finding a failure to fulfil an obligation. Case C-126/03.

I - Introduction

1. In this case, the Commission asserts that the Federal Republic of Germany is in breach of Community law because the City of Munich concluded a contract with a private undertaking without observing the rules contained in Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (Directive 92/50'). (2)

2. The central question is whether the City of Munich, a local authority, should be deemed to be a contracting authority if, when participating in an award procedure itself as a prospective supplier, it subcontracts certain services to a private undertaking without having conducted an award procedure for them.

II - Legal framework

3. In Directive 92/50, Article 1(a) provides that public service contracts' means contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority, to the exclusion of the contracts listed in points (i) to (ix) inclusive.

4. Article 1(a)(ii) excludes contracts awarded in the fields referred to in Articles 2, 7, 8 and 9 of Directive 90/531/EEC or fulfilling the conditions in Article 6(2) of the same Directive.

5. Article 1(b) states that contracting authorities' means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

6. Article 8 states that contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex IA shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI.

7. Article 11(1) provides that in awarding public service contracts, contracting authorities shall apply the procedures defined in Article 1(d), (e) and (f), adapted for the purposes of this Directive.

8. Pursuant to Article 11(3)(d), contracting authorities may award public service contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable by the contracting authorities in question, the timelimit for the open, restricted or negotiated procedures referred to in Articles 17 to 20 cannot be kept. The circumstances invoked to justify extreme urgency must not in any event be attributable to the contracting authorities.

III - Facts and pre-litigation procedure

9. In November 1997, Donau-Wald mbH, being a waste-processing undertaking and a contracting authority serving the Donau-Wald region, opened a tendering procedure for the supply of services relating to the thermal processing of waste. Tenders were received from the City of Munich (the operator of the combined power-station and waste-incinerating plant Munich North), and a private waste-processing firm, Rethmann Entsorgungswirtschaft GmbH & Co. KG (Rethmann').

10. The two bidders had agreed in advance that if the City of Munich's bid was successful, the transport of the waste would be subcontracted to Rethmann, as the City of Munich did not possess the necessary transport capacity. Conversely, were Rethmann's bid to succeed, the City of Munich, which did have sufficient processing capacity, would have the residual waste processed at its Munich North waste-burning power-station.

11. The entire contract was awarded to the City of Munich on 27 February 1998. As agreed, the City of Munich duly subcontracted the transport of the waste to Rethmann; it did not observe the procedure laid down in Directive 92/50.

12. The Commission's view is that the City of Munich is a contracting authority; the waste-transport contract was not awarded according to the procedure laid down in Directive 92/50; consequently Germany is in breach of its obligations.

13. The Commission initially gave the German Government an opportunity to submit observations, and subsequently - on 25 July 2001 - dispatched a reasoned opinion. The German Government responded by letter on 30 October 2001. The Commission did not consider that response satisfactory, and accordingly brought the present action before the Court.

14. The Commission asks the Court to declare that, by reason of the fact that the contract for waste transport concluded by the City of Munich was awarded without the procedures laid down in Articles 8 and 11(1) of Directive 92/50 having been observed, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under that Directive; and to order the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs of the proceedings.

15. The Commission considers the City of Munich to be a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, and the transport of waste to be a service within the meaning of Category 16 of Annex 1A to the Directive. It follows that the contract for the supply of that service should have been awarded according to the rule laid down in Titles III to VI inclusive.

16. The German Government disagrees: there is no question of any infringement, since the City of Munich - in the present case - cannot be deemed to be a contracting authority.

17. It concedes that, as a general rule, the City of Munich would rank as a contracting authority within the meaning of the Directive, and that the conclusion of a transport contract with a value above the limit meets the definition of a public service contract within the meaning of Article 1(a), in conjunction with Category 16 of Annex 1A to Directive 92/50. However, in view of the purpose and scope of the Directive, those provisions cannot be applied to the present case.

18. The German Government adduces the following principal arguments. First, it contends that, in the circumstances of the case, the City of Munich is not a prospective purchaser of waste-transport services. Furthermore, the award of the contract to supply the services did not occur in the context of the performance by the City of Munich of the public-service tasks incumbent on it, but concerned a separate economic activity - the operation of the combined power-station and waste-processing-plant. That economic activity is as such subject to competition.

19. Furthermore, the City of Munich would never have been in a position to offer its services to the Donau-Wald region had it not secured the transport services supplied by Rethmann. If it had been necessary for the transport services contract to go out to tender, Rethmann's transport services would have been subject to a public award procedure twice. The German Government maintains that to require tenders within tenders' is utterly pointless.

20. Furthermore, no public funds were involved in the award of the contract in question. Moreover, the contract is exempt from the requirement to conduct an award procedure, pursuant to Article 1(a)(ii) of Directive 92/50 in conjunction with Article 7 of Directive 93/38, (3) since the latter provision states that Directive 93/38 shall not apply to contracts awarded for purposes of resale or hire to third parties,

21. Finally, it was practically impossible to hold, prior to an award procedure in which the City of Munich was itself a bidder, a further award procedure for that part of the contract which would have to be subcontracted. First, the contract was at that time a hypothetical one. Secondly, the period between the date of the invitation to tender and the date of the submission of the bid was too short to conduct a full award procedure. For the same reason it was not possible to subcontract the transport of the waste on the basis of an award procedure conducted following the award of the main contract. There was a further practical obstacle: any tenderer must show that they are suitable, and appropriately qualified, and must therefore indicate the identity of any possible subcontractor when making their bid.

22. In view of the fact that the services at issue form part of the operation of the Munich North thermal power station, the German Government concludes that in the circumstances of the present case the City of Munich cannot be regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50.

23. Moreover, if the City of Munich were deemed to be a contracting authority, it would be possible to rely on the exception contained in Article 11(3)(d) of Directive 92/50. The requirement of urgency was met - with so little time between the invitation to tender and the deadline for submitting a bid, the contract in question had to be awarded swiftly - and that urgency was both unforeseen, and inherent in the circumstance of the City of Munich being itself a bidder in another procedure.

IV - Assessment

24. The central issue in these proceedings is whether the City of Munich should be deemed to be a contracting authority. Should it be required to put the waste-transport services out to tender - or is the German Government correct in its view that the City of Munich was itself acting as a prospective supplier of services, and hence did not need to put out to tender any related services which it subcontracted?

25. The German Government favours a functional approach to the concept of contracting authority'; it sees intimations of such an approach both in the purpose and scope of the Directive, and in the Court's case-law. (4) It concludes that the public tendering rules do not apply to a party which is a prospective supplier. Moreover, waste-disposal in the Donau-Wald region does not constitute part of the statutory duties of the City of Munich; the contract to provide those services was obtained under normal conditions of competition.

26. My first observation is that the City of Munich is a local authority. Indeed, the German Government does not dispute this. Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 provides that the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law are to be considered to be contracting authorities. Hence, as the Commission, too, has correctly observed, a regional or local authority is by definition a contracting authority within the meaning of the Directive. As the Court has consistently held, (5) it is the fact that a given body is a contracting authority which makes Directive 92/50 applicable, whatever the subject-matter of the contract. Indeed, that subject-matter need have no connection with the performance by the authority of its public tasks, and may even relate to activities lacking any such public element. Likewise it is immaterial whether the contracting authority be a prospective buyer or seller, as the German Government has contended.

27. Moreover, the City of Munich may be considered to be a prospective purchaser, inasmuch as it lacks the requisite transport capacity and consequently needs services provided by a third party.

28. It should be borne in mind that if a contracting authority, while trading as a supplier, none

the less subcontracts certain services to a third party, the selection of that subcontractor may well be based on non-economic considerations. It is also quite possible that, at some stage in the process, public funds will be used

29. As to the case-law relied on by the German Government, (6) this goes to the question of whether or not a given body is a public body. There are three conditions; all must be met. The body must have been established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not of an industrial or commercial character; it must have legal personality; and it must be closely dependent on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law. Unlike a regional or local authority, a body governed by public law' is thus not by definition a contracting authority. However, where a public body meets the cumulative criteria, then it too is by definition a contracting authority within the meaning of the Directive, and the procedural rules set out in that Directive must be fully observed, whether or not the contract awarded concerns tasks in the general interest, and whether or not these are carried out under normal market conditions

30. I think Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria (7) may be helpful on that point - the Court explained there that Article 1(a) of the Directive makes no distinction between public works contracts awarded by a contracting authority for the purposes of fulfilling its task of meeting needs in the general interest, and those which are unrelated to that task - the reason for this being to avoid the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities.

31. In the present case, therefore, it is immaterial that the activity in question may be unrelated to the body's task in the general interest, or may not involve any public funds. Where, under the terms of the Directive, a body ranks as a contracting authority, the Directive requires it to conduct award procedures. Accordingly that rule applies even where the contracting authority itself is trading as a supplier on the market, and subcontracting certain parts of a contract to a third party. It is, after all, entirely possible that non-economic considerations might be involved in the selection of a subcontractor, just as it is possible that public funds might be used in the course of the operation.

32. Incidentally, I agree with the Commission's view that it was open to the City of Munich to set up a legally independent body if it wished to offer services to third parties under normal market conditions. If such an organisation aims to make a profit, bears the losses related to the exercise of its activities itself, and performs no public tasks, it is not a public body, and hence not a contracting authority within the meaning of the Directive; its activities will therefore not be subject to the provisions of the directives coordinating public procurement procedures. A body which aims to make a profit and bears the losses associated with the exercise of its activity will not normally become involved in an award procedure on conditions which are not economically justified. (8)

33. Germany has argued that European procurement law does not require tenders within tenders'. It cites Article 1(a)(ii) of Directive 92/50, which excludes certain tasks from the scope of the Directive, and refers in that connection to Article 7 of Directive 93/38, a directive dealing with a number of specific sectors; that provision, which excludes contracts awarded for purposes of resale or hire to third parties from the scope of the directive, is, it suggests, applicable to Directive 92/50 by virtue of the reference to it there, the reason for the exclusion being that the purchase of the goods occurs in principle in a context of free competition, and the ensuing commercial discipline prevents a contracting authority in the sector from favouring particular tenderers on non-economic grounds. It claims that is also the position in the present case.

34. I disagree. The purpose of Article 1(a)(ii) of Directive 92/50 is to exclude from the scope of that Directive any contracts relating to the specific areas covered by Directive 90/531 (since replaced by Directive 93/38), because they are covered by what is now Directive 93/38. The provision in question, as the Commission has observed, establishes a dividing-line between Directive 92/50 and Directive 93/38. Directives 93/36 (9) and 93/37 (10) both contain a similar dividing-line. It is only in areas where the sectoral directive applies that Article 7 of that directive has any part to play. However, it not Directive 93/38 which applies to the present case, but Directive 92/50. Article 7 of the former is therefore not applicable, nor may it be applied by analogy.

35. Similarly, there is no merit in the German Government's contention that it would not be possible to conduct an award procedure for services which had to be subcontracted within the context of an award procedure in which the City of Munich was itself a bidder, either prior to that procedure or after it. First, that is no reason to disregard European public procurement legislation. Moreover, it is apparent from documents in the case-file that neither in the notice nor the conditions of tender is there a requirement that the tenderer identify any subcontractor beforehand. The conditions expressly state that subcontracting was allowed. In such a case, any subcontracting had to occur under normal conditions of competition and the party awarded the contract was obliged, on request, to inform the principal subsequently of the identity of the subcontractor.

36. Finally, the German Government considers that if, in the circumstances of the present case, the City of Munich were deemed to be a contracting authority, it could rely on the exception contained in Article 11(3)(d) of Directive 92/50. It would not have been possible to conduct an award procedure for the subcontracted transport services prior to the award procedure for the main contract.

37. The first thing that must be said about that argument is that Article 11(3), which permits derogation from the rules designed to guarantee the proper exercise of the rights granted by the Treaty in the field of public service contracts, must be construed strictly; moreover, a party seeking to rely on that provision must prove that the exceptional circumstances invoked to justify the derogation do indeed obtain. (11)

38. Article 11(3)(d) of Directive 92/50 allows prior publication of a contract notice to be waived in certain specified circumstances, namely in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable by the contracting authorities in question, the time-limit cannot be kept. For a claim based on that provision to succeed, therefore, there must be irrefutable proof of extreme urgency - and the urgency must be unforeseen.

39. However, it follows from the above that an award procedure for the (sub)contract could have been conducted following the main award. The German Government cannot therefore properly argue that in the circumstances it was not possible to conduct an award procedure for the relevant transport services; nor may it plead unforeseeability within the meaning of Article 11(3)(d). One hardly needs to add that it is illogical for a contracting authority which is itself bidding for a contract, aware from the start that a substantial part of the execution of that contract would have to be subcontracted should the bid succeed, to fail to take all necessary steps to ensure that it will be able to meet its own obligations under the Directive. Accordingly I consider that the argument predicated on the time-consuming nature of the (sub)contract award procedure is untenable.

40. It follows from the foregoing that I agree with the Commission that the German Government has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50. Furthermore, the infringement is a continuing one, since the contract in question was concluded for a term of 25 years.

41. On that latter point, the German Government has claimed that it is, in any case, under no duty to terminate the contract prematurely. First, to do so would be both impossible (no mention being made of such a contingency in the contract itself), and contrary to the maxim pacta sunt servanda. Secondly, Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 (12) empowers Member States to maintain in force the consequences of contracts awarded in contravention of the public procurement directives.

42. That provision does indeed permit Member States to provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement, thus protecting the legitimate expectation of the parties to the contract. However, as I stated in my Opinion in Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 (the issue there was admissibility), that provision in no way renders Treaty infringement proceedings impossible or meaningless. In fact the reverse is true: a finding that an infringement has occurred may well be to the advantage of any parties adversely affected.

43. I should like to make one further - emphatic - point: there are limits to the extent to which Member States may shelter behind the principle of legitimate expectation and the maxim pacta sunt servanda in order to avoid the consequences attendant on repeated breaches of the procurement directives. Ultimately each Member State must take responsibility for ensuring compliance with those directives within its jurisdiction.

44. However, as the Commission has refrained from raising such issues in the present proceedings, they need not be addressed here.

V - Conclusion

45. On the basis of the foregoing I suggest that the Court:

(1) Declares that the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8 in conjunction with Article 11(1) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts;

1
Par sa requête, la Commission des Communautés européennes demande à la Cour de constater que, du fait que les contrats d'enlèvement d'ordures conclus par les villes de Lüdinghausen et d'Olfen ainsi que par les communes de Nordkirchen, de Senden et de Ascheberg ont été passés au mépris des règles de publicité prévues par les dispositions combinées des articles 8, 15, paragraphe 2, et 16, paragraphe 1, de la directive 92/50/CEE du Conseil, du 18 juin 1992, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de services (JO L 209, p. 1), la République fédérale d'Allemagne a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de cette directive.

En vertu de l'article 8 de la directive 92/50, «[l]es marchés qui ont pour objet des services figurant à l'annexe I A sont passés conformément aux dispositions des titres III à VI».

3
L'article 15, paragraphe 2, de cette directive dispose que «[l]es pouvoirs adjudicateurs désireux de passer un marché public de services en recourant à une procédure ouverte, restreinte ou, dans les conditions prévues à l'article 11, à une procédure négociée font connaître leur intention au moyen d'un avis».

4
Selon l'article 16, paragraphe 1, de ladite directive, «[l]es pouvoirs adjudicateurs qui ont passé un marché public ou organisé un concours envoient un avis concernant les résultats de la procédure d'attribution à l'Office des publications officielles des Communautés européennes».

Les faits et la procédure précontentieuse

5
En 1997, les villes de Lüdinghausen et d'Olfen ainsi que les communes de Nordkirchen, de Senden et de Ascheberg ont conclu des contrats d'enlèvement d'ordures sans appliquer la procédure prévue par la directive 92/50. Ces contrats couraient jusqu'au 31 décembre 2003.

6
Après avoir mis la République fédérale d'Allemagne en mesure de présenter ses observations, la Commission a, le 20 avril 2001, émis un avis motivé relevant que les marchés relatifs aux transports des déchets des villes de Lüdinghausen et d'Olfen ainsi que des communes de Nordkirchen, de Senden et de Ascheberg (ci-après les «marchés en question») auraient dû faire l'objet d'un appel d'offres dans le Journal officiel des Communautés européennes, conformément à la directive 92/50, et que la République fédérale d'Allemagne aurait dû mettre un terme à ces contrats. Elle a, dès lors, invité cet État membre à se conformer à ses obligations résultant du traité CE dans un délai de deux mois. Insatisfaite de la réponse apportée par les autorités allemandes par lettre du 22 juin 2001, la Commission a décidé d'introduire le présent recours.

Sur le recours

Sur la recevabilité du recours

Argumentation des parties

7
Le gouvernement allemand fait valoir que le recours est irrecevable puisqu'il ne subsiste pas de violation du droit communautaire au terme du délai fixé dans l'avis motivé.

8
En effet, à cette date, la République fédérale d'Allemagne aurait déjà reconnu que les marchés en question avaient été passés en violation du droit communautaire et aurait assuré que, à l'avenir, la pratique suivie par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs en question respecterait le droit communautaire. Ces derniers n'étant pas tenus de résilier les contrats, elle aurait, à ce moment, déjà pris les mesures nécessaires pour répondre aux objections de la Commission.

9

10
Selon, elle, ce manquement subsiste pendant toute la durée d'exécution des contrats illicites (voir arrêt du 10 avril 2003, Commission/Allemagne, C-20/01 et C-28/01, Rec. p. I-3609, points 35 et 36). L'intention de passer, à l'avenir, les contrats d'enlèvement d'ordures conformément au droit communautaire relatif à la passation des marchés ne suffirait pas à mettre fin au manquement reproché (voir arrêt du 28 octobre 1999, Commission/Autriche, C-328/96, Rec. p. I-7479, points 42 à 44). Étant donné que, au terme du délai fixé dans l'avis motivé, les contrats en question étaient en cours d'exécution, la violation aurait encore persisté à cette date et n'aurait pris fin que le 31 décembre 2003 (arrêt Commission/Allemagne, précité, points 32, 38 et 39).

Il y a lieu de rappeler qu'il résulte des termes mêmes de l'article 226, second alinéa, CE que la Commission ne peut saisir la Cour d'un recours en manquement que si l'État membre en cause ne s'est pas conformé à l'avis motivé dans le délai que celle-ci a imparti à cette fin (voir arrêt du 31 mars 1992, Commission/Italie, C-362/90, Rec. p. I-2353, point 9).

12
Si, en matière de passation des marchés publics, la Cour a dit pour droit qu'un manquement n'existe plus à la date d'expiration du délai fixé dans l'avis de la Commission lorsque l'avis de marché en question avait, à ce moment-là, déjà épuisé tous ses effets (voir, en ce sens, arrêt Commission/Italie, précité, points 11 et 13), il ressort également de la jurisprudence qu'un manquement subsiste à cette date lorsque des contrats prétendument conclus en violation des dispositions communautaires relatives aux marchés publics continuent à produire leurs effets (voir, en ce sens, arrêts précités, Commission/Autriche, point 44, et Commission/Allemagne, points 34 à 37).

En l'espèce, il convient de constater que, au terme du délai fixé dans l'avis motivé, les contrats d'enlèvement d'ordures prétendument conclus en violation des dispositions de la directive 92/50 étaient en cours d'exécution. Par conséquent, le prétendu manquement persistait encore à cette date et n'a pris fin qu'à la date d'échéance de ces contrats.

14
Dans ce contexte, l'argumentation avancée par le gouvernement allemand pour écarter la recevabilité du recours en manquement ne peut pas être accueillie.

15
En effet, selon le gouvernement allemand, il ressort de l'article 2, paragraphe 6, de la directive 89/665/CEE du Conseil, du 21 décembre 1989, portant coordination des dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives relatives à l'application des procédures de recours en matière de passation des marchés publics de fournitures et de travaux (JO L 395, p. 33) que le principe pacta sunt servanda s'oppose à une obligation de résilier ces contrats et protège les droits acquis même en vertu de contrats conclus en violation des dispositions régissant la passation des marchés publics. À cet égard, il convient de répondre que, si cette disposition permet aux États membres de limiter, après la conclusion du contrat, la protection juridique nationale à des dommages-intérêts aux personnes lésées par une telle violation, elle ne saurait avoir pour conséquence que le comportement d'un pouvoir adjudicateur devrait, en toute éventualité, être considéré comme conforme au droit communautaire dans le cadre d'un recours en manquement (voir, en ce sens, arrêt Commission/Allemagne, précité, points 38 et 39).

16
S'agissant de l'argument selon lequel la République fédérale d'Allemagne a reconnu les défauts qui ont affecté les procédures de passation en question, il convient de relever que, dans le cadre d'un recours en manquement, il appartient à la Cour de constater si le manquement reproché existe ou non, même si l'État concerné ne conteste plus le manquement. S'il en était autrement, les États membres, en reconnaissant le manquement et en admettant la responsabilité qui peut en découler, seraient libres, à tout moment lors d'une procédure en manquement pendante devant la Cour, de mettre fin à celle-ci sans que l'existence du manquement et le fondement de leur responsabilité aient jamais été établis en justice (voir, en ce sens, arrêts du 22 juin 1993, Commission/Danemark, C-243/89, Rec. p. I-3353, point 30 et Commission/Allemagne, précité, points 40 et 41).

17
Au vu de ce qui précède, il convient de considérer que le recours introduit par la Commission est recevable.

Sur le fond

18
À l'appui de son recours, la Commission fait valoir, comme grief unique, que les marchés en question auraient dû faire l'objet d'un appel d'offres dans le Journal officiel des Communautés européennes conformément aux articles 8, 15, paragraphe 2, et 16, paragraphe 1, de la directive 92/50.

19
Le gouvernement allemand admet que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs en question auraient dû passer un appel d'offres pour leurs marchés de services dans le Journal officiel des Communautés européennes et qu'il n'a pas été procédé à cette publication.

20
Dès lors le recours introduit par la Commission est fondé.

21
Eu égard à ce qui précède, il convient de constater que, du fait que les contrats d'enlèvement d'ordures conclus par les villes de Lüdinghausen et d'Olfen ainsi que par les communes de Nordkirchen, de Senden et de Ascheberg ont été passés au mépris des règles de publicité prévues par les dispositions combinées des articles 8, 15, paragraphe 2, et 16, paragraphe 1, de la directive 92/50, la République fédérale d'Allemagne a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de cette directive.

22
En vertu de l'article 69, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens. La Commission ayant conclu à la condamnation de la République fédérale d'Allemagne et celle-ci ayant succombé en ses moyens, il convient de la condamner aux dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (première chambre) déclare et arrête:

Du fait que les contrats d'enlèvement d'ordures conclus par les villes de Lüdinghausen et d'Olfen ainsi que par les communes de Nordkirchen, de Senden et de Ascheberg ont été passés au mépris des règles de publicité prévues par les dispositions combinées des articles 8, 15, paragraphe 2, et 16, paragraphe 1, de la directive 92/50/CEE du Conseil, du 18 juin 1992, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de services, la République fédérale d'Allemagne a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de cette directive.

2)

La République fédérale d'Allemagne est condamnée aux dépens.

Signatures.

[1] - OJ C 112 of 10.5.2003

Judgment of the Court (Second Chamber) of 13 January 2005

Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Spain. Failure to fulfil obligations - Directives 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC - Public contracts - Award procedure for public supply and public works contracts - Scope - Definition of contracting authority - Inter-administrative cooperation agreements - Definition of contract - Use of the negotiated procedure in cases not provided for by the directive. Case C-84/03.

1. Approximation of laws - Award procedures for public supply and public works contracts - Directives 93/36 and 93/37 - Contracting authorities - Body governed by public law - Concept - National legislation excluding bodies governed by private law from fulfilling the conditions laid down in the directives - Not permissible

(Council Directives 93/36, Art. 1(b), and 93/37, Art. 1(b))

2. Approximation of laws - Award procedures for public supply and public works contracts - Directives 93/36 and 93/37 - Public contract - Concept - National legislation excluding cooperation agreements concluded between bodies governed by public law - Not permissible

(Council Directives 93/36, Art. 1(a), and 93/37, Art. 1(a))

3. Approximation of laws - Award procedures for public supply and public works contracts - Directives 93/36 and 93/37 - Derogation from common rules - Strict interpretation - Use of the negotiated procedure - Limits

(Council Directives 93/36 and 93/37)

1. National legislation on public contracts which excludes from its scope private law bodies, even though they fulfil the cumulative requirements in the light of which the concept of body governed by public law' is defined and which are laid down in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directives 93/36 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts constitutes an incorrect transposition of the definition of body governed by public law' and, accordingly, of contracting authority' in the first subparagraph of Article 1(b).

In order to determine whether a private law body is to be classified as a body governed by public law it is only necessary to establish whether the body in question satisfies those conditions, since an entity's private law status does not constitute a criterion for precluding it from being classified as a contracting authority for the purposes of those directives.

2. National legislation on public contracts which excludes, a priori, from its scope cooperation agreements concluded between public authorities and other public undertakings, and therefore, also the agreements which constitute public contracts for the purpose of those directives constitutes an incorrect transposition of Directives 93/36 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts.

In order for there to be a public supply contract or a public works contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of the directive, it is sufficient, in principle, if the contract was concluded between a local authority and a person legally distinct from it. The position can be otherwise only in the case where the local authority exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling local authority or authorities.

3. The derogations from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the Treaty in connection with public supply contracts and public works contracts must be interpreted strictly. In order not to deprive Directives 93/96 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts of their effectiveness, Member States cannot, therefore, provide for the use of the negotiated procedure in cases not provided for in those directives, or add new conditions to the cases expressly provided for by those directives which make that procedure easier to use.

Judgment

Costs

62. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission has asked for costs and the Kingdom of Spain has been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds the Court (Second Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that by failing to transpose correctly into its national legal system Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts and, in particular,

- by excluding from the scope of the Ley de Contratos de las Administraciones Publicas (Law on contracts awarded by public authorities) of 16 June 2000, in the codified version approved by the Real Decreto Legislativo 2/2000 of 16 June 2000, more particularly in Article 1(3) thereof, the entities governed by private law fulfilling the requirements laid down in the first, second and third indents of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of each of those directives;

- by excluding absolutely from the scope of that law, in Article 3(1)(c) thereof, cooperation agreements concluded between public authorities and the other public undertakings and, therefore, also agreements which constitute public contracts for the purpose of those directives; and

- by permitting, in Article 141(a) and Article 182(a) and (g) of that law, the negotiated procedure to be used in two cases which are not provided for in those directives,

the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under those directives;

2. Orders the Kingdom of Spain to pay the costs.

1. By its application the Commission of the European Communities has brought an action for a declaration that by failing correctly to transpose into its national legal system Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) and, in particular,

- by excluding from the scope of the Ley de Contratos de las Administraciones Publicas (Law on contracts awarded by public authorities) of 16 June 2000, in the codified version approved by the Real Decreto Legislativo 2/2000 of 16 June 2000 (BOE No 148 of 21 June 2000; the codified law'), more particularly in Article 1(3) of the codified law, entities governed by private law which fulfil the requirements laid down in the first, second and third indents of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b), of each of those directives;

- by excluding absolutely from the scope of the codified law, in Article 3(1)(c) thereof, cooperation agreements concluded between public authorities and the other public undertakings and, therefore, also agreements which constitute public contracts for the purpose of those directives; and

- by permitting in Article 141(a) and Article 182(a) and (g) of the codified law, the negotiated procedure to be used in two cases which are not provided for in those directives, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under the provisions of the EC Treaty and of those directives.

Legal background

Community legislation

2. Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 provides:

contracting authorities shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

A body governed by public law means any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

- having a legal personality, and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law....'

3. The provisions of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 are essentially the same.

4. Under Article 6(2) to (4) of Directive 93/36:

2. The contracting authorities may award their supply contracts by negotiated procedure in the case of irregular tenders in response to an open or restricted procedure or in the case of tenders which are unacceptable under national provisions that are in accordance with provisions of Title IV, in so far as the original terms for the contract are not substantially altered. The contracting authorities shall in these cases publish a tender notice unless they include in such negotiated procedures all the enterprises satisfying the criteria of Articles 20 to 24 which, during the prior open or restricted procedure, have submitted tenders in accordance with the formal requirements of the tendering procedure.

3. The contracting authorities may award their supply contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice, in the following cases:

(a) in the absence of tenders or appropriate tenders in response to an open or restricted procedure in so far as the original terms of the contract are not substantially altered and provided that a report is communicated to the Commission;

(b) when the products involved are manufactured purely for the purpose of research, experiment, study or development, this provision does not extend to quantity production to establish commercial viability or to recover research and development costs;

(c) when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with protection of exclusive rights, the products supplied may be manufactured or delivered only by a particular supplier;

(d) in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable by the contracting authorities in question, the time-limit laid down for the open, restricted or negotiated procedures referred to in paragraph 2 cannot be kept. The circumstances invoked to justify extreme urgency must not in any event be attributable to the contracting authorities;

(e) for additional deliverers by the original supplier which are intended either as a partial replacement of normal supplies or installations or as the extension of existing supplies or installations where a change of supplier would oblige the contracting authority to acquire material having different technical characteristics which would result in incompatibility or disproportionate technical difficulties in operation and maintenance. The length of such contracts as well as that of recurrent contracts may, as a general rule, not exceed three years.

4. In all other cases, the contracting authorities shall award their supply contracts by the open procedure or by the restricted procedure.'

5. Under Article 7(3) and (4) of Directive 93/37:

3. The contracting authorities may award their public works contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, in the following cases:

(a) in the absence of tenders or of appropriate tenders in response to an open or restricted procedure in so far as the original terms of the contract are not substantially altered and provided that a report is communicated to the Commission at its request;

(b) when, for technical or artistic reasons or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the works may only be carried out by a particular contractor;

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(c) in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseen by the contracting authorities in question, the time-limit laid down for the open, restricted or negotiated procedures referred to in paragraph 2 cannot be kept. The circumstances invoked to justify extreme urgency must not in any event be attributable to the contracting authorities;

(d) for additional works not included in the project initially considered or in the contract first concluded but which have, through unforeseen circumstances, become necessary for the carrying-out of the work described therein, on condition that the award is made to the contractor carrying out such work:

- when such works cannot be technically or economically separated from the main contract without great inconvenience to the contracting authorities, or

- when such works, although separable from the execution of the original contract, are strictly necessary to its later stages.

However, the aggregate amount of contracts awarded for additional works may not exceed 50% of the amount of the main contract;

(e) for new works consisting of the repetition of similar works entrusted to the undertaking to which the same contracting authorities awarded an earlier contract, provided that such works conform to a basic project for which a first contract was awarded according to the procedures referred to in paragraph 4.

As soon as the first project is put up for tender, notice must be given that this procedure might be adopted and the total estimated cost of subsequent works shall be taken into consideration by the contracting authorities when they apply the provisions of Article 6. This procedure may only be adopted during the three years following the conclusion of the original contract.

4. In all other cases, the contracting authorities shall award their public works contracts by the open procedure or by the restricted procedure.'

National legislation

6. The scope ratione personae of the Spanish legislation on public procurement is defined in Article 1 of the codified law, which includes all public authorities, whether State authorities or authorities of the autonomous communities and regional or local authorities.

7. Article 1(3) of the codified law provides:

This law shall also apply to the awarding of contracts by autonomous bodies in every case and to other bodies governed by public law having legal personality and connected with or under the control of a public authority, which fulfil the following criteria:

(a) they were established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not being of an industrial or commercial nature;

(b) they are financed, for the most part, by public authorities or other bodies governed by public law, or are subject to management supervision by those bodies, or have an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by public authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.'

8. The sixth additional provision of the codified law, entitled Rules applicable to the award of contracts in the public sector', provides that commercial companies in which public authorities or their autonomous bodies, or bodies governed by public law, hold, directly or indirectly, a majority shareholding, shall, when awarding contracts, comply with the advertising and competition rules, unless the nature of the operation to be carried out is incompatible with those rules'.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

9. Article 3(1) of the codified law excludes from its scope cooperation agreements between the State authorities, on the one hand, and the Social Security, autonomous communities, local bodies, their autonomous bodies and any other public body, on the other hand, or between these bodies'.

10. Articles 141(a) (concerning works contracts) and 182(a) (concerning supply contracts) of the codified law provide that that negotiated procedure may be used without prior publication of a tender notice where the contract has not been awarded during an open or restricted procedure, or where the candidates have not been allowed to submit tenders, so long as there has been no alteration of the contract's original conditions, except the price, which may not be increased by more than 10%.

11. Article 182(g) of the codified law states that the negotiated procedure may be used without prior publication of a tender notice in the procedures which concern goods whose uniformity has been declared necessary for their joint use by the administration, in so far as the choice of the type of goods in question was made previously and independently, pursuant to an invitation to tender, in accordance with the provisions of this chapter.

Pre-litigation procedure

12. Taking the view that the successive laws transposing Directives 93/36 and 93/37 into Spanish law were partly incompatible with them, the Commission sent a letter of formal notice to the Kingdom of Spain on 17 September 1997 and a supplementary letter of formal notice on 24 July 2000.

13. Following notification of the codified law by the Spanish authorities, the Commission took the view that certain contentious aspects of the transposition had been resolved.

14. Nevertheless, since in its view Directives 93/36 and 93/37 continued to be transposed incorrectly into Spanish law, the Commission sent a reasoned opinion to the Kingdom of Spain on 24 January 2001 and a supplementary reasoned opinion on 31 January 2002, calling on the Kingdom of Spain to take the measures necessary to comply within two months from the notification of the last reasoned opinion.

15. Since the Kingdom of Spain's response to the supplementary reasoned opinion was deemed to be unsatisfactory, the Commission decided to bring the present proceedings.

The action

16. In support of its action the Commission relies on three grounds of complaint.

17. By its first ground of complaint the Commission alleg es that the Kingdom of Spain has excluded entities governed by private law, a priori, from the scope of the codified law, even though they may be bodies governed by public law for the purposes of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directives 93/36 and 93/37.

18. By its second ground of complaint the Commission alleges that the Kingdom of Spain has excluded from the codified law cooperation agreements concluded between bodies governed by public law, although those agreements may constitute public contracts for the purpose of Directives 93/36 and 93/37.

19. By its third ground of complaint the Commission alleges that the Kingdom of Spain has permitted the use of the negotiated procedure in two cases which are not provided for by Directives 93/36 and 93/37, that is the award of contracts following procedures which have been declared unsuccessful and the award of supply contracts for uniform goods.

First ground of complaint: exclusion of entities governed by private law fulfilling the conditions laid down in the first, second and third indents of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directives 93/36 and 93/37 from the scope of the codified law

20. The Commission argues that the scope ratione personae of the codified law does not coincide with that of Directives 93/36 and 93/37, in so far as the national law applies exclusively to bodies subject to a public law regime for the purposes of Spanish law, while the legal form of the body at issue falls outside the definition of body governed by public law' set out in those directives.

21. Relying on the judgment in Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others [1998] ECR I-73, paragraphs 17 to 35, the Commission recalls that the Court has held that a body governed by public law' must be understood as a body which fulfils the three cumulative conditions set out in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37.

22. Relying on the judgments of the Court (in particular, the judgments in Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635 and Case C-360/96 BFI Holding [1998] ECR I-6821, the Commission submits that the definition of a contracting authority in Article 1 of Directives 93/36 and 93/37 must be interpreted in functional terms.

23. Furthermore, the Commission asserts that the interpretation given by the Spanish Government of a body governed by public law' means that a Community concept which must be given a uniform interpretation throughout the Community ceases to be autonomous.

24. The Spanish Government opts for a literal interpretation of the definition of body governed by public law'. It argues that Directives 93/36 and 93/37 do not include commercial companies under public control in that definition. In support of its arguments, it relies on Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), which distinguishes between the notion of body governed by public law', which is the same in the public contracts directives, and public undertaking', whose definition corresponds to the definition of public commercial company.

25. Furthermore, the Spanish Government rejects any solution of a general nature. It submits that a genuine delimitation of the definition of body governed by public law' may be made only after defining needs in the general interest' and, in particular, needs not having an industrial or commercial character', by means of a detailed examination of each body.

26. The Commission replies that Directive 93/38 is a special regulation, and that its exceptional character precludes its use in interpreting general provisions, in this case Directives 93/36 and 93/37.

Findings of the Court

27. It must be observed that according to settled case-law the definition of body governed by public law', a concept of Community law which must be given an autonomous and uniform interpretation throughout the Community, is defined in functional terms exclusively under the three cumulative conditions in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directives 93/36 and 93/37 (see, to that effect, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others , paragraphs 20 and 21; Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraphs 51 to 53; Case C-214/00 Commission v Spain [2003] ECR I-4667, paragraphs 52 and 53; and Case C-283/00 Commission v Spain [2003] ECR I-11697, paragraph 69).

28. It follows that in order to determine whether a private law body is to be classified as a body governed by public law it is only necessary to establish whether the body in question satisfies the three cumulative conditions laid down in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directives 93/36 and 93/37, since an entity's private law status does not constitute a criterion for precluding it from being classified as a contracting authority for the purposes of those directives (Case C214/00 Commission v Spain , paragraphs 54, 55 and 60).

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

29. The Court has also stated that that interpretation does not amount to a disregard for the industrial or commercial character of the general interest needs which the body concerned satisfies, since that factor is necessarily taken into consideration in order to determine whether or not it satisfies the condition laid down in the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directives 93/36 and 93/37 (see, to that effect, Case C-283/00 Commission v Spain , paragraph 75).

30. Furthermore, that conclusion is not invalidated by the want of an express reference in Directives 93/36 and 93/37 to the specific category of public undertakings' which is used in Directive 93/38 (see, to that effect, Case C-283 Commission v Spain , paragraph 76).

31. Thus it follows from the foregoing that the Spanish legislation constitutes an incorrect transposition of the definition of contracting authority' in Article 1(b) of Directives 93/36 and 93/37, in so far as it excludes the bodies of private law from its scope, even though they may satisfy the conditions laid down in the first, second and third indents of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of those directives.

32. In those circumstances the Commission's first ground of complaint must be upheld.

Second ground of complaint: exclusion of cooperation agreements concluded between bodies governed by public law from the scope of the codified law

Arguments of the parties

33. The Commission states that the codified law excludes from its scope cooperation agreements concluded either between the general State administration and the Social Security, autonomous communities, local bodies, their autonomous bodies and any other public body, or between public bodies themselves. It argues that that absolute exclusion constitutes an incorrect transposition of Directives 93/36 and 93/37, as some of those agreements may be of the same kind as the public contracts covered by them.

34. The Commission maintains that this exclusion is not found in Directives 93/36 and 93/37.

35. The Commission relies on the definition of a contract set out in Article 1(a) of Directives 93/36 and 93/37 and the case-law of the Court, according to which, in order to show the existence of a contract, it must be determined whether there has been an agreement between two separate persons (judgment in Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I-8121, paragraph 49). It takes the view, therefore, that, in the light of the above, inter-administrative cooperation agreements may be contracts within the meaning of Directives 93/36 and 93/37.

36. The Spanish Government asserts that the agreements are the normal way for bodies governed by public law to establish relations between each other. It maintains that those relations are marginal to the contract. Furthermore, it questions whether the judgment in Teckal is well founded and submits that the principle in Article 6 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) is implicitly included in the other directives on public contracts.

Findings of the Court

37. According to the definitions given in Article 1(a) of Directives 93/36 and 93/37, public supply or public works contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a supplier or a contractor and a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of the directives, for the purchase of products or the performance of a certain type of works.

38. In accordance with Article 1(a) of Directive 93/36, it is sufficient, in principle, if the contract was concluded between a local authority and a person legally distinct from it. The position can be otherwise only in the case where the local authority exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling local authority or authorities. (judgment in Teckal , paragraph 50).

39. Having regard to the fact that the elements constituting the definition of a contract in Directives 93/36 and 93/37 are identical, except for the purpose of the contract in question, the approached adopted in Teckal must be applied to inter-administrative agreements covered by Directive 93/37.

40. Consequently, in so far as it excludes, a priori, from the scope of the codified law relations between public authorities, their public bodies and, in a general manner, non-commercial bodies governed by public law, whatever the nature of those relations, the Spanish law at issue in this case constitutes an incorrect transposition of Directives 93/36 and 93/37.

41. In those circumstances the Commission's second complaint must be upheld.

Third ground of complaint: use of the negotiated procedure laid down in the codified law in two cases not provided for by Directives 93/36 and 93/37

42. The Commission takes the view that the codified law authorises use of the negotiated procedure in two cases which are not provided for by Directives 93/36 and 93/37: the award of contracts following procedures declared unsuccessful and the award of supply contracts for uniform goods.

First part of the third ground of complaint concerning the award of contracts following unsuccessful procedures

Arguments of the parties

43. In the Commission's view, by permitting an increase of the original tender price of up to 10% in relation to the earlier open or restricted procedures, Articles 141(a) and 182(a) of the codified law contravene Directives 93/36 and 93/37, since they allow a substantial alteration of one of the original conditions of the contract, namely the price.

44. The Commission maintains that the list of cases in respect of which the negotiated procedure may be used is limited. The interpretation of the concept of nonsubstantial alteration' must therefore be restrictive.

45. The Spanish Government complains that the Commission has not indicated which price modifications must be regarded as substantial and which do not merit such a classification. For the purposes of legal certainty, the Spanish legislature transformed the vague notion of substantial modifications to the original conditions of the contract' into a well-defined notion.

46. In response, the Commission asserts that, in the context of an action for failure to fulfil obligations, it is neither bound to define the limits of the infringement nor to indicate measures which would enable the failure to fulfil obligations to be eliminated. Furthermore, it states that the aim of the national legislature in seeking to define the concepts contained in the directives can only result in failure to apply them.

Findings of the Court

47. As is clear, in particular, from the twelfth recital in the preamble to Directive 93/36 and the eighth recital in the preamble to Directive 93/37, the negotiated procedure is exceptional in nature and, therefore, must be applied only in cases which are set out in an exhaustive list. To that end Articles 6(3)(a) of Directive 93/36 and Article 7(3)(a) of Directive 93/37 exhaustively list the cases in which the negotiated procedure may be used without prior publication of a tender notice.

48. According to settled case-law, the derogations from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the Treaty in connection with public works contracts must be interpreted strictly (judgments in Case C-57/94 Commission v Italy [1995] ECR I-1249, paragraph 23, and Case C-318/94 Commission v Germany [1996] ECR I-1949, paragraph 13). To prevent the directives at issue being deprived of their effectiveness, the Member States cannot, therefore, provide for the use of the negotiated procedure in cases not provided for in Directives 93/36 and 93/37, or add new conditions to the cases expressly provided for by those directives which make that procedure easier to use.

49. In the present case it cannot be denied that, in so far as they authorise the use of the negotiated procedure where it has not been possible to award the contract during an open or restricted procedure or where the candidates were not allowed to tender, provided that there were no modifications of the original conditions of the contract apart from the price, which cannot be increased by more than 10%, Articles 141(a) and 182(a) of the codified law do indeed add a new condition to the provisions of Directives 93/36 and 93/37 which is capable of undermining both their scope and their exceptional character. Such a condition cannot be regarded as a nonsubstantial alteration of the original terms of the contracts as provided for in Article 6(3)(a) of Directive 93/36 and Article 7(3)(a) of Directive 93/37.

50. In those circumstances it must be held that Articles 141(a) and 182(a) of the codified law constitute an incorrect transposition of Article 6(3)(a) of Directive 93/36 and Article 7(3)(a) of Directive 93/37.

Second part of the third ground of complaint concerning the award of supply contracts for uniform goods

Arguments of the parties

51. The Commission submits that the procedure set out in Article 182(g) of the codified law disregards the provisions of Article 6(2) and (3) of Directive 93/36, which sets out the cases in which the negotiated procedure may be applied.

52. In this case, the Spanish law provides that the negotiated procedure may be used without prior publication of a tender notice in respect of goods whose uniformity has been held to be necessary for their common use by the administration. The use of that procedure is possible in so far as the type of goods has been chosen in advance and independently, pursuant to a call for tenders.

53. The Spanish Government contends that the calls for tenders seeking to determine the type of uniform goods are similar to framework contracts.

54. Furthermore, the Spanish Government contends that the calls for tenders at issue do not differ in any way from the tendering procedures following an agreement or framework agreement provided for by another article of the codified law, which is not subject to any comment by the Commission. It takes the view, therefore, that the codified law is in accordance with the directives on public contracts.

55. Having set out the definition of the framework agreements, the Commission asserts that those agreements are not covered by Directive 93/36.

Findings of the Court

56. As regards the award of supply contracts for uniform goods, referred to in Article 182(g) of the codified law, the negotiated procedure may be used only in the cases exhaustively listed in Art icle 6(2) and (3) of Directive 93/36. Article 6(4) states, moreover, that in all other cases, the contracting authorities shall award their supply contracts by the open procedure or by the restricted procedure'.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

57. The provision at issue, introduced by the Spanish legislature, does not correspond either to the case mentioned in Article 6(2) of Directive 93/36 or to one of the five situations listed in Article 6(3) in which the use of a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice is expressly permitted. It must be stated, moreover, that the concept of framework agreement' does not come within the scope of those exceptions.

58. Furthermore, the Court has consistently held that the provisions which authorise derogations from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the Treaty in the field of public supply contracts must be strictly interpreted (judgment in Case C71/92 Commission v Spain [1993] ECR I-5923, paragraph 36). It is, therefore, for the Member States to show that their legislation constitutes a faithful transposition of the cases expressly provided for by the directive. In the present case, such evidence has not been provided by the Spanish Government.

59. Accordingly, to the extent that it authorises use of the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice for the procedures involving goods whose uniformity has been held to be necessary for their common use by the public authorities, provided that the choice of the type of goods has been made in advance, pursuant to a call for tenders, the law at issue constitutes an incorrect transposition of Article 6(2) and (3) of Directive 93/36.

60. In those circumstances the Commission's third complaint must be upheld.

61. In the light of the foregoing considerations, it must be held that, by failing to transpose correctly into its national legal system Directive 93/36 and Directive 93/37 and, in particular,

- by excluding from the scope of the codified law, more particularly in Article 1(3) thereof, the entities governed by private law fulfilling the requirements laid down in the first, second and third indents of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of each of those directives;

- by excluding absolutely from the scope of that law, in Article 3(1)(c) thereof, cooperation agreements concluded between public authorities and the other public undertakings and, therefore, also agreements which constitute public contracts for the purpose of those directives; and

- by permitting, in Article 141(a) and Article 182(a) and (g) of that law, the negotiated procedure to be used in two cases which are not provided for in those directives,

the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under those directives.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT OF JUSTICE

(Second Chamber)

of 13 January 2005

in Case C-84/03 Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Spain[1]

(Failure to fulfil obligations - Directives 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC -- Public contracts - Award procedure for public supply and public works contracts - Scope - Definition of contracting authority - Inter-administrative cooperation agreements - Definition of contract - Use of the negotiated procedure in cases not provided for by the directive)

(Language of the Case: Spanish)

In Case C-84/03, concerning an action for failure to fulfil obligations under Article 226 EC, brought on 26 February 2003 by the Commission of the European Communities (Agents: K. Wiedner and G. Valero Jordana) against the Kingdom of Spain (Agent: S. Ortiz Vaamonde), the Court of Justice (Second Chamber), composed of C.W.A. Timmermans, President of the Chamber, R. Schintgen, J. Makarczyk (Rapporteur), G. Arestis and J. Klučka, Judges; Advocate General, J. Kokott; Registrar, R. Grass, gave a judgment on 13 January 2005, in which it:

Declares that by failing to transpose correctly into its national legal system Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts and, in particular, by excluding from the scope of the Ley de Contratos de las Administraciones Públicas (Law on contracts awarded by public authorities) of 16 June 2000, in the codified version approved by the Real Decreto Legislativo 2/2000 of 16 June 2000, more particularly in Article 1(3) thereof, the private law undertakings fulfilling the requirements laid down in the first, second and third indents of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of each of those directives;

by excluding absolutely from the scope of that law, in Article 3(1)(c) thereof, cooperation agreements concluded between public authorities and the other public undertakings and, therefore, also agreements which constitute public contracts for the purpose of those directives; and

by permitting, in Article 141(a) and Article 182(a) and (g) of that law, the negotiated procedure to be used in two cases which are not provided for in those directives,

the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under those directives;

2. Orders the Kingdom of Spain to pay the costs.

(Case C-50/03)

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Oberlandesgericht Rostock (Higher Regional Court, Rostock) of 5 February 2003, received at the Court Registry on 10 February 2003, for a preliminary ruling in the procurement review procedure 1. Simrad GmbH & Co. KG, 2. Kongsberg Simrad AS against Ministry for Education, Science and Culture Mecklenburg-Vorpommern on the following questions:

Does an agreement to amend an existing public supply contract, to the effect that different goods are to be supplied from those originally agreed, constitute a public supply contract for the purposes of Article 1(a) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC[1] of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts ("Directive 93/36") in respect of which an invitation to tender must be issued where:

1. the value of the goods to which the amendment relates exceeds the de minimis amount referred to in Article 5(1)(a) of Directive 93/36 and

2. as regards the goods affected by the amendment, the amendment changes both the supplier and, in a material way, the specification of those goods?

Stadt Halle and RPL Recyclingpark Lochau GmbH v Arbeitsgemeinschaft Thermische Restabfall- und Energieverwertungsanlage TREA Leuna. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Oberlandesgericht Naumburg - Germany. Directive 92/50/EEC - Public service contracts - Award with no public call for tenders - Award of the contract to a semi-public undertaking - Judicial protection - Directive 89/665/EEC. Case C-26/03.

1. Approximation of laws - Review procedures relating to the award of public supply and public works contracts - Directive 89/665 - Obligation of the Member States to provide for review procedures - Reviewable decisions - Meaning - Decisions taken outside a formal award procedure and prior to a formal call for tenders - Included - Access to review procedures - Conditions - Requirement for procedure to have reached a particular stage - Not permissible

(Council Directives 89/665, Art. 1(1), and 92/50)

2. Approximation of laws - Award procedures for public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Scope - Contracting authority having a holding in the capital of a company legally distinct from it together with one or more private undertakings - Contract concluded by the contracting authority with that company - Included

(Council Directive 92/50)

1. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, itself amended by Directive 97/52, must be interpreted as meaning that the obligation of the Member States to ensure that effective and rapid remedies are available against decisions taken by contracting authorities extends also to decisions taken outside a formal award procedure and decisions prior to a formal call for tenders, in particular the decision on whether a particular contract falls within the personal and material scope of Directive 92/50, as amended. That possibility of review is available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining the contract in question who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement, from the time when the contracting authority has expressed its will in a manner capable of producing legal effects. The Member States are not therefore authorised to make the possibility of review subject to the fact that the public procurement procedure in question has formally reached a particular stage.

(see para. 41, operative part 1)

2. Where a contracting authority intends to conclude a contract for pecuniary interest relating to services within the material scope of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by Directive 97/52, with a company legally distinct from it, in whose capital it has a holding together with one or more private undertakings, the public award procedures laid down by that directive must always be applied, even if the holding is a majority one.

Judgment

Costs

54. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) rules as follows:

1. Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, itself amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, must be interpreted as meaning that the obligation of the Member States to ensure that effective and rapid remedies are available against decisions taken by contracting authorities extends also to decisions taken outside a formal award procedure and decisions prior to a formal call for tenders, in particular the decision on whether a particular contract falls within the personal and material scope of Directive 92/50, as amended. That possibility of review is available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining the contract in question who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement, from the time when the contracting authority has expressed its will in a manner capable of producing legal effects. The Member States are not therefore authorised to make the possibility of review subject to the fact that the public procurement procedure in question has formally reached a particular stage.

2. Where a contracting authority intends to conclude a contract for pecuniary interest relating to services within the material scope of Directive 92/50, as amended by Directive 97/52, with a company legally distinct from it, in whose capital it has a holding together with one or more private undertakings, the public award procedures laid down by that directive must always be applied.

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), itself amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) (Directive 89/665'). The reference for a preliminary ruling also concerns the interpretation of Articles 1(2) and 13(1) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), as amended by Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 1998 (OJ 1998 L 101, p. 1) (Directive 93/38').

2. The reference was made in the course of proceedings between Stadt Halle (City of Halle) (Germany) and RPL Recyclingpark Lochau GmbH (RPL Lochau') and Arbeitsgemeinschaft Thermische Restabfall und Energieverwertungsanlage TREA Leuna (TREA Leuna') concerning the lawfulness, from the point of view of the Community rules, of the award without a public tender procedure of a contract for services concerning the treatment of waste by the City of Halle to RPL Lochau, a majority of whose capital is held by the City of Halle and a minority by a private company.

Legal background

3. Under Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50, as amended by Directive 97/52 (Directive 92/50'), public service contracts' are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority'. Under Article 1(b) of that directive, contracting authorities' are the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law'. Article 1(c) of that directive defines service provider' as any natural or legal person, including a public body, which offers services'.

4. Under Article 8 of Directive 92/50, [c]ontracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI'. Those provisions essentially contain rules on putting out to tender and on advertising. Article 11(1) of the directive provides that, in awarding public service contracts, contracting authorities shall apply the procedures defined in Article 1(d), (e) and (f), adapted for the purposes of this Directive'. The procedures referred to in that provision are open procedures', restricted procedures' and negotiated procedures' respectively.

5. Category 16 in Annex I A to that directive designates [s]ewage and refuse disposal services; sanitation and similar services'.

6. Article 7(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 provides that the directive is to apply to public service contracts whose estimated value net of value added tax is not less than ECU 200 000'.

7. The second and third recitals in the preamble to Directive 89/665 show that its purpose is to ensure the application of the Community rules on public procurement by means of effective and rapid remedies, particularly at a stage when infringements can be corrected, given that the opening-up of public procurement to Community competition necessitates a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination.

8. To that end, Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 provides:

1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives ... decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a ... public ... contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

9. Under Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665:

1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting-aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

10. Under Article 1 of Directive 93/38:

For the purposes of this Directive:

...

2. public undertaking shall mean any undertaking over which the public authorities may exercise directly or indirectly a dominant influence by virtue of their ownership of it, their financial participation therein, or the rules which govern it. A dominant influence on the part of the public authorities shall be presumed when these authorities, directly or indirectly, in relation to an undertaking:

- hold the majority of the undertaking's subscribed capital, or

- control the majority of the votes attaching to shares issued by the undertaking, or

- can appoint more than half of the members of the undertaking's administrative, managerial or supervisory body;

3. affiliated undertaking shall mean... any undertaking over which the contracting entity may exercise, directly or indirectly, a dominant influence within the meaning of paragraph 2....

...'

11. Article 13 of Directive 93/38 provides:

1. This Directive shall not apply to service contracts which:

(a) a contracting entity awards to an affiliated undertaking;

provided that at least 80% of the average turnover of that undertaking with respect to services arising within the Community for the preceding three years derives from the provision of such services to undertakings with which it is affiliated.

National legislation

12. The order for reference states that reviews in the public procurement field are governed in German law by the Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen (Law against restrictions of competition). Under Paragraph 102 of that law, awards of public contracts' may be the subject of review. A tenderer or candidate has a subjective right to compliance with the provisions governing the award procedure', which enables it to enforce against the contracting authority the rights conferred on it by Paragraph 97(7) of that law in relation to the performance or omission of an act in an award procedure'.

13. The order for reference states that, on the basis of those provisions, in accordance with the view taken in some of the case-law and by some legal writers in Germany, a review is available in the field of procurement only if the applicant is seeking to have the contracting authority ordered to act in a particular way in a current formal award procedure, which means that it is not possible to seek a review if the contracting authority has decided not to issue a public call for tenders and not formally to initiate an award procedure. That view is contested, however, in other decided cases and by other legal writers.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

14. According to the order for reference, the City of Halle, by decision of the city council of 12 December 2001, awarded to RPL Lochau a contract to draw up a plan for the pretreatment, recovery and disposal of its waste, without having formally initiated an award procedure. At the same time, the City of Halle decided, again without calling for tenders, to enter into negotiations with RPL Lochau with a view to concluding a contract with that company concerning the management of the residual urban waste from 1 June 2005. RPL Lochau would be the investor in the construction of the thermal waste disposal and recovery plant.

15. RPL Lochau is a limited liability company set up in 1996. Of its capital, 75.1% is held by Stadtwerke Halle GmbH, whose sole shareholder Verwaltungsgesellschaft für Versorgungs- und Verkehrsbetriebe der Stadt Halle mbH is wholly owned by the City of Halle, and 24.9% by a private limited liability company. The national court describes RPL Lochau as a semi-public company' and notes that the allocation of the shareholdings in the company was not agreed in the company's statutes until the end of 2001, when the award of the contract for carrying out the project at issue was envisaged.

16. The national court also observes that RPL Lochau's objects are the operation of recycling and waste treatment plants. Resolutions of the general meeting of shareholders are adopted either by a simple majority or by a majority of 75% of the votes. The commercial and technical management of the company is currently contracted out to another undertaking, and the City of Halle is entitled inter alia to audit the accounts.

17. On learning of the award of the contract outside the procedure laid down by the Community rules in the field of public procurement, TREA Leuna, which was also interested in providing the services, opposed the decision of the City of Halle and made an application to the Procurement Board of the Regierungspräsidium Halle for the City of Halle to be ordered to issue a public call for tenders.

18. The City of Halle argued in its defence that, in accordance with the national legislation referred to in paragraphs 12 and 13 above, the application was inadmissible since it, as contracting authority, had not formally initiated an award procedure. Furthermore, RPL Lochau was really an emanation of the City of Halle, since it was controlled by it. There was therefore an in-house operation' to which the Community rules on public procurement did not apply.

19. The Procurement Board allowed TREA Leuna's application, on the ground that, even in the absence of an award procedure, decisions of the contracting authority ought to be subject to review. It also considered that in the present case there was no question of an in-house operation', since the private minority shareholding exceeded the threshold of 10% above which, in accordance with the German legislation on limited companies, there is a minority with certain specific rights. Moreover, it could be predicted with sufficient certainty that the activity performed for the City of Halle by RPL Lochau would make use of only 61.25% of its capacity, so that, in order to find outlets for the remainder of its capacity, the company would be obliged to look for orders in the market in which it operated.

20. The City of Halle appealed to the Oberlandesgericht Naumburg, which decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

1. (a) Does the first sentence of Article 1(1) of [Directive 89/665] require Member States to ensure that the decision of a contracting authority not to award a public contract in a procedure which complies with the directives relating to the award of public contracts may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible?

(b) Does the first sentence of Article 1(1) of [Directive 89/665] require Member States to ensure that decisions of contracting authorities made prior to the issue of a formal invitation to tender, in particular the decision on the preliminary questions of whether a particular procurement process falls within the personal or material scope of the directives relating to the award of public contracts or exceptionally is outside the scope of procurement law, may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible?

(c) If Question [1(a)] is answered in the affirmative and Question [1(b)] is answered in the negative:

Is the obligation of a Member State to ensure that the decision of a contracting authority not to award a public contract in a procedure which complies with the directives relating to the award of public contracts may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible satisfied if the availability of review procedures depends on a specified, formal stage in the procurement procedure having been reached, for example the commencement of oral or written contractual negotiations with a third party?

2. (a) Where a contracting authority such as a regional or local authority intends to conclude in writing, with an entity which is formally distinct from it (the contracting partner), a service contract for pecuniary interest which would fall within [Directive 92/50], and that contract would exceptionally not be a public service contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of [Directive 92/50] if the contracting partner were to be regarded as part of the public administration or, as the case may be, of the contracting authority's undertaking (a procurement-exempt self-supply), does the mere fact that a private undertaking is a shareholder in the contracting partner always preclude the classification of such a contract as a procurement-exempt self-supply?

(b) If Question [2(a)] is answered in the negative:

In what circumstances is a contracting partner whose shareholders include a private person (a semi-public company) to be regarded as part of the public administration or, as the case may be, of the contracting authority's undertaking? In particular:

- Does control by the contracting authority, for example within the meaning of Articles 1(2) and 13(1) of [Directive 93/38] as amended by the [Act concerning the conditions of accession of the Republic of Austria, the Republic of Finland and the Kingdom of Sweden and the adjustments to the Treaties on which the European Union is founded (OJ 1994 C 241, p. 21, and OJ 1995 L 1, p. 1)] and by Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 1998 (OJ 1998 L 101, p. 1), suffice, from the point of view of structure and degree of control, for a semi-public company to be regarded as part of the contracting authority's undertaking?

- Does any influence the private co-shareholder in the semi-public company may legally have on the contracting partner's strategic objectives and/or individual decisions relating to the management of its undertaking preclude regarding the semi-public company as part of the contracting authority's undertaking?

- Does a comprehensive right of direction, in respect only of decisions on concluding the contract and providing the services concerning the specific procurement procedure, suffice, from the point of view of structure and degree of control, for a semi-public company to be regarded as part of the contracting authority's undertaking?

- Does the fact that at least 80% of the undertaking's average turnover in the services sector within the Community during the last three years derives from providing those services for the contracting authority or for undertakings affiliated to or to be regarded as part of the contracting authority, or, where the mixed undertaking has not yet carried on business for three years, that it is to be expected by way of forecast that that 80% rule will be fulfilled, suffice, from the point of view of carrying out the essential part of its activities for the contracting authority, for a semi-public company to be regarded as part of the contracting authority's undertaking?'

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

21. To give the national court a useful and coherent answer, the questions referred should be distinguished and considered in two groups, according to their content and subject-matter.

Question 1(a), (b) and (c)

22. By this first series of questions, the national court essentially asks whether Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that the Member States' obligation to ensure that effective and rapid remedies are available against decisions taken by contracting authorities extends also to decisions taken outside a formal award procedure and decisions prior to a formal call for tenders, in particular the decision on whether a particular contract falls within the personal or material scope of Directive 92/50, and from what moment during a procurement procedure the Member States are obliged to make a remedy available to a tenderer, candidate or interested party.

23. It must be observed, first, that Directive 92/50 was adopted, as stated in the first and second recitals in its preamble, in the context of the measures necessary to implement the internal market, in other words an area without internal frontiers in which the free movement of goods, persons, services and capital is ensured. It is apparent from the fourth and fifth recitals in the preamble to that directive that, as the directive's aim is to bring about an opening-up of public procurement in the field of services in conditions of equal treatment and transparency, it must be applied by all contracting authorities.

24. It must be noted, next, that the provisions of Directive 92/50 set out clearly the conditions which make it obligatory for the rules in Titles III to VI of that directive to be applied by all contracting authorities, with the exceptions to the application of those rules being listed exhaustively in the directive itself.

25. Consequently, where those conditions are satisfied, in other words where an operation falls within the personal and material scope of Directive 92/50, the public contracts in question must, by virtue of Article 8 taken together with Article 11(1) of that directive, be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI of the directive, that is to say, they must be made the subject of a call for tenders and be adequately advertised.

26. That obligation is binding on contracting authorities with no distinction between public contracts awarded by them in order to fulfil their task of meeting needs in the public interest and those which are unrelated to that task (see, to that effect, Case C44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others [1998] ECR I73, paragraph 32).

27. To give an answer to the national court, the expression decisions taken by the contracting authorities' in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 must be examined. Since that concept is not expressly defined in the directive, its scope must be determined on the basis of the wording of the relevant provisions of the directive and the objective of effective and rapid judicial protection pursued by it.

28. The wording of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 assumes, by using the words as regards... procedures', that every decision of a contracting authority falling under the Community rules in the field of public procurement and liable to infringe them is subject to the judicial review provided for in Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of that directive (see, to that effect, Case C92/00 HI [2002] ECR I5553, paragraph 37, and Case C57/01 Makedoniko Metro and Mikhaniki [2003] ECR I1091, paragraph 68). It thus refers generally to the decisions of a contracting authority without distinguishing between those decisions according to their content or time of adoption.

29. Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 provides, moreover, for the possibility of annulling unlawful decisions of the contracting authorities in relation to the technical and other specifications not only in the invitation to tender but also in any other document relating to the award procedure in question. That provision can therefore include documents containing decisions taken at a stage prior to the call for tenders.

30. That broad meaning of the concept of a decision taken by a contracting authority is confirmed by the Court's case-law. The Court has already held that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 does not lay down any restriction with regard to the nature and content of the decisions it refers to (Case C81/98 Alcatel Austria and Others [1999] ECR I7671, paragraph 35). Nor may such a restriction be inferred from the wording of Article 2(1)(b) of that directive (see, to that effect, Alcatel Austria and Others , paragraph 32). Moreover, a restrictive interpretation of the concept of a decision amenable to review would be incompatible with the provision in Article 2(1)(a) of that directive which requires the Member States to make provision for interim relief procedures in relation to any decision taken by the contracting authorities (HI , paragraph 49).

31. In line with this broad interpretation of the concept of a decision amenable to review, the Court has held that the contracting authority's decision prior to the conclusion of the contract as to the tenderer to whom the contract will be awarded must in all cases be open to review, regardless of the possibility of obtaining an award of damages once the contract has been concluded (Alcatel Austria and Others , paragraph 43).

32. The Court has also held, referring to the objective of abolishing obstacles to the free movement of services pursued by Directive 92/50 and to the objectives, wording and scheme of Directive 89/665, that the contracting authority's decision to withdraw the invitation to tender for a public service contract must be open to a review procedure, in accordance with Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 (see, to that effect, HI , paragraph 55).

33. In this respect, as the Advocate General observes in point 23 of her Opinion, the contracting authority's decision not to initiate an award procedure may be regarded as the counterpart of its decision to terminate such a procedure. Where a contracting authority decides not to initiate an award procedure on the ground that the contract in question does not, in its opinion, fall within the scope of the relevant Community rules, such a decision constitutes the very first decision amenable to judicial review.

34. Having regard to that case-law and to the objectives, scheme and wording of Directive 89/665, and in order to preserve the effectiveness of that directive, it must be concluded that any act of a contracting authority adopted in relation to a public service contract within the material scope of Directive 92/50 and capable of producing legal effects constitutes a decision amenable to review within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, regardless of whether that act is adopted outside a formal award procedure or as part of such a procedure.

35. Not amenable to review are acts which constitute a mere preliminary study of the market or which are purely preparatory and form part of the internal reflections of the contracting authority with a view to a public award procedure.

36. On the basis of those considerations, the approach of the City of Halle - according to which Directive 89/665 does not require judicial protection outside a formal award procedure, and the contracting authority's decision not to initiate such a procedure cannot be the subject of review, nor indeed can the decision as to whether a public contract falls within the scope of the relevant Community rules - should not be adopted.

37. The effect of that approach would be to make the application of the relevant Community rules optional, at the option of every contracting authority, even though that application is mandatory where the conditions of application are satisfied. Such an option could lead to the most serious breach of Community law in the field of public procurement on the part of a contracting authority. It would substantially reduce the effective and rapid judicial protection aimed at by Directive 89/665, and would interfere with the objectives pursued by Directive 92/50, namely the objectives of free movement of services and open and undistorted competition in this field in all the Member States.

38. As to the time from which such a possibility of review is open, it must be noted that no such time is formally laid down in Directive 89/665. However, having regard to that directive's objective of effective and rapid judicial protection, in particular by interlocutory measures, it must be concluded that Article 1(1) of the directive does not authorise Member States to make the possibility of review subject to the fact that the public procurement procedure in question has formally reached a particular stage.

39. On the basis of the consideration that, in accordance with the second recital in the preamble to that directive, compliance with the Community rules must be ensured in particular at a stage at which infringements can still be corrected, it must be concluded that an expression of the will of the contracting authority in connection with a contract, which comes in whatever way to the knowledge of the persons interested, is amenable to review where that expression has passed the stage referred to in paragraph 35 above and is capable of producing legal effects. Entering into specific contractual negotiations with an interested party constitutes such an expression of will. The obligation of transparency, to which the contracting authority is subject in order to make it possible to verify that the Community rules have been complied with (HI , paragraph 45), should be noted in this respect.

40. As to the persons to whom review procedures are available, it suffices to state that under Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 the Member States must ensure that review procedures are available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a public contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement (see, to that effect, Case C212/02 Commission v Austria [2004] ECR I0000, paragraph 24). The formal capacity of tenderer or candidate is not thus required.

41. In the light of the foregoing, the answer to Question 1(a), (b) and (c) must be that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that the obligation of the Member States to ensure that effective and rapid remedies are available against decisions taken by contracting authorities extends also to decisions taken outside a formal award procedure and decisions prior to a formal call for tenders, in particular the decision on whether a particular contract falls within the personal and material scope of Directive 92/50. That possibility of review is available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining the contract in question who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement, from the time when the contracting authority has expressed its will in a manner capable of producing legal effects. The Member States are not therefore authorised to make the possibility of review subject to the fact that the public procurement procedure in question has formally reached a particular stage.

Question 2(a) and (b)

42. By this second series of questions, which should be considered together, the national court essentially asks whether, where a contracting authority intends to conclude with a company governed by private law, legally distinct from the authority and in which it has a majority capital holding and exercises a certain control, a contract for pecuniary interest relating to services within the material scope of Directive 92/50, it is always obliged to apply the public award procedures laid down by that directive, merely because a private company has a holding, even a minority one, in the capital of the company with which it concludes the contract. If that question is answered in the negative, the national court asks what the criteria are by reference to which it should be considered that the contracting authority is not subject to such an obligation.

43. This question concerns the particular situation of a semi-public' company, set up and functioning in accordance with the rules of private law, from the point of view of the obligation of a contracting authority to apply the Community rules in the field of public procurement where the conditions for such application are satisfied.

44. On this point, the principal objective of the Community rules in the field of public procurement, as stated in connection with the answer to Question 1, should be recalled, namely the free movement of services and the opening-up to undistorted competition in all the Member States. That involves an obligation on all contracting authorities to apply the relevant Community rules where the conditions for such application are satisfied.

45. The obligation to apply the Community rules in such a case is confirmed by the fact that in Article 1(c) of Directive 92/50 the term service provider', that is, a tenderer for the purposes of the application of that directive, also includes a public body, which offers services' (see Case C94/99 ARGE [2000] ECR I11037, paragraph 28).

46. Any exception to the application of that obligation must consequently be interpreted strictly. Thus the Court has held, concerning recourse to a negotiated procedure without the prior publication of a contract notice, that Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50, which provides for such a procedure, must, as a derogation from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the EC Treaty in relation to public service contracts, be interpreted strictly and that the burden of proving the existence of exceptional circumstances justifying the derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances (Joined Cases C20/01 and C28/01 Commission v Germany [2003] ECR I3609, paragraph 58).

47. In the spirit of opening up public contracts to the widest possible competition, as the Community rules intend, the Court has held, with reference to Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), that that directive is applicable in the case where a contracting authority plans to conclude a contract for pecuniary interest with an entity which is legally distinct from it, whether or not that entity is itself a contracting authority (Case C107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I8121, paragraphs 50 and 51). It is relevant to note that the other contracting party in that case was a consortium consisting of several contracting authorities, of which the contracting authority in question was also a member.

48. A public authority which is a contracting authority has the possibility of performing the tasks conferred on it in the public interest by using its own administrative, technical and other resources, without being obliged to call on outside entities not forming part of its own departments. In such a case, there can be no question of a contract for pecuniary interest concluded with an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority. There is therefore no need to apply the Community rules in the field of public procurement.

49. In accordance with the Court's case-law, it is not excluded that there may be other circumstances in which a call for tenders is not mandatory, even though the other contracting party is an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority. That is the case where the public authority which is a contracting authority exercises over the separate entity concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and that entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority or authorities (see, to that effect, Teckal , paragraph 50). It should be noted that, in the case cited, the distinct entity was wholly owned by public authorities. By contrast, the participation, even as a minority, of a private undertaking in the capital of a company in which the contracting authority in question is also a participant excludes in any event the possibility of that contracting authority exercising over that company a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.

50. In this respect, it must be observed, first, that the relationship between a public authority which is a contracting authority and its own departments is governed by considerations and requirements proper to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest. Any private capital investment in an undertaking, on the other hand, follows considerations proper to private interests and pursues objectives of a different kind.

51. Second, the award of a public contract to a semi-public company without calling for tenders would interfere with the objective of free and undistorted competition and the principle of equal treatment of the persons concerned, referred to in Directive 92/50, in particular in that such a procedure would offer a private undertaking with a capital presence in that undertaking an advantage over its competitors.

52. The answer to Question 2(a) and (b) must therefore be that, where a contracting authority intends to conclude a contract for pecuniary interest relating to services within the material scope of Directive 92/50 with a company legally distinct from it, in whose capital it has a holding together with one or more private undertakings, the public award procedures laid down by that directive must always be applied.

53. In view of that answer, there is no need to answer the national court's other questions.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT

(First Chamber)

of 11 January 2005

in Case C-26/03 (reference for a preliminary ruling from the Oberlandesgericht Naumburg): Stadt Halle, RPL Recyclingpark Lochau GmbH v Arbeitsgemeinschaft Thermische Restabfall- und Energieverwertungsanlage TREA Leuna [1]

(Directive 92/50/EEC - Public service contracts - Award with no public call for tenders - Award of the contract to a semi-public undertaking - Judicial protection - Directive 89/665/EEC)

(Language of the case: German)

In Case C-26/03: reference for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC from the Oberlandesgericht Naumburg (Higher Regional Court, Naumburg, Germany), made by decision of 8 January 2003, received at the Court on 23 January 2003, in the proceedings between Stadt Halle, RPL Recyclingpark Lochau GmbH and Arbeitsgemeinschaft Thermische Restabfall- und Energieverwertungsanlage TREA Leuna (the Court (First Chamber), composed of P. Jann, President of the Chamber, J.N. Cunha Rodrigues, E. Juhász (Rapporteur), M. Ilešič and E. Levits, Judges; C. Stix-Hackl, Advocate General; R. Grass, Registrar, has given a judgment on 11 January 2005, in which it has ruled:

Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, itself amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, must be interpreted as meaning that the obligation of the Member States to ensure that effective and rapid remedies are available against decisions taken by contracting authorities extends also to decisions taken outside a formal award procedure and decisions prior to a formal call for tenders, in particular the decision on whether a particular contract falls within the personal and material scope of Directive 92/50, as amended. That possibility of review is available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining the contract in question who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement, from the time when the contracting authority has expressed its will in a manner capable of producing legal effects. The Member States are not therefore authorised to make the possibility of review subject to the fact that the public procurement procedure in question has formally reached a particular stage.

Where a contracting authority intends to conclude a contract for pecuniary interest relating to services within the material scope of Directive 92/50, as amended by Directive 97/52, with a company legally distinct from it, in whose capital it has a holding together with one or more private undertakings, the public award procedures laid down by that directive must always be applied.

[1] - OJ C 101 of 26.04.2003.

Opinion of Advocate General Stix-Hackl delivered on 23 September 2004. Stadt Halle and RPL Recyclingpark Lochau GmbH v Arbeitsgemeinschaft Thermische Restabfall- und Energieverwertungsanlage TREA Leuna. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Oberlandesgericht Naumburg - Germany. Directive 92/50/EEC - Public service contracts - Award with no public call for tenders - Award of the contract to a semi-public undertaking - Judicial protection - Directive 89/665/EEC. Case C-26/03.

I - Introduction

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling raises, essentially, two problems of procurement law: what protection does the law afford in the event of direct procurement (that is, where no formal tendering procedure is conducted), and what conditions attach to the exception in respect of what has been termed quasi-in-house procurement'? That second question goes to the interpretation of the judgment in Teckal. (2)

II - Legal background

2. The questions referred concern the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (3) (Directive 89/665') and of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (4) (Directive 92/50').

3. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, in the version in force at the material time, reads:

The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible, in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7), on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.'

4. Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 reads - in part - thus:

For the purposes of this Directive:

(a) public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority...'.

5. Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (Directive 93/38') (5) was also cited before the national court. Article 13(1) of that directive reads:

1. This Directive shall not apply to service contracts which:

(a) a contracting entity awards to an affiliated undertaking;

(b) are awarded by a joint venture formed by a number of contracting entities for the purpose of carrying out a relevant activity within the meaning of Article 2(2) to one of those contracting entities or to an undertaking which is affiliated with one of these contracting entities, provided that at least 80% of the average turnover of that undertaking with respect to services arising within the Community for the preceding three years derives from the provision of such services to undertakings with which it is affiliated.

Where more than one undertaking affiliated with the contracting entity provides the same service or similar services, the total turnover deriving from the provision of services by those undertakings shall be taken into account.'

III - Facts and proceedings before the national court

6. Stadt Halle (City of Halle) started planning in early 2001 with a view to having the pretreatment and recovery or disposal of the waste it was required to treat, and potentially the waste it was not required to treat, done by a municipally controlled operator. By decision of 12 December 2001, the City of Halle awarded RPL Recyclingpark Lochau GmbH (RPL') a contract to plan, obtain technical approval for and construct the establishment of the Thermische Abfallbeseitigungs- und Verwertungsanlage (thermal waste disposal and recovery plant, TABVA') in Lochau. At the same time the City of Halle decided, without first carrying out a formal procurement procedure, to conclude a contract with RPL for dealing with the residual waste of the City of Halle with effect from 1 June 2005. The contract, a draft of which had already been produced, would far exceed the threshold for such service contracts. The City of Halle also intends, in order to ensure that the capacity of the plant is sufficiently used, to enter into agreements with two neighbouring local authorities under which those authorities would transfer to the City of Halle the task of treating and recovering waste, so that the residual waste of those districts would ultimately also be treated in the TABVA operated by RPL. The City of Halle presumes that this is an in-house' transaction that does not come under the duty to conduct an award procedure.

7. RPL was established in 1996; it is a semi-public body in the form of a limited liability company. 75.1% of its shares are owned by Stadtwerke Halle GmbH (whose sole shareholder, Verwaltungsgesellschaft für Versorgungs- und Verkehrsbetriebe der Stadt Halle mbH, is wholly owned by the City of Halle), while 24.9% are owned by a private undertaking, RWE Umwelt Sachsen-Anhalt mbH. It was not until the end of 2001 that the current shareholdings were agreed and incorporated in the company's statutes in connection with the intended award of the contract for waste disposal services from 1 June 2005. According to its statutes, RPL's objects are the operation of recycling and waste disposal facilities (in particular the operation of facilities for composting organic waste, and treating construction site and industrial waste) and the construction and operation of facilities for treating and recycling sewage, recycling seepage water, gas from waste dumps and biogas and thermal waste recycling.

8. The statutes stipulate that shareholders' resolutions require a simple majority, except for certain decisions, including the appointment of the company's two directors, where a 75% majority is required. The company's management has to deliver a report to the shareholders each month, pursuant to Stadtwerke Halle GmbH's internal reporting rules. Certain transactions and measures, including the conclusion and amendment of operators' contracts, and any capital investment and borrowing operation in excess of a set amount, require approval by the shareholders' general meeting. At present, the commercial and technical management of RPL's business is contracted out to another undertaking. The oversight functions proper to a supervisory board are carried out by the supervisory board of Stadtwerke Halle GmbH. The statutes grant the City of Halle certain rights in respect of the annual accounts, in particular the right to conduct an audit, and to pass information directly on to the city's audit authority.

9. By letters of 21 December 2001 and 30 January 2002, Arbeitsgemeinschaft Thermische Restabfall- und Energieverwertungsanlage TREA Leuna (TREA') complained that the requirements for classification as an in-house transaction were not satisfied and that consequently the city's intention to award the contract for waste disposal services from 1 June 2005 without issuing a formal invitation to tender infringed procurement law. By letter dated 7 February 2002, and in talks on 19 February 2002, the City of Halle reaffirmed its view of the law. By a document of 21 February 2001, TREA applied for a review procedure before the Vergabekammer (Procurement Division) of the Regierungspräsidium (District Administration) Halle, seeking to have the City of Halle ordered to carry out a public tender procedure. The Vergabekammer of the Regierungspräsidium, by order of 27 May 2002, ordered the City of Halle to award the contract for the services - disposal of residual waste of the City of Halle from 1 June 2005' - on a competitive basis by means of a transparent procurement procedure in accordance with the national regulations.

10. The City of Halle and RPL both appealed immediately against that decision to the Oberlandesgericht (Higher Regional Court) Naumburg.

IV - The questions referred

11. The Oberlandesgericht Naumburg stayed the appeal and referred the following questions to the Court:

(1) Does the first sentence of Article 1(1) of [Directive 89/665] require Member States to ensure that the decision of a contracting authority not to award a public contract in a procedure which complies with the directives relating to the award of public contracts may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible?

(2) Does the first sentence of Article 1(1) of [Directive 89/665] require Member States to ensure that decisions of contracting authorities made prior to the issue of a formal invitation to tender, in particular the decision on the preliminary questions of whether a particular procurement process falls within the personal or material scope of the directives relating to the award of public contracts or exceptionally is outside the scope of procurement law, may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible?

(3) If Question 1 is answered in the affirmative and Question 2 is answered in the negative: Is the obligation of a Member State to ensure that the decision of a contracting authority not to award a public contract in a procedure which complies with the directives relating to the award of public contracts may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible satisfied if the availability of review procedures depends on a specified, formal stage in the procurement procedure having been reached, for example the commencement of oral or written contractual negotiations with a third party?

(4) Where a contracting authority such as a regional or local authority intends to conclude in writing, with an entity which is formally distinct from it (the contracting partner), a service contract for pecuniary interest which would fall within [Directive 92/50], and that contract would exceptionally not be a public service contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of [Directive 92/50] if the contracting partner were to be regarded as part of the public administration or, as the case may be, of the contracting authority's undertaking (a procurement-exempt self-supply), does the mere fact that a private undertaking is a shareholder in the contracting partner always preclude the classification of such a contract as a procurement-exempt self-supply?

(5) If Question 4 is answered in the negative: In what circumstances is a contracting partner whose shareholders include a private person (a semipublic company) to be regarded as part of the public administration or, as the case may be, of the contracting authority's undertaking? In particular:

(a) Does control by the contracting authority, for example within the meaning of Articles 1(2) and 13(1) of [Directive 93/38] as amended by the [Act concerning the conditions of accession of the Republic of Austria, the Republic of Finland and the Kingdom of Sweden and the Adjustments to the Treaties on which the European Union is founded (OJ 1994 C 241, p. 228)] and by Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 1998 (OJ 1998 L 101, p. 1), suffice, from the point of view of structure and degree of control, for a semi-public company to be regarded as part of the contracting authority's undertaking?

(b) Does any influence the private co-shareholder in the semi-public company may legally have on the contracting partner's strategic objectives and/or individual decisions relating to the management of its undertaking preclude regarding the semi-public company as part of the contracting authority's undertaking?

(c) Does a comprehensive right of direction, in respect only of decisions on concluding the contract and providing the services concerning the specific procurement procedure, suffice, from the point of view of structure and degree of control, for a semi-public company to be regarded as part of the contracting authority's undertaking?

(d) Does the fact that at least 80% of the undertaking's average turnover in the services sector within the Community during the last three years derives from providing those services for the contracting authority or for undertakings affiliated to or to be regarded as part of the contracting authority, or, where the mixed undertaking has not yet carried on business for three years, that it is to be expected by way of forecast that that 80% rule will be fulfilled, suffice, from the point of view of carrying out the essential part of its activities for the contracting authority, for a semi-public company to be regarded as part of the contracting authority's undertaking?'

V - Judicial protection (Questions 1 to 3)

A - Admissibility

12. As regards the questions relating to judicial protection, it must first be determined whether they are admissible, and, if so, to what extent.

13. The Court of Justice is bound in principle to give a preliminary ruling unless it is obvious that the request is in reality designed to induce the Court to give a ruling on a fictitious dispute, or to deliver advisory opinions on general or hypothetical questions, or the interpretation of Community law requested bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, or the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it. (6)

14. In the present proceedings, as the case-file shows, the process of making the prospective award which constitutes the subject-matter of the main action has reached a definable stage: there is now a draft contract. The questions referred are therefore admissible only in so far as they need to be answered in order to resolve the legal dispute as it relates to those specific facts. Although the questions raise important issues relating to judicial protection, procedural considerations make it inappropriate to address such general matters in the present context, as the circumstances to which they relate do not obtain in the specific case before the referring court. Nor has that court explained why it considers that an answer predicated on such facts is necessary for it to be able to decide the case before it.

15. Accordingly, since there is nothing to suggest that such an answer is needed in order to resolve the dispute in the main proceedings, these questions must be regarded as hypothetical and, accordingly, inadmissible. (7)

16. In so far as they seek to resolve general questions of law, therefore, the questions referred are inadmissible - likewise the matter of the compatibility of national law with Community law, raised in the third question. Subject to those reservations, however, the questions concerning judicial protection are admissible in other respects, in relation to the facts of the main action. As the first three questions all go to the same substantive issue - which acts on the part of a contracting authority are reviewable? - it seems advisable to consider and answer them together.

B - Merits

17. The issue raised by the questions concerning judicial protection against certain decisions by the contracting authority is basically this: from what stage prior to the actual award must the national review proceedings stipulated in Directive 89/665 be available? The task, essentially, is to determine the point at which a prospective procurement operation has crystallised sufficiently for judicial protection to be available.

18. The starting point is the principle that decisions' within the meaning of Article 1(1), likewise decisions' as reviewable acts within the meaning of Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 (that is, those acts on the part of the contracting authority which are subject to challenge), represent a concept which, according to the Court's caselaw, should be construed broadly.

19. In that case-law, the Court has held that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 does not lay down any restriction with regard to the nature and content of those decisions'. (8)

20. Moreover, Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 requires Member States to ensure that the review procedures provided for are available at least' to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement of the Community law on public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

21. The question in the present proceedings is whether the broad concept of decisions' encompasses decisions upstream' - that is, in legal parlance, decisions taken prior to the commencement of an award procedure. The decisions at issue are thus more than mere deliberative exercises, and less than a decision to commence, or not to commence, an award procedure.

22. The purpose of Directive 89/665 - to ensure that effective review proceedings are available, as expressly stipulated in Article 1(1) - is such that it must cover decisions taken prior to the commencement of an award procedure.

23. In point of its reviewability, a decision not to conduct an award procedure is comparable to, and the counterpart of, a decision to terminate an award procedure.

24. Decisions to terminate an award procedure are among the acts on the part of an awarding authority that are amenable to review. The Court has expressly stated that this applies to the withdrawal of an invitation to tender. The full attainment of the objective pursued by Directive 89/665 would be compromised if it were lawful for contracting authorities to withdraw an invitation to tender for a public service contract without being subject to the judicial review procedures designed to ensure that the directives laying down substantive rules concerning public contracts and the principles underlying those directives are genuinely complied with.' (9)

25. By its very nature, of course, a decision not to conduct a tendering procedure within the meaning of the procurement directives (unlike a decision to revoke a procedure which has already been initiated) does not form part of a tendering procedure; however, that in no way precludes the application of Directive 89/665.

26. Indeed, as the Court has held, Directive 89/665, the aim of which is to promote judicial protection, encompasses more than just the review of infringements of the substantive procurement directives. Thus Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 applies to all decisions taken by contracting authorities which are subject to the rules of Community law on public procurement', (10) the Court in that judgment deciding not to limit the scope of the provision to the rules laid down in the public procurement directives.

27. Member States are not obliged to make review proceedings available to any person wishing to obtain a public contract. Rather, they may require, in addition, that the person concerned has been, or risks being, harmed by the alleged infringement. (11) In principle, therefore, they may stipulate that a person must have participated in the relevant award procedure before he can demonstrate both an interest in a particular contract and also a risk of sustaining loss as a result of the allegedly illegal award.

28. However, the Court has already determined that, where an undertaking has not submitted a tender because there were allegedly discriminatory specifications in the documents relating to the invitation to tender, or in the contract documents, which have actually prevented it from being in a position to provide all the services requested, it is entitled to seek review of those specifications directly, even before the procedure for awarding the contract concerned is terminated. (12)

29. Just as an undertaking must be able to institute review proceedings immediately in order to challenge infringements, without awaiting the conclusion of the award procedure, (13) so also must it be able to obtain review of certain decisions relevant to the award without having to wait for an award procedure to be initiated. Typically, in the cases where this kind of issue arises, no award procedure within the meaning of the procurement directives occurs at all - and an undertaking can hardly be required to put in a bid where no award procedure has been initiated.

30. Whether or not any award procedure as provided for in the substantive procurement directives was actually conducted is thus not determinative in regard to the application of the remedies directives and, therefore, the review procedure. This is because the reach of the remedies directives depends, not on whether the substantive procurement directives such as Directive 93/38 were applied in a given situation, but on whether one of those directives should have been (or be) applied - in other words, whether the procedure of which review is sought is covered by one of those directives.

31. It follows that even certain acts performed before an award procedure is instituted are subject to review within the meaning of Directive 89/665. But there are limits.

32. One consideration telling against a blanket rule that all a contracting authority's acts are reviewable is the fact that the individual stages leading up to the instituting of an award procedure not only vary from Member State to Member State, but also depend on the specific project.

33. One particular criterion which the Court has developed in regard to the availability of judicial protection should also be borne in mind. Directive 89/665, it has held, is confined to reinforcing existing arrangements at both national and Community levels for ensuring effective application of Community directives on the award of public contracts, in particular at the stage where infringements can still be rectified '. (14)

34. Another judgment of the Court confirms that not every act on the part of a contracting authority is reviewable. The case in question concerned national legislation limiting review proceedings to certain decisions on the part of the contracting authority. The test applied by the Court was whether adequate judicial protection was available; the Court concluding that, in the circumstances, this was the case - even though, under the relevant national law, it was only possible to challenge procedural acts, if they decided, directly or indirectly, the substance of the case, made it impossible to continue the procedure or to put up a defence, or caused irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests. (15)

35. If, then, it is permissible - that is, compatible with Directive 89/665 - for certain acts subsequent to the instituting of an award procedure to be excluded from review, it must a fortiori be permissible for certain acts prior to the instituting of an award procedure to be excluded.

36. Finally, it should be recalled that the aim of the procurement directives is merely to coordinate - to harmonise - the award procedure itself, not to regulate the stages preceding the award.

37. I conclude, therefore, that Directive 89/665 does not confer comprehensive preventive judicial protection.

38. One critical determinant of reviewability is the substantive law governing the particular situation - whether or not the relevant directives confer on a given undertaking a specific claim to have a particular action taken, or desisted from.

39. A claim for a prohibitory order is thus also, in principle, a possibility. Such a claim might perhaps seek to prohibit an entity subject to the procurement directives from effecting a procurement covered by the directives without conducting an award procedure required by the directives. That creates a parallel, in the judicial protection system, to an order prohibiting a contracting authority from making an award.

40. Hence the effect on the undertaking seeking review is a possible criterion for determining what acts preceding the institution of an award procedure must be reviewable. This is thus a condition for an undertaking's entitlement to bring proceedings.

41. However, the present proceedings concern solely the conditions that must be satisfied for an act to be capable of being challenged.

42. Moreover, since these are proceedings for a preliminary ruling, a further limitation follows from the procedural rules governing such proceedings before the Court. There can be no question here of providing a general definition of acts subject to challenge, but only of giving the national court a helpful answer in order to enable it to decide the case before it.

43. The object of those proceedings is therefore not to develop general criteria which could serve to identify the acts by contracting authorities which are subject to challenge, but merely to determine criteria by which the acts in the specific case before the national court should be assessed.

44. In this connection it is sufficient to point out that Directive 89/665 no more covers purely internal deliberations than it does an assessment of needs, the preparation of the specifications, or indeed pure market prospection. Nor does it extend to a situation in which a contracting authority deliberates internally on the legal question of whether or not a particular procurement operation falls within the scope of the procurement directives.

45. There is, moreover, no need in these proceedings to consider whether a mere decision to commence negotiations with another undertaking is amenable to review, or whether it is only when such negotiations have commenced that a review will lie. Such questions are hypothetical, since the subjectmatter of the main action, and hence of these proceedings for a preliminary ruling, is a situation in which a draft contract already exists.

46. In such circumstances, the contracting authority is in a position in which it is about to conclude a contract. That position corresponds to another commonly occurring procurement situation, the stage immediately prior to the award of a contract. There, depending on the national law applicable, the actual award either precedes the conclusion of a procurement contract, or itself creates the contract, the award being considered to constitute acceptance of the tender.

47. That in both those latter situations an award procedure will have been conducted, but not in the present situation, must not make any difference, in the light of the need to ensure effective judicial protection.

48. The answer to the first three questions should therefore be that, on a proper construction, Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires Member States, under certain conditions, to ensure that certain decisions of the contracting authorities taken outside an award procedure may none the less be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible; such decisions may include a decision on the preliminary issue of whether to effect a particular procurement without conducting an award procedure.

VI - Quasi-in-house procurement (Questions 4 and 5)

49. The second set of questions concerns the conditions attaching to quasi-in-house procurement, as it has been termed. This, as the Austrian Government has correctly stressed, differs from in-house procurement (self-supply), in that it involves awards to an entity separate from the contracting authority, and having legal personality. If the entity responsible for the supply lacks legal personality, no contract could exist. One of the preconditions for a contract within the meaning of the procurement directives would then be missing.

50. What is strictly at issue in the present case is the interpretation of the concept of contract'

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

- the existence of which is a precondition for the application of the procurement directives. The starting point must be Teckal : the Court held there that certain stages in the procurement process are not covered by the procurement directives.

51. Teckal stated that the procurement directives do not apply where the local authority exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling local authority or authorities'. (16)

52. The Court thus established two conditions which must be fulfilled for a procurement operation to fall beyond the reach of the procurement directives, and thereby narrowed the concept of contract' by interpreting it teleologically.

53. It must be stressed that the Court expressly stated that non-applicability of the directives in question remains the exception. The general principle that exceptions are to be construed narrowly must therefore apply, and must govern the examination of the two conditions to which I now turn.

54. I would also emphasise that, apart from the Teckal exception and certain other exceptions (for example, Article 6 of Directive 92/50), it is generally the case that awards to entities which are themselves contracting authorities (such as certain subsidiaries) are contracts' within the meaning of the concept. The application of the procurement directives therefore remains the rule. (17)

55. One should also bear in mind the origin of quasi-in-house operations, and hence of the Teckal exception, namely the special treatment of in-house operations and other arrangements which may be assimilated to them.

56. Finally, one should remember the aims of the procurement directives: to open up markets, and to safeguard competition.

57. These are the points of orientation which are relevant for the interpretation of the Teckal exception.

58. In general, it is necessary to distinguish between three different quasi-in-house scenarios: awards to wholly owned companies, owned 100% by the contracting authority or entities which may be equated with that authority; awards to joint public companies whose shares are held by a number of contracting authorities; and awards to semi-public companies, in which genuinely private parties hold a stake.

59. The action before the national court concerns a planned award by the City of Halle (a local authority, and hence clearly a contracting authority within the meaning of the procurement directives) to a great-grandchild' company. While the City of Halle holds 100% of the shares in the daughter company, and the latter likewise 100% of the shares in the grandchild company, that grandchild holds only 75.1% of the shares in the great-grandchild, the remainder being held by a purely private undertaking.

60. The present proceedings thus concern a semi-public' company: a majority of the shares are held (indirectly) by a contracting authority, while a party which is not a contracting authority has a minority stake.

61. For procedural reasons I shall confine the remainder of this Opinion to circumstances such as those in the main action. It remains the task of the national court to apply the law to the facts of the case before it. (18)

A - First criterion: Control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments

62. The first condition which must be met for the exception to apply (and accordingly for the procurement directives not to apply) concerns the nature of the control exercised by the contracting authority over the body to whom the contract is to be awarded. The Court requires that such control should be similar to that which [the authority] exercises over its own departments'.

63. The Court thus proceeds from a criterion taken from public law. However, as the concept of control', like that of contract' and contracting authority', must be understood in functional not formal terms, there is nothing to prevent it being applied to the relationship between a contracting authority and legal persons governed by private law, such as, in the present case, a limited liability company. The use of the term departments' derives from the original reason for setting up autonomous bodies, which was to move particular departments out of house.

64. The fact that in the Teckal judgment, in the language of the case, Italian, the Court requires only control which is analogous (analogo'), that is, comparable but not identical, provides further support for the view that the criterion in question may indeed be applied to other sets of circumstances. (19)

65. Hence any appraisal of the legal position of a majority shareholder must be governed in part by the relevant provisions of national law - in the present case, company law on limited liability companies. One must also consider the provisions - normally the company's statutes - which shape the specific relationship in question. Accordingly, it is not enough to make a purely abstract assessment based on the legal form (the type of legal personality, say) selected for the entity over which the control is exercised.

66. National provisions - generally in the form of legislation - are therefore of only limited significance. That is particularly true of rules setting out what rights minority shareholders have, and under what conditions. Essentially, such rules give shareholders certain specific oversight and blocking rights once their holding reaches a particular level - 10%, perhaps, or 25%, or over 50%.

67. However, such rules raise only a presumption as to what rights a minority shareholder has. It is the provisions governing the specific situation which are determinative. The most important case in this connection is a dominant party' agreement, whereby a particular shareholder is granted certain rights beyond the minimum required by law irrespective of the size of his shareholding.

68. Since it is the circumstances of the specific case which are determinative, rather than the provisions of national legislation, it follows that the level of the public contracting authority's shareholding (or, conversely, that of the minority shareholder) cannot be the only critical factor.

69. To focus on a set percentage would therefore make it more difficult to achieve a proper solution: it would make it impossible to consider the specific circumstances of any case, and would completely preclude the application of the criterion of control in situations where the relevant shareholding remained below the percentage set.

70. However, since entities in which there is a private minority shareholding may also pass the control test, it follows that the Teckal exception must extend not only to wholly owned companies but also to semi-public companies. There is therefore, in principle, no problem created by private businesses being involved.

71. Moreover, Advocate General Léger considered that the Teckal exception applied even where the level of the shareholding in question was 50.5%. (20)

72. At all events, the criterion of control developed by the Court entails more than a dominant influence' as that phrase is used in company law, or as it is used in the first article of the various procurement directives to classify certain bodies as contracting authorities; likewise it extends beyond the dominant influence' found in Article 1(3) read together with Article 13 of Directive 93/38. First, the provisions in question apply only to the specific sectors stated, and have no counterpart in the directive which applies to the present case; secondly, they constitute an exception, and exceptions must normally be construed narrowly.

73. Neither the Community legislature (in the directives) nor the Court (in Teckal) have suggested that the provisions of the procurement directives are the relevant criterion.

74. The level of control required cannot therefore be read across from particular provisions of the procurement directives; it exceeds what is required by other exceptions precisely because the situation contemplated is exceptional.

75. In the context of a reference for a preliminary ruling, it is for the national court to interpret the provisions of national law, and then apply these and other provisions to the facts of the case before it. In the present case, therefore, the referring court will need to ascertain what rights the City of Halle - the great-grandparent' company - enjoys in respect of its great-grandchild' RPL.

76. In applying the control test, the national court must start from the powers of the controlling body. Simply on grounds of legal certainty, issues such as whether, and how, such control is exercised in practice cannot be conclusive, much less any speculation as to how a majority shareholder might use his share (i.e. whether they might go so far as to override the wishes of the minority shareholder). The significance of any duty to act in good faith on the part of the majority shareholder must thus be seen in relative terms, especially as any similar obligations on the part of the minority shareholder should not be overlooked - as the City of Halle has indeed pointed out.

77. As to the object of the control, the Court did not confine its Teckal ruling to any specific decisions by the controlled body. Control merely over procurement decisions in general, or even over the specific procurement decision, is not enough.

78. The wording and purpose of the criterion of control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments' indicate that a more comprehensive possibility of control is required. Such control should not be confined to strategic market decisions, but should embrace individual management decisions as well. There is no need to go into greater detail in these preliminary ruling proceedings, since that is not necessary in order to resolve the dispute before the national court.

B - Second criterion: Essential part of the activities carried out with the owner of the shares

79. The second condition which must be met in order for the Teckal exception to apply concerns the activities of the body over which the control is exercised. As the relevant passage of the judgment states, the exception only applies if that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling local authority or authorities'.

80. That criterion can be understood more broadly in that, first, it may extend not only to those with a direct shareholding but also, as in the present case, to great-grandparent' companies with an indirect shareholding and, second, it need not be restricted to regional and local authorities.

81. The Teckal criterion thus relates to a certain minimum proportion of the total activities performed by the controlled body. It is therefore necessary to ascertain the extent of all the activities performed and of those performed with the shareholder within the broad sense of that term.

82. In the present context, however, while the term shareholder' must not be construed too narrowly, that does not mean that activities for third parties are also covered, where the shareholder would otherwise have had to perform them itself. In practice, this relates to care services, and hence to local authorities, which are under an obligation vis-à-vis certain persons to provide certain services. That general question is not the subject-matter of these proceedings, since the referring court does not need an answer to it in order to be able to resolve the dispute before it.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

83. It should be clearly understood that what matters is what activities are actually performed - not what activities the law, or the company's statutes, permit, let alone what activities the entity may be under a duty to perform.

84. The central question is this: What shareholding is required for the Teckal threshold to be reached? Various answers have been mooted, from above 50%' via to a predominant extent' and almost exclusive' to exclusive'.

85. While some of this thinking is predicated on a positive approach (based on determining the extent of the services provided for the shareholder), the negative approach also has its adherents. The latter involves proceeding from the proportion of services provided for persons other than the shareholder. Such an approach features not only in submissions in these proceedings, but also in the Opinion of Advocate General Léger, which various parties to the present proceedings have cited. His view is that the directive is applicable where an entity carries out the essential part of its activity with operators or local authorities other than those of which the contracting authority is made up'. (21) However, since it is the positive approach which informs the Teckal exception, I shall not pursue the negative approach any further in this Opinion.

86. However, a further important issue was articulated in that passage from Advocate General Léger's Opinion, which should also be considered when determining the requisite shareholding.

87. The question is this: Does the Teckal exception permit only a quantitive approach, or should qualitative issues be considered as well? The latter might seem to follow from the wording and purpose of the exception, which contains no indication of how the activities are to be assessed. Moreover, the authentic (Italian) version of the corresponding passage in the Teckal judgment does not preclude an additional or alternative qualitative approach (la parte più importante della propria attività').

88. Furthermore, there is no indication in the Teckal exception as to how the requisite shareholding should be calculated. It is thus in no way self-evident that turnover should be the sole criterion.

89. Accordingly, it is the task of the national court to determine the essential part' of the activities on the basis of quantitative and qualitative parameters. The market situation of the controlled body may also be relevant (that is, in particular, its competitive situation vis-à-vis possible rivals).

90. As several parties have cited Advocate General Léger's Opinion in regard to the second Teckal condition, it should be borne in mind that an Opinion is authentic in the language chosen as the original language by the advocate general.

91. When considered on that basis, the Opinion in question presents the following features: it refers to the services being provided more or less exclusively' to the authority - quasi-exclusivité' is the phrase in the French original, (22) and also reflects the way the Teckal exception is expressed in Italian, the language of that case, using the words en grande partie' (23) when referring to the essential part', and later la plus grande partie de leur activité' (24) - the essential part of their activities'.

92. Several parties to these proceedings have suggested that the essential part' criterion might be defined more precisely by interpreting it in line with a provision governing awards to undertakings affiliated with the contracting authority, namely the 80% criterion in Article 13 of Directive 93/38. That criterion, it is contended, is objective' or appropriate'.

93. It must be said that a different fixed percentage might also be objective or appropriate. However, the very rigidity of a fixed percentage may represent an obstacle to an appropriate solution. Moreover, it does not permit qualitative factors to be taken into account.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

94. The principal argument against taking over the 80% criterion is that it is a derogation in a directive which itself applies only to certain sectors. The evaluation on which it is predicated was intended by the Community legislature to be confined to that specific directive. Even if the underlying thinking may in practice also be applied beyond the sectors in question, the fact remains that no such provision was enacted in the directive in point in the present proceedings, and that is conclusive.

95. There is a further argument against adducing Article 13 of Directive 93/38: paragraph 2 of that article obliges the contracting entities to notify certain information to the Commission, at its request. That procedural requirement thus balances the exception laid down in Article 13. In the case of the Teckal exception, however, the Court chose a different route, confining itself to establishing the two substantive preconditions set out in that judgment. However, precisely because there is no comparable procedural requirement, those preconditions must be construed strictly.

VII - Conclusion

96. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court answer the questions referred as follows:

(1) Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as requiring Member States to ensure that certain decisions of contracting authorities taken outside an award procedure but connected with a procurement can be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible; such decisions may include a decision on the preliminary issue of whether to effect a particular procurement without conducting an award procedure.

(2) Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that the fact that a private undertaking has a shareholding in the contracting authority's contractual partner in which the contracting authority has a direct or indirect holding does not in itself exclude the non-application of that directive.

(3) For a contractual partner with a privately owned shareholding - a semi-public company' - to be regarded as part of the public administration or as part of the contracting authority's undertaking, what matters is the specific form taken by the relationship, and the size of the shareholding is not in itself decisive.

It does not suffice that:

- the semi-public company is controlled by the contracting authority within the meaning of Articles 1(2) and 13(1) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors;

- there is a comprehensive right to give instructions with respect solely to procurement decisions in general or procurement decisions concerning the specific case.

(4) For a semi-public company to be regarded as part of the contracting authority's undertaking from the point of view of carrying out the essential part of its activities' for the contracting authority, unlike in Article 13 of Directive 93/38 the starting point is not whether at least 80% of the average turnover of that undertaking with respect to services arising within the Community for the preceding three years derives from the provision of such services to the contracting authority or to undertakings affiliated to or to be regarded as part of that authority or, where the semi-public undertaking has not yet carried on business for three years, it is to be expected by way of forecast that that 80% rule will be satisfied.

To decide whether a company should be so regarded, the national court must instead start from the actual activities and take account in particular of both quantitative and qualitative factors.

Judgment of the Court (Second Chamber)
of 3 March 2005
Fabricom SA v Belgian State. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Conseil d'Etat - Belgium. Public procurement - Works, supplies and services - Water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Prohibition on participation in a procedure of submission of a tender by a person who has contributed to the development of the works, supplies or services concerned. Joined cases C-21/03 and C-34/03.

1. Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public service, public supply and public works contracts and procurement contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Directives 92/50, 93/36, 93/37 and 93/38 - Principle of nondiscrimination between tenderers - National rules precluding from participation in a contract any person who has contributed to the development of the works, supplies or services concerned without the possibility to prove the absence of any adverse effect on competition - Not permissible

(Council Directives 92/50, Art. 3(2), 93/36, Art. 5(7), 93/37, Art. 6(6), and 93/38, Art. 4(2))

2. Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public service, public supply and public works contracts and procurement contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Directives 89/665 and 92/13 - National rules allowing the contracting authority to preclude from participation in the contract, until the end of the procedure for the examination of tenders, an undertaking connected with any person who has contributed to the development of the works, supplies or services concerned without taking into consideration the undertaking's assertion that there is no adverse effect on competition - Not permissible

(Council Directives 89/665, Arts 2(1)(a) and 5, and 92/13, Arts 1 and 2)

1. Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, as amended by Directive 97/52, and Directive 93/38, as amended by Directive 98/4, relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of, respectively, public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts and procurement contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, and, more particularly, the provision in each of those directives that the contracting authorities are to ensure equal treatment of tenderers, preclude national rules whereby a person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with public works, supplies or services is not permitted to apply to participate in or to submit a tender for those works, supplies or services and where that person is not given the opportunity to prove that, in the circumstances of the case, the experience which he as acquired was not capable of distorting competition.

Taking account of the favourable situation in which a person who has carried out such preparatory work may find himself, it cannot be maintained that the principle of equal treatment requires that that person be treated in the same way as any other tenderer. However, a rule which provides that person with no possibility to demonstrate that in his particular case that situation is not apt to distort competition goes beyond what is necessary to attain the objective of equal treatment for all tenderers.

2. Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts and, more particularly, Articles 2(1)(a) and 5 thereof, and Directive 92/13 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors and, more particularly, Articles 1 and 2 thereof, preclude the contracting entity from refusing, until the end of the procedure for the examination of tenders, to allow an undertaking connected with any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with works, supplies or services to participate in the procedure or to submit a tender, even though, when questioned on that point by the awarding authority, that undertaking states that it has not thereby obtained an unfair advantage capable of distorting the normal conditions of competition.

The possibility that the contracting authority might delay, until the procedure has reached a very advanced stage, taking a decision as to whether such an undertaking may participate in the procedure or submit a tender, when that authority has before it all the information which it needs in order to take that decision, deprives that undertaking of the opportunity to rely on the Community rules on the award of public contracts as against the awarding authority for a period which is solely within that authority's discretion and which, where necessary, may be extended until a time when the infringements can no longer be usefully rectified.

Such a situation is capable of depriving Directives 89/665 and 92/13 of all practical effect as they are susceptible of giving rise to an unjustified postponement of the possibility for those concerned to exercise the rights conferred on them by Community law. It is also contrary to the objectives of Directives 89/665 and 92/13, which seek to protect tenderers vis-à-vis the awarding authority.

Judgment

Costs

47. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) rules as follows:

1. Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, and, more particularly, Article 3(2) thereof, Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Directive 97/52, and, more particularly, Article 5(7) thereof, Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Directive 97/52, and, more particularly, Article 6(6) thereof, and also Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 98/4/EC of 16 February 1998, and, more particularly, Article 4(2) thereof, preclude a rule such as that laid down in Article 25 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 10 January 1996 on public works, supply and service contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, and Article 32 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 8 January 1996 on public works, supply and service contracts and on the award of public contracts, whereby a person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with a public works, supplies or services contract is not permitted to apply to participate in or to submit a tender for those works, supplies or services and where that person is not given the opportunity to prove that, in the circumstances of the case, the experience which he has acquired was not capable of distorting competition.

2. Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts and, more particularly, Articles 2(1)(a) and 5 thereof, and Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors and, more particularly, Articles 1 and 2 thereof, preclude the contracting entity from refusing, until the end of the procedure for the examination of tenders, to allow an undertaking connected with any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with works, supplies or services to participate in the procedure or to submit a tender, even though, when questioned on that point by the awarding authority, that undertaking states that it has not thereby obtained an unfair advantage capable of distorting the normal conditions of competition.

1. The references for a preliminary ruling concern the interpretation of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) (Directive 92/50'), and, more particularly, of Article 3(2) thereof, of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), as amended by Directive 97/52 (Directive 93/36'), and, more particularly, of Article 5(7) thereof, of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), as amended by Directive 97/52 (Directive 93/37'), and, more particularly, of Article 6(6) thereof, and also of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 98/4/EC of 16 February 1998 (OJ 1998 L 101, p. 1) (Directive 93/38'), and, more particularly, of Article 4(2) thereof, in conjunction with the principle of proportionality, freedom of trade and industry and the right to property. The references also concern the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33) and, more particularly, of Articles 2(1)(a) and 5 thereof, and also of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14) and, more particularly, of Articles 1 and 2 thereof.

2. The references were made in proceedings between Fabricom SA (Fabricom') and the Belgian State concerning the lawfulness of national provisions which, on certain conditions, preclude a person who has been instructed to carry out preparatory work in connection with a public contract or an undertaking connected to such a person from participating in that contract.

3. Article VI(4) of the agreement on government procurement annexed to Council Decision 94/800/EC of 22 December 1994 concerning the conclusion on behalf of the European Community, as regards matters within its competence, of the agreements reached in the Uruguay Round multilateral negotiations (1986-1994) (OJ 1994 L 336, p. 1) (the public contracts agreement'), provides:

Entities shall not seek or accept, in a manner which would have the effect of precluding competition, advice which may be used in the preparation of specifications for a specific procurement from a firm that may have a commercial interest in the procurement.'

4. Under Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50:

Contracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.'

5. Article 5(7) of Directive 93/36 provides:

Contracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between the various suppliers.'

6. Article 6(6) of Directive 93/37 provides:

Contracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between the various contractors.'

7. Under Article 4(2) of Directive 93/38:

Contracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different suppliers, contractors or service providers.'

8. The 10th recital in the preamble to Directive 97/52, the terms of which are substantially reproduced in the 13th recital in the preamble to Directive 98/4, states:

... contracting authorities may seek or accept advice which may be used in the preparation of specifications for a specific procurement, provided that such advice does not have the effect of precluding competition'.

9. Article 2 of Directive 89/665 provides:

1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

10. Under Article 1 of Directive 92/13:

1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that decisions taken by contracting entities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(8), on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field [of] procurement or national rules implementing that law as regards:

(a) contract award procedures falling within the scope of Council Directive 90/531/EEC;

(b) compliance with Article 3(2)(a) of that Directive in the case of the contracting entities to which that provision applies.

2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings likely to make a claim for injury in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing Community law and other national rules.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting entity of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

11. Article 2 of Directive 92/13 provides:

1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers:

either

(a) to take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedure, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further injury to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting entity;

and

(b) to set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the notice of contract, the periodic indicative notice, the notice on the existence of a system of qualification, the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure in question;

or

(c) to take, at the earliest opportunity, if possible by way of interlocutory procedures and if necessary by a final procedure on the substance, measures other than those provided for in points (a) and (b) with the aim of correcting any identified infringement and preventing injury to the interests concerned; in particular, making an order for the payment of a particular sum, in cases where the infringement has not been corrected or prevented.

Member States may take this choice either for all contracting entities or for categories or entities defined on the basis of objective criteria, in any event preserving the effectiveness of the measures laid down in order to prevent injury being caused to the interests concerned;

National rules

12. Article 32 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 8 January 1996 on the public procurement of works, supplies and services and on public works concessions (Moniteur belge , 9 April 1999, p. 11690; Article 32 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 8 January 1996'), provides:

...

1. No person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with public works, supplies or services shall be permitted to apply to participate in or to submit a tender for a contract for those works, supplies or services.

2. An undertaking connected to any person referred to in paragraph 1 shall be permitted to apply to participate in or to submit a tender only where it establishes that it has not thereby obtained an unfair advantage capable of distorting the normal conditions of competition.

For the purposes of this article, undertaking connected means any undertaking over which a person referred to in paragraph 1 may, directly or indirectly, exercise a dominant influence or any undertaking which may exercise a dominant influence over that person or which, like that person, is subject to the dominant influence of another undertaking by virtue of its ownership, financial participation or the rules which govern it. Dominant influence shall be presumed where an undertaking, directly or indirectly, with respect to another undertaking:

(1) holds a majority of the subscribed capital of the undertaking; or

(2) is entitled to a majority of the votes attached to the shares issued by the undertaking; or

(3) may nominate more than half the members of the body responsible for the administration, management or supervision of the undertaking.

Before excluding any undertaking on the ground that it is presumed to have obtained an unfair advantage, the contracting authority shall, by registered letter, invite that undertaking to provide within 12 calendar days, unless in a particular case the invitation allows a longer period, evidence of, for example, its connections, its degree of independence or any circumstances showing that dominant influence has not been established or has not affected the relevant contract.

3. Paragraphs 1 and 2 shall not apply:

(1) to public contracts covering both the setting-up and the implementation of a project;

(2) to public contracts awarded by negotiated procedure without publication at the time of the commencement of the procedure for the purposes of Article 17(2) of the Law.'

sectors (Moniteur belge , 28 April 1999, p. 14144; the Royal Decree of 15 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 10 January 1996'), is essentially worded in the same terms as Article 32 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 8 January 1996.

Main proceedings and questions referred to the Court

14. Fabricom is a contractor which is regularly required to submit tenders for public contracts, particularly in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors.

Case C-21/03

15. By application lodged before the Conseil d'Etat on 25 June 1999, Fabricom seeks annulment of Article 26 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 10 January 1996.

16. It claims that that provision is, inter alia, contrary to the principle of equal treatment of all tenderers, to the principle of the effectiveness of judicial review as guaranteed by Directive 92/13, to the principle of proportionality, to freedom of trade and industry and also to the right to property as laid down in Article 1 of Protocol No 1 to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed in Rome on 4 November 1950.

17. The Belgian State disputes the pleas put forward by Fabricom.

18. As regards Article 26 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 10 January 1996, the Conseil d'Etat states that, according to the terms of the preamble to the Roya l Decree of 25 March 1999 and to the terms of the Report to the King which precedes it, Article 26 is designed to prevent a person desiring to be awarded a public contract from deriving an advantage, contrary to free competition, from research, experiments, studies or development carried out in connection with works, supplies or services relating to such a contract.

19. The Conseil d'Etat considers that that provision, generally and without distinction, precludes a person who has been instructed to carry out such research, experiments, studies or development and, consequently, an undertaking deemed to be connected to that person, from participating in or submitting tenders for a contract. Nor, unlike the position of the connected undertaking, does that provision allow the person concerned to prove that, in the circumstances of the case, he has been unable to obtain, by means of one of those operations, an advantage capable of upsetting the equality between tenderers. It does not expressly require that the awarding authority reach a decision within a specific period on the evidence which the connected undertaking provides in order to show that the dominant influence is not established or has no effect on the market concerned.

20. Being of the view that the outcome of the dispute before it requires an interpretation of certain provisions of the public procurement directives, the Conseil d'Etat decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

1. Do ... Directive 98/38..., and in particular Article 4(2) thereof, and Directive 98/4..., in conjunction with the principle of proportionality, freedom of trade and industry and respect for the right to property guaranteed in particular by Protocol No 1 of 20 March 1952 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, preclude any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with a public contract for works, supplies or services from being permitted to apply to participate in or to submit a tender for that contract where that person has not been given an opportunity to prove that, in the circumstances of the case, the experience which he has acquired was not capable of distorting competition?

2. Would the answer to the preceding question be different if those directives, considered in conjunction with that principle, freedom and right, were interpreted as referring only to private undertakings or to undertakings which have provided services for valuable consideration?

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

3. May ... Directive 92/13..., and in particular Articles 1 and 2 thereof, be interpreted as meaning that a contracting entity may refuse, up to the end of the procedure for the examination of tenders, to allow an undertaking connected to any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with supplies or services to participate in the procedure or to submit a tender, even though, when questioned on that point by the awarding authority, the undertaking states that it has not thereby obtained an unfair advantage capable of distorting the normal conditions of competition?'

Case C-34/03

21. By application lodged before the Conseil d'Etat on 8 June 1999, Fabricom seeks annulment of Article 32 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 8 January 1996.

22. The pleas put forward by Fabricom are essentially the same as those put forward in Case C-21/03. The information provided by the Conseil d'Etat in respect of Article 32 is identical to that set out in Case C-21/03 in respect of Article 26 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 10 January 1996.

23. In those circumstances, the Conseil d'Etat decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Do ... Directive 92/50..., and in particular Article 3(2) thereof, ... Directive 93/36..., and in particular Article 5(7) thereof, ... Directive 93/37..., and in particular Article 6(6) thereof, and Directive 97/52..., and in particular Articles 2(1)(b) and 3(1)(b) thereof, in conjunction with the principle of proportionality, freedom of trade and industry and respect for the right to property guaranteed in particular by Protocol No 1 of 20 March 1952 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, preclude any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with a public contract for works, supplies or services from being permitted to apply to participate in or to submit a tender for that contract where that person has not been given an opportunity to prove that, in the circumstances of the case, the experience which he has acquired was not capable of distorting competition?

(2) Would the answer to the preceding question be different if those directives, considered in conjunction with that principle, freedom and right, were interpreted as referring only to private undertakings or to undertakings which have provided services for valuable consideration?

(3) May ... Directive 89/665..., and in particular Articles 2(1)(a) and 5 thereof, be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may refuse, up to the end of the procedure for the examination of tenders, to allow an undertaking connected to any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with supplies or services to participate in the procedure or to submit a tender, even though, when questioned on that point by the awarding authority, the undertaking states that it has not thereby obtained an unfair advantage capable of distorting the normal conditions of competition?'

24. By order of the President of the Court of 4 March 2003, Cases C-21/03 and C-34/03 were joined for the purposes of the written and oral procedures and also of the judgment.

The questions referred to the Court

First question referred in Cases C-21/03 and C-34/03

25. By the first question referred in Cases C-21/03 and C-34/03, the national court is seeking essentially to ascertain whether the provisions of Community law to which it refers preclude a rule, such as that laid down in Article 26 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 10 January 1996 and Article 32 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 8 January 1996, which states that any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with public works, supplies or services is not allowed to participate in or to submit a tender for a public contract for those works, supplies or services where that person is not permitted to prove that, in the circumstances of the case, the experience which he has acquired was not capable of distorting competition (the rule at issue in the main proceedings').

26. In that regard, it must be borne in mind that the duty to observe the principle of equal treatment lies at the very heart of the public procurement directives, which are intended in particular to promote the development of effective competition in the fields to which they apply and which lay down criteria for the award of contracts which are intended to ensure such competition (Case C-513/99 Concordia Bus Finland [2002] ECR I-7213, paragraph 81 and the case-law cited there).

27. Furthermore, it is settled case-law that the principle of equal treatment requires that comparable situations must not be treated differently and that different situations must not be treated in the same way unless such treatment is objectively justified (Case C-434/02 Arnold André [2004] ECR I-0000, paragraph 68 and the case-law cited there, and Case C-210/03 Swedish Match [2004] ECR I-0000, paragraph 70 and the case-law cited there).

28. A person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with works, supplies or services relating to a public contract (hereinafter a person who has carried out certain preparatory work') is not necessarily in the same situation as regards participation in the procedure for the award of that contract as a person who has not carried out such works.

29. Indeed, a person who has participated in certain preparatory works may be at an advantage when formulating his tender on account of the information concerning the public contract in question which he has received when carrying out that work. However, all tenderers must have equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders (see, to that effect, Case C-87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I2043, paragraph 54).

30. Furthermore, that person may be in a situation which may give rise to a conflict of interests in the sense that, as the Commission correctly submits, he may, without even intending to do so, where he himself is a tenderer for the public contract in question, influence the conditions of the contract in a manner favourable to himself. Such a situation would be capable of distorting competition between tenderers.

31. Taking account of the situation in which a person who has carried out certain preparatory work may find himself, therefore, it cannot be maintained that the principle of equal treatment requires that that person be treated in the same way as any other tenderer.

32. Fabricom, and also the Austrian and Finnish Governments, submit, essentially, that the difference in treatment established by a rule such as that at issue in the main proceedings and which consists in prohibiting, in all circumstances, a person who has carried out certain preparatory works from participating in a procedure for the award of the public contract in question is not objectively justified. They claim that such a prohibition is disproportionate. Equal treatment for all tenderers is also ensured where there is a procedure whereby an assessment is made, in each specific case, of whether the fact of carrying out certain preparatory works has conferred on the person who carried out that work a competitive advantage over other tenderers. Such a measure is less restrictive for a person who has carried out certain preparatory work.

33. In that regard, it must be held that a rule such as that at issue in the main proceedings does not afford a person who has carried out certain preparatory work any possibility to demonstrate that in his particular case the problems referred to in paragraphs 29 and 30 of the present judgment do not arise.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

34. Such a rule goes beyond what is necessary to attain the objective of equal treatment for all tenderers.

35. Indeed, the application of that rule may have the consequence that persons who have carried out certain preparatory works are precluded from the award procedure even though their participation in the procedure entails no risk whatsoever for competition between tenderers.

36. In those circumstances, the answer to the first question referred in Cases C-21/03 and C-34/03 must be that Directive 92/50 and, more particularly, Article 3(2) thereof, Directive 93/36 and, more particularly, Article 5(7) thereof, Directive 93/37 and, more particularly, Article 6(6) thereof, and also Directive 93/38 and, more particularly, Article 4(2) thereof, preclude a rule, such as that laid down in Article 26 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 10 January 1996 and Article 32 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 8 January 1996, whereby a person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with public works, supplies or services is not permitted to apply to participate in or to submit a tender for those works, supplies or services and where that person is not given the opportunity to prove that, in the circumstances of the case, the experience which he has acquired was not capable of distorting competition.

Second question referred in Cases C-21/03 and C-34/03

37. By the second question referred in Cases C-21/03 and C-34/03, the national court asks whether the answer to the first question is different where Directives 92/50, 93/36, 93/37 and 93/38, considered in conjunction with the principle of proportionality, freedom of trade and industry and the right to property, are interpreted as referring only to private undertakings or to undertakings which have provided services for valuable consideration.

38. That question is based on a hypothesis which cannot be accepted.

39. There is nothing in those directives to indicate that they may be interpreted as referring, as regards their applicability to undertakings which are participating or intend to participate in a public contract procedure, only to private undertakings or to undertakings which have provided services for valuable consideration. Furthermore, the principle of equal treatment precludes the application of a rule such as that at issue in the main proceedings solely to private undertakings or to undertakings which have provided services for valuable consideration and which have carried out certain preparatory works where it would not apply to undertakings not having one of those qualities which have also carried out such preparatory work.

40. Accordingly, there is no need to answer the second question referred in Cases C21/03 and C-34/03.

Third question referred in Cases C-21/03 and C-34/03

41. By the third question referred in Cases C-21/03 and C-34/03, the national court is seeking essentially to ascertain whether Directive 89/665 and, more particularly, Articles 2(1)(a) and 5 thereof, and also Directive 92/13 and, more particularly, Articles 1 and 2 thereof, preclude the contracting entity from being able to refuse, until the end of the procedure for the examination of tenders, to allow an undertaking connected with any person who has carried out certain preparatory works from participating in the procedure or from submitting a tender, even though, when questioned on that point by the awarding authority, the undertaking states that it has not thereby obtained an unfair advantage capable of distorting the normal conditions of competition.

42. In that regard, it should be borne in mind that, since the issue in the case relates to detailed procedural rules governing the remedies intended to protect rights conferred by Community law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities, those rules must not compromise the effectiveness of Directive 89/665 (Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I11617, paragraph 72).

43. Furthermore, the provisions of Directives 89/665 and 92/13, which are intended to protect tenderers against arbitrary decisions by the contracting authority, seek to reinforce existing arrangements for ensuring effective application of Community directives on the award of public contracts, in particular where infringements can still be rectified. Such protection cannot be effected if the tenderer is not able to rely on those rules against the contracting authority (Case C-212/02 Commission v Austria , not published in the European Court Reports, paragraph 20 and the case-law cited there).

44. The possibility that the contracting authority might delay, until the procedure has reached a very advanced stage, taking a decision as to whether an undertaking connected with a person who has carried out certain preparatory works may participate in the procedure or submit a tender, when that authority has before it all the information which it needs in order to take that decision, deprives that undertaking of the opportunity to rely on the Community rules on the award of public contracts as against the awarding authority for a period which is solely within that authority's discretion and which, where necessary, may be extended until a time when the infringements can no longer be usefully rectified.

45. Such a situation is capable of depriving Directives 89/665 and 92/13 of all practical effect as they are susceptible of giving rise to an unjustified postponement of the possibility for those concerned to exercise the rights conferred on them by Community law. It is also contrary to the objectives of Directives 89/665 and 92/13, which seek to protect tenderers vis-à-vis the awarding authority.

46. The answer to the third question referred in Cases C-21/03 and C-34/03 must therefore be that Directive 89/665 and, more particularly, Articles 2(1)(a) and 5 thereof, and also Directive 92/13 and, more particularly, Articles 1 and 2 thereof, preclude the contracting authority from being able to refuse, up to the end of the procedure for the examination of tenders, to allow an undertaking connected with any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with works, supplies or services from participating in the procedure or submitting an offer, even though, when questioned on that point by the awarding authority, that undertaking states that it has not thereby obtained an unfair advantage capable of distorting the normal conditions of competition.
